CONSTRUCTIVE. That which amounts in the view of the law to an act, although the act itself is not really performed. For words under this head, such as constructive fraud, etc., see the varions titles Fraud, etc.

CONSUETUDINARIUS (Lat.). In Old English Law. A ritual or book containing the rites and forms of divine offices or the cnstoms of abbeys and monasteries.

A record of the consuetudines (customs). Blount; Whishaw.

CONSUETUDINARY LAW. Customary or traditional law.

CONSUETUDINES FEUDORUM (Lat. fcudal customs). A compilation of the law of feuds or fiefs in Lombardy, made a.d. 1170.

It is called, also, the Book of Fiefs, and is of great and generally-received authority. The compilation is said to bave been ordered by Frederic Barbarossa, Erskine, Inst. 2. 3. 5, and to have been made by two Milanese lawyers, Spelman, Gloss.; hut this is uncertain. It is commonly annexed to the Corpus $J_{w i s}$ Civilis, ond is easily accessible. Sec 3 Kent, Comm. 10th ed. 665, n.; Spelman, Gloss.

CONSTPTUDO (Lat.). A custom;'an establishel usage or practice. Coke, Litt. 58. Tolls ; duties ; taxes. Coke, Litt. 58 b.
This use of consuctudo is not correct: custuma is the proper word to denote dụties, etc. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 313, n. An action formerly lay for the recovery of customs duc, which was commenced by a writ de conauetndinibur ct servitios (of customs and services). This is said by Blount to be "a writ of right close which lies against the tenant that deforceth the lord of the rent and services due him." Blount; Old Nat. Brev. 77; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 151.
There were varions customs: as, consuetudo Anylicana (custom of England), consuetudo curise (practice of a court). consuctudo mercatorum (custom of merchants). Sce Custom.

CONSUL. A commercial agent appointed by a governinent to reside in a sea-port of a foreign country, and commissioned to watch over the commercial rights and privileges of the nation deputing him.

A vice-consul is one acting in the place of a consul.

Among the Romans, consuls were chief magistrates who were annually elected by the people, and were invested with powers and functions similar to those of kings. During the middle ages the term consul was sometimes applied to ordinary judges; and, in the Levant, maritime judges are yet called consule. 1 Boulay Paty, Dr. Mar. tit. Prel. s. 2, p. 57. Officers with powers and duties corresponding to those of modern consuls were employed by the ancient Athenisns, who had them stationed in commereial ports with which they traded. 3 St . John, Mann. and Cus. of Anc. Greece, 283. They were appointed shout the middle of the twelfth century by the maritime states of the Mediterranean; and their numbers have increased greatly with the extension of modern commerce.
2. As a general rule, consuls represent the subjects or citizens of their own nation not otherwise represented. Bee, Adm. $209 ; 1$ Mas. C. C. 14; 3 Wheat. $435 ; 6$ id. 152 ; 10 id. 66. Their duties and privileges are now generally limited, defined, and secured by commercial treaties, or by the laws of the countries they represent. They are not strictly judicial officers, 3 Taunt. 102, and have no judicial powers except those which may be conferred by treaty and statutes. See 10 U.S. Stat. 909 ; 11 id. 723 ; Ware, Dist. Ct. 367.
3. American consuls are nominated by the president to the senate, and by the senate confirmed or rejected. U. S. Const. art. 2, sec. 2. Each consul and vice-consul is required, before lie enters on the execution of his office, to give bond, with such sureties as shall be approved by the secretary of state, in a sum not less than two thousand nor more than ten thousand dollars, conditioned for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office, and also for truly accounting for all moneys, goods, and effects which may come into his possession by virtue of the act of 14 th April, 1792, which bond is to be lodged in the office of the secretary of state. Act of April 14, 1792, sec. 6.
4. They have the power and are required to perform many duties in relation to the commerce of the United States and towards masters of ships, mariners, and other citizens of the United States. Among these are the authority to receive protests or declarations which captains, masters, crews, passengers, merchants, and others make relating to American commerce; they are required to administer on the estate of American citizens dying within their consulate and leaving no legal representatives, when the laws of the country permit it, sec 2 Curt. Eccl. 241 ; to take charge of and secure the effects of stranded American vessels in the absence of the master, owner, or consignee; to settle disputes between masters of vessels and the mariners; to provide for destitute seamen within their consulate, and send them to the United States at the public expense. See Act of 14th April, 1792; Act of 28th February, 1803 , c. 62 ; Act of 20 th July, 1840, c. 23. The consuls are also authorized to make certificates of certain facts in certain cases, which receive faith and credit in the courts of the United States. 3 Sumn. C. C. 27. But these consular certificates are not to be received in evidence, unless they are given in the performance of a consular function, 2 Cranch, 187 ; Paine, C. C. 594; 2 Wash. C. C. 478; 1 Litt. Ky. 71; nor are they evidence, between persons not parties or privies to the transaction, of any fact, unless, either expressly or impliedly, made so by statute. 2 Sumn. C. C. 355.
5. Their rights are to be protected agreeably to the laws of nations, and of the treaties made between the United States and the nation to which they are sent. They are entitled, by the act of 14th April, 1792, s. 4 , to receive certain fees, which are there enumerated. And the consuls in certain places, as London, Paris, and the Barbary States, receive, besides, a salary.

A consul is liable for negligence or omission to perform scasonably the duties imposed upon him, or for any malversation or abuse of power, to any injured person, for all damages occasioned thercby; and for all malversation and corrupt conduct in office a consul is liable to indictment, and, on conviction by any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be fined not less than one nor more than ten thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not less than one nor more than five years. Act of July 20 , 1840, c. 23, cl. 18. The act of February 28, 1803, ss. 7 and 8 , imposes heavy penalties for falsely and knowingly cortifying that property belonging to foreigners is the property of citizens of the United States, or for granting a passport, or other paper certifying that any alien, knowing him or her to be such, is a citizen of the United States.
6. The duties of consuls residing on the Barbary coast are prescribed by a particular statute. Act of May 1, 1810, s. 4.

Of foreign consuls. Before a consul can perform any duties in the United States, he must be recognized by the president of the United States, and have received his exequatur.

A consul is clothed only with authority for commercial purposes; and he has a right to interpose claims for the restitution of property belonging to the citizens or subjects of the country he represents, 1 Curt.C.C.87; 1 Mas. C. C. 14; Bce, Adm. 209; 6 Wheat. 152; 10 id. 65 ; see 2 Wall. Jr. C. C. 59 ; but he is not to be considered as a minister or diplomatic agent, intrusted by virtue of his office to represent his sovereign in negotiations with foreign states. 3 Wheat. 435.
7. Consuls are generally invested with special privileges by local laws and usages, or by international compacts; but by the laws of nations they are not entitled to the peculiar immunities of ambassadors. In civil and criminal cases they are subject to the local laws, in the same manner with other foreign residents owing a temporary allegiance to the state. Wicquefort, De l'Ambassadeur, liv. 1, \& 5; Bynkershoek, cap. 10; Marten, Droit des Gens, liv. 4, c. 3, $\frac{z}{8} 148$.

In the United States, the act of September 24,1789 , s. 13 , gives to the supreme court original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all suits in which a consul or vice-consul shall be a party. The act last cited, section 9 , gives to the district courts of the United States jurisdiction exclusively of the courts of the several states of all suits against consuls or vice-consuls, except for offences where whipping exceeding thirty stripes, a fine exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of imprisonment exceeding six months, is inflicted. For offences punishable bcyond these penalties the circuit court has jurisdiction in the case of consuls. 5 Serg. \& R. Penn. 545. See 1 Binn. Penn. 143; 2 Dall. Penn. 299; 2 Nott \& M'C. So. C. 217 ; 3 Pick. Mass. $80^{\prime}$; 1 Green, N. J. 107; 17 Johns. N.Y. $10 ; 6$ Wend. N. Y. 327 ; 7 N. Y. 576; 2 Du. N.Y. 656 ; 6 Pet. 41 ; 7 id. 276.

IIis functions may be suspended at any time by the government to which he is sent, and his exequatur revoked. In general, a consul is not liable personally on a contract made in his official capacity on account of his government. 3 Dall. Penn. 384.

See, generally, Kent, Comm. Lect. II.; Aljbott, Shipp.; Parsons, Marit. Law ; Marten, on Consuls; Worden, on Consuls; Azuni, Mar. Law, pt. 1, c. 4, art. 8, 87 ; Story, Const. ${ }_{2}$ 1654; Sergeant, Const. Law, 225; 7 Opinions of Atty. Gen.

CONSULTATION. The name of a writ wheroby a cause, being formerly removed by prohibition out of an inferior court into some of the king's courts in Westminster, is returned thither again; for, if the judges of the superior court, comparing the proceed. ings with the suggestion of the party, find the suggestion false or not proved, and that, therefore, the cause was wrongfully called from the inforior court, then, upon consultation and deliberation, they decree it to be returned, whercupon this writ issues. Termes de la Ley; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 114.

In French Law. The offinion of counsel upon a point of law submitted to them.

CONSUMMATE. Complete; finished; entire.

A marriage is said to be consummate. A right of dower is inchate when coverture and seisin concur, consummate upon the husband's death. 1 Washhurn, Real Prep. 250, 251. A tenancy by the curtesy is initiate npon the hirth of issue, and consummate upon the death of the wife. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 140; 13 Conn. 83; 2 Me. 400; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 128.

A contract is said to be consummated when every thing to be done in relation to it has ben accomplished. It is frequently of great impartance te know when a contract has been consummated, in order to ascertain the rights of the parties, particnlarly in the cantract of sale. See Dehvery, whore the suhject is more fully examined. It is also sonetimes of conseqnence to ascertain where the consummation of the eontract took place, in order to decide by what law it is to be geverned. See Conrlict of Lafys; Lex Loci.

CONTAGIOUS DISORDERE. Diseases which are capable of being transmitted by mediate or immediate contact.

Persons sick of such disorders may remain in their own houses, 2 Barb. N. Y. 104 ; but are indictahle for exposing themselves in a public place endangering the public. See 4 Maule \& S. 73, 272. Nuisances which produce such diseases may be abated. 15 Wend. N. Y. 397. See 4 M'Cord, So. C. 472 ; $2^{\prime}$ Dougl. Mich. 332; 1 Greene, Iowa, 348; 3 Hill, N. Y. 479 ; 25 Penn. St. 503.

CONTANGO. In English Law. The commission received for carrying over or putting off the time of execution of a contract to deliver stocks or pay for them at a certain time. Wharton, Dict. 2d Lond. ed.

CONTEMPLATION OF BANKRUPTCY. An intention or expectation of breaking up business or applying to be decreed a bankrupt. Crabbe, 529 ; 5 Barnew. & Ad. 289 ; 4 Bingh. 20 , 22 ; 9 id. 349 ; 5 Taunt. 529.

Contemplation of a state of bankruptcy or a known insolvency and inability to carry on business, and a stoppage of business. Story, J., 5 Bost. Law Rep. 295, 299.

A conveyance or sale of property made in contemplation of bankruptcy is traudulent and void. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 485.

CONTEMPT. A wilful disregard or disobedience of a public anthority.
2. By the constitution of the United States, each house of congress may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member. The same provision is substantially contained in the constitutions of the several states.
3. The power to make rules carries that of enforcing them, and to attach persons who violate them, and punish them for contempts. 1 Kent, Comm. $236 ; 37$ N. H. 450 ; 3 Wils. 188; 14 East, 1. But see 4 Moore, Priv. Comn. 63 ; 11 id .347 . This power of punishing for contempts is confined to punishment during the session of the legislatnre, and cannot extend beyond it, 6 Wheat. 204, 230, 231 ; and it seems this power cannot be exerted beyond imprisonment. The arrest of the offending party is made by the sergeant-atarms, acting by virtue of the speaker's warrant, both in England and the United States. 6 Wheat. 204; 10 Q. B. 359. And see 23 Bost. Law Rep. 7.
4. Courts of justice have an inherent power to punish all persons for contempt of their rules and orders, for disobedience of their process, and for disturbing them in their proceedings. Bacon, Abr. Courts (E); Rolle, Abr. 219 ; 8 Coke, 38 b; 11 id. 43 b ; 22 Mc . $550 ; 5$ Ired. No. C. $199 ; 37$ N. H. $450 ; 16$ Ark. 384; 25 Ala. n. s. 81 ; 25 Miss. $883 ; 1$ Woodb. & M. C. C. 401. A court may commit for a period reaching beyond the term at which the contempt is committed. 13 Md . 642.
5. In some states, as in Pennsylvania, the power to punish for contempte is restricted to offences committed by the officers of the court, or in its presence, or in disobedience of its mandates, orders, or rules; but no one is guilty of a contempt for any publication made or act done out of court which is not in violation of such lawful rules or orders or in disobedience of its process. Similar provisions, limiting the power of the courts of the United States to punish for contempts, arg incorporated in the act of March 2, 1831. 4 Sharsw. cont. of Stor. U. S. Laws, 2256. See Oswald's Case, 4 Lloyd's Debates, 141 et seq.
6. It is said that it belongs exclusively to the court offended to judge of contempts and what amounts to them, 37 N. II. 450 ; and no other court or judge can or ought to undertake, in a collateral way, to question or review an adjudication of a contempt made by another competent jurisdiction. 3 Wils . 188; 14 East, 1; 2 Bay, So. C. 182; 1 Ill. 266; I J. J. Marsh. Ky. 575; 1 Blackf. Ind. 166; T. U. P. Charlt. Ga. 136; 14 Ark. 538, 544; 1 Ind. 161; 6 Johns. N. Y. 337 ; 9 id. 395; 6 Wheat. 204; 7 id. 38. But it has been repeatedly held that a court of superior jurisdiction may review the decision of one of in ferior jurisdiction on a matter of contempt, 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 453; 7 Cal. 181: 13 Gratt. Va. 40 ; 15 B. Monr. Ky. 607 ; thnugh not on habeas corpus. 14 Tex. 436 . It sbould be by direct order of the court. 5 Wisc. 227. A proceeding for contempt is regarded as a distinct and independent suit. 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 150; 25 Vt. 680; 21 Conn. 185. See, geuerally, 1 Abb. Adm. 508; 5 Du. N. Y. 629; 1 Dutch. N. J. 209 ; 16 1ll. $534 ; 1$ Ind. $96 ; 8$ Blackf. Ind. $574 ; 3$ Tcx. 360; 1 Greene, Iowa, 394; 18 Miss. 103.

CONTENTIOUS JURISDICTION.

In Ecciesiastical Law. That which exists in cases where there is an action or judicial process and matter in dispute is to be heard and determined between party and party. It is to he distinguished from voluntury jurisdiction, which exists in cases of taking probate of wills, granting letters of administration, and the like. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 60.

CONTENTS UNKNOVN. A phrase contained in a bill cf lading, denoting that the goods are shipped in apparently good condition.

CONTESTATIO LITIS. In Civil Law. The statement and answer of the plaintiff and defendant, thus bringing the case before the judge, conducted usually in the presence of witnesses. Calvinus, Lex.
Tbis sense is retained in the canon law. 1 Kaufman, Mack. Civ. Law, 205. A eause is said to be contertata wben the judge begins to hear the cause after an aecount of the claims, given not through pleadings, but by statement of the plaintiff and answer of the defendant. Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. Coming to an issue ; the issuc so produced. Stephen, Plead. 39 ; Crabbe, Hist. Eng. Law, 516.

CONTEXT (Lat. contextum,-con, with, tigere, to weave,-that which is interwoven).

Those parts of a writing which precede and follow a phrase or passage in question; the connection.
It is a general principle of legal interpretation that a passage or phrase is not to be understood absolutely, as if it stood by itself, but is to be read in the light of the contoxt, i.e. in its cooneotion with the general oomposition of the iostrument. The rule is frequently statcd to be that where there is any obscurity in a passage the context is to be considcred; but the true rule is much broader. It is always proper to look at the cootext in the application of the most ambiguous expression. Thus, if oo a sale of goods the vendor shomld give a written receipt acknowledging payment of the price, and containiog, also, a promise not to deliver the goods, the word " not" would be rejected by the court, because it is repugaant to the context. It not unfrequently happens that two provisions of an instrument are conflicting: each is then the context of the other, and they are to be taken together and so understood as to harmonize with each other so far as may be, and to carry out the general intent of the instrument. Io the coatext of a will, that which follows controls that which precedes; and the sacoe rule has been asserted with reference to statutes. Consult, also, CONstruction; Intbrpretation; Statutes.

CONTINGENCY WITH DOUBLE ASPECT. If there are remainders so limited that the second is a substitute for the first in case it should fail, and not in derogation of it, the remainder is said to be in a contingency with donble aspect. Fearne, Cunt. Rem. 373.

CONTINGENT DAMAGES. Those given where the issues upon counts to which no demurrer has been filed are tried before demurrer to one or more counts in the same declaration has been decided. 1 Strange, 43 I.

CONTINGENT ESTATE. A contingent estate depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen: as, an estate limited to a person not in esse, or not yet born Crabb, Real Prop. $& 9+6$.

CONTINGENT LEGACY., A legacy made dependent upon some uncertain event. 1 Rnper, Leg. 506.
A legacy which has not vested. Williams, Ex.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER. An estate in remainder which is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event, by which no present or particular interest passes to the remainder-man, so that the particular estate may chance to he determined and the remainder never take effect. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 169.

A remainder limited so as to depend upon an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till aftor the determination of the preceding estate. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 3; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 155.

CONTINGENT USe. A use limited in a deed or conveyance of land which may or may not happen to vest, according to the contingency expressed in the limitation of such ase.

Such a use as by possibility may happen in possession, reversion, or remainder. 1 Coke, 121; Comyns, Dig. Uses (K 6). A use limited to take effect upon the happening of some future contingent event; as, where lands are conveyed to the use of Aand Bafter a marriage had between them. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 234.

A contingent remainder limited by way of uses. Sugden, Uses, 175. See, also, 4 Kent, Comm 237 et seq.
CONTINUANCE (Lat. continuere, to continue).
In Practice The adjournment of a cause from one day to another of the same or a sub sequent term.
The postponement of the trial of a cause.
In the ancient practice, continuances were ontered upon the record, and a variety of forms adapted to the different stages of the suit were in use. Sce 1 Chitty, Plead. 421, n ; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 316. The object of the continuance was to secure the further atteodance of the defendant, who having once attended could not be required to attend again, unless a day was fixed. The entry of continuance hecame at the time mere matter of form, and is now discontinued in Eagland and most, if not all, of the states of the United States.
Before the declaration, continnaace is by dies datus prece purtium; after the declaration, and before issue joined, by imparlance; after issue joined, and before verdict, by vice-comes non misit breve; and after verdict or demurrer, hy curia a dvisare vult. 1 Chitty, Plead. 421, n., Bacon, Abr. Pleas (P), Trial (H); Comyos, Dig. Pleader (V); Stephen, Plead. 31. In its modern use the word has the second of the two meanings given above.
2. Among the causes for granting a continuance are absence of a material witness, 2 Dall. Penn. 98; 4 Munf. Va. 547; 10 Leigh, Va. 687; 3 Marr. N. J. 495; 2 Wash. C. C. 159 ; and see 1 Mass. 6 ; 1 Const. So. C. 234 ; 2 Ark. 33; 9 Leigh, Va. 639; 18 B. Monr. Ky. 705; that he must hare been subpoenaed, 1 Const. So. C. 198; 10 Tex. 116; 18 Ga. 383 ; see 2 Dall. CONTINDANDO (Lat. continuare, to continue, continuando, continuing).
In Pleading. An averment that $\mathrm{a}_{\text {st }}$ trespass has been continued during a number of diays. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 212. It was allowed to prevent a multiplicity of actions, 2 Rolle, Abr. 545, only where the injury was such as could, from its nature, be continued. 1 Wms. Saund. 24, n. 1.

CONTRA (Lat.). Over; against; opposite. Per contra. In opposition.

CONTRA BONOS MORES. Against sound morals.

Contracte which are incentive to crime, or of which the consideration is an obligation or engagement improperly prejudicial to the feelings of a third party, offensive to decency or morality, or which has a tendency to mischievous or pernicious consequences, are void, as being contra bonos mores. 2 Wils. 447; Cowp. 729 ; 4 Campb. 152; 1 Barnew. & Ald. $683 ; 16$ East, 150.

CONTRA FORMAM STATUTI (against the form of the statute).

In Pleading. The formal manner of alleging that the offence described in an indictment is one forbidden by statute.
2. When one statute prohibits a thing and another gives the penalty, in an action for the penalty the declaration should conclude contra formam statutorum. Plowd. 206; 2 East, 333 ; Espinasse, Pen. Act. 111 ; 1 Gall. C. C. 268. The same rule applies to informations and indictmente. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 172 ; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 25, & 117; Ow. 135. But where a statute refers to a former one, and adopts and continues the provisions of it, the declaration or indictment should conclude contra formam statuti. Hale, Pl. Cr. 172; 1 Lutw. 212. Where a thing is prohibited by several statutes, if one only gives the action and the others are explanatory and restrictive, the conclusion should be contra formam statuti. Yelv. 116; Croke Jac. 187; Noy, 125; Rep. temp. Hard. 409; And. 115; 2 Saund. 377.
3. When the act prohibited was not an offence or ground of action at common law, it is necessary both in criminal and civil cases to conslude against the form of the statute or etatutes. 1 Saund. $135 \mathrm{c} ; 2$ East, 333 ; 1 Chitty, Plead. 358; 1 Saund. 249; 7 East, 516; 2 Mass. 216; 7 id. 9 ; 10 id. 36 ; 11 id. 280; 1 M'Cord, So. C. $121 ; 1$ Gall. C. C. 30.

But if the act prohibited by the statute is an offence or ground of action at common law, the indictment or action may be in the common-law form, and the statute need not be noticed even though it prescribe a form of prosecution or of action,-the statute remedy being merely cumulative. Coke, 2d Inst. 200; 2 Burr. 803 ; 3 id. 1418; 4 id. 2351; 2 Wils. 146; 3 Mass. 515.

When a statute only iuflicte a punishment on that which was an offence at common law, the offence prescribed may be inflicted though the statute is not noticed in the indictment. 2 Binn. Penn. 332.
4. If an indictment for an offence at common law only conclude "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided;" or "the form of the statute" generally, the conclusion will be rejected as surplusage, and the indictment maintained as at common lat. 1 Saund. 135, n. 3; 16 Mass. 385; 4 Cush. Mass. 143. But it will be otherwise if it conclude against the form of "the statute aforesaid," when a statute has been previously recited. 1 Chitty. Crim. Law, 266, 289. See, further, Comyns, Dig.Pleader (C76); 5 Viner, Abr. 552, 556; 1Gall. C. C. 26, 257; 5 Pick. 128; 9 id. 1; 262 Yerg. Tenn. 390 ; 1 Hawks, No. C. 192; 3 Conn. 1; 11 Mass. 280; 5 Me. 79.

CONTRA PACEM (Lat. against the peace).
In Pleading. An allegation in an action of trespass or ejectment that the actions therein complained of were against the peace of the king. Such an allegation was formerly necessary, but has become a mere matter of form and not traversable. See 4 Term, 503; 1 Cbitty, Plead. 375; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 169; Trespass.

CONTRABAND OF WAR. In International Law. Goods which neutrals may not carry in time of war to either of the belligerent nations without subjecting themselves to the loss of the goods, and formerly the owners, also, to the loss of the ship and other cargo, if intercepted. 1 Kent, Comm. 138, 143.

Provisions may be contraband of war, and generally all articles calculated to be of direct use in aiding the belligerent powers to carry on the war; and if the use is doubtful, the mere fact of a hostile destination renders the goods contraband. 1 Kent, Comm. 140.

The meaning of the term is gonerally defined by treaty provisions enumerating the things which shall he deemed contraband.

These include, generally, all articles of direct use in maintaining war, but exclude all thinga which are of use merely in the ordinary course of life and husiness: as, provisions which are not in course of conveyance to some port or town actually besieged or blockaded.

CONTRACT (Lat. contractus, from con, with, and traho, to draw. Contractus ultro utroque obligatio est quam Graci $\sigma v v a ́ \lambda \lambda a \gamma \mu a$ vocant. Fr. contrat).

An agreement between two or more parties to do or not to do a particular thing. Taney, C. J., 11 Pet. 420, 572. An agreement in which a party undertakes to do or not to d.) a particular thing. Marshall, C. J., 4 Wheat. 197. An agreement between twa or more parties for the doing or not doing of some specified thing. 1 Parsons, Contr. 5.
2. It bas been variously defined, as follows. A corpact between two or more parties. 6 Cranch, 87, 136. An agreement or covenant between two or moro persona, in which each party binds himaelf to do or forbear some act, and each acquires & right ts what the other promises. Encyc. Amer.; Webster. A contract or agreement is where a promise is made on one side and essented to on the other; or where two or more peraons enter into an engagement with each other by a promise on either aide. 2 Stephen, Comm. 108, 109.

An sgrecment upon suficient consideration to do or not to do a particular thing. 2 Blackstone, Comm. $4.46 ; 2$ Kent, Comm. 449.

A covenant or agreement between two parties with a lawful consideration er cause. West, Symbol. lib. 1, 10 ; Cowel ; Blount.

A deliberate engagement between competent parties upon a legal onnaideration to do or to abstain from doing some act. Story, Contr. $& 1$.

A mutual promise npon lawful conaideration or cause which binds the parties to a performance. The writing which contains the agreement of parties with the terms and conditions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation. The last is a distinct signification. 2 Hill, N. Y. 551.
3. We have not included consideration in our definition of contract, because it does not seem to be essential to a contract, although it may be necessary to its enforcement. See Consideratien. Mr. Stephen, whose definition of contract is given ahove, thus criticizes the definition of Blackstone, which has been adopted by Chanceller Kent and other high anthorities. First, that the word agreement itself requires definition as much as contract. Seeund, that the exiatence of a confideration, though essential to the validity of a parol contract, forms properly no part of the idea. Third, that the definition takes no sufficient notioe of the mutuality which properly distinguighes a contract from a promise. 2 Stephen, Comm. 109.
4. The nse of the word agreement (aggregatio mentium) seems to have the authority of the hest writers in ancient and modern times (sec above) as a part ef the definition of contract. It is probably a tranalation of the civil-law conventio (eon and venio), a coming together, to which (boing derived from od and grego) it scema nearly equivalent. We do not think the objection thet it is a synonyme (or nearly so) a valid one. Some word of the kind is necessary as a hasis of the definition. No two synonymes convey precisely the same idea. "Most of them have minute dietinctions," says Reid. If two are entirely equivalent, it will aoon be determined hy accident which shall remain in use and which become obsolete. To one who has no knowledge of a language, it is impossible to define any abatract idea. But to one who understands a language, an abstraction is de6 ned by a synonyme properly qualified. By pointing out distinctions and the mutual relations between synonymes, the object of definition ia answered. Hence we do not think Blackstone's definition open to the first objection.
5. As to the idea of consideratien, Mr. Stephen secms correct and to bave the authority of acme of the first legal minds of modern times. Consideration, however, may be necessary to enforce a contract, though not essential to the idea. Even in that class of contracts (by specialty) in which no consideration is in fact required, one is silways presumed by law,-the form of the instrument bcing held to import a consideration. 2 Kent, Comm. 450, note.
A contract withont consideration is called a nudum pactum (nude pset), but it is still a pactum; and this implies that consideration is not an essential. The third objection of Mr. Stephen to the definition of Blackstone does not seem one to which it is fairly ohnoxions.
There is an idea of mutuality in con and traho, to draw together, but we think that mutuality is implied in agreement as woll. An aggregatio mentium seems impossible without mntaulity. Blackstone in his analysia sppears to bave regerded agreement as implying mutuality; for he defines it (2 Blackstone, Comm. 442) "a mutual bargain or convention." In our definition, however, all ambiguity ia avoided by the use of the words" bctween two or more parties" following agreement.
6. In its widest sense, "contract" includes records and specialties; but this use as a general term for all sorts of obligations, though of too great authority to be now doubted, reems to be an unduc extension of the proper meaning of the term, which is much more nesrly equivalent to "agreement," which is never applied to specialties. Mutuality is of the very essence of both, -not only mutuality of assent, but of act. Aa expressed hy Lord Coke, Actus contra actum. 2 Coke, 15; 7 Meno. & G. 998, argum. & note.
7. This is illustrated in contracts of sale, hailment, hire, as well as partnership and marriage; and no other engagements but those with this lind of mutuality would seem properly to come under the bead of contracts. In a bond there is none of this mutuality,-no att to be done by the oblige to make the instrument binding. In a judgment there is no mutuality either of act or of assent. It is judicium redditum in invitem. It may properly be denied to be a contract, though Blackstone ingists that one is implied. Per Mfarsfield, 3 Burr. 1545; 1 Cow. N. Y. 316 ; per Story, J., 1 Mas. C. C. 288. Mr. Chitty uses "obligation" as an alternative word of description when speaking of bonds and judgments. Chitty, Contr. 2, 4. An act of legislature may be a contract; so may a legislative grant with exemption from taxes. 5 Ohic St. 361. So a oharter is a contract between a state and a corporation withia the meaning of the constitution of the United States, art. 1, 810 , clause 1. 27 Miss. 417. See Impairing the Obligation of Contracts.
8. Accessory contracts are those made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others, such as suretyship, mortgage, and pledges. La. Civ. Code, art 1764; Pothier, Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2, n. 14.

Contracts of beneficence are those by which only'one of the contracting parties is benefited: as, loans, deposit, and mandate. La. Civ. Code, art. 1767.

Certain contracts are those in which the thing to be done is supposed to depend on the will of the party, or when, in the usual course of events, it must happen in the manner stipulated.

Commutative contracts are those in which what is done, given, or promised by one party is considered as an equivalent to or in consideration of what is done, given, or promised by the other. La, Civ. Code, art. 1761.
9. Consensual contracts are those which are formed by mere consent of the parties, such as all contracts of hiring and mandate.

Executed contracts are those in which nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction has been completed, or was completed at the time the contract or agreement was made: as, where an article is sold and delivered and payment therefor is made on the spot.

Entire contracts are those the consideration of which is entire on both sides.

The entire fulfilment of the promise by either is a condition precedent to the fulfilment of any part of the promise by tho othcr. Whenever, therefore, there is a contract to pay a gross sum for a certain and definite consideration, the contract is entire.

Executory contracts are those in which some act remains to be done: as, when an agreement is made to build a house in six months; to do an act before some future day, to lend money upon a certain interest payable at a future time.

A contract executed (which differs in nothing from a grant) conveys a chose in possession; a contrant executory conveys a chose in action. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 443. As to the importance of grants congidered as oontracts, seo Impaiming the Obligation of Contracts.

Express contracts are those in which the terms of the contract or agreement are openly and fully uttered and avowed at the time of making: as, to pay a stated price for certain specified goods; to deliver an ox, etc. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 443.
10. Gratuitous contracts are those of which the object is the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit or advantage received or promised as a consideration for it. It is not, however, the less gratuitous if it proceed either from gratitude for a benefit before received or from the hope of receiving one hereafter, although such benefit be of a pecuniary nature. La. Civ. Code, 1766.

Hazardous contracts are those in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. La. Civ. Code, art. 1769.
11. Implied contracts are such as reason and justice dictate, and which, therefore, the law presumes that every man undertakes to perform.
Thus, if I employ a person to do any business for me or perform any work, or take $n p$ wares with a tradesman, the law implies that I understood or contracted to pay the real value of the services or wares. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 443. These contracts furm the web and woof of actual life. 1 Parsona, Contr. 4.

There is one specics of implied contract which runs through and is annexed to all other contracts, conditions, and covenants,-viz. : that if I fail in my part of the agreement I shall pay the other party auch damages as he has sustained by my neglect or refusal. See Quantum Meruit; Quantem Valebant; Assumpsit; Comyns, Dig. Aetion upon the Case upon Assumpsit, A 1, Agreentent.

Independent contracts are those in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other either as equivalents or as considerations. La. Civ. Code, art. 1762.

Mixed contracts are those by which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, receiving something of inferior value in return, such as a donation subject to a charge.

Contracts of mutual interest are such as are entered into for the reciprocal interest and utility of each of the parties: as, sales, exchange, partnership, and the like.
12. Onerous contracts are those in which something is given or promised as a consideration for the engagement or gift, or some service, interest, or condition is imposed on what is given or promised, although unequal to it in value.

Oral contracts are simple contracts.
Principal contracts are those entered into by both parties on their own accounts, or in the several qualities or characters they assume.

Real contracts are those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as a loan of money, deposit, or pledge, which, from their nature, require a delivery of the thing (res).

Reciprocal contracts are those by which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, such as sale, hire, and the like.

Contracts of record are those which are evidenced by matter of record, such as judgments, recognizances, and statutes staple.

These are the highest class of contracts. Statutes merchant and staple, and other securitics of the like nature, are confioed to England. They are contracts entered into by the intervention of some publio authority, and are witnessed by the highost kind of evidence, viz., matter of record. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 465.
13. Severable (or separable) contracts are thuse the considerations of which are by their terms susceptible of apportionment or division on either side, so as to correspund to the several parts or portions of the consideration on the other side.

A contract to pay a person the worth of hia aervices as long as he will do certain work, or so much per week as long as he ahall work, or to give a certain price per bushel for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample, would be a severable contract. If the part to be performed by one party consists of several distinct and separate items, and the price to be paid by the other is apportioned to each item to be performed, or is left to be implied by law, such a contract will generally be beld to be severable. So when the price to be paid is clearly and diatinctly apportioned to different parts of what is to be pertormed, although the latter ia in its nature single and entire. But the mere fact of sale by weight or measure-i.e. so much per pound or bushel-does not make a contract severable.
14. Simple contracts are those not of specialty or record.
They are the lowest class of expreas contracts, and answer most nearly to our general definition of contract.

To constitute a sufficient parol agreement to be binding in law, there must be that reciprocal and mutual assent which is necessary to all contracts. And sce 17. They are by parol (which includes both oral and writtea). The only distinction between oral and written contracts is in their mode of proof. And it is inaccurate to distinguish verbal from zoritten; for contracts are equally verbal whether the words are orritten or spoken,-the meaning of verbal being expressed in words. See 3 Burr. 1670 ; 7 Term, 350, note; 11 Mass. 27, 30 ; 5 id. 299, 301 ; 7 Cono. 57; 1 Caines, N. Y. 386.
15. Specialties arc those which are under seal : as, deeds and bonds.
Specialties are aometimes said to include also coatracts of recurd, 1 Parsons, Contr. 7; in which case there would bebut two clasaea at common law, viz., specialtiea and simple contracts. The term specialty is always used substantively.
They are the second kind of express contracts under the ordinary common-law division. They are not merely written, but signed, sealed, and delivered by the party bound. The solemnities coonected with these acts, and the formalities of witnessing, gave in early times an importance and character to this class of contracts which implied so much caution and deliberation (consideration) that it was unnecessary to prove the conaideration even in a court of equity. Plowd. 305; 7 Term, 477; 4 Barnew. & Ad. 652; 3 Bingh. 111; 1 Fonblanque, Eq. 342, note. Though little of the real solemnity now remains (except witnessing), and a acroll is subatituted in most of the statea for the aeal, the distinction with regard to apecialties has still been preserved intact. See Consideration.
When a contract by apecialty is changed by a parol agreencent, the whole contract becomea parol. 2 Watts, Pcnn. 451 ; 9 Pick. Maas. 298 ; 13 Wend. N. Y. 71.

Unilateral contracts are those in which the party to whom the engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part.
They are so called even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. La. Civ. Code, art. 1758. A loan for ure and a loan of money are of this kind. Pothier, Ohl. pt. 1, c. 1, a. 1, art. 2.

Verbal contracts are simple contracts.
Written contracts are those evidenced by writing.
16. Pothier's treatise on Obligations, taken in connection with the Civil Code of Loniaiana, gives an idea of the diviaiona of the civil law. Pothier, Obl. pt. 1. c. 1, a. 1, art. 2, makes the five following classea: recipracal and unilateral; consensual and real; those of mutnal interest, of beneficence and nixed; principal and accessory; thase which are subjected by the civil law to eertain rules and forms, and thase which are regulated by mere natural justice.
It is true that almost all the rights of personal property do in great measure depend upon contracts of one kind or cther, or at least might be reduced under some of them; which is the method taken by the civil law: it haa refcrred the greateat part of the duties and rights of which it treata to the head of obligations ex controctn or quasi ex contractu. Inst. 3.14.2; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 443.

1\%. Qualities of. Every agreement should be so complete as to give either party his action upon it; both parties mast assent to all its terms. Peake, 227; 3 Term, 653; 1 Barnew. \& Ald. 681; 1 Pick. Mass. 278. To the rule that the contract must be obligatory on both parties there are some exceptions: as the case of an infant, who may sue, though he cannot be sued, on his contract. Strange, 937 . See other instances, 6 East, 307; 3 Taunt. 169; 5 id. 788; 3 Barnew. \& C. 232. There must be a good and valid consideration ( $q . v$. ), which must be proved though the contract be in writing. $7 \mathrm{Term}, 350$, note (a); 2 Blackstone, Comm. 444; Fonblanque, Eq. 335, n. (a); Chitty, Bills, 68. There is an exception to this rule in the case of bills and notes, whicb are of themselves prima facie evidence of consideration. And in other contracts (written) when consideration is acknowledged it is primâ facie evidence therenf, but open to contradiction by parol testimony. There must be a thing to be done which is not forbiden by law, or one to be omitted which is not enjoined by law. Fraudulent, immoral, or forbidden contracts are void. A contract is also void if against public policy or the statutes, even though the statute be not probibitory but merely affixes a penalty. Chitty, Com. Law, 215, 217, 222, 228, 250; 1 Binn. Penn. 110, 118 ; 6 id. 321 ; 4 Dall. Penn. 269, 298; 4 Yeates, Penn. 24, 84. As to contracts which cannot be enforced from noncompliance with the statute of frauds, see Frauns, Statute of.
18. Construction and interpretation in reference to contracts. The intention of the parties is the pole-star of construction ; but their intention must be found expressed in the contract and be consistent with rules of law. The court will not make a new contract for the parties, nor will words be forced from their real signification.

The subject-matter of the contract and the situation of the parties is to be fully considered with regard to the sense in which language is used.

The legality of the contract is presumed and is favored by construction.

Words are to be taken, if possible, in their comprehensive and common sense.
The whole contract is to be considered with relation to the meaning of any of its parts.

The contract will be supported rather than defeated: ut res magis valeat quam pereat.
All parts will be construed, if possible, so as to have effect.

Construction is generally against the grantor -contra proferentem-except in the case of the sovereign.

This rule of construction is not of great importance, except in the analogous case of penal statutes; for the law favors and supposes innocence.

Construction is against claims or contracts which are in themselves against common right or common law.

Neither false English nor bad Latin invalidates a contract ("which perhaps a classical critic may think no unnecessary caution"). 2 Blackstone, Comm. 379; 6 Coke, 59.

Parties. There is no contract unless the parties assent thereto; and where such assent is impossible from the want, immaturity, or incapacity of mind of one of the parties, there can be no perfect contract. See Parties.

Remedy. The foundation of the common law of contracts may be said to be the giving of damages for the breach of it. When the thing to be done is the payment of money, damages paid in money are entirely adequate. When, however, the contract is for any thing else than the payment of money, the common law knows no other than a money remedy: it has no power to enforce a specific performance of the contract.

The injustice of measuring all rights and wrongs by a money standard, which as a remedy is often inadequate, led to the establishment of the equity power of decreeing specific performance when the remedy has failed at law. For example: contracts for the sale of real estate will be specifically enforced in equity; performance will be decreed, and conveyances compelled.

CONTRACTION (Lat. con, together, traho, to draw). A form of a word abbreviated by the omission of one or more letters. This was formerly much practised, but in modern times has fallen into gencral disuse. Much information in regard to the rules for contraction is to be found in the Instructor Clericalis.

CONTRACTOR. One who enters into a contract. Those who undertake to do public work, or the work for a company or corporation on a large scale, at a certain fixed price, or to furnish goods to another at a fixed or ascertained price. 2 Pardessus, n. 300. See 5 Whart. Penn. 366.

CONTRADICT, In Practice. To prove a fact contrary to what has been asserted by a witness.

A party cannot impeach the character of his witness, but may contradict him as to any particular fact. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. $\mathbf{z}^{243 \text {; Bul- }}$ Ier, Nisi P. 297; 2 Campb. 555 ; 2 Stark. 334 ; 3 Barnew. \& C. 746 ; 4 id. 25; 8 Bingh. 57 ; 1 Exch. 91 ; 11 Jur. 478; 14id. 792; 5 Wend. CONTRAESCRITURA. In Spanish Law. Counter-letter. An instrument, usually executed in secret, for the purpose of showing that an act of sale, or some other public instrument, has a different purpose from that imported on its face. Acts of this kind, though binding on the parties, have no effect as to third persons.

CONTRAFACTIO (Lat.). Counterfeiting: as, contrafactio sigilli regis (counterfeiting the king's seal). Cowel ; Reg. Orig. 42. See Counterfeit.

CONTRAROTULATOR (Fr. contrerouleur). A controller. One whose business it was to observe the money which the collectors had gathered for the use of the king or the people. Cowel.

CONTRAROTULATOR PIP出. An officer of the exchequer that writeth out summons twice every year to the sheriffs to levy the farms (rents) and debts of the pipe. Blount.

CONTRAVENTION. In Fremoh Law. An act which violates the law, a treaty, or an agreement which the party has made. That iufraction of the law punished by a fine which does not exceed fifteen francs and by an imprisonment not exceeding three days.

CONTRE-MAITRE. In French Law. The second officer in command of a ship. The officer next in command to the master and under him.

His business is said to relate to providing fit things for the navigation of the vessel before the voyage,-ropes, sails, anchors, etc.; to attending to its oondition through the voyage, reporting each day to the master, and attending to the anchoring and soourity of the ressel at the end of the voyage. Ord. de la Marine de 1681, liv. 2.

He is always to execute, day or night, the commands of the master, and represents the master in his sickness or absence. Guyot, Rép. Univ.

CONTRDCTATIO. In Civil Law. The removal of a thing from its place, amounting to a theft. The offence is purged by a restoration of the thing taken. Bowyer, Comm. 268.

CONTREFACON. In French Law. The offence of those who print or cause to be printed, without lawful authority, a book of which the author or his assigns have a copyright. Merlin, Répert.

CONTRIBUTION. At Common Law. The payment by each or any one of several parties who are liable in company with others of his proportionate part of the whole liability or loss, to one or more of the parties so liable upon whom the whole loss has fallen or who has been compelled to discharge the whole liability. 1 Bibb, Ky. 562 ; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 545 ; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3935.
2. Aright to contribution exists in the case of debtors who owe a debt jointly which has been collected from one of them. 4 Jones, No. C. 71 ; 32 Me . 381 ; 13 Mo. 561 ; 4 Ga. $545 ; 19 \mathrm{Vt}$.59 ; 3 Den. N. Y. 130; 7 Humphr. Tenn. 385. See 1 Ohio St. 327. It also exists where land charged with a legacy, or the portion of a posthumous child, descends or is devised to several persons, when the share of each is held liable for a proportionate part. 3 Munf. Va. $29 ; 1$ Johns. Ch. N. Y. 425 ; 1 Cush. Mass. 107 ; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 419 . As to contribution under the maritime law, see Geneaal Aveafae. See, generally, 4 Gray, Mass. 75; 34 Me. 205; 1 Mich. 202; 4 Gill, Md. 166 ; 11 Penn. St. 325 ; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 137. There is no contribution among wrongdoers. 9 Ind. 248 ; 10 Cush. Mass. 287 ; 2 Ohio St. 203; 18 Ohio, 1; 11 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 18.
3. A debtor liable to contribution is not responsible upon a contract, but is so in equity. But courts of common law in modern times have assumed a jurisdiction to compel contribution among sureties in the ahsence of any positive contract, on the ground of an implied assumpsit, and each of the sureties may be sued for his respective quota or proportion. White, Lead. Cas. 66; 7 Gill, Md. 34, 85 ; 17 Mo. 150. The remedy in equity is, however, much more effective. 12 Ala. n. s. 225; 2 Rich. Eq. So. C. 15. For example, a surety who pays an entire debt can, in equity, compel the solvent sureties to contribute towards the payment of the entire debt, 1 Chanc. Cas. 246; Finch, 15, 203 ; while at law he cau recover no more than an aliquot part of the whole, regard being had to the number of co-sureties. 2 Bos. & P. 268; 6 Barnew. & C. 697; 32 Me 381.

In Civil Law. A partition by which the creditors of an insolvent dehtor divide among themselves the proceeds of his property proportionably to the amount of their respective credits. La. Civ. Code, art. 2522, n. 10. It is a division pro rata. Merlin, Repert.

CONTROLLER. A comptroller, which see.

CONTROVER. One who invents false ncws. Coke, 2 d Inst. 227.

CONTROVERSY. A dispute arising between two or more persons.

It differs from case, which includes all suits, criminal as well as civil; whereas controversy is a civil and not a criminal proceeding. 2 Dall, 419, 431, 432; 1 Tucker, Blackst. Comm. App. 420, 421; Story, Const. & 1668.

By the constitntion of the United States, the judicial power extends to controversies to which the United States shall be a party. Art. 2, s. 1. The meaning to be attached to the word controversy in the constitution is that above given.

CONTUBERNIUM. In Civil Law. A marriage between persons of whom one or both were slaves. Pothier, Contr. du Mar. pt. 1, c. 2, & 4.

CONTUMACY (Lat. contumacia, disobedieuce). The refusal or neglect of a party accused to appear or answer to a charge preferred against him in a court of justice.

Actual contumacy is the refusal of a party actually before the court to ohey some order of the court.

Presumed contumacy is the act of refusing or declining to appear upon heing cited. 3 Curt. Ecel. 1.

CONTUMAX. One accused of a crime who refuses to appear and answer to the charge. An outlaw.

CONTUSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. An injury or lesion, arising from the shock of a body with a large surface, which presents no loss of substance and no apparent wound. If the skin he divided, the injury takes the name of a contused wound. See 1 Chanc. Pract. $38 ; 4$ Carr. & P. 381, 487, 558, 565 ; 6 id. 684 ; 2 Beck, Med. Jur. 178 .

CONUSANCE, CLAIM OF. See Cognizance.

CONUSANT. One who knows: as, if a party knowing of an agreement in which be has an interest makes no objection to it, he is said to be conusant. Coke, Litt. 157.

CONUSOR. A cognizor.
CONVENE. In Civil Law. To bring an action.

CONVENTICLE. A private assembly of a few folks under pretence of exercise ot religion. The name was first given to the meetings of Wickliffe, but afterwards applied to the meetings of the non-conformists. Cowel.

The meetings were made illegal by 16 Car . II. c. 4, and the term in its later signitication came to denote an unlawful religious assembly.

CONVENTIO (Lat. a coming together). In Canon Law. The act of summoning or calling together the parties by summoning the defendant.
When the defendant was brought to answer, he was said to be convened,-which the canonists called conventio, beoause the plaintiff and defendant met to contest. Story, Eq. Plead. 402; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4117.

In Contracts. An agreement; a covenant. Cowel.
Often used in the maxim conventio vincit legem (the express agreement of the parties supersedes the law). Story, Ag. 3 368. But this maxim does not apply, it is said, to prevent the application of the general rule of law. Broom, Max. 308. See Maxims.

CONVENTION. In Civil Law. A general term which comprehends all kinds of contracts, treaties, pacts, or agreements. The consent of two or more persons to form with each other an engagement, or to dissolve or change one which they had previously formed. Domat, Lois Civ. 1. 1, t. 1, s. l ; Dig. lib. 2, t. 14. 1. 1; lib. 1, t. 1, 1. 1, 4 and 5 ; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 100.
In Legislation. This term is applied to a meeting of the delegates elected by the people for other purposes than usual legislation. It is mostly used to denote an assembly to make or amend the constitution of a state; but it sometimes indicates an assembly of the delegates of the people to nominate officers to be supported at an election.

CONVENTIONAL. Arising from, and dependent upon, the act of the parties, as distinguished from legal, which is something arising from act of law. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 120.

CONVENTUS (Lat. convenire). An assembly. Conventus magnatum vel procerum. An assemblage of the chief men or notility; a name of the English parliament. 1 Sharswrod, Blackst. Comm. 148.
In Civil Law. A contract made between two or more parties.

A multitude of men, of all classes, gathered together.

A standing in a place to attract a crowd.
A collection of the people by the magistrate to give judgment. Calvinus, Lex.

CONVENTUS JURIDICUS. A Roman provincial court for the determination of civil causes.
CONVERSANT. One who is in the habit of being in a particular place is said to be conversant there. Barnes, 162.

Acquainted; familiar.
CONVERSION (Lat. con, with, together, vertere, to turn; conversio, a turning to, with, together).

In Equity. The exchange of one species of property for another, which takes place under some circumstances in the consideration of the law, although no such change bas actually taken place.

Land is held to be converted into money, in equity, when the owner has contracted to sell; and if he die before making a conveyance, his executors will be entitled to the money, and not his heirs. 2 Vern. Ch. 52; 1 W. Blackst. 129.

Money may be held to be converted into land under various circumstances: as where, for example, a man dies before a conveyance is made to him of land which he has bought. 1 P. Will. Ch. 176; 10 Pet. 563; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

At Law. An unauthorized assumption and exercise of the right of ownership over goods or personal chattels belonging to another, to the alteration of their condition or the exclusion of the owner's rights. 44 Me . 197; 36 N. H. 311.

A constructive conversion takes place when a person does such acts in reference to the goods or personal chattels of another as amount, in view of the law, to appropriation of the property to himself.

A direct conversion takes place when a person actually appropriates the property of another to his own beneficial use and enjosment, or to that of a third person, or destroys it, or alters its nature.

CONVEYANCE. The transfer of the title of land from one person or class of perscns to another.

The instrument for effecting such transfer.
When there is no express agreement to the contrary, the expense of the conveyance falls upon the purcliaser, 2 Ves. Ch. 155, note; who must prepare and tender the conveyance. But see, contra, 2 Rand. Va. 20. The expense of the execution of the conveyance is, on the contrary, always loone by the vendor. Sugden, Vend. 296. Coutra, 2 Rand. Va. 20; 2 McLean, C. C. 495. See 3 Mass. 487 ; 5 id. 472 ; Eunomus, Dial. 2. & 12.

The forms of conveyance have varied widely from each other at different periods in the history of the law, and in the various states of the United States. For a fuller account of this subject, see Sugden, Vendors; Geldart; Preston; Thornton on Conveyancing; Washburn on Real Property ; Buuvier, Institutes, Index.

CONVEYANCE OF VESSELS. The transfer of the titie to ressols.
The act of oongress approved the 29th July, 1850, entitled an act to provide for recording the conveyances of vessels, and for other purposes. enacts that no bill of sale, mortgage, bypothcoation, or conveyance of any vessel, or part of any versel, of the Unitcd States, shall he valid agaiust any person other than the grantor or mortgagor, his heirs and devisees, and persons baving actual notice thereof, unless such bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation, or conveyance be recorded in the office of the collector of the customs where such vessel is registered or enrolled. Provided, that tho lien hy hottomry on any vessel created, during her voyage, by a loan of money or inaterials necessary to repair or enable such vessel to prosecute a voyage, shall not lose its priority or be in any way affected by the provisions of the act.

CONVEYANCER. One who makes it his business to draw deeds of conveyance of lands for others. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2422. They frequently act as brokers for the sale of estates and obtaining loans on mortgage.

CONVEYANCING. A term including both the science and act of transferring titles to real estate from one man to another.

It includes the examination of the title of the alienor, and also the preparation of the instruments of transfer. It is, in England and Scotland, and, to a greatly inferior exteut, in the United States, a highly artificial system of law, with a distinct clasa of practitioners. A profound and elahorate treatise on the English law of cenveyancing is Mr. Preston's. Geldart and Thornton's works are important works; and an intercsting and useful summation of the Ameriean law is given in Washburn on Real Property.

CONVICIUM. In Civil Law. The name of a species of slander or injury uttered in public, and which charged some one with some act contra bonos mores. Vicat; Bacon, Abr. Slander.

CONVICT. Onewho has been condemned by a competent court. One who has been convicted of a crime or misdemeanor.
To condemn. To find guilty of a crime or misdemeanor. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 362.

CONVICTION (Lat. convictio; from con with, vincere, to bind). In Practice. That legal proceeding of record which ascertains the guilt of the party and upon which the sentence or judgment is founded.

Finding a person guilty by verdict of a jury. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8.223.

A record of the summary proceedings upon any penal statute before one or more justices of the peace or other persons duly authorized, in a case where the offender has been convicted and sentenced. Holthouse, Dict.

The first of the definitions bere given undoubtedly represents the accurate meaning of the term, and inclndes an ascertainment of the guilt ef the party by an authorized magistrate in a summary way, or by confession of the party himself, as well as by verdict of a jury. The word is also used in each of thn other senses given. It is said to be sometimes iased to dencte final judgment. Dwarris, Stat. 2d ed. 683.

Summary conviction is one which takes place before an authorized magistrate without the intervention of a jury.
2. Conviction must precede judgment or sentence, 1 Caines, N. Y. 72; 34 Me. 594; 16 Ark. 601; but is not necessarily or always followed by it. 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 568; 14 Pick. Mass. 88 ; 17 id. 296 ; 8 Wend. N. Y. 204; 3 Park. Crim. N. Y. 567 ; Dudl. Ga. 188; 4 1ll. 76. Generally, when several are charged in the same indictment, a part may be convicted and the others acquitted. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 86 ; 4 Hawks, No. C. 356; 8 Blackf. Ind. 205; see 2 Va. C. 429; 7 Conn. 414; 14 Ohio, 295; 2 Yerg. Tenn. 24; 28 Penn. St. 13. See 2 Gratt. Va. 558. As to the rule where the indictment under which the indictment is procured is defective and liable to be set aside, see 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8 663, 664; 4 Coke, $44 a$; Appeal.
3. Conviction of certain crimes when accompanied by judgment disqualifies the person convicted as a witness. 18 Miss. 192. And see 11 Metc. Mass. 302.

Summary convictions, being obtained by proceedings in derogation of the common law, must be obtained strictly in pursuance of the provisions of the statute, 1 Burr. 613 ; and the record must show fully that all proper steps have been taken, R. CONVOCATION (Lat. con, together, voco, to cilll).
In Ecclesiastical Law. The general assembly of the clergy to consult upon ecelesiastical matters.
The clergy were almays summoned at the commencement of each parliament. They themselves constituted a parliament, with a bigher and lower beusc of convocation: the bigher including the bishops and arehbishops; the lower, the rest of the olergy. It is still summoned before each purliament pro forma, preserving the ancient oustom, hut adjeurns without transacting any business. 2 Stephen, Comm. 542; 2 Burns, Ecel. Law, 13 et seq.
CONVOY. A naval force, under the command of an officer appointed by goveriment, for the protection of merchant-ships and others, during the whole voyage, or such part of it as is known to require such protection. Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 9, s. 5 ; Park, Ins. 388.

Warranties are sometimes inserted in policies of insurance that the sbip shall sail with convoy. To comply with this warranty, five things are essential: first, the ship must sail with the regular convoy appointed by the gevernment ; secondly, she must sail from the place of rendezvous appointed by the gevernment; thirdly, the convoy must he for the voyage; feurthly, the ship insured must have sail-ing-instructions; fifthly, sbe must depart and continue with the convoy till the end of the voyage, unless separated from it by necessity. Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 9, s. 5.

COÖBLIGOR. Contracts. One who is bound together with one or more others to fulfil an obligation. As to suing coöbligors, see Parties; Joinder.

COOL BLOOD. Tranquillity, or calmness. The condition of one who has the calm and undisturbed use of his reason. In cases of homicide, it frequently becomes necessary to ascertain whether the act of the person killing was done in cool blood or not, in order to ascertain the degree of his guilt. Bacon, Abr. Murder (B); Kel. 56 ; Sid. 177; Lev. 180.

COOLING-TIME. In Crlminal Law. Time for passion to subside and reason to interpose. Cooling-time destroys the effect of provocation, leaving homicide murder the same as if no provocation had been given. 1 Russell, Crimes, 525 ; Wharton, Law of Hom. 179; 3 Gratt. Va. 594.

COPARCENARY, ESTATES IN. Estates of which two or more persons form one heir. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 414.

The title to such an estate is always by descent. The shares of the tenants need not be equal. The estate is rare in America, but sometimes exists. 3 Ind. 360 ; 4 Gratt. Va. 16; 17 Mo. 13; 3 Md. 190. See Watkins, Conv. Coventry ed. 145.

COPARCENERS. Persons to whom an estate of inheritance descends jointly, and by whom it is held as an entire estate. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 187.

In the old English and the American sense the term includes males as well as ferales, hat in the medern Eaglish use is limited to femules. 4 Kent, Comm. 462; 2 Beuvier, lnst. n. 1781.

COPARTNER. One who is a partner with une or more other persons; a member of a partnership.

COPARTNERSHIP. A partnership.
COPULATIVE TERM. One which is placed between two or more others to join them together.

COPY. A true transcript of an original writing.

Exemplifications are copies verified by the great seal or by the seal of a court. I Gilbert, Ev. 19.

Examined copies are those which have been compared with the original or with an official record thereof.

Office copies are those made by officers intrusted with the originals and authorized for that purpose.
The papers need not be exchanged and read alternately. 2 Taunt. 470; 1 Stark. 183; 4 Campb. 372 ; 1 Carr. & P. 578. An examined copy of the books of an unincorporated bank is not per se evidence. 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 256 ; 13 id. 135, $334 ; 2$ Nott & M'C. So. C. 299; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8508.

Copies cannot be given in evidence, unless proof is made that the originals from which they are taken are lost or in the power of the opposite party, and, in the latter case, that notice has been given him to produce the original. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. & 508; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3055.

COPYHOLD. A tenure by copy of courtroll. Any species of holding by particular custom of the manor. The estate so held.
A copyhold estate was originally an estate at the will of the lord, agreeably to certain cnstoms evidenced by entries on the roll of the courts baren. Coke, Litt. 58 a; 2 Sharsweod, Blackst. Comm. 95. It is a villenage tenure deprived of its servile incidents. The doctrine of copybold is of no application in the United States. Williams, Real Prop. 257, 258, Rawle's nete ; I Washburn, Real Prup. 26.

COPYHOLDER. A tenant by copyhold tenure (by copy of court-roll). 2 Blackstone, Comm. 95.

COPYRIGHT. The exclusive privilege, secured according to certain legal forms, of printing, publishing, and vending copies of writings or drawings.

The intellectual productions to which the law extends protection are of tbree classes. First, writings or drawings capable of being multiplied by the arts of printing or engraving. Second, designs of form or configuration capahle of being reproduced upen the surface or in the shape of bodies. Third, inventions in what are called the useful arts. To the first class belong books, maps, charts, music, prints, and engravings; to the second class belong statuary, has-reliefs, desigus for ornamenting any surface, and configurations of hedies; the third class comprehends machinery, tools, manufactures, compositions of matter, and processes or methods in the arts. According to the practice of legislation in England and America, the term copyright is confined to the exclusive right secured to the author or proprietor of a writing or drawing, which may be multiplied by the arts of printing in any of its branches. Property in the other classes of intellectual objects is uaually zecured by letters-pateut, and the interest ia called a patentright. But the distinction is arbitrary and conventional.
The foundation of all rights of this description is the natural dominion which every one has over his own ideas, the enjoyment of which, although they are embodied in visible forms or characters, he may, if he choosea, confine to himself or impart to others. But, as it would be impracticable in civil society to prevent others from copying auch characters or furms without the intervention of positive law, and as such intervention is highly expedient, because it tends to the increase of human culture, knowledge, and convenience, it has been the practice of all civilized nations in modern timea to accure and regulate the otherwise insecure and imperfect rigbt which, according to the principles of natural justice, belongs to the author of new ideas.

This has been done by securing an exclusive right of multiplying copies for a limited period, as far as the municipal law of the particular country extends. But, inasmuch as the original right, founded in the principlea of natural justice, ia of an imperfect character, aud requires, in order to be valuable, the intervention of municipal law, the law of nations has not taken notice of it as it has of aome other righta of property ; and therefore all copyright is the result of some municipal regulation, and exists only in the limits of the country by whose legisiation it is established. The iuternational copyright which is estahlished in consequence of a convention between any two countries is not an exception to this principle; because the municipal authority of cach nation making auch convention either apeaks directly to ita own suhjects through the treaty itself, or is exerted in its own limits by some enactment made in pursuance of the international engagement.

It was formerly doubtful in England whether copyright, as applied to books, existed at common law, and whether the first statute ( 8 Anne, c. 19) which undertook to regulate this species of incorporeal property bad taken away the perpetuity which must have existed at common law if that law recognized any right whatever.

The better upinion scems to he that the common law of Eogland, before the atatute of Anne, was supposed to admit the excluaive right of an author to multiply copies of his work by printing, and also his capacity to assign that right; fur injunctions were granted in equity to protect it. See, on this aubject, 4 Burr. 2303, 2408; 2 Brown, Parl. Cas. 145; 1 W. Blackst. 301; 3 Swanst. Ch. 673 ; 2 Ed. Ch. 327 ; 4 Huu. L. 815 ; 4 Exch. 145. But it las long been settled that, whatever the commonlaw right may have been hefore the atatute, it was taken away by the statute, and that coprright exists only by force of some statutory provision. Id.; 8 Pet. 591; 17 How. 454.

In America, before the establishment of the constitution of the United States, it is doubtful whether there was any copyright at common law in any of the states. 8 Pct. 591 . But some of tho states had passed laws to sccure the rights of authors, and the power to do so was onc of their original branches of sovereigaty, afterwards ceded to congress. By art. 1. sect. 8, of the federal constitution, power was given to congress "to promote the progress of science and the useful arta, by securing for limited times to authora and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." Under this authority, an act of May 31,1790 , secured a copyrisht in maps, charta, and books; and nn act of April 29, 1802, gave a similar protection to engravings.

Theae atatutes were revised and amended by the act of February 3, 1831, which embraces the preaent copyright law as to "booka, mapa, charta, musical compositions, prints, cuta, and engravinga;" and it also extends protection to manuseripts.
2. The persons entitled to secure a copyright. Any person or persons being a citizen or citizens of the United States, or resident therein, and being the author or authors of any book, map, chart, or musical composition, or who shall invent, design, etch, engrave, work, or cause to be engraved, etched, or worked from his own design, any print or engraving, and the executors, administrators, or legal assigns of any such person or persons, may secure a copyright therein by complying with the requisitions of the statute. The term " citizen" comprehends both nativeborn and naturalized citizens. A foreigner may take a copyright, if resident; but whether such residence must be permanent, or may be temporary, has not been judicially determined.

The term for which a copyright may be obtained is the period of twenty-eight years from the time of recording the title; and at the expiration of that period the author, engraver, or designer, if living, and his widow and children, if he be dead, may re-enter for fourteen yeare additional or renewed term.
3. The formalities requisite to the securing of the original term are-1. The deposit of a printed copy of the title of the book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, in the clerk's office of the United States district court for the district where the author or proprietor resides. 2. The recording of that title by the clerk. 3. The deposit of a copy of the book, etc. with the same clerk within three months of the time of publication. 4. The printing of a notice that a copyright has been secured on the titlepage of every copy, or the page immediately following, if it be a book, or on the face, if it be a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, or on the title or frontispiece, if it be a volume of maps, charts, music, or engravings, in the following words:-
" Entered according to act of congress, in the year , by A B, in the clerk's office of the District Court of " (as the case may be). In England the name of the author need not appear on the title-page. 7 Term, 620.
To obtain the renewed or additional term, these requisites must be repeated within six months before the expiration of the first term; and a notice must also be printed within two months of the date of the entry for renewal, for the space of four weeks, in one or more newspapers printed in the United States, which notice must consist of a copy of the record of the renewal. As to the necessity for the cbservance of these conditions, see 8 Pet. 591; 4 Wash. C. C. 486; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 618; 2 id. 82.

Prior to the act of congress " providing for keeping and distributing all public documents," approved February 5, 1859, the law provided that one copy of each book or other production should be sent to the librarians of the Smithsonian Institute, and one to the librarian of the Congress Library. This provision is now repealed; and while in existence it was questionable whether a compliance with its conditions was essential to a valid copyright. 1 Blatchf. C. C. 618.
4. The remedy for an infringement of copyright is threefold. By an action of debt for certain penalties and forfeitures given by the statute. By an action on the case at common law for damages, founded on the legal right and the injury caused by the infringement. The action must be case, and not trespass. 2 Blatchf. C. C. 39. By a bill in equity for an injunction to restrain the further infringement, as an incident to which an account of the profits made by the infringer may be ordered by the court, 6 Ves. Ch. 705 ; 8 id. 323 ; 9 id. 341 ; 1 Russ. & M.Ch. 73, 159; 1 Younge & C. Ch. 197 ; 2 Hare, Ch. 560 ; though it cannot embrace penalties. 2 Curt. C. C. 200; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 39. The complainant in a bill in equity must show a prima facie legal title; although a strictly legal title is not indispensable to relief. It is sufficient if there be clear color of title founded on long possession. 6 Ves. Ch. 689 ; 8 id. 215 ; 17 id. 422 ; Jac. 314, 471; 2 Russ. 385 ; 2 Phill. Ch. 154. As to the objections that may be taken by general demurrer, see 2 Blatchf. C.C.39. The injunction may go against an entire work or a part, 2 Russ. 393 ; 3 Stor. C. C. 768 ; 17 Ves. Ch. 422; 3 Mylne & C. Ch. 737; 11 Sim. Ch. 31 ; 2 Beav.Rolls, 6 ; 2 Brown, Ch. 80 ; though the court will not interfere where the extracts are trifling. 17 Law Term, 141; 2 Swanst. 428; 1 Russ. & M. 73; 2 id. 247. Original jurisdiction in respect to all these remedies is vested by another statute (Feb. 15, 1819) in the circuit courts of the United States. The act of 1831 limits the action for the penalties and forfeitures to the period of two years after the cause of action arose. The remedy for an unauthorized printing or publishing of any manuscript is by a special action on the case, or by a bill in equity for an injunction. Original jurisdiction in these cases is likewise vested in the circuit courts by force of the two acts of 1819 and 1831.
5. Infringement. The statute provides that any person who shall print, publish, or import, or cause to be printed, published, or inmported, any copy of a book which is under the protection of a copyright, without the consent of the person legally entitled to the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in presence of two or more credible witnesses, or who shall, knowing the same to be so printed or imported, publish, sell, or expose to sale, or cause to be published, sold, or exposed to sale, any copy of such book, without such consent in writing, slall forfeit every copy of such book to the person legally at the time entitled to the copyright, and shall also forfeit and pay fifty cents for every sheet which may be found in his possession, either printed, or printing, published, imported, or exposed to sale, contrary to the intent of the act, one moiety to the owner of the copyright, and one moiety to the use of the United States. The act is confined to the sheets in the possession of the party who prints or exposes them to sale. 7 How. 798. It has been held to be necessary to the recovery of these statutory penalties and forfeitures that the whole of the book should be reprinted. 23 Bost. Law Rep. 397.
6. But in order to sustain an action at common law for damages, or a bill in equity for an infringement of copyright, an exact reprint is not necessary. There may be a piracy. 1st. By reprinting the whole or part of a book verbatim. The mere quantity of matter taken from a book is not of itself a test of piracy. 3 Mylne & C. Ch. 737. Extracts and quotations fairly made, and not furnishing a substitute for the book itself, or operating to the injury of the author, are allowable. 17 Ves. Ch. 422; 17 Law Jour. 142; 1 Campb. 94 ; Ambl. Ch. 694; 2 Swanst. Ch. 428; 2 Stor. C C. $100 ; 2$ Russ. 383 ; 1 Am. Jur. 212; 2 Bcar. Rolls, 6 ; 11 Sim. Ch. 31. 2d. By imitating or copying, with colorable alterations and disguises, assuming the appearance of a new work. Where the resemblance does nct amount to identity of parallel passages, the criterion is whether there is such similitude and conformity between the two books that the person who wrote the one most have ured the other as a model, and must have copicd or imitated it. The principal authorities applicable to this class of piracies are, 5 Ves. Ch. 24; 8id. 215; 12id. $270 ; 16 i d .269,4$ ² $_{2}$; 5 Swanst. Ch. 672; 2 Brown, Ch. 80 ; 2 Ruse. 385; 2 Sim. & S. Ch. 6; 3 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 77 ; 1 Camplo. 94 ; 1 East, 361 ; 4 Esp. 169 ; 1 Stor. C. C. 11 ; 3 id. 768 ; 2 Woodb. & M. C. C. 497 ; 2 Paine, C. C. 393, which was the case of a chart. A fair and bonâ fide abridgment has in some cases been held to be no infringement of the copyright. 2 Atk. Ch. 141; Amlul. 403; Lofft, 775; 1 Brown, Ch. 451; 5 Ves. Ch. 709; 2 Am. Jur. 491; 3 id. 215 ; 4 id. 456, 479; 39 Leg. Ohs. 346; 1 Younge & C. Ch. 298; 4 McLean, C.C.506; 1 Stor. C.C. 19; 2 Story, Eq. 8939 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 382. A translation has been held not to be a violation of the copyright of the original. 2 Wall. Jr. C. C. 547.

In the case of piracy of prints, maps, charts, and musical compositions, the statute gives penalties and forfeitures for copying of the whole, and for copying, by varying, adding to, or diminishing the main design, with intent to evade the law. The acts of infringement thus defined are, printing or importing for sale, or causing to be printed or imported for sale, without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, and signed in the presence of two credible witnesses, or, knowing the same to be printed or imported without such consent, exposing to sale, or disposing of in any manner, without such consent. The forfeitures extend to the plate or plates used, and to every sheet pronted, and the penalties are one dollar for every sheet found in the possession of the infringer, printed or published or exposed to sale contrary to the intent of the act, to be recovered asin the case of the penalties for unlawfully printing, publishing, or selling a brook.
7. The title to a copyright is made assignable by that provision of the statute which authorizes it to be taken out by the "legal assigus" of the author. An assignment may therofore be made before the entry for copyright; but as the statute makes a written instrument, signed by the author, etc., and attested by two credible witnesses, necessary to a lawful authority in another to print, publish, and sell, a valid assignment or license, whether before or after the copyright is obtained by entry, must be so made. Whether a. general assignment of the first term by the author will carry the interest in the additional or renewed term, see 2 Brown, Ch. 80 ; Jac. 315 ; 2 Woodb. & M. C. C. 23.

The sole right of acting, performing, and representing dramatic compositions, which have been entered for copyright under the act of 1831, by a supplemental act, passed August 18,1856 , is now added to the sole right of printing and publishing, and is vested in the author or proprietor, his heirs or assigns, during the whole period of the copyright. This new right, being made an incident to the copyright, follows the latter whenever the formalities for obtaining it have been comolied with. For an unlawful representation, the statute gives an action of damages, to be assessed at a sum not less than one hundred dollars for the first and at fifty dollars for every subsequent performance, as to the court shall scem just. The author's remedy in equity is also saved. The statute does not apply to cases where the right of representation has been acquired before the composition has been made the subject of copyright. For a discussion of these acts, and of the nature and incidents of dramatic literary property, see 9 Am. Law Reg. 33, and 23 Bost. Law Rep. 397. On the general subject, see Curtis on Copyright; Renouard, Droits d'Auteurs; 2 Au. Jur. 248 ; 1 Phil. Leg. Int. 66.

CORAAGIUM. Measures of corn. An unusual and extraordinary tribute, arising only on special occasions. They are thus distinguished from services. Mentioned in connection with hidage and carvage. Blount.

CORAM IPSO REGE (Lat.). Before the king himself. Proceedings in the court of king's bench are said to be coram rege ipso. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 41 .

CORAM NOBIS. A writ of error on a judgment in the king's bench is called a coram nobis (before us). 1 Archbold, Pract. 234. See Coram Vobis.

CORAM NON JUDICE. Acts done by a court which has no jurisdiction either over the person, the cause, or the process, are said to be coram non judice. 1 Conn. 40. Sucb acts have no validity. If an act is required to be done before a particular person, it would not be considered as done before him if he were asleep or non compos mentis. 5 Harr. & J. Md. 42; 8 Cranch, 9 ; Paine, C. C. 55 ; 1 Preston, Conv. 266.

CORAM VOBIS. A writ of error directed to the same court which tried the cause, to correct an error in fact. 3 Md. 325 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 642.
If a judgment in the King's Bench be erroneous in matter of fact only, and not in point of law, it may he reversed in the same court by writ of error coram nobis (before us), or quæ coram nobie residant; so called from its being founded on the record and process, which are stated in the writ to remain in the court of the king before the king himself. But if the error be in the judgment itself, and not in the process, a writ of error does not lie in the same court upon such judgment. 1 Rolle, Abr. 746. In the Common Pleas, the record and proceedings being stated to remain before the king's justices, the writ is called a writ of error coram yohis (before you), or que coram vobis residant. 3 Chitty, Blsckst. Comm. 406, n.

CORD. A measure of wood. A cord of wood must, when the wood is piled close, measure eight feet by four, and the wood must be four feet long. There are various local regulations in our principal cities as to ${ }^{\circ}$ the manner in which wood shall be measured and sold.

CORN. In its most comprehensive sense, this term signifies every sort of grain, as well as peas and beans: this is its meaning in the memorandum usually contained in policies of insurance. But it does not include rice. Park, Ins. 112 ; 1 Marshall, Ins. 223, n.; Stevens, Av. pt. 4, art. 2; Benecke, Av. c. 10; Weskett, Ins. 145. See Comyns, Dig. Biens (G1).

CORN LIAWS. Laws regulating the trade in bread-stuff.

The object of corn laws is to secure a regular and steady supply of the great staples of food; and for this object the means adopted in different countries and at different times widely vary, sometimes involving restriction or prohibition upon the export, and sometimes, in order to stimulate production, offering a bounty upon the export. Of the former cbaracter was the famous system of corn laws of England, initiated in 1773 by Mr. Burke, and repealed in 1846 under Sir Robert Peel.

CORNAGE. A species of tenure in England, by which the tenant was bound to blow a horn for the sake of alarming the country on the approach of an enemy. Bacon, Abr. Tenure (N).

CORNET. A commissioned officer in a regiment of cavalry.

CORODY. An allowance of meat, drink, money, clothing, lodging, and such like necessaries for sustenance. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 282; 1 Chitty, Pract. 225. An allowance from an abbey or house of religion, to one of the king's scrvants who dwells therein, of meat and other sustenance. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 230.

An assize lay for a corody. Cowel. Corodies are now obsolete. Coke, 2d Inst. 630; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 40.

CORONATOR (Lat.). A coroner. Spelman, Gloss.

CORONER. An officer whose principal duty it is to hold an inquisition, with the assistance of a jury, over the body of any person who may have come to a violent death, or who has died in prison.
2. It is his duty also, in case of the death of the sheriff or his incapacity, or when a vacancy occurs in that office, to serve all the writs and processes which the sheriff is usually bound to serve. 20 Ga. 336; 11 Tex. 284 ; 14 Ala. n. s. 326 ; 10 Humphr. Tenn. 346; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 349.

The chief justice of the King's Bench is the sovereign or chief coroner of all England; though it is not to be uuderstood that he performs the active duties of that office in any one county. 4 Coke, 57 ; Bacon, Abr. Coroner; 3 Comyns, Dig. 242; 5 id. 212.
3. It is also his duty to inquire concerning shipwreck, and to find who has possession of the goods; concerning treasure-trove, who are the finders, and where the property is. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 349.

The office has lost much of the honor which formerly appertained to it; but the duties are of great consequence to society, both for bringing murderers to punishment and protecting innocent persons from accusation. It may often happen that the imperfections of the early examination enable one who is undoubtedly a criminal to escape. It is proper in most cases of homicide to procure the examination to be made by a physician, and in many cases it is his duty. 4 Carr. & P. 571.

CORPORAL (Lat. corpus, body). Bodily; relating to the body: as, corporal punishment.

A non-commissioned officer of the lowest grade in an infantry company.

CORPORAL OATH. An oath which the party takes laying his hand on the gospels. Cowel. It is now held to mean solemn oath. 1 Ind. 184.

CORPORAL TOUCH. Actual, bodily contact with the hand.

It was once held that before a seller of personal property could be said to have stopped it in transitu, so as to regain the possession of it, it was necessary that it should come to his corporal touch; but the contrary is now settled. These words were used merely as a figurative expression. 3 Term, 464; 5 East, 184.

CORPORATION (Lat. corpus, a body). A body, consisting of one or more natural persons, established by law, usually for some specific purpose, and continued by a succession of members.

It is this last characteristio of a corporation, sometimes called its immortality, prolonging its existence beyond the term of natural life, and thereby onabling a long-continued effort and concentration of means to the end which it was designed to answer, that constitutes its principal utility. A corporation is modelled upon a state or nation, and is to this day called a body politic as well as cor-porate,--therehy indicating its origin and derivation. Its earliest form was, probably, the munioipality or city, which neoessity exacted for the control or local police of the marts and crowded places of the state or empire. The combination of the mommonalty in this form for local government became the earliest bulwark against despotic power : and a late philosophical historian traces to the remains and remembrance of the Roman municipia the formation of those elective governments of towns and cities in modern Europe, which, after the fall of the Roman empire, contributed so largely to the preservation of order and to the protection of the rights of life and property as to become the foundation of modern liberty. McIntosh, Hist. of Eng. pp. 31, 32.

Aggregate corporations are those which are composed of two or more members at the same time.

Civil corporations are those which are created to facilitate the transaction of business.

Ecclesiastical corporations are those which are created to secure the public worship of God.

Eleemosynary corporations are those which are created for the purposes of charities, such as schools, hospitals, and the like.

Lay corporations are those which exist for secular purposes.

Private corporations are those which are created wholly or in part for purposes of private emolument. 4 Wheat. 668; 9 id. 907.

Public corporations are those which are ex. clusively instruments of the public interest.

Sole corporations are those which by law consist of but one member at any one time.
2. By both the civil and the common law, the sovereign authority only can create a cor-poration,--a corporation by prescription, or so old that the license or charter which created it is lost, being presumed, from the long-continued exercise of corporate powers, to have been entitled to them by sovereign grant. In England, corporations are created by royal charter or parliamentary act; in the United states, by legislative act of any state, or of the congress of the United States,-congress having power to create a corporation, as, for instance, a national bank, when such a body is an appropriate instrument for the exercise of its constitutional powers. 4 Wheat. 424.

All corporations, of whatever kind, are moulded and controlled, both as to what they may do and the manner in which they may do it, by their charters or acts of incorporation, which to them are the laws of their being, which they can neither dispense with nor alter. Subject, however, to such limitations as these, or general statute or constitutional law, may impose, every corporation aggregate has, by virtue of incorporation and as incidental thereto, first, the power of perpetual succession, including the admission, and, except in the case of mere stock corporations, the removal for cause, of members; second, the power to sue and be sued, to grant and to receive grants, and to do all acts which it may do at all, in its corporate name; third, to purchase, receive, and to hold lands and other property, and to transmit them in succession; fourth, to have a common seal, and to break, alter, and renew it at pleasure; and, ffth, to make by-laws for its government, so that they be consistent with its charter and with law. Iudeed, at this day, it may be laid down as a general rule that a corporation may, within the limits of its charter or act of incorporation express or implied, lawfully do all acts and enter into all contracts that a natural person may do or enter into, so that the same be appropriate as means to the end for which the corporation was created.
3. A corporation may be dissolved, if of limited duration, by the expiration of the term of its existence, fixed by charter or general law; by the loss of all its members, or of an integral part of the corporation, by death or otherwise, if the charter or act of incorporation provide no mode by which such loss may be supplied; by the surrender of its corporate franchise to, and the acceptance of the surrender by, the sovereign authority; and, lastly, by the forfeiture of its charter by the neglect of the duties imposed or abuse of the privileges conferred by it; the forfeiture being enforced by proper legal process.
4. In England, a private as well as a public corporation may be dissolved by act of parliament; but in the United States, although the charter of a public corporation may be altered or repealed at pleasure, the charter of a private corporation, whether granted by the king of Great Britain previous to the revolution, or by the legislature of any of the states since, is, unless in the latter case express power be for that purpose reserved, within the protection of that clause of the constitution of the United States which, among other things, forbids a state from passing any "law impairing the obligation of contracts." Const. U. S. art. 1, sect. 10 ; 4 Wheat. 518. Under this clause of the constitution it has been settled that the charter of a private corporation, whether civil or eleemosynary, is an executed contract between the government and the corporation, and that the legislature cannot repeal, impair, or alter it against the consent or without the default of the corporation, judicially ascertained and declared. Id.

A corporate franchise, however, as to build and maintain a toll-bridge, may, by virtue of the power of eminent domain, be condemned by a state to public uses, upon just compentation, like any other private property. 6 Hsw. 507.

CORPORATOR. A member of a corporation.
CORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS.
Substantial, permanent oljects which may be inherited. The term land will include all such. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 17.
CORPOREAL PROPERTY. In Civil Law. That which consists of such suljects as are palpable.

In the common law, the term to signify the same thing is property in possession. 1t differs from ineoryoreal property, which consists of choses in action and easements, as a right of way, and the like.

CORPSE. The dead body (q. v.) of a human being. 1 Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 366, n.; 2 Term, 733; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 497; 8 Pick. Mass. 370; Dig. 47. 12. 3.7; 11. 7. 38; Code, 3. 44. 1. Stealing a corpse is not larceny at common law. Coke, 3d Inst. 203.

CORPUS (Lat.). A body. The substance. Used of a human body, a corporation, a collection of laws, etc.

CORPUS COMITATUS. The body of the county; the inhabitants or citizens of a whole county, as distinguished from a part of the county or a part of its citizens. 5 Mas. C. C. 290.
corpus cum causa. See Mabeas Corpus.
CORPUS DELICTI. The body of the offence; the essence of the crime.
2. It is a general rule not to convict unless the corpus delicti can be established, that is, until the fact that the crime bas been actually perpetrated bas been first proved. Hence, on a charge of humicide the accused should not be convicted unless the death be first distinctly proved, either by direct evidence of the fact or by inspection of the body. Best, Pres. $\frac{7}{201 ;}$ I Starkie, Er. 575 . See 6 Carr.\& P. 176; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 290. Instances have occurred of a person being convicted of having killed another, who, after the supposed criminal has been put to death for the supposed offence, has made his appearance alive. The wisdom of the rule is apparent; but it has been questioned whether, in extreme cases, it may not be competent to prove the basis of the corpus delicti by presumptive evidence. 3 Bentham, Jud. Ev. 234; Wills. Circum. Ev. 105; Best, Pres. $\% 204$.
3. The presumption arising from the possession of the fruits of crime recently after its commission, which in all cases is one of fact rather than of law, is occasionally so strong as to render unnecessary any direct proof of what is called the corpus delicti. Thus, to borrow an apt illustration from Mr. Justice Maule, if a man were to go into the London docks quite sober, and shortly afterwards were to be found very drunk, staggering out of one of the cellars, in which above a million gallons of wine are stowed, "I think," says the learned judge, "that this would be reasonable evidence that the man had stolen some of the wine in the cellar, though no proof were given that any particular yat had been broached and that any wine had actually been missed." Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 284; 1 Taylor, Ev. $\frac{8}{122 \text {. In this case it was proved }}$ that a prisoner indicted for larceny was seen coming out of the lower room of a warehouse in the London docks, in the floor above which a large quantity of pepper was deposited, and where he had no business to be. He was stopped by a constable, who suspected him from the bulky state of his pockets, and said, "I think there is something wrong about you;" upon which the prisoner said, "I hope you will not be hard upon me;" land then threw a quantity of pepper out of his pocket on the ground. The witness stated that he could not say whether any pepper had been stolen, nor that any pepper had been missed; but that which was found upon the prisoner was of like description with the pepper in the warehouse. It was held by all the judges that the prisoner, upon these facts, was properly convicted of larceny.

CORPUS JURIS CANONICI (Lat. the body of the canon law). The name given to the collections of the decrees and canons of the Roman church. See Canon Law.
CORPUS JURIS CIVILIS. The body of the civil law. The collection comprising the Institutes, the Pandects or Digest, the Code, and the Novels, of Justinian. See those several titles, and also Civil Law, for fuller information. The name is said to have been first applied to this collection early in the seventeenth century.

CORRECTION. Chastisement, by one having authority, of a person who has committed some offence, for the purpose of bringing him to legal subjection.
2. It is chiefly exercised in a parental manner by parents, or those who are placed in loca parentis. A parent may therefore justify the correction of the child either corporally or by confinement; and a schoolmaster, under whose care and instruction a parent has placed his child, may equally justify similar correction; but the correction in both cases must be moderate and in a proper manner. Comyns, Dig. Pleader, 3 M . 19 ; Hawk. e. 60, s. 23 , c. 62 , я. 2 , с. 29 , s. 5 ; 2 Humphr. Tenn. 283 ; 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 365 .

The master of an apprentice, for disobedience, may correct him moderately, 1 Barnew. & C. 460 ; Croke Car. 179; 2 Show. 289; 10 Mart. La. 38; but he cannot delegate the authority to another. 9 CJike, 90 .

A master has no right to correct his servants who are not apprentices. 10 Conn. 455; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 897.
3. Soldiers are liableto moderate correction from their superiors. For the sake of maintaining discipline on board of the navy, the captain of a vessel, either belonging to the United States or to private individuals, may inflict moderate correction on a sailor for disobedience or disorderly conduct. Abbott, Shipp. 160; 1 Chanc. Pract. 73; 14 Johns N. Y. 119 ; 15 Mass. 365; 1 Bay, So. C. 3; Bee, Adm. 161; 1 Pet. Adm 168; Moll. 209; 1 Ware, Dist. Ct. 83. Such has been the general rule. But by a proviso to an act of congress, approved the 28th of September, 1850, flogging in the nayy and on board vessels of commerce was abolisthed.
4. The husband, by the old law, might give his wife moderate correction. 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 2. But in later times this power of correction began to be doubtod; and a wife may now have security of the peace against her lussband, or, in return, a husband against his wife. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 444; Strange, 478, 875, 1207; 2 Lev. 128.

Vol. I. -24
5. Any excess of correction by the parent, master, officer, or captain may render the party guilty of an assault and battery and liable to all its consequences. 4 Gray, Mass. 36. In some prisons, the keepers have the right to correct the prisoners.

CORREGIDOR. In Spanish Law. A magistrate who took cognizance of various misdemeanors, and of civil matters. 2 White, New Rec. 53.

CORREI. In Clvil Law. Two or more bonud or secured by the same obligation.

Correi credendi. Creditors secured by the same obligation.

Correi debendi. Two or more persons bound as principal debtors to pay or perform. Erskine, Inst. 3. 3.74; Calvinus, Lex. ; Bell, Dict.

CORRESPONDENCE. The letters written by one person to another, and the answers thereto. See Letter; Copyriget.

CORRDPTION. An act done with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others.
It includes bribery, hat is more comprehensive; because an act may be corruptly done though the advantage to be derived from it be not offered by another. Merlin, Rép.

Something against law: as, a contract by which the horrower agreed to pay the lender usurious interest. It is said, in such case, that it was corruptly agreed, etc.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD. The incapacity to inherit, or pass an inheritance, in consequence of an attainder to which the party has been subject.
2. When this consequence flows from an attainder, the party is stripped of all honors and dignities he possessed, and becomes ignoble.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, n. 2, declares that "no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted." See 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 388; 1 Cruise, Dig. 52; 3 id. 240, 378-381, 473; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 740.

CORSE-PRESENT. In OId English

Law. A gift of the second best beast belonging to a man at his death, talken along with the corpse and presented to the priest. Stat. 21 IIen. VIII. cap. 6; Cowel; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 425.

CORSNED. In Old English Law. A piece of barley bread, which, after the pronunciation of certain imprecations, a person accused of crime was compelled to swallow.
A piece of cheese or bread of about an ounce weight was consecrated, with an exorcism desiring of the Almighty that it might cause convulsions and paleness, and find no passage, if the man was really guilty, but might turn to health and nourishment if he was innocent. Spelman, Gloss. 439. It was then given to the suspected person, who at the same time received the sacrament. If he swallowed it easily, he was esteemed innocent; if it choked him, he was esteemed guilty. See 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 345 .

CORTES. The name of the legislative assemblies of Spain and Portugal.
CORVEE. In French Law. Gratuitous labor exacted from the villages or communities, especially for repairing roads, constructing bridges, etc.

Corvee seigneuriale are services due the lord of the manor. Guyot, Rep. Univ.; 3 Low. C. 1.

COSBERING. In Feudal Law. A prevegative or seignorial right of a lord, as to lie and feast himself and his followers at his tenants' houses. Cowel.

COSENING. In Old English Law. An offence whereby any thing is done deceitfully, whether in or out of contracts, which cannot be fitly termed by any especial name. Called in the civil law Stellionatus. West, Symb. pt. 2, Indictment, & 68; Blount; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 158.

COSINAGE (spelled, also, Cousinage, Cosenage). A writ which lay where the father of the great-grandfather of the demandant had been disseised and the heir brought his writ to recover possession. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 221.

Relationship; affinity. Stat. 4 Hen. III. cap. 8; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 186; Coke, Litt. 160 a.

COSTS. In Practice. The expenses incurred by the parties in the prosecution or defence of a suit at law.

They are distinguished from fecs in being an allowance to a party for expenses incurred in conducting his suit; whereas fces are a compensation to an officer for services rendered in the progress of the cause. 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 248.

No costs were recoverable by either plaintiff or defendant at common law. They were first given to plaintiff by the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I. c. 1 , which has been substantially adopted in all the United States.
2. A party can in no case recover costs from his adversary unless he can show some statute which gives him the right.

Statutes which give costs are not to be extended beyond the letter, but are to be construed strictly. Salk. 206; 2 Strange, 1006, 1069; 3 Burr. 1287; 4 Binn. Penn. 194; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 129 ; 5 id. 344 ; 1 Rich. So. C. 4.

They do not extend to the government; and therefore when the United States, or one of the several states, is a party, they neither pay nor receive costs, unless it be so expressly provided by statute. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 505; 8 id. 151; 3 Cranch, 73 ; 2 Wheat. 395 ; 12 id. $546 ; 5$ How. 29. This exemption is founded on the sovereign character of the state, which is sukject to no process. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 400; Cowp. 366 ; 3 Penn. St. 153.
3. In many cases, the right to recover costs is made to depend, by statute, upon the amount of the verdict or judgment. Where there is such a provision, and the verdict is for less than the amount required by statute to entitle the party to costs, the right to costs, in general, will depend upon the mode in which the verdict has been reduced below the sum specified in the act. In such cases, the general rule is that if the amount be reduced by evidence of direct payment, the party shall lose his costs; but if by set-off or other collateral defence, he will be entitled to recover them. 2 Strange, 1911; 1 Wils. 19; 3 id. 48; 3 Dougl. 448; 9 Moore, Priv. Coun. 625; 2 Chitt. Bail. 394; 8 East, 28, 347; 2 Price, Exch. 19; 1 Taunt. 60 ; 4 Bingh. 169; 1 Dall. Pcnn. 308, 457 ; 2 id. 74 ; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 388; 13 id. 287; 16 id. 253; 4 Penn. St. 330.
4. When a case is dismissed for want of jurisdiction over the person, no costs are allowed to the defendant, unless expressly given by statute. The difficulty in giving costs, in such case, is the want of power. If the case be not legally before the court, it has no more jurisdiction to award costs than it has to grant relief. 2 Woodb. & M. C. C. 417 ; 1 Wall. Jr. C. C. 187 ; 2 Wheat. 363 ; 9 id. $650 ; 3$ Sumn. C. C. $473 ; 15$ Mass. 221 ; 16 Penn. St. 200 ; 4 Dall. Penn. 388; 3 Litt. Ky. 332; 2 Yerg. Tenn. 579 ; Wright, Ch. Ohio, 417 ; 1 Vt. 488; 2 Halst. N. J. 168.

In equity, the giving of costs is entirely discretionary, as well with respect to the period at which the court decides upon them as with respect to the parties to whom they are given.
5. In the exercise of their discretion, courts of equity are generally governed by certain fixed principles which they have adopted on the subject of costs. It was the rule of the civil law that victus victui in expensis condemnatus est ; and this is the general rule adopted in courts of equity as well as in courts of law, at least to the extent of throwing it upon the failing party to show the existence of circumstances to displace the prima facie claim to costs given by success to the party who prevails. 3 Daniell, Chanc. Pract. 15151521.
6. An executor or administrator suing at law or in equity in his representative capacity is not personally liable to the opposite party for costs in case he is unsuccessful, if tho litigation were carried on in good faith for the benefit of the estate. 11 Serg. \& $\mathbf{R}$. Penn. 47 ; 15 id. 239 ; 23 Penn. St. 471 . But the rule is otherwise where vexatious litigation is caused by the executor or administrator, and where he has been guilty of fraud or misconduct in relation to the suit. 5 Binn. Penn. 138; 7 Penn. St. 136, 137; 3 Penn. L. J. 116.

See Dodrle Costs ; Treble Costs. Consult Brightly, Hulloch, Merritield, Sayer, Tidd, Costs; the books of practice adapted to the laws of each state; Bouvier, Institutes, Index, this title.

COSTS OF THe DAY. Costs incurred in preparing for trial on a particular day. Adams, Eq. 343.

COSTS DE INCREMENTO (increased costs, costs of increase). Costs adjudged by the court in addition to those assessed by the jury. 13 How. 372.

The cost of the anit, etc. recovered originally under the atatute of Gloncester is said te be the origin of costs de incremento. Buller, N. P. 328 a. Where the statute requires costs to he doubled io case of an unsuccessfinl appenl, coata de incremento atund oo the same footing as jury costa. 2 Strange, 1048 ; Taxed Costs. Costa were enrelled in England in the time of Blackstone as increase of damages. 3 Blackstedc, Cemm. 299.

COTERELLI. Anciently, a kind of peasantiy who were outlaws. Robbers. Blount.

COTERELLUS. A cottager.

Coterellus was distinguished from cotarius in this, that the cotarius held hy socage tenure, but the coterellus held in mere villenage, and his person, issuc, and goods were held at the will of the lerd. Cowel.

COTLAND. Land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage. Cowel; Blount.

COTSEPTUS. A cottager or cottage-holder who held by servile tenure and was bound to do the work of the lord. Cowel.

COTTAGE, COTTAGIUM. In Old English Law. A small house without any land belonging to it, whereof mention is made in stat. 4 Edw. I.

But, by atat. 31 Eliz. cap. 7, ne man may build anch cottage for habitation unless he lay unto it four aeres of freeheld land, exeept in market-towna, citien, or within a mile of the sea, or for the hahitation of lahorera in mines, ahepherds, fereaters, sailors, etc. Termes de la Ley. Twenty years' posseasion of cottage gives geod title as againat the lord. Buller, Nisi P. 103 a, $10 d$. By a grant of a cottnge the curtilage will pass. 4 Viner, Abr. 582.

COUCHANT. Lying down. Animals are said to have been levanl and couchant when they have been upon another person's land, damage feasant, one right at least. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 9.

COUNCIL (Lat. concilium, an assembly). The legislative body in the government of cities or boroughs. An advisory body selected to aid the executive. See 14 Mass. 470; 3 Pick. Mass. 517; 4 id. 25.

A governor's council is still retained in some of the states of the United Statea. It is analogens in many respecta to the privy council of the kiog of Great Britain and of the governora of the British colooiea, though of a much more limited range of duties.

See Privy Council.

COUNSEL. The counsellors who are associated in the management of a particular cause, or who act as legal advisers in reference to any matter requiring legal knowledge and judgment.

The term is used both as a singular and plural noun, to denote one or mere; though it is perhaps more common, when speaking of one of several counsellors conceroed io the management of a care in court, to say that he is "of counsel."

Knowledge. A grand jury is sworn to keep secret "the commonwealth's counsel, their fellows', and their own."

COUNSELLOR AT LAAW. An officer in the supreme court of the United States, and in some other courts, who is employed by a party in a cause to conduct the same on its trial on his behalf.

He differs from an atterney at law.
In the aupreme cenrt of the United States, the two degrees of atterney and counsel are kept separate, and no persen is permitted te practise in hoth capacities. It is the duty of the connsel to draft or review and cerreot the special pleadinga, to manage the cause on trial, and, during the whole course of the suit, to apply estahlished principles of law to the exigencies of the case. 1 Kent, Comm. 307.

Geoerally, in the other centts of the United States, a well as in the courts of Peanaylvania, the anme person performs the duty of eounsellor and atterney at law.
2. In giving their advice to their clients, counsel and others, professional men, have duties to perform to their clients, to the public, and to themselves. In such cases they have thrown upon them something which they owe to their administration of justice, as well as to the private interests of their employers. The interests propounded for them ought, in their own apprehension, to be just, or at least fairly disputable; and when such interests are propounded, they ought not to be pursued per fas et nefas. 1 Hagg. 222. See Attorney at Law; Privilege; Confinential Communications.

COUNT (Fr. comte; from the Latin comes). An earl.

It gave way aa a distinct title to the Saxon earl, but was retained in countess, viscount, and as the hasis of county. Termes de la Ley; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 398. See Cones.

In Pleading (Fr. conte, a narrative). The plaintiff's statement. of his cause of action.

This werd, derived frem the French conte, a oarrative, is in our old law-booka used synonymously with declaration; but practice has introduced the following distioction. When the plaintiff's complaint embraces ooly a aingle cause of action, and he makea ooly one statement of it, that statement is called, indifferently, a declarstion or cennt; though the fermer is the mere usual term. But when the anit embraces two or more causes of action (each of which, of course. requires a different statement), or when the plaintiff makes twe or more different statements of one and the same cause of action, each several statement is called a count, and all of them, collectively, conatitute the declaration. In all cases, however, in which there are twe or more connta, whether there ia actually but one cause of action or several, each count purports, upon the face of it, to disclose a diatinct right of action, noconnected with that stated in any of the other counta.

One object proposed in inserting two or more counts in one declaration when there is in fact but one cause of action, is, in some cases, to guard against the danger of an insufficient statement of the cause, where a doubt exists as to the legal sufficiency of one or another of two different modes of declaring; but the more usual end proposed in inserting more than one count in such case is to accommodate the statement to the cause, as far as may be, to the possible state of the proof to be exhibited on trial, or to guard, if possible, against the hazard of the proofs varying materially from the statement of the cause of action; so that, if one or more of several counts be not adapted to the evidence, some other of them may be so. Gould, Plead. c. 4, ss. 2, 3, 4; Stephen, Plead. 279 ; Doctrina Plac. 178; 3 Comyns, Dig. 291 ; Dane, abr. Index; Bouvier, Inst. Index. In real actions, the declaration is usually called a count. Stephen, Plcad. 36.

COUNTER (spelled, also, Compter). The name of two prisons formerly standing in London, but now demolished. They were the Poultry Counter and Wood Street Counter. Cowel; Whishaw ; Coke, 4th Inst. 248.

COUNTER AFFIDAVIT. An affidavit made in opposition to one already made. This is allowed in the preliminary examination of some cases.
COUNTER-BOND. A bond to indemnify. 2 Leon, 90.

COUNTER-LETTER. An agreement to recovery where property has been passed by absolute deed with the intention that it shall serve as security only. A defeasance by a separate instrument. 11 Pet. 351.
COUNTER-SECURITY. Security given to one who has become security for another, the condition of which is, that if the one who first became surety shall he damnified, the one who gives the counter-security will indemnify him.

COUNTERFEIT. In Criminal Law. To make something false in the semblance of that which is true. It always implies a fraudulent intent. Vide Viner, Abr. Counterfeit; Forgery.

COUNTERMAND. A change or recalling of orders previously given.

Express countermand takes place when contrary orders are given and a revocation of the prior orders is made.

Implied countermand takes place when a new order is given which is inconsistent with the former order.
When a command or order has been given, and property delivered, by which a right vests in a third person, the party giving the order cannot countermand it. For example, if a debtor should deliver to $A$ a sum of money to be paid to B , his creditor, B has a vested right in the money, and, unless he abandon that right and refuse to take the money, the debtor cannot recover it from $A$. 1 Rolle, Abr. 32, pl. 13; Yelv. 164; Styles, 296. See 3 Coke, 26 b; 2 Ventr. $298 ; 10$ Mod. 432 ; Viner, Abr. Countermand (A 1), Bailment (D) ; 9 East, 49 ; Bacon, Abr. Bailment (D); Comyns, Dig. Attorney (B 9), (C 8); Dane, Abr. Countermand.

COUNTERPART. Formerly, each party to an indenture executed a separate deed: that part which was executed by the grantor was called the origital, and the rest the counterparts. It is now usual for all the parties to execute every part; and this makes them all originals. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 296.
In granting lots subject to a ground-rent reserved to the grantor, both parties execute the deeds, of which there are two copies: although both are original, one of them is sometimes called the counterpart. See 12 Viner, Abr. 104; Dane, Abr. Index; 7 Comyns, Dig. 443; Merlin, Rép. Double Ecrit.

COUNTERPLEA. In Pleading. A plea to some matter incidental to the main object of the suit, and out of the direct line of pleadings. 2 Wms. Saund. 45 h . Thas, counterplea of oyer is the defendant's allegations why oyer of an instrument should not be granted. Counterplea of aid prayer is the demandant's allegation why the vouchee of the tenant in a real action, or a stranger who asks to come in to defend his right, should not be admitted. Counterplea of voucher is the allegation of the vouchee in avoidance of the warranty after admission to plead. Counterpleas are of rare occurrence. COUNTY. One of the civil divisions of a country for judicial and political purposes. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 113. Etymologically, it denotes that portion of the country under the immediate government of a count. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 116.
2. The United States are generally divided into counties. Counties are, in many of the states, divided into townships or towns. In the New England States, however, towns are the basis of all civil divisions, and the cuanties are rather to be considered as aggregates of towns, so far as their origin is concerned. In Pennsyl rania, the state was originally divided into three counties by William Penn. See Proud's Hist. vol. 1, p. 234 ; vol. 2, p. 258.
3. In some states, a county is considered a corporation, 1111 . 115 ; in others, it is held a quasi corporation. 7 Mass. 461; 16 id. 87 ; 3 Me. 131 ; 9 id. $88 ; 8$ Johns. N. Y. 385 ; 3 Munf. Va. 102. In regard to the division of counties, see 11 Mass. 399 ; 16 id. 86 ; $6 \mathrm{~J} . \mathrm{J}$. Marsh. Ky. 147 ; 4 Halst. N. J. 357 ; 5 Watts, Penn. 87; 9 Cow. N. Y. 640.
4. In the English law, this word signifies the same as shire,-county being derived from the French, and shire from the Saxon. Both these words signify a circuit or portion of the realm into which the whole land is divided, for the better government thereof and the more easy administration of justice. There is no part of England that is not within some county; and the shire-reeve (sheriff) was the givernor of the province, under the comes, earl, or count.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS. Certain officers generally intrusted with the superintendeace of the collection of the county taxes and the dishursements made for the county. They are invested by the lucal laws with various powers.

COUNTY CORPORATE. A city or town, with more or less territory annexed, constituting a county by itself. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 120. Somethingsimilar to thisexists in this country in regard to Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. They differ in no material points from other counties.

COUNTY COURT. In English Law. Tribunals of limited jurisdiotion, originally established under the statute $9 & 10$ Vict. c. 95.

They had at their institution juriadiction of aotions for the recovery of dehts, damages, and demands, legacies, and balancea of partnership accounts, where the sum sued for did not exceed twenty pounds. It has since been much extended, especially in cases where the parties give assent in writing. They ars chiefly regulated by atat. $9 & 10$ Vict. c. $95 ; 12 & 13$ Vict. c. $101 ; 13 & 14$ Viet. c. $61 ; 15 & 16$ Vict. c. $51 ; 19 & 20$ Vict. c. 108; 21 $& 22$ Vict. c. 74. See 3 Sharswoed, Blackst. Comm. 76.

Tribunals of limited jurisdiction in the county of Middlesex, established under the statute 22 Geo. II. c. 33.

These courts are held once a month at least in every hundred in the county of Middlesex, by the county clerk and a jury of twelve suitors, or freeholders, summoned for that purpose. They examine the parties under oath, and make such order in the case as they shall judge agreeable to conscience. 3 Stephen, Comm. 452; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 83.

The county court was a court of great antiquity, and originally of much splendor and importance. It was a court of limited jurisdiction incident to the jurisdiction of the sheriff, in which, however, tne suitors were really the judgea, whils the sheriff was a ministerial officer. It had jurisdiction of personal actions for the recovery of small debts, and of many real actions prior to their abolition. By virtue of a justicies, it might entertain jurisdiction of personal actiona to any amount. At this court all proclamations of laws, outlawries, etc. were made, and the elections of such officers as sheriffs, coroners, and others took place. In the time of Edward I. it was held by the earl and biahop, and was of great dignity. It was superseded by the courts of Requests to a great degree; and these, in turn, gave way to the new county courts, as they are sometimes called distinetively.

In American Law. Courts in many of the states of the United States, and in Canada, of widely varying powers. See the accounts of the various states and the article Canada.

COUNTY PALATINE. A county possessing certain peculiar privileges.
The owners of such countiea have kingly powers within their jurisdictions, as the pardoning crimes, issuing writs, etc. Thesecounties have either passed into the hands of the crown, or have lost their peculiar privileges to a great degree. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 117; $4 i d .431$. The name is derived from palatium (palace), and was applied because the earls anciently had palaces and maintained regal state. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Blackstode, Comm. 117.

COUPONS. Those parts of a commercial instrument which are to be cut, and which are evidence of something connected with the contract mentioned in the instrument. They are generally attached to certificates of loan, where the interest is payable at particular neriods, and, when the interest is paid, they are cut off and delivered to the payor.

COUR DE CASSATION. In French Law. The supreme judicial tribunal and court of final resort. It is composed of forty-nine counsellors and judges, including a first president and three presidents of chamber, an attorney-general and six advocates-general, one head registrar and four deputy registrars appointed by the head registrar, and a certain number of ushers. Jones, French Bar, 22; Guyot, Rep. Univ.

The jurisdiction of the court is only on error shown in the proceedings of the lower courts in matters of law, taking the facts as found by the lower courts.
COURSE. The direction of a line with reference to a meridian.

Where there are no monuments, the land must be hounded by the courses and distances mentioned in the patent or deed. 4 Wheat. 444; 3 Pet. 96 ; 3 Murph. No. C. 82 ; 2 Harr. $\& \mathrm{~J} . \mathrm{Md} .267$; 5 id. 254. When the lines are actually marked, they must be adhered to though they vary from the course mentioned in the deeds. 2 Overt. Tenn. 304; 7 Wheat. 7. See 3 Call, Va. 239; 7 T. B. Monr. Ky. 333. See Bounnary.

COURSE OF TRADE. What is usually done in the management of trade or husiness.

Men are presumed to act for their own interest, and to pursue the way usually adopted by men generally: hence it is presumed in law that men in their actions will pursue the usual course of trade.

COURSE OF THE VOYAGE. By this term is understood the regular and customary track, if such there be, which a ship takes in going from one port to another, and the shortest way. Marshall, Ins. 185.

COURT (Fr. cour, Dutch, koert, a yard). In Practice. A body in the government to which the public administration of justice is delegated.

The presence of a sufficient number of the members of such a body regularly convened in an authorized place at an appointed time, engaged in the full and regular performance of its functions.

The place where justice is judicially administered. Coke, Litt. 58 a.

The judge or judges themselves, when duly convened.
The term is used in all the above senses, though but infrequently in the third sense given. The application of the term-which originally denoted the place of assembling-tó denote the assemblage, strikingly resembles the aimilar application of the Latin term curia (if, indeed, it be not a mere translation), and is readily explained by the fact that the earlier courts were merely assemblages, in the court-yard of the baron or of the king himself, of those who were qualifed and whose duty it was so to appear at stated times or upon summons. Traces of this usage and constitution of courts still remain in the courts baron, the various courts for the trial of impeachments in England and the United States, and in the control exeroised by the parliament of England and the legislatures of the various states of the United Statea over the organization of courts of justice, as constituted in poodern times. Indeed, the English parliament is still the High. Court of Parliament, and in Massachuaetta the noited legislative bodies are entitled, as they (and the body to which they succeeded) have heen from time immemorial, the General Court.

In England, however, and in those states of the United Statee which existed as colonies prior to the revolution, most of these judicial functions were early transferred to bodies of a compacter organization, whose sole function was the puhlic administration of justice. The power of impeachment of various high officers, however, is still retained hy the legislative bodies hoth in England and the United Statee, and is, perhaps, the only judicial function whieh has ever been exercieed hy the legislative bodies in the newer states of the United States. These more compact bodies are the courts, as the term is used in its modern acceptance.
The one common and essential feature in all courts is a judge or judges,-so essential, indeed, that they are even oalled the court, as distinguished from the acoessory and eubordinate officers. Courts of record are also provided with a recording officer, variously known as clerk, prothonotary, register, etc.; while in all oourts there are counsellors, attorneys, or eimilar officers recognized as peculiarly suitable persons to represent the parties actually oonoerned in the causes, and who are considered as officers of the court and assistants of the judges, together with a variety of ministerial officers, such as sheriffs, constables, hailiffs, tipstaves, oriers, eto. For a consideration of the funotione of the various members of a court, see the various appropriate titlea, as JURY, gheriff, ete.

Courts are said to belong to one or more of the following classes, according to the nature and extent of their jurisdiction, their forms of proceeding, or the principles upon which they administer justice, viz.:-

Admiralty. See Admiralty.
Appellate, which take cognizance of causes removed from another court by appeal or writ of error. See Appeal; Appellate Jurisniction; Division of Opinion.

Central. See Central Criminal Court.
Civil, which redress private wrongs. See Jurispiction.

Criminal, which redress public wrongs, that is, crimes or misdemeanors.

Ecclesiastical. See Ecclesiastical Caurts.
Of equity, which administer justice according to the principles of equity. See Equitr ; Court of Equity; Court of Chancery.

Of general jurisdiction, which have cognizance of and may determine causes various in their nature.

Inferior, which are subordinate to other courts; also, those of a very limited jurisdiction.

Of law, which administer justice according to the principles of the common law.

Of limited or special jurisdiction, which can take cognizance of a few specified matters only.

Local, which have jurisdiction of causes occurring in certain places only, usually the limits of a town or borough, or, in England, of a barony. See Local Codrts.

Martial. See Court-Martial.
Not of record, those which are not courts of record.

Of original jurisdiction, which have jurisdiction of causes in the first instance. See Jurisdiction.

Of record. See Court of Record.
Superior, which are those of immediate jurisdiction between the inferior and supreme courts; also, those of controlling as distinguished from those of subordinate jurisdiction.

Supreme, which possess the highest and controlling jurisdiction; also, in some states, a court of higher jurisdiction than the superior courts, though not the court of final resort.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See Anmiralty; Courts of tue United States, 21-89.

COURT OF ANCIENT DEMESNE.
In English Law. A court of peculiar con:stitution, held by a bailiff appointed by the king, in which alone the tenants of the king's demesne could be impleaded. 2 Burr. 1046 ; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 100; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 99; 1 Report Eng. Real Prop. Comm. 28, 29; 3 Stephen, Comm. 211, 212.

COURT OF APPEALS. In American Law An appellate tribunal which, in Kentucky, Maryland, and New York, is the court of last resort. See the articles on those states.

COURT OF ARCHES (L. Lat. curia de arcubus). In English Ecclesiastical Law. A court of appeal, and of original jurisdiction.

The most ancient consistory court belonging to the arehbishop of Canterbury for the trial of spiritual causes, the judge of which is called the dem of the arches, because he anciently held his court in the ohurch of St. Mary le Bow (Sancta Mariu de arcubus,-literally, "St. Mary of orches"), so named from the style of ite stecple, which is raised upon pillars built orchwise, like so many bent bows. Termes de la Ley. It is now held, as are also the other spiritual courts, in the hall belonging to the College of Civilians, commonly called Doctors' Commons.
2. Its proper jurisdiction is only over the thirtecn peculiar parishes belonging to the archbishop in London; but, the office of dean of the arches having been for a long time united with that of the archbishop's principal official, the judge of the arches, in right of such added office, receives and determines appeals from the sentences of all inferior ecclesiastical conrts within the province. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 64 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 431 ; Wharton's Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed. Arches Court. Many suits are also brought before him as original judge, the cognizance of which properly belongs to inferior jurisdictions within the province, but in respect of which the inferior judge has waived his jurisdiction under a certain form of procceding known in the common law by the denomination of letters of request. 3 Stephen, Comm. 431 ; 2 Chitty, Genl. Pract. 496; 2 Add. Ecel. 406.
3. From the court of arches an appeal formerly lay to the pope, and afterwards, by statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19, to the king in chancery (that is, to a court of delegates appointed under the king's great seal), as supreme head of the English church, but now, by $2 & 3$ Will. IV. c. 92, and $3 & 4$ Will. IV. c. 41 , to the judicial committee of the privy council. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 65; 3 Stephen, Comm. 431.
4. A suit is commenced in the ecclesiastical court by citing the defendant to appear, and exhibiting a libel containing the complaint against him, to which he answers. Proofs are then adduced, and the judge pronounces decree upon hearing the arguments of advoeates, which is then carried into effect.

Consult Burn, Ecel. Law; Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law ; 3 Blackstane, Comm. 65; 3 Stephen, Comm. 431.

COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS. In Engliah Law. Courts composed of two or more commissioners, called judges of assize (or of assize and nisi prius), who are twice in every year seut by the queen's special commission on circuits all round the kingdom, to try, by a jury of the respective counties, the truth of such matters of fact as are then under dispute ia the courts of Westminster Hall; there being, however, as to London and Middlesex, this exception, that, instead of their being comprised within any circuit, courts of nisi prius are held there for the same purpose, in and after every term, before the chief or other judge of the superior court, at what are called the London and Westminster sittings.
2. These judges of assize came into nse in the room of the ancient justices in eyre (justiciarii in itinere), who were regularly established, if not first appointed, by the Parliament of Northampton, A. D. 1176 ( 22 Hen. II.), with a delegated power from the king's great court, or aula regis, being looked upon as members thereof; though the preaent justices of assize and nisi priue are nore immediately derived from the atat. Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 30 , and consist principally of the judges of the superior courte of common law, being ussigned by that statute out of the king's sworn justicea, a.bsociating to thenselves one or two discreet knights of each oounty. By stat. 27 Edw . I. c. 4 (explained by 12 Edw. II. c. 3), assizes and inquests are allowed to be talken before any one justice of the court in which the plea is brought, associating with him one knight or other approved man of the county; by atat. 14 Edw. III. c. 1.6 , inqueats of nisi prius may be taken before any justice of either bench (though the plea he not depending in his own court), or before the ohief baron of the excbequer, if he be a man of the law, or, otherwise, before the justices of assize, so that onc of such justicea he a judge of the ling's hench or common pleas, or the king's aergeant sworn ; and, finally, hy 2 & 3 Vict. c. 22 , all justices of assize may, on their reapective circuita, try causes pending in the court of exchequer, without issuing (as it had till then been considered necessary to do) a aeparate commission from the exchequer for that purpose. 3 Stephon, Comm. $421-$ 423 ; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 57, 58.
3. There are eight circuits (formerly seven), viz. : the Home, Midland, Norfolk, Oxford, Northern, Western, North Wales, and South Wales. A general commission is issued twice a year to the judges mentioned (of the superior courts of common law at Westminster), two of whom are assigned to every circuit. The judges have four several commissions, viz.: of the peace; of oyer and terminer; of gaol delivery; and of nisi prius.

There were formerly five, including the commission of assize ; but the recent abolition of assizes and other real actions has thrown that commission out of foree. The commission of nisi prius is directed to the judges, the clerks of assize, and others; and by it civil causes in which issue has been joined in any one of the superior courts are tried in circuit by a jury of twelve men of the county in which the venire is laid, and on return of the verdict to the court above-usually on the first day of the term following-the court gives judgment on the fifth day after, allowing the four intermediate days to either party, if dissatisfied with the verdict, to mope for a new trial. 3 Stephen, Comm. 424, 425; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 58, 59. Where courts of this kind exist in the United States, they are instituted by statutory provision. 4 Watts & S. Pemn. 404. See Oyer and Terminer; Gaol Delivery; Courts of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery ; Nist Prius; Commission of the Peace.
COURT OF ATtACHMENTS. The lowest of the three courts held in the forests.
The highest court is called Justice in Eyre'a Scat ; the middle, the Sweinmote ; and tho loweat, tho Attachment. Sharewood, For. Laws, 90, 99; Wharton, Law Dict. Attachment of the Foresta.
The Court of Attachments is to be held before the verderors of the forest once in every forty days, to inquire of all offenders against vert and venison, by receiving from the foresters or keepers their attachments or presentments de viridi et venatione, enrolling them, and certifying them under their seals to the court of justice-seat, or sweinmote; for this court ean only inquire of offenders; it cannot convict them. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 439; Carta de Fcresta, 9 Hen. III. c. 8; Termes de la Ley. But see Forest Courts.

COURT OF AUGMENTATION. A court established by 27 Hen. VIII. e. 27 , for managing the revenues and possessions of all monasteries whose income was under two hundred pounds a year (which by an act of parliament of the same session had heen given to the king), and for determining suits relating thereto.

It was called "The Court of the Augmentations of the Revenues of the King's Crown'" (from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown derived from the suppression of the monasteries), and was a court of reeord, with one great seal and one privy seal,--the officers being a chancellor, who had the great seal, a treasurer, a king's attorney aud soli. citor, ten auditors, seventeen receivers, with clerk, usher, ete.

All dissolved monasteries under the above value, with some exceptions, were in survey of the court, the chancellor of which was directed to make a yearly report of their revenues to the king. The court was dissolved in the reign of queen Mary, but the Office of Augmentation remained long after; and the records of the court are now at the Public Record Office, in the keeping of the master of the rolls, stat. I & 2 Vict. c. 94 , and may be searched on payment of a fee. Eng. Cyclopædia; Termes de la Ley; Cowel.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY. A court of record, in Englaud, with jurisdiction in bankruptey, primary and appellate, and which is declared a court of law and equity for that purpose. The nature of its constitution may be learned from the early sections of the Baukrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849. The judgments of this court may be examined, on appeal, by a vice-chancellor, and successively by the lord-chancellor and the house of lords, if he deem the question of sufficient difficulty or importance. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 428. There is a court of bankruptey in London, established by I & 2 Will. IV. c. 56 , and $5 & 6$ Will. IV. c. 29 , s. 21; and courts of bankruptcy for different districts are established by $5 & 6$ Vict. c. 122, which are branches of the London court. 2 Stephen, Comm. 199, 200; 3 id. 426.

COURT BARON. A domestic court, incident to every manor, to be held by the steward within the manor, for redressing misdemeanors and nuisances therein, and for settling disputes among the tenants relating to property. It is not a court of record.

Custonary court baron is ouc appertaining entirely to copyholders. See Customary Court Baron.
Freeholders' court baron is one held hefore the frecholders who owe suit and service to the manor. It is the court-baron proper.
These courts have now fallen into great disuse in England; and provision is made by statute $9 &$ 10 Vict. c. 95,8 14, enabling the lord of any manor which has a court in which debts or demands are recoverable to surrender to the crown tho right of holding such ceurt, and upon such surrender the court is discontinued and the right of holding it ceases. In the state of New York such courts were held while the state was a province. See charters in Belton's Hist. of New Chester. The court has derived its name from the fact that it was the court of the baron or lerd of the manor, 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 33, n.; see Fleta, lib. 2, c. 53 ; though it is explained by seme as being the court of the freeholders, whe were in seme instances called barons. Coke, Litt. 58 a.
2. Before the abolition of the writ of right, by statute $3 & 4$ Will. IV. c. 27, & 36, the most important business of this court was to determine all controversies relating to the right to lands within the manor. It also secured the performance of the services and duties stipulated for by lords of manors, and adjudicated upon actions of a personal nature where the amount of the debt or damage was under forty shillings. This jurisdiction over personal action it still retains. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 33; I Crabb, Real Prop. ${ }^{2} 8$ 631-634.
3. These courts may also make by-laws regulating the use of commons and the like, which are binding upon such tenants as assent to them, unless already regulated by prescription or under an immemorial custom; but such laws cannot bind strangers. The penalty for a breach of such laws is in the nature of a fine, and not of an amercement.

The freeholders of the manor alone can be suitors, and they also constitute the judges of the court. Unless, then, there are two or more freeholders, there can be no such court, and the party must appeal to the lord paramount. The steward of the manor acts rather as registrar than as judge; but his presence is necessary to a proper constitution of the court.

It may be held at any place within the manor, upon giving fifteen days' notice (including three Sundays), or even upon shorter notice of the time of holding. In later times it assembles usually but once a year; though formerly it was held every three weeks, or, as some think, as often as the lord chose.

COURT OF CHANCERY, or CHANCERY. A court existing in England and several of the United States, which possesses an extensive equity jurisdiction.
The name is said by some to be derived from that of the chief judge, who is called a chancellor ; others derive both names directly from the cancelli (bars) which in this court anciently separated the press of people from the officers. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 46, n.; Cancellamus.
In American Law. A court of general equity jurisdiction.
The terms equity and chancery, court of equity and court of chancery, are constantly used as synonymous in the United States. It is presumed that this custom arises from the circumstance that the equity jurisdiction which is exercised by the courts of the varions states is assimilated to that possessed by the English conrts of chancery. Indeed, in some of the states it is made identical therewith by statute, so far as conformable te our institutions.
2. Separate courts of chancery or equity exist in a few of the states; in others, the courts of law sit also as courts of equity; in others, equitable relief is administered under the forms of the common law; and in others, the distinction between law and equity has been formally abolished or never existed. See the articles on the various states. The federal courts exercise an equity jurisdiction whether the state courts in the district are courts of equity or not. 2 McLean, C. C. 568 ; 15 Pet. 9; 11 How. 669; 13 id. 268, 519.

In English Law. The highest court of judicature next to parliament.
The superior court of chancery, called distinctively "The High Court of Chancery," consists of six separate tribunals, viz.: the court of the lord high chancellor of Great Britain; the court of the master of the rolls, or keeper of the records in chancery; the court of appeal in chancery, which title see; the three separate courts of the vice-chancellors.
The jurisdiction of this court is fourfold.
3. The common-law or ordinary jurisdiction. By virtue of this the lord-chancellor is a privy councillor and prolocutor of the house of lords. The writs for a new parliament issue from this department. The Petty Bag Office is in this jurisdiction. It is a common-law court of record, in which pleas of scire facias to repeal letters-patent are exhibited, and many other matters are determined, and whence all original writs issue. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. $94 ; 12 & 13$ Vict. c. 109.

The statutory jurisdiction includes the power which the lord-chancellor exercises under the habeas corpus act, and inquires into charitable uses, but does not include the equitable jurisdiction.

The specially delegated jurisdiction includes the exclusive authority which the lord-chancellor and lords justices of appeal have over the persons and property of idiots and lunatics.
4. The equity or extraordinary jurisdiction is either assistant or auxiliary to the common law, including discovery for the promotion of substantial justice at the common law, preservation of testimony of persons not litigants relating to suits er questions at law, removal of improper impediments and prevention of unconscientious defences at common law, giving effect to and relieving from the consequences of common-law judgments; concurrent with the common law, including the remedial correction of fraud, the prevention of fraud by injunction, accident, mistake, account, dower, interpleader, the delivery up of documents aud specific chattels, the specific performance of agreements; or exclusive, relating to trusts, infancy, the equitable rights of wives, legal and equitable mortgages, the assignment of choses in action, partition, the appointment of receivers, charities, or public trusts. Wharton, Law Dict. 2 d Lond. ed.
5. The inferior courts of chancery are the equity courts of the Palatine Counties, the cqurts of the Two Universities, the lordmayor's courts in the city of London, and the court of chancery in the Isle of Man. See 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48 , and the titles of these varions courts. Consult Story, Equity Jurisprudence; Daniell. Chancery Practice; Spence, Eq. Jur.; Courts of Equity.

COURT OF CHIVALRY. In English Law. An ancient military court, possessing both civil and criminal jurisdiction touching matters of arms and deeds of war.

As a court of civil jurisdiction, it was held by the lord high constable of England while that office was filled, and the earl-marshal, jointly, and subsequently to the attainder of Stafford, duke of Buckingham, in the time of Henry VIlI., by the earl-marshal alone. It had cognizance, by statute 13 Ric. II. c. 2, "of coutracts and other matters touching deeds of arms and war, as well out of the realm as within it." This jurisdection was of importance while the English kings held territories in France.

As a court of criminal jurisdiction, it could be held only by the lord high constable and earl-marshal jointly. It had jurisdiction over "pleas of life and member arising in matters of arms and deeds of war, as well out of the realm as within it."

It was not a court of record, could neither fine nor imprison, 7 Mod. 127, and has fallen entirely into disuse. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 68; 4 id. 268.

COURTS CHRISTIAN. Ecrlesiastical courts, which see.

COURTS OF THE CINQUE PORTS. In English Law. Courts of limited local jurisdiction, formerly held before the mayor and jurats (aldermen) of the Cinque Ports.

A writ of error lay to the lord-warden in his court at Shepway, and from this court to the queen's bench. By the $18 & 19$ Vict. c. 48 , and $20 & 21$ Vict.c. 1 , the jurisdiction and authority of the lord-warden of the Cinque Ports and constable of Dover Castle, in or in rclation to the administration of justice in actions, suits, or other civil proceedings, at law or in equity, are abolished. 3 Sharswood, Dlackst. Comm. 79; 3 Stephen, Comm. 447, 448. See Cinque Ports.
court of clatms. See Courts of the Ented States, 9\%, 88.
COURT OF THE CLERK OF THE MAREET. In English Law. A tribunal incident to every fair and market in the kingdom, to punish misdemeanors therein.

This is the most inferior court of eriminal jurisdietion in the kingdom. The object of its jurisdiction is principally the recognizanee of weights and measures, to try whether they are according to the truc standard the reof, which standard was aneiently eommitted to the custody of the bishop, who appointed some clerk under him to inspect the abuse of them more narrowly; and heace this officer, though usually a layman, is called the clerk of the market.

The jurisdiction over weights and measures formerly exercised by the clerk of the market las been taken from him by stat. $5 & 6$ Will. 1V. c. 63.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS. In American Law. A court of original and general jurisdiction for the trial of issues of lact and law according to the principles of the common law.
Courts of this name still exist in some of the states of the United States, and frequently have a criminal as well as civil jurisdiction. They are, in general, courts of record, being expressly made so by statute in Pennsylvania. 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 246. In Pennsylvania they exercise an equity jurisdiction also, as well as that at common law. Courts of substantially similar powers to those indicated in the definition exist in all the states, under various names; and for peculiarities in their constitution reference is made to the articles on the states in regard to which the question may arise.
In English Law One of the throe superior courts of common law at Westminster.
This court, which is sometimes called, also, Bancus Communis, Bazcus, and Common Bench, is a branch of the aula regis and was at its institution ambulatory, following the hussehold of the king. In the eleventh clause of Magaa Charta, A.D. 1214, it is provided that it shall be held at some fixed place, which is Westminster. The establishment of this court at Westminster, and the consequeat construetion of the Inns of Court and gatbering together of the common-luw la wy crs, enabled the law | itself to withstand the attacks of the canonists and sivilians. It derived its name from the fact that the causes of common people were heard there. It had exclusive jurisdiction of real actions as long as those uctions were in use, and had also an extensive and, for a long time, exclusive jurisdiction of all actions betwecn subjects. This latter jurisdiction, however, was gradually eacroached upon by the king's bench and exchequer, with which it now has a concurrent jurisdiction in many mutters. Formerly none but scrjeants at law were admitted to practice before this court in banc, 6 Bingh. N. c. $23 a ̄$; but, by statutes $6 & 7$ Vict. c. $18,861,9$ & 10 Vict. c. 54, all barristers at law have the right of "practice, pleading, and audience."

It consists of one chief and four puisne or assuciate justices.

It has a civil, common-law jurisdiction, concurrent with the king's bench and exchequer, of personal actions and actions of ejectment, and a peculiar or exclusive jurisdiction of real actions, actions under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, $17 & 18$ Vict. c. 31 , the registration of judgments, annuities, etc., $1 & 2$ Vict. c. $110 ; 2$ & 3 Vict. c. $11 ; 3 & 4$ Vict. c. 82; 18 Vict. c. 15 ; respecting fees for conveyances under $3 & 4$ Will. IV.c. 74 ; the examination of married women concerning their conveyances, $11 & 12$ Vict. c. $70 ; 17$ 妟 18 Vict. c. $75 ; 19$ & 20 Vict. c. 108, 873 ; and of appeals from the revising barristers' court, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18. Wharton, Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed.

Appeals formerly lay from this court to the king's bench; but, by statutes 11 Geo. IV., and 1 Will. IV. c. 70 , appeals for errors in law are now taken to the judges of the king's bench and barons of exchequer in the exchequer chambers, from whose judgment an appeal lies only to the house of lords. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 40.

COURTS OF CONSCIENCE. See Courts of Requests.

COURT OF CONVOCATION. In English Ecclesiastical Law. A convocation or ecclesiastical synod, which is in the nature of an coclesiastical parliament.

There is one for ench province. They are composed respectively of the archbishop, all the hishops, deans, and archdeacons of their province, with one proctor, or representative, from each chapter, and, in the province of Canterbury, two proctors for the beneficed parochial clergy in each diocese, while in the province of York there are two proctors for each archdeaconry. In York the convocation consists of only one house; but in Canterbury there are two houses, of which the archbishop and bishops form the upper house, and the lowor consists of the remuining members of the convocation. In this house a prolocutor, performaing the duty of president, is clected. These assemblies meet at the time appointed in the queen's writ. The convocation has long been summoned $p r o$ for $m \hat{a}$ only, but is still, in fact, summoned before the meeting of every new parliament, and adjourns immediately afterwards, without proceeding to the dispatch of any business.

The parpose of the convocation is stated to be the enactment of canon law, subjeot to the license and authority of the sovereign, and consulting on ecclesiastical matters.

In their judicial capacity, their jurisdiction extends to matters of heresy, schisms, and other mere spiritual or ecclesiastical causes, -an appeal lying from their judicial proceedings to the queen in council, by stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92.

COURT OF THE CORONER. In English Law. A court of record, to inquire, when any one dies in prison, or comes to a violent or sudden death, by what manner he came to his end. 4 Stephen, Comm. 341 ; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 274. See Coroner.

COURT FOR THE CORRECTION of ERRORS. See South Carolina.

COURTS OF THE COUNTIES PA-
LATINE. In English Law. A species of private court which formerly appertained to the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham.

They were local courts, which had exclusive jurisdiction in law and equity of all cases arising within the limits of the respective counties. The judges who held these courts sat by special commission from the owners of the several franchises and under their seal, and all process was taken in the name of the owner of the franchise, though subsequently to the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 24 it ran in the king's name. See County Palatine.
COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In English Law. A court which has the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the ecclesiastical courts in respect of divorces a mensa et thoro, suits of nullity of marriage, suits of jactitation of marriage, suits for restitution of conjugal rights, and all suits, causes, and matters matrimonial.

It consists of the lord chancellor and the justices of the queen's bench, the common pleas, the exchequer, and the judge of the court of probate, who is entitled judge ordinary.

The judge ordinary exercises all the powers of the court, except petitions for dissolving or annulling marriages and applications for now trials of matters of fact, hills of exception, special verdict and special cases, for hearing which excepted cases he must be joined hy two of the other judges. Provision is made for his absence by authorizing the lord chancellor to appoint one of certain judicial persons to act in such absence. Juries may be summoned to try matters of fact, and such trials are conducted in the same manner as jury trials at common law. See stat. 20 $& 21$ Vict. c. $85 ; 21 & 22$ Vict. c. $108 ; 22 &$ 23 Vict. c. 61.

COURT OF THE DUCFY OF LAN-

 CASTER. In English Law. A court of special jurisdiction, which has jurisdiction of all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster.It is held by the chancellor or his deputy, is a court of equity jurisdiction and not of record. It is to be distinguished from the court of the county palatine of Lancaster. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 78.

COURT OF EQUITY. A court which administers justice according to the principles of equity.

As to the constitution and jurisdiction of such courts, see Courts of Chancery, and the articles upon the various states.
2. Such courts are not, in general, courts of record. Their decrees touch the person only, 3 Caines, N. Y. 36, but are conclusive between the parties. 8 Conn. 268; 1 Stuckt. Ch. N. J. 302; 6 Wheat. 109. See 2 Bibb, Ky. 149. And as to the personalty, their decrees are equal to a judgment, 2 Madd. Ch. $355 ; 2$ Salk. 507 ; 1 Vern. Ch. 2l4; 3 Caines, N. Ky. 290, and come within the provisions for authentication of judicial records of the various states for use as evidence in other states. Pet. C. C. 352.
3. An action may be brought at law on a decree of a foreign court of chancery for an ascertained sum, 1 Campb. 253; Hempst. C. C. 197, but not for an unascertained sum, 3 Caines, N. Y. 37, n.; but nil debet or nul tiel record is not to be pleaded to such an action. 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 258.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER. In English Liaw. A superior court of record, administering justice in questions of law and revenue.

It is the lowest in rank of the three superior oommon-law courts of record, and had jurisdiction originally only of cases of injury to the revenue hy withholding or non-payment. The privilege of suing and being sued in this court in personal actions was extended to the king's accountants, and then, hy a fietion that the plaintiff was a debtor of the king, to all personal aetions. It had fermerly an equity jurisdictien, and there was then an equity court; hut, by statute 5 Vict. c. 5, this jurisdiction was transferred to the court of chancery.

It consists of one chief and four puisne judges or barons.

As a court of revenue, its proceedings are regulated by $22 & 23$ Vict. c. $1,89$.

As a court of common law, it administers redress between subject and subject in all actions whatever, except real aotions.

The appellate jurisdiction from this court is to the judges of the king's bench and common pleas sitting as the court of exchequer chamber, and from this latter court to the house of lords. 3 Stephen, Comm. 400-402; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 44-46.

In Scotch Law. A court which formerly had jurisdiction of matters of revenue, and a limited jurisdiction over cases between the crown and its vassals where no questions of title were involved.

This court was established by the statute 6 Anne, c. 26 , and its processes resembled those in the English court of exchequer. It is now merged in the court of sessions; but the name is still applied to this branch of the latter court, which is held by two of the judges acting in rotation. Paterson, Comp. 1055, n. The proceedings are regulated by stat. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 56.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAM-

BER. In Einglish Law. A court for the currection and prevention of errors of law in the three superior common-law courts of the kingdom.

A court of exchequer chamber was first crected by statute 31 Edw. III. c. 12, to determine causes rpon writs of error from the common-law side of the exch cquer court. It consisted of the lord chancellor, lord treasurer, and the justices of the king's bench and common pleas. A second court of exchequer chamber was instituted by statute 27 Eliz . e. 8, consisting of the justices of the common pleas and the exchequer, which had jurisdietien in error of oases oommenced in the king's bench. By statutes 11 Geo.IV. and 1 Will. IV.c. 70 , these courts were abolished and the present court of exchequer chamber substituted in their place.

As a court of debate, it is composed of the judges of the three superior courts of law, to whom is sometimes added the lord chancellor. To this court questions of unusual difficulty or moment are referred before judgment from either of the three courts.

As a court of appeals, it consists of the judges of two of the three superior courts of law (common bench, king's bench, and exchequer) sitting to decide questions appealed from the others. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 55.

From the decisions of this court a writ of error lies to the house of lords.

COURT OF FACULTIES. In Eccle.

 siastical Law. A tribunal, in England, belonging to the archbishop.It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments and other mortuary matters. It has also varicus other powers under 25 Hen. VIlI. c. 2l, in granting licenses, faculties, dispensations, etc. of different descriptions: as, a license to marry, a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church, to level a church-yard, to remove bodies previously buried; and it may also grant dispensations to eat flesh on days prohibited, or to ordain a deacon under age, and the like. The archbishop's office in this tribunal is called magister ad facultates. Coke, 4th Inst. 337 ; 2 Chitty, Genl. Pract. 507.

COURT OF GENERAI QUARTER

 SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In American Law. A court of crimiual jurisdiction. See New Jersey.In English Law. A court of criminal jurisdiction, in England, held in each county once in every quarter of a year.

It is held before two or more justices of the peace, one of whom must be a justice of the quorum.

The stated times of holding sessions are fixed by stat. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. $70, & 35$. When held at other times than quarterly, the sessions are called "general sessions of the peace."

As to the jurisdiction of the various sessions, see $5 & 6$ Vict. c. $38 ; 7 & 8$ Vict. c. $71 ; 9 &$ 10 Vict. c. 25 ; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 271.

COURT OF HUSTINGS. In English Law. The county court in the city of London.

It is held nominally before the lord mayor, recorder, and aldermen; but the recorder is practically the sole judge. It has an appellate jurisdiction of causes in the sheriff's court of London. A writ of error lies from the decisions of this court to certain commissioners (usually five of the judges of the superior courts of law), from whose judgment a writ of error lies to the house of lords. No merely personal actions can be brought in this court. See 3 Blackstone, Comm. 80, n.; 3 Stephen, Coinm. 449, n.; Madox, Hist. Exch. c. 20; Coke, 2d Inst. 327; Calth. 131.

In American Law. A local courtinsome parts of the state of Virginia. 6 Gratt. Va. 696.

COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF IMPEACHMENTS. A tribunal for determining the guilt or innocence of any person properly impeached. In England, the honse of lords, and in this country, generally, the more select branch of the legislative assembly, constitutes a court for the trial of impeachments. See Impeachment, and also the articles on the various states.

COURT FOR THE RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS IN ENGLAND. In English Law. A local conrt which has its sittings in London only, which receives the petitions of insolvent debtors and decides upon the question of granting a discharge.

It is held by the commissioners of bankruptcy; and its decisions, if in favor of a discharge, are not reversible by any other tribunal. See 3 Stephen, Comm. 426 ; 4 id. 287, 288.

COURT OF INQUIRY. In English Law. A court sometimes appointed by the crown to ascertain the propriety of resorting to ulterior proceedings againsta party charged before a court-martial. Sce 2 Stephen, Conim. 600 , note ( z ) ; 1 Coleridge, Blackst. Comm. 418, n.; 2 Brod. & B. 130.

In American Laws. A court constituted by authority of the articles of war, invested with the power to examinc into the nature of any transaction, accusation, or imputation against any officer or soldier. The said court shall consist of one or more officers, not exceeding three, and a judge-advocate, or other suitable person, as a recorder, to reduce the proceedings and evidence to writing; all of whom shall be sworn to the performance of their duty. Gordon, Dig. U. S. Laws, art. 35583560 .

COURT OF JUSTICE SEAT. In English Law. The principal of the forest courts.

It was held before the chief justice in eyre, or his deputy, to hear and determine all trespasses within the forest, and all claims of franchises, liberties, privileges, and all pleas and causes whatsoever, therein arising. It might also try presentments in the inferior courts of the forests, and give judgment upon conviction of the sweinmote. Alier presentment made or indictment found, the chief justice might issue his warrant to the officers of the forest to apprehend the offenders. It might be held every third year ; and forty days' notice was to be given of its sitting.
2. It was a court of record, and might fine and imprison for offences within the forest. A writ of error lay from it to the court of queen's bench to rectify and redress any maladministration of justice ; or the chief justice in eyre might adjourn any matter of law into that court.
'lhese justices in eyre were instituted by King Henry II., in 1184.

These courts were formerly very regularly held ; but the last court of justice seat of any note was held in the reign of Charles I., before the earl of Holland. After the restoration another was held, pro formâ only, before the earl of Oxford. But since the era of the revolution of 1688 the forest-laws have fallen into total disuse. 3 Stephen, Comm. 439441 ; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 71-73; Coke, 4th Inst. 291 .

COURT OF JUSTICIARY. In Scotch Law. A court of general criminal and limited civil jurisdiction.

It consists of the lord justice general, the lord justice clerk, and five other members of the court of sessions. The kingdom is divided into three circuits, in each of which two sessions, of not less than three days each, are to be held annually. A term may be held by any two of the justices, or by the lord justice general alone, or, in Glasgow, by a simple justice; except in Edinhurgh, where three justices constitute a quorum, and four generally sit in important cases.

Its criminal jurisdiction extends to all crimes committed in any part of the kingdom; and it has the power of reviewing the sentences of all inferior criminal courts, unless excluded by statute. Alison, Pract. 25.

Its civil jurisdiction on circuits is appellate and final in cases involving not more than twelve pounds sterling. See Paterson, Comp. द 940, n. et seq.; Bell, Dict.; Alison, Pract. 25 ; 20 Geo. II. c. 43 ; 23 Geo. III. c. 45 ; 30 Geo. III. c. 17 ; 1 Will. IV. c. $69, ~ & 19 ; 11 & 12$ Vict. c. 79, 88.

COURT OF KING'S BENCE. In English Law. The supreme comrt of common law in the kingdom.

It is one of the successors of the aula regis, and received its name, it is said, because the king formerly sat in it in persen, the style of the ceurt being coram rege ipao (hefere the king himself). During the reign of a queen it is called the Quen's Bench, and during Cromwell's pretectorate it was called the Upper Bench. Its jurisdiction was originally oontined to the correction of erimes and misdemeanors whioh amoueted to a breach of the peace, including these trespasses which were committed with force (vi et armis), and in the commission of which there was, therefure, a breach of the peace. By aid of a tiction of the law, the number of actions which might be alleged to be so committed was gradually increased, until the jurisdictien extended to all actions of the case, of debt upon statutes or where fraud was alleged, and, finally, included all personal actions whatever, and the aetion of ejectment. See Assumpsit; Armest; Attaciment. It is, frem its constitution, amhulatory and liable to follow the king's person, all process in this oourt being returuable "ubiennque fuerimus in Anglia" (wherever in England we the sovereign may be), hut bas for some centuries been held at Westminster.
2. It consists of a lord chief justice and four puisne or associate justices, who are, hy virtue of their office, conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land.
3. The civil jurisdiction of the court is either formal or plenary, including personal actions and the mixed action of ejectment; summary, applying to annuities and mortgages, I5 \& 16 Vict. cc. $55,76,219,220$, arbitrations and awards, cases under the Haheas Corpus Act, 31 Car. II. c. $2 ; 56$ Gco. III. c. 100 , cases under the Interpleader Act, $1 \& 2$ Will. IV. c. 58 , officers of the court, warrants of attorney, cognovits, and judges' orders for judgment; auxiliary, including answering a special case, enforcing judgments of inferior courts of record, prerogative, mandamus to compel inferior courts or officers to act, $17 \& 18$ Vict. c. 125, 38 75-77, prohihition, quo warranto, trying an issue in fact from a court of equity or a teigned issue; or appellate, including appeals from decisions of justices of the peace giving possession of deserted premises to landlords, 11 Geo. II. c. 19, $8 \% 16,17$, writs of false judgment from inferior courts not of record, but proceeding according to the course of the common law, appeals by way of a case from the summary jurisdiction of justices of the peace on questions of law, $\hat{2} 0 \& 2 I$ Vict. c. 43 ; Order of Court of Novr. 25, I857. See Wharton, Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed.
4. Its criminal jurisdiction extends to all crimes and misdemeanors whatever of a public nature, it beng considered the custos morum of the roalm. Its jurisdiction is so universal that an act of parliament appointing that all crimes of a certain denomination shall be tried before certain judges does not exclude the jurisdiction of this court, without negative words. It may also proceed on indictments removed into that court out of the inferior courts by certiorari.

COURT LEET. In English Law. A court of record for a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, holden therein before the steward of the leet, for the punishment of petty offences and the preservation of the peace. Kitchin, Courts Leet.

These courts were established as substitutes for the sheriff's tourn in those districts which werc not readily accessible to the sheriff on the tourn. The privilege of holding them is a franchise subsisting in the lord ef the manor by presoription or charter, and may be lost by disuse. The ceurt leet took cognizance of a wide varicty of erimes, ranging from the very smallest misdomeanors to, but excluding, treason. For some of these offences of a lower order, punishment by fides, amercemedts, or other meaos might be inflicted. For the higher erimes, they cither found indictments which were to be tried hy the higher courts, or made presentment of the case to such higher tribunals. They also took view of frankpledge. Among other duties for the keeping of the peace, the court assisted in the election of, or, in some cases, elected, certain municipal officers in the berough te which the leet was appended.

This court has fallen considerably into disuse, but still exists in some parts of England. In some boroughs it still elects, and in others assists in the election of, the chief municipal officers of the borough. Its duties are mainly, however, those of the trial of the smaller offences or misdemeanors, and prescotment of the graver offences. These presentments may be removed by certiorari to the king's bench and an issue there joined. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 273; Greenwood, County Courts, 308 et seq.; Kitchin, Courts Leet; Powell, Courts Leet; I Reeve, 1Iist. Eng. Law, 7.

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH

 STEWARD. In English Law. A court instituted for the trial of peers indicted for traason, felony, or misprision of either.This court can be held only during a recess of parliament, since the trial of a peer for either of the above offences can take place, during a session of that body, only before the High Court of Parliament. It consists of a lord high steward (appointed in modern times pro hac vice merely) and as many of the temporal lords as may desire to take the proper oath and act. And all the peers qualified to sit and pote in parliament are to be summoned at least twenty days before the trial. Stat. 7 Will. III. c. 3.

The lord high steward, in this court, decides upon matters of law, and the lords triers decide upon the questions of fact.

The course of proceedings is to obtain jurisdiction of the cause by a writ of certiorari removing the indictment from the queen's bench or court of oyer and terminer where it was found, and then to go forward with the trial before the court composed as above stated. The guilt or innocence of the peer is determined by a vote of the court, and a majority suffices to convict; but the number voting for conviction must not be less than twelve. The manner of proceeding is much the same as in trials by jury; but no special verdict can be rendered.

A peer indicted for either of the above offences may plead a pardon in the queen's bench, but can make no other plea there. If indicted for any less offence, he must be tried by a jury before the ordinary courts of jus. tice. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 261-265. See IIign Court of Parliament.

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD OF THE UNIVERSITIES. In English Law. A court constituted for the trial of scholars or privileged persons connected with the university at $0 x-$ ford or Cambridge who are indicted for treason, felony, or mayhem.

The court consists of the lord high steward, or his deputy nominated by the chancellor of the university and approved of by the lord high chancellor of England. The steward issues a precept to the sheriff, who returns a panel of eighteen freeholders, and another to the university bedels, who return a panel of eighteen matriculated laymen. From these panels a jury de medietate is selected, before whom the cause is tried. An indictment must first have been found by a grand jury, and cognizance claimed thereof at the first day.

COURT OF THE STEWARD OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD. In English Law. A court which had jurisdiction of all cases of treason, misprision of treason, murder, manslaughter, bloodshed, and other malicious strikings whereby blood is shed, occurring in or within the limits of any of the palaces or houses of the king, or any other house where the royal person is abiding.

It was created by statute 33 Hen . VIII. c. 12, but long since fell into disuse. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 276, 277, and notes.

COURT OF MAAGISTRATES AND FREEHOLDERS. In American Law. The name of a court in South Carolina for the trial of slaves and free persons of color for criminal offences.

COURT OF THE MARSHALSEA. In English Lavi. A court which had jurisdiction of causes to which the domestic servants were parties.

It was held by the steward of the king's houschold, as judge, and the marshal was the ministerial officer, and held pleas of trespasses committed within twelve miles of the sovereign's residence (called the verge of the court), where one of the parties was a servant of the king's household, and of all debts, contracts, and covenants where both parties were servants as above. Where one of the parties only was of the king's household, a jury of the country was summoned; in the other case, the inquest was composed of men of the household only. This court was merged, in the time of Charles I., in the Palace Court, and abolished by $12 & 13$ Vict. c. 10I, & 13. See Palace Court.

COURT-MARTIAL. A military or naval tribunal, which has jurisdiction of offences against the law of the service, military or naval, in which the offender is engaged.

The original tribunal, for which courts-martial are a partial substitute, was the Court of Chivalry, which title see. These courts exist and have their jurisdiction hy virtue of the military la.w, the court being constituted and empowered to act in each instance by authority from a commanding officer. The general principles applicable to courtsmartial in the army and navy are essentially the same; and for consideration of the exact distinctions between them reference must be had to the works of writers upon these subjects. Courts-martial for the regulation of the militia are held in the various states inder Iocal statutes, which resemble in their main features those provided for in the army of the United States; and when in actual service the militia, like the regular troops, are subject to courtsmartial, composed, however, of militia officers.
2. As to their constitution and jurisdiction, these courts may belong to one of the following classes:-

General, which have jurisdiction over every species of offence of which courts-martial have jurisdiction. They are to be composed in the United States of not less than five nor more than thirteen commissioned officers of suitable rank, according to the exigencies of the service, and in England of not less than thirteen commissioned officers, except in special cases, and usually do consist of more than that number.

Regimental, which have jurisdiction of some minor offences occurring in a regiment or corps. They consist in the United States of not less than three commissioned officers; in England, of not less than five commissioned officers, when that number can be assembled without detriment to the service, and of not less than three in any event. The jurisdiction of this class of courts-martial extends only to offences less than capital committed by those below the rank of commissioned officers, and their decision is subject to revision by the commanding officer of the division, regiment, or detachment, by the officer who appointed them, or by certain superior officers.

Garrison, which have jurisdiction of some minor offences occurring in a garrison, fort, or barracks. They are of the same constitution as to number and qualifications of members as regimental courts-martial. Their limits of jurisdiction in degree are the same, and their decisions are in a similar manner subject to revision.
3. The appointment or assemblage of a general court-martial in the United States can take place, for the army, only by command of the president, a general officer commanding an army, or an officer commanding a separate department ; for the navy, by command of the president, the secretary of the navy, the onmmander-in-chief of the fleet, or the commander of a squadron acting out of the United States ; in England, by command of the sovereign, the commander-in-chief to whom the power has been delegated by the sovereign, or in consequence of a warrant from the commander-in-chief to some officer directing him to convene such court. See DeHart, Courts-Mart. 8; V. Kennedy, CourtsMart. 16. The decision of the commanding officer as to the number that can be convened without injury to the service is conclusive. 12 Wheat. 19.
4. The jurisdiction of such courts is limited to offences against the military law (which title see) committed by individuals in the service, 12 Johns. N. Y. 257; see DeHart, Courts-Mart. 28; 3 Wheat. 212; 3 Am. Jur. 281; which latter term includes sutlers, retainers to the camp, and persons serving with the army in the field. 60th Art. of War; DeHart, Courts-Mart. 24, 25. See V. Kennedy, Courts-Mart. 3. But while a district is under martial law by proclamation of the executive, as for rebellion, they may take jurisdiction of offences which are cognizable by the civil courts only in time of peace. V. Kennedy, Courts-Mart. 14. This rule is said by American writers to apply where the army passes into a district where there are no civil courts in existence. Benèt, Mil. Law, 15.

COURT OF NISI PRIUS. In American Law. A court of original civil jurisdiction in the city and county of Philadelphia, held by one of the judges of the suprome crurt of the state.

It has jurisdiction where the matter in controversy is of the value of five hundred dollars or more. Stroud & Brightly's Purd. Dig. 772, tit. Supreme Court. See Nisi Prius; Courts of Assize and Nist Prius.

COURT OF ORDINARY. In American Law. A conrt which has jurisdiction of the probate of wills and the regulation of the management of decedents' estates.

Such courts exist in Georgia, New Jersey, South Carolina, and Texas. See 2 Kent, Comm. 409; Ordinary.

COURT OF ORPHANS. In English Law. The court of the lord mayor and aldermen of London, which has the care of those oriphans whose parent died in London and was free of the city.

By the custom of London this court is entitled to the possession of the person, lands, and chattels of every infant whos parent was free of the city at the time of his death and who died in the city. The exccutor or administrator of such deceased parent is obliged to exhibit inventories of the estate of the deceased, and give security to the chamberlain fur the orphan's part or share. 2 Stephen, Comm. 343.
COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER. In American Law. The name of courts of criminal jurisdiction in several of the states of the American Union, as in Georgia, New Jersey, and New York.
COURTS OF OYER AND TERMINER AND GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY. In English Law. Tribunals for the examination and trial of criminals.

They are held before commissioners selected by the queen, among whom are usually two justices of the superior courts at Westminster, twice in every year in all the counties of England except the four northern, where they are held once only, and Middlesex and parts of other counties, over which the central criminal court has jurisdiction.
Under the commission of oyer and terminer the justices try indictments previously found at the same assizes for treason, felony, or misdemeanors. Under the commission of general gaol delivery they may try and deliver every prisoner who is in gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever or before whomsoerer indicted or for whatsoever crime committed. These commissions are joined with those of assize and nisi prius and the commission of the peace. See Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius.
In American Law. Courts of eriminal jurisdictiou in the state of Pennsylvania.
They are held at the same time with the court of quarter sessions, as a general rule, and by the same judges. See Purdon, Dig. Penn. Laws, Stroud & B. ed. pp. 694, 1377.
COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER, GENERAL JAIL DELIVERY, AND COURT OF QUARTER SESSSIONS OF THE PEACE, IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF PHILADELPHIA. In American Law. A court of record of general criminal juris. diction in and for the city and counly of Philadelphia, in the state of Pennsylvania.
COURT OF PECULIARS. In EngIlsh Law. A branch of the court of arches, to which it is annexed.
It has jurisdiction of all ecelesiastical causes arising in the peculiars of Canterbury or other dioeeses which are exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction and subject to that of the metropolitan only. The court of arches has an appellate jurisdiction of rauses tried in this court. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 65 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 431, 432. See Prculiars.

COURT OF PIEPOUDRE (Fr. pied, foot, and poudre, dust, or puldreaux, old French, pedlar). In English Law. A court of special jurisdiction incident to every fair or market.

The word piepoudre, spelled alse piedpoudre and pypowder, has heen censidered as aignifying dusty feet, pointing to the general condition of the feet of the auitors therein, Cowel; Blount; or as indicating the rapidity with which juatice is administered, as rapidly as dust can fall from the foot, Coke, 4th Inst. 472 ; or pedlar's feet, as being the court of such chapmen or petty traders as resorted to fairs. It was not confined to faira or markets, hut might exist, hy custom, in cities, boroughs, or vills for the collection of debts and the like. Croke Jac. 313; Croke Car. 46; 2 Salk. 604. It was held hefore the steward of him who was entitled to the tolls from the market. It has fallen into disuse.

The civil jurisdiction extended to all matters of contract arising within the precinct of the fair or market during the continuance of the particular fair or market at which the court was held, the plaintiff being obliged to make oath as to the time and place.

The criminal jurisdiction embraced all offences committed at the particular fair or market at which the court was held. An appeal lay to the courts at Westminster. See Barrington, Stat. $337 ; 3$ Blackstone, Comm. 32; Skene, de verb.sig. Pede pulverosus; Bracton, 334.

COURT OF POLICIES OF INSU-

RANCE. A court of special jurisdiction which took cognizance of cases involving claims made by those insured upon policies in the city of London.

It was organized by a commission issued yearly by the lord chancellor, by virtue of 43 Eliz. c. 12, and $13 & 14$ Car. II. c. 23, to the judge of the admiralty: the recorder of London, two doctors of the civil law, two commonlaw lawyers, and cight merchants, empowering any three of them (one being a civilian or barrister) to determine in a summary way all causes concerning policies in the city of London. The jurisdiction was confined to actions brought by assured persons upon policies of insurance on merchandise; and an appeal lay by way of a bill to the court of chancery. The court has been long disused. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 74 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 443, 444 ; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 503.

COURT OF PROBATE. In American Law. A court which has jurisdiction of the probate of wills and the regulation of the management and settlement of decedents' estates, as well as a more or less extensive control of the estates of minors and other persons who are under the especial protection of the law. For the states in which such courts exist, and the limits of their jurisdiction, see the articles on the various states.

In Engliah Law. A court in England having exclusive jurisdiction of testamentary causes or proceedings relating to the validity of wills and the succession to the property of persons deceased intestate. See stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77 ; $21 & 22$ Vict. c. 95.

COURT OF QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In Amerlican Law.

A court of criminal jurisdiction in the state of Pennsylvania.

There is one such court in each county of the state. Its sessions are, in general, held at the same time and by the same judges as the court of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery. See Purdon, Dig. Penn. Laws, Stroud & B. ed. 692.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH. See Court of King's Bench.

COURT OF RECORD. A judicial organized tribunal having attributes and exercising functions independently of the person of the magistrate designated generally to hold it, and proceeding according to the course of the common law.

A court where the acts and proceedings are enrolled in parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 24.

A court which has jurisdiction to fine and imprison, or one having jurisdiction of civil causes above forty shillings, and proceeding according to the course of the common law. 37 Me. 29.
All courts are either of record or not of record. The possession of the right to fine and imprison for cuntempt was formerly considered as furnishing decisive evidence that a court was a court of record, Coke, Litt. 117 b, $260 a ; 1$ Salk. 144; 12 Mod. 388; 2 Wms. Saund. 101 a ; Viner. Abr. Courts; and it is said that the erection of a new tribunal with this power renders it hy that very fact a court of record, 1 Salk. 200; 12 Mod. 388; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 98 ; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 24, 25 ; but every court of record does not possess this pewer. 1 Sid. 145; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 25, n. The mere fact that a permanent record is kept does not, in modern law, stamp the character of the court; since many courts, as prohate courts and others of limited or special jurisdietion, are chliged to keep records and yet are held to he courts not of record. See 11 Mass. 510; 22 Pick. Mass. 430 ; 1 Cew. N. Y. 212; 3 Wend. N. Y. 268; 10 Penn. St. 158; 5 Ohio, 545: 7 Ala. 35.1; 25 id .540 . The definition first given above ia taken from the opinion of Shavo, C. J., in 8 Metc. Mass. 171, with an additional element not required in that case for purposes of distinction, and ia helieved to contain all the distinctive qualities which can be aaid to belong to all courts technically of record at modern law.
2. Courts may be at the same time of record for some purposes and not of record for others. 23 Wend. N. Y. 376 ; 6 Hill, N. Y. 590; 8 Metc. Mass. 168 ; 12 id. 11.

Courts of record have an inherent power, independently of statutes, to make rules for the transaction of business; but such rules must not contravene the law of the land. 1 Pet. 604; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 253 ; 8 id. 336 ; 2 Mo. 98. They can be deprived of their jurisdiction by express terms of denial only. 3 Yeates, Penn. 479 ; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 498 ; 2 Burr. 1042; 1 W. Blackst. 285 . Actions upon the judgments of such courts may, under the statutes of limitations of some of the states of the United States, be brought after the lapse of the period of limitation for actions on simple contracts; and this provision has given rise to several determinations of what are and what are not courts of record. See 22 Pick. Mass. 430; 6 Gray, Mass. 515; 6

Hill, N. Y. 590; 1 Cow. N. Y. 212; 25 Ala. n. s. $540 ; 37 \mathrm{Me} .29$.
3. Under the naturalization ast of the United States, "every court of record in a state having common-law jurisdiction and a seal and a clerk or prothonotary' has certain specificd powers. Astowhat the requirements are to constitute a court of record under this act, see 8 Pick. Mass. 168; 23 Wend. N. Y. 375.

A writ of error lies to correct erroneous proceedings in a court of record, 3 Blackstone, Comm. 407; 18 Pick. Mass. 417; but will not lie unless the court be one, technically, of record. 11 Mass. 510. See Wart of Erroa.

COURT OF REGARD. In English Law. One of the forest courts, in England, held every third year, for the lawing or expeditation of dogs, to prevent them from running after deer. 3 Stephen, Comm, 440; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 71, 72.

COURTS OF REQUESTS (called otherwise courts of conscience). In English Law. Courts of special jurisdiction, constituted by act of parliament in the city of London and other towns, for the recovery of small debts.

They were courts not of record, and proceeded in a summary way to examine upon oath the parties and other witnesses, without the aid of a jury, and made such order as is consonant to equity and good conscience.

They had jurisdiction of causes of debt generally to the amount of forty shillings, but in many instances to the amount of five pounds sterling.

The courts ot requests in London consisted of two aldermen and four common councilmen, and was formerly a court of considerable importance, hut was abolished, as well as all other courts of requests, by the Small Debts Act, $9 & 10$ Vict. c. 95 , and the order in council of May 9,1847 , and their jurisdiction transferred to the county courts.

The court of requests before the king in person was virtually abolished by 16 Car. I. c. 10. See 3 Stephen, Comm. 449 , and note (j); Bacon, Abr. Courts in London; County Courts.

COURT OF SESSION. In Scotch Law. The supreme court of civil jurisdiction in Scotland.

The full title of the court is council and sebsion. It was first established in 1425 . In 1469 its jurisdiction wus transferred to the king's council, which in 1003 was ordered to ait in Edinhurgh. In 1532 the jurisdiction of both courts and the joint title were transferred to the present court. The regular number of judges was fifteen; but an additional number of jnstices might be appointed by the crown to an unlimited extent. This privilege was renouncod by 10 Geo. I. c. 19.

It consists of fifteen judges, and is divided into an inner and an outer house.

The inner house is composed of two branches or chambers, of co-ordinate jurisdiction, each consisting of four judges, and called respectively the first division and the second division. The first division is presided over by the lord president or lord justice general, the second by the lord justice clerk. The outer house is composed of five separate courts, each presided over by a single judge, called a lord ordinary.

All causes commence before a lord ordinary, in general ; and the party may select the one before whom he will bring his action, subject to a removal by the lord president in case of too great an accumulation before any one or more lords ordinary. See Bell, Dict.; Paterson, Comp. 8 1055, n. et seq.

COURT OF SESSIONS. In Amercan Law. A court of criminal jurisdiction existing in some of the states of the United Siates. Courts of this name exist in California, New York, and, perhaps, other states.

COURT OF STAR-CHAMBER. In English Iuw. A court which was formerly held by divers lords, spiritual and temporal, who were members of the privy council, together with two judges of the courts of common law.

It was of very ancient origin, was new-modelled by the 3 Hen. VII. c. 1 and 21 Hen. VIII. c. 20, and was finally abolished, after having become very odious to the people, by the 16 Car I. c. 10 . The name star-chamber is of uncertain origin. It has been thought to be from the Saxon steoran, to go-vern,-alluding to the jurisdiction of the court over the crime of cosenage; and has been thonght to beve been given because the ball in which the conrt was held was full of windows, Lambard, Eiren. 148; or because the roof was originally atudded with gilded stars, Coke, 4th Inst. 66; or, according to Blackstone, because the Jewish oovenants (called starrs or stars, and which, by a statute of Richerd I., were to be enrolled in three places, one of which was near the exchequer) were originally kept there. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 266, n. The derivation of Blackstone receives confirmation from the fact that this location (near the exchequer) is assigned to the star-chamber the first time it is mentioned. The word star acquired at some time the recognized signification of inventory or schedule. Stat. Acad. Cont. 32; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 266, n.

The legal jurisdiction of this court extended originally to riots, perjuries, misbehavior of sheriffy, and other notorious misdemeanors. It acted without the assistance of a jury. See Hudson, Court of Star Chamber (printed at the beginning of the second volume of the Collectanea Juridica); 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 266, and notes.

COURT OF THE STEWARD AND marishat. See Court of Marsualsea.

COURT OF SWEINMOTE (spelled, also, Swainmote, Swain-gemote; Saxon swang, an attendant, a freeholder, and mote or gemote, a meeting).

In English Law. One of the forest courts, held belore the verderors, as judges, hy the steward, thrice in every year,-the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury.

This court had jurisdiction to inquire into gricvances and oppressions committed by the officers of the forest, and also to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments, oertifying the cause, in turn, minder the seals of the jury, in case of conviction, to the court of justice seat for the rendition of judgment. Cowel; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 71, 72 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 439.

Except in the case of the senate as a court to try impeachments, and the mode prescribed for the appointmeat of the judges, the judicial system of the United States has heen constructed under the suthority derived primarily from the following provisions of the federal constitution and the amendmenta thereto, viz.:

The judicial power of the United States ahall be vested in one supreme crurt, and in auch inforior courts as congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish. The judges, hoth of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their ofices during good behaviar, and shall, at atated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished duriog their coatinuaace in office.
The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under thia constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which ahall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other poblic ministers, and coosuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; ta controversies to which tho United States ahall be a party; to controversies between two or more states, between a state and a citizen of another state, betwcen citizena of different states, between citizeas of the same state olaiming lands under grants of different atates, and between a state, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizeos, or aubjects.

In all cases affecting ambasasdors, other public miniaters, and consuls, and those in which a state shall be party, the supreme court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction, hoth as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations, as oongress shall make.

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall he hy jury; sind anch trial ahall bp held in the state where the said crime shall have been committed; but when not committed within any atate, the trial shall be at auch place or places as congress may by law have directed. Const. art. 3, sacts. 1, 2.

The judicial power of the United States shal: not be coastrued to extend to any suit in law or equity commeaced or proaecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another atate, or by citizena or subjects of any foreign state. Amcndmenta, art. 11.
2. As the government of the United States posaesses many of the attributes of sovereignty, while the state governmenta posaess others, it resulte that the citizens are obliged to accommadate themselves. to different judiciary ayatems. These twa sets of courts frequently occupy the same house at the same time, and their judgments or decreea operate upon the aame community and upon the aame mass of property. It is evident, therefore, that without great care, buth in legialation and the administration of the law, there would be danger of clashing between these two classes of independent tribuoala.
3. As reapects criminal proceedings, each court generally confinea itaelf to the admioistration of the lawa of the government which created it. In civil cases, however, as the constitution of the United Statea has conterred jurisdiction upon the federal courta in cases, for example, where a citizen of one atate suea a citizen of another state, it is manifeat that the court which tries such a cass muat administer the laws of the state in which ths action is brought, suhject to the constitution of the United States in cases which conflict with its provisiona.
4. In the organization of the federcl system of courts, there were two objecta to be accomplished. The first was to prevent a clashing between the state aod United States courts, by impoaing reatrictiona upon the United States courts. The second was to carry out the mandates of the constitution, by clothing the latter wilh all the powers necessary to execute its provisions. This organization was commenced by the act of 1789 , fimiliarly known as the Judiciary Act. 1 Stat. at Large, 921.
5. To accomplish the first object, it was accordingly earcted by the fourteenth section that writa of habeas corpus should in oo case extend to prisoners in jail, unless where they were in custody under or by color of the authority of the Uaited States, or were committed for trial before some court of the aame, or it was necessary that they should be brought into court to testify.

This important restriction was intended to leave to the state authoritiea the absolute and exclusive administration of the state laws in all cases of imprisonment; and no iastance has ever occurred in which this act has been disregarded. On the contrary, its observance has becn emphatically enjoined and enforced. 21 How. 523, 524.
6. By the thirty-fourth section of the same act, it was enacted that the laws of the sereral atates, except where the constitution, treaties, or atatute of the United States should otherwise require or provide, were to ke regarded as rules of decision in trials of common law, in the courts of the United States in cases where they applied. This provision has received examination and interpretation in the following, amang the more recent casea:-7 How. $40 ; 8$ id. $169 ; 14$ id. $504 ; 17$ id. 476; 18 id. 502, 507; 20 id. 393, 584.
7. And while the United States courta fallow the interpretation given to the lawa of the atate by their highest tribuoals, yet in case of conflicting decisions, or in the absence of decisions at the time of considaration by the United States courts, the rule is, of course, modified. 5 How. I39; 18 id. 599.
The deciaions of state courts upon questions of general commercial law are held not ti, be binding upon the United States courts. 18 llow. 520. Nor are they binding upon questions of the general prinoiples of equity jurisprudence. 13 How. 271.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES 387 COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES

8. In cluthing the United States courts with sutficient authority to carry out the mandates of the constitution, their powers ara made in certain cases to trinscend those of the state courts.

The twelfth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789 deelares that "If a suit be commenced in any state court against an alien, or by a citizen of the state in which the suit is brought against a citizen of anolhar state, ete., and the defendant shall, at the time of entering his appearance in such state court, file a petition for the removal of the cause for trial into the next circuit court, etc., it shatl then be the duty of the state court to accept the surety and proceed no further in the cause," ctc.

This jurisdictinn is held to be exclusive when it has once attached, from the moment of attaching. 15 How. 204, 211. It is based upon the supposition that possihly the state tribunal may not be impartial between its own citizens and foraigners.
9. In like manner, by the act of 1833 , where suit or prosecution is commeneed in a court of any state against any efficer of the United States, or other person, for or on account of any act done under the revenue laws of the United States or under color thereof, or for or on account of any risht, authority, or title set up or claimed by such officer or other person under any such law of the United States, it is lawful for the defendant at any time before trial, upon a petition to the circuit court of the United States, etc., to remove it to the circuit court, and the cause is thereupon to be entered on the docket of aaid court, and a certiorari to be issued to the state court, ctc. 4 Stat. at Large, 632.
10. By the twenty-fifth section of the act of 1789 it is enacted "That a final judgment or decree in any suit, in the bighest court of law or equity of a state, in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statutc of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity, or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute uf, or an authority excreiged under, any state, on the ground of their beiug repugnant to the constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity, or where is drawn in question the construction of any clause of the constitution or of a treaty or statute of or commission held under the United States, and the decision is against the title, rigbt, privile cially set up or elaimed by either party under such clanse of the said constitution, treaty, statute, or commission, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the supreme court of the United States upon a writ of crror, the citation being signed by the chief justice or judge or cbancellor of the court rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or by a justice of the supreme court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations, and the writ shall have the same effect, as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a circuit court, and the proceedings upon the reversal shall also be the same, except that the supreme court, instead of remanding the cause for a final decision, as before provided, may, at their discretion, if the cause ehall have been once remanded before, proceed to a final decision of the same and award execution. But no other crror shall be assigncd or regarded as a greund of rerersal, in any such case as aforesaid, than such as appears on the face of the record, and immediately respects the befere-mentioned questions of validity or construction of tha said constitution, treaties, statutes, cummissions, or autborities in dispute."

It is no objection te the appellate jurisdiction nnder this section that one party is a state and the other a oitizen of that state. 6 Wheat. 264.
11. The practical importance of this clause is evidenced by the fact that in the aighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, and twenty-first volumes of Howard's Reports there are thirty-three cases in which its provisions are involved.

The rules adopted frum time to time as necessary to give to the supreme court jurisdiction under this section are fummed up by Mr. Justice Daniel, in delivering the opinion of the court in Smith $v_{\text {. }}$ Hunter. They are as follows:-

Tbat, to give jurisdiction, it most appear on the record itself that the case is one embraced by the section: first, either by express averment ar by necessary intendment in the pleadings in the case; secondly, by directions given by the court and stated in the exceptions; or, thirdly, when the preceedings are according to the laws of Louisiana, by the statemente of the facts and of the decision as is usually made in such cases by the court; fourtbly, it must be entered on the rccerd of the proceeding6 of the appellate court, in cases where the record shews that such a point may bave axisen and may have been decided, that it was in faot raised and decided, and this entry must appear to have been made by order of the court or the presiding judge and certified by the clerk as part of the record in the state court; or, fifthly, in proceedings in equity it may be stated in the body of the final decree of the state court; or, sixthly, it must appear from the record that the question was necessarily involved in the decision, and that the state court could not have given the judgment or decree without deciding it. 7 How. 744 .
12. But, independently of their relation to the jurisdiction of the several states, the courts of the United States are necessarily clothed with powers as the organized branch of the government of the United States established for the purpose of executing the constitution and laws of the general government as a distinet sovereignty. See Const. art. 3, and Act of 1789 , ch. 20 , sect. 3 , cited 8 19, for the manner in which this has been dune. For matters of detail, see Law, Jurisdiction, and Powers of the United States Courts, $\%$ 13. The several courts embraced in the judicial system of the United States will be separately considered, and in the following order:-
13. The Senate of the United States as a conrt to try impeachments.

The Sopreme Court
The Circuit Court.
The District Court.
The Territorial Courts.
Tho Supreme Court of tha District of Columbia. The Court of Claims.

The Senate of the United States as a Court to try Impeachments.

14. The constitution provides that the senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purnose, they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the president of the United States is tried, the chief justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.
Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall, nevertheless, be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law. Const. art. 1, sect. 3. The president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States, shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. Const. art. 1, sect. 4.
15. The organization of this extraordinary court, therefore, differs according as it has or has not the president of the United States to try. For the trial of an impeachment of the president the presence of the chief justice and a sufficient number of senators to form a quorum is required. For the trial of all other impeachments it is sufficient if a quorum is present.
16. The jurisdiction of the senate as a court for the trial of impeachments extends to the officers above named, to wit, the president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States, when they have been guilty of treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors. Art. 2, sect. 4.
The constitution defines treason, art. 3, sect. 3 ; but recourse must be had to the common law for a definition of bribery. Not baving particularly mentioned what is to be understood by "other high crimes and misdemeanors," resort, it is presumed, must be had to parliamentary practice and the common law in order to ascertain what they are. Story, Const. sect. 795.
17. This is an extraordinary court, and its sittings are of rare occurrence. It is mentioned in the constitution under the head of the legislative, and not the judicial, power, and is not usually intended when speaking of the judicial trihunals of the country, which comprehend rather the ordinary courts of law, equity, etc.; and it would be out of place to treat at large of this tribunal here. For instances in which it has been convened, see the impeachments of Judge Chase, in 1804, Judge Peck, in 1831, and Judge Humphreys, in 1882 .

The Supreme Court.

18. The constitution of the United States directs that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish.

Organization. The judges of the supreme court are appointed by the president, hy and with the consent of the senate. Const. art. 2, sect. 2. They hold their office during good behavior, and receive for their services a compensation which is not to be diminished during their continuance in office. Const. art. 3 , sect. 1. They consist of a chief justice and nine associate justices. Act of March 3, 1837, sect. 1, and act of March 3, 1863, sect. 1. The salary of the chief jnstice is now six thousand five hundred dollars, and that of the associate justices six thousand dollars each. Act of 1855,10 Stat. at Large, 655 . The associate for the tenth circuit is allowed one thousand dollars additional. Act of March 3, 1863, sect. 2.
Six judges are required to make a quorum, act of March 3,1863 , sect. 1 : but by the act of the 21 st of January, 1829, the judges attending on the day appointed for holding a session of the court, although fewer than a quorum,--at that time four,-have authority to adjourn the court from day to day for twenty days after the time appointed for the commencement of said sessicn, unless a quorum shall sooner attend; and the business shall not be continued over till the nest session of the court, until the expiration of the said twenty days. By the same act, if, after the judges shall have assembled, on any day less than a quorum shall assemble, the judge or judges so assembling shall bave authority io adjourn the said court from day to day until a quorum shall attend, and, when expedientand proper, may adjourn the same without day.

The supreme court is holden at the city of Washington. Act of April 29, 1802. The session commences on the second Monday of January in each and every ycar. Act of May 4, 1826. The first Monday of August in each year is appointed as a return day. Act of April 29, 1802. In case of a contagious sickne'ss, the chief justice or his senior associate may direct in what other place the court shall be held, and the court shall accordingly be adjourned to such place. Act of February 25,1799 , sect. 7 . The cfficers of the court are a clerk, who is appointed by the court, a marshal, appointed by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate, a crier, and other inferior officers.
19. The Jurisdiction of the supreme court is either original or appellate, civil or criminal. The constitution establishes the suprome court and defines its jurisdiction. It enumerates the cases in which its jurisdiction is original and exclusive, and defines that which is appellate. See 11 Wheat. 467 . The prcvisions of the constitution that relate to the original jurisdiction of the supreme court are contained in the articles of the constitution already cited, sect. 1.
By the act of September 24, 1789, sect. 13, the supreme court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies of a civil nature where a state is a party, except belween a state and its citizens, and except, also, between a state and citizens of other states, or aliens, in which latter case it shall bave criginal, but not exclusive, jurisdiction; and shall'have, exclusively, all such juried!ction of suits or proceedings against ambsssadors or other public ministers, or their de mestics or domestic servants, as a court of law can have or exercise consistently with the law of nations; and original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction of all suits brought by ambassadors or other public ministers, or in which a consul or vice-consul shall be a party. And the trial of issues in fact, in the supreme court, in all actions at law, against citizens of the United States, shall be by jury.
20. Many cases have occurred of controversies between states, amongst which may be mentioned that of Rhode Island $v$. Massachusetts, 4 How. 491, in which the attorneygeneral of the United States is authorized by act of congress, 11 Stat. at Large, 382, to intervenc; Missouri $v$. Iowa, 7 How. 660, and 10 lIow. 1; and Alabama v. Georgia. 23 How. There are now (1860) pending two other cases, viz.: Florida $v$. Georgia, and Missouri $v$. Kentucky. The state of Pennsylvania filed a bill against the Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Company, for the history of which see 18 How. 421, and the previous proceedings therein noted.
21. The proceeding by bill and cross-bill is said to be the most appropriate where the question in dispute is one of boundary between states; and the court, in such cases, proveeds to execute its own decree by the appointment of commissioners to run the line decided upon. 7 How. 660 .

In consequence of the decision in the case of Chisholm $v$. Georgia, where it was held that assumpsit might be maintained against a state by a citizen of another state, the eleventh article of the amendments of the constitution, cited 1, was adopted.

This article is retrospective, and not only prevents the bringing of new suits, but deprives the court of jurisdiction of all suits depending at the time, wherever a state was sued by the citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of a foreign state. 3 Dall. 375.
22. The supreme court has also the power to issue writs of habeas corpus, scire facias, and all other writs not especially provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of its jurisdiction and agreeable to the principles and usages of law ; and the justices have, individually, the power to grant writs of habeas corpus, of ne exeat, and of injunction. Act of 1789 , c. 20 , sects. 14,15 , 18, 33 ; Ast of 1833, c. 57 , sect. 7 ; Act of 1842, c. 52 . It has also the ordinary powers exercised by courts.

In those cases in which original jurisdiction is given to the supreme court, the judicial power of the United States cannot be exercised in its appellate form. With the exception of cases in which original jurisdiction is given to this court, there are none to which the judicial power extends, from which the original jurisdiction of the inferior courts is excluded by the constitution.
23. Coogress cannot vest in the supreme court original jurisdiction in a case in which the constitution has clearly not given that court original jurisdiction; and affirmative words in the constitution, declaring in what cases the supreme court shall have original jurisdiction, must be construed negatively as to all other cases, as otherwise the clause would be inopcrative and useless. 1 Cranch, 137. See 5 Pet. 1,$284 ; 12$ id. 657; 6 Wheat. 264; 9 id. 738.
24. The supreme court exercises appellate jurisdiction in the following different modes: By writ of error from the final judgment of the circuit courts, of the district courts exercising the powers of circuit courts, and of the supcrior courts of the territories exercising the powers of circuit courts in certain cases. In the case of the United States v. Goodwin,

7 Cranch, 108 , it was held that a writ of error did not lie to the supreme court to reverse the judgment of a circuit court, in a civil action by writ of error carried from the district court to the circuit court. But now, by the act of July 4, 1840, c. 20, sect. 3, it is enacted that writs of error shall lie to the supreme court from all judgments of a circuit court, in cases brought there by writs of error from the district court, in like manner and under the same regulations as are provided by law for writs of error for judgments rendered upon suits originally brought in the circuit court.
25. It has jurisdiction by appeal from the final decrees of the circuit courts, of the district courts exercising the powers of circuit courts in certain cases. See 8 Cranch, 251; 6 Wheat. 448. Its appellate jurisdiction from the courts of the United States is specified in the first and second sections of the third article of the constitution, both of which have been cited at length, and by the act of 1789 , c. 20, sects. 13, 22. To give jurisdiction over a case which is removed from the circuit courts, the judgments or decrees in civil actions and suits in equity must be final; the matter in dispute must exceed the sum or value of two thousand dollars, exclusive of costs; and the right of appeal on a writ of error extends to cases whether they have been brought in the circuit court by original process, or were removed there from a state court, or removed there by appeal from a district court. Appeals are allowed from the circuit court of the District of Columbia where the matter in dispute exceeds one thousand dollars.
The right of appeal from the territorial courts varies in the several territories, and will be noticed under the head of each.
26. Under the revenue acts of March 3, 1839, 5 Stat. at Large, 349 ; of 1845, 5 Stat. at Large, 727 ; and of 1846,9 Stat. at Large, 84, relating to the payment of duties under protest, and the return of the money under certain circumstances, in an action against a collector for such return a writ of error to the supreme court will not lie where the recovery is for a less sum than two thousand dollars, 21 How. 390; although by the act of 1844,5 Stat. at Large, 658, such a writ will lie, without regard to the sum or value in controversy, at the instance of either party, upon a final judgment in a circuit court in any civil action brought by the United States for the enforcement of the revenue laws or for the collection of duties due or alleged to be due.
27. The supreme court has alsojurisdiction by writ of error from the final judgments and decrees of the highest courts of law or equity in a state, in the cases provided for by the twenty-fifth section of the act of September 24,1789 , the provisions of which have been given at large in a preceding part of this article. See 5 How. 20, 55. The appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court extends to all cases of the specified character pending in the state courts; and this section of the Judiciary Act, which authorizes the exercise of this jurisdiction, in such cases, by writ of error, is supported by the letter and spirit of the constitution. I Wheat. 304.

When the construction or validity of a treaty of the United States is drawn in question in the state courts, and the decision is digainst its validity, or the title specially set up by either party under the treaty, the supreme court has jurisdiction to ascertain that title and to determine its legal meaning. 1 Wheat. 358; 9 id. 738; 5 Cranch, 344 ; 1 Pet. 94 ; 6 id. $515 ; 9$ id. 224 ; 10 id. 368.
28. It has jurisdiction although one of the parties is a state and the other a citizen of that state. 6 Wheat. 264.

Under the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act, when any clause of the constitution or any statute of the United States is drawn in question, the deoision must be against the title or right set up by the party under such clause or statute; otherwise the supreme court has no appellate jurisdiction of the case. 3 Cranch, 268 ; 4 Wheat. $311 ; 6$ id. 598; 7 id. 164; 12 id. 117, 129; 1 Pet. 655 ; 2 id. 241, 449; 5id. 248; 6id. 41; 11 id. 167 .

When the judgment of the highest court of law of a state decides in favor of the validity of a statute of a state drawn in question on the ground of ite being repugnant to the constitution of the United States, it is not a final judgment within the twentyfifth section of the Judiciary Act, if the suit has been remanded to the inferior court, where it originated, for further proceedings, not inconsistent with the judgment of the highest court. 12 Wheat. 135.

The words "matters in dispute," in the act of congress which is to regulate the jurisdiction of the supreme court, seem appropriated to civil causes. 3 Cranch, 159. As to the manner of ascertaining the matter in dispute, see 4 Cranch, 216, $316 ; 5$ id. 13; 3 Dall. 365; 4 id. 22 ; 2 Pet. 243; 3id. 33; 7 id. 634.
29. The supreme court has jurisdiction by certificate from the circuit court that the opinions of the judges are opposed on points stated, as provided for by the sixth section of the act of April 29, 1802. The provisions of the act extend to criminal as well as to civil cases. See 2 Cranch, $33 ; 7$ id. $279 ; 2$ Dall. 385; 4 IIall, Law Journ. 462; 5 id. $434 ; 6$ id. 542 ; 12 id. 212 . It has also jurisdiction by mandamus, prohibition, certiorari, and procedendo.
30. The criminal jurisdiction of the supreme court is derived from the constitution and the act of September 24, 1789, sect. 13, which gives the supreme court exclusively all such jurisdiction of suits or proceedings against ambassadors, or other public ministers or their domestics, as a court of law can have or exercise consistently with the law of nations. But it must be remembered that the act of April 30, 1790, sections 25 and 26, declares void any writ or process whereby the person of any ambassador, or other public minister, their domestics or domestic servants, may be arrested or imprisoned.

The Circuit Courts.

31. Organization. The circuit courts are the principal inferior courts established hy congress. There are ten circuits, in each of which a circuit court is held. The United States are first divided into districts (see "District Courts"), and the ten circuits are composed respectively of the following districts, to wit: -

The first circuit, of the districts of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Khode Island. See acts April 29, 1802, March 26, 1812, and March 30, 1820.

The second circuit, Vermont, Connecticut, and New York. Aet of March 3, 1837.

The third circuit, New Jersey, and Eastern and Western Pennsylvania. Act of March 3, 1837.
T'he fourth circuit, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and North Carolina. Act of July 15, 1862, sect. 1.
The fifth circuit, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida. Act of July 15, 1862, sect. 1 .

T'he sixth circuit, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Act of July 15,1862 , sect. 1 .

The seventh circuit, Ohio and Michigan. Act of January 28, 1863.

The eighth circuit, Indiana and Illinois. Acts of January 28, 1863, and February 9, 1863.

The ninth circuit, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. Acts of July 15, 1862, sect. 1, and February 9, 1863.

The tenth circuit, California and Oregon. Act of March 3, 1863, sect. 1.
32. In the early history of the government it was intended that one or more of these courts should be held annually in every state, at which should be present one of the justices of the supreme court. But the increase of the number of states and the remoteness of some of them from any of the justices sometimes rendered this impossible, and there were in 1860 seven states in which no justice of the supreme court held court,viz.: Florida, Texas, Iowa, Wisconsin, California, Minnesota, and Oregon. But this evil has been remedied by the acts of July 15, 1862, and March 3, 1863.
The act of September 24,1789 , sect. 10 , gives the district court of the Kentucky district, besides the usual jurisdiction of a district court, the jurisdiction of all causes, except of appeals and writs of error, thereinafter made cognizable in a circuit court, and writs of error and appeals were to lie from decisions therein to the supreme court, and under the same regulations. By the 12 th section, authority was given to remove cases from a state court to such court, in the same manner as to a circuit court.
33. One of the justices of the supreme court of the United States, and the district judge of the district where the circuit is holden, compose the circuit court. The district judge may alone hold a circuit court, if no judge of the supreme court have been allotted to that oircuit.
The act of April 29, 1802, sect. 5, provides that on every appointunent which shall be hereafter made of a chief justice or associate justice, the chief justice and associate justices shall allot among themselves the aforesaid circuits as they shall think fit, and shall enter such allotment on record.
The act of March 3, 1837, sect. 4, directs that the allotment of the chief justice and the associate justices of the said supreme court to the several circuits shall be mado as heretofore.

By the act of August 16, 1842, the justices of the supreme court of the United States, or a majority of them, are required to allot the several districts among the justices of the said court. And in case no suoh allotment shall be made by them at their sessions next succeeding such appointment, and also after the appointment of any judge as aforesaid and before any other allotment shall have been made, it shall and may be lawful for the president of the United States to make such allotment as he shall deem proper,-which allotment, in "either case, shall be binding until another allotment shall be made. And the circuit courts constituted by this act shall have all the power, authority, and jurisdiction, within the several districte of their respective circuits, that before the 13th February, 1801, belonged to the circuit courts of the United States.
34. Formerly there were two terms of the circuit court held in each state, at which the supreme judge and district judge presided; but the system has been essentially changed by the increased number of states in the Union and the division of several of the large states into two or more judicial districts. Thus the judges of the district courts are increased as follows: there are two districts and two judges in New Yark, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, Missouri, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and California.

There are two districts and but one judge in Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Georgia, and in Tennessee three districts and one judge. And by the act of March 3, 1837, 5 Stat. at Large, 177, the district courts of certain districts which had exercised the powers and jurisdiction of circuit courts were deprived of these, and circuit courts were directed to be held. The act provided "that so much of any act or acts of congress as vests in the district courts of the United States for the districts of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, the eastern district of Louisiana, the district of Mississippi, the northern district of New York, the western district of Virginia, and the western district of Pennsylvania, and the district of Alabama, or either of them, the powers and jurisdiction of circuit courts, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and there shall hereafter be circuit courts held for said districts by the chief or associate justices of the supreme court, assigned or allotted to the circuit to which such districts may respectively belong, and the district judges of suph districts, severally and respectively, either of whom shall constitute a quorum; which circuit courts, and the judges thereof, shall have like powers and exercise like jurisdiction as other circuit courts and the judges thereaf; and the said district courts, and the judges thereof, shall have like powers and cxercise like jurisdiction as the district courts and the judges thereof in the other circuits. And a like enactment was passed July 15, 1862, taking away the circuit-court powers of the district courts of Texas, Florida, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, and Kansas; and March 3, 1863, from the district courts of California. From all judgments and decrees rendered in the district courts of the United States for the western district of Louisiana, writs of error and appeals shall lie to the circuit court in the other district in said state, in the same manner as from decrees and judgments rendered in the districts within which a circuit court is provided by this act."

Whilst the increased business of the circuit courts occasioned the multiplication of these courts, the act of 1844, 5 Stat at Large, 676, relieved the justice of the supreme court from attending more than one term of the court within any district of such circuit in any one year.
35. The circuit court for California is held six times a year, three times in the northern and three times in the southern district. Circuit courts may be held in both districts at the same time. In the absence of the circuit judge, the district judge may hold the circuit court. Act of February 19, 1864.
36. In all cases where the day of meeting of the circuit court is fixed for a particular day of the month, if that day happen on Sunday, then, by the act of 29 th A pril, 1802, and other acts, the court shall be held the next day.

The act of September 24, 1789, sect. 6, provides that a circuit court may be adjourned from day to day by one of its judges, or, if none are present, by the marshal of the district, until a quarum be convened. By the act of May 19, 1794, a circuit court in any district, when it shall happen that no judge of the supreme court attends within four days after the time appointed by law for the commencement of the sessions, may be adjourned to the next stated term by the judge of the district, or, in case of his absence also, by the marshal of the district. But by the 4th section of the act of April 29, 1802, where only one of the judges thereby directed to hold the circuit courts shall attend, such circuit court may be held by the judge so attending.
3\%. By the act of March 2, 1809, certain duties are imposed on the justices of the supreme court in case of the disability of a district judge within their respective circuits to hold a district court. Sect. 1 enacts that in oase of the disability of the district judge of either of the district courts of the United States to hold a district court, and to perform the duties of his office, and satisfaotory evidence thercof being shown to the justice of the supreme court allotted to that circuit in which such district court ought by law to be holden, and on application of the district attorney or marshal of such district, in writing, the said justice of the supreme court shall, thereupon, issue his order in the nature of a certiorari, directed to the clerk of such district court, requiring him forthwith to certify unto the next circuit court to be holden in said district all actions, suits, causes, pleas, or processes, civil or criminal, of what nature or kind soever, that may be depending in such district court, and undetermined, with all the proceedings thereon, and all files and papers relating thereto, which said order shall be immediately published in one or more newspapers printed in said district, and at least thirty days before the session of such circuit court, and shall be deemed a sufficient notification to all concerned. And the said circuit court shall, thereupon, have the same cognizance of all such actions, suits, causes, pleas, or processes, civil or criminal, of what nature or kind soever, and in the like manner, as the district court of said district by law might have, or the circuit court, had the same been originally commenced therein, and shall proceed to hear and determine the same accordingly; and the said justice of the supreme court, during the continuance of such disability, shall, moreover, be invested with and exercise all and singular the powers and authority vested by law in the judge of the district court in said district. And all bonds and recognizances taken for, or returnable to, such district court, shall be construed and taken to be to the circuit court to be holden thereafter, in pursuance of this act, and shall have the same force and effect in such court as they would have had in the district court to which they were taken. Provided, that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to require of the judge of the supreme court, within whose circuit such district may lie, to hold any special court, or court of admiralty, at any other time than the legal time for holding the circuit court of the United States in and for such district.

Sect. 2 provides that the clerk of such district shall, during the continuance of the disability of the district judge, continue to cortify, as aforesaid, all suits or actions, of what nature or kind soever, which may thereafter be brought to such district court, and the same transmit to the circuit court next thereafter to be holden in the same district. And the said circuit court shall have cognizance of the same, in like manner as is hercinbefore provided in this act, and shall proceed to hoar and determinc the same. Provided, nevertheless, that when the disability of the district judge shall cease or be removed, all suits or actions then pending and undetermined in the circuit court in which, by law, the district courts have an exclusive original cognizance, shall be remanded, and the clerk of the said circuit court shall transmit the same, pursuant to the order of the said court, with all matters and things relating thereto, to the district court next thereafter to be holden in said district, and the same proceedings shall be had therein as would have been had the same originated, or been continued, in the said district court.

Sect. 3 enacts that, in case of the district judge in any district boing unable to discharge his duties as aforesaid, the district clerk of such district shall be authorized and empowered, by leave or order of the circuit judge of the circuit in which such district is included, to take, during such disability of the district judge, all examinations and depositions of witnesses, and to make all necessary rules and orders preparatory to the final hearing of all causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. See 1 Gall. 337; 1 Cranch, 309 ; note to Hayburn's case, 3 Dall. 410.

If the disability of the district judge terminate in his death, the circuit court must remand the certified causes to the district court. Ex parte United States, 1 Gall. 337.
38. So also in case of the disability of any district judge to hold a district or circuit court, the circuit judge may appoint the district judge of any other judicial district within the same circuit to hold the district or circuit court; and in case the circuit judge cannot perform the duty, the chief justice of the United States is to appoint in manner aforesaid. 9 Stat. at Large, 442. And this may be done whenever the public interests require it: so that each of the district judges may be holding court at the same time. 10 Stat. at Large, 5.
By the first section of the act of March 3, 1821, in all suits and actions in any district court of the United States, in which it shall appear that the judge of such court is any ways concerned in interest therein, or has been of counsel for either party, or is so related to or connected with either party as to render it improper for him, in his opinion, to sit on the trial of such suit or action, it shall be the duty of such judge, on application of either party, to cause the fact to be entered on the records of the court, and also an order that an authenticated copy thereof, with all the proceedings in such suit or action, shall be forthwith certified to the next circuit court of the district, and, if there be no circuit court in such district, to the next circuit court in the state, and, if there be no circuit court in such state, to the most convenient circuit court in an adjacent state; which circuit court shall, upon such record being filed with the clerk thereof, take cognizance thereof, in like manner as if such suit or action had been originally commenced in that court, and shall proceed to hear and determine the same accordingly; and the jurisdiction of such circuit court shall extend to all such cases to be removed as were cognizable in the district court from which the same was removed.

And the act of February 28, 1839, sect. 8, enacts "That in all suits and actions, in any circuit court of the United States, in which it shall appear that both the judges thereof, or the judge thereof, who is solely competent by law to try the same, shall be any ways concerned in interest therein, or shall have been of counsel for either party, or is or are so related to or connected with either party as to render it improper for him or them, in his or their opinion, to sit in the trial of such suit or action, it shall be the duty of such judge, or judges, on application of either party, to cause the fact to be entered on the records of the court, and also to make an order that an authenticated copy thereof, with all the proceedings in such suit or action, shall be certified to the most convenient circuit court in the next adjacent state, or in the next adjacent circuit, which circuit court shall, upon such record and order being filed with the clerk thereof, take cognizance thereof in the same manner as if such suit or action had been rightfully and originally commenced therein, and shall proceed to hear and determine the same accordingly; and the proper process for the due execution of the judgment or decree rendered therein shall run into, and may be executed in, the district where such judgment or decree was rendered, and also into the district from which such suit or action was removed."

By sect. 1 of the act of March 3, 1863, it is provided that whenever the judge of the supreme court for any circuit, from disability, absence, the accumulation of business in the circuit court in any district within his circuit, or from his having been of counsel or being interested in any case ponding, etc., or from any othor cause, he may request in writing the judge of any other circuit to hold tho circuit court in such district; and thereupon it shall he lawful for the judge so requested to hold the circuit court in such district.
39. The judges of the supreme court are not appointed as circuit-court judges, or, in other words, have no distinct commission for that purpose; hut practice and acquiescence under it tor many years were held to afford an irresistible argument against this objection to their authority to act, when made in the year 1803, and to have fixed the construction of the judicial system. The court deemed the contemporary expositiou to be of the most forcible nature, and considered the question at rest, and not to be disturhed then. Stuart $v$. Laird, 1 Cranch, 308. If a racancy exist by the death of the justice of the supreme court to whom the district was allotted, the district judge may, under the act of congress, discharge the official duties (Pollard $v$. Dwight, 4 Cranch, 428 . See the fifth section of the act of April 29, 1802), except that he cannot sit upon a writ of crror from a decision in the district court. United States v. Lancaster, 5 Wheat. 434.
40. It is enacted by the act of February 28,1839 , sect. 2 , that all the circuit courts of the United States shall have the appointment of their own clerks; and, in case of disagreement between the judges, the appointment shall be made by the presiding judge of the court.

The marshal of the district is an officer of the court, and the clerk of the district court is also clerk of the circuit court in such district. Act of September 24, 1789, sect. 7.

Of the Jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts.

41. The jurisdiction of the circuit courts is either civil or criminal.

Civil Jurisdiction.

The civil jurisdiction is either at low or in equity. Their civil jurisdiction at law is1st, Original; 2d, By removal of actions from the state courts; 3d, By writ of mandamus; 4th, By appeal.

Original Jurisdiction.

"And be it further enacted, that the circuit courts shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity where the matter in dispute excceds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of five hundred dollars, and the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or an alien is a party, or the suit is hetween a citizen of the state where the suit is brought and a citizen of another state; and shall have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offences cognizable under the authority of the United States, except where this act otherwise provides or the laws of the United States shall otherwise direct, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the crimes and offences cognizable therein. But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit court. And no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against an inhabitant of the United States by any original process in any other district than that in which he is an inhabitant or in which he shall he found at the time of serving the writ; nor shall any district or circuit court have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any premissory note or other chose in action in faror of an assignee, unless a suit might bave been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment had been made, except in case of foreign bills of exchange."
42. The matter in dispute. In actions to recover damages for torts, the sum laid in the declaration is the criterion as to the matter in dispute. 3 Dall. 358. In an action of covenant on an instrument under seal, containing a penalty less than five hundred dollars, the court has jurisdiction if the declaration demand more than five hundred dollars. 1 Wash. C. C. 1. In ejectment, the value of the land should appear in the declaration, 4 Wash.C.C. 624 ; 8 Cranch, 220 ; 1 Pet. 73 ; but though the jury do not find the value of the land in dispute, yet if evidence be given on the trial that the value exceeds five hundred dollars, it is sufficient to fix the jurisdiction; or the court may ascertain its value by affidavits. 1 Pet. C. C. 73 .

If the matter in dispute arise out of a local injury, for which a local action must be brought, in order to give the circuit court jnrisdiction it must be lrought in the district where the lands lie. 4 Hall, Law Journ. 78.
43. By various acts of congress, juriadiction is given to the circuit courts in cases where actions are brought to recover damages for the violation of patent and copyrights, without fixing any amount as the limit. See acts of April 17. 1800, sect. 4 ; Feb. 15, 1819; 7 Johns. N.Y. 144; 9 ill. 507.
44. The circuit courts have jurisdiction in cases arising under the patent laws. By the act of July 4, 1836, sect. 17, it is enacted "that all actions, suits, controversies, and cases arising under any law of the United States granting or confirming to inventors the exclusive right to their inventions or discoveries, shall be originally cognizable, as well in equity as at law, by the circuit courts of the United States, or any district court having the powers and jurisdiction of a circuit court; which courts shall have power, upon bill in equity filed by any party aggrieved, in any such case, to grant injunctions, according to the course and principles of courts of equity, to prevent the violation of the rights of any inventor as secured to him by any law of the United States, on such terms and conditions as said courts may deem reasonable. Provided, however, that from all judgments and decrees from any such court rendered in the premises a writ of error or appeal, as the case may require, shall lie to the supreme court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same circumstances as is now provided by law in other judgments and decrees of circuit courts, and in all other cases in which the courts shall deem it reasonable to allow the same."
45. In general, the circuit court has no original jurisdiction of suits for penalties and forfeitures arising under the laws of the United States, nor in admiralty cases. 2 Dill. 365 ; 4 id. 342 ; Bee, Adm. 19.
46. It is apparent from the acts heretofore cited that the principal duty of the circuit courts is to entorce those obligations which are incumbent upon the people of the United States from their national character, or which result from the laws of congress or treaties. They are excluded from jurisdiction of all controversies between citizens of the same state, except those arising under an act of congress, the constructions of which it has been supposed to be the peculiar right and duty of the tederal tribunals to give. Therefore the jurisdiction of the circuit courts includes cases which arise under the laws relating to patents and copyrights; baukruptcy, when a bankrupt law is in force; the revenue; the Indians; the slave-trade, or piracy; the postoffice; cases where the United States or its officers sue ; of steamboat regulations; of laws for the enforcement of our neutral duties; offences against the United States, and cases arising under the grant by the constitution of admiralty aud maritime jurisdiotion. See the notes to Little & Brown'a edition of the Statutes and Law, U. S. Courts.

47: The confirmation of imperfect land titles in the country which was acquired by treaties from France, Spain, and Mexico, is also a branch of the jurisdiction of these courts. In the Luuisiana and Florida treaties, clauses were inserted which were in tended to apply to claims to land whose validity depended on the performance of conditions in consideration of which the concessiun had been made, and which must have been performed before those governments were bound to perfeet the titles. The United States were bound, after the ceasion of the territories, to the same extent that those governments had been bound before the ratification of the treaties, to perfect them by legislation and adjudication. Previous to the passage of the act of May 26, 1824, 4 Stat. at Large, 52, the political power dealt with these claims by legislation, through the medium of boards of commissioners and acts of congress. By that act jurisdiction was conferred on the courts to adjudge incipient titles as far as Missouri and Arkansas were concerned. And this power was extended to Florida by act of May 22, 1828 . 4 Stat. at Large, 285. Afterwardg the act of June 17, 1844, 5 Stat. at Large, 676, renewed the jurisdiction as to Missouri, and extended it to Louisiana and Arkansas, and to so much of the states of Missiasippi and Alabama as is included in the district of country south of the thirty-first degree of north latitude and between the Mississippi and Perdido rivers, as to land-claims originating with either the Spanish, French, or British anthorities.

After the acquisition of California, congress established a looard of commissioners, and submitted the claims of each and every person in California, by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican government, to their determination, and that of the courts of the United States, on appeal. 9 Stat. at Large, 632; 10 id. 99 ; 21 How. 447. The principles adopted by the supreme court in deciding the cases which were brought before it under all these acts are too numerous to be stated here.

The Character of the Parties.

48. The United States may sue on all contracts in the circuit courts where the sum in controversy exceeds, besides costs, the sum of five hundred dollars; but in cases of penalties the action must be commenced in the district court, unless the law gives express jurisdiction to the circuit courts. 4 Dall. 342. Under the act of March 3, 1815, sect. 4, the circuit court has jurisdiction concurrently with the district court of all suits at common law where any officer of the United States auea under the authority of an act of congress: as, where the postmaster-general gues under an act of congresa for debts or balances due to the general post-office. 12 Wheat. 136. See I Pet. 318; 2 id. 447.
The circuit court has juriadiction on a bill in equity filed by the United States against the debtor of their debtor, they claiming priority under the statute of March 2, 1798, e. 28 , sect. 65 , though the law of the state where the suit is brought permite a creditor to proceed against the debtor of his debtor by a peculiar process at law. 4 W heat. 108.
49. In suits between citizens of different states, one of the parties must be a citizen of the state where the suit is brought under the act of Sept. 24, 1789, sect. 11. 1 Mas. C. C. 52); 2 id. 472 ; 1 Pet. C. C. 431; 3 id. 185 ; 4 Wash. C. C. 84, 482, n., 595 ; 1 Pet. 238; 5 Cranch, $51,57,288$; 6 Wheat. $450 ; 8$ id. 699.

Under this section the division of a state into two or more districts does not affect the jurisdiction of the circuit court on account of citizenship. The residence of a party in a different district of a state from that in which the suit is brought does not exempt him from the jurisdiction of the court: if he is found in the district where he is sued, he is not within the prohibition of this section. 11 Pet. 25. A territory is not a state for the purpose of giving jurisdiction; and therefore a citizen of a territory cannot sue a citizen of a state in the circuit court. 1 Wheat. 91.
50. Aliens may bring suit under the act of Sept. 24, 1780, seet. 11, which gives the circuit court cognizance of all suits of a civil nature where an alien is a party; but these general words must he restricted by the provision in the constitution which gives jurisdiction in controversies between a state, or the citizens of a state, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects; and the statuite cannot extend the jurisdiction beyond the limits of the constitution. 4 Dall. 11; 5 Cranch, 303. When both parties are aliens, the circuit court has no jurisdiction. 4 Cranch, $46 ; 4$ Dall. 11. An alien who holds lands under a special law of the state in whioh he is resident may maintain an action in relation to those lands in the circuit court. 1 Baldw. C. C. 216.
51. When an assignee is the plaintiff, the court has no jurisdiction unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover on the contract assigned, if no assignment had been made, except in cases of bills of exchange. Act of September 24,1789 , sect. 11. 2 Pet. 319; 11 id. 83; 12 id. 164; 6 Wheat. 146; 9 id. 137 ; 4 Wash. C. C. 349 ; 1 Mas. C. C. $243 ; 2 \mathrm{id} .252 ; 4 \mathrm{id} .435$. It is said that this section of the act of congress has no application to the conveyance of lands from a citizen of one state to a citizen of another. The grantee in such case may maintain his action in the circuit court, when otherwise properly qualified, to try the title to such lands. 2 Sumn. C. C. 252.
52. The defendant must be an inhabitant of, or found in, the circuit at the time of serving the writ; else the circuit court has no jurisdiction. 3 Wash. C.C. 456. A citizen of one state may be sued in another, if the process be served upon him in the latter; butin such cases the plaintiff must be a citizen of the latter state, or an alien. 1 Pet. C. C. 431.

Removal of Actions from the State Courts.

53. The act of Sept. 24, 1789, gives, in certain cases, the right of removing a suit instituted in a state court to the circuit court of the district. It is enacted by that law that if a suit be commenced in any state court against an alien, or by a citizen of the state in which the suit is brought against a citizen of another state, and the matter in dispute exceeds the aforesaid sum or value of five huudred dollars, excolusive of costs, to be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, and the defendant shall, at the time of entering his appearance in such state court, file a petition for the remoral of the cause for trial into the next circuit court to bo held in the district where the suit is pending, and offer good and sufficient security for lis entering in such court, on the first day of its session, copies of the said process against him, and also for his then appearing and entering special bail in the cause, if sper cial bail was originally required therein, it shall then be the duty of the state court to accept the surety and proceed no further in the cause. And any bail that may hare been originally taken shall be discharged. And the said copies being entered as aforesaid in such court of the United States, the cause shall there proceed in the same manner as if it had been brought there by original process. And any attachment of the goods or estate of the defendant by the original process shall hold the goods or estate so attached, to answer the final judgnient, in the same manner as by the laws of such state they would have been holden to answer final judgment had it been rendered by the circuit cuurt in which the suit commenced. See act of September 24, 1789, sect. 12; 4Dall. 11; 5 Cranch, 303 ; 4 Johns. N. Y. 493 ; 1 Pet. 220; 2 Yeates, Penn. 275; 4 Wash. C.C. 286, 344.

And sect. 5 of the act of March 3, 1863, enacts tbat any suit or prosecution, civil or criminal, commenced in any state court against any officer, civil or military, or any other person, for any arrest or imprisonment made, or other trespasses or wrongs done or committed, or any act omitted to be done, at any time daring the present rebellion, by virtue or under color of any authority derived from or exercised by or under the president of the United States, or any act of congress, the defendant may, by petition filed in conformity to the provisions of the act, have such suit or prosecntion removed for trial at the next circuit court of the United States to be held in the district where the suit is pending.
54. By the constitution, art. 3 , sect. 2,1 , the indicial power shall extend to controversies between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states.

By a clause of the 12th section of the act of September 24, 1789, it is enacted that if in any action commenced in a state court the title of land be concerned, and the jarties are citizens of the same state, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, the sum or value being made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, either party, before the trial, shall state to the court, and make affidavit, if it require it, that he claims and shall rely upon a right or title to the land under grant from a state other than that in which the suit is pending, and produce the original grant, or an exemplification of it, except where the loss of records shall put it out of his power, and shall move that the adverse party inform the court whether he claims a right of title to the land under a grant from the state in which the suit is pending, the said adverse party shall give such information, otherwise not he allowed to plead such grant, or give it in evidence upon the trial; and if he informs that be does claim under any such grant, the party claiming under the grant first mentioned may then, on motion, remove the cause for trial to the next circuit court to be holden in such district. But if he is the defendant, he shall do it under the same regulations as in the before-mentioned case of the removal of a cause into such court by an alien. And neither party removing the cause shall be allowed to plead, or give evidence of, any other title than that by him stated as aforesaid as the ground of his claim. See 9 Cranch, 292; 2 Wheat. 378.

Application for removal must be made during the term at which the defendant enters his appearance. $1 \mathrm{~J} . \mathrm{J}$. Marsh. Ky. 232. If a state court agree to consider a petition to remove the cause as filed of the preceding term, yet if the circuit court see by the record that it was not filed till a subsequent term, they will not permit the cause to be docketed. 1 Pet. C. C. 44 ; Paine, 410. But see 2 Penn. N. J. 625.
55. In chancery, when the defend ant wishes to remove the suit, he must file his petition when he enters his appearance, 4 Johns. Ch. N.Y. 94 ; and in an action in a court of law, at the time of putting in special bail. 12 Johns. 153. And if an alien file his petition when he files special bail, he is in time, though the bail be excepted to. 1 Caines, N. Y. 248; Coleman, 58. A defendant in ejectment may file his petition when he is let in to defend. 4 Johns. 493. See Pet. C. C. 220; 2 Wash. C. C. $463 ;$; 4 id. 84,286 ; 2 Yeates, Penn. 275 , 352; 3 Dall. 467; 2 Root, 444; 5 Johus. Ch. N. Y. 300; 3 Ohio, 48.

Remedy by Mandamus.

56. The power of the circuit court to issue a mandamus is confined exclusively to cases in which it may be necessary for the exercise of a jurisdiction already existing: as, for instance, if the court below refuse to proceed to judgment, then a mandamus in the nature of a procedendo may issue. 7 Cranch, 504 ; 6 Wheat. 598. After the state court had refused to permit the removal of a cause on petition, the circuit court issued a mandamus to transfer the cause.

Appellate Jurisdiction.

5\%. The appellate jurisdiction is exercised by means of-1. Writs of error; 2. Appcals from the district courts in admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; 3. Certiorari ; 4. Procedendo.
58. This court has jurisdiction to issue writs of error to the district court, on judgments of that court in civil eases at common law.

The 11th section of the act of September 24,1789 , provides that the circuit courts shall also have appellate jurisdiction from the district courts, under the regulations and restrictions thereinafter provided.

By the 22d section, final decrees and judgments in civil actions in a district court, where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of fifty dollars, exclusive of costs, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in a circuit court holden in the same district, upon a writ of error, whereto shall be annexed and returned therewith, at the day and place therein mentioned, an authenticated transcript of the record and assignment of errors, and prayer for reversal, with a citation to the adverse party, signed by the judge of such district court or a justice of the supreme court, the adverse party having at least twenty days' notice. But there shall be no reversal on such writ of error for error in ruling any plea in abatement, other than a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, or for any error in fact. And writs of error shall not be brought but within five years after rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of; or, in case the person entitled to such writ of error be an infant, non compos mentis, or imprisoned, then within five years, as aforesaid, exclusive of the time of such disability. And every justice or judge signing a citation or any writ of error as aforesaid shall take good and sufficient security that the plaintiff in error shall prosecute his writ to effect, and answer all damages and costs if he fail to make his plea good.
59. The district judge cannot sit in the circuit court on a writ of error to the district court. 5 Wheat. 434.

It is observed above that writs of error may be issued to the district court in civil cases at common law; but a writ of error does not lie from a circuit to a district court in an admiralty or maritime cause. 1 Gall. C.C. 5.
60. Appeals from the district to the circuit court take place generally in civil causes of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction.

By the act of March 3, 1803 , sect. 2, it is enacted that from all final judgments or decrees in any of the district courts of the United States, an appeal where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum or value of fifty dollars, shall be allowed to the district court next to be holden in the district where such final judgment or judgments, decree or decrees, shall be rendered ; and the circuit tourts are thereby authorized and required to hear and determine such appeals.
61. Although no act of congress authorizes the circuit court to issue a certiorari to the district court for the removal of a cause, yet if the cause be so removed, and, instead of taking advantage of the irregularity in proper time and in a proper manner, the defendant makes the defence and pleads to issue, he thereby waives the objection, and the suit will be considered as an original one in the circuit court, made so by consent of the parties. 2 Wheat. 221.

The circuit court may issue a writ of procedendo to the district court.

Equity Jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts.

62. Circuit courts are vested with equity jurisdiction in certain cases. The act of September 24,1789 , sect. 11, gives original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of five hundred dollars, and the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or an alien is a party, or the suit is hetween a citizen of the state where the suit is brought and a citizen of another state.
63. The act of April 15,1819 , sect. 1 , provides "That the circuit court of the United States shall have original cognizance, as well in equity as at law, of all actions, suits, controversies, and cases arising under any law of the United States, granting or confirming to authors or inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings, inventions, and discoveries, and, upon any bill in equity filed by any party aggrieved in such cases, shall have authority to grant injunctions, according to the course and principles of courts of equity, to prevent the violation of the rights of any authors or inventors secured to them by any laws of the United States, on such terms and conditions as the said courts may deem fit and reasonable: provided, however, that from all judgments and decrees of any circuit courts rendered in the premises a writ of error or appeal, as the case may require, shall lie to the supreme court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same circumstances as is now provided by law in other judgments and decrees of such circuit court."
64. By the act of August 23, 1842, sect. 5 , it is enacted "That the district courts, as courts of admiralty, and the circuit courts, as courts of equity, shall be deemed always open for the purpose of filing libels, hills, petitions, answers, pleas, and other pleadings, for issuing and returning mesne and fixal process and commissions, and for making and directing all interlocntory motions, orders, rules, and other proceedings whatever, preparatory to the hearing of all causes pending therein upon their merits. And it shall be competent for any judge of the court, upon reasonable notice to the parties, in the flerk's vffice or at chamhers, and in vacation as well as in term, to make and direct and award all such process, commissions, and interlocutory orders, rules, and other pro ceedings, whenever the same are not grantable of course according to the rules and practice of the court."

Criminal Jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts.

65. The often-cited eleventh section of the act of the 24th of September, 1789, gives the circuit courts exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offences cognizable under the authority of the United States, except where that act otherwise provides or the laws of the United States shall otherwise direct, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the crimes and offences cognizable therein. The jurisdiction of the circuit courts in criminal cases is confined to offences committed within the district for which those courts respectively sit, when they are committed on land. Serg. Const. Law, 129; 1 Gall. C. C. 488.
66. The Circuit Court of the District of Columbia. (Abolished by sect. 16 of. act of March 3, 1863. See sect. 96, post.)

The District Courts.

The act of 1789 , c. 20 , sect. 9 , establishes the district courts, as follows:-
"The district courts shall have, exclusively of the courts of the several states, cognizance of all crimes and offences that shall be cognizable under the authority of the United States, committed within their respective districts, or upon the high scas, where no other punishment than whipping, not exceeding thirty stripes, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months, is to be inflicted; and shall also have exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, including all seizures under laws of impost, navigation, or trade of the United States, where the seizures are made on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burthen, within their respective districts as well as upon the high seas, -saving to suitors, in all cases, the right ot' a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it; and shall also have exclusive original cognizance of all seizures on land or other waters than as aforesaid made, and of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws of the United States; and shall also have cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, or the circuit courts, as the case may be, of all causes where an alien sues for a tort only in violation of the law of nations or a treaty of the United States; and shall also have cognizance, concurrent, as last mentioned, of all suits at common law where the United States sue, and the matter in dispute amounts, exclusive of costs, to the sum or value of one hundred dollars; and shall also have jurisdiction, exclusively of the courts of the several states, of all suits against consuls or vice-consuls, except for offences above the description aforesaid; and the trial of issues in fact in the district courts, in all causes except civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, shall be by jury." This act allows appeals to the circuit court in certain cases.

6\%. Organization. The United States are divided into districts, in each of which is a court called a district court, which is to consist of one judge, who is to reside in the district for which he is appointed, and to hold annually four sessions. Act of September 24,1789 . By subsequent acts of congress, the number of annual sessions in particular districts is sometimes more and sometimes lese; and they are to be held at various places in the district.
68. As the number of states increased into which no supreme judge went, and the old states became so large that one district judge could not transact the business, it was found necessary to increase the number of judges, to clothe these district courts with circuitcourt powers, and to allow appeals and writs of error from them to the supreme court.

Thus, from time to time acts were passed, with this view, relative to the district courts of Western Tennessee, Northern and Middle Alabama, Northern and Southern Florida, Northern Georgia, Texas, Iowa, Wisconsin, Western Arkansas, and California; and by the act of March 3, 1837, cited 34, many of the district courts were made circuit courts, whereby the same rights of appeal and writ of error were conferred. There are in the United States (in 1860) thirty-three district judges who hold courts; in ten of the states, an additional judge who holds courts; in three states, two districts in which the same judge holds courts; and in Tenneesee, three districts in which the same judge holds courts. The system has become, therefore, somewhat complicated. For the powers and duties of all these district courts, the books which have already been mentioned may be referred to.
69. Jurisdiction. Their jurisdiction is either civil or criminal. Their civil jurisdiction includes admiralty and maritime causes, and is either ordinary or extraordinary. The ordinary jurisdiction is granted by the act of September 24,1789 , sect. 9 . It is there enacted that the district court shall have exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime juriediction. This jurisdiction is exclusive. Bee, Adm. 19; 3 Dall. 16; Paine, C. C. 111 ; 4 Mas. C. C. 139.

This ordinary jurisdiction is exercised in-
70. Prize suits. The act of September 〔4, 1789, sect. 9, vests in the district courts as full jurisdiction of all prize causes as is possessed by the admiralty of England; and this jurisdiction is an ordinary inherent branch of the powers of the court of admiralty, whether considered as prize courts or instance courts. 3 Dall. 16; Paine, C. C. 111.
71. The act of congress marks out not only the general jurisdiction of the district courts, but also that of the several courts in relation to each other, in cases of seizure on the waters of the United States, navigable, etc. When the seizure is made within the waters of one district, the court of that district has exclusive juriediction though the offence may have been committed out of the district. When the seizure is made on the high seas, the jurisdiction is in the court of the district where the property may be brought. 9 Wheat. 402; 6 Cranch, 281 ; 1 Mas. C. C. 360; Paine, C. C. 40.
72. When the seizure bas been made within the waters of a fureign nation, the district court has jurisdiction when the property has been brought into the district and a prosecution has been instituted there. 9 Wheat. 402; 9 Cranch, 102.

The district court has jurisdiction of seizures, and of the question who is entitled to their proceeds, as informers or otherwise, and the principal jurisdiction is exclusive. The question as to who is the informer is also exclusive. 4 Mas. C. C. 139.
73. Cases of salvage. Under the constitation and laws of the United States, this court has exclusive original cognizance in cases of salvage; and, as a consequence, it has the power to determine to whom the residue of the property belongs after deducting the salvage. 3 Dall. 183.
74. Actions arising out of torts and injuries. The district court has jurisdiction over all torts and injuries committed on the high seas, and in ports or harbors within the ebb and flow of the tide. Sce 1 Wheat. 204; 2 Gall. C. C. 389 ; 1 Mas. C. C. 96 ; 3 id. 242 ; 4 id. 380; 18 Johns. N. Y. 257.
75. In the very leading case of Waring $v$. Clarke, 5 How . 441, two grounds were taken to sustain the position that the court had not jurisdiction, as the collision took place within the ebb and flow of the tide, and so infra corpus comitatus: First, "That the grant in the constitution of all cases of admiralty and maritime joriediction was limited 10 what were casee of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction in England when cur revolutionary war began, or when the constitution was adopted; and that a collision between ships within the ebb and flow of the tide, infra corpus comitatus, was not one of them. Second, That the distinguishing limitation of admiralty jurisdiction, and decisive test against it, in England and in the United States, exeept in the cases allowed in England, was the competency of a court of common law to give a remedy in a given case in a trial by jury."

And as ausiliary to this ground it was urged that the clause in the ninth section of the Jodiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at Large, 77, saving to suitors in all casee the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, took away such cases from the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. The court held, confining their opinion to cases of collision, that the objections were not valid. Mr. Justice Wayne asserts that the grant of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction to the federal judiciary by the constitation of the United States was not limited to the restricted jurisdiction which had prevailed in England since the restraining statutes of $13 & 15$ Rich. II. and 2 IIen. IV.
76. The admiralty jurisdiction has been held to include a collision which took place on the Yazoo river where it falls into the Mississippi, more than two hundred miles from its mouth. 22 How. 48.

A court of admiralty has juprisdiction to redress personal wrongs committed on a passenger, on the high seas, by the master of a vessel, whether those wrongs be by direct force or consequential injuries. 3 Mas. C.C. 242.

The admiralty may decree damages for an unlawful capture of an American vessel by a French privateer, and may proceed by attachment in rem. Bee, Adm. 60.

It has jurisdiction in cases of maritime torts, in personam as well as in rem. 10 Wheat. 473.

7\%. This court has also jurisdiction of petitory suits to reinstate owners of vessels who have been displaced from their possession. 5 Mas. C. C. 465.

A father, whose minor son has been tortiously abducted and seduced on a voyage on the high seas, may suc, in the admiralty, in the nature of an action per quod, etc., also for wages earned by such son in maritime service. 4 Mas. C. C. 380.
78. Suits on contracts. As a court of admiralty, the district court has a jurisdiction, concurrent with the courts of common law, over all maritime contracts, wheresoever the same may he made or executed, or whatsoever be the form of the contract. 2 Gall. C. C. 398. It may enforce the performance of charter-parties for foreign voyages, and, by proceeding in rem, a lien for freight under them. 1 Sumn.C.C. 551; 2 id. 589. It has jurisdiction over contracts for the hire of seamen, when the service is substantially performed on the sea, or on waters within the flow and reflow of the tide. 10 Wheat. 428 ; 7 Pet. 324 ; Bee, Adm. 199; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 529. But unless the services are essentially maritime, the jurisdiction does not attach. 10 Wheat. 428; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 529.
79. In 1845, congress passed an act, 5 Stat. at Large, 726, to extend the jurisdiction of the district courts to certain cases upon the lakes and the navigable waters connecting the same. It enacted "that the district court of the United States shall have like powers and exercise the same jurisdiction in matters of contract and tort arising in, opon, or concerning steamboats and other vessels of twenty tons burthen and upwards, enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade, and at the time employed in business of commerce and navigation between ports and places in different states and territories upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting said lakes. as is now possessel and exercised by the said courts in cases of the like steamboats and other vessels employed in navigation and commerce upon the high seas or tide-waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States," etc. etc. In the case of the propeller Genesec Chief $v$. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 443, it was held that this act was not passed under the power conferred by the constitution upon congress to regulate commerce, but upon the grant of adniralty and maritime jurisdiction conferred upon the federal judiciary by the constitution, and that the jurisdiction of the federal courts upon the lakes and the navigable waters connecting them was not conferred, therefore, by this act, but that it existed independently of it. It will be perceived from the above quotation that jurisdiction is conferred upon the district courts in cases where vessels are employed in business of commerce and navigation between ports and places in different states and territories. It was therefore held that it did not extend to a case where there was a shipment of goods from a port in a state to another port in the same state. 21 Hcw .244.
80. The master of a vessel may sue in the admiraity for his wages ; and the mate, who on his death succeeds him, has the same right. 1 Sumn. C. C. 157; 3 Mas. C. C. 161; 4 id. 196. But when the services for which he sues have not been performed by him as master, they cannot be sued for in admiralty. 3 Mas. C. c. 161.
The jurisdiction of the admiralty attaches when the services are performed on a ship in port where the tide ebbs and flows. 7 Pet. 324 ; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 529.
81. Seamen employed on board of steamboats and lighters engaged in trade or commerce on tide-water are within the admiralty jurisdiction. But those in ferry-boats are not so. Gilp. Dist. Ct. 203, 532.

Wages may be recovered in the admiralty by the pilot, deck-hands, engineer, and firemen on board of a steamboat. Gilp. Dist. Ct. 505.

But unless the service of those employed contribute in navigating the vessel, or to its preservation, they cannot sue for their wages in the admiralty. Musicians on board of a vessel, who are hired and employed as such, cannot, therefore, enforce a payment of their wages by a suit in rem in the admiralty. Gilp. Dist. Ct. 516.
82. The extraordinary jurisdiction of the district court, as a court of admiralty, or that which is vested by various acts of congress, consists of -

Seizures under the laws of imposts, navigation, or trade of the United States. It is enacted, by the act of September 24,1789 , sect. 9 , that the district court shall have exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, including all seizures under laws of impost, navigation, or trade of the United States, when the seizures are made on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burthen, within their respective districts, as well as upon the high seas; saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a commonlaw remedy, when the common law is competent to give it.
83. Causes of this kind are to be tried by the district court, and not by a jury. 1 Wheat. 9,20 ; 4 Cranch, $438 ; 5$ id. $281 ; 7$ id. 112 ; 3 Dall. 297.

It is the place of seizure, and not the committing of the offence, that, under the act of September 24, 1789, gives jurisdiction to the court, 4 Cranch, 443 ; 5 id. 304 ; for until there has been a seizure the forum cannot be ascertained. 9 Cranch, 289.

When the seizure has been voluntarily abandoned, it loses its validity; and no jurisdiction attaches to any court unlese there be a new seizure. 10 Wheat. $325 ; 1$ Mas. C. C. 361.
84. Capturcs made within the jurisdictional limits of the United States are within the admiralty jurisdiction. By the act of April 20, 1818, sect. 7, the district court shall take cognizance of complaints, by whomsoever instituted, in cases of captures made within the waters of the United States, or within a marine league of the coasts and shores thereof.
85. The civil jurisdiction of the district court extends to cases of seizure on land, under the laws of the United States, and in suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws of the United States.

The act of September 24,1789 , sect. 9 , gives to the district court exclusive original cognizance of all seizures made on land, and other waters than as aforesaid (that is, those which are navigable by vessels of ten or more tons burthen, within their respective districts, or on the high seas), and of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws of the United States.

In all cases of seizure on land the district court sits as a court of common law, and its jurisdiction is entirely distinct from that exercised in case of seizure on waters navigable by vessels of ten tons burthen and upwards. 8 Wheat. 395.

Seizures of this kind are triable by jury : they are not cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. 4 Cranch, 443.
86. Aliens' suits for torts in violation of the laws of nations or a treaty of the United States are within its jurisdiction. The act of September 24, 1789, sect. 9, directs that the district court shall have cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, or the circuit courts, as the case may be, of all causes where an alien sues for a tort only, in violation of the law of nations, or of a treaty of the United States.
87. Suits instituted by the United States are within its jurisdiction. By the ninth section of the act of September 24, 1789, the district court shall also have cognizance, concurrent as last mentioned, of all suits at common law where the United States sue, and the matter in dispute amonnts, exclusive of costs, to the sum or value of one hundred dollars. And by the act of March 3, 1815, sect. 4, it has cognizance, concurrent with the courts and magistrates of the several states, and the circuit courts of the United States, of all suits at common law where the United States, or any officer thereof, under the authority of any act of congress, sue, although the debt, claim, or other matter in dispute shall not amount to one hundred dollars.

These last words do not confine the jurisdiction given by this act to one hundred dollars, but prevent it from stopping at that sum; and, consequently, suits for sums over one hundred dollars are cognizable in the district, circuit, and state courts, and before magistrates, in the cases here mentioned. By virtue of this act, these tribunals have jurisdiction over suits brought by the post-master-general for debts and balances due the general post-office. 12 Wheat. 147 ; 1 Pet. $318 ; 2$ id. 447.
88. Actions by or against consuls or viceconsuls are within its jurisdiction, exclusively of the courts of the several states, exeept for offences where other punishment than whipping not exceeding thirty stripes, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months, is inflicted.

For offences above this description formerly the circuit court only had jurisdiction in cases of consuls. 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 545; 2Dall. 299. But by the act of August 23, 1842, the district courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit courts of all crimes and offences against the United States the punishment of which is not capital. Aud by the act of February 28,1839 , sect. 5 , the punishment of whipping is abolished. See also the act of 28th Sept. 1850, making appropriations for the naval service.
89. Their Bankrupt jurisdiction is given under Bankrupt, which see.
90. Equitable jurisdiction is given in certain cases. By the first section of the act of February 13,1807 , the judges of the district courts of the United States shall have as full power to grant writs of injunction, to operate within their respective districts, as is now exercised by any of the judges of the supreme court of the United States, under the same rules, regulations, and restrictions as are prescribed by the several acts of congress establishing the judiciary of the United States, any law to the contrary notwithstanding. Provided, that the same shall not, unless so ordered by the circuit court, continue longer than to the circuit then next ensuing; nor shall an injunction be issued by a district judge in any case where the party has had a reasonable time to apply to the circuit court for the writ.

An injunction may be issued by the district judge under the act of March 3, 1820 , sects. 4,5 , where proceedings have taken place by warrant and distress against a debtor to the United States or his sureties, subject by sect. 6 to appeal to the circuit court from the decision of such district judge in refusing or dissolving the injunction, if such appeal be allowed by a justice of the supreme court; on which, with an exception as to the necessity of an answer on the part of the United States, the proceedings are to be as in other cases.
91. The act of September 24, 1789, sect. 14, vests in the judges of the district courts power to grant writs of habeas eorpus, for the purpose of an inquiry into the cause of commitment.

Other aets give them power to issue writs, make rules, take depositions, etc. The aets of eongress already treated of relating to the privilege of not being sued out of the distriet of which the defendant is an inhabitant, or in whieh he is found, restricting suits by assignees, and various others, apply to the district court as well as to the circuit court.
92. By the ninth seetion of the aet of September 24, 1789, the trial of issues in fact in the district courts, in all causes except civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, shall be by jury. Serg. Const. Law. 226, 227.
93. The criminal jurisdiction of the district court. By the act of August 23, 1842, sect. 3 , it is enacted that the district eourts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisulietion with the eircuit eourts of all crimes and offences against the United States the punishment of which is not capital.
94. There is a peculiar class of distriet courts possessing the powers of circuit courts to a great extent. See $\mathbf{3} \mathbf{2 - 3 4}$.

The Terriiorial Courts.

95. There are at present (1864) nine territorial governments, viz.: New Mexico, Utah, Washington, Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Arizona, Idaho, and Montana, in each of whieh is a territorial eourt, consisting of a chief justiee and two associate justices, who hold their offices for a term of four years. This circumstance is sufficient to show that these are not constitutional courts, that is, eourts upon which judicial power is conferred by the eonstitution of the United States; but their powers and duties are conferred upon them by the acts of eongress whieh ereated them. It is not necessary to specify these. The chief judre and associate justices hold one term annually of the supreme court, and each territory is divided into three districts, in which each one of the judges holds a distriet court. By a law passed in 1858,4 Stat. at Large, 366 , the judges of the suprome court of each territory are anthorized to hold conrts within their respective districts in the counties wherein, by the laws of said territories, courts have been or may be established, for the purpose of hearing and determining all matters and causes except those in which the United States is a party. The expenses thereof are to be paid by the territory or by the counties in which the courts are held. In all the territorial courts there is an appeal to the supreme court of the United States where the value in dispute exceeds one thousand dollars. In Washington this limit is extended to two thousand dollars, and an appeal or writ of error is allowed in all eases where the constitution of the United States, or acts of congress, or a treaty of the United States is brought in question. In the territory of Nebraska an appeal or writ of error lies to the supreme eourt of the United States, without regard to the value in dispute, in all casee involving title to slaves, and also in decisions upon any writ of haleas corpus involving the question of personal freedom. Provided, that nothing, shall affect the aets of 1793 and 1850 respecting fugitives, etc. Examples of acts constituting these eourts may be found under the titles of the respective territories.

Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

96. The supreme court of the distriet of Columbia was established by act of eongress: approved March 3, 1863. The same act abolished the former eireuit eourt, district court, and eriminal court of the district. The supreme court consists of four justiees (one of whom is designated the chief justice), appointed by the president of the United States, and who hold their offices during good behavior. It has general jurisdietion in law and equity, and the judges possess and exercise the same powers and jurisdiction formerly possessed and exercised by the judges of the circuit court of the district. Any one of the judges may hold a district eourt, with the same powers, ete. as otber distriet courts of the United States; and any one of the judges may bold a criminal court for the trial of crimes and offences committed within the district, with the same powers, ete. as the old criminal eourt. Any final judgment, order, or decree of the court may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the supreme court of the United States, on writ of error or appeal. The supreme court of the district has appellate jurisdiction of al judgments of justices of the peace, and has power to remove said justices of the peace for cause. Three general terms of the court are held annually at Washington.

Court of Claims.

3\%. This court as originally ereated by statute of February 24, 1855, 10 Stat. at Large, 12, consisted of three judges, appointed by the president with the advice and consent of the senate, to hold their offiees during good belavior, and hare jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims founded upon any law of engress, or regulation of an executive depariment, "or upon any contract, express or implied, with the gorernment of the United States, and of all claims which might be referred to it by either house of eongress. The United States were represented before it by a solicitor and assistant solieitor, appointed for the gevernment by the same authority that appointed the judges, the solicitor being authorized to appoint a deputy,-the compensation of each of whom, as well as that of the judges, being fixed ly the statute. The court had no power to render a judgment which it could execute, but reported to congress the cases upon which it had finally acted, the material facts it found establislied by the evidence, with its opinion in the case, and reasona therefor, or what was equivalent to an opinion in the nature of a judgment as to the rights of the parties upou the facts proved or admitted in the case. Bright. Dig. 198-200.

But by an amendatory act of March 3, 1863, it is enacted that two additional judges shall be appointed by the president with the consent of the senate ; and from the whole number of judges (five) a chief justice shall be appointed. In addition to the jurisdiction previously conferred upon the court, it is now authorized to take jurisdiction of all set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the government against any person making claim against the government in said court. If the judgment of the court shall be in favor of the government, it shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the proper district or circuit court of the United States, and shall ipso facto become and be a judgment of such district or circuit court, and shall be enforced in like manner as other judgments are. If the judgment shall be in favor of the claimant, the sum thereby found due to the claimant shall be paid out of any general appropriation made by law for the payment of private claims, ou presentation to the secretary of the treasury of a duly certified copy of said judgment. In cases where the amount in controversy exceeds three thousand dollars, an appeal may be taken to the supreme court of the United States at any time within ninety days after judgment. Where the judgment or decree may affect a constitutional question, or furnish a precedent affecting a class of cases, the United States may take an appeal without regard to the amount in controversy. Claims must be filed within six years after the claim accrues, except in cases of disability. The conrt is required to hold one session annually, commencing on the first Monday in October. Members of congress are prohibited from practising in the court. At the instance of the solicitor of the United States, any claimant may be required to testify on oath. The solicitor, assistant solicitor, and deputy solicitor are appointed by the president of the United States with the consent of the senate. The jurisdiction of the court is not to extend to any claim growing out ef any treaty with foreign nations or Indian tribes, unless such claim was pending in said court on the first day of December, 1862 . And by sect. 1 of the act of July 4, I864, it is enacted that the jurisdiction of the court shall not extend to any claim against the United States for the destruction, appropriation, or damage of any property by the army or navy engaged in the suppression of the rebellion, from the commencement to the close thereof.

Proceedings in the court of claims originate by petition illed; and testimony used in the hearing and determination of claims is taken by commissioners who are appointed by the oourt for the purpose.

cellor's Courts of the Two Universities.

COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES. In English Law. A court of record in England, which had the supervision and regulation of inquiries concerning the profits which arose to the crown from the fruits of tenure, and to grant to heirs the delivery of their lands from the possession of their guardians.
The Court of the King's Wards was instituted by stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46, to take the place of the ancient inquisitio yost mortem, and the jurisdiction of the restoration of lands to heirs on their hecoming of age (livery) was added by statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 22 , when it became the Court of Wards and liverics. It was abolished by statute 12 Car. II. e. 24.

The jurisdiction extended to the superintendence of lunatics and idiots in the king's custody, granting licenses to the king's widows to marry, and imposing fines for marrying without license. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 259; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 468; 1 Stephen, Comm. 183, 192; 4 id. 40; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 68, 77; 3 id. 258.

Courtesy. See Curtesq.

COUSIN. The son or daughter of the brother or sister of one's father or mother.

The issue, respectively, of two brothers or two sisters, or of a brother and a sister.
Those who descend from the brother or sister of the father of the person spoken of are called paternal cousins; maternal consins are those who are descended from the brothers or sisters of the mother. See 2 Brown, Ch. 125; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 301; 3 Russ. Cb. 140 ; 9 Sim. Ch. 386, 457.

COUSTUM (Fr.). Custom; daty; toll. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 3I4.

COUSTUMIER (Fr.). A collection of customs and usages in the old Norman law. See the Grand Coutumier de Normandie.

COUTHUTLAUGH. He that willingly receives an outlaw and cherishes or conceals him. In ancient times he was subject to the same punishment as the outlaw. Blount.

COVENANT (Lat. convenire, to come together; conventio, a coming together. It is equivalent to the factum conventum of the civil law).

In Coutracts. An agreement between two or more persons, entered into by deed, whereby one of the parties pronises the performance or non-pertormance of certain acts, or that a given state of things does or shall, or does not or shall not, exist. It differs from an express assumpsit in that it must be by deed.
2. Affirmative covenants are those in which the covenantor declares that something has been already done, or shall be done in the future. Such covenants do not operate to deprive covenantees of rights enjoyed independently of the covenants. Dy. $19 \mathrm{~b} ; 1$ Leon. 251.

Covenants against incumbrances. See Covenant aqainst Incumbrances.

Alternative covenants are disjunctive covenants.

Auxiliary covenants are those which do not relate directly to the principal matter of contract between the parties, but to something connected with it. Those the scope of whose operation is in aid or support of the principal covenant. If the principal covenant is void, the auxiliary is disoharged. Anstr. 256; Prec. Chanc. 475.
3. Collateral covenants are those which are entered into in connection with the grant of something, but which do not relate immediately to the thing granted: as, to pay a sum of money in gross, that the lessor shall distrain for rent on some other land than that which is demised, to build a house on the land of some third person, or the like. Platt, Cov. 63; Sbeppard, Touchst. 161; 4 Burr. 2439; 3 Term, 393; 2 J. B. Moore, 164; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 7; 2 Wils. 27 ; 1 Ves. Ch. 56.

Concurrent covenants are those which are to be performed at the same time. When one party is ready and offers to perform his part, and the other refuses or neglects to perform his, he who is ready and offers has fulfilled his engagement, and may maintain an action for the default of the other, though it is not certain that either is obliged to do the first act. Platt, Cov. 71 ; 2 Selwyn, Nisi P. 443; Dougl. 698; 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 81 ; 4 Wash. C. C. 714 ; 16 Mo. 450.
4. Declaratory covenants are those which serve to limit or direct uses. 1 Sid. 27 ; 1 Hob. 224.

Dependent covenants are those in which the obligation to perform one is made to depend upon the performance of the other. Covenants may be so connected that the right to insist upon the performance of one of them depends upon a prior performance on the part of the party seeking enforcement. Platt, Cov. 71; 2 Sclwyñ, Nisi P. 443 ; Stephen, Nisi P. 1071; 1 C. B. N. s. 646; 6 Cow. N. Y. 296; 2 Johns. N. Y. 209; 2 Watts & S. Peon. 227 ; 8 Serg. & R. To ascertain whether covenants are dependent or not, the intention of the parties is to bo sought for and regarded, rather than the order or time in which the acts are to be done, or the structure of the instrument, or the arrangement of the covenant. 1 Wms . 5. Disjunctive covenants. Those which are for the performance of one or nore of several things at the election of the covenantor or covenantee, as the case may be. Platt, Cov. 21 ; 1 Du. N. Y. 209.

Executed covenants are those which relate to acts already performed. Sheppard, Tuuchst. 161.

Executory covenants are those whose performance is to be future. Sheppsird, Touchat: 161.

Express covenants are those which are created by the express words of the parties to the deed declaratory of their intention. Platt, Cov. 25. The formal word covenant is not indispensably requisite for the creation of an express covenant. 2 Mod. 268; 3 Kebl. 848; 1 Leon. 324; l Bingh. 433 ; 8 J. B. Moore, 546; 12 East, 182, n.; 16 id. 352 ; 1 Bibb, Ky. 379 ; 2 id. 614 ; 3 Johns. N. Y. 44; 5 Cow. N. Y. 170; 4 Conn. 508; 1 IIarr Del. 233. The words "I oblige," "agree," l Ves. Any words showing the intent of the parties to do or not to do a certain thing, raise an express covenant. 13 N . H. 513. But words importing merely an order or direction that other persons should pay a sum of meney, are not a covenant. 6 J. B. Moore, 202, n. (a).
6. Covenants for further assurance. See Covenant for Further Asscrance.

Covenants for quiet enjoyment. See Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment.

Covenants for title are those covenants in a deed conveying land which are inserted for: the purpose of securing to the grantee and covenantee the benefit of the title which the grantor and covedantor professes to convey.

Those in common use are fire in numlier in England,-of seisin, of rights to convey, fur quiet cnjoyment, against incumbrances, and for further assurance,--and are held to run with the land. Platt, Cov. 305; 1 Maule & S. 355. In the United States there is, in addition, a covenant of uarranty, which is more commonly used than any of the others. The covenants of seisin, right to convey, and against incumbrances, are generally held to be in presenti, and not assignable. Rawle, Cov. 110, 337, 342, 346; 4 Kent, Comm. 471; 6 Cush. Mass. 128. See 36 Me .170 ; and see the various titles beyond for a fullei statement of the law relative to the different covenants for title.
7. Implicd covenants are those whicb arise by intendment and construction of law from the use of certain words in some kinds of contracts. Bacın, Abr. Covenant, B; Rawle, Cor. 364; 1 C. B. 402. Thus, in a conveyance of lands in fee, the words "grant," bargain, and sell, imply certain corconants, see 4 Kent, Comin. 473; beyond, 12; and the word "give" implies a covenant of warranty during the life of the feoffor, 10 Cush . Mass. 134; 4 Gray, Mass. 468; 2 Caines, N. Y. 193; 9 N. IH. 222; 7 Ohio, pt. 2, 63 ; and in a lease the use of the words "grant and demise," Coke, Litt. 384; 4 Wend. N. Y. 502; 8 Cuw. N. Y. 327 ; "demisement," 1 Show. 79 ; 1 Salk. 137, raises an implied covenant on the part of the lessor, as do "yielding and paying," 9 Vt. 151, on the part of the lessee. In regard to the covenants arising to each grantee by implication on sale of an estate with conditions, in parcels to several grantees, see 23 Barb. N. Y. 153.
8. Covenants in deed. Express covenants.

Covenants in grass. Such as do not run with the laud.

Cavenants in law. Implied covenants.
Illegal covenants are those which are expressly or impliedly forbidden by law. Covenants are absolutely void when entered into in violation of the express provisions of statutes, 5 IIarr. & J. D. Independent covenants are those the necessity of whose performance is determined entirely by the requirements of the covenant itself, without regard to other covenants between the parties relative to the same subjectmatter or transactions or series of transactions.

Cuvenants are generally construed to be independent, Platt, Cov. 71 ; 2 Johns. N. Y. 145; 10 id. 204 ; 21 Pick. Mass. 438; 1 Ld. Raym. 660; 3 Bingh. n. s. 355 ; unless the undertaking on one side is in terms a condition to the stipulation of the other, and then only consistently with the intention of the parties, 3 Maule & S. 308 ; 10 East, 295, 530 ; or unleas dependency results from the nature of the acts to be done, and the order in which they must necessarily precede and follow each other in the progress of performsnce, Willes, 496 ; or unless the non-performance on one side goes to the entire sulstance of the contract, and to the whole consideration. 1 Sell. N. Y. 2:7. If once independent, they remain so. 19 Barb. N. Y. 416.

Inherent covenants are those which relate directly to the land itself, or matter granted. Sheppard, Touchst. 161. Distinguished from collateral covenants.

If real, they run with the land. Platt, Cov. C6.
10. Intransitive covenants are those the duty of performing which is limited to the covenantee himself, and does not pass over to his reprceentative.

Joint covenants are those by which several partics agree to do or perform a thing togother, or in which several persons have a joint interest as covenantees. 26 Barb. N. Y. 63 ; 16 IIow. 580 ; 1 Gray, Mass. 376 ; 10
B. Monr. Ky. 291. It may be in the negative 35 Me. 260 .

Negative covenants are those in which the party obliges himself rat to do or perform some act. Courts are unwilling to cunstrue a negative covenant a condition precedent, inasmuch as it cannot be said to be performed till a breach becomes impossible. a Wms. Saund. 156; 1 Mod. 64; 2 Kebl. 674; 1 Sid. 87.

Obligatory covenants are those which are binding on the party himself. 1 Sid. 27; 1 Kebl. 337. They are distinguished from declaratory covenants.

Covenants of right to convey. See Covenant of Right to Convey.

Covenants of seisin. See Covenant of Seisin.

Covenants of warranty. See Covenant of Warranty.

Personal covenants. See Personal Cove. nant.
11. Principal covenants. Those which relate directly to the principal matter of the contract entered into between the parties. They are distinguished from auxiliary.

Real covenants. Those by which a single covenantor undertakes the performance of the covenant. It frequently happens that each one of several covenantors binds himself to perform singly the whole undertaking. The words commonly used for this purpose are "severally," "each of us." Still more commonly the undertaking is both joint and several.

It is the nature of the interest, and not the form of the covenant, which determines its character in this respect. 16 How. 580 ; 1 Gray, Mass. 376.

Covenants to stand seised, etc. See Covenant to Stand Seised to Usee.

Transitive covenants are those personal covenants the duty of performing which passes over to the representatives of the covenantor.
12. Cuvenants are subject to the same rules as other contracts in regard to the qualifications of parties, the assent required, and the nature of the purpose for which the contract is entered into. Sce Parties; Contracts.

No peculiar words are needed to raise a covenant, either express or implied, 12 Ired. No. C. 145 ; but certain words have heen decided to have this effect. Sce, leforc, 5, 7. And by statute in Alabama, Delaware, Illinois, Imliana, Mississippi, Missuuri, and Pennsylvania, the words grant, baryain, and sell, in conveyances in fee, unless specially restricted, amount to covenants that the grantor was scised in fee, freed from incumbrances done or suffered by him, and for quict enioyment against his acts, 14 Kent, Comm. 473 ; 2 Binn. Penn. 95 ; 23 Mo. 151, 174 ; 17 Ala. N. s. 198; 1 Smedes & M. Ch. Miss. 611; 19 Ill. 235 ; hut do not imply any warranty of title in Alabama and North Carolina. 4 Kent, Comm. 474; 1 Murph. No. C. 343, 348; 2 Ala. n. s. 535.
13. Describing lands in a deed as bounded on a street of a certain description raises a covenant that the street shall be of that description, 7 Gray, Mass. 563, and that the purchaser shall have the use thereof, 5 Md . 314; 23 N. II. 261 ; which binds subsequent purchasers from the grantor. 7 Gray, Mass. 83.

In New York, no covenants can be implied in any conveyance of real estate, 4 Kent, Comm. 469 ; but this provision does not extend to leases for years. 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 566. In some cases where the covenants relate to lands, the rights and liabilities of the covenantor, or covenantee, or both, pass to the assignee of the thing to which the covenant relates. In such cases the covenant is said to run with the land. If rights pass, the benefit is said to run; if liahilities, the burden. Only real covenants run with the land, and these only when the covenant has eatered into the consideration for which the land, or some interest therein to which the covenant is annexed, passed between the covenantor and the covenantee, 2 Sugden, Vend. 468, 484; 3 Wils. 29; 2 Mylue \& K. 535 ; 19 Pick. Mass. 449, 464 ; 24 Barb. N. Y. 366 ; 45 Me. 474 ; and die with the estate to which they are annexed, 3 Jones, No. C. $12 ;{ }^{\circ} 13$ Ired. No. C. 193; but an estoppel to deny passage of title is said to be sufficient, 3 Metc. Mass. 124 ; and the passage of mere possession, or defeasible estate without possession, enables the covenant to run. 23 M . 151, 174.

It is said by some authorities that the benefit of a covenant to do acts upon land of the covenantee, made with the "covenantee and his assigns," will run with the land though no estate passed between the covenantor and covenantee, Rawle, Cov. 335; Year B. 42 Edw. III. 13; 3 Den. N. Y. 301 ; 8 Gratt. Va. 403; but the weight of authority is otherwise. 2 Sugden, Vend. 468; Platt, Cov. 461. Covenants concerning title geaerally run with the land, 3 N. J. 260, except those that are broken before the land passed. 4 Kent, Comm. 473; 30 Vt. 692; Covenants of Seisin, etc.

Covenants in leases, by virtue of the statute 32 Hen. V1II. c. 34, which has been re-enacted in most of the states, are assignable as respects assignees of the reversion and of the leasc. The lessee continues liahle on express covenants after an assignment by him, but not on implied ones, 4 Term, 98 ; but be is liable to the assignee of the lessor on implied covenants, at common law. Platt, Cov. 532 ; 2 Sugden, Vend. 466; Burton, Real Prop. $\frac{8}{}$ 855.

In case of the assignment of lands in parcels, the assignees may recover pro rata, and the original covenantee may recover according to his share of the original estate remaining. 2 Sugden, Vend. 508; Rawle, Cov. 359 ; 36 Me. 170; 27 Penn. St. 288; 3 Metc. Mass. 87 ; 8 Gratt. Va. 407 ; 9 B. Monr. Ky. 58. But covenants are not, in general, apportionable. 27 Penn. St. 288.

In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for breach of a contract under seal. It is one of the brevia formata of the register, is sometimes a concurrent remedy with debt, though never with assumpsit, and is the only proper remedy where the damages are ualiquidated in nature and the contract is under seal. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 340; Chitty, Plead. 112, 113; Stephen, Nisi P. 1058.
14. The action lies, generally, where the covenantor does some act contrary to his agreement, fails to do or perform that which be has undertaken, 4 Dane, Abr. 115, or does that which disables him from performance. Croke Eliz. 449 ; 15 Q. B. 88; 11 Mass. 302; 23 Pick. Mass. 455.

To take advantage of an oral agreement modifying the original covenant in an essential point, the covenant must be abandoned and assumpsit brought. 27 Penn. St. 429; 24 Vt. 347.

The venue is local when the action is founded on privity of estate, 2 Stephen, Nisi P. 1148; 1 Wms. Saund. 241 b, n.; and transitory when it is founded upon privity of contract. As betwcen original parties to the covenant, the action is transitory; and, by the statute 32 Hen . V1II. c. 34 , an action of covenant by an assignee of the reversion against a lessor, or by a lessee against the assignee of the reversion, is also transitory. 1 Chitty, Plead. 274, 275.
15. The declaration must, at common law, aver a contract under seal, 2 Ld. Raym. 1536, and either make protest thereof or excuse the omission, 3 Term, 151 , at least of such part as is broken, 4 Dall. C. C. $436 ; 4$ Bich. So. C. 196; and a breach or breaches, 15 Ala. 201; 5 Ark. 263; 4 Dan. Ky. 381; 6 Miss. 229, which may be by negativing the words of the covenant in actions upon covenants of seisin and right to convey, Rawle, Cov. 53, or according to the legal effect; but must set forth the incnmbrance in case of a covenant against incumbrances, Rawle, Cov. 125 ; and must allege an eviction in case of covenants of warranty. Rawle, Cov. 308. No consideration need be averred or shown, as it is implied from the seal; but performance of an act which constitutes a condition precedent to the defendant's covenant, if there be any such, must be averred. 1 Chitty, Plead. 116; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 8235 ; 26 Ala. n. s. 748. The damages laid must be large enough to cover the real amount sought to be recovered. 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 364, 567 ; 9 id. 45.

There is no plea of general issue in this action. Under non est factum, the defendant may show any facts contradicting the making of the deed, 1 Seld. N. Y. 422; 1 Mich. 438: as, personal incapacity, 2 Campb. 272 ; 3 id. 126; that the deed was fraudulent, Lofft, 457; was not delivered, 4 Esp. 255 ; or was not executed by all the parties. 6 Maule & S. 341.

Non infregit conventionem and nil debet have both been held insufficient. Comyns, Dig. Pleader, 2 V; 4. As to the effect of covenant performed, see Covenant PerFORMED.

In respect to the damages to be recovered, bee Damages.

The judgment is that the plaintiff recover a named sum for the damages which be has sustained by reason of the breach or breaches of covenant, together with costs.

COVENANT TO CONVEY. A covenant by which the covenantor undertakes to convey to the covenantee the estate described in the covenant, under certain circumstances.

This form of conditional alienation of lands is in frequent use in several of the United States. 14 Penn. St. 308; 19 Barb. N. Y. 639; 4 Md. 498; 11 III. 194; 19 Ohio, 347. Substantially the same effect is secured as by a conveyance and a mortgage back for the purchase-money, with this important difference, however, that the title of course remains in the covenantor till he actually executes the conveyance.

The remedy for breach may be by action on the covenant, 29 Penn. St. 264 ; but the better remedy is said to be in equity for specific performance. 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 230.

It is satistied only by a perfect conveyance of the kind bargained for, 19 Barb. N. Y. 639; otherwise where an imperfect conveyance has been accepted. 4 Md .498.

COVENANT FOR FURTHER AS-

 SURANCE. One by which the covenantor indertakes to do such reasonable acts in addition to those already performed as may be necessary for the completion of the transfer made, or intended to be made, at the requirement of the covenantee. It relates both to the title of the vendor and to the instrument of conveyance to the vendee, and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts for supplying any defect in the former, as to remove all objections to the sufficiency and security of the latter. Platt, Cov. 341.The covenant is of frequent occurrence in English conveyances; butits use in the United States seems to be limited to some of the middle states. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 648; $10 \mathrm{Me} .91 ; 4$ Mass. 627 ; 10 Cush. Mass. 134.

The covenantor, in execution of his covenant, is not required to do unnecessary acts. Yelv. 44; 9 Price, 43. He must in equity grant a subsequently acquired title, 2 Chanc. Cas. 212; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 26; 2 Vern. Ch. 111; 2 P. Will. 630 ; must levy a fine, Yelv. 44; 16 Ves. Ch. $366 ; 5$ Taunt. 427 ; 4 Maule & S. 188; must remove a judgment or other incumbrance, 5 Taunt. 427; but a mortgagor with such covenant need not release his equity. 1 Ld. Raym. 36. It may be enforced by a bill in equity for specific performance, or an action at law to recover damages for the breach. 2 Coke, $3 a ; 6$ Jenk. Cas. 24; Platt, Coy. 353; Rawle, Cov. 185; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 666.

COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES. One which has for its object security against those rights to, or interests in, the land granted which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate, though consistently with the passing of the fee by the deed of conveyance. For what constitutes an incumbrance, see Incumbrance.

The mere existence of an incumbrance constitutes a breach of this covenant, 2 Washhurn, Real Prop. 658; 20 Ala. 137, 156, without regard to the knowledge of the grantee. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 8242 ; 27 Vt. 739 ; 8 Ind. 171 ; 10 id. 424.

Such covenants, being in presenti, do not run with the land, in the United States, 2 Wasbburn, Real Prop. 659; 20 N. II. 369; 5 W isc. 17; though it is held otherwise in 10 Ohio, 317 ; 133 Johns. N. Y. 105.

Yet the incumbrance may be of such a character that its enforcement may constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty: as in case of a mortgage. 4 Mass. 349; $17 i d$. 586 ; 8 Pick. Mass. 547 ; 22 id. 494.
The measure of damages is the amount of injury actually sustained. 7 Johns. N. Y. 358; 16 id. $254 ; 5$ Me. $94 ; 34$ id. 422; 12 Mass, 304 ; 3 Cush. Mass. 201 ; 20 N. H. 369 ; 25 id. 229.

The covenantee may extinguish the incumbrance and recover therefor, at his election, in the absence of agreement. 4 Ind. 533 ; 19 Mo. 480 ; 25 N. H. 229. See Covenant; Real Covenant.

COVENANT NOT TO SUE. One entered into by a party who has a cause of action at the time of making it, by which he agrees not to sue the party liable to such action.

A perpetual covenant not to sue is one by which the covenantor agrees not to sue the covenantee at any time. Such a covenant operates as a release to the covenantee, and may be pleaded as such. Croke Eliz. 623; 1 Term, 446 ; 8 id. 486 ; 2 Salk. 375 ; 3 id. $298 ; 12$ Mod. $415 ; 7$ Mass. 153 ; 16 id. 24 ; 17 id. 623 ; 3 Ind. 473 . And see 11 Serg. &R. Penn. 149.

A covenant of this kind with one of several jointly and severaliy bound will not protect the others so bound. 12 Mod. 551; 8 Term, 168; 6 Munf. Va. 6; 1 Conn. 139; 4 Me. 421 ; 2 Dan. Ky. 107 ; 17 Mass. 623.

A covenant by one of several partners not to sue cannot be set up as a release in an action by all. 3 Perr. & D. 149.

A limited covenant not to sue, by which the covenantor agrees not to sue for a limited time, does not operate a release; and a breach must be taken advantage of by action. Carth. 63; 1 Show. 46; 2 Salk. 573 ; 6 Wend. N. Y. 471 ; 5 Cal. 501. See 29 Ala. n.s. 322, as to requisite consideration.

COVENANT FOR QUIET ENJOY-

MENT. An assurance against the consequences of a defective title, and of any disturbances thereupon. Platt, Cov. 312. By it, when general in its terms, the covenantor stipulates at all events, 11 East. 642 ; 1 Mod. 101, to indemnify the covenantee against all acts committed by virtue of a paramount title, Platt, Cov. 313 ; 1 Lev. 83 ; 8 id. 305 ; Hob. 34; 4 Coke, 80 b; Cro. Car. 5 ; 3 Term, 584; 6 id. 66; 3 Duor, N. Y. 464; 2 Jones,

No. C. 203 ; Busb. No. C. 384 ; 3 N. J. 260 ; not including the acts of a mob, 19 Miss. 87 ; 2 Strobh. Su. C. 366, nor a mere trespass by the lessor. 10 N. Y. 151.

But this rule may be varied by the terms of the covenant: as where it is against acts of a particular person, Croke Eliz. 212; 5 Maule & S. 374; 1 Barnew. & C. 29; 2 Ventr. 61 , or those "claiming or pretending to claim," 10 Mod. 383 ; 1 Ventr. 175, or molestation by any person. See 21 Miss. 87.

It has practically superseded the ancient doctrine of warranty as a guaranty of title, in English conveyances. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 661.

It occurs most frequently in leases, 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 325, is there held to be raised by the words grant, demise, lease, yielding and paying, give, etc., 1 Perr. & D. $360 ; 9$ N. 14. 222 ; 15 N. Y. 327 ; 6 Bingh. 656; 4 Kent, Comm. 474, n., and exists impliedly in a parol lease, 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 374; 3 N. J. 260 ; see 1 Du. N. Y. 176, and is frequently replaced in conveyances in the United States by the covenant of warranty. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 661.

COVENANT OF RIGHT TO CONVEY. An assurance by the covenantor that the grantor has sufficient capacity and title to convey the estate which he by his deed undertakes to convey.

In modern English conveyancing, this covenant has taken the place of the covenant of seisin. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 648, 651. It is said to be the same as a covenant of seisin, 10 Me. 91; 4 Mass. 627; 10 Cush. Mass. 134, but is not necessarily so as it includes the capacity of the grantor. T. Jones, 195; 2 Bulstr. 12; Croke Jac. 358.

The breach takes place on execution of the deed, if at all, Freem. Ch. 41, and the covenantee need not wait for a disturbance to bring suit, 5 Taunt. 426; but a second recovery of damages cannot be had for the same breach. Platt. Cov. 310; 1 Maule & S. 365 ; 4 id. 53.

COVENANT OF SEISIN. An assurance to the grantee that the grantor has the very estate, both in quantity and quality, which he professes to convey. Platt, Cov. 306. It has given place in English conveyancing to the covenant of right to convey, but is in use in scveral states of the United States. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 648.

In England, 1 Maule & S. 355; 4 id. 53; Walker, Am. Law, 382, and in several states of the United States by decisions, 5 Blackf. Ind. 232; 3 Ohio, $211 ; 17$ id. 52 , or by statute, 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 650, this covenant runs with the land, and may be sued on for breach by an assignee; in others it is held that a mere covenant of lawful seisin does not run with the land, but is broken, if at all, at the moment of executing the deod. Rawle, Cov. 110; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 655, 657; 4 Mass. 408, 439, 627; 10 Cush. Mass. 134; 2 Barb. N. Y. 303; 2 Me. 269 ; 10 id. 95 ; 2 Dev. No. C. $30 ; 8$ Gratt. Va. 396 ; 5 Sneed, Tenn. 119; 7 Ind. 673.

A covenant for indefeasible seisin is everywhere held to run with the land, 2 Vt .328 ; 2 Dev. No. C. $30 ; 4$ Dall. 439 ; 5 Sneed, Tenn. 123; 14 Johns. N. Y. 248; 14 Pick. Mass. 128; 10 Mo. 467 ; and to apply to all titles adverse to the grantor's. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 656.

A covenant of seisin or lawful seisin, in England and several of the states, is satisfied only by an indefeasible seisin, Rawle, Cov. $20 ; 22$ Vt. $106 ; 15$ N. H. 176; 6 Conn. 374; while in other states possession under a claim of right is sufficient. 3 Vt. $403-407$; 2 Mass. 433; 10 Cush. Mass. 134; 26 Mo. 92; 3 Ohio, $220,525$.

A covenant of seisin, of whatever form, is broken at the time of the execution of the deed if the grantor has no possession either by himself or another; and no rights can pass to the assignee of the grantee. 2 Johns. N. Y. 1; 2 Vt. 327; 5 Conn, 497; 14 Pick. Mass. $170 ; 1$ Metc. Mass. 450; 17 Ohio, 60; 8 Gratt. Va. 397; 4 Cranch, 430 ; 36 Me. 170; 24 Ala. n.s. 189; 4 Kent, Comm. 471; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 656.

The existence of an outstanding life-estate, Rawle, Cov. 52; a material deficiency in the amount of land, 1 Bay, So. C. 256 ; see 24 Miss. 597 ; non-existence of the land described, 16 Piek. Mass. 68; 4 Cush. Mass. 210; the existence of fences or other fixtures on the premises belonging to other persons, who have a right to remove them, 1 N. Y. $564 ; 7$ Penn. St. 122; concurrent seisin of another as tenant in common, 12 Me .389 ; adverse possession of a part by a stranger, 7 Johns. N. Y. 376, constitute a breach of this covenant.

But a covenantee cannot recover against his grantor when the covenantee purchased knowing that be had a good title. Rawle, Cov. 111-114; 8 Pick. Mass. 547 ; 22 id. 490; 6 Cush. Mass. 127.

In the execution of a power, a covenant that the power is subsisting and not revoked is substituted. Platt, Cov. 309.

COVENANT TO STAND SEISED TO USES. A covenant by means of which under the statute of uses a conveyance of an estate may be effected. Burton, Real Prop.

Such a covenant cannot furnish the ground for an action of covenant broken, and in this respect resembles the ancient real covenants.

The consideration for such a covenant must be relationship either by blood or marriage. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 129, 130. See 2 Seld. N. Y. 342.

As a mode of conveyance it has fallen into disuse; though the doctrine is often resorted to by courts in order to give effect to the intention of the parties who have undertaken to convey lands by deeds which are insufficient for the purpose under the rules required in other forms of conveyance. 2 Washburr, Real Prop. 155, 156; 2 Sanders, Uses, 79, 83 ; 4 Mass. 136; 18 Pick. Mass. 397 ; 22 id. 376 ; 5 Me. 232 ; 11 Johns. N. Y. 351 ; 20 id. 85 ; 5 Yerg. Tenn. 249.

COVENANT OF WARRANTY. An assurance by the grantor of an estate that the grantee shall enjoy the same without interruption by virtue of paramount title. 2 Jones, No. C. 203; 3 Duer, N. Y. 464.

It is not in use in English conveyances, but is in general use in the United States, 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 659, and in several states is the only covenant in general use. Rawle, Cov. 203, n.; 4 Ga. 593 ; 8 Gratt. Va. 353; 6 Ala. 60.
2. The form in common use is as follows:"And 1 the said [grantor], for myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, do covenant with the said [grantee], his heirs and assigns, that I will, and my heirs, executors, and administrators shall, warrant and defend the same to the said [grantce], his heirs and assigns forever, against the lawful claims and demands of all persons [or, of all persons claiming by, through, or under me, but against none other]," [or other special covenant, as the case may be]. When general, it applies to lawful adverse claims of all perscns whatever; when special, it applies cnly to certain persons or claims to which its operation is Iimited or restricted. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 665.

This limitation may arise from the nature of the suljeect-matter of the grant. 8 Pick. Mass. 547; 19 id. 341; 5 Ohio, 190; 9 Cow. N. Y. 271 .
3. Such corenants give the covenantee and grantee the benefit of subsequently acquired titles, 11 Johns. N. Y. 91 ; 13 id. 316 ; 14 id. 193; 9 Cow. N. Y. 271; 6 Watts, Pcnn. 60; 9 Cranch, 43 ; 13 N. H. 389; 1 Ohio, 190; 3id. 107; 3 Pick. Mass. 52; 13id.116; 24 id.324; 3 Metc. Mass. 121 ; 13 Me. 281; 20 id. 260, to the extent of their terms, $12 \mathrm{Vt} .39 ; 3$ Matc. Mass. 121; 9 Cow. N. Y. 271 ; 34 Me. 483; but not if an intercst actually passes at the time of making the conveyance upon which the covenant may operate, 3 McLean, C. C. 56; 9 Cow. N. Y. 271; 12 Pick. Mass. 47; 5 Gratt. COVENANTS PERFORMED. In Pleading. A plea to an action of covenant, allowed in the state of Pennsylvania, whereby the defendant, upon informal notice to the plaintiff, may give any thing in evidence which he might have pleaded. 4 Dall. Penn. 439; 2 Yeates, Penn. 107 ; 15 Serg. \& R. Penn. 105. And this evidence, it scems, may be given in the circuit court withcut notice, unless called for. 2 Wash. C. C. 456.

COVENANTEE. One in whose favor a covenant is made.

COVENANTOR. One who becomes bound to perform a covenant.

COVENTRY ACT. The conimon name for the statute $22 & 23$ Car. I1. c. 1, - it having been euacted in consequence of an assault on Sir John Coventry in the street, and slitting his nose, in revenge, as was supposed, for some-obnoxious words uttered by him in parliament.

By this statute it is enacted that if any person shall, of malice aforethought, and by laying in wait, unlawfully cut or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, cut off the nose or lip, or cut off or disable any limb or member, of any other person, with intent to maim or disfigure him, such person, his counsellors, aiders, and abettors, shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. The act was repealed in England by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31.

COVERT BARON. A wife. So called from being under the protection of ber husband, baron, or lord.

COVERTURE. The condition or state of a married woman.

During coverture the civil existence of the wife is, for many purposes, merged in that of her husband. See Abatement; Parties.

COVIN. A secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another of his rights. Coke, Litt. 357 b ; Comyns, Dig. Covin, A; 1 Viner, Abr. 473. See Collusion; Fraud.

COW. In a penal statute which mentions both cows and heifers, it was held that by the term cow must be understood one that had had a calf. 2 East, PI. Cr. 616; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 105.

COWARDICE. Pusillanimity; fear; misbehavior through fear in relation to some duty to be performed before an enemy. O'Brien, Court M. 142.

By both the army and navy regulations of the United States this is an offence punishable in officers or privates with death, or such other punishment as may be inflicted by a court-martial. 1 Story, U.S. Laws, 761 ; Act of Congr. April 10, 1806, art. 52.

CRANAGE. A toll paid for drawing merchandise out of vessels to the wharf: so called because the instrument used for the purpose is called a crane. 8 Coke, 46.

CRASTINUM, CRASTINO (Lat. tomorrow): On the day after. 'The return day of writs is made the second day of the term, the first day being some saint's day, which gives its name to the term. In the law Latin, crastino (the morning, the day after) would then denote the return day. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 56, 57.

CRAVE. To ask; to demand.
This word is frequently used in pleading: as, to crave oyer of a bond on which the suit is brought; and in the settlement of accounts the accountant-general craves a credit or an allowance. 1 Chitty, Pract. 520. See Oyer.

CRAVEN. A word denoting defeat, and begring the mercy of the conqueror.

It was used (when used) by the vanquished party in trial by battle. Victory was obtained by the death of one of the combatants, or if either champion proved recereant,-that is, yielded, and prononceed the horrible word "cravicn." Such a person hecame infamous, and was thenceforth unfit to he believed on oath. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comin. 340.

CREANCE. In French Law. A claim; a debt. 1 Buavier, lnst. n. IU4U, note.

CREDENTIALS. In International Law. I'he instruments which auhhorize and establish a public minister in his character with the state or prince to whom they are addressed. If the state or prince receive the minister, he can be received only in the quality attributed to him in his credentials. They are as it were his letter of attorney, his mandate patent, mandatum munifestum. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 6, 876.

CREDIBILITY. Worthiness of belief. The credibrity of witnesses is a question for the jury to determine, as their competency is for the court. Best, Ev. 88 76-86; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8849,425 ; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 216.

CREDIBLE WITNESS. One who, being competeut to give evidence, is worthy of belief. 5 Mass. 219; 17 Pick. Mass. 154; 2 Curt. Eecl. 336.
In deciding upon the credibility of a witness, it is always pertinent to consider whether he is capable of knowing thoroughly the thing about which ho testifies; whether he was actually prescnt at the transaction; whether he paid sufficient attention to qualify himself to be a reporter of it; and whethor he honestly relates the affair fully as he knows it, without any purpose or desire to deceive, or to suppress or add to the truth.
In some of the states, as Delaware, Illincis, Maine, Maryland, Rhode Island, and Vermont, wills must be attested by credible witnesses.

CREDIT. The ability to borrow, on the opinion conceived by the lender that he will be repaid.

A debt due in consequence of a contract of hire or borrowing of money.

The time allowed by the creditor for the payment of goods sold by him to the deltor.

That which is due to a merchant, as distinguished from debit, that which is due by him.
That influence connected with certain social positions. 20 Toullier, n. 19.
See, generally, 5 Taunt. 338 ; 3 N. Y. 344.
CREDITOR. He who has a right to require the fultilment of an obligation or contract.

Preferred creditors are those who, in consequence of some provision of law, are entitled to some special prerogative, either in the manner of recovery or in the order in which their claims are to be paid. See Bouvier, Inst. Index.

CREDITORS' BILI. A bill in equity, filed by one or more creditors, by and in behalf of him or themselves and all other creditors who shall come in under the decree, for an account of the assets and a due settlement of the estate of a decedent.

The usual decree against the executor or administrator is quod computet; that is to say, it directs the master to take the accounts between the deceased and all his creditors, and to cause the creditors, upon due public notice, to come before him to prove their debts at a certain place and within a limited time; and it also directs the master to take an account of all the personal estate of the deceased in the hands of the executor or administrator, and the same to be applied in payment of the debts and other charges in a due course of administration. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 442.
CREBK. In Maritime Law. Such little inlets of the sea, whether within the precinct or extent of a port or without, which are narrow passages and have shore on either side of them. Callis, Sew. 56; 5 Taunt. 705.
Such inlets that though possibly for their extent and situation they might be ports, yet they are either members of or dependent upon other ports.
In England the name srose thus. The king could not conveniently have a customer and comptroller in every port or haven. But such customoffiecrs were fixed at some eminent port; and the smaller adjacent ports became by that means creeks, or appendants of that port where these customofficers were placed. 1 Chitty, Com. Law, 726 ; Hale, de Portibus Marig, pt. 2, e. 1, vol. 1, p. 46 ; Comyns, Dig. Navigation (C); Csllis, Sew. 34.

A small stream, less than a river. 12 Pick. Mass. 184; Cowp. 86.

A creek passing through a deep level marsh and navigable by small craft may, under legislative authority, be obstructed by a dam, or wholly filled up and converted into house-lots,--such obstructions not being in conflict with any act of congress regulating commerce. 2 Pet. 245 ; 1 Pick. Mass. 180; 21 2d. 344; 3 Metc. Mass. 202; 2 Steckt. N. J. 211. See 4 Barnew. & Ald. 589.

CREMENTUM COMITATUS. The increase of the county. The increase of the king's rents above the old vicontiel rents for which the sheriffs were to account. Wharton, Dict. 2 d Lond. ed.

CREPUSCULUM. Daylight; twilight. The light which immediately precedes or follows the rising or setting of the sun. 4 Blackstone, Cumm. 224. Housebreaking during the period in which there is sunlight enough to discern a person's face (crepusculum) is not burglary. Coke, 3d Inst. 63; 1 Russell, Crimes, 820; 3 Greenleaf, Ev. & 75.

CRETIO. Time for deliberation allowed an heir to decide whether he would or would not take an inheritance. Calvinus, Lex.; Taylor, Gloss.

CRIBR (Norman, to proclaim.) An officer whose duty it is to make the various proclamations in court, under the direction of the judges. The office of crier in chancery is now abolished, in England. Wharton.

CRIM. CON. An abbreviation for criminal conversation, of very frequent use, denoting adultery; unlawful sexual intercourse with a married woman. Buller, Nisi P. 27; Bacon, Abr. Marriage (E) 2; 4 Blackf. Ind. 157.

The term is used to denote the act of adultery in a suit brought by the husband of the married woman with whom the act was committed, to recover damages of the adulterer. That the plaintiff connived at or assented to his wife's infidelity, or that he prostituted her for gain, is a complete answer to the action. But the fact that the wife's character for chastity was bad before the plaintiff narried her, that he lived with her after he knew of the criminal intimacy with the defendant, that he had connived at her intimacy with other men, or that the plaintiff had been false to his wife, only goes in mitigation of damages. 4 N. H. 501.

The wife cannot maintain an action for criminal conversation with her husband; and for this, among other reasons, because her husband, who is particeps criminis, must be joined with her as plaintiff.
The action is of more frequent occurrence in England than in the United States.
CRIME. An act committed or omitted in violation of a public law forbidding or commanding it.
A wrong which the government notices as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a criminal proceeding in its own name. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, ${ }^{2} 43$. Sec 4 Den. N. Y. $260 ; 6$ Ark. 187, 461.
The word erime generally denotes an offence of a deep and atrocions dje. When the act is of an inferior degree of guilt, it is called a misdemeanor. 4 Blselsstone, Cumm. 4.
Crimes are defined and punished by statutes and by the common law. Most common-law uffenees are as well known and as precisely ascertained ss those which are defined by statutes: yet, from the difficulty of exactly defining and describing every act which ought to be punished, the rital and preserving principle has been adopted that all im moral acts which tend to the prejudice of the community are punishable criminally by courts of justice. 2 Rev. Swift, Dig. 284; 2 East, 5, 21 ; 7 Conn. 386; 5 Cow. N. Y. 258; 3 Pick. Mass. 26.
2. A crime malum in se is an act which shocks the moral sense of the community as being grossly immoral and injurious. With regard to some offences, such as murder, rape, arson, burglary, and larceny, there is but one sentiment in all civilized countries, which is that of unqualified condemnation. With regard to others, such as adultery, polygamy, and drunkenness, in some communities they are regarded as heinous mala ins se; while in others, owing to the perrersion of the moral sentiment by prejudice, education, and custom, they are not even mala prohibita.
3. An offence is regarded as strictly a malum prohibitum only when, without the prohibition of a statute, the commission or omission of it would in a moral point of view be regarded as indifferent. The criminality of the act or omission consists not in the simple perpetration of the act, or the neglect to perform it, but in its being a violation of a positive law.
It is not only just, but it has been four.d necessary, to have the severity of punishment proportioned to the enormity of crimes. Different opinions are entertained as to what should be the highest in degree. In the United States this is generally death by hanging.
4. Capital punishment hias been abolished in Rhode Island, Wiseonsin, and, except for treason, in Michigan. R. I. Rev. Stat. Supp. 866 ; Wisc. Aet of 1853, n. 100 ; Mieh. Rev. Stat. 1846.

There are three degrees of murder according to the statute laws of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and two degrees in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Iowa, Minine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessec, Texas, and Virginia; and the death-penalty is inflicted for the first degree in all of them except Michigan and Wisconsin. In some of the other states murder remains as at common law, and in some it is somewhat modified by statute.
5. Crimes are sometimes elassified aceording to the degree of punishment ineurred by the commission of them. Ohio Rev. Stat., Swan ed. 266.
They are more generally arranged according to the nature of the offence.

The following is, perhaps, as complete a classification as the subject admits :-

Offences against the sovereignty of the state. 1. Treason. 2. Misprision of treason.

Offences against the lives and persons of individuals. 1. Murder. 2. Manslaughter. 3. Attempts to murder or kill. 4. Mayhem. 5. Rape. 6. Robbery. 7. Kidnapping. 8. False imprisonment. 9. Abduction. 10. Assault and battery.

Offenccs against public property. 1. Burning or destroying public property. 2. Injury to the same.

Offences against private property. 1. Arson. 2. Burglary. 3. Larceny. 4. Obtaining goods on false pretences. 5. Embezzlement. 6. Malicious misehief, Offences against public justice. 1. Perjary. 2. Bribery. 3. Destroying public records. 4. Counterfeiting publie seals. 5. Jail-breach. 6. Eseape. 7. Resistauce to officers. 8. Obstructing legal proeess. 9. Barratry. 10. Maintenance. 11. Champerty. 12. Contempt of court. 13. Oppression. 14. Extortion. 15. Suppression of evidence. 16. Compounding felony. 17. Misprision of felony.

Offences against the public peace. 1. Challenging or accepting a challenge to a duel. 2. Unlawful assombly. 3. Rout. 4. Riot. 5. Breach of the peace. 6. Libel.

Offences against chastity. 1. Sodomy. Bestiality. 3. Adultery. 4. Incest. 5. Bigany. 6. Seduction. 7. Fornication. 8. Laseivious earriage. 9. Keeping or frequenting house of ill-fame.

Offences against public policy. 1. False currency. 2. Lotteries. 3. Gambling. 4. Immoral shows. 5. Violations of the right of suffrage. 6. Destruction of game, fish, etc. 7. Nuisance.

Offences against the currency, and public and private securities: 1. Forgery. 2. Counterfeiting. 3. Passing counterfeit money.

Offences against religion, decency, and morality. 1. Blaspbemy. 2. Profanity. 3. Sabbath-breaking. 4. Obscenity. 5. Cruelty to animals. 6. Drunkenness. 7. Promoting ittemperance. See 2 Sharswood, Blackstone, Comm. 42 , etc.; 2 Comp. Stat. 305, ete.

Offences against the pullic, individuals, or their property. 1. Conspiracy.

CRIME AGAINST NATURE. Sodomy.

CRIMEN FALSI. In Civil Law. A fraudulent alteration, or forgery, to conceal or alter the trath, to the prejudice of another. This crime may be committed in three ways, namely: by forgery; by false declarations or false oath,-perjury; ly acts, as by'dealing with false weights and measures, by altering the current coin, by making false keys, and the like. See Dig. 48.10.22; 34. 8.2; Code, 9. 22; 2. 5. 9.11. 16. 17. 23. 24; Merlin, Repert.; 1 Bro. Civ. Law, 420 ; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 26; 2 Starkie, Ev. 715.
At Common Law. Any crime which may injuriously affect the administration of justice, by the introduction of falsehood and fraud. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8373.

The meaning of this term at common law is not well defined. It has been held to inelade forgery, 5 Mod. 74; perjury, subornation of perjury, Coke, Litt. 66 ; Comyns, Dig. Testmoigne ( A 5 ); suppression of testiniony by bribery or conspiracy to procure the absence of a witness, Ry. & M. 434; conspiracy to aecuse of erime, 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 277 ; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 496; 3 Stark. 21 ; 2 Dods. Adm. 191; barratry. 2 Salk. 690. The effect of a conviction for a crime of this class is infamy, and incompetency to testify. Statutes sometimes provide what shall be such erimes.

CRIMEN LESA-MAJESTATIS (Lat.). lnjuring or violating the majesty of the king's person; any crime affecting the king's person. 4 Blaekstone, Comm. 75 .
CRIMINAL CONVERSATION. See Crim. Con.

CRIMINAL INFORMATION. A eriminal suit brought, without the interposition of a grand jury, by the proper officer of the king or state. Cole, Crim. Inf.; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 398.

CRIMINAL LAW. That branch of jurisprudence which treats of crimes and offences.
2. From the very nature of the social compact on which all municipal law is founded, and in consequence of which every man, when he enters into society, gives up a part of his natural liberty, result those laws which, in certain cases, authorize the inflietion of penalties, the privation of liberty, and even the destruction of life, with a view to the future prevention of crime and to insuring the safety and well-being of the public. Salus populi suprema lex.
3. The extreme importance of a knowledge of the eriminal law is evident. For a mistake in point of law, which every person of discretion not only may know but is bound and presumed to know, is in criminal cases no defence. Iynorantia corum qua quis scire tenetur non excusat. This law is administered upon the principle that every one must be taken conclusively to know it, without proof that he does know it. Per Tindal, C. J., in 10 Clark & F. 210. This doctrine has been carried so far as to include the case of a foreigner charged with a crime which was no offence in his own country. 1 Ell. & B. 1; Dearsl. 51; 7 Carr. & P. 456 ; Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 4. And, further, the criminal law, whether common or statute, is imperative with reference to the conduct of individuals: so that, if a statute forbids or commands a thing to be done, all acts or omissions contrary to the prohibition or command of the statute are offences at common law, and ordinarily indictable as such. Broom, Comm. 865 ; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. bk. 2, c. 25 , 8 4; 8 Q. B. 883 . See 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 404.
4. In seeking for the sources of onr law upon this subjoct, when a statute punishes a crime by its legal designation, without enumerating the acts which constitute it, then it is necessary to resort to the common law for a definition of the crime with its distinctions and qualifications. So if an act is made criminal, but no modo of prosecution is directed or no punishment provided, the commun law furnishes its aid, prescribing the mode of prosecution by indictment, and as a mode of punishment, fine, and imprisonment. This is commonly designated the common law of England; but it might now be properly called the common law of this country. It was adopted by gencral consent when our ancestors first seitled here. So far, thereforc, as the rules and principles of the common law are applicable to the administration of criminal faw and have not been altered and modified ly legislative enactments or judicial decisions, they have the same force and effoct as laws formally enacted. 5 Cush. Mass. 303, 304 ; 4 Metc. Mass. 358; 13 id. 69,70. "The common law of crimes," says a very recent writer, "is at present that jus vagum et incognitum against which jurists and vindicators of freedom have strenuously protested. It is to be observed that the definitions of crimes, the nature of punishments, and the forms of criminal procedure originated, for the most part, in the principles of the most anciont common law, but that most of the unwritten rules touching crimes have been modified by statutes which assume the common-law terms and definitions as if their import were familiar to the community. The common law of crimes has, partly from humane and partly from corrupt motives, been pre-eminently the sport of judicial constructions. In theory, indeed, it was made for the state of things that prevailed in this island and the kind of people that inhabited it in the reign of Richard I.; in reality, it is the patchwork of every judge in every reign, from Cœur de Livn to Victoria." Ruins of Time Exemplified in Male's Pleas of the Crown, by Amos, Pref. x.

5. Some of the leading principles of the English and American system of criminal law are-First. Every man is presumed to be innocent till the contrary is shown; and if there is any reasonable duubt of his guilt, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. Second. ln general, no person can be brought to trial until a grand jury on examination of the charge has found reason to hold him for trial. Third. The prisoner is entitled to trial by a jury of his peers, who are chosen from the bcdy of the people with a view to impartiality, and whose decision on questions of fact is final. Fourth. The question of his guilt is to be deter mined without reference to his general character. By the systems of continental Europe, on the contrary, the tribunal not only examines the evidence relating to the offence, but looks at the probabilities arising from the priscner's previous history and habits of life. Fifth. The prisoner cannot be required to criminate himself, nor permitted to exculpate himself, by giving his own testimony on his trial. The justice and expediency of this latter restriction aro now much questioned. Sixth. He cannot be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence. Seventh. He cannot be punished for an act which was not an offence by the law existing at the time of its commission; nor can a severcr punishment be inflicted than was declared by law at that time.

CRIMINAL LETTERS. In Scotch Law. A summons issued by the lord advocate or his deputies as the means of commencing a criminal process. It differs- from an indictment, and is like a criminal information at common law.

CRIMINALITER. Criminally; on criminal process.

CRIMINATE. To exhibit evidence of the commission of a criminal offence.
2. It is a rule that a witness cannot be compelled to answer any question which has a tendency to expose him to a penalty, or to any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge. 3 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 3209-3212; 4 St. Tr. 6; 6 id. 649 ; 10 How. St. Tr. 1090; 16 id. 1149; 24 id. 720; 2 Dougl. 593; 2 Ld. Raym. 1088; 16 Ves. Ch. 242; 2 Swanst. Ch. 216 ; 1 Carr. & P. 11 ; 5 id. 213, 521 ; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 236; 1 Cranch, $144 ; 2$ Yerg. 3. An accomplice admitted to give evidence against his associates in guilt is bound to make a full and fair confession of the whole truth respecting the subject-matter of the prosecution, 10 Pick. Mass. 477; 2 Starkie, Ev. 12, note; but he is not bound to answer with respect to his share in other offences, in which he was not concerned with the prisoner. 9 Cow. N. Y. 721, note (a); 2 Carr. & P. 411.

CRITICISM. The art of judging skilfully of the merits or beauties, defects or faults, of a literary or scientific performance, or of a production of art. When the criticism is reduced to writing, the writing itself is called a criticism.

Liberty of criticism must be allowed, or there would be neither purity of taste nor of morals. Fair discussion is essentially nceessary to the truth of history and the advancement of science. That publication, therefore, is not a libel which has for its object not to injure the reputation of an individual, but to corrcet misrepresentations of facts, to refute sophistical reasoning, to expose a vicious taste for literature, or to censure what is hostile to moralify. 1 Campb. 351. As every man who publishes a book commits himself to the judgment of the public, any one nay comment on his performance. If the coumentator doos not step aside from the work, or introduce fiction for the purpose of condemnation, he exercises a fair and legitimate right. And the eritic does a good service to the public who writes down any vapid or useless publication, such as ought never to have appeared; and, although the author may suffer a loss from it, the law does not consider such loss an injury ; because it is a loss which the party ought to sustain. It is the loss of fame and profit to which he was never entitled. 1 Campl. 358, n. See 1 Esp. 28; 2 Stark. $73 ; 4$ Bingh. n. s. 92 ; 3 Scott, 340 ; 1 Mood. $&$ M. 44, 187 ; Cooke, Def. 52.

CROFT. A little close adjoining a dwell-ing-house, and enclosed for pasture and tillage or any particular use. Jacob, Law Dict. A small space fenced off in which to keep farmcattle. Spelman, Gloss. The word is now entirely obsolete.

CROP. Seo Emblements; Away-Going Crop.

CROPPER. One who, having no interest in the land, works it in consideration of recoiving a portion of the crop fur his labor. 2 Ramle, Penn. 12.

CROSS. A mark made by persons who are unable to write, instead of their names.

When properly attested, and proved to have been made by the party whose name is written with the mark, it is generally admitted as evidence of the party's signature.

CROSS-ACTION. An action by a defendant in an action, against the plaintiff in the same action, upon the same contract, or for the same tort. Thus, if Peter bring an action of trespass against Faul, and Paul bring another aotion ot trespass against Peter, the subject of the dispute being an assault and battery, it is cvident that Paul could not set off the assault committed upon him by Peter, in the action which Peter had brought against him: therefore across-action becomes necessary.

CROSS-EILI. In Equity Practice. One which is brought by a detendant in a suit sgainst a plaintiff in or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. Story, Eq. Plead. & 389 ; Mitford, Chanc. Plead. Jerem. ed. 80.
2. It is considered as a defence to the original bill, and is treated as a dependency upon the original suit. 1 Eden, lnj. 190; 3 Atk. Ch. 312; 19 Eng. L. \& Eq. 325 ; 14 Ark. 346 ; 14 Ga. 674 ; 14 Vt. 208 ; 24 id. 181; 15 Ala. 501. It is usually brought either to obtain a necessary discovery, as, for example, where the plaintiff's answer under oath is desired, 3 Swanst. Ch. 474 ; 3 Younge \& C. Ch. 594 ; 2 Cox, Ch. 109 ; or to olbtain iull reliff for all parties, since the defendant in a bill could originally only proy for a dismissal from eourt, as to prevent subsequent suits, 1 Yes. Ch. $284 ; 7$ id. $2 \Sigma 2 ; 2$ Schoales \& L. Ch. Ir. 9, 11, n., 144, n. (z) ; 2 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 107 ; 14 Ill. 229 ; 20 Ga. 472 ; Story, Eq. Plead. 8 $390, \mathrm{n}$. ; or where the defendants have conflicting interests, 9 Cow. N. Y. 747 ; 1 Sandf. Ch. N.Y. 108; 2 Wisc. 299, but may not introduce new parties. 17 How. 130. It is also used for the same purposo as a plet puis darrein continuance at law. Cooper, Eq. Plcad. 86 ; 2 Ball \& B. Ch. Ir. 140 ; 2 Atk. Ch. 177, 553; 1 Stor. C. C. 218.
3. It should state the original bill, and the proceedings thereon, and the rights of the party exhibiting the bill which are necessary to be made the subject of a cross-litigation, or the grounds on which he resists the claims of the plaintiff in the original bill, if that is the object of the new bill, Mitford, Chanc. Plead. Jerem. id. 8l; and it should not introduce new and distinct matters. 8 Cow. N. Y. 361.

It should be brought before publication, 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 62; 13 Ga. 478, and not after, -to avoid perjury. 7 Johns. Cb. N. Y. 250; Nelson, Ch. 103.
In England it need not be bronght before the same court. Mitford, Chanc. Plead. Jerem. ed. 81 et seq. For the rule in the United States, see 11 Wheat. 446; Story, Eq. Plead. 8401.

CROSS-EXAMINATION. In Practice. The examination of a witness by the party opposed to the party who called him, and who examined or was entitled to examine him in chief.
2. In England and some of the states of the United States, when a competent witness is called and sworn, the other party is ordinarily entitled to cross-examine hin though he be not examined in chief, 2 Stark. 314,472 ; 1 Esp. 357; 4 id. 67; 1 Armstr. M. & O. 1r. 204; 17 Pick. Mass. 490 ; 1 Cush. Mass. 189 ; 7 Cow. N. Y. 238 ; 2 Wend. N. Y. 166, 483 ; 23 Ga. 154 ; 32 Miss. 405 ; see 3 Carr. & P. 16; 7 id. 64; 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 94 ; 2 Mood. & R. 273 ; 23 Ga. 154 ; but it is held in other states and in the federal courts that the cross-examination is confined to facts and circumstances connected wilh matters stated in the direct examination. 3 Wash. C. C. 580 ; 14 Pet. 448; 16 Serg. & R. Penn. 77; 6 Watts & S. Penn. 75 ; 2 Dutch. N. J. 463 ; 5 Cal.
t50; 4 Lowa, 477; 4 Mich 67 . But see 12 La. Ann. $826 ; 2$ Pat. & H. Va. 616.
3. Inquiry may be made in regard to colateral facts in the discretion of the judge, 7 Jarr. & P. 389; 5 Wend. N. Y. 305 ; but not nerely for the purpose of contradicting the witness by other evidence. 1 Starkie, Ev. 164; 7 East, 108; 2 Lew. Cr. Cas. 154, 156 ; T Carr. & P. 789; 2 Campb. 637; 16 Pick. No. C. $346 ; 14$ Pet. 461.

As to whether the witness may be called subsequently to his examination in chief and rross-examined, see 1 Greenleaf, Ev. z 447 ; 1 Starkie, Ev. 164; 16 Serg. & R. Penn. 77; 17 Pick. Mass. 498.

A written paper identified by the witness as having been written by him may be introluced in the course of a cross-examination as a part of the evidence of the party prolucing it, if necessary for the purposes of the sross-examination. 16 Jur. 103; 8 Carr. & P. 369 ; 2 Brod. & B. 289.
4. A cross-examination as to matters not admissible in evidence entitles the party prolucing the witness to re-examine lim as to those matters. 3 Ad. & E. 55t; 17 Tex. 417.

Leading questions may be put in cross3xamination. 1 Starkie, Ev. 96; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 210; 6 Watts & S. Penn. 75. Fur some suggestions as to the propriety of cross-examination in various cases and the most expedient manner of conducting it, see 2 Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 233; 1 Starkie, Ev. 160, 161; Archbold, Crim. Plead. 111.

CROSS-RDMAINDER. Where a particular estate is conveyed to several persons in common, and upon the termination of the interest of either of them his share is to remain over to the rest, and the reversioner or remainder man is not to take till the termination of all the estates, the parties take as tenants in common with cross-remainders between them. 4 Cruise, Dig. 249; 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 650. It is not an essential quality of cross-remainders that the original estates should be held in common. 1 Prest. Est. 94; 2 Wash. Real Prop. Index.

CROWN LAAW. Criminallaw, the crown being the prosecutor.

CROWN OFFICE. The criminal side of the court of king's hench. The king's attorney in this court is called master of the crown office. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 308.

CROWN SIDE. The eriminal side of the court of king's bench. Distinguished from the pleas side, which transacts the civil business. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 265.

CRUELTY. As between husband and wife. Those acts which affect the life, the bealth, or even the comfort, of the party aggrieved, and give a reasonable apprehension of bodily hort, are called cruelty. What merely wounds the feelings is seldom admitted to be cruelty, unless the act be accompanied with bodily injury, either actual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion, will not amount to legal cruelty, 17 Conn. 189; a fortiori, the denial of little indulgences and particular accommodations, which the delicacy of the world is apt to number among its necessaries, is not cruelty. The negative descriptions of cruelty are perhaps the best, under the infinite variety of cases that may occur, by showing what is not cruelty. 1 Hagg. Eccl. 35; 4 Eccl. 238, 311, 312; 1 Hagg. Cons. 37, 458; 2id. 154; 1 Phill. Ecel. 111, 132; 1 M'Cord, Ch. So. C. 205; 2 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 324; 2 Chitty, Pract. 461, 489; Poynton, Marr. & D. c. 15, p. 208; Shelford, Marr. & D. 425 ; 8 N. H. 307; 3 Mass. 321; 4 id. 487.
2. Cruelty towards weak and helpless persons takes place where a party hound to provide for and protect them either abuses them by whipping them nnnecessarily, or by neglecting to provide for them those necessaries which their belpless condition requires. Exposing a person of tender years, under a party's care, to the inclemency of the weather, 2 Campb. 650; keeping such a child, unable to provide for himself, without adequate food, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 137 ; Russ. & R. 20 ; or an overseer neglecting to provide food and medical care to a pauper having urgent and immediate occasion for them, Russ. & R. 46, 47, 48, are examples of this species of cruelty.

By the civil code of Louisiana, art. 192, it is enacted that, when the master shall be convicted of cruel treatment of his slave, the judge may pronounce, besides the penalty established for such cases, that the slave shall be sold at public auction, in order to place him out of the reach of the power which his master has alused.
3. Cruelty to animals is an indictable offence. A defendant was convicted of a misdemeanor for tying the tongue of a calf so near the root as to prevent its sucking, in order to sell the cow at a greater price, by giving to her udder the appearance of being full of milk while affording the calf all he needed. 6 Rog. N. Y. 62 . A man may be indicted for cruelly beating his horse. 3 King. N. Y. 191. See 1 Bishop, Crin. Law, 8439 .

CRUISE. A royage or expedition in quest of ressels or flcets of the exemy which may be expected to sail in any particular track at a certain season of the year. The region in which these cruises are performed is usually termed the rendezvous, or cruisinglatitude.

When the ships employed for this purpose, which are accordingly called cruisers, have arrived at the destined station, they traverse the sea backwards and forwards, under an easy sail, and within a limited space, conjectured to be in the track of their expected adversaries. Weskett, Ins. ; Lex Merc. Rediv.

271, 284; Deugl. 509; Park, Ins. 58; Marshall, Ins. 196, 199, 520; 2 Gall. C. C. 268.

CRY DE PAYS, CRY DE PAIS. A hue and cry raised by the conatry. This was allowable in the absence of the constable when a felony had been committed.

Cryer. See Crier.
CUCKING-STOOL. An engine or maehine for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women.

Called also a trebucket, tumbrill, and castigatory. Bakers and brewers were formerly also liable to the samo punishment. Being fastened in the machine, they were immersed over head and ears in some poel. Blount; Ceke, 3d Inst. 219; 4 Blacksteve, Cemm. 168.

CUI ANTE DIVORTIUM (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui ipsa ante divortium contradicere non potuit, whom she befure the divorce could not gainsay). In Practice. A writ which anciently lay in favor of a woman who had been divorced from her husband to recover lands and tenements which she had in fee simple, fee tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband had aliened them during marriage, when she could not gainsay it. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 240; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 183, n.: Stearns, Real Act. 143 ; Booth, Real Act. 188.

CUI IN VITA (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui in vita sua, ipsa contradicere non potuit, whom in his lifetime she could not gainsay). In Practice. A writ of entry which lay for a widow against a person to whom her husband had in his lifetime aliened her lands. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 193. The object of the writ was to avoid a judgment obtained against the husband by confession or default. It is now of no use in Eugland, by force of the provisions of the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28, 86 . See 6 Coke, 8, 9 ; Booth, Real Act. 186. As to its use in Pennsylvania, see 3 Binn. Penn. App.; Rep. Comm. on Penn. Civ. Code, 1835, 90 , 91 .

CUL DE SAC (Fr. bottom of a bag). A strect which is open at one end only.

It secms not to be settled whether a cul de sac is to be considered a highway. See 1 Campb. 260; 11 East, 376, note; 5 Taunt. 137; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 456; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 76, s. 1; Dig. 50.16.43; 43.12. 1. 8 13; 47. 10. 15. 87.

CULPA. A fault; negligence. Jones, Bailm. 8.

Culpa is to he distinguished from dolus, the latter being a trick fer the purpose of deception, the former merely negligence. There are three degrees of culpa: lota culpa, gross fault or neglect; levis culpa, ordinary fault or neglect; leviseima culpa, slight fault or neglect; and the definitions of these degrees are precisely the same as these in our law. Story, Bailm. $\mathrm{z}^{2}$ 18. See Neglect.

CULPRIT. A person who is guilty, or supposed to be guilty, of a crime.

When a prisener is arraigned, and he pleads not guilty, in English practice, the clerk, who arraigns him on behalf of the erewn, replies that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove the acensation. This is done by writing two monosyllabic ebhreriations,-cul. prit. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 339; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 416. See Christian's note to Blackst. Comm. cited. The technical meaning has disappeared, and the compound is used in the popular sense as above giveh.

CULVERTAGE. A base kind of slavery. The contiscation or forfeiture which takes place when a lerd seizes his tenant's estate. Blount; DuCange.

CUM ONERE (Lat.). With the burden; subject to the incumbrance; subject to the charge. A purchaser with knowledge of an incumbrance takes the property cum onere. Cuke, Litt. $231 a ; 7$ East, 164; Paley, Ag. 175.

CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE. That which goes to prove what has already been established by other evidence.

Cumulative legacy. See Liegacy.

CUNEATOR. A coiner. DuCange. Cuneare, to cein. Cuncus, the die with which to coin. Cuneata, coined. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.
CURATE. One who represents the incumbent of a church, parson or vicar, and takes care of the church and performs divine services in his stead. An officiating temporary minister in the English church who represents the proper incumbent. Burn, Eccl. Law ; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 393.
CURATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The power or duty of managing the property of him who, either on account of infancy or some defect of mind or body, cannot manage his own affairs. The duty of a curator or guardian. Calvinus, Lex.
CURATOR. One who has been legally appointed to take care of the interests of one who, on account of his youth, or defect of his understanding, or for some other cause, is unable to attend to them himself; a guardian.
There are curators ad bona (of property), who administer the estate of a minor, take care of his person, and intervene in all his contracts; curators ad litem (ef suits), whe assist the minur in courts of justice, and act as curators ad lona in cases where the interests of the enrator are appesed to the interests of the miner. La. Civ. Code, art. 357 to 366. There are also curators of insance persons, id. art. 31; and of vacont successions and absent heirs. Ill. art. 1105, 1125.
CURATOR BONIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A guardian to take care of the property. Calvinus, Lex.
In Scotch Law. A guardian for minors, lunatics, etc. Halkers, Tech. Terms; Bell, Dict.
CURATOR AD HOC. A guardian for this special purpose.

CURATOR AD LITEM (Lat.). Guardian for the suit. In English law, the corresponding phrase is guardian ad litem.
CURATORSHIP. The office of a curator.
Curatorship differs from tutorship (q. v.) in this, that the latter is instituted for the pretection of property in the first plaee, and, secendly, of the person; while the furmer is intended to pretect, first, the person, and, secondly, the property. 1 Legons Elem. du Droit Civ. Rom. 241 .

CURATRIX. A woman who has been appointed to the office of curator.

CURE OF SOULS. The ordinary duties of an officiating clergyman.

Curate more properly denotes the incumbent in gencral who hath the cure of aouls; but more frequently it is understood to signily a clerk not instituted to the cure of rouls, hut exercising the spiritual office in a parish under tho rector or vicar. 2 Burns, Eecl. Law, 54; 1 H. Blackst. 424.

CURFEW (French, convre, to cover, and feu, fire). This is gonerally supposed to be an institution of William the Conqueror, who required, by ringing of the bell at eight o'clock in the ovening, that all lights and fires in dwellings should then be extinguished. But the custom is evidently older than the Norman; for we find an order of king Alfred that the inhabitants of Oxford should at the ringing of that bell cover up their fires and go to bed. And there is evidence that the same practice prevailed at this period in France, Normandy, Spain, and probably in most of the other countries of Europe. Henry, Hist. of Britain, vol. 3, 567. It was doubtless intended as a precaution against fires, which were very frequent and destructive when most houses were built of wond.
2. That it was not intended as a badge of infamy is evident from the fact that the law was of equal obligation upon the nobles of the court and upon the native-born serfs. And yet we find the name of curfew law omployed as a by-word denoting the most odious tyranny.

It appears to have met with so much opposition that in 1103 we find IIenry I. repealing the enactment of his father on the subject; and Blackstone says that, though it is mentioned a century afterwards, it is rather spoken of as a time of night than as a still subsisting custom. Shakspeare frequently refers to it in the same sense. This practice is still pursued, in many parts of England and of this country, as a very convenient mode of apprizing people of the time of night.

CURIA. In Roman Law. One of the divisions of the Roman people. The Roman people were divided by Romulus into three tribes and thirty curice: the members of each curia were united by the tie of common religious rites, and also by certain common political and civil powers. Dion. Hal. 1. 2, p. 82 ; Liv. 1. 1, cap. 13 ; Plut. in Romulo, p. 30 ; Festus Brisson, in verb.

In later times the word signified the senate or aristocratic body of the provincial cities of the empire. Brissom, in verb.; Ortolan, Histoire, no. 25, 408; Ort. Inst. no. 125.

The senate-house at Rome; the senatehouse of a provincial city. Cod. 10.31. 2 ; Spelman, Gioss.

In English Law. The king's court; the palace; the royal houschold. The residence of a noble; a manor or chief manse; the hall of a manor. Spelman, Gloss.

A court of justice, whether of general or special jurisdiction. Fleta, lib. 2, 1. 72, & 1;

Feud. lib. 2, tit. 1, 2, 22 ; Spelman ; Cowel;
3 Blackstonc, Comm. c. iv. Sce Count.
A court-yard or enclosed piece of ground; a close. Stat. Edw. Conf. 1, $0 ;$ Bracton, 7 ( 222 b, 335 b, 350 b, 358 ; Spelm. Sec Cumia Claunenda.

The civil or secular power, as distinguished from the church. Spclman, Gloss.

CURIA ADVISAKE VULT (Lat.). The court wishes to consider the matier.

In Practice. The entry formerly made upou the record to vindicate the contiruance of a cause until a final judgment should le rendered.

It is commonly abbreviated thus: cur. adv. vult. Thus, from amongst macy examples, in Clement $v$. Chivis, 2 Barnew. & C. 172, after the report of the argument we find "cur. adv. vult.," then, "on a euluequent day judgmont was delirered," etc.

CURIA CLAUDENDA (Lat.). In Practice. A writ which ancicntly lay to compel a party to enclose his land. Hitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 897.

CURIA REGIS (Lat.). The king's court. A term ajplied to thic aula rogis, the bancus or communis bancus, and the iter or eyrc, as being courts of the king, but especially to the aula regis, which title see.

CURIALTY. In Scotch Law. Curtesy. CURSITOR. A junior clerk in the court of chancery, whose business it formerly was to write out from the register those forms of writs which issued of course.

Such writs were called writs de curau (of course), whence the name, which had been accuired as carly as the reign ol Edward III. The bedy of cursitors ecnstituted a corporation, each clert having a certain number of counties assigned to him. Coke, 2d Inet. 670; I Spenee, Eq. Jur. 238.

CURSITOR BARON. An officer of the court of exchequer, who is appointed by patent under the great seal to le one of the barons of the exchequer. The office is abolished by stat. $19 & 20$ Vict. c. 86. Wharton, Dict. 2d Lond. ed.

CURTESY. The estate to which by ecmmon law a man is entitled, on the death of his wife, in the lands or tencments of which she was seised in pessecsion in fee simple cr in tail during their corerture, provided they have had lawful issuc born alive which might have been capalle of inheriting the estate.
It is a frechold estate for the term of his natural life. 1 Washburn, Real Prep. $1 & 7$. In the common law the word is used in the phrases tenant by curtesy, or estate by curtesy, but seldom alone; while in Scotland of itself it denotes the estate. Sec Estate hy Certesy. Some considerable question has heon made as to the dcrivation both of the custom and its name. It seems pretty clear, howerer, that the term is derived from curtis, a court, and that the custom, in England at least, is of English origin, though a similar custom existed in Normandy and still exists in Scotland. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 128.
n.; Wright, Ten. 192; Coke, Litt. 30 a; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 126 ; Erskine, Inst. 380 ; Grand Cout. de Normandie, c. 119.

CURTILAGI. The enclosed space immediatcly surrounding a dwelling-house, contained within the same enclosure.

It is defined by Blount as a yard, baekside, or pieee of ground near a dwelling-house, in whieh they sow heans, ete., yet distinet from the garden. Bleunt; Spelman. By others it is suid to be a waste pieee of ground so situated. Cowel.
It has reeontly been defined as " n fenee or enclosure of a small pieee of land around a dwellinghouse, usually ineluding the huildings oceupied in eooneetion with the dwelling-house, the enelosure eonsisting either of a separate fenee or partly of a fenee and partly of the exterier of buildings so within this enclosure." 10 Cush. Mass. 480 .
The term is used in determining whether the offenee of bre.lking into a barn or warehouse is hurglary. See 4 Blaekstone, Camm. 224; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. $\overline{5} 5$; 2 Russell, Crimes, 13; 1 id. 790 ; Russ. \& R. 289; 1 Carr. \& K. 84; 10 Cush. Mass. 480.
In Miehigan the meaning of curtiluge has heen extendoll to ineluile more than an enelosure near the house. 2 Miech. 250 .

CURTILLUM. The area or space within the cnclosure of a dwelling-house. Spelman, Gloss.

CURTIS. The arca about a building; a garden; a hut or farmer's house; a farmer's house with the land enrolled with it.

A village or a walled town containing a small number of houses.

The residence of a nobleman; a ball or palace.

A court; a tribunal of justice. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 120; Spelman, Gloss.; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 320.

The similarity of the derivative menning of this word and of aula is quite noticeable, hoth eoming to den the the court itself from denoting the place where the eourt was held.

CUSTODES. Keepers; guardians; conservatiors.

Custoles pacis (guardians of the peace). 1 Blackstone, Cumin. 349.

Custodes libertutis Anglice auctoritate parliamenti (guardians of the liberty of England by authority of parliament). The style in which writs and all judicial process ran during the grand rebellion, from the death of Charles 1. till Cromwell was declared Protector. Ja iob, Law Dict.

CUSTODY. The detainer of a person by virtue of il lawiul authority. 3 Chitty, Pract. 355.

The care and possession of a thing.
CUSTOM. Such a usage as by common consent aud unifurm practice has become the law of the place, or of the subject-matter, to which it relates.
It differs from prescription, whieb is personal and is annexed to the person of the owner of a partieular estate; while the other is loeal, and relates to a particular distriet. An instance of the latter oeeurs where the question is upon the manner of eondueting a partieular branch of trade at a eertain place; of the former, where a eertain perssin and his aneesters, or those whose estates he has, have heen ontitled to a eertain advuntage or privilege, as to have eemmon of pasture in a eertain olose, or the like. 2 Black stono, Comm. 263.

General customs are such as constitute a part of the common law and extend to the whole country.
Purticular customs are those which are confined to a particular district.
2. In general, when a contract is made in relation to another, about which there is an established custom, such custom is to be understood as forming part of the contract, and may always be referred to for the purpose of showing the intention of the parties in all those particulars which are net expressed in the contract. 1 Hall, N. Y. 602; 2 Pet. 138; 5 Binn. Penn. 285 ; 9 Wend. N. Y. 349 ; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 476 . But if the meaning of the contract is certain and beyond doubt, no evidence of usage will be admitted to vary or contradict it. 13 Pick. Mass. 176; 1 Croupt. & M. Exch. 808. As to the effect of usage with respect to agricultural leases, seo Taylor, Landl. & T. & 541.
3. In order to establish a custom, it will be necessary to show its existence for so long a time that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," and that the usage has continued without any interruption of the right; for, if it has coased for a time for such a cause, the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be what the law calls within memory. It will be no oljection, however, that the exercise of the right has been merely suspended. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 76; 2 id. 31 ; 14 Mass. 488; 3 Q. B. 581 ; 6 id. 383.
4. It must also have been peaceably o,cquiesced in and not subject to dispute; for, as customs owe their origin to common consent, their being immemorially disputed, either at law or otherwise, shows that such consent was wanting. 2 Wend. N. Y. 501 ; 3 Watts, Penn. 178. In addition to this, customs must be reasonable and certain. A custom, for instance, that land shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's hlood is void; for how shall this be determined? But a custom that it shall descond to the next male of tho blood, exclusive of females, is certain, and therefore good. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 78.
5. Fridence of usage is never admissible to oppose or alter a gencral principle or rule of land, so as, upon a given state of facts, to make the legal rights and liahilities of the parties other than they are by luw. 2 Term, 327; 19 Wend. N. Y. 252; 6 Metc. Mass. 303; 6 Pick. Mass. 131 ; 6 Binn. Penn. 416. With respect to a usage of trade, however, it is sufficient if it appears to be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law. 3 Wash. C. C. 150; 7 Pet. 1; 5 Binn. Peun. 287; 8 Pick. CUSTOM OF MERCHANTS. A system of customs acknowledged and taken notice of by all nations, and which are, therefore, a part of the general law of the land. See Law Merchant; 1 Chitty, Blackst. Comm. 76, n. 9.
CUSTOM-HOUSE. A place appointed by lasv, in ports of entry, where importers of goods, wares, and merchandise are bound to enter the same, in order to pay or secure the duties or customs due to the government.

CUSTOMARY COURT BARON. A çurt baron at which copyholders night transfer their estates, and where other matters relating to their tenures were transacted. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 33.
This court was held on the manor, the lord or his steward sitting as judge. 1 Crabh, Real Prop. & 633. It might be held anywhere in the manor, at the pleasure of the judge, unless there was a custom to the contrary. it might exist at the same time with a court baron proper, or even where there were no freeholders in the manor.

CUSTOMARY ESTATES. Estates which owe their origin and existence to the custom of the manor in which they are held. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 149.

CUSTOMARY FREEHOLD. A class of freeholds held according to the custom of the manor, derived from the ancient tenure in villein socage. Holders of such an estate have a freehold interest though it is not held by a freehold tenure. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 149.

CUSTOMARY SERVICE. A service due by ancient custorn or prescription only. Such is, for example, the service of doing suit at another's mill, where the persons resident in a particular place, by usage, time out of mind have been accustomed to grind corn at a particular mill. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 234.

CUSTOMARY TENANTS. Tenants who hold by the custom of the manor. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 149.

CUSTOMS. This term is usually applied to those taxes which are payable upon goods and merchandise imported or exported. Story, Const. Z 949 ; Bacon, Abr. Smuggling.

The duties, toll, tribute, or tariff payable upon merchandise exported or imported. These are called customs from having been paid from time immemorial. Expressed in law Latin by custuma, as distinguished from consuetudines, which are usages merely. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 314.

CUSTOMS OF LONDON. Particular regulations in force within the city of London, in regard to trade, apprentices, widows and orphans, etc., which are recognized as forming part of the English common law. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 75.

CUSTOS BREVIUM (Lat.). Keeper of writs. An officer of the court of common pleas whose duty it is to receive and keep all the writs returnable to that court and put them upon file, and also to receive of the prothonotarics all records of nisi prius, called posteas. Blount. An officer in the king's bench having similar duties. Cowel; Termes de la Ley. The office is now abolished.

CUSTOS MARIS (Lat.). Warden or guardian of the seas. Among the Sayons, an admiral. Spelman, Gloss. Admiralius.

CUSTOS PLACITORUM CORONA

 (Lat.). Keeper of the Pleas of the Crown (the criminal records). Said by Blount and Cowel to be the same as the Custos. Rotulorum.CUSTOS ROTULORUM (Lat.). Keeper of the Rolls. The principal justice of the peace of a county, who is the keeper of the records of the county. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 349. He is always a justice of the peace and quorum, is the chief civil officer of the king in the county, and is nominated under the king's sign-manual. IIe is rather to be considered a minister or officer than a judge. Blount; Cowel; Lambard, Eiren. lib. 4, cap. 3, p. 373; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 272; 3 Stephen, Comm. 37.

CUSTUMA ANTIQUA SIVE MAGNA (Lat. ancient or great duties). The duties on wool, sheepskin, or wool-pelts and leather exported were so called, and were payable by every merchant stranger as well as native, with the exception that merchant strangers paid one-half as much again as natives. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 314.

CUSTUMA PARVA ET NOVA (Lat.). An impost of threepence in the pound sterling on all commodities exported or imported by merchant strangers. Called at first the alien's duty, and first granted by stat. 31 Edw. I. Maddox, Hist. Exch. 526, 532; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 314.

CY PRES (L. Fr. as near as). The rule of construction applied to a will (but not to a deed) by which, where the testator crinces a particular and a general intention and the particular intention cannot take effect, the words shall be so construed as to give effect to the general intention. 3 LIare, Ch. 12; 2 Term, 254; 2 Bligh, 49; Sugden, Powers, 60; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 532.
2. The principle is applied to sustain wills in which perpetuities are attempted to be created, 80 that, if it can possibly be done, the derise is not regarded as utterly void, but ia expounded in such a manner as to carry the testator's intention into effect as far as the law respecting perpetuities will allow. This is called a construction cy pres. Its rules are vague, and depend chiefly upon judicial discretion applied to the particular case. Sedgwick, Const. Law, 265 ; Story, Eq. Jur. 88 1169 et seq.
3. It is also applied to sustain devises and bequests for charity ( $q$. v.). Where there is a definite charitable purpose which cannot take place, the courts will not substitute another, as they once did; but if charity be the general substantial intention, though the mode provided for its execution fails, the English chancery will find some means of effectuating it, even by applying the fund to a different purpose from that contemplated by the testator, provided only it be charitable. Boyle, Char. 147, 155 ; Shelford, Mortm. 601; 3 Brown, Ch. 379 ; 4 Ves. Ch. 14; 7 id. 69, 82. Most of the cases carry the doctrine beyond what is allowed where private interests are concerned, and have in no inconsiderable degree to draw for their support on the prerogative of the crown and the statute of charitable uses, 43 Eliz c. 4 . This doctrine does not universally obtain in this country to the disinherison of heirs and next of kin. See Charities; Cbaritable Uses; 1 Am. United States Statutes at Large, 1861, c. 86, Little & Brown's cd. 239.

The previsions of the organic act are substantially the same as those of the act erecting the territory of New Mexicu. See New Mixico.

Since the date of the organic act, the boundaries of the territory of Dakota have been twice changed: frst, by the act crecting the territory of Idaho, March 3 , 1863 , sect. I , which cut off from the territory all that part lying west of the twesty-seventh digree of longitude west from Washington; and second, by the act erecting the territory of Muntana, May 26, 1864, sect. 18, whieb attached temporarily to the territory of Dakota the lands lying within the folluwing limits:-commeneing at a puint furned by the interscetion of the thirty-third degree of longitude west frum War hingtun w.th the firty-first degree of north latitude; thence along said thirtythird degrec of lengitude to the crest of the Rocky Mountains; then-e nerthward along the said crest of the Rocky Mountains to its intersection with the furty-fourth degrec and ihirty minutes of north latitude; thence eastward illong said furty-fourth de ree thirty minutes of north latitude to the thitty-furih deyree of longitude west from Washington; thence nerth aleng said thirty-furth degrec of longitude to its interscection with the forty-fifth degree of north latitude; thence cast along anid forty-fifth degree of north latitude to its intersection with the twentyseventh degree of longitude west from Washingt 0 D ; thence aouth along said tweaty-seventh degrec of longitude west from Washington to the furty-firet dcgree of north latitude; thence west along said fertyfirst degree of latitude to the place of beginning.

DAME. A construction of wood, stone, or other materials, made across a stream of water for the purpose of confining it; a mole.
2. The owner of a stream not navigable may erect a dam across it, provided he do not thereby materially impair the rights of the proprietors above or below to the use of the water in its accustomed flow. 4 Mas. C. C. $401 ; 13$ Johns. N. But he must not unreasonally detain the water, 6 Ind. 324; and the jury may find the constant use of the water by night and a detention of it by day to be an unreasonable use, though there be no design to injure othcrs. 10 Cush. Mass. 367 . Nor has such arnor the right to raise his dam so high as to cause the stream to flow back upon the Iand of supra-riparian proprictors. 1 Barnow. & Ald. 2j8; 6 East, 208; 1 Sim. & S. 4, The degree of care which a party who constructs a dam across a stream of water is bound to use is in proportion to the cxtent of injury which will bo likely to result to third porsons provided it should prove insufficient. It is not enough that tho dam is sufficient to resist ordinary flocds; for if the stream is cceasionally sulject to great freshets these must likewise be guarded against; and the masure of care required in such cases is that which a discreet person would use if tho whole risk were his own. 5 Vt. 371 ; 3 Hill, N.Y. 531 ; 3 Den. N. Y. 433 ; Angell, Waterc. 326.
5. DAMAGE. The loss caused by one person to another, or to his property, either with the design of injuring him, or with negligence and carelessness, or by inevitable accident.

He who has caused the damage is bound to repair it; and if he has done it maliciously he may be compelled to pay beyond the actual loss. When damage oceurs by accidert without blame to any one, the loss is lorne ly the owner of the thing injured: as, if a horse run away with his rider, without any fault of the latter, and injure tho property of another person, the iniury is the loss of the owner of the thing. When the damage happens by the act of Gcd, or incvitable accident, as by tempest, earthquake, or other natural cause, the loss must be borne by the owner. Sec Comyns, Dig.; Sayer, Dam.; Sedgwick, Dam.
DAMAGE CLEER. The tenth part in the common plens, and the twentieth part in the ling's bench and exehequer courts, of all damages beyond a certain sum, which was to be paid the prothonotary or chief officer of the court in which they were recovered before executicn conld be taken cut. At first it was a gratuity, and cf uncertain proportions. Abolished by stat. 17 Car. II. e. 6. Cowel; 'T'ermes de la Loy.
DAIMAGE FEASANT (French, faisant dummage, dcing damage). A term usually applied to the injury which animals be longing to one person do upon the land ef an. other, ly feeding there, and treading down his grass, corn, or other production of the carth. 3 Blackstonc, Comm. 6; Coke, Litt. 142, 161 ; Comyns, Dig. Pleader ( 3 M 26). By the common law, a distress of animals or things damage foasant is allowed. Gilbert, Distress, 21. It was also allowed by the ancient customs of France. 11 Toullier, 402, 203; Merlin, Répert. Fourrierc; 1 Fournel, Abandon.

DAMAGED GOODS. Goods, suljcet to dutios, which hare reccived some injury either in the royage home, or while bonded in warehouse.

DAMAGES. The indemnity recorerable by a persun who has sustained an injury, either in his person, property, or relative rights, through the act or defauit of another.

The sum clained as such indemuity by a plaintiff in lis declaration.

The injury or loss for which ecmpensation is scught.

Compensatory damages. Those allowed as a recompense for the injury actually received.
Consequential damagts. Thuse which though directly are not immediately consequential upon the act or default complained of.

Double or treble damages. See those tilles.
Exemplary damages. These allowed as a punishment for torts conmmitted wilh fraud, actual malice, or deliberate violence or oppression.

General damages. Those which necessarily and by implication of law result from the act or defantt complained of.
Liquidated damages. See that title.
Nominal damages. See that title.
Punitive damages. See Exemplary Damages.

Special damages. Such as arise directly, but not necessarily or by implication of law, from the act or default complained of.

These are either superadded to general damages, arising frem an act injurious in itself, as when some particular loss arises from the uttering of slanderous werds, aetionahle in themselves, or are such as arise frem an aet indifferent and not aetionable in iteelf, but injurious enly in its censequences, as when the words become aetionable enly by reason of speeial damage ensuing.

Unliquidated damages. See Liquidated Damages.

Vindictive damages. See Exemplary DamAGES.

In medern law, the term is not used in a legal sense to include the eosts of the suit; though it was formerly so used. Coke, Litt. 267 a; Dougl. 751.

The varieus classes of damages here given are thoso commonly found in the text-beoks and in the decisions of courts of common law. Other terins are of eceasional use (as resulting, to denote consequential damages), but are easily recognizable as belonging te some one of the above divisions. The question whether damages are to he limited to an allowance campensatory merely in its nature and extent, or whether they may be assessed as a punishment upon a wrong-doer in certain eases for the injury inflieted hy him upon the plaintiff, has heen very fully and vigerously diseussed by the late Professor Greenleaf and Mr. Sedgwiek, and has received much attention from the courts. Tho current of authorities sets strongly (in numbers, at least) in favor of allowing punitive damages. That view of the matter is certainly open to tho objection that it admits of the infliction of pecuniary punishment te an almost unlimited extent hy an irrespensible jury, a view whieh is theoretically more obnoxieus (supposing that there is no practieal differenec) than that which considers damages merely as a eompensation, of the just ameunt of which the jury may well be held to he proper judges. It weuld also seem te savor somewhat of judicial legisjation in a criminal department to extend sueh damages beyend those cases where an injury is eemmitted to the feelings of the innoeent plaintiff. But sce 2 Greenleaf, Ev. ${ }^{2}$ 253, n.; Sedgwick, Dam. c. xvili.; id. 2 d ed. App.; 1 Kent, Comm. 10th ed. 630 ; 3 Am. Jur. 387 ; 9 Best. Law Rep. 529 ; 10 id. 49; Exemplary Damages.

It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to add that divect is here used in opposition to remote, and immediate to consequential.
2. In Pleading. In personal and mixed actions (but not in penal actions, for obvious reasons), the declaration must allege, in conclusion, that the injury is to the damage of the plaintiff, and must specify the amount of damages. Colvyns, Dig. Pleader (C 84); 10 Coke, 116 b.

In personal actions there is a distinction between actions that sound in damages and those that do not; but in either of these cases it is equally the practice to lay damages. There is, however, this difference: that, in the former case, damages are the main object of the suit, and are, therefore, always laid high enough to cover the whole demand; but in the latter, the liquidated debt, or the chattel demanded, being the main ohject, damages are claimed in respect of the detention only of such debt or chattel, and are, therefore, usually laid at a small sum. The plaintiff cannot recover greater damages than he has laid in the conclusion of his declaration. Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 84); 10 Coke, 117 $a, b$; Viner, Abr. Damages ( R ) ; 1 Bulstr. 49 ; 2 W. Blackst. 1300: 17 Johns. N. Y. 111 ; 4 Den. N. Y. $311 ; 8$ Humphr. Tenn. $530 ; 1$ Iowa, 330; 2 Dutch. N. J. 60.

In real actions no damages are to be laid, because in these the demand is specially for the land withheld, and damages are in no degree the object of the suit. Stophen, Plead. 426; 1 Chitty, Plead. 397-400.
3. General damages need not be averred in the doclaration; nor need any spocific proof of damages be given to enable the plaintiff to recover. The legal presumption of injury in cases where it arises is sufficiont to maintain the action. Whether special damage be the gist of the action, or only collateral to it, it must be particularly stated in the declaration, as the plaintiff will not otherwise be permitted to go into evidence of it at the trial, because the defendant cannot also be prepared to answer it. See Sedgwick, Dam. 575 ; 1 Chitty, Plead. 428; 4 Q. B. 493 ; 10 id. 756 ; 11 Price, Exch. 19; 7 Carr. & P. 804; 2 Penn. St. 318; £2 id. 471 ; 1 Cal. 51 ; 32 Me. 379 ; 23 N. H. 83 ; 21 Wend. N. Y. 144 ; 2 Du. N. Y. 153 ; 16 Johns. N. Y. 122 ; 11 Barb. N. Y. 387 ; 4 Cush. Mass. 104, 408.
4. In Practice. To constitute a right to recover damages, the party claiming damages must have sustained a loss; the party against whom they are claimed must be chargeable with a wrong; the loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong.

There is no right to damages, properly so called, where there is no loss. A sum in which a wrong-doer is muleted simply as punishment for his wrong, and irrespective of any loss caused thereby, is a "fine," or a "ponalty," rather than damages. Damages are based on the idea of a loss to be compensated, a damage to be made good. 11 Johns. N. Y. 136; 2 Tex. $460 ; 11$ Pick. Mass. 527; 15 Ohio, 726; 3 Sumn. C.C. 192; 4 Mas. C.C. 115 . This loss, however, need not always be distinct and definite, capable of exact description or of measurement in dollars and cents. A sufficient loss to sustain an action may appear from the mere nature of the case itself. The law in many cases presumes a loss where a wilful wrong is proved; and thus also damages are awarded for injured feelings, bodily pain, grief of mind, injury to reputation, and for other sufferings which it would be impossible to make subjects of exact proof and computation in respect to the amount of loss sustained. 2 Day, Conn. $\check{2} 9$; 5 id. 140 ; 3 Harr. \& M'W. Md. 510; 5 Ired. No. C. 545 ; 2 Humphr. Tenn. 140; 15 Conn. 267; 19 id. 154; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 432. The rule is not that a losis must be proved by evidence, but that one must appear, either by cvidence or by presumption, fiupnded on the nature of the case.
5. There is no right to damages where there is no wrong. It is not necessary that there should be a tort, strictly so called,- a wilful wrong, an act involving moral guilt. The wrong may be either a wilful, malieious injury, as in the case of assault and battery, libel, and the like, or one committed through mere motives of interest, as in many cases of conversion of goods, trespasses on land, etc.; or it may consist in a mere neglect to discharge a duty with suitable skill or fidelity, as where a surgeon is held liable for malpractice, a sheriff for the escape of his prisoner, or a carrier for neglect to deliver goods; or a simple breach of contract, as in case of refusal to deliver goods sold, or to perform services under an agreement; or it may be a wrong of another person for whose act or default a legal liability exists, as where a master is held liable for an injury done by his slave or apprentice, or a railroad-company for an accident resulting from the negligence of their engineer. But there must be something which the law recognizes as a Wrong, some breach of a legal duty, some violation of a legal right, some default or neglect, some failure in responsibility, sustained by the party claiming damages. For the sufferer by accident or by the innocent or rightful acts of another cannot claim indemnity for his misfortune. It is called damnum absque injuria,-a loss without a wrong; for which the law gives no remedy. 15 Ohio, 659; 11 Pick. Mass. 587; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 755 ; 10 Metc. Mass. 371: 13 Wend. N. Y. 261.
6. The obligation violated must also be one owed to the plaintiff. The ncglect of a duty which the plaintilf had no legal right to enforce gives no claim to damages. Thus, Where the postmaster of Rochester, New York, was required by law to publish lists of letters uncalled for in the newspaper having the largest circulation, and the proprietors of the "Rochester Daily Democrat" claimed to have the largest circulation and to be entitled to the advertising, but the postmaster refnsed to give it to them, it was held that no action , would lie against him for loss of the profits of the advertising. The duty to publish in the paper having the largest circulation was not a duty owed to the publisher of that paper. It was imposed upon the postmaster not for the benefit of publishers of newspapers, but for the advantage of persons to whom letters were addressed; and they alone liad a legal interest to enforce it. 11 Barb. N. Y. 135. See. also, 17 Wend. N. Y. 554; 11 Pick. Mass. 526.
-Whether when the law gives judgment on a contract to pay money-e.g. on a promissory note-this is to be regarded as enforcing performance of the promise, or as awarding damages for the breach of it, is a question on which jurisconsults have differed. Regarded in the latter point of view, the default of payment is the wrong on which the award of damages is predicated.
7. The loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. $弓 256$; Sedgwick, Dam. c. 3. Or, as others have expressed the idea, it must be the "direct and necessary," or "legal and natural," consequence. It must not bc " remote" or "consequential." The loss must be the natural consequence. Every man is expected-and may justly be-to foresee the usial and natural consequences of his acts, and for these he may justly be held accountable; but not for consequences that could not have leen foreseen. 17 Pick. Mass. 78; 3 Tex. 324; 13 Ala. n.s. $490 ; 28 \mathrm{Me}$. $36 \mathrm{I} ; 2 \mathrm{Wise} .427 ; 1$ Sneed, Tenn. 515; 4 Blackf. lnd. 277; 6 Q. B. 928. It must also be the proximate consequence. Vague and indefinite results, remote and consequential, and thus uncertain, are not embraced in the compensation given by damages. It cannot be certainly known that they are attributable to the wrong, or whether they are not rather connected with other causes. 4 Jones, No. C. 163; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 302-304.
8. The foregoing are the general principles on which the right to recover damages is based. Many qualifying rules have been established, of which the following are among the more important instances. In an action for damages for an injury caused by negligence, the plaintiff must himself appear to have been free from fault; for if his own negligence in any degree contributed directly to produce the injury, he can recover nothing. The law will not attempt to apportion the loss according to the different degrees of negligence of the two parties. $1 \mathbf{C r r r}$ \& P . 181; 11 East, 60 ; 7 Me. 51; 1 Iowa, 407; 17 Pick. Mass. 284; 2 Metc. Mass. 615; 3 Barb. N. Y. 49 ; 14 Ohio, 364 : 3 La. Ann. 441 ; Sedgwick, Dam. 468. There is no right of action by an individual for damages snstained from a public nuisance, so far as he orily shares the common injury inflicted on the community. 5 Coke, $\overline{7} 2$. For any special loss incurred by himself alone, he may recover, 4 Maule \& S. 101; 2 Bingh. 263 ; 1 Bingh. n. c. 22 ; 2 id. 281 ; 3 Hill, N. Y. ${ }^{612} \mathbf{j} 22 \mathrm{Vt} 114 ;$.7 Metc. Mass. $576 ; 1$ Penn. St. 309; 17 Conn. 372 ; but in so far as the whole neighborhood suffer together, resort must be had to the public remedy. 7 Q. B. 339; 7 Metc. Mass. 276; 1 Bilb, Ky. 293. Judicial officers are not liable in damages for erroneons decisions.
9. Where the wrong committed by the defendant amounted to a felony, the English rule was that the private remedy by action was stayed till conviction for the felony was had. This was in order to stimulate the exertions of private persons injured by the commission of crimes to bring offenders to justice. This rule has, however, been changed in some of the United States. Thus, in New York it is enacted that when the violation of a right admits of both a civil and criminal remedy, one is not merged in the other. N Y. Code of Yroc. 3 7. And see 15 Mass. 336; 2 Stor. C. C. 59 ; Ware, Adm. 78. When a servant is injured through the negligence of a fellowservant employed in the same enterprise or wvocation, the common employer is not liakle for damages. The servant, in engaging, takes the risk of injury from the negligence of his fellow-servants. 4 Mete. Mass. 49; 6 La. Ann. 495 ; 23 Penn. St. $384 ; 5$ N. Y. 493 ; 15 Ga. 349 ; 15 Ill. 550; 20 Ohio, 415 ; 3 Ohio St. 201; 5 Exch. 343. But this rule does not exonerate the master from liability for negligence of a servant in a different employment. By the common law, no action was maintainable to recover damages for the death of a human being. 1 Campb. 493; 1 Cush. Mass. 475. But in England, by the $9 & 10$ Vict. c. 93 , known as Lord Campbell's Act, it has been provided that whenever the death of a person shall be caused by a wrongful act which would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action, the party offending shall be liable notwithstanding the death. Similar statutes have been passed in several of the United States. Laws of New York, 1847, c. 450, 1849, c. 256 ; Laws of Mass. 1842, c. 81. And see 3 N. Y. 489 ; 15 id. 432 ; 18 Mo. 162; 18 Q. B. 93 .

10. Excessive or inadequate damages. Even in that large class of cases in which there is no fixed measure of damages, but they are left to the discretion of the jury, the court has a certain power to review the verdiet, and to set it aside if the damages awarded are grossly excessive or unreasonably inadequate. The rule is, however, that a verdict will not be set aside for excessive damages unless the amount is so large as to satisfy the court that the jury have been misled by passion, prejudice, ignorance, or partiality. 19 Barb. N. Y. 461; 9 Cush. Mass. 228; 16 B. Monr. Ky. 577; 22 Conn. 74; 27 Miss. 68; 10 Ga. 37; 20 id. 428; 6 Rich. So. C. 419; 1 Cal. 33, 363; 5 id. 410; 11 Gratt. Va. 697. But this power is very sparingly used; and cases are numerous in which the courts have expressed themselves dissatisfied with the verdiet, but have refused to interfere, on the ground that the case did not come within this rule. See 3 Abb. Pr. N. Y. 104 ; 5 id. 272; 22 Barb. N. Y. 87 ; 20 Mo. 272; 15 Ark. 345 ; 6 Tex. 352 ; 9 id. 20 ; 16 Ill. 405 ; Cowp. 230 ; 2 Stor. C. C. 661; 3 id. 1; 1 Zabr. N. J. 183; 5 Mas. C. C. 197.

As a general rule, in actions of tort the court will not grant a new trial on the ground of the smallness of damages. 12 Mod. 150 ; 2 Strange, $940 ; 24$ Eng. L. & Eq. 406; 23 Conn. 74. But they have the power to do so in a proper case; and in a few instances in which the jury have given no redress at all, when some was clearly due, the verdict has been set aside. 1 Cal. $450 ; 2$ E. D. Smith, N. Y. $349 ; 4$ Q. B. 917 . The circumstances must show that the jury have acted under an inproper motive.
11. In the cases in which there is a fixed legal rule regulating the measure of damages, it must be stated to the jury by the presiding judge upon the trial. His failure to state it correctly is ground of exception; and if the jury disregard the instructions of the court on the subject, their verdict may be set aside. In so far, however, as the verdict is an honest determination of questions of fact properly within their province, it will not, in general, be disturbed. Sedgwick, Dam. 604. See Nominal Damaces; Liquidated Dam--ages; Exemplary Damages; Meastre of Damaces. Consult Greenleaf, Evidence; Sedgwick, Damages, 2d ed.

DAMNA (Lat. damnum). Dańages, both inclusive and exclusive of costs.

DAMNI INJURI雨 ACTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. An action for the damage done by one who intentionally injured the beast of another. Calvinus, Lex.

DAMNOSA HAREDITAS. A name given by Lord Kenyon to that species of property of a bankrupt which, so far from being valuable, would be a charge to the creditors: for example, a term of years where the rent would exceed the revenue.
The assignees are not bound to take such property; but they must make their election, and having once entered into poseession they cannot afterwards abandon the property. 7 East, 342 ; 3 Campb. 340.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA (Lat. injury without wrong). A wrong done to a man for which the law provides no remedy. Broom, Max. 1.
Iujuria is here to be taken in the sense of legal injury; and where no malice exists, there are many cases of wrong or suffering inflicted upon a man for which the law gives no remedy. 2 Ld. Raym. 595; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 755; 11 Pick. Mass. 527 ; 10 Metc. Mass. 371. Thus, if the owner of property, in the prudent exercise of his own right of domi. nion, does acts which cause loss to another, it is danınиm absque injuria. 2 Barb. N. Y. 168; 5 id. 79; 10 Metc. Mass. 371 ; 10 Més. & W. Exch. 109.

So, too, acts of public agents wilhin the scope of their authority, if they cause damage, canse simply damnma absque injuria. Sedgwick, Dam. 29, 111; 8 Watts & S. Penn. 85; 1 Pick. ## DAMNUM FATALE. In Civil Law.

Damages caused by a fortuitous event, or inevitable accident; damages arising from the aet of God.

Among these were included losses by shipwreck, lightning, or other casualty; also losses by pirates, or by vis major, by fire, robbery, and burglay; but theft was not numbered among these casualties. In general, bailees are not liable for such damages. Story, Bailm. 471.

DANEGELT. A tax or tribute imposed upon the English when the Danes got a footing in their island.
DANELAGE. The laws of the Danes which obtained in the eastern counties and part of the midland counties of England in the eleventh century. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 65.
dangers of the sea. See Perils of the Sea.
DARREIN (Fr. dernier). Last. Darrein continuance, last continuance.
darrein seisin (L. Fr. last seisin). A plea which lay in some cases for the tenant in a writ of right. 3 Metc. Mass. 184; Jackson, Real Act. 285. See 1 Roscee, Real Act: 206; 2 Preston, Abstr. 345.

DATE. The designation or indication in an instrument of writing of the tinie and place when and where it was made.
When the place is mentioned in the date of a deed, the law intends, unless the contrary appears, that it was executed at the place of the date. Plowd. 7 b. The word is derived from the Latin dntum (given); because when instruments were in Latin the form ran datum, etc. (given the of, etc.).

A date is necessary to the validity of policies of insurance; but where there are separate underwriters, each sets down the date of his own signing, as this constitutes a separate contract. Marshall, Ins. 336; 2 Parsons, Marit. Law, 27. Written instruments generally take effect from the day of their date, but the actual date of exccution may bc shown, though different from that which the justrument bears; and it is said that the date is not of the essence of a contract, but is essential to the identity of the writing by which it is to be proved. 2 Greenleaf, $\mathrm{E}_{\mathrm{F}}$. $8 \frac{2}{6} 12,13$, 489, n. ; 8 Mass. 159; 4 Cush. Mass. 403; 1 Jehns. Cas. N. Y. $91 ; 3$ Wend. N. Y. 233; 31 Me. 243; 17 Eng. L. \& Eq. 548; 2 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 618, n. And if the written date is an impossible one, the time of delivery must be shown. Sheppard, Touchst. 72 ; Cruise, Dig. c. 2. s. 61.

In general, it is sufficient to insert the day, month, and year; but in recording deeds and, in Pennsylvania, in noting the receipt of a $f i$. $f a$., the hour and minute of reception must be given.

In public documents, it is usual to give not only the day, the month, and the year of our Lord, but also the year of the United States, when issued by authority of the general government, or of the commonwealth, when issued under its authority. See, generally, Bacon, Abr. Obligations; Comyns, Dig. Fait (B3); Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 21, ss. 1-6; 1 Burr. 60; Dane, Abr. Index.

Dation. In Civil Law. The act of giving something. It differs from donation, which is a gift; dation, on the contrary, is giving something without any liberality: as, the giving of an office.
dation en Paiement. In Civil Law. A giving by the debtor and receipt by the creditor of something in payment of a debt instead of a sum of money.

It is somewhat like the aceord and satiafaction of the common law. 16 Toullier, n. 45; Pothier, Vente, n. 601. Dation en paiement resembles in some respecta the contract of eale; dare in solutum est quasi vendere. There ia, however, a very marked difference between a sale and a dation en paiement. First. The contract of aale is complete by the mere agreement of the parties; the dation en paiement requires a delivery of the thing given. Second. When the debtor pays a certain sum wbich he supposed be was owing, and be disecuvers he did not owe so much, he may recover back the excess; not so when property other than money bas been given in payment. Third. He who has in good faith aold a thing of which he believed himself to be the owner, is nut precisely required to traugfer the property of it to the buyer; and, while he is not truubled in the posseseion of the thing, he cannot pretend that the seller bas not fulfilled his obligations. On the contrary, the datiou en paiement is good only when the debtor tranafers to the creditor the property in the thing which he bas agreed to take in payment; and if the thing thua delivered be the property of another, it will not operate as a payment. Pothier, Vente, nn. 602, i03, 604. See 1 Low. C. 53.
DAUGHTER. An immediate female descendant.
DAUGHTER-IN-LAW. The wife of one's son.
DAY. The space of time which clapses while the earth makes a complete revolution on its axis.

A portion of such space of time which, by usage or law, has come to be considered as the whole for some paricular purpose.
The space of time which elapses between two successive midnights. 2. Blackstone, Comm. 141.

That portion of such space of time during which the eun is shiniag.
Generally, in legal aignification, the term includes the time elapsing from one midnif Et to the succeeding one, 2 Dlackstone, Comm. 141; but it is also used to denote those hours during which husiness is ordinarily transacted (frequontly called a unsiness day), 5 Hill, N. Y. 437, as well as that portion of time during which the sun is above the hori on (called, sometimes, a solar day), and, in addition, that part of the morning or evcning dering which sufficient of his light is above for the fcatures of a man to he reasonably discerned. Colse, 3d Inat. 63.

By custom, the word day may be understood to include working-days cnly, 3 Esp. 121, and, in a similar manner cnly, a certain number of hours less than the number during Which the work actually continued cach day. 5 Hill, N. Y. 437.

A day is generally, but nct always, regarded in law as a point of time; and fractions will not be recognized. 15 Ves. Ch. 2.57 ; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 586. And see 9 East, 154; 4 Campb. 397; 11 Conn. 17.

It is said that there is no general rule in regard to including or excluding days in the computation of time from the day of a fact or act done, but that it depends upen the reason of the thing and the circumstanees of the case. 5 East, 244;9 Q. B. 141; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 55 ; 15 Mass. 193; 19 Conn. 376. And see, also, 5 Coke, $1 a$; Dougl. 463; 3 Term, 623; 4 Nev. & M. 378 ; 5 Metc. Mass. 439; 9 Wend. N. DAY BOOK. In Mercantile Law. An accouut-hook in which merchants and others malee entries of their daily transactions. This is generally a book of original entries, and, as such, may be given in evidence to prove the sale and delivery of merchandise or of work done

DAY RULE. A rule or order of the court by which a prisoner on civil process, and not committed, is enabled, in term-time, to go out of the prison and its rule or bounds. Tidd, Pract. 961.

DAYS IN BANK. In English Practice. Days of appearance in the court of common pleas, usually called bancum. They are at the distance of about a week from each other, and are regulated by some festival of the church.

By the common law, the defendant is allowed three full days in which to make his appearance in court, exclusive of the day of appearance or returnday named in the writ. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 278. Upon his appearance, time is usually granted him for pleading; and this is cslled giving him day, or, as it is more familiarly expressed, a continuance. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 316. When the suit is ended by discontinuance or by judgment for the defendant, he is discharged from further attendance, and is said to go thereof sine die, without day. See Continuance.

DAYS OF GRACE. Certain days allowed to the acceptor of a bill or the maker of a note in which to make payment, in addition to the time contracted for by the bill or note itself.
2. They are so called because formerly they were allowed as a matter of favor; but, the custom of merchants to allow such days of grace having grown into law and been sanctioned by the courts, all bills of exchange are by the law merchant entitled to days of grace as of right. The act of Anne making promissory notes negotiable confers the same right on those instruments. This act has been generally adopted throughout the United States; and the days of grace allowed are three. 6 Watts & S. Penn. 179; Chitty, Bills; Byles, Bills.
3. Where there is an established usage of the place where the bill is payable to demand payment on the fourth or other day instead of the third, the parties to it will be bound by such usage. 5 How. 317 ; 9 Wheat. 582; 1 Snith, Lead. Cas. 417. When the last day of grace happens on Sunday or a general holiday, as the Fourth of July, Christmasday, etc., the bill is due on the day previous, and must be presented on that day in order to holld the drawer and indorsers. 2 Caines, Cas. N. Y. 195; 2 Caines, N. Y. 343; 7 Wend. N. Y. 460; 8 Cow. N. Y. 203; 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. $328 ; 4$ Dall. Penn. 127; 5 Binn. Penn. 541; 4 Yerg. Tenn. 210; 10 Ohio, 507 ; 1 Ala. 295; 3 N. II. 14. Days of grace are, for all practical purposes, a part of the time the bilf has to run, and interest is charged on them. 2 Cow. N. Y. 712.
4. Our courts always assume that the same number of days are allowed in other countries; and a person claiming the benefit of a foreign law or usage must prove it. 8 Johns. N. Y. 189; 13 N. Y. $593 ; 4$ Metc. Mass. 203 ; 2 Vt. 129; 7 Gill \& J. Md. 78 ; 9 Pet. 33 ; 4 Metc. Mass. 203. When properly proved, the law of the place wherc the bill or note is payable prescribes the number of days of grace and the manner of calculating them. 1 Den. N. Y. 367 ; Story, Prom. Notes, 83 216, 247. The tendency to adopt as laws local usages or customs has been materially checked. $8 \mathrm{~N} . \mathbf{Y} .190$. By tacit consent, the banks in New York city lave not claimed days of grace on bills drawn on them; but the courts rcfused to sanction the custom as law or usage. 25 Wend. N. Y. 673.
5. According to law and usage, days of grace are allowed on bills payable at the following places according to this table :-

Altonu and Humburg, twelve days.
United States of America, threc days, except Vermont, where no grace is allowed, and Louisiana, wherc, although on bills and notes made and payalle in the state the three days arc allowed, the bill is considered to be due without the grace for purposes of set-off. In New York, luills on bank corporations are not entitled to grace, by statutc.

Great Britain and Ireland, Berlin, Trieste, Vienna, thrce days.

Amsterdam, Antwerp, Genoa, France, Leghorn, Palermo, nonc.

Brazil, Rio Jancioo, Buhia, fifteen days.
Frankfort-on-lhe-Main (Sundays and holidays not included), four days.

Spain, valy in different parts,-generally fourteen on foreign and cight on inland bills; at Cadiz, six. When bills are drawn at a certain date fixed, no grace. Bills at sight are not entilled to grace; nor are any bills, unless accepted.

Lisbon and Oporto, fifteen days on local bills and six on foreign; but if not previously accepted, no grace.
6. Days of grace are computed in America by adding three days to the term of the bill or note, irrespective of the fact that the day on which the bill would be duc witheut the days of grace is a Sunday or holiday. Bankers' checks are payable on demand, without days of grace.

DAFS OF THE WEDK. Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday.

The court will take judicial notice of the days of the week : for example, when a writ of inquiry was stated in the pleadings to have leen executed on the fifteenth of June, and upon an examination it was found to be Sunday, the proceeding was held to be defective. Fortesc. 373 ; Strange, 387.

DAYSMAN. An arbitrator, umpire, or elected judge. Cowel.

DAYWERE. As much arable land as could be ploughed in one day's work. Cowel.

DE ADMENSURATIONE. Of admeasurement.
Used of the writ of admeasurement of dower, which lies where the widow has had more dower assigned to her than she is entitled to. It is said by some to lie where either an infant heir or his guardian made such assignment, at suit of the infant heir whose rights are thus prejudiced. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 136 ; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 348. It seems, however, that an assignment by a guardian binds the infant heir, and that after such assignment the heir oannot bave his writ of admeasurement. 2 Ind. 388; 1 Piok. Mass. 314; 37 Me. 509; 1 Washhurn, Real Prop. 226.
Used also of the writ of admeasurement of pasture, which lies where the quantity of common due each one of several having rights thereto has not heen ascertained. 3 Blackstone. Comm. 38. See Anmeasurement of Dower.

DE FTATE PROBANDA (Lat. for proving age). A writ which lay to summon a jury for the purpose of determining the age of the heir of a tenant in capite who claimed his estate as being of full age. Fitzhervert, Nat. Brev. 257.
DE ALIOCATIONE FACIENDA (Lat. for making allowance). A writ to allow the collectors of eustoms, and other such officers having charge of the king's money, for sums disbursed by them.

It was directed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer.

DE ANNUA PENSIONE (Lat. of annual pension). A writ by which the king, having due unto him an annual pension from any abbot or prior for any of his chaplains which he will name who is not provided with a competent living, demands it of the said abbot or prior for the one that is named in the writ. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 231 ; Termes de la Ley, Annua Pensione.

DE ANNUO REDITU (Lat. for a yearly rent). A writ to recover an annuity, no matter how payable. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 258.

DE APOSTATA CAPIENDO (Lat. for taking an apostate). A writ directed to the sheriff for the taking the body of one who, having entered into and professed some order of religion, leaves his order and departs from his house and wanders in the country. Fitzherhert, Nat. Brev. 233 ; Termes de la Ley, Apostata Capiendo.

DE ARBITRATIONE FACTA (Lat. of arbitration had). A writ furmerly used when an action was brought for a cause which had been settled by arbitration. Watson, Arb. 256.

DE ASSISA PROROGANDA (Lat. for proroguing assize). A writ to put off an assize issuing to the justices where one of the parties is engaged in the service of the king.

DE ATTORNATO RECIPIENDO (Lat. for receiving an attorney). A writ to compel the judges to receive an attorney and admit him for the party. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 156 b.

DE AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITH-

ERNAM (Lat. for cattle taken in withernam). A writ which lies to take other cattle of the defendant where he has taken and carried away cattle of the plaintiff out of the country, so that they cannot be reached by replevin. Termes de la Ley ; 3 Sharswood, Blaekst. Comm. 149.
DEAVERIIS REPLEGIANDIS (Lat.). A writ to replevy beasts. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 149.

DE BENE ESSE (Lat. formally ; conditionally; provisionally). A technical phrase applied to certain acts deemed for the time to be well done, or until an exception or other avoidance. It is equivalent to provisionally, with which meaning the phrase is commonly employed. For example, a declaration is filed or delivered, special bail is put in, a witness is examined, etc., de bene esse, or provisionally.
2. The examination of a witness de bene csse takes place where there is danger of losing the testimony of an important witness from death by reason of age or dangerous illness, or where he is the only witness to an important fact. 1 Bland, Ch. Mich. 238; 3 Bihb, Ky. 204 ; 16 Wend. N. Y. 601. In such case, if the witness be alire at the time of trial, his examination is not to be used. 2 Daniell, Ch. Pract. 1111.

To doclare de bene esse is to declare in a bailable action subject to the contingency of bail being put in; and in such case the deelaration does not become absolute till this is dune. Graham, Pract. 191.

When a judge has a doubt as to the propriety of finding a verdict, he may direct the jury to find one de bene esse; which verdict, if the court shall afterwards be of opinion that it ought to have been found, shall stand. Bacon, Ahr. Verdict (A). See, also, 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 84.
de bien et de mal. See De Bono et Malo.
DE BONIS ASPORTATIS (Lat. for goods carried away). The name of the action for trespass to personal property is trespass de bonis asportatis. Buller, Nisi P. 836; 1 Tidd, Pract. 5.

DE BONIS NON. See Administrator de Bonis Non.

DE BONIS PROPRIIS (Lat. of his own goods). A judgment against an executor or administrator which is to be satistied from his own property.

When an executor or administrator has been guilty of a devastavit, he is responsible for the loss which the estate has sustained de bonis propriis. He may also subject hinself to the payment of a debt of the deceased de bonis propriis by his false plea when sued in a representative capacity: as, if he plead plene administravit and it be found against him, or a release to himself when false. In this latter case the judgment is de bonis testatoris si, et si non de bonis propriis. 1 Wms. Saund. 336 b, n. 10; Bacon, Abr. Executor (B3).
DE BONIS TESTATORIS (Lat. of the goods of the testator). A judgment rendered against an executor which is to be satisfied out of the goods or property of the testator: distinguished from a judgment de bouis proprizs.

DE BONIS TESTATORIS AC SI (Lat. from the goods of the testator, if he has any, and, if not, from those of the executor). A judgment rendered where an executor falsely pleads any matter as a release, or, generally, in any case where be is to be charged in case his testator's estate is insufficient. 1 Wms. Saund. 366 b; Bacon, Abr. Executor (B 3); 2 Archbold, Pract. 148.

DE BONO ET MALO (Lat. for good or ill). A person accused of crime was said to put himself upon his country de bono et malo. The French phrase de bien et de mal has the same meaning.
A special writ of gaol delivery, one being issued for each prisoner: now superseded by the general commission of gawl delivery. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 270.

DE CALCETO REPARENDO (Lat.). A writ for repairing a highway, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to distrain the inhabitants of a place to repair the highway. Reg. Orig. 154; Blount. de CARTIS REDDENDIS (Lat. for restoring charters). A writ to secure the delivery of charters; a writ of detinue. Reg. Orig. 159 b .

DECAUTIONE ADMITTENDA (Lat. for admitting bail). A writ directed to $a$ bishop who refused to alluw a prisoner to go at large on giving sufficient bail, requiring him to admit him to bail. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 63 c.
DE COMMUNI DIVIDENDO. In Civil Law. A writ of partition of common property. See Communi Dividendo.

DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO. A writ issuing from the English court of chancery for the arrest of a defendant who is in contempt of the ecclesiastical court. 1 Nev. & P. 685-689; 5 Dowl. 213, 646; 5 Q. B. 335.
DE CURIA CLAUDENDA (Lat. of enclosing a court). An obsolete writ, to require a defendant to fence in his court or land about his house, where it was left open to the injury of his neighbor's freehold. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 314; 6 Mass. 90.
DE DOMO REPARANDA (Lat.). The name of an ancient common-law writ, by which one tenant in common might compel his cotenant to concur in the expense of repairing the property held in common. 8 Barnew. & C. 269; 1 T'homas, Cuke, Litt. 216, note 17, and p. 787.
DE DONIS, THE STATUTE (more fully, De Donis Conditionalibus; concerning cunditional gifts). The statute Edw. I. c. 1 .
The object of the statute was to prevent the alienation of cstates by those who held only a part of the estate in such a manner as to defeat the estate of those who were to take subsequently. By introducing perpetuities, it built up great estates and strengthened the power of the barons. See Bacon, Abr. Estates Tail; 1 Cruise, Dig. 70; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 271.
DE DOTE ASSIGNANDA (Lat. for assigning dower). A writ commanding the king's escheator to assign dower to the widow of a tenant in capite. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 263 c.
DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET (Lat. of dower in that whereof shichas none). A writ of dower which lay for a widow where no part of her dower had been assigned to a widow. It is now much disused; but a form closely resembling it is still much used in the United States. 4 K ent, Comm. 63; Stearns, Real Act. 302; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 230.
DE EJECTIONE FIRMA. A writ which lay at the suit of the tenant for years against the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or stranger who had himself deprived the tenant of the occupation of the land during his term. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 199. Originally lying to recover damages only, it came to be used to recover the rest of the term, and then generally the possession of lands. Involving, in the question of who should have possession, the further question of who had the title, it gave rise to the modern action of ejectment. Bronke, Abr.; Adams, Ejectment; 3 Shars wood, Blackst. Comm. 199 et seq.
de estoverits habendis (Lat. to obtain estovers). A writ which lay for a woman divorced a mensa et thoro to recover her alimony or estovers. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 441.

DE EXONERATIONE SECT再. A writ to free the king's ward from suit in any court lower than the court of common pleas during the time of such wardship.

DE FACTO. Actually; in fact; in deed. A term used to denote a thing actually done. An officer de facto is one who performs the duties of an office with apparent right, and under clains and color of an appointment, but without being actually qualified in law so to act. 37 Me .423.
An officer in the actual exercise of executive power would be an officer de facto, and as such distinguished from one who, being legally entitled to such power, is deprived of it,-sueh a one being an officer de jure only. An officer holding without strict legal authority. 2 Kent, Comm. 295. An officer de facto is frequently considered an officer de jure, and legal validity allowed bis official nets. 10 Serg. & R. Penn. 250; 11 id. 411; 1 Coxe, N. J. $318 ; 10$ Mass. 290; 15 id. 180; 5 Piek. Mass. 487; 25 Conn. 278; 5 Wisc. 308; 24 Barb. N. Y. 587 ; 37 Me. 423; 19 N. H. 115 ; 2 Jones. No. C. 124; 2 Swan, Tenn. 87
An offieer de facto is primâ facie one de jure. 21 Ga . 217.
A wife de facto only is one whose marriage is voidable by decree. 4 Kent , Comm. 36 .
Blockade de facto is one actually maintained. 1 Kont, Comm. 44 et seq.
DE HITRETICO COMBURENDO (Lat. for burning a heretic). A writ which lay where a heretic had been convicted of heresy, had abjured, and had relapsed into heresy. Said to be very ancient. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 46.

DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO (Lat. for replevying a man). A writ which lies to replevy a man out of prison, or out of the custody of a private person, upon giving security to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcoming to answer any charge against him. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 66; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 129. The statute-whieh had gone nearly ont of use, having been superseded by the writ of haleas corpus-has been revived within a few years in some of the United States in an anmended and more effectual form. 1 Kent, Comm. 404, n.; Mass. Gen. Stat. c. $144, ~ & 42$ et seq.

DE INCREMENTO (Lat. of increase). Costs de incremento, eosts of increase,-that is, which the court assesses in addition to the damages established by the jury. See Costs dis Incremento.

DE INJURIA (Lat. The full form is, $d e$ injuria sua propria absque tali causa, of his own wrong without such cause; or, where part of the plea is admitted, absque residuo causce, withnut the rest of the canse).

In Pleading. The replication by which in an action of tort the plaintiff denies the effect of excuse or justification offered by the defendant.
2. It can only be used where the defendant pleads matter merely in excuse and not in justification of his act. It is confined to those instances in whieh the plea neither denies the original existence of the right which the defendant is charged with having violated, nor alleges that it has been released or extinguished, but sets up some new matter as a sufficient excuse or cause for that which would otherwise and in its own nature be wrongful. It cannot, therefore, be properly used when the defondant's plea alleges any matter in the nature of title, interest, authority, or matter of record. 8 Coke, 66; 1 Bos. & P. 76; 4 Johns. N. Y. 159, note; 5 id. 112 ; 12 id. 491 ; 1 Wend. N.Y. 126; 8 id. 1 29 ; 25 Vt. 328; Stephen, Plead. 576.
3. The English and American cases are at variance as to what constitutes euch legal anthority as cannot be replied to by de injuria. Most of the American cases hold that this replication is bad whenever the defendant insists upon a right, no matter from what source it may be derived; and this seems to be the more consistent doctrine.

If the plea in any sense justifies the act, instead of merely excusing it, de imjuria cannot be uscd. 4 Wend. N. Y. 577; 1 IIill, N. Y. 78; 13 Ill. 80. The English cases, on the other hand, hold that an anthority derived from a court not of record may be traversed l,y the replication de injuria. 3 Barnew. & Ad. 2.

The plaintiff may confess that portion of a plea whieh alleges an authority in law or an interest, title, or matter of record, and aver that the defendant did the aet in question de injuria sua propria absque residuo causa, of his own wrong without the residue of the cause alleged. 1 Hill, N. Y. 78; 2 Am. Law Reg. 240 ; Stephen, Plead. 276.
4. The replication de injuria puts in issue the whole of the defence contained in the plea; and evidence is, therefore, admissible to disprove any material averment in the whole plea. 8 Coke, $60 ; 11$ East, 451; 10 Bingh. 157 ; 8 Wend. N. Y. 129. In England, howcver, by a uniform course of decisions in their courts, evidenee is not admissible under the replication de injuria to a plea, for instance, of moderate castigavit or molliter manus imposuit, to prove that an excess of force was used by the defendant; lut it is necessary that such excess should be specially pleaded. 'l'here must be a new assignment. 2 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 338; 1 Bingh. 317; 1 Bingh. N. c. $380 ; 3$ Mees. & W. Exeh. 150 .
5. In this country, on the other hand, though some of the earlier cases followed the English doctrine, later cases decide that the plaintiff need not plead speeially in such a case. It is held that there is no new cause to assign when the aet complained of is the same which is attempted to be justified by the plea. Therefore the fact of the aet being moderate is a part of the plea, and is one of the points brought in issue by de injuria; and evidence is admissible to prove an excess. 15 Mass. 351; 25 Wend. N. Y. 371; 2 Vt. 474 ; 24 id. 218; 15 Mass. 365 ; 1 Zabr. N. J. 183.

Though a direct traverse of scveral points going to make up a single defence in a plea will be bad for duplicity, yet the general replication de injuria cannot be objected to on this ground, although putting the same number of points in issue. 3 Birnew. & Ad. 1; 25 Vt. $330 ; 2$ Bingh. n. c. $579 ; 3$ Tyrwh. 491. Hence this mode of replying has a great advantage when a special plea has been resorted to, since it enables the plaintiff to traverse all the facts contained in any single point, instead of being obliged to rest his cause on an issue joined on one fact alone.
6. In England it is held that de injuria may be replied in assumpsit. 2 Bingh. n. c. 579.

In this country it las been held that the use of de injuria is limited to actions of tort. 2 Pick. Mass. 357. Whether de injuria can be used in actions of replevin seems, even in England, to be a disputed question. The following cases decide that it may be so used:-9 Bingh. 756; 3 Barnew. & Ad. 2; contra, 1 Chitty, Plead. 5th ed. 622.

The improper use of de injuria is now held to be only a ground of general demurrer. 6 Dowl. 50 E . Where it is improperly employed, the defect will be cured by a verdict. 5 Johns. N. Y. 112; Hob. 76; 1 T. Raym. 50.

DE JUDAISMO, STATUTUM. The name of a statute passed in the reign of Edward I., which enacted severe and absurd penalties against the Jews. Barrington, Stat. 197.

The Jcws were exceedingly oppressed during the midule ages throughout Christendom, and are so still in some countries. DEAD BODY. A corpse.
2. To take up a dead body without lawful authority, even for the purpose of dissection, is a misdemeanor, for which the offender may be indicted at common law. 1 Russell, Crimes, 414; 1 Dowl. & R. 13; Russ. & 1.. 366, n. b; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 35. This offence is punished by statute in New Hampshire, N . H. Laws, 339, 340 ; in Vermont, Vt. Laws, 368, c. 361 ; in Massachusetts, Gen. Siat. c. 165, 237 ; 8 Pick. Mass. $370 ; 11$ id. $350 ; 19$ id. 304; in New York, 2 Rev. Stat. 688. Sce 1 Russ. 414, n. A. There can be no larceny of a dead body, 2 East, Pl. Cr. 652; 12 Coke, 106, but may be of the clothes or shroud upon it. I3 Pick. Mass. 402; 12 Coke, 113 : Coke, 3d Inst. 110.
3. In a very recent English case, the defendant had removed, without leave, the bodies of deceased relatives from the burial-ground of a congregation of Protestant dissenters; and it was beld that he was guilly of $a$ misdemeanor at common law, and that it was no defence to such a charge that bis motives were pious and laudable. 1 Dearsl. & B. Cr. Cas. 160. But where the master of a workhouse, having as such the lawful possession of the bodies of paupers who died therein, and who therefore was authorized under the statute to permit the bodies of such paupers to undergo anatomical examination, unless to his knowledge the deceased person had expressed in his lifetime, in the manner therein mentioned, his desire to the contrary, "or unless the surviving husband or wife, or any known relative, of the deceased person, should require the body to be interred without such examination," in order to prevent the relatives of the deceased paupers from making this requirement, and to lead them to believe that the hodies were buried without dissection, showed the bodies to the relatives in coffins, and cansed the appearance of a funeral to be gone through, and, laving ly this frand prevented the relatives from making the requirement, then sold the bodies for dissection, he was held not to be indictable at common law. I Dearsl. & B. Cr. Cas. 590.
4. The preventing a dead body from being buried is also an indictable offence. 2 'Term, 734; 4 East, 460; 1 Russell, Crimes, 415, 416, note A. To inter a dead body found in a river, it seems, would render the offender liable to an indictment for a misdemeanor, unless he first sent for the coroner. 1 Keny. 550 . The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant is bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable misdemeanor, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 325.

DEAD-BORN. A dead-born child is to be considered as if it had never been conceived or born; in other words, it is presumed it never had life, it being a maxim of the common law that mortuus exitus non rst exitus. Coke, Litt. 29 b. See 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 35 ; Domat, liv. prél. t. 2, s. 1, nn. 4, 6; 4 Ves. Ch. 334.

This is also the doctrine of the civil law. Dig. 50. 16. 129. Non nasci, et natum mori, pari sunt (not to be born, and to be born dead, are equivalent). Mortuus exitus non est exitus (a dead birth is no birth). La. Civ. Code, art. 28.

DEAD FREIGHT. The amount paid by a charterer tor that part of the vessel's capacity which he does not occupy althongh he has contracted for it.

Wher the charterer of a vessel has slippel part of the goods on board, and is not roady to ship the remainder, the master, onless restrained by his special contract, may tako other goods on board, and the amount which is not supplied, required to complete tho cargo, is considered dead freight. The dead freight is to be calculated according to tho actual capacity of the ressel. 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 399; 2 Stark, 450.

DEAD Letters. Letters transmitted through the mails aceording to direction, and remaining for a specified time uncalled for by tbe persons addressed, are called dead letters.

By the act to amend the laws relating to the postoffice department, Mareh 3, 1863, chap. 71 , the pust-master-general is anthorized to regulate the times at which undelivered letters shall he sent to the dead-letter offioe, nnd for their return to the writers; and to have published a list of nodelivercd letters --by writing, posting, ur advertising-in his diseretion. If advertised, it must be in the $n$ nwsprier of largest circulation regnlarly puhlished within the delivery. If no daily paper is pubtished within the delivery, then the list may be advertised ia the daily paper of adjuining delivery. One cent to be paid the publisher for each letter advertised. Letters addressed in a foreign language muy lue ailvertised in the journal of that language nost nsed. Such journal must be in the same or adjoining delivery.
Dead letters containing valuables shall he registered in the department; and if they cannot bo delivered to person addressed or to writer. the contents, so far as available, shall be included in receipts of department, subjcet to reclamation within four years; and such letters, containing valuables nut available, shall be dispused of as the postmastergeneral shall direct.
Foreign dead letters remain subject to trcaty stipulations.
The pestage on a returned dead letter is three eents, the eingle rate, unless it is registered as valuable, when double rates are charged.
By the act of July 1, 1864, c. 197, scet. 13, the contents of dead letters which have been registered in the department, so far as available, shall be need to promote tho efficiency of the dead-letier oflice.

DEAD MAN'S PART. That portion of the personal estate of a person deceased which by the custom of Lindon became the administrator's.
If the decedent left wife and children, this was one-third of the residue after deducting the widow's chamber; if only a widow, or only children, it was cne-half, 1 P . Will. Ch. 341 ; Salk. 246 ; if neither widow nor children, it was the whole. 2 Show. 175. This provision was repealed by the statute 1 Jac. 11. c. 17, and the same made sulject to the statute of distributions. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Cumm. 5, 8.
DEAD'S PART. In Scotch Law. The part remaining over beyond the slares secured to the widow and children by law. Of this the testator had the unqualified disposal. Stair, Inst. lib. iii. tit. 4, 824 : Bell, Dict.; Paterson, Comp. ${ }_{28}^{2} 674,848,902$.
DEAD-PLEDGE. A mortgage.
DEAF AND DUMB. No definition is requisite, as the words are sufficienly known. A person deaf and dumb is doli capax; lut with such persons who have not been educated, and who cannot communicate their ideas in writing, a difficulty sometimes arises on the trial.
2. A oase ocourred of a woman doaf and dumb who was charged with a crinue. She was brouglit to the bar, and the indiciment was then read to her; and the question, in the usual forn, was put, Guilty or not guilty? The counsel for the prisoner then rose, and stated that he could not allow his client to plead to the indictment until it was explained to her that she was at liberty to plead guilty or not guilty. This was attempted to be donc, but was found inpossible, and she was diseharged from the lar simpliciter. When the party indicted is deaf and dumb, he may, if he understands the use of signs, be arraigned, and the meaning of the clerk who addresses him conveyed to him by signs, and his signs in reply explained to the court, so as to justify his trial and the infliction of punisnment. 14 Mass. 207; 1 Leach, $\mathbf{C r}$ Cas. (4th ed.) 102; 1 Chitty, Crim. Lav, 417.
3. A person deaf and dumb may be examined as a witness, provided he can be sworn; that is, if he is capable of understanding the terms of the oath, and assents to it, and if, after be is sworn, be can convey his ideas, with or without an interpreter, to the court and jury. Phillipps, Ev. 14. If he is able to communicate his ideas perfectly by writing, he will be required to adopt that as the more satisfactory method; but, if his knowledge of that nethod is imperfect, he will be permitted to testify by means of signs. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. & 366.

DEAF, DUMB, AND BLIND. A man born deaf, dumb, and blind is considered an jdiot (q.v.). 1 Blackstone, Comm. 304; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 233; 2 Bouvier, Inst. u. 2111.

DEAFFOREST. In Old English Law. To discharge from being forest. 'I'o free from forest laws.

DEAN. In Ecclestastical Law. An ecclesiastical officer, who derives his name from the fact that he presides over ten canons, or prebendaries, at least.

There are several kinds of deans, namely: deans of chapters; deans of peculiars; rural deans; deans in the colleges; honorary deans; deans of provinces.

DEAN AND CHAPTER. In Eccleslastical Law. The council of a bishop, to assist him with their advice in the religious and also in the temporal affairs of the see. 3 Coke, 75; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 382; Coke, Litt. 103, 300 ; Tormes de la Ley; 2 Burns, Eccl. Law, 120 .

DEAN OF THE ARCHESS. The presiding judge of the court of arches. He is also an assistant judge in the court of admiralty. 1 Kent, Comm. 371; 3 Stephen, Comm. 7E7.

DEATH. The cessation of life. The ceasing to exist.

Civil death is the state of a person who, though possessing natural life, has lost all his civil rights and as to them, is considered as dead.

A person convicted and attainted of felony and sentenced to the state prison for life is, in the , state of New York, in consequence of the act of 29th of March, 1799, and by virtue of the conviction and sentence of imprisonment for life, to be considered as civilly dead. 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 118; 4 id. 228, 260; Laws of N. Y. Sess. 24, c. 49, ss. 29, 30, 31. And a similar doctrine anciently prevailed in other cases at common law in England. See Cuke, Litt. 133; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 132, n.

Natural death is the cessation of life.
It is also used to denote a death which occurs by the unassisted operation of natural catuses, as distingnished from a violent death, or one caused or accelerated by tho interference of human agency.

In Medlcal Jurisprudence. The cause, phenomena, and evidence of violent death are of importance.
2. An ingeninus theory as to the cause of death has been brought forward by Philip, in his work on Sleep and Death, in which he olaims that to the highest form of life three orders of functions are necessary,-viz.: the muscular, nervous, and sensorial; that of these the two former are independent of the latter, and continue in action for a whils after its cessation; that they might thus continue always, but for the fact that they arc dependent on the process of respiration; that this process is a voluntary act, depending upon the will, and that this latter is embraced in the sensorial function. In this view, death is the suspension or removal of the sensorial function, and that leads to the suspension of tho others througb the cessation of respiration. Philip, Sleep & D.; Dean, Med. Jur. 413 et aeq.
3. Its phenomena, or signs and indications. Real is distinguishable from apparent death by several signs, some more conclusive than others: 1, cessation of the circulation; 2, cessation of the respiration; 3 , the facies Hippocratii,-wrinkled brow, hollow eyes, pointed nose, hollow wrinkled temples, elevated ears, relaxed lips, sunken cheek-bones. and wrinkled and pointed chin; 4, collapsed and softened state of the eye; 5 , pallor and loss of elasticity in the skin; 6 , insensibility and immobility; 7, extinction of muscular irritability ; 8, extinction of animal heat; 9 , muscular rigidity; and, 10 , the supervening of putrefaction, which depends something upon age, sex, condition of the body, and cause of death,-also upon period, place, and mode of interment. The process is increased by a high temperature, moisture, and access to air. Dean, Med. Jur. 418 et seq
4. Its evidence when produced by violence. This involves the inquiry as to the cause of death in all cases of the finding of bodies divested of life through unknown agencies. It seeks to gather all the evidence that can be furnished by the body and surrounding circumstances bearing upon this difficult and at best doubtful subject. It more immediately concerns the duties of the coroner, but is liable to come up subsequently for a more thorough and searching investigation. As this is a subject of great, general, and growing interest, no apology is deemed necessary for presenting briefly some of the points to which inquiry should be directed, together with a reference to authorities where the doctrines are more thoroughly discussed.

The first point for determination is whether the death was the act of God or the result of violence. Sudden death is generally produced by a powerful invasion of the living forces that develop themselves in the heart, brain, or lungs,-the first being called syncope, the second opoplexy, and the third asphyxia. Dean, Med. Jur. 426 et seq.

The two last are the most important to bo understood in connection with the subject of persons found dead.
5. In death from apoplexy, the sudden invasion of the brain destroys innervation, by which the circulation is arrested, each sido of the heart containing its due proportion of blood, and the cavities are all distended from loss of power in the heart to propel its contents. Death from apoplexy is disclosed by a certain apoplectic make or form of body, consisting of a large head, short neck, and VoI. I. -28 lethoric frame, from the posture in which te body is found, and the appearances reealed by dissection, particularly in the head.
6. Death by asphyxia is still more importnt to be understood. It is limited to cases there the heart's action is made to cease arough the interruption of the respiration. $t$ is accomplished by all the possible modes f excluding atmospheric air from the lungs. The appearances in the body indicating death rom asphyxia are, violet discolorations, eyes rominent, firm, and brilliant, cadaveric riidity early and well marked, venous system f the brain full of blood, lungs distended rith thick dark-colored blood, liver, spleen, nd kidneys gorged, right cavities of the heart istended, left almost empty.
Many indications as to whether the death $s$ the act of God or the result of violsnce aay be gathered from the position and cirumstances in which the body is found. As horough an examination as possible should re first made of the body before changing its rosition or that of any of the limbs or varyng in any respect its relations with surounding bodies. This is more necessary if he death has been apparently caused by vounds. Then the wounds require a special xamination befors any change is made in rosition, in order from their nature, characer, form, and appearance to determine the nstrument by which they were inflicted, and ulso their agency in causing the death. Their elations with external objects may indicate he direction from which they were dealt, und, if incised, their extent, depth, vessels levered, and hæmorrhage produced may be ionclusive as to the cause of death.
7. A thorough examination should be made if the clothes worn by the deceased, and any parts torn or presenting any unusual appearince should be carefully noted. A list should re made of all articles found on the body, und of their state and condition. The body tself should undergo a very careful examinaion. This should have refierence to the color If the skin, the temperature of the body, ;he existence and extent of the cadaveric igidity of the muscular system, the state of the eyes and of the sphincter muscles, noting it the same time whatever swellings, ecchynosis, or livid, black, or yellow spots, wounds, ulcers, contusions, fractures, or luxation, may be present. The fluids that have sxuded from the nose, mouth, ears, sexual organs, etc. should be carefully examined; and when the deceased is a female it will be proper to examins the sexual organs with sare, with a view of ascertaining whether before death the crime of rape had or had not been committed.
8. Another point to which the attention should be directed is the state of the body in reference to the extent and amount of decomposition that may have taken place in it, with the view of determining when the death took place. This is sometimes important to identify the murderer. The pcriod after death at which putrefaction supervenes became a subject of judicial examination in Desha's case, reported in Dean's Med. Jur. 423 et $s e q$., and more fully in 2 Beck's Med. Jur. 44 et seq. Another interesting inquiry, where persons are found drowned, is presented in the inquiry as to the existence of adipocere, a compound of wax and fat of a yellowish-white color, which is formed in bodies immersed in water in from four to eight weeks from the cessation of life. Taylor Med. Jur., Hartshorn ed. 542.
9. Another point towards which it is proper to direct examination regards the situation and condition of the place where the body is found, with the view of determining two facts:-first, whether it be a case of homicide, suicide, or visitation of God; and, second, whether, if onc of homicide, the murder occurred there or at some other piace, the body having been brought there and left. The points to be noted here are whether the ground appears to have been disturbed from its natural condition; whether there are any, and what, indications of a struggle; whether there are any marks of footsteps, and, if any, their size, number, the direction to which they lead, and whence they came; whether any traces of blood or hair can be found; and whether any, or what, instruments or weapons, which could have caused death, are found in the vicinity; and all such instruments should be carefully preserved, so that they may be identified. Dean, Med. Jur. 257 ; 2 Beck, Med. Jur. 107, n., 136, 250.

As the decision of the question relating to the cause of death is often important and difficult to determine, it may be proper to notice some of its signs and indications in a few of the most prominent cases where it is induced by violence.
10. Death by drowning is caused by asphyxia from suffocation, hy nervous or syncopal asphyxia, or by asphyxia from cerel)ral congestion.
In the first; besides other indications of asphysia, the face is pale or violet, a frothy foam at the mouth, froth in the larynx, trachea, and bronchi, water in the tracliea andsometimes, in the ramifications of the bronchia, and also in the stomach. In the second, the face and skin are pale, the trachea empty, lungs and brain natural, no water in the stomach. In the third, the usual indications of death by apoplexy are found on examination of the brain.
11. Death by hanging is produced by asphysia suspending respiration by compressing the larynx, by apoplexy pressing upon the veins and preventing the return of blood from the head, by fracture of the cervical vertebre, laceration of trachea or larynx, or rupture of the ligaments of the neck, or by compressing the nerves of the neck. The signs and indications depend upon the cause of death. Among these are, face livid and swollen, lips distorted, eyelids swollen, eyes red and projecting, tongue enlarged, livid, compressed, froth about the lips and nostrils, a dsep ecchymosed mark of the cord about he neck, sometimes ecchymosed patches on cifferent parts of the body, fingers contracted or clenohed, and the body retaining its animal heat longer than in other modes of death.
12. Death by strangulation presents much the same appearances, the mark of the cord being lower down on the neck, more horizontal, and plainer and more distinctly ecchymosed.

Death by cold leaves few traces in the system. Pale surface, general congestion of internal organs, sometimes effused serum in the ventricles of the brain.

Death by burning presents a narrow white line surrounding the burnt spot; external to that, one of a deep-red tint, running by degrees into a diffused redness. This is succeeded in a few minutes hy blisters filled with serum.
13. Death by lightning usually exhihits a eontused or lacerated wound where the electric fluid entered and passed out. Sometimes an extensive ecchymosis appears, -more commonly on the back, along the course of the spinal marrow.

Death by starvation produces general emaciation; eyes and cheeks sunken ; hones projecting; face pale and ghastly; eyes red and open; skin, mouth, and fauces dry; stomach and intestines empty; gall-bladder large and distended; hody exhaling a fetid odor; heart, lungs, and large vessels collapsed ; early commencement of the putrefactive process. These and all other questions relating to persons found dead will be found fully discussed in works on medical jurisprudence.
14. The Legal Consequences of.

Persons who have been once shown to have been in life are presumed thas to continue until the contrary is shown: so that it lies on the party asserting the death to make proof of it. 2 East, 312; 2 Rolle, 461.

But proof of a long-continued absence unheard from and unexplained will lay a foundation for presumption of death. Various periods of time are found in the adjudged cases. Thus, such presumption arises ariter twenty-seven years. 3 Brown, C. C. 510. So, also, twenty years, sixteen years, 5 Ves. Ch. 458; fourteen years, 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 390 ; twelve years. 18 Johns. N. Y. 141. The general rule, as now understood, is that the presumption of the duration of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the time when he was last known to be living. 1 Phillipps, Ev. Cowen & H. ed. 197; 2 Cowen & II. Notec, 489; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 841 ; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 263 ; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 86. It seems that such continued ahsence for seven years from the particular state of his residence, without showing an absence from the United States, is sufficient. 10 Pick. Mass. 515: 1 Rawle, Penn. 373; 1 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 278; 1 Penn. N. J. 167; 2 Bay, So. C. 476.
15. Questions of great doubt and difficulty have arisen where several persons, respectively entitled to inherit from one another, bappen to perish all together by the samc erent, such as a shipwreck, a battle, or a conflagration, without any possibility of ascertaining who died first. In such cases the French civil code and the civil code of Louisiana lay down rules (the latter copying from the former) which are deduced from the probabilities resulting from the strength; age, and difference of sex of the parties.

If those thus perishing together were under fifteen, the eldest shall be presumed the survivor. If they were all above sisty, the youngest shall be presumed the survivor. If some were under fifteen and others above sixty, the former shall be presumed the survivors. If those who have perished together had completed the age of fifteen and were under sixty, the male shall he presumed the survivor where the ages are equal or the difference does not exceed one year. If they were of the fame sex, that presumption shall be admitted which opens the succession in the order of nature; and thus the younger must be presumed to have survived the elder. French Civil Ccde, art. 720, 721, 7E2; La. Civ. Code, art. 980, 931, 932, 933.
16. The English common law has never adopted these provisions, or gone into the refinement of reasoning upon which they are based. It requires the survivorship of two or more to be proved by facts, and not by any settled legal rule or prescribed presumption. In some of the cases that have arisen involving this lare question of survivorship, the court have advised a compromise, denying that there was any legal principle upon which it could be decided. In others the decision has been that they all died together, and that none could transmit rights to others. 1 W. Blackst. 640; Fcarne, Posth. Works, 38 , 39; 2 Phill. 201, 266 ; Croke Eliz. 503; 1 Metc. Mass. 308; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 748 ; 5 Barnew. & Ad. 91; 1 Younge & C. Ch. $121 ; 1$ Curt. C. C. 405, 429.

1\%. As to contracts. These are, in general. not affected by the death of either party. The executors or administrators of the decedent are required to fulfil all his engagements, and may enforce all those in his favor. But to this sule there are the following exceptions, in which the contracts are terminated by the death of one of the parties:-

The contract of marriage. See Marriage.
The contract of partnership. Sce Partnership.
18. Those contracts which are altogether personal: as, where the ceceased had agreed io accompany the other party to the contract on a journcy, or to serve another, Pothier, Obl. c. 7, art. 3, 882,3 , or to instruct an apprentice. Bacon, Abr. Executor, P; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 82; Hammond, Partn. 157; 1 Rawle, Penn. 61 ; also an instance of this species of contract in 2 Barnew. & Ad. 303. In all those cases where one is acting for another and by his authority, such as agencies and powers of attorney, where the agency or power is not coupled with an interest, the death of the party works an immediate revocation. Wherever any express or implied authority is being exercised by another, the death of the party giving it is a revocation. 30 Vt . 11.

As to torts. In general, when the tort feasor or the party injured dies, the cause of action dies with him; but when the deceased might have waived the tort and maintained assumpsit against the defendant, his personal representative may do the same thing. See Actio Personalis Moritur cum Persona, where this subject is morg fully examined. When a person accused and guilty of crime dies before trial, no proceedings can be had against his reprosentatives or bis estate.
19. As to inheritance. By the death of a person ssised of real estate or possessed of personal property, his property real and personal, after satisfying his debts, vests, when he has made a will, as he has directed by that instrument; but if be diss intestate, his real estate goes to his heirs at law under the statuts of descents, and his personal to his administrators, to be distributed to the next of kin, under the statute of distributions.

In suits. The death of a defendant discharges the special bail, Tidd, Pract. 243 ; but when he dies after the return of the $c a . s a$. and befors it is file 1 , the bail are fixed. 6 Term, 28t; 5 Binn. Penn. 332, 338; 2 Mass. 485; 12 Wheat. 604; 4 Jobns. N. Y. 407 ; 4 N. II. 20.

Death-bed Deed. A deed made by one who wras at the time sick of a disease from which he afterwards died. Boll, Dict. deater's Part. See Dead's Part; Dead Man's Part.

DEBEITTURE. A certificate given, in pursuance of law, by the collector of a port of entry, for a certain sum duo by the United States, payable at a time therein mentioned, to an importer for drawback of duties on merchandise imported and exportod ly him, provided the duties arising on the importation of the said merchandise shall have been discharged prior to the time aforesaid. See Act of Congr. March 2, 1799, s. 80; Encyclopédic; Dane, Abr. Indes.
debet et detinet (Lat. he owes and withholds). In Pleading. An action of ${ }^{2} e b t$ is said to be ia the debet et detinet when it is alleged that the dcfendant owes and unjustly withbolds or detains the debt or thing in qucstion.
The action is so brought betwesn the contracting parties. See Detinet.

DEBET ET SOLET (Lat. he owes and is used to). Where a man sues in a writ of right or to recover any right of which he is for the first time disseised, as of a suit at a mill or in case of a writ of quod permittat, he brings his writ in the debet et solet. Reg. Orig. 144 a; Termes de la Ley; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 122, M.

DEBIT. A term used in book-keeping, to express the left-hand page of the ledger, to which are carried all the articles supplied or paid on the subject of an account, or that are charged to that account. It also signifies the balance of an account.

DEBITA FUNDI (Lat.). In Scotch Law. Debts secured on land. Bell, Diot.
DEBITA LAICORUM (Lat.). Debts of the laity. Those which may be recovered in civil courts.

DEBITUM IN PRASENTI SOL. VENDUM IN FUTURO (Lat.): An obligation of which the binding force is complets and perfect, but of which the performance cannot be required till some future period.
On such a debt an action may be brtught. 13 Pet. 494; 11 Mass. 270.
DEBT (Lat. debere, to owe; debitum, something owed). In Contracts. A sum of money due by certain and express agreement. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 154.

All that is due a man under any form of obligation or promise. 3 Metc. Mass. 522.

Any claim for money. Penn. Stat. March 21, 1806, & 5.

Active debt. One due to a person. Uned in the civil law.
Doubtful debt. One of which the payment is uncertain. Clef des Lois Romaines.

Hypothecary debt. One which is a lien upon an estate.
Judgment debt. One which is evidenced by matter of record.

Liquid debt. One which is immediately and unconditionally due.
Passive debt. One which a person owes.
Privilejed debt. One which is to be paid before othors in case a debtor is insolvent.
The privilege may result from the character of the creditor, as where a debt is due to the United States; or the nature of the debt, as funcral expenses, ett. See Preferinca; Privileji ; Lien ; Priority; Distribution.
2. A deibt may be evidenced by matter of record, by a contract under seal, or by a simple contract. The distinguishing and necessary feature is that a fixed and specific quantity is owing and no future valuation is rcquired to settle it. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 154; 2 Hill, N. Y. $£ 20$.

Doltts are discharged in various ways, but principally by payment. See Accord and Satisfaction; Bankruptcy; Compensation; Confusion; Defeasance; Delegation; Discinarge of a Contract; Lxtinction ; Extingulsiment; Former Recovery; Lapee of Time; Novation; Payment; Release; Rescission; Sct-Opr.

In Practice. $\Lambda$ form of action which lies to recover a sum certain. 2 Greenleaf; Ev. $\%$ 279.

It lies wherever the sum due is certain or ascertained in such a manner as to he readily reduced to a certainty, without regard to the manner in which the obligation was incurred or is eviden ed. 3Sneed, Tenn. 145; 1 Duteb. N. J. 506; 26 Miss. 521 ; 3 MeLean, C. C. 150 ;. 2 A. K. Marsh. Ку. 264; 1 Mas. C. c. 243.

It is thus distinguished from assumpsit, which lies as well where the sum due is uneertain as where it is certain, snd from covengnt, which lies only upon eontraets evidenced in a certain manner.
It is said to lie in the debet and detinet (when it is stated that the defendant owes and detains) or in the detinet (when it is stated merely that he detains).

Deht in the detinet for goods differs from detinue, because it is not essential in this action, as in detinue, that the specific property in the goods should have been vested in the plaintiff at the time the action is brought. Dy. $24 b$.

It is used for the recovery of a debt eo nomine and in numero; though damages, which are in most instances merely numiual, are usually awarded for the detention. 1 H. Blackst. 550; Cowp. 588.
3. The action lies in the debet and detinet to recover money due, on a record or a judgment of a court of record, Salk. 109; 17 Serg. & R. Penn. 1; 27 Vt. 20; 10 Tex. 24; 21 Vt. $569 ; 1$ Dev. Ky. 247; 7 Leigh, Va. 604; or against him on the testator's contracts. 8 Wheat. 642. The declaration, when the action is founded on a record, need not aver consideration. When it is founded on a specialty, it must contain the specialty, 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 238, but nced not aver consideration, 16 III. 79; but when the action is for rent, the deed need not be declared on. 14 N. H. 414. When it is founded on a simple contract, the consideration must be averred; and a liability or agreement, though not necessarily an express promise to pay, must be stated. 2 Term, 28, 30.
5. The plea of nil debet is the general issue when the action is on a simple contract, on statutes, or where a specialty is matter of inducement merely. 2 Mass. 521; 5 id. 266 ; 11 Johns. N. The judgment is, generally, that the plaintiff receive his debt and costs when for the plaintiff, and that the defendant receive his costs when for the defendant. 20 I11. 120; 1 Iowa, 99 ; 4 How. Miss. 40; 3 Penn. St. 437. See 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 263; 9 id. 156. See Judgment.

DEBTEEE. One to whom a debt is due; a creditor: as, debtee executor. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 18.

DEBTOR. One who owes a debt; he who may be constrained to pay what he owes.
DECANATUS, DECANIA, DECANA (Lat.). A town or tithing, consisting originally of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings compose a hundred. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 114.

Decanatus, a deanery, a company of ten. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.

Decania, Decana, the territory under the charge of a dean.

DECANUS (Lat.). A dean; an officer having charge of ten persons. In Constantinople, an officer who has charge of the burial of the dead. Nov. Jus. 43.59; DuCange. The term is of extensive use, being found with closely related meanings in the old Roman, the civil, ecclesiastical, and old European law. It is used of civil and ecclesiastical as well as military affairs. There were a var riety of decani.

Decanus monasticus, the dean of a monastery.

Decanus in majori ecclesia, dean of a cathedral church.

Decanus militaris, a military captain of ten soldiers.

Decanus episcopi, a dean presiding over ten parishes.

Decanus friborgi, dean of a fribourg, tithing, or association of ten inhabitants. A Saxon officer, whose duties were those of an inferior judicial officer. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.

DECAPITATION (Lat. de, from, caput, a head). The punishment of putting a person to death by taking off his head.

DECEDENT. A deceased person.
The significstion of the word has become more extended than its strict etymological meaningStrictly taken, it denotes a dying person, but is always used in the more extended sense given, denoting any deceased person, testate or intestate.

DECEIT. A fraudulent misrepresentation or contrivance, by which one man de-ceives another, who has no means of detecting the fraud, to the injury and damage of the latter.
2. Fraud, or the intention to deceive, is the very essence of this injury; for if the party misrepresenting was himself mistaken, no blame can attach to him. The representafion must be made malo animo; but whether or not the party is himself to gain by it is wholly immaterial.

It may be by the deliberate assertion of a falsehood to the injury of another, by failure to disclose a latent defect, or by concealing an apparent defect. See Caveat Emptor.
'The party deceived must have been in a situation such as to have no means of detecting the deceit.
3. The remedy for a deceit, unless the right of action has been suspended or discharged, is by an action of trespass on the case. The old writ of deceit was brought for acknowledging a fine, or the like, in another name, and, this being a perversion of law to an evil purpose and a high contempt, the act was fiid contra pacem, and a fine imposed upon the offender. See Brooke, Abr. Disceit; Viner, Abr. Disceit.
When two or more persons unite in a deceit upon another, they may be indicted for a conspiracy. See, generally, 2 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 2321-2329; Skin. 119; Sid. 375; 3 Term, 5265; 1 Lev. 247; 1 Strange, 583; 1 Rolle, Abr. 106; Comyns, Dig. DECEM TALES (Lat. ten such). In Practice. A writ requiring the sheriff to appoint ten like men (apponere decem tales), to make up a full jury when a sufficient number do not appear.

DECEMVIRI LITIBUS JUDICANDIS. Ten judges (five being senators and five knights), appointed by Augustus to act as judges in certain cases. Calvinus, Lex.; Anthon, Rom. Ant.

DECENNARIUS (Lat.). One who beld one-half a virgate of land. DuCange. One of the ten freeholders in a decennary. DuClange; Calvinus, Lex.

Decennier. One of the decennarii, or ten freeholders making up a tithing. Spelman, Gloss.; DuCange, Decenna; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 114. See Decanus.

DECENNARY (Lat. decem, ten). A dis-. trict originally containing ten men with their families.

King Alfred, for the better preaervation of the peace, divided England into counties, the counties into hundreds, and the hundreds into tithings or decennariea: the inhabitants whereof, living to, gether, were sureties or pledges for each other's good hehaviour. One of the principal men of the latter number preaided over the rest, and was called the chief pledge, borstulder, berrow'a elder, or tything-man.

DECIES TANTUM (Lat.). An obsolete writ, which tormerly lay against a juror who had taken money for giving his verdict. Called so, because it was sued out to recover from him ten times as much as he took.

DECIMAF (Lat.). The tenth part of the annual profit of each living, payable formerly to the pope. There were sereral valuations made of these livings at different times. The decimce (tenths) were appropriated to the crown, and a new valuation established, by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3. 1 Sharswood, Blackst, Comm. 284.

DECIME. A French coin, of the value of the tenth part of a franc, or nearly two cents.
DECISION. In Practice. A judgment given by a compctent tribunal. Ths French lawyers call the opinions which they give on questions propounded to them, decisions. See Inst. 1. 2. 8; Dig. 1. 2. 2.
DECLARANT One who makes a declaration.

DECLARATION. In Pleading. A specitication, in a methodical and logical form, of the circumstsnces which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action. 1 Chitty, Plead. 248; Coke, Litt. 17 a, 303 a; Bacon, Abr. Pleas' (B) ; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, C 7; Lawes, Plead. 35 ; Stephen, Plead. 36 ; 6 Serg. & R, Penn. 28.

In real actions, it is most properly called the count; in a personal one, the declaration. Stephen, Plead. 26; Ductrina Plae. 83; Lawes, Plead. 33. See Fitzherhert, Nat. Brev. $16 a, 60 d$. The latter, however, is now the general term, -heing that commonly used when referring to real and personal aetions without distinction. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2815.

In an acticn at law, the declaration answers to the bill in chancery, the libel (nariatio) of the civilians, and the allegation of the ecclesiastical courts.
2. It may be general or special: for example, in debt on a bond, a declaration counting on the penal part only is general; one which sets out. both the bond and the condition and assigns the breach is special. Gould, Plead. c. $4,850$.
3. The parts of a declaration are the title of the court and term; the venue, see Venie; the commencenuent, which contains a statement of the names of the parties and the character in which they appear, whether in their own right, the right of another, in a political capacity, etc., the mode in which the defendant has been brought into court, alid a brief recital of the form of action to be proceeded in, 1 Saund. 318, n. 3, 111; 6 Term, 130; the statement of the cause of action, which varies with the facts of the case and the nature of the action to be brought, and which may be made by means of one or of several counts, 3 Wils. 185; 2 Bay, So. C, 206, see Count ; the conclusion, which in personal and mixed actions should be to the damage (ad damnum, which title see) of the plaintiff, Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 84); 10 Coke, $116 b, 117 a ; 1$ Maule & S. 236, unless in scire facias and in penal actions at the suit of a common informer, but which need not repeat the capacity of the plaintiff, 5 Binn. Penn. 16, 21 ; the profert of letters testamentary in case of a suit by an executor or administrator, Bacon, Abr. Executor (C); Dougl. 5, n.; 1 Day, Conn. 305; and the pledyes of prosecution, which are generally disused, and, when found, are only the fictitious persons John Doe and Richard Roe.

4. The requisites or qualities of a declaration are that it must correspond with the process; and a variance in this respect was formerly the subject of a plea in abatement, see Abatement; it must contain a statement of all the facts necessary in point of law to sustain the action, and no more. Coke, Litt. 303 a; Plowd. 84, 122. See 2 Mass. 363; Cowp. 682; 6 East, 422; 5 Term, 623; Viner, Ahr. Declaration.
5. The circumstances must be stated with certainty and truth as to parties, 3 Caines, N. Y. 170; 1 Penn. St. 75; 10 Serg. & R. Penn. 267; 6 Rich. So. C. 390; 8 Tex. 109; 4 Munf. Va. 430; 6 id. 219; 1 Wash. C. C. 372; time of occurrence, and in personal actions it must, in general, state a time when every material or traversable fact happened, 36 N. In Scotch Law. The prisoner's statement before a magistrate.
12. When used on trial, it must be proved that the prisoner was in his senses at the time of making it, and made it of his own free will. 2 Hume, Sess. Sc. 328 ; Alison, Pract. 557. It must be signed by the witnesses present when it was made, Alison, Pract. 557, and by the prisoner himself. Arkl. Just. Sc. 70. See Paterson, Comp. 88 952, 970.
DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE. A state paper issued by the congress of the United States of America, in the name and by the authority of the people, on the fourth day of July, 1776, wherein are set forth :-

Certain natural and unalienable rights of man; the uses and purposes of governments; the right of the people to institute or to abolish them; the sufferings of the colonies, and their right to withdraw from the tyranny of the king of Great Britain ;

The various acts of tyranny of the British king;

The petitions for redress of those injuries, and the refusal to redress them; the recital of an appeal to the people of Great Britain, and of their being deaf to the voice of justice and consanguinity;

An appeal to the Supreme Judge of the prorld for the rectitude of the intentions of the representatives;

A declaration that the United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is and ought to be dissolved;

A pledge by the representatives to each other of their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

The effect of this declaration was the establishment of the government of the United States as free and independent; and thenceforth the people of Great Britain have been held, as the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends.

DECLARATION OF INTENTION. The act of an alien who goes before a court of record and in a formal manner declares that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty whereof at the time he may be a citizen or aubject. Act of Cong. April 14, 1802, s. 1.

This declaration must, in ordinary cases, be made at least three years before his admission. Id. But there are numerous exceptions to this rule. See Naturalization.

DECLARATION OF TRUST. The act by which an individual acknowledges that a property, the title of which he holds, does in fact belong to another, for whose use he holds the same.

The instrument in which such an acknowledgment is made.

Such a declaration is not always in writing; though it is highly proper it should be so. Hill, Trust, 49, note y; Sugden, Pow. 200; 1 Washburn, Real Prop.; Geldart, Conv.

DECLARATION OF WAR. The public proclamation of the government of a state, by which it declares itself to be at war with a foreign power which is named, and which forbids all and every one to aid or assist the common enemy.
2. The power of declaring war is vested in congress by the constitution, art. 1, s. 8. There is no form or ceremony necessary except the passage of the act. A manifesto stating the causes of the war is usually published; but war exists as soon as the act takes effect. It was formerly usual to precede hostilities by a public declaration communicated to the enemy, and to send a herald to demand satisfaction. Potter, Grec. Ant. b. 3, c. 7 ; Dig. 49. 15. 24. But that is not the practice of modern times.

In some countries, as England, the power of declaring war is vested in the king; but he has no power to raise men or money to carry it on,-which renders the right almost nugatory.

DECLARATORY. Something which explains or ascertains what before was uncertain or doubtful: as, a declaratury statute, which is one passed to put an end to a doubt as to what the law is, and which declares what it is and what it has been. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 86.

DECLINATION. In Scotch Law. A preliminary plea objecting to the jurisdiction on the ground that the judge is interested in the suit.

DECOCTION. The operation of boiling certain ingredients in a fluid for the purpose of extracting the parts soluble at that temperature. The product of this operation.
In a case in which the indictment charged the prisoner with having administered to a woman a decoction of a certain shrub called savin, it appeared that the prisoner had administered an iufuaion, and not a decoction. The prisoner's counsel insisted that he was entitled to an acquittal on the ground that the medicine was misdescrihed; but it was held that infusion and decoction are ojusdemz generis, and that the varianoe was immaterial. 3 Campb. 74, 75.

DECOCTOR. In Roman Law. A bankrupt; a person who squandered the money of the state. Calvinus, Lex. ; DuCange.

DECOLLATIO. Decollation; beheading.

DECONFES. In French Law. A name furmerly given to those persous who died without confession, whether they refused to confess or whether they were criminals to whom the sacrament was refused. Droit de Canon, par M. l'Abbé André; Dupin, Gloss. to Loisel's Institutes.

DECCOY. A pond used for the breeding and maintenance of water-fowl. 11 Mod. 71 , 130; 3 Salk. 9; Hult, 14; 11 East, 5іl.

DECREE. In Practice. The judgment or sentence of a court of equity.

It is either interlocutory or final. The former is given on some plea or issue arising in the canse which does not decide the main question; the latter settles the matter in dispute; and a final decree has the same effect as a judgment at law. 2 Madd. Ch. $462 ; 1$ Chanc. Cas. 27; 2 Vern. Ch. 89 ; 4 Brown, Parl. Cas. 287. See 7 Viner, Abr. 394; 7 Comyns, Dig. 445; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. 223 ; Buavier, Inst. Index.

In Legislation. In some countries, as in France, some acts of the legislature or of the sovereign, which have the force of law, are called decrees: as, the Berlin and Milan decrees.

In Scotch Law. A final judgment or sentence of court by which the question at issue between the parties is decided.

DECREE IN ABSENCE. In Scotch Law. Judgment by default or pro confesso.

DECREE OF CONSTITUTION. In

Sootch Law. Any decree by which the extent of a debt or obligation is ascertained.

The term is, however, ususlly applied especially to those decrees which are required to found a title in the persen of the creditor in the event of the death of either the debtor or the original ereditur. Bell, Dict.

DECREE DATIVE. In Scotch Law. The order of a court of probate appointing an administrator.

DECREE OF FORTECOMING. In Scotch Law. The decree made after an arrestment, ordering the debt to be paid or the effects to be delivered up to the arresting creditor. Bell, Dict.

DECREE OF LOCAIITY. In Scotch
Law. The decrec of a teind court allucating stipend upon different heritors. It is equivalent to the apportionment of a tithe rentcharge.

DECREE OF MODIFICATION. In Scotch Law. A decree of the teind court modifying or fixing a stipend.

DECREE OF REGISTRATION. In Scotch Law. A proceeding ly which the creditor has immediate execution. It is somewhat like a warrant of attorney to confess judgment. 1 Bell, Comm. 1. l. 4.

DECREET. In Scotch Law. The final judgment or sentence of court by which the question at issue between the parties is decided.

Decreet absolutor. One where the decision is in favor of the defendant.

Decreet condemnator. One where the decision is in favor of the plaintiff. Erskine, Inst. 4. 3. 5.

DECREET ARBITRAL. In Scotch Law. The award of an arbitration. The form of promulgating such award. Bell, Dict. Arbitration; 2 Bell, Hou. L. Sc. 49.

DECRETALES BONIFACII OCTAVI. A suppleinental collection of the canon law, published by Bonifaoe VIII. in 1298, called, also, Liber Sextus Decretalium (Sixth Book of the Decretals). 1 Kaufmann, Mackeld. Civ. Law, 83, n. See Decretals.

DECRETALES GREGORII NONI. The decretals of Gregory the Ninth. A collection of the laws of the church, published by order of Gregory IX. in 1227. It is composed of five books, subdivided into titles, and each title is divided into chapters. They are cited by using an X (or extra) : thus, Cap. & X de Regulis Juris, etc. 1 Kanfm. Mackeld. Civ. Law, 83, n. ; Butler, Hor. Jur. 115.

DECRETALS. In Ecclesiastical Law. Canonical epistles, written by the pope alone, or by the pope and cardinals, at the instance or suit of one on more persons, for the ordering and determining some matter in controversy, and which have the authority of a law in themselves.
The decretals were published in three volumes. The first volume was collected by Raymundus Barsinius, chsplain to Gregery IX., about the year 1227, and puhlished by him to be read in sehools and used in the ecclesiastical courts. The second volume is the work of Boniface VIII., compiled about the year 1298, with sdditions te and alterations of the ordinances of his predecessors. The third volume is called the Clementines, bccsuse made by Clement V., and was published by him in the souncil of Vienna, about the year 1308. To these may be added the Extravagsintes of John XXII. and other bishops of Rume, which, relatively to the others, are called Novellise Constitutioner, Ridley's View, etc. 99, 100; 1 Fcurnel, Hist. ded Avocats, 194, 105.

The false decretale were forged in the nsmes of the early bishops of Rome, and first appeared sbout A.D. 845-850. The author of them is net known. They are mentioned in a letter writton in the oame of the council of Quierzy, by Charles the Bald, to the bishopa and lorde of France. See Van Espen Fleury, Droit de Canon, by André.

The decretals constitute the second division of the Corpua Juria Canonici.

DECRETAL ORDER. In Chancery
Practice. An order made by the court of chancery, upon a motion or petition, in the nature of a decree. 2 Daniell, Chanc. Pract. 637.

DECRETUM GRATIANI. A collection of ecclesiastical law made by Gratian, a Bolognese monk, in the year 1151. It is the oldest of the collections constituting the Corpus Juris Canonici. 1 Kanfmann, Mackeld. Civ. Law, 81 ; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 82; Butler, Hor. Jur. 113.

DECRY. To cry down; to destroy the credit of. It is said that the king may at any time decry the coin of the realm. I Blackstone, Comm. 278.

DECURIO. In Roman Law. One of the chief men or senators in tbe provincial towns. The decuriones, taken together, had the entire management of the internal affairs of their towns or cities, with powers resembling in some degree those of our modern city councils. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 54; Calvinus, Lex.

DEDI (Lat. I have given). A word used in deeds and other instruments of conveyance when such instruments were made in Latin.

The use of this word formerly carried with it a warranty in law, when in a deed: for example, if in a deed it was said, "dedi (I have given), etc, to A B,' there was a warranty' to him and his heirs. Brooke, Abr. Guaranty, pl. 85. The warranty thus wrought was a special warranty, extending to the heirs of the feoffee during the life of the donor only: Coke, Litt. 384 b; 4 Coke, 81 ; 5 id. 17. Dedi is said to be the aptest word to denote a feoffment. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 310. The future, $d a b o$, is found in some of the Saxon grants. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 44.

DEDI ET CONCESSI (Lat. I have given and granted). The aptest words to work a feoffment. They are the words ordinarily used, when instruments of conveyance were in Latin, in charters of feoffment, gift, or grant. These words were held the aptest; though others would answer. Coke, Litt. 384 b; 1 Stephen, Comm. 114; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 53, 316.

DEDICATION. An appropriation of land to sume public use, made by the owner, and accepted for such use by or on bebalf of the public.

Express dedication is that made by deed, vote, or declaration.

Implied dedication is that presumed from an acquiescence in the public use.
2. Tu be valid, it must be made by the owner of the fee, 5 Barnew. & Ald. $454 ; 3$ Siandf. N. Y. $502 ; 4$ Campb. 16, or, if the fee be subject to a naked trust, by the equitable owner, 6 Pet. $431 ; 1$ Ohio St. 478, and to the public at large. 22 Wead. N. Y. $4: 25$; 2 Vt. 480; 10 Pet. 662 ; 11 Ala. n. s. 63. In making the appropriation, no particular formality is required, but any act or declaration, whether written or oral, which clearly expresses an intent to dedicate, will amount to a dedication, if accepted by the public, and will conclude the donor from ever after asserting any right in sompatible with the public use. 5 Taunt. 125; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 827 ; 5 Carr. & P. 46); 6 Pet. 431 ; 22 Wend. N. Y. $450 ; 25$ Cınn. 235; 19 Pick. Miss. 405 ; 2 Vt. $480 ; 9$ B. Monr. Ky. 201 ; 12 Ga. 239. And, without any expressappropriation by theowner, a dedication may be presumed from twenty yoars' use of his lan l by the publio, with his knowlelge, 22 Ala. N. s. 190; 19 Conn. 250 ; 11 Metc. Mars. 421 ; 3 Zabr. N. J. 159 ; 4 Ind. 513; 17 Ill. 243 ; 20 Penn. St. 187; 3 Kent, Comm. 451, or from any shorter period, if tho use be accompanied by circumstances which favor the presumption, the fact of dedication being a conclusion to be drawa, in each particular case, by the jury, who as against the owner have simply to determine whether by permitting the public use ho has intended a delication. 1 Strange, 100t; 5 Taunt. 125 ; 6 Wend. N. Y. 651 ; 11 id. $436 ; 9$ How. 10 ; 19 Ind. 219 ; 4 Cal. 114 ; 17 Ill. 416 ; 30 Eng. L. & Eq. 207; 11 East, 375. Bat this presumption being mercly an inference from tho public use, coupled with oircumstances indicative of the owner's intent to dedicate, is open to rebuttal by the proof of circumstances indicative of the absence of such an intent. 2 Pick. Mass. 51; 4 Cush. Mass. 332 ; 25.Me. 297; 9 H Jw. 10; 1 Campb. 262; 4 Barnew. & Ad. 417 ; 7 Carr. & P. 570 ; 8 Ad. & E. 99.
3. Without acceptance, a dedication is incomplete. In the case of a highway, the question has been raised whether the public itself, or the body charged with the repair, is the proper party to make the acceptance. In England, it has been decided that an acceptance by the public, evidenced by mere uses, is sufficient to bind the parish to repair, without any adoption on its part. 5 Barnew. \& Ad, $469 ; 2 \mathrm{Nev} . \& \mathrm{M} .583$. In this country there are cases in which the English rule seems to he recognized, 1 R. I. 93; 23 Wend. N. Y. 103 ; though the weight of decision is to the offect that the towns are not liable, either for repair or for injuries occasioned by the want of repair, until they have themselves adopted the way thus created, either by a formal acceptance or by indirectly recognizing it, as by repairing it or setting up guide-posis therein. 13 Vt . 424 ; 14 id. $282 ; 6 \mathrm{~N}$. Y . 257 ; 16 Barb. N. Y. $251 ; 8$ Gratt. Va. 632; 2 lnd. 147 ; 19 Pick. Mass. 405; 3 Cush. Mass. 290; Angell, IIighw. 111. See Therodgrfare; Bridge; Highway.
4. The authorities above cited relate chiefly to the dedication of land for a highway, But a dedication may be made equally well to any other purpose which is for the bencfit of the public at large, as for a equare, a common, a landing, a cemetery, a school, or a monument; and the principles which goven in all these cascs are the same, though they may be somewhat diversificd in the application, according as they are invoked for the eupport of one or another of these objects. 6 Hill, N. Y. 407 ; 11 Penn. S1. 444; 7 Ohio, 135 ; 18 id. 18; 2 Ohio St. 117 ; 12 Ga. $289 ; 4$ N. 11. 537 ; 1 Wheat. 469 ; 2 Watts, Penn. 23 ; 1 Spenc. N. J. 86 ; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 234 ; 3 Sandf. N. Y. 502; 7 Ind. 641; $2 \dot{W}$ isc. 153. As to what shall amcunt to a dedication of an invention to public use, see 1 Gall. C. C. 482; 1 Paine, C. C. 345 ; 2 Pet. 1 ; 7 id. 292; 4 Mas. C. C. 108.

DEDIMUS ET CONCESSIMUS (Lat. we havo given and granted). Words used by the king where there were more grantors than one, instead of dedi et concessi.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM (Lat. we hare given power). The name of a writ to commission private persons to do some act in the place of a judge: as, to administer an cath of office to a justice of the peace, to examine witnesses, and the like. Cowel; Comyns, Dig. Chancery (K 3), (P 2), Fine (E 7); Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Sbarswood, Blackst. Ccmm. 351.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE ATTORNO FACIENDO (Lat.). The name of a writ which was formerly issued by authority of the crown in England to authorize ar attorney to appear for a defendant.

By statute of Westminster 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 10, all persons impleaded may make an attorney to sue for them, in all pleas moved by or against them, in the superior courts there enumerated. 3 Mann. & G. 184, n.

DEDITITII (Lat.). In Roman Law. Criminals who have been marked in the face or on the body with fire or an iron so that the mark cannot be erased, and subsequently manumitted. Calvinus, Lex.

DEDUCTION FOR NEW. In Maritime Law. The allowance (usually onethird) on the cost of repairing a danage to the ship by the extraordinary operation of the perils of navigation, the renovated part being presumed to be better than before the damage. In some ports, by custom or by express provision in the policy, the allowance is not made on a new vessel during the first year, or on new sheathing, or on an anchor or chain-cables. 1 Phillipps, Ins. $850 ; 2$ id. 38 1369, 1431, 1433 : Benecke & S. DEED. A written instrument nader seal, containing a contract or agreement which has been delivered by the party to be bound and accepted by the obligee or covenantee. Cuke, Litt. 171; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 295; Sheppard, Touchst. 50.
A writing containing a contract sealed and delivered by the party thereto. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 553.

A writing under seal by which lands, tenements, or hereditaments are conveyed for an estate not less than a freehold. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 294.

Any instrument in writing under seal, whether it relates to the conveyance of real estate or to any other matter,-as, for inatance, a bond, aingle hill, agreement, or contract of any kind,-is as much a deed as is a conveyance of real estate, and, after delivery and acceptance, is obligatory. 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 50 t; 5 Dan. Ky. 365 ; 2 Miss. 154. The term is, however, often used in thelatter aense above given, and perhaps oftener than in its more general signification.

2. Deeds of feoffment. See Teoffment.  Deeds of grant. See Grant.

Deeds indented are those to which there are two or more parties who enter into reciprocal and corresponding obligations to each other. See Indenture.
Deeds of release. See Release; QuitClaim.
Deeds poll are those which are the act of a single party and which do not require a counterpart. See Deen Poll.
Deeds under the statute of uses. See Bargain and Sale; Covenant to Stand Seised; Lease and Release.
Aceording to Sir William Blackgtone, 2 Comm. 313, deeds may be considered as conveyances at sommon law,-of which the original are fenffment; gift; grant; lease; exchange; partition; the derivalive ure relense; confirmation; surrender; assignment; defeasance,-or conveyances which derire their force by virtue of the statute of uses: namely, govenant to stund seised to uses; bargain and sale of lande; lease and release; deed to lead and declare uses; deed of revocation of uses.
For a description of the various forms in use in *he United States, aee 2 Washhurn, Real Prop. 607.
3. Requisites of. Deeds must be upon paper or parchment, 5 Johns. N. Y. 246 ; must be completely written before delivery, 1 Hill, So. C. 267; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 216, Am. ed. note; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 554; must be between competent parties, see Parries; and certain classes are excluded from holding lands, and, consequently, from being grantees in a deed, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 48, 49; 2 id .554 ; must have been made without restraint, 13 Mass. 371; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 291; must eontain the names of the grantor and grantee, 2 Brock. C. C. $156 ; 19$ Vt. $613 ; 12$ Mass. $447 ; 14$ Mo. 420; 13 Ohio, 120; 14 Pct. 322; 1 McLean, C. C. 321 ; 2 N. 1H. 525 ; must relate to suitable property, Browne, Stat. Frands, & 6; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 597 et seq.; must contain the requisite parts, see 85 ; must be sealed, 6 Pet. 124; Thornton, Conv. 205; see 12 Cal. 1ô6; aud should, for safety, be signed, even where statates do not require it. 2W ashburn, Real Prop. 569.
In Virginia, all that ia required on this point is that the instrument of conveyance should be in writing. Vu. Rev. Stat. (1849) 508 . The statuto of Missouri requires that the instrument should be aealed; yet the cuurts of that state bave held that a scroll purporting to he a aeal is sufficient. 2 Mo . 220; 8 id. 301. In Arkansas, Conncetient, and ohio, a scroll purporting to be a ceal is aufficient. Conn. Comp. Stut. (1854) p. 633; Ewan, Ohio Rev. Stat. (1854) 864.
In Kentucky, no seal or scroll is necessary except in the case of a corporation. Ky. Rev. Stat. (1852) 196.
4. They must be delivered, see Delivery, and accepted. 8 I11. 177; 1 N. H. 353; $5 i d$. 71; 20 Johns. N. Y. 187. Deeds conveying real estate must in most states of the United States be acknowledged, see Acknow lenigment, and recorded.

The requisite number of witnesses is also prescriked by statate in most if not all of the states; and many particulars relating to the execution of deeds of conveyance are to be found detailed in the more valuable works treating of this subject, among which Browne on the Statute of Frands, W ashburn on Real Property, and Thornton on Cónveyancing are recommended for consultation.
Two witnessea are required in Arkanaas, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Michigan, Ohio, Vermont, and Wisconsin. In Alabama, two are required where the grantor cannot read, and one where he can. One is aufficient in New Yurk and Massachusetts. An acknowledgment before proper authority dispenses with witnceses in Alabama, Arkansas, and Tennessee. 1 Dig. of Ark. Laws, 265, n. d; 5 Ark. 693; Conn. Comp. Stat. (1854) 63I; Thompson, Dig. Fla. Laws, 180; Sers. Laws of Ga. (1853-4) 26; 2 Mich. Comp. Stat. (1857) 838; Swan, Ohio Rev. Stat. (1854) 309; 3 N. Y. Rey. Stat. 5th ed. 45; Vt. Comp. Stat. (1850) 384; Wisc. Rev. Stat. (1858) 537.
5. Formal parts. The premises embrace the statcment of the parties, the consideration, recitals inserted for explanation, description of the property granted, with the intended cxceptions. The habendum begins at the words " to have and to hold," and limits and defines the estate which the grantee is to have. The reddendum, which is used to reserve sumething to the grantor, see Excerption; the conditions, see Condition ; the covenants, see Covenant; Warranty; and the conclusion, which mentions the execution, date, etc., properly follow in the order observed here. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 611640.
6. The construction of deeds is favorable to their validity; the principal includes the incident; punctuation is not reparded; a false description does not harm; the construction is least favorable to the party making the conveyance or reservation; the habendum is rejected if repugnant to the rest of the deed. Sheppard, Touchst. 89 et seq.; 3 Kent, Comm. 422; Boundaries.

The lex rei sito governs in the conveyance of lands, both as to the requisites and forms of conveyance. See Lex Rei Sita.

Much of the English law in reference to the possession and discovery of title-dceds has been rendered useless in the United States by the system of registration, which prevails so universally.

Consult Preston, Wood, Thornton, on Conveyancing; Greenleaf's Cruise, Dig.; Washburn, Hilliard, on Real Property.

DEED TO DECLARE USES. A deed made after a fine or common recovery, to show the object thereof.

DEED TO LEAD USES. A deed made before a fine or common recovery, to show the object thereof.

DEED POLL. A deed which is made by one party only.

A deed in which only the party making it executes it or binds himself by it as a deed. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 588.

The distinction between deed poll and indenture has come to be of but little importance. The ordinary purpose of a deed poll is merely to transfer the rights of the grantor to the grantee. It was formerly called charta de una parte, and usually began with these words,-Sciant presentes et futuri cuod ego, A, etc.; and now begins, "Know all men by these prescnts that I, A B, have given, granted, and enfecfied, and by these prosents do give, grant, and enfeoff," etce. Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 1, s. 23. Sce Innenture.

DEEMSTERS. Judges in the Isle of Man, who decide all controversies without process, pritings, or any charges. These judges are chosen by the pecple, and are said by Spelman to be two in number. Spelman, Gloss.; Camden, Brit.; Cowel ; Blount.

DEFALCATION. The act of a defaulter.

The hankrupt act of August 19, 1841, declared that a person who owed debts which had been created io consequence of a defulcation as a public officer, or as executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, or while acting in any other fiduciary capacity, should not have the benefit of that law.

The reduction of the claim of one of the contracting parties against the other, by deducting from it a smaller claim due from the former to the latter.

The law operates this reduction in certain cases; for, if the parties die or are insolvent, the balance between them is the only claim; but if they are solvent, and alive, the defeodant may or may not defalcate at his choice. See Set-0ff. For the etymolngy of this word, see Brackenridge, Law Misc. 186; 1 Rawle, Penn. 291; 3 Binn. Penn. 135.

DEFAMATION. The speaking or writing words of a person so as to hurt his good fame, de bona famâ aliquid detrahere. Written defamation is termed libel, and oral defamation slander.
2. The provisions of the law in respect of defamation, written or oral, are those of a civil nature, which give a remedy in damages to an injured individual, or of a criminal nature, which are devised for the security of the public. Heard, Lib. & Sland. $z 1$.
3. In England, besides the remedy by action, proceedings may be instituted in the ecelesiastical court for redress of the injury. The punishment for defamation, in this court, is payment of costs and penance enjoined at the discretion of the judge. When the slander has been privately uttered, the penance may be ordered to be performed in a private place; when publicly uttered, the sentence must be public, as in the church of the parish of the defamed party, in time of divine service; and the defamer may be required publicly to pronounce that by such wordsnaming them-as set forth in the sentence he had defamed the plaintiff, and, therefore, that he begs pardon, first of God, and then of the party defamed, for uttering euch words. Clerk's Assist. 225; 3 Burn, Ecel Law, Defamation, pl. 14; 2 Chitty, Pract 471; Cooke, Def. See Libel; Suander.

DEFAULT. The non-performance of a duty, whether arising under a contract or otherwise. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 516.
By the fourth section of the English statnte of frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, it is onacted that "no action slaall be brought to charge the defcadant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, unless the agreoment," ete. "shall be in writing," cte.

In Practice. The non-appearance of a plaintifi or defondant at ccurt within the time prescribed by law to prosecute his claim or make his defence.

When the plaintiff makes default, ho may be nonsuited; and when the cefeodant malics dcfanlt, judgment by default is rendercd against him. Comyns, Dig. Pleader, E 42, B 11. Sce article Judgment by Default; 7 Vider, Abr. 420 ; Doctrina Plac. 208; Graham, Pract. 651. Sce, as to what will exeuse or seve a default, Coke, Litt. 259 l .

DIFPEASANCE. An instrument which defeats the force or operation of some other deed or estate. That which is in the same deed is called a condition; and that which is in another deed is a defeasance. Comyus, Dig. Defeasance.

The defeasance may be subsequent to the deed in case of thiugs executory, Coke, Litt. 237 a; 2 Saund. 43, but must be a part of the same transaction in case of an executed contract. Coke, Litt. 236 b; 1 N. H. 39; 3 Mich. 482; 7 Watts, Penn. $401 ; 〔 1$ Ala. n. s. 9. Yet, where an instrument of defeasance is executed subsequently in pursuance of an agreement made at the time of making the original deed, it is sufficient, 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 489, as well as where a deed and the defeasance bear different dates lut are delivered at the same time. 12 Mass. 463 ; 13 Pick. Mass. 411 ; 18 id. 540 ; 31 Penn. St. 131; 7 Me. 435 ; 13 Ala. 246. The instrument of defeasance must at law be of as high a nature as the principal deed. 13 Mass. 443 ; 22 Pick. Mass. 526; 7 Watts, Penn. 261, $401 ; 8 \mathrm{Me} .246 ; 43 \mathrm{id} .206$. Defeasances of deeds conreying real estate are generally subject to the same rules as deeds, as to record and notice to purchasers, 3 Wend. N. Y. 208 ; 14 id. 63; 17 Serg. \&. R. Penn. 70; 12 Mass. 456 ; 38 Me. 447 ; 40 id. 381 ; but in some states actual notice is not sufficient without recording. Mich. Rev. Stat. 261; Minn. Laws, 1858, c. 52, દ̨ 3.

DEFECI. The want of something required by law.

In pleading, matter sufficient in law mist be deduced and expressed aceording to the forms of law. Defects in matters of substance cannot be cured, because it does not appear that the plaintiff is entitled to recover; but when the defects are in matter of form, they are cured by a verdict in favor of the party who committed them. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3292 ; 2 Wash. C. C. 1 ; 1 Hon. & M. Va. 153; 16 Pick. Mass. 128, 541 ; 1 Day, Conn. 315; 4 Conn. 190; 5 id. 416; 6 id. 176; 12 id. 455 ; 1 Pet. C. C. 76 ; 2 Green, N. J. 133; 4 Blackf. Ind. 107 ; 2 McLean, C. C. 35 ; Bacon, Abr. Verdict, X.

DEFENCE. Torts. A forcible resistance of an attack by force.
2. A man is justified in defending his person, that of his wifo, children, and servants, and for this purpose he may use as much forve as may be necessary, even to killing the assailant, remembering that the means used must always be proportioned to the occasion, and that an excess becomes itself an injury, 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 150 ; but it must be in defence, and not in revenge. 1 Carr. & M. 214; 11 Mod. 43.

A man may also repel force by force in defence of his personal property, and even justify homicide against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a known fclony, as robbery.
3. With respect to the defence or protection of the possession of real property, although it is justifiable even to kill a person in the act of attempting to commit a forciblo felony, as burglary or arson, yet this justification can only take place when the party in possession is wholly without fault. 1 Halo, Pl. Cr. 443, 444; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 259, 277. And where an illegal forcible attack is made upon a dwelling-house with the intention mercly of committing a trespass, and not with any felonious intent, it is generally lawful for the rightful occupant to oppose it by force. 7 Bingh. 30̄̈; 20 Eng. CJm. Law, 139. See, generally, 1 Chitty, Pract. 539; Grotius, lib. 2, c. 1; Rutherforth, Inst. b. 1, e. 16. And see Assault.
4. In Pleading and Practice. The denial of the truth or validity of the complaint. A general assertion that the plaintiff has no ground of action, which is afterwards extended and maintained in the plea. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 296; Coke, Litt. 127.
In this sense it is similar to the contestatio litis of the civilians, and does not include justification. In a more general sense it denotes the means by which the defendant prevents the success of the plaintiff'saction, or, in criminal practice, the indictment. The word is commonly used in this sense in modern practice.
5. Half defence was that which was made by the form "defends the force and injury, and says" (defendit vim et injuriam, et dicit).
Full defence was that which was made by the form "defends the force and injury when and where it shall behoove him, and the damages and whatever else he ought to defend" (defendit vim et injuriam quando et ubi curia consideravit, et damna el quicquid quod ipse defendere debet, et dicit), commonly shortened inte "defends the force and injury when," etc. Gilbert, C. P. 188; 8 Term, 632; 3 Bos. & P. 9, n.; Coke, Litt. 127 b ; Willes, 41. It follows immediately upon the statement of appearance, "comes" (venit), thus: " comes and defends." By a general defence the propriety of the writ, the competency of the plaintiff, and the jurisdiction of the court were allowed; by defending the force and injury, misnomer was waived; by deferiding the damages, all exceptions to the person of the plaintiff; and by defending either when, eto., the jurisdiction of the court was admitted. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Conım. 298.
6. The distinction between the forms of half and full defence was first lost sight of, 8 Term, 633; Willes, 41; 3 Bos. \& P. 9; 2 Saund. $£ 09 \mathrm{c}$; and no necessity for a technical defence exists, under the modern forms of practice.

Formerly, in criminal trials for capital crimes the prisoner was not allowed counsel to assist in his defence. 1 Ry. & M. Cr. Cas. 166; 3 Campb. 98; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 350, n. This privilege was finally extended to all persons accused of felonies in England, by 6 and 7 Will. IV. c. 114. It is secured in the United States courte by act of congress April 30, 17E9, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 89, and by statute in the varicus states.
7. The act of congress enacts that every person accused or indicted of the crime of treason, or other capital offence, shall "be allowed and admitted to make his full defence by counsel learned in the law; and the court before whom such person shall be tried, or some judge thereof, shall, and they are hereby authorized and required, immediately upon his request, to assign to such person such counsel, not exceeding two, as such person shall desire, to whom such counsel shall have free access at all seasonable hours; and every such person or persons necused or indicted of the crimes aforesaid shall be allowed and admitted in his said defence to make any proof that he or they can produce, by lawful witness or witnesses, and shall have the like precess of the ccurt where he or they shall be tried, to compel his or their witreesses to appear at his or their trial, as is usually granted to compel witnesses to appear on the prosecution against them."
DEFENDANT. A party sued in a personal action. The term does not in strictness apply to the person opposing or denying the allegations of the demandaut in a real astion, who is properly called the tenant. The distinction, however, is very commonly disregarded; and the term is further frequently applied to denote the person called upon to answer, either at law or in equity, and as well in criminal as civil suits.

DEFENDANT IN ERROR. The dis*inctive term appropriate to the party against whom a writ of error is sued ont.

DEFENDER. In Scotch and Canon Law. A detendant.

DEFENDER (Fr.). To deny; to defend; to conduct a suit for a defendant; to forbid; to prevent; to protect.

DEFENSA. A park or place fenced in for deer, and defended as a property and peculiar for that use and service. Cowel.

DEFENSE AU FOND EN DROIT (called, also, defence en droit). A demurrer. 2 Low. C. 278. See, also, 1 Low. C. 216.

DEFENSE AU FOND EN FAIT. The general issue. 3 Low. C. 421 .

DEFENSIVE ALLEGATION. In Ecclesiastical Practice. The answer of the party defending to the allegations of the party moving the cause.

DTEFNSIVE WAR. A war in defence of national right, - not necessarily defensive in its operations. 1 Kent, Comm. 50.

DEFENSOR. In Civil Law. A defender; one who takes upon himself the defence of another's cause, assuming his liabilities.

An advocate in court. In this sense the worl is very general in its signification, including advocatus, patronus, procurator, etc. A tutor or guardian. Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. A guardian or protector. Spelman, Gloss. The defendant; a warrantor. Bracton.

In Canon Law. The advocate of a church. The patrun. See Advocatus. An officer having charge of the temporal affairs of the church. Spelman, Gloss.

DEFENSOR CIVITATUS (Lat. defender of the state).

In Roman Law. An officer whose business it was to transact certain business of the state.

Those officers were so called who, like the tribunes of the poople at first, wore chosen by the people in the large cities and towns, and whose duty it was to watch over the order of the city, proteat the people and the decuriones from all harm, protect sailors and naval people, attend to the complaints of those who bad suffered injuries, and discharge various other duties. As will he seen, they had considerahle judicial power. DuCange; Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 16.

DEFICIT (Lat. is wanting). The deficiency which is discovered in the accounts of an accountant, or in the money which he has received.

DEFINITION (Lat. de, and finis, a boundary; a limit). An enumeration of the principal ideas of which a compound idea is formed, to ascertain and explain its nature; that which denotes and points ont the substance of a thing. Ayliffe, Pand. 59.
2. A definition ought to contain every idea which belongs to the thing defined, and to exclude all others; it should show the general class to which the thing defined belongs, and the particulars which distinguish it from other mombers of the same class; it should be universal, that is, such that it will apply equally to all individuals of the same kind; proper, that is; such that it will not apply to any individual of any other kind; clear, that is, without any equivocal, vaguc, or unknown word; short, that is, without any useless word, and without any foreign to the idea intended to bc defined.
3. Definitions are always dangerous, because it is always difficult to prevent their being inaccurate, or their becoming so: omnis definitio in jure civili periculosa est, parum est cnim, ut non subverti possit.

All ideas are not susceptible of definition, and many words cannot be defined. This inability is frequently supplied, in a considerable degree, by descriptions.

DEFINITIVE. That which terminates a suit; final. A definitive sentence or judgment is put in opposition to an interlocutory judgment.

DEFLORATION. The act by which a woman is deprived of her virginity.

When this is done unlawfully and against her will, it bears the name of rape (which see); when she consents, it is fornication (which see); or if the man be married, it is adultery on his part. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 848 ; 21 Pick. Mass. 509 ; 36 Me. 261 ; 11 Ga. 53 ; 2 Dall. Penn. 124.

DEFORCEMENT. The holding any lands or tenements to which another has a right.

In its most extensive sense the term includes any withholding of any lands or tenements to which another person has a right. Coke, Litt. 277 : so that this includes as well an abatement, an intrusion, a disseisin, or a discontinusnce, ss any uther species of wrong whatsoever, by which the owner of the freehold is kept ont of possession. But, as contrsdistinguished from the former, it is only such a detainer of the frechold from him who has the right of proporty as falls within none of the injuries above mentioned. 3 Blaekstone, Comm. 173; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 13; Dane, Abr. Index.
In Scotch Law. The opposition given, or resistance made, to messengers or other officers while they are employed in executing the law.

This crime is punished by confiscation of movables, the one half to the king and the other to the creditor at whose suit the diligence is used. Erskine, Pract. 4. 4. 32.

DEFORCIANT. One whe wrongfully keeps the owner of lands and tenements out of the possession of them. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 350.

DEFORCIARE. To withholds lands or tenements from the rightful owner. This is a word of art which cannot be supplied by any other word. Coke, Litt. 331 b; 3 Thomas, Coke, Litt. 3 ; Bract. lib. 4, 238 ; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 11.

DEFRAUDACION. In Spanish Law, The crime committed by a person who fraudulently avoids the payment of some public tas.

DEFUNCT. A deceased person.

DEGRADATION. In Ecclesiastical
Law. A censure by which a clergyman is deprived of the holy orders which he had as a priest or deacon.

DEGRADING. Sinking or lowering a person in the estimation of the public.

As to compelling a witness to answer questions tending to degrade him, see Paivilege; Witness; 13 Howell, St. Tr. 17, 334; 16 id. 161; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 269. To write or print of a man what will degrade him in society is a libel. 1 Dowl. 674; 2 Mann. & R. 77.

DEGREE (Fr. degré, from Lat. gradus, a step in a stairway; a round of a ladder).

A remove or step in the line of descent or consanguinity.

As used is law, it designates the distance between those who are allicd by blood; it means the relations descending from a common sncestor, from generatibn to generation, as by so many steps. Hence, according to some lexicographers, we obtain the word pedigree ( $q \cdot v$. ), par degrez (by degrces), the descent being reckuned par degrez. Minsbew. Each generation lengthens the line of descent one degree; for the degrees are only the generations marked in a line by small circles or squares, in which the names of the persons forming it are written. See Consanguinity; Line; Ayliffe, Parerg. 209; Toullier, Droit Civ. Franç. liv. 3, t. 1, e. 3, n. 158 ; Aso \& M. Inst. b. 2, t. 4, e. 3, $\&$ I.

The state or civil condition of a person.
The ancient English statute of additions, for example, requires that in process, for the better description of a defendant, his atate, degree, or anystery shall be mentioned.

An honorable state or condition to which a student is advanced in testimony of proficiency in arts and sciences.

They are of pontifical origin. See I Schmidt, Thesaurus, 144; Vicat, Doctores; Minshew, Dict. Bacheler; Merlin, Répert. Univervité; Van Espen, pt. I, tit. 10; Giamnone. Istoria di Napoli, lib. xi. c. 2, for a full account of this matter.

DEHORS (Fr. out of; without). Something out of the record, agreement, will, or other thing spoken of; something foreign to the matter in question.

DEI JUDICIUM (Lat. the judgment of God). A name given to the trial by ordeal.

DEL CREDERE COMMISSION. One

 under which the agent, in consideration of an additional premium, engages to insure to his principal not only the solvency of the debtor, but the punctual discharge of the debt; and he is liable, in the first instance, without any demand from the debtor. 1 Term, 112; Paley, Ag. 39. See Parsons, Cuntracts; Story, Ag.DELATE. In Scotch Law. To accuse. Bell, Dict.

DELATIO. In Civil Law. An accusation or information. DuCange; Calvinus, Lex.

DELATOR. An accuser or informer. DuCange.

DELATURA. In Old Engish Law. The reward of an informer. Whishaw.

DELAWARE. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

In 1623, Cornelius May, with some Dutch emigranta, established a trading-bouse, but the scttlers soon removed to North river. Ten years afterwards DeVries arrived at Cape Henlopen, but the natives shortly destroyed the settlement. In the spring of 1638 the Swedes under Minuit established a settlement at the mouth of the Minquas river, which was called by them the Christiana, in honor of their queen. They purchased all the lands from Cape Henlopen to the falls near Trentin. They named the country New Sweden. Stuyvesant, tha Dutch governor of New York, ended the Swedish authority in 1654. The Dutch held the country until 1664, when it fell into the hands of the English, and was granted by Charles II. to his brother Jamee, Duke of York. In 1682, William Penn ubtained a patent from the Duke of York, releasing all his title claimed through his patent from the crown to a portion of the territory. By this grsut Pena became possessed of New Castle and the land lying within a circle of twelve miles around it, and subsequently of a tract of land begianing twel'e miles south of New Castle and extending to Caps Henlopen. Ia cunsequence of a dispote bctwesn Pena and Lord Baltimere, the south and west lines, dividing his possessions from Marylsnd, were traced in 1761, under a decree of lord-chnacellor Hardwicke, by the surveyors Masen and Dixon; and this line, exteaded weatward between Maryland and Penosylvadia, has become historical, as Muson and Dixon's line.
2. Delaware was divided into three counties, called New Castle, Kent, and Susiex, and by enactment of Penn waa annexed to Peansylvania nnder the name of The Three Lower Cnunties upon Delaware. Thess counties remained for tweaty years a part of Pennsylvania, each cunnty scudiag six delegates to the general assembly. They seceded in 1703 , with the consent af the proprictary, and were governed by a separate legislature of their own, pureuant to the liberty reserred to them by a clause of their original charter. In 1776 a constitution was framed, a second in 1792, and a third in 1831, which still forms the fundamental law of the state. Delaware was the first state to ratify the federal constitution, on December 7, 1787.
3. The present constitution was adopted December 2, 1831.

The Legislative Pozer.

This is vested in a general assembly, which meets biennially, and consists of a senate and house of representatives.

The senate is composed of senators from each county, chosen for four years by the citizens residing in the several eountics. Ihey must bs twenty-eeven years of age, and possessed of two hundred acres of freehold land. The number may be increased by the general assembly, two-thirds of each branch cencurring; but the number of the senatore may never be greater than two-thirds, nor less than one-half, of the number of represeatstives.

The house of representatives is composed of seven members from each county, chosen for two years by the citizens residing in the several counties. The general assembly, two-thirds of eanh branch coneurring, may increase the number. They must be twenty-four yesrs of age.

The Executive Power.

4. The governor is chosen by the citizens of the state for the term of four years. He must be thirty years old, and have been for twelve years noxt befure his election a citizen and resideat of the United States, the last six of which he must have lived in the state, ualess absent on busincss of the state or the United States.

He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the stato and of the militia; may appoint all officers whose appointment is not otherwise provided for; may remit fines and forfeitures and grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeaohtaent, but must set forth the grounds of his action in writing, which is to be laid before the general assembly at their next session; may require information in writing from other executive officers; shall give information and recommend measures to the legislature; may convene the general assembly at nuusual times and places, in cases of necessity; may adjourn the houscs, for not more than three mouths, when they disagree as to the time of adjournment; and must tako care that the laws are faithfully executed.

In case of a vacancy happening in the office of governor, the speaker of the scanate is to act till a new governor is chosen or the vacaucy ceases. In case a racancy occurs while he is acting, the speaker of the house of representatives is to act.

The state treasurer and the auditor are elected by the general assembly for two years.

The secretary of state is appointed by the governor for four years.

The attorney-general is sppointed by the governor for five years.

5. The Judicial Power.

The court of errors and appeals consists of the chancellor, who is president, the chief justice of the superior court, who presides in the absence of the chancellor, and the three assistant justices of the superior court. The three assistant justioes are seleeted one from each county in the state.

The superior court is held by the chief justice and two assistant justices. It may hold pleas of assize, scire facias, replevin, ivformstions, and actions arisigg uader peasl statutes, and hear and determine sll and all manaer of pleas, actions, suits, and causes, civil, real, persoual, and mixed, according to the laws and oonstitution of the state, as fully and amply to all intents and purposes as the justices of the king's bench, common pleas, and exchequer in Englaod, or any of them, may or can do.

The court of oyor and terminer is held by the chief justice and the three assistant justices of the superior court, and has jurisdiction of all eapitsl crimes, and of manslaughter, and of being an accessory to such crime.

The court of general sessions is oamposed of the chief justice and two sssistant justices of the superior court. It has jurisdiction of all crimes, except those mentioned above ss within the jurisdiction of the court of oyer and terminer, and also except those committed by slaves, and which are cognizable before a justice of the peace. It acts also as a court of general jail delivery, and may indict prisoners for crimes for which they are to be tried before the conrt of oyer and terminer. The full title of this court is, The Court of Geversl Sessions of the Peace and Jail Delivery.

The court of choncery is held by the chaucellor. It is to hear and decree all matters in equity, including injunctions to stay suits at law and prevent waste, according to the course of chancery practice in England. But these powers are to he exercised only whea no adequate remedy exists at law. In cases where matters of fact are in lispate, the cause is to be remitted to the superior court, to be tried by a jury.

Vol. I.-29

The orphans' court in each county consists of the chancellor and the assistant justice from that county. It appoints and removes guardians, aud has the superintendence of the settlement of estates of decedents.
All the judges are appointed hy the governor, and hold office during good behavior.
Justices of the peace havo a jurisdiction of actions arising from contracts, of trespass where the amount involved does not exceed one huadred dollars, of cases under the process of forcible ontry and detainer, and a civil jurisdiction, generally, where the amount iuvolved is not over oue hundred dollars. They may issue search-warrants, and may panish breaches of the peace, in cases which aro not aggravated, by a fine not cxcecding ten dollars. If the case be aggravated, the justice must bind over the offender for trial by the higher court.
DELECTUS PERSONA (Lat. the choice of the person). The right of a partner to decide what new partners, if any, shall be admitted to the firm. Story, Partn. $885,195$.
This doctrine excludes even ezecutors and representatives of partners from succeeding to the state and condition of partners. 7 Pick. Mass. 237; 3 Kent, Comm. 55 ; Collyer, Partn. 38 8, 10, 113, n.
In Scotch Law. The personal preference which is supposed to have been exercised by a landlord in selecting bis tenant, by the members of a firm in making choice of partners, in the appointment of persons to office, and other cases. Nearly equivalent to personal trust, as a doctrine in law. Bell, Dict.
DELEGATE (Lat. delegere, to choose from). One authorized by another to act in his name; an attorney.

A person elected, by the people of an organized territory of the United States, to congress, who has a seat in congress and a right of debating, but not of voting. Ord. July 13, 1787, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 2076.

A person elected to any deliberative assembly. 1t is, however, in this sense generally limited to occasional assemblies, such as conventions and the like, and does not usually apply to permanent bodies, as houses of assembly, etc.

DELEGATION. In Civil Law. A kind of novation by which the original debtor, in order to be liberated from his creditor, gives him a third person, who becomes obliged in his stead to the creditor or to the person appointed by him. See Novation.

Perfect delegation exists when the debtor who makes the delegation is discharged by the creditor.

Imperfect delegation exists when the creditor retains his rights against the original debtor. 2 Duvergnoy, n. 169.
2. It results frem the definition that a delegation is made by the concurrence of at least three parties, viz.: the party delegating,that is, the ancient debtor who procures another debtor in his stead; the party delegated, who enters into the obligation in the place of the ancient debtor, either to the creditor or to some other person appointed by him : and the creditor, who, in consequence of the obligation contracted by the party delegated, discharges the party delegating. Sometimes there intervenes a fourth party: namely, the person indicated by the creditor in whose favor the person delegated becomes obliged, upon the indication of the creditor and by the order of the person delegating. Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 2, art. 6. See La. Civ. Code, 2188, 2189 ; 1 Wend. N. Y. 164; 3 id. 66; 14id.116; 20 Johns. N. Y. $76 ; 5$ N. H. 410; 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 179; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 311, 312.
3. The party delegated is commonly a debtor of the person delegating, and, in order to be liberated from the obligation to him, contracts a new one with his creditor. In this case there is a novation both of the obligation of the person delegating, by his giving his creditor a new debtor, and of the person delegated, by the new obligation which he contracts. Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 2, art. 6, & 2.

In general, where the person delegated contracts a valid obligation to the creditor, the delegant is entirely liberated, and the creditor has no recourse against him in case of the substitute's insolvency. There is an exception to this rule when it is agreed that the debtor shall at his own risk delegate another person; but even in that case the creditor must not have omitted using proper diligence to obtain payment whilst the substitute continued solvent. Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 2.
4. Delegation differs from transfer and simple indication. The transfer which a creditor makes of his debt doas not include any novation. It is the original debt which passes from one of the parties, who makes the transfer, to the other, who receives it, and only takes place between these two persons, without the consent of the debtor necessarily intervening. Again, when the debtor indicates to the creditor a person from whom he may receive payment of the debt, and to whom the debtor gives the creditor an order for the purpose, it is merely a mandate, and neither a transfer nor a novation. So, where the creditor indicates a person to whom his debtor may pay the money, the debtor does not contract any obligation to the person indicated, but continues the debtor of his creditor who made the indication. Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 2. See Novation.
at Common Law. The transfer of authority from one or more persons to one or more others.
5. All persons, sui juris, may delegate to another authority to act for them in a matter which is lawful and otherwise capable of being delegated. Comyns, Dig. Attorney, c. 1 ; 9 Coke, 75 b; Story, Ag. $\frac{8}{6}$.

When a bare power or authority has been given to another, the latter cannot, in general, delegate that authority, or any part of it, to a third person, for the obvious reason that the principal has relied upon the intelligence, skill, and ability of his agent, and cannot have the same confidence in a stranger. Story, Ag. 8 13; 1 Livermore, Ag. $54-66 ; 2$ Kent, Comm. 633; 5 Pet. 390; 3 Stor. C. C. 411, 425 ; 1 McMull. So. C. 453 ; 15 Pick.

Mass. 303, 307 ; 26 Wend. N. Y. 485 ; 11 Gill & J. Md. 58; 5 111. 127, 133. A power to delegate his authority may, however, be given to the agent by express terms of substitution. 1 Livermore, Ag. 54-56; 1 Hill, N. Y. 505. And sometimes such power is implied, as in the following cases: First, when, by the law, sueh power is indispensable in order to accomplish the end proposed: as, for example, when goods are directed to be sold at auction, and the law forbids such sales except by licensed auctioneers. 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 386. Second, when the employment of such substitute is in the ordinary course of trade: as, where it is the custom of trade to employ a ship-broker or other agent for the purpose of procuring freight and the like. 2 Maule & S. 301 ; 2 Bos. & P. 438; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 167, 178; 6 Serg.& R. Penn. 386 . Third, when it is understood by the parties to be the mode in which the particular thing would or might be done. 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 206; 9 Ves. Ch. 234, 251, 252; 1 Maule & S. 484; 2 id. 301, 303, note. Fourth, when the powers thus delegated are merely mechanical in their nature. 1 Hill, N. Y. 501 ; Bunb. 166; Sugden, Pow. 176.
6. As to the form of the delegation, for most purposes it may be either in writing, not under seal, or verbally without writing; or the authority may be implied. When, however, the act is required to be done under seal, the delegation must also be under seal, unless the principal is present and verbally or impliedly authorizes the act. Story, Ag. & 51; 5 Cush. Mass. 483.

In Legislation. The whole number of the persons who represent a district, a state, and the like in a deliberative assembly: as, the delegation from Ohio, the delegation from the city of Philadelphia.

DELIBERATE. To examine, to consult, in order to form an opinion. Thus, a jury deliberate as to their verdict.

DELIBERATION. The act of the understanding by which a party examines whether a thing proposed ought to be done or not to be done, or whether it ought to be done in one manner or another.

The deliberation relates to the end proposed, to the means of accomplishing that end, or to both. It is a presnmption of law that all acts committed are done with due de-liberation,-that the party intended to do what he has done. But he may show the contrary. In contracts, for example, he may show that he has been taken by surprise (q.v.); and when a criminal act is charged, he may prove that it was an accident, and not with deliberation,-that, in fact, there was no intention or will. See Intention; Will.

In Legislation. The council which is held touching some business in an assembly having the power to act in relation to it.

DELICT. In Civil Law. The act by which one person, by fraud or malignity, causes some damage or tort to some other.

In ita moat enlarged sense, thia term includes all kinds of crimea and misdemeanora, and even the injury which has been caused by another, either voluntarily or accidentally, without evil intention. But more cominonly by delicta ars understood those small affencea which are puniahed by a amall fine or a short impriannment.

Private delicts are those which are directly injurious to a private individual.

Public delicts are those which affect the whole community in their hurtful consequences.

Quasi delicts are the acts of a person who, without malignity, but by an inexcusable imprudence, causes an injury to another. Pothier, Obl. n. 116; Erskine, Pract. 4. 4.1.

DELICTUM (Lat.). A crime or offence; a tort or wrong, as in actions ex delicto. 1 Chitty, Plead. A challenge of a juror propter delictum is for some crime or misdemeanor that affects his credit and renders him infamous. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 363; 2 Kent, Comm. 241. Some offence committed or wrong done. 1 Kent, Comm. 552; Cowp. 199, 200. A state of culpability. Occurring often, in the phrase "in pari delicto melior est conditio defendentis." So, where both parties to a broken contract have been guilty of unlawful acts, the law will not interfere, but will leave them in pari delicto. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 8111.
delinquent. In Civil Law. He who has been guilty of some crime, offence, or failure of duty.

DELIRIUM FEBRILD. In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of mental aberration incident to febrile diseases, and sometimes to the last stages of chronic diseases.
2. The aberration ia mostly of a subjective character, maintained by the inward activity of the mind rather than by outward impressions. "Regardless of persona or things areund him, and ecarcely capable of recognizing them when aroused by his attendanta, the patient retires within himself, to dwcll upon the scones and events of the past, which pass before it in wild and disorderly array, while the tongue feebly recerds the varying impressions, in the form of disjointed, incoherent discourse, or of senseless rhapsody." Ray, Med. Jur. 346. It comes on gradually, being first manifested by talking while asleep, and by a momentary forgetfulness of persona and thinga an waking. Fully aroused, however, the mind becomes clear and tranquil, and so continues until the return af sleep, when the same incidents recur. Gradually the mental disorder becomes more intense, and the intervala between its returns of shorter duration, until they disappear altogether. Occaaionally the past is revived with wonderful rividness, and acquirements are displayed which the patient, before his illncsa, had entirely forgotten. Instances are related of persons speaking in a language which, though acquired in youth, had long since passed from their memory.
3. The only acts which can possibly be affected hy delirium are willa, which are often made in the last illness during the periods when the mind is apparently clear. Under such circumstances it may be questioncd whether the apparent clearneas was or was not real; and it is a question nat always easily answered. In the early stages of delirium the mind may be quite clear, no doubt, in the incorvals, while it is ne less certain that there comea a pariod at last when no really lueid intarval occurs and the mind is reliable at no time. The person may be still, and even anawer questions with aome degrec of partinence, while a close examination wauld show the mind to be in a dreamy oandition and unahle to appreciate any nicc relations. In all these cases the question to be met is, whether the delirium which confessedly exiated befere the act left upen the mind no trace of ita influence; whether the testator, calm, quiet, clear, and coherent as he seemed, was nat quite uncamscious of the nature of the act he was perferming. The state of thinga implied in these questions is not fanciful. In every case it may possibly exist, and the questiane muat be met.
4. After abtaining all the light which can be thrown on the mental candition of the testator by nursea, aervanta, and phyaicians, then the character of the act itaelf and the ciroumatances which accompany it require a carcful investigation. If it ahould appear that the mind was apparently clear, and that the act was a rational act rationally done, consistent onc part with another, and in accordance with wishea or inatructiona previously expressed, and without any appearance of fureign influence, then it wuuld be established. A different state of thinge wanld to that extent raise suspicion and throw discredit on the act. Yet at the very beat it will ecessionally happen, so dubious sometimea are the indications, that the decision will be largely conjectural. I Hagg. Eccl. 146, 256, 502, 577; 2 id. 142; 3 id. 790 ; 1 Lee, Eccl. 130; 2 id. 229. See Insanity.

DELIRIUM TREMENS (called, also, manic-a-potu).

In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of mental disorder incident to habits of intemperate drinking, which generally appears as a sequel to a few days' abstinence from stimulating drink.
2. The nature of the connection between this disease and abstinence ia not yet clearly understeod. Where the former ancceeds a broken limb, or any other severe accident that contines the patient to his bed and obliges him to abstain, it would seem as if its development were favored by the constitutional diaturbance then existing. In other casea, where the abetinence ia apparentiy yoluntary, there is some reason to auppose that it is really the incubation of the disease, and not ita cause.
3. Ita approach ia generally indicated by a slight tremor and falteriug of the handa and lower extremities, a tremuluosness uf the voice, a certain restleasncss and sense of anxiety which the patient knows not how to describe or account for, disturbed sleep, and impaired appetite. These aymptoms having continued two cr three days, at the end of which time they have usually increascd in severity, the patient ccases to sleep altogether, and sonn becouea delirieus at intervala. Atter a while the delirium hecomes canstant, as well as the utter absence of sleep. This state of watchfulness and delirium owntinues three or four days, when, if the patient recover, it is succocded by aleep, which at first appears in uneasy and irregular naps, and lastly in ling, sannd, and refreshing slumberg. When sleep does not supcrvene about this time, the disease proves fatal
4. The mental aberration of delirium tremens is marked by some peculiar characters. Almost invariably the patient manifests feelinga of fear and suspieion and labara under continual apprehensinus of heing made the viotim of ainister designs and practices. He imaginea that people bave conspired to rab and murder him, and insista that he can hear them in an adjoining room arranging their plans and preparing to rush upon him, ar that he is farcibly detained and prevented from going to his own home. One of the mest common hallucinationa in this disease is thet of conetantly sceing devils, anakes, or vermin around him and on him. Under the isfluence of the terrors inspired by these notions, the wretched patient often endeavors to cut his threat, or jump eut of the widdow, or murder his wife, or some one else whom his disordered imagination identifies with his enemies.
5. Delitium tremens must not be confounded with other forms of mental derangement which occur in condection with intemperate hahits. Hard drinking may produce a paroxyem of manigeal exoitement. or a host of hallucinations and delusions, which disappear after a few day a' abstinence from drink and are succeeded by the ordinary mental condition. In U. S. v. McGlue, 1 Curt. C. C. 1, for instance, the prisener was defended on the ples that the hom cide for which he was indicted was committed in a fit of delirium tremens. There was no doubt that he was labering under aeme form of ins:anity; but the fact, which appeared in evidence, that his reason returned befere the rccurrence of sound sleep, readered it very doubtful whether the trouble was delirium tremens, altheugh in every other respect it looked like that disease.
6. By repented decisions the law has been settled in this country that delirium tremens anauls responsibility fur any act that may be committed onder its influence: previded, of course, that the mental condition can stand the tests applied in other forms ef inganity. The law dees not loek to the remete causes of the mental affection; and the rule on this point is that if the act is not cemmitted under the immediate influence of intexicating drinks the plea of insanity is not invalidated by the fact that it is the result of drinking at some previous time. Such drinking may ho morally wrong; but the same may be said of ether vicioue indulgences which give rise to much of the insanity which exists in the world. 1 Curt. C. C. 1; 5 Mas. C. C. 28; State v. Wilson, Ray, Med. Jur. 520. In the ense of Birdsall, 1 Beek, Med. Jur. 808, it was held that delirium tremens was not a valid defence, because the prisoner knew, hy repeated experience, that indulgence in drinking would probsbly bring on an attack of the disease.

It is not quite certain what the rulo of law is in England. Twe cases arc cited where the plea of delirium tremens was admitted in excueso for crime. Reg. v. Watsun, and Reg. v. Simpson, Taylor, Med. Jur. 656.

Deliverance. In Practice. A term used by the clerk in court to every prisener who is arraigned and pleads not guilty, to whom he wishes a good deliverance. In modern practice this is seldom used.

DELIVERY. In Conveyancing. The transfer of a deed from the grantor to the prantee, or some person acting in his behalf, in such a manner as to deprive the grantor of the right to recall it at his option.

An absolute delivery is one which is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the possession of the grantor.

A conditional delivery is one which passes the deed from the possession of the grantor, but is not to be completed by possession in the grantee, or a third person as his agent, until the happening of a specified event.
A deed delivered in this manner is an escrow, and such a delivery must be always made to a third person, Sheppard, Touohet. 59; Creke Eliz. 520; $8 \mathrm{Mabs}$.230 ; though where the transfer to the pessession of the grantee was merely to enable him te convey it to a third person to hold as an esorow, it

Wes held not an abselute delivery to the grantee. 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 530; 4 Watts, Pend. 180; 22 Me. 569 ; 23 Wend. N. Y. 43 ; 2 Barnew. & C. 82.
2. No particular form of procedure is required to effect a delivery. It may be by acts merely, by words merely, or by beth combined; but in all cases an intention that it shall be a delivery must exist. Comyns, Dig. Fait (A) ; 1 Wood, Conv. 193; 6 Sim. Ch. 31 ; 11 Vt. 621 ; 18 Me .391 ; 2 Penn. St. 191; 12 Johns. N. Y. 536; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 456 ; 20 Pick. Mass. 28 ; 4 J. J. Marsh. Ky.572. The deed of a corporation is generally delivered by affixing the corporate scal. Coke, Litt. 22, n., 36, n.; Croke Eliz. 167; 2 Rolle, Abr. Fait (I).

It may be made by an agent as well as by the grantor himself, 9 Mass. 307; 3 Metc Mass. 412 ; 4 Day, Conn. 66; 5 Barnew. & C. 671 ; 2 W ashburn, Real Prop. 579 ; or to an agent previously appointed, 6 Metc. Mass. 356 , or subsequently recegnized, 22 Me .121 ; 14 Ohio, 307 ; but a subsequent assent on the part of the grantee will not be presumed. 9 IIl. 177 ; 1 N. H. 353 ; 5 id. 71 ; 15 Wend. N. Y. 656 ; 25 Johns. N. Y. 187. See, also, 9 Mass. 307-4 Day Conn. 66; 2 Ired. Eq. No. C. 557.
3. To complete a delivery, acceptance must take place, which may be presumed from the grantee's pessession, 1 Harr. & J. Md. 319 ; 4 Pick. Mass. 518; 2 Ala. 136; 11 id. 412; 1 N. H. 353; 4 Fla. 359; 6 Mo. $3 £ 6$; 1 Zabr. N. J. 379 ; from the relationship of a person holding the deed to the grantee, 7 Ill . 557 ; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 240, 456 ; and from other circumstances. 18 Conn. 257; 5 Watts, Penn. 243.

There can ordinarily be but one ralid delivery, 12 Jehns. N. Y. 536 ; 20 Pick. Mass. 28; which can take place only after completa execution. 2 Dev. No. C.379. But there must be one, 2 Harr. Del. 197; 16 Vt. $563 ; 2$ Washburn, Real Prop. 581 ; and from that one the deed takes effect. 12 Mass. 455 ; 4 Yeates, Penn. 278; 18 Me. 190. See 1 Den. N. Y. 323 .

Consult 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2018 et seq.; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 577 et seq.; 4 Kent, Comm. 466 .

In Contracts. The transfer of the possession of a thing from one person to another.
4. Originally, delivery was a clear and unequirocal act of giving possession, accomplished by placing the subject to be transferred in the hands of the transferree or his avowed agent, or in their respective warehouses, vessels, carts, and the like; lut in modern times it is frequently symbolical, as by delivery of the key to a roem containing goods, 2 Aik. Vt. $79 ; 5$ Johns. N. Y. $3 £ 5$; 1 Yeates, Penn. 529; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 445 ; 1 East, 192; see, also, 7 East, 558; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 1; 3 Bos. & P. 233; 3 Barnew. & C. 45 ; by marking timber on a wharf, or goods in a warehouse, or by separating and weighing or measuring them, 2 Vt .374 ; or otherwise constructive, as by the delivery of a part for the whole. 23 Vt. 265 ; 9 Barb. N. Y.

5. Delivery is not necessary at common law to complete a sale of personal property as between the vendor and vendee, Story, Sales; but.as against third parties possession retained by the vendor raises a presumption of fraud conclusive according to some authorities, 1 Cranch, 309 ; 2 Munf. Va. 341 ; 4 Mi'Cord, So. C. 294; 1 Ov. Tenn. 91; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 533; 18 Penn. St. 113 ; 4 Harr. Del. 458; 2 III. 296 ; 1 Halst. N. J. 155; 5
 219; 9 Johns. N. Y. 337; 1 Campb. 332; 2 Term, 587; holding it merely strong evidence of fraud to be left to the jury, Cowp. 432; 2 Bos. & P. 59; 3 Barnew. & C. 368; 4 id. 652 ; 5 Rand. Va. 211; 1 Bail. So. C. 558; 3 Yerg. Tenn. 475: 7 id. 440; 3 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 643 ; 4 N. Y. 303, 580 ; 2 Metc. Mass. 99; 18 Me. 127; 5 La. Ann. 1; 1 Tex. 415 ; but is, in general, where the property in goods is to be transferred in pursuance of a previous contract, 1 Taunt. 318; 16 Me. $49 ; 1$ Parsons, Contr. 447; and also in case of a donatio causa mortis, 3 Binn. Penn. 370; 2 Ves. Ch. 120; 9 id .1 . The rules requiring actual full delivery are subject to modification in the case of bulky articles. 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 19; 12 Mass. 400 ; 16 Me. 49. See, also, 3 Johns. N. Y. 399; 13 id. 294; 19 id. 218; 1 Dall. Penn. 171; 2 N. H. 75 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 508.
6. A condition requiring delivery may be annexed as a part of any contract of transfer. 19 Me. 147.

In the absence of contract, the amount of transportation to be performed by the seller to constitute delivery is determined by general usage.

In Medical Jurlsprudence. The act of a woman giving birth to her offspring.
7. Pretended delivery may preseat itself in three points of view. First, when the female who feigns has never been pregnant. When thoroughly investigated, this may always be detected. There are signs which must be present and cannot be feigned. An onlargement of the orifice of the uterus, and a tumefactivn of the organs of generation, should always be present, and if absent are z aciusive against the fact. 2 Annales d'Hygiène, 227. Second, when the pretended pregancy and delivery have been preceded by one or more deliveries. In this case atteation should be given to the following oircumstances: the mystery, if any, which has been affected with regard to the situation of the female; her age; that of her husband; and, particularly, whether aged or decrepit. Third, when the woman bas been actually delivered, and substitutes a living for a dead obild. But little evidence can be obtained on this subject from a physical examination.
8. Concealed delivery generally takes place when the woman either has destroyed her offipring or it was born dead. In suspected cases the following oircumstances should be atteoded to. First, the proofs of pregnancy whioh arise in consequence of the examination of the mother. When she has been pregnant, and has been delivered, the usual signs of delivery, mentioned below, will be present. A careful investigation as to the woman's appearance before and since the delivery will have some weight; though such evidence is not always to be relied upon, as such appearances are not unfrequently deceptive. Second, the pruofs of recent delivery. Third, the connection between the supposed state of parturition and the state of the child that is found; for if the age of the child do not edrrespond to that time it will be a strong eircumstance in favor of the mother's innocence. A redness of the ekin and an attachment of the umbilical cord to the navel indicate a recent birth. Whether the child was living at its birth, belongs to the sulject of infanticide.
9. The usual signs of delivery are very well collected in Beck's excellent treatise on Medical Jurisprudence, and are here extracted:-
If the female be examined within three or fonr days after the occurrence of delivery, the following circumstances will generally be observed: greater or less weakness, a slight paleness of the face, the eye a little sunken and surrounded by a purplieh or dark-brown colored ring, and a whiteness of the skin like that of a person convalescing from disease The belly is soft, the skin of the abdumen is lax, lies in folds, and is traversed in various directions by shining reddish and whitish lines, which especially extend from the groin and pubes to the navel. These lines bave sometimes bcen termed linex albicantes, and are particularly observed near the umbilical region, where the abdomen has experienced the greatest distension. The breasts be come tumid and hard, and, on pressure, emit a fluid, which at first is serous and afterwards gradually becomes whiter; and the presence of this secretion is generally accompanied with a full pulse and soft skin, covered with a moistare of a peculiar and somewhat acid odor. The areole round the nipples aro dark-oolored. The external genital organs and vagina are dilated and tunefied throughout the whole of their extent, from the pressure of the foetus. The uterus may be felt through the abdominal parietes, voluminous, firm, and globular, and rising nearly as bigh as the umbilicus. Its orifice is soft and tumid, and dilated so as to admit two or more fingers. The fourchette, or anterior margin of the perinæum, is sometimes torn, or it is lax, and appears to have suffered considerable distension. A discharge (termed the lochial) commences from the uterus, which is distinguished from the menses by its pale color, its peculiar and well-known smell, and its duration. The lochia are at first of a red color, and gradually become lighter until they cease.
10. These signs may generally be relied upun as indicating the state of pregnancy: yet it requires much experience in order not to be deceived by appearances.

The lochial dischargo might be mistaken for menstruation, or fluor albus, were it not for its peculiar smell; and this it has been found impossible, by any artifice, to destroy.

Relaxation of the soft parts arises as frequently from menstruation as from delivery; but in theso cases the os uteri and vagina are not so muoh tumefied, nor is there that tenderness and swelling. The parts are found pale and flabby wben all sigos of contusion disappear, after delivery ; and this circumstance does not follow menstruation.
11. The presence of milk, though a usual sign of delivery, is not alwsys to be relied upon; for this secretion may take place independent of pregnancy.

The wrinkles and relaxations of the abdomea

Which follow delivery may be the consequence of dropsy, or of lankness following great ohesity. This state of the parte is also seldom striking after the birth of the firet child, as they shortiy resume their natural state.

DELUSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. A diseased state of the mind, in which persons believe things to exist which exist only, or in the degree they are conceived of only, in their own imaginations, with a persuasion so fixed and firm that neither evidence nor argument can convince them to the contrary.

The individual is, of course', insane. For example, should a parent unjustly persist without the least ground in attributing to his daughter a course of vice, and use her with uniform unkindness, there not being the slightest pretence or color of reason for the supposition, a just inference of insanity or delusion would arise in the minds of a jury; because a supposition long entertained and persisted in, after argument to the contrary, and against the natural affections of a parent, suggests that he must labor under some morbid mental delusion. DEMAND. A claim; a legal obligation.
Demand is a word of art of an extent greater in its signification than any other word except claim. Coke, Litt. 291 ; 2 Hill, N. Y. $220 ; 9$ Serg. & R. Penn. 124; 6 Watts & S. Penn. 226.

A release of all demands is, in general, a release of all covenants, real or personal, conditions, whether broken or not, annuities, recognizances, obligations, contracts, and the like, 3 Penn. 120; 2 Hill, N. Y. 228 ; but does not discharge rent before it is due, if it be a rent incident to the reversion; for the rent was not only due, but the consideration -the future enjoyment of the lands-for which the rent was to be given was not executed. 1 Sid. 141; 1 Lev. $99 ; 3$ id. 274; Bacon, Abr. Release, I. See 10 Coke, 128 ; 23 Pick. Mass. 295; 7 Md. 375.

In Practice. A requisition or request to do a particular thing specified under a claim of right on the part of the person requesting.
2. In causes of action arising ex contractu, it is frequently necessary, to secure to the party all bis rights and to enable him to bring an action, that he should make a demand upon the party bound to perform the contract or discharge the obligation. Thus, Where property is sold to be paid for on delivery, a demand must be made and proved on trial before bringing an action for non-delivery, 5 Term, 409 ; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 254 ; 3 Price. Exch. 58; 1 Tayl. No. C. 149 ; but not if the seller has incapacitated himself from delivering them, 10 East, $359 ; 5$ Barnew. & Ald.. 712; 2 Bibb, Ky. 280; 1 Vt. 25; 4 Mass. 474 ; 6 iā. 61 ; 16 id. 453 ; 3 Wend. N. Y. 556 ; 9 Johns. N. Y. 361 ; 2 Me. 308; 5 Munf. Va. 1 ; and this rule and exception apply to contracts for marriage. 2 Dowl. & R. 55; 1 Chitty, Pract. 57, note ( n ), 438 , note (e). A demand of rent is necessary before re-entry for non-payment. See Re-Entry. No de maud is necessary on a promissory note before bringing an action in general ; lutalter a tender demand must be made of the sum tendered. 1 Campb. 181, 474; 1 Stark. 323. See Payment ; Parsons, Notes & B.
3. In cases arising ex delicto, a demand is frequently necessary. Thus, when the wife, apprentice, or servant of one person has been harbored by another, the proper course is to make a demand of restoration before an action brought, in order to constitute the party a wilful wrong-doer, unless the plaintiff can prove an original illegal enticing away. 2 Lev. 63; Willes, 582; 1 Peake, Cas. 55; 5 East, 39; 6 Term, 652; 4 J. B. Moore, 12.

So, too, in cases where the taking of goods is lawful but their subsequent aetention becomes illegal, it is absolutely necessary, in order to secure sufficient evidence of a conversion on the trial, to give a formal notice of the owner's right to the property and possession, and to make a formal demand in writing of the delivery of such possession to the owner. See Trover; Conversion. And when a nuisance has been erected or continued by a man on his own land, it is advisable, particularly in the case of a pripate nuisance, to give the party notice, and request him to remove it, either before an entry is made for the purpose of abating it or an action is commenced against the wrong-doer; and a demand is always indispensable in cases of a continuance of a nuifance originally created by another person. 2 Barnew. & C. 302; Croke Jac. 555 ; 1 East, 111; 5 Coke, 100, 101; 2 Phillipps, Ev. 8, 18, n., 119; 5 Viner, Abr. 506: 1 Ayliffe, Pand. 497 ; Bacon, Abr. Rent, I.
4. In cases of contempts, as where an order to pay money or to do any other thing has been made a rule of court, a demand for the payment of the money or performance of the thing must be made before an attachment will be issued for a contempt. 2 Dowl. Parl. Cas. 338, 448 ; 4 id. 86, 114 ; 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 88, 459 ; 4 Tyrwh. 369 ; 2 Scott, 193; 1 Harr. & W. 216.

The demand should be made by the party having the right, or his authorized agent, 2 Bos. & P. 464 a; 1 Bail. So. C. 193 ; 2 Mas. C. C. 77, of the person in default, in cases of torts, 1 Esp. 22 ; 8 Barnew. & C. 528 ; 7 Johns. N. DEMMAND IN RECONVENTION. A demand which the defendant institutes in consequence of that which the plaintiff has bronght against him. Used in Louisiana. La. Pract. Code, art. 374.

DEMANDANT. The plaintiff or party who hrings a real action. Coke, Litt. 127 ; Comyns, Dig.

DEMEMBRATION. In Scotch Law.

 Maliciously cutting off or otherwise separating one limb from another. I Hume, 323; Bell, Dict.DEMENS (Lat.). One who has lost his mind through sickness or some other cause. One whose faculties are enfeebled. Dean, Med. Jur. 481. See Dementia.

DEMENTIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. That form of insanity which is characterized by mental weakness and decrepitude, and by total inability to reason correctly or incorrectly.
The mind dwells only in the past, and the thoughts succeed one another without any obvious bond of associstion. Delusions, if they exist, sare transitory, snd leave no permanent impression ; and for every thing recent the memory is exeeedingly weak. In mania, the action of the mind is marked by foree, hurry, and intensity; in dementia, by slownoss and weaknoss. It is mostly the sequel of mania, of whieb, in fact, it is the natural termination. Oceasionally it occurs in an acute form in young subjects; and here only it is curable. In old men, in whom it often occurs, it is ealled senile domentia, and it indieates the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of the bodily decay. It is this form of dementia only which gives rise to litigation ; for in the others the ineompeteincy is too patent to admait of question. It cannot be dosoribed by any positive charscters, because it differs in the different stages of its progress, varying from simple lapse of memory to coraplete insbility to recognize persons or things. And it must be borne in mind that often the mental infirmity is not se serious as might be supposed st first sight. Many sn old man who seems to be scarcely conscious of what is passing around him, sod is guilty of frequent breaches of deeorum, needs only to have his attention aroused to a matter in which he is deeply interested, to show no lack of vigor or acuteness. In other words, the mind may be damaged supericially( to use a fignre), while it may be sound at the core. And therefore it is that one may be quite oblivious of names and dstes, while comprehending perfectly well his relations to others and the interests in which he was concerned. It follows that the impressions made upon cessual or ignorant observers in regard to the mental condition are of far less value than those made upon persons who have been well sequainted with his habits and have had occasion to test the vigor of bis faculties.
The wills of old men are oftcn contested on the ground of senile dementia, and the conflicting testimony of observers, the proofs of foreign influence, and the indications of mental capacity all combine to render it no easy task to srrive st a sstisffactory conclusion. The only general rule of much prsotical value is that competency must be always messured, not by any fancied standard of intellect, but solely by the requirements of the act in question. A small and familiar matter would require less mental power than one complicated in its details and somewhat new to the testutor's experience. Less capacity would he necessary to distribute an estate between a wife and child tham between a multitude of relatives with unequsl claims upon his hounty. Such is the principle; and the ends of justioe cannot be better served than by its correct and faithful applieation. Of course, there will slways be more or less dificulty; but generally, hy disoarding all legal and metaphysical subleties and following the leading of common sense, it will be satisfactorily surmounted.
The legal principles by which the courts are governed are not essentially different whether the mental inoapacity proceed from dementia or manis. If the will coincides with the previously expressed wishes of the testator, if it recognizes the clsims of those who stood in near relation to him, if it shows no indications of undue influence,--if, in short, it is a rationsl act rationslly done,- it will be established, and very properly so, though there msy have been considerable impairment of mind. 2 Phill. Ecel. 449; 3 Wash. C. C. 580; 4 id. 262. See Insanitr.

DEMESNE. Lands of which the lord had the absolute property or ownership, as distinguished from feudal lands, which he held of a superior. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 104; Cowel. Lands which the lord retained under his immediate control, for the purpose of supplying his table and the immediate needs of his heusehold: distinguished from that farmed out to tenants, called among the Saxons bordlands. Blount; Coke, Litt. 17 a.
Own; original. Son assault demesne, his (the plaintiff's) original assault, or assault in the first place. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. & 633; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 120, 306.

DEMESNE AS OF FEE. $A$ man is said to be seised in his demesne as of fee of a corporeal inheritance, because he has a property dominicum or demesne in the thing itself. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 106. But when he has no dominion in the thing itself, as in the case of an incorporeal hereditament, he is said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne as of fee. Littleton, $810 ; 17 \mathrm{Serg}$. \& R. Penn. 196 ; Jones, Land Tit. 166.

Formorly it was the practice in an action on the case-e. $g$. for a nuisance to real estate -to aver in the declaration the seisin of the plaintiff in demesne as of fee; and this is still necessary, in order te estop the record with the land, so that it may run with or attend the title. Archbold, Civ. Plead. 104; Coke, Entr. 9, pl. 8; Lilly, Entr. 62; 1 Saund. 346; Willes, 508. But such an action may be maintained on the possessivn as well as on the seisin; although the effect of the record in this case upon the title would not be the same. Stephen, Plead. 322; 1 Lutw. 120; 2 Mod. 71; 4 Term, 718; 2 Wms. Saund. 113 b; Croke Car. 500, 575.
DEMESNE LANDS. A phrase meaning the same as demesne.

DEMESNE LANDS OF THE

 CROWN. That share of lands reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or which came to it afterwards by forfeiture or otherwise. 1 Sharswood. Blackst. Comm. 286; 2 Stephen, Comm. 550.DEMI-MARK. A sum of money ( 6 s . 8d., 3 Blackstone, Comm. App. v.) tendered and paid into court in certain cases in the trial of a writ of right by the grand assize. Coke, Litt, 294 b; Booth, Real Act. 98.

It was paid by the tenant to obtain an inquiry by the grand assize into the time of the demandant's seisin. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 429 ; Stearns, Real Act. 378, and note. It compelled the demandant to begin. 3 Chitty, Plead. 1373. It is nnknown in American practice. 13 Wend. N. Y. 546 ; Stearns, Real Act. 378.

DEMI-VILL. Half a tithing.
DEMIDIETAS. A word used in ancient records for a moiety, or onc-half.

DEMIES. In some universities and colleges this term is synonymous with scholars. Boyle, Char. 129.

DEMISE. A conveyance, either in fee for life or for years.

A lease or conveyance for a term of years. According to Chief Justice Gibson, the term strictly denotes a posthumons grant, and no more. 5 Whart. Penn. 278. See 4 Bingh. n. c. 678; 2 Bouvier, Inst. ц. 1774 et seq.

A term nearly synonymous with death, appropriated in lingland especially to denote the decease of the king or queen.

DEMISE OF THE KING. The natural dissolution of the king.

The term is said to denote in law merely a transfer of the property of the crown. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 249. By demise of the crown we mean only that, in consequence of the disunion of the king's natural body from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor, and so the royal dignity remains perpetual. Plowd. 117, 234.

A similar result, viz.: the perpetual existence of the president of the United States, has bcen secured by the constitution and subsequent statutes. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 249.

DEMISE AND RE-DEMISE. A conveyauce by mutual leases made from one to another on each side of the same land, or of something issuing from it. A lease for a given sum-usually a mere nominal amount -and a release for a larger rent. Toullier; Whishaw ; Jacob.

DEMOCRACY. That government in which the people rule.
But the multitude cannot actually rule: an unorganic democracy, therefore, one that is not founded upun a number of institutions each endowed with a degree of self-government, naturally becomea a one-man government. The basis of the democracy is equality, as that of the aristocracy is privilege; but equality of itaelf is no guarantee for liberty, nor does equality constitute liberty. Ahsolute democracies exiated in antiquity and the middle ages: they bave never endured for any length of time. On their charaster, Ariatotle's Politics may be read to the greatest advantage. Lieber, in his Civil Liberty, dwells at length on the fact that mere equality, without institutions of various kinds, is adverse to aelf-government; and hiatory shows that ebsolute democracy is any thing rather than a convertible term for liherty. See Absoldtism; Govennment.

DEMONSTRATIO (Lat.). Description; addition; denomination. Oucurring often, in the phrase falsa demonstratio non nocet (a false description does not harm). 2 Blackstone, Comm. 382, n.; 2 P. Will. Ch. 140; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8291 ; Wigram, Wills, 128.

DEMONSTRATION (Lat. demonstrare, to point out). Whatever is said or written to designate a thing or person.

Several descriptions may be employed to denote the same person or object; and the rule of law in such cases is that if one of the descriptions be erroneous it may be rejected, if, after it is expunged, enough will remain. to identify the person or thing intended. For falsa demonstratio non nocet. The meaning of this rule is, that if there be an adequate description with convenient certainty of what was contemplated, a subsequent erroneous addition will not vitiate it. The complement of this maxim is, non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam quae competent in limitationem veram; which means that if it stand doubtful upon the words whether they import a false reference or demonstration, or whether they be words of restraint that limit the generality of the former words, the law will never intend error or falsehood. If, therefore, there is some object wherein all the demonstrations are true, and some wherein part are true and part false, they shall be intended words of true limitation to ascertain that person or thing wherein all the circumstances are true. 4 Exch. 604, per Alderson, B.; 8 Bingh. 244 ; Broom, Leg. Max. 490; Plowd. 191; 7 Cush. Mass. 460.

The rule that falsa demonstratio does not vitiate an otherwise good description applies to every kind of statement of fact. Some of the particulars in an averment in a declaration may be rejected if the declaration is sensible without them and by their presence is made insensible or defective. Yelv. 182.

In Evidence. That proof which excludes all possibility of error.

DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY. A pecuniary legacy coupled with a direction that it be paid out of a specific fund.

It is so far of the nature of a specific legacy that (while the fund exists out of which it is specially payable) it will not abate with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets; and yet, like a general legacy, it is not liable to ademption by the alienation or non-existence of the property specially pointed out as a means of catisfying it. 2 Williams, Exec. 839; 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. 237, 553 ; Sheppard, Touchst. 433 ; Swinburne, Wills, 485; 1 Mer. Ch. 178; 2 Younge & C. Exch. 90.

DEMPSTER. In Scotch Law. A doomsman. One who pronounced the sentence of court. 1 Howell, St. Tr. 937.

DEMURRAGE. The delay of a vessel by the freighter beyond the time allowed for loading, unloading, or sailing.

Payment for such delay.

Demurrage may become due either by the ship's detentiou for the purpose of loading or unloading the cargo, either before or during or after the voyage, or in waiting for convoy. 3 Kent, Comm. 159; 2 Marshall, Ins. 721; Abbott, Shipp. 192; 5 Comyns, Dig. 94, n., 505 ; 4 Taunt. 54, 55 ; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 426 ; Parsons, Mar. Law.

DEMURRER (Lat. demorari, old Fr. demorrer, to stay; to abide). In Pleading. An allegation that, admitting the facts of the preceding pleading to be true as stated by the party making it, he has yet shown no cause why the party demurring should be cumpelled by the court to proceed further. A declaration that the party demurring will go no further, because the other has shown nothing against him. 5 Mod. 232; Coke, Litt. 71 b. It imports that the objecting party will not proceed. but will wait the judgment of the court whether he is bound so to do. Coke, Litt. 71 b ; Stephen, Plead. 61.
2. In Equity. An allegation of a defendant, which, admitting the matters of fact alleged by the bill to be true, shows that as they are therein set forth they are insufficient for the plaintiff to proceed upon or to oblige the defendant to answer; or that, for some reason apparent on the face of the bill, or on account of the omission of some matter which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstances which ought to be attendant thereon, the defendant ought not to be compelled to answer to the whole bill, or to some certain part thereof. Mitford, Eq. Plead. Jerem. ed. 107.

A demurrer may be either to the relief asked by the bill, or to both the relief and the discovery, 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 184; 10 Paige, Ch. N.Y. 210; but not to the discovery alone where it is merely incidental to the relief. 2 Brown, Ch. 123; 1 Younge \& C. Ch. 197 ; 1 Sim. \& S. Ch. 83. As to exceptions to avoid self-crimination, see 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 407; Walk. Ch. Mich. 327 ; 1 Hayw. No. C. 167; 2 Harr. \& G. Md. 382; 6 Day, Conn. 361. If it goes to the whole of the relief, it generally defeats the discovery if successful, 2 Brown, Ch. 319 ; 9 Ves. Ch. 71 ; 3 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 117; Saxt. Ch. N. J. 358; Walk. Ch. Mich. 35 ; 5 Metc. Máss. 525 ; otherwise, if to part only. Adams, Eq. 334; Story, Eq. Plead. $\frac{8}{2} 54$; 10 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 210.
3. They may be brought either to original or supplemental bills; and there are peculiar causes of demurrer in the different classes of supplemental bills. 2 Madd. Ch. 387 ; 4 Sim. Ch. $76 ; 17$ Ves. Ch. $144 ; 1$ Mylne & C. Ch. 42; 3 Hare, Ch. 476 ; 3 P. Will. Ch. $284 ; 4$ Paige, Ch. N. Y. 259 ; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 250 ; 13 Pet. 6, 14 ; Story, Eq. Plead. 8611.

Demurrers aro general, where no particular cause is assigned except the usual formulary that there is no equity in the bill, or special, where the particular defects are pointed out. Story, Eq. Plead. & 455. General demurrers are used to point out defects of substance; special, to point out defects in form.
4. The defendant may demur to part of the bill, 2 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 106, and plead or answer to the residue, or both plead and answer to separate parts thereof, 3 P. Will. Ch. 80; 2 Atk. Ch. 282 ; 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 214 ; 4 Wisc. 54 ; taking care so to apply them to different and distinct parts of the bill that each may be consistent with the others, 3 Mylne & C. Ch. 653 ; 1 Keen, Ch. 389 ; 23 Miss. 304 ; Cooper, Eq. Plead. 112, 113 ; Story, Eq. Plead. 8442 ; but if it be to the whole bill, and a part be good, the demurrer must be overruled. 27 Miss. 419 ; 5 Ired. Eq. No. C. 86 ; 29 Me. 273 ; 12 Metc. Mass. 323.

Demurrers lie only for matter apparent on the face of the bill, and not upon any new matter alleged by the defendant. - Beames, Ord. in Ch. 26 ; 19 Ves. Ch. 180, 327 ; 6 Sim. Ch. 51: 2 Schcales & L. Ch. Ir. 637; 5 Fla. 110; 3 Halst. Ch. N. J. 440. Demurrers are not applicable to pleas or answers. If a plea or answer is bad in substance, it may be shown on hearing; and if the answer is insufficient in form, exceptions should be filed. Story, Eq. Plead. $38456,864$.
5. Demurrers to relief are usually brought for causes relating to the jurisdiction, as that the subject is not cognizable by any court, as in some cases under political treaties, 1 Ves. Ch. 371 ; 2 id. $56 ; 2$ Pet. $253 ; 4$ id. 411 ; 7 id. 51 ; but see 3 Story, Const. 88 1631-1637; 5 Pet. 1 ; 6 id. 515 ; 8 id. 436 ; 1 Wheat. 304; 2 id. 259 ; 7 id. $535 ; 8$ id. $464 ; 9$ id. $489 ; 10$ id. 181; 1 Wash. C. C. 322, certain cases of confiscation, 3 Ves. Ch. 424 ; 10 id. 354 ; see 3 Dall. Penn. 199, and questions of boundaries, Story, Eq. Plead. 347; 1 Ves. Ch. 446 ; as to law in the United States, see 6 Cranch, 158; 4 Dall. Penn. 3; 5 Pet. 284; 13 id. 23; 14 id. 210 ; or that it is not cognizable by a court of equity, 2 Madd. Chanc. Pract. 229; 1 Sim. \& S. Ch. 227 ; 6 Beav. Rolls, 165 ; Story, Eq. Plead. 8472 ; 9 Metc. Mass. 469 ; 30 N. H. $446 ; 19 \mathrm{Me} .124 ; 7$ Cranch, $68 ; 16$ Ga. 541 ; 16 Mo. 543 ; 8 Ired. Eq. No. C. 123 ; 21 Miss. 93 ; or that some other court of equity has jurisdiction properly, 4 Wheat. $1 ; 6$ Cranch, 158; 7 Ga. 243 ; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 402; 9 Mod. 95; 1 Ves. Ch. 203; or that some other court has jurisdiction properly, 3 Dall. Penn. 382; 8 Pet. 148 ; 30 N. H. 444; 2 Hlow. 497 : to the person, as that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue, by reason of personal disability, as infancy, idiocy, etc., Jac. 377, bankruptcy and assignment, 9 Ves. Ch. 77; 8 Sim. Ch. 28, 76; 1 Younge \& C. Ch. 172, or has no title to sue in the character in which he sues, 2 P. Will. Ch. 369 ; 6 Ves. Ch. 773 ; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 575 : to the substance of the bill, as that the matter is too trivial, 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 183; 3 Ohio St. 457; 2 Atk. Ch. 253 ; 1 Vern. Ch. 359 ; Cooper, Eq. Plead. 166; that the plaintiff has no interest in the matter, Mitford, Eq. Plead. Jerem. ed. 154; 2 Brown, Ch. 322 ; 8 Ves. Ch. 241 ; 2 Sim. \& S. Ch. 592 ; 4 Russ. Ch. 225, 244 ; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 305 ; 30 Me .419 ; or that the defendant has no such interest, Story, Eq. Plead. $\$ 519$; 2 Brown, Ch. 332 ; 1 Ves. \& B. Ch. Ir. 545 ; 5 Madd. Ch. 19; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 485 ; 10 Wheat. 384 - or that the bill is to enforce a peralty, 1 Younge, Ch. 308; 1 Mer. Ch. 391 ; 4 Brown, Ch. 434 : to the fame and form of the bill, as that there is a defect or want of form, Mitford, Eq. Plead. 206; 5 Russ. Ch. 42; 5 Madd. Ch. 378; 3 Ves. Ch. 253; 14 id .156 ; 11 Mo. 42, or that the bill is multifarious, Story, Eq. Plead. \% 530, n.; 1 Mylne \& C. Ch. 618; 2 Sim. \& S. Ch. 79; 4 Harr. Ch. 9; 2 Gray, Mass. 471; 3 How. 412; 5 id. 127 ; 4 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 592 ; that there is a want or misjoinder of plaintiffs. 16 Ves. Ch. 325; 1 P. Will. Ch. 428; 4 Russ. Ch. 272; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 281; 3 id. 222 ; 4 id. 510 ; 3 Cranch, 220 ; 7 id. $69 ; 8$ Wheat. 451 ; 5 Fla. 110; 5 Du. N. Y. 168 ; 2 Gray, Mass. 467 ; 1 Jones, No. C. Eq. $40 ; 4$ Fla. 11.
6. Demurrers to discovery may be brought for most of the above causes, 1 Story, Eq. Plead. 8549 ; 9 Sim. Ch. 180; 16 Ves.Ch. 239; 12 Beav. Rolls, 423 ; 2 Stor. C.C. 59 ; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 547; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 601; and, generally, that the plaintiff has no right to demand the discovery asked for, either in whole or in part, 8 Ves. Ch. 398; 2 Russ. Ch. 564, or to ask it of the defendant. Story, Eq. Plead. 88570,571 . See Discovery.

The effect of a demurrer. When allowed is to put an end to the suit, unless it is confined to a part of the bill or the court gives the plaintiff leave to amend. 13 III. 31 . If overruled, the defendant must make a fresh defence by answer, 12 Mo . 132; unless he obtain permission to put in a plea. Adams, Eq. 336. It admits the facts which are well pleaded, 20 How. 108; and the jurisdiction. 28 Vt. 470 ; 4 R. I. 285 ; 1 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 434; 4 Md . 72.
7. At Law. A general demurrer is one which excepts to the sufficieney of a previous pleading in general terms, without showing speeifically the nature of the objection; and such demurrer is sufficient when the objection is on matter of substance. Stephen, Plead. 159; 1 Chitty, Plead. 639; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 167 ; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (N 5) ; Coke, Litt. 72 a; 1 Duteh. N.J. 506; 11 Ark. 12 ; 2 Iowa, 532; 2 Barb. N. Y. 160.

A special demurrer is one whieh excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows specifically the nature of the objection and the particular ground of exception. Coke, Litt. $72 a$; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (N5).

It is neeessary where the objection is to the form, by the statutes 27 Eliz. e. 5 and 4 Anne, c. 16. 18 Arl. $347 ; 6 \mathrm{Md} .210 ; 20$ Ohio, 100 . Under a special demurrer the party may, on the argument, not only take advantage of the particular faults which his demurrer specifies, but also of all objections in substance.
8. It is not enough that a special demurrer object, in general terms, that the pleading is "uncertain, defective, and informal," or the like, but it is necessary to show in what respect it is uncertain, defective, and informal. ${ }^{1}$ Wms. Saund. 161, n. 1, 337 b, n. 3; Stephen, Plead. 159, 161 ; 1 Chitty, Plead. 642.

A demurrer may be for insufficiency either in substance or in form; that is, it may bo either on the ground that the ease shown by the opposite party is essentially insufficient, or on the ground that it is stated in an inartificial manner. Hob. 164. It lies to any of the pleadings, except that there may not be a demurrer to a demurrer. Salk. 219; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (N 2). Demurrer may be to the whole or a part of the pleading; but if to the whole, and a part be good, the demurrer will be overruled. 13 East, 76; 3 Caines, N. Y. 89, 265 ; 5 Johns. N. Y. 476 ; 13 id. 264,$402 ; 4$ Den. N. Y. 65; 20 Barb. N. Y. 339 ; 11 Cush. Mass. 348; 23 Miss. 548; 28 id. 56 ; 2 Curt. C. C. 97 ; 2 Paine, C. C. 545 ; 14 Ill. 77 ; 2 Md. 284 ; 1 Wisc. 21. But ses 6 Fla. 262; 4 Cal. 327 ; 9 Ind. 241; 6 Gratt. Va. 130; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 400. The objection must appear on the face of the pleadings, 2 Saund. $364 ; 29 \mathrm{Vt} .354$, or upon oyer of some instrument defectively set forth therein. 2 Saund. 60, n.

For the various and numerous eauses of demurrer, reference must be had to the laws of each state.
9. As to the effect of a demurrer. It admits all sueh matters of fact as are suffieiently pleaded. Bacon, Abr. Pleas (N 3); Cumyns, Dig. Pleader (A 5); 4 Iowa, 63; 14 Ga. 8; 9 Barb. N. Y. 297 ; 7 Ark. 282. On demurrer the court consider the whole record, and give judgment aceording to the legal right for the party who on the whole seems the best entitled to it. Hob. 56 ; 4 East, $502 ; 2$ Ventr. Ch. 198; 8 Ark. 224; 2 Mieh. 276; 7 How. 706; 28 Ala. N. s. 637 ; 31 N. II. 22 ; 39 Me. 426; 16 111. 269. For example, on a demurrer to the replication, if the court think the replieation bad, but perceive a substantial fault in the plea, they will give judgment, not for the defendant, but for the plaintiff, 2 Wils. 150; 7 How. 706 , provided the declaration be good; but if the deelaration also be bad in substance, then, upon the same principle, judgment would be given for the defendant. 5 Coke, $29 a$. The court will not look back into the record to adjudge in favor of an apparent right in the plaintiff, unless the plaintiff have himself put his action upon that ground. 5 Barnew. & Ald.507. If, however, the plaintiff demur to a plea in abatement, and the court deeide against the plea, they will give judgment of respondeat ouster, without regard to any defect in the deelaration. Lutw. 1592, 1667 ; 1 Salk. 212; Carth. 172; 4 R. I. 110 ; 13 Ark. 335 ; 14 Ill. 49.

10. In Practice.

Demurrer to evidence is a declaration that the party making it will not proceed, because the evidence offered on the other side is not sufficient to maintain the issue. 28 Ala. v. s. 637. Upon joinder by the opposite party, the jury is generally discharged from giving any verdict, 1 Archbold, Pract. 186; and the demurrer being entered on record is afterwards argued and decided by the court in bane; and the judgment there given upon it may ultimately be brought before a court of error. See 2 H. Blackst. 187; 4 Chitty, Plact. 15 ; Gould, Plead. c. 9, part 2, & 47. It admits the truth of the evidence given and the legal deductions therefrom. 14 Penn. St. 275 . As to the right so to demur, and the practice, see 4 Iowa, 63.

Demurrer to interrogatories is the reason which a witness tenders for not answering a particular question in interrogatories. 2 Swanst. Ch. 194. It is not, strictly speaking, a demurrer, except in the popular sense of the word. Gresley, Eq. Ev. 61. The court are judicially to determine its validity. The witness must state his objection very carefully; for these demurrers are held to strict rules, and are readily overruled if they cover too much. 2 Atk. 524 ; 1 Younge & J. Exch. 132.

See, generally, as to demurrer, Bouvier, Inst. Index.

DEMURRER BOOK. In English Practice. A transcript of all the pleadings that have been filed or delivered between the parties made upon the formation of an issue at law. Stephen, Plead. 95.

DEMY SANEE, DEMY SANGUE. Half-blood. A corruption of demi-sang.

DEN AND STROND. Liberty for ships and vessels to run aground or come ashore (strand themselves). Cowel.

DENARII. An ancient general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. The French use the word denier in the same sense: payer de ses propres deniers.

DENARIUS DEI. A certain sum of money which is given by one of the contracting parties to the other as a sign of the completion of the contract.

It differs from arrhee io this, that the latter is a part of the consideration, while the denarius $D e i$ is no part of it. 1 Duvergnoy, n. 132; 3 id. n. 49; Répert. de Jur. Denier à Dieu.

It does not bind the parties, as he who received it may return it in a limited time, or the other mav abandon it and avoid the engagement.

DENIAL. In Pleading. A traverse of the statement of the opposite party; a defence.

DENIER A DIEU. In French Law. A sum of money which the birer of a thing gives to the other party as evidence, or for the consideration of the contract, which either party may annul within twenty-four hours, the one who gave the denier a Dieu by demanding, and the other by returning it. See Denarius Dei DENIZATION. The act by which a foreigner becomes a subject, but without the rights either of a natural-born subject or of one who bas beoome naturalized. Bacon, Abr. Aliens, B.

DENIZEN. In English Law. An alien born who has obtained, eai donatione legis, letters patent to make him an English subject.

IIc is intermediate between a natural-born sulject and an alien. He may take lands by purchase or devise,-which an alien cannot; but he is incapable of taking by inheritance. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 374.

In Sonth Carolina, and perhaps in other states, this civil condition is well known to the law, having been created by statute.

The right of making denizens is not exclusively vested in the king, for it is possessed by parliament, but is scarcely ever exercised but by royal power. It may lue effected ly ennquest. 7 Coke, $6 a$; 2 Ventr. 6 ; Comyns, Dig. Alien (D 1); Chitty, Com. Law, 120.

DENUNCIATION. In Civil Law. The act by which an individual informs a public officer, whose duty it is to prosecute offenders, that a crime has been committed, See 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 447 ; 2id.389; Ayliffe, Parerg. 210; Pothier, Proc. Cr. sect. 2, $& 2$.

DENUNTIATIO. In Old English Law. A public notice or summons. Bracten, $202 b$.

DEODAND. Any personal chattel whatever which is the immediate cause of the death of a human creature,-which is forfeited to the king, to he distributed in alms by his high almoner.

A Latin phrase which is attributed to Bracton has; by mistranslation, given rise to some erruacouns statements in some of the suthors as to what are deodands. Omnia qux ad mortem mavent, evidently evongh meaning all things which tend to produce death, bas been rendered more to death, -thus giving rise to the theory that thinge in motion only are to be forfeited. A difference, bowever, is made by Blackstone to exist as to how much is to he sacrificed. Thus, if a mso should fall from a cartwheel, the cart being ststionary, and he killed, the wheel only would be deedand; while, if he was run over hy the ssme wheel in motion, not only the wheel hut tbe cart and the load became deodand.

No deodand accrues in the case of a felonious killing. 1 Q. B. 818; 1 Gale & D. 211; 9 Dow. 1048. See, also, 2 Mann. & R. 897 ; 11 Ad. & E. 128; 3 Perr. & D. 57 ; 10 Mees. & W. Exch. 58 ; 1 Q. DEPARTMENT. A portion of a country.

In France, the country is divided into depsitments, which are somewhat similar to the counties in this country. The United Ststcs have been divided into military departments, including certain portions of the country. 1 Pet. 293. These departments are, for the purposes for which they are created, under the immediate government of sowe efficer, who is, in turn, responsible to his superior.

A portion of the agents employed by the executive branch of the United States government, to whom a specified class of duties is assigned.
Tho department of the interior has general supervisory and sppellate powers over the office of the commissioner of patents; in relation to the land offree; over sconunts of marshals, clerks, and other officers of the United States oourts; over the commissioner of Indisn affairs; over the commissioncr of pensions; over the census; over the mines of the United States; over the commissioner of publio buildings; over the penitentiary of the District of Columbis.
The chief officer is a secretary, appointed by the president, and a chief and other clerks, appointed by the secretary, including a chief and other clerks in each of the bureaus among whom the duties of the department are divided.
The deportment of the navy is intrusted with the execution of such orders as may be received from the president relative to the procurement of naval stores and materials and the construction, armsment, and equipment of vessels of war, as well as all other matters connected with the arval establishment of the United States. Brightly, Dig. U. S. Lsws, 680, 681.

The chief officers are a secretary and assistant secretary, appointed by the president : the secretary is to appoint such clerks as may be necessary of the classes specified by the act of March 3, 1853 (10 U. S. Stat. at Large, 209).

There are in the navy departmeat five bnreaus, each with a chief and a anmber of clerks, viz.: a bureau of navy-yards and docks; a bureau of construction, equipment, and repairs; a burean of provisions and clothing; a bureau of ordoance and hydregraphy; a burcau of medicioe and surgery.
The post-a/fice department has th3 genersl charge of matters relatiog to the pestal service, the establishment of post-offices, appointment of postmasters, and the like.
The chief officer is a postmaster-general. There are alse three assistant pustmasters-general, a chief clerk, three principal clerks, and thirty-three clerks of inferier grado, besides an auditor, and a chief clerk, four priacipal and thirty-eight subordinate clerks. The assistant postmasters-geaeral are appeinted by the president, with the consent of the senate.

The department of state is intrusted with such matters relating to correspondences, commissions, and instructions to or with public miaisters or coasuls from the United States, or to negotiations with public ministers from foreign states or princes, or to memorials or other applicatioos from foreign public ministers or other foreigacrs, or to such matters respecting foreign affiairs, as the president of the United Stales shall assiga to said department. 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 28.
The principal officer is a secretary, appointed by the president. An assistant secretary, is chief and twenty-one suberdinate clerks, appointed by the secretary, are employed in the duties of the department.

The department of treasury has charge of the services relatiog to the finances. It is the duty of the secretary to digest and prepare plans for the improvement and management of the reveaue, and for the support of public credit; to prepare and report estimates of the public revcnue and the public expeaditures; to superiatead the collection of the revonue; to decide on the forms of keoping and stating accounts and makiag returns, and to grant, under limitations established by law, all warrants for moneys to he issued from the treasury in pursuance of appropriations by law; to exeoute such services relative to the sale of lands belunging to the United States as may by law be required of him; to make report and give information to either branch of the legislatare, in person or in writing, respecting all matters referred to him by the senate or house of representatives, or which shall appertain to his office; and, generally, to perform all such serviees relative to the finances as he shall be direoted to perform. The officers consist of a secretary, who is the head of the department, two oomptrollers, six auditors, a treasurer, a register, a commissioner of customs, a solicitor, an assistant, secretary, and aumerons subordinate clerks. There are also assistant treasurers, appointed by the president, to reside in seversl of the more im. partant cities of the United States. There is also a light-house board attached to this department.

The department of voar is iatrusted with duties relating to military commissions, the lend forces, and warlike stores of the Uoited States.
The ohief officers are a secretary sud sssistant secretary, appointed by the president. There are also a chief clerk and numerous subordinste clerks.

DEPARTURE. In Maritime Law. A deviation from the courge proccribed in the policy of insurance. It may be justifiable. See Deviation.

In Pleading. The statement of matter in a replication, rejoinder, or subsequent pleading, as a cause of action or defence, which is not pursuant to the previous pleading of the same party, and which does not support and fortify it. 2 Wme. Sannd. 84 a, n. 1; 2 Wils. 98; Coke, Litt. 304 a. It is not allowable, as it prevents reaching an issue. 2 Wms . Saund. a, n. 1; Stephen, Plead. 410; 16 East, 39; 1 Maule & S. 395 . It is to be taken adrantage of by demurrer, general, 5 Dowl. & R. 295; 14 Johns. N. Y. $132 ; 20$ id. 160; 2 Caines, N. Y. 320; 16 Mass. 1 ; or special. 2 Saund. 84; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (F10).

A departure is cured by a verdict in favor of him who makes it, if the matter pleaded by way of departure is a sufficient answer in substance to what has becn before pleaded ly the opposite party; that is, if it would have leen sufficient if pleaded in the first instance. 2 Eaund. 84; 1 Lilly, Abr. 444.

DEPARTURE IN DESPITE OF COURT. 'l'his took place where the tonant, having once made his appearance in court upon demand, failed to reappear when demanded. Coke, Litt. 139 a. As the whole term is, in contemplation of law, but a single day, an appearance on any day, and a subsequent failure to reappear at any subsequent part of the term, is such a departure. 8 Coke, $62 a ; 1$ Rolle, Abr. 583 ; Metc. Yelv. 211; Roscoe, Real Act. 283.

DEPENDENCY. A territory distinct from the country in which the supreme sovereign power resides, but belonging rightfully to it, and subject to the laws and regulations which the sovereign may think proper to prescribe.
It differs from a colony, because it is not settled by the citizens of the eovereign or mother state; and from possession, because it is held by other title than that of mere conquest. Fer example, Malta was considered a dependency of Great Britsin in the year 1813. 3 Wash . C. C. 286. See Act of Cong. Mch. 1, 1809, commonly called the non-importation law.
DEPENDENT CONTRACT. One which it is not the duty of the contractor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party. Hammond, Partn. 17, 29, 30, 109.

DEPONENT. One who gives information, on oath or affirmation, respecting some facts known to him, before a magistrate; he who makes a deposition.

DEPORTATION. In Roman Law. A perpetual banishnent, depriving the banished of his rights as a citizen: it differed from relegation (q.v.) and exile (q.v.). 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 125, note; Inst. 1. 12. 1 and 2; Dig. 48.22. 14. 1.

DEPOSE. To deprive an individual of a public employment or office against his will. Wolffius, Inst. & 1063. The term is usually applied to the deprivation of all authority of a sovereign.

DEPOSIT. A naked bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without reward, and to be returned when he shall require it. Jones, Bailm. 36, 117 ; 9 Mass. 470.

A bailment of goods to be kept by the bailee without reward, and delivered according to the object or purpose of the original trust. Story, Bailm. 84 .

A contract by which one of the contracting parties gives a thing to another to keep, who is to do so gratuitously and obliges himself to return it when he shall be requested.

An irregular deposit arises where one deposits money with another for safe keeping in cases where the latter is to return, not the specific money deposited, but an equal sum.

A quasi deposit arises where one comes lawfully into possession of the goods of another by finding.

A depositary is bound to take only ordinary care of the deposit, which will of course vary with the character of the goods to be kept, and other circumstances. See 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 275 ; 17 Mass. 479 ; 3 Mas. C. C. 132 ; 2 Ad. & E. 256; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 59. He has, in general, no right to use the thing deposited, Bacon, Abr. Bailment, D, unless in cases where permission has been given or may from the nature of the case be implied. Story, Bailm. 890 ; Jones, Bailm. 80, 81 ; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1008. He is bound to return the deposit in individuo, and in the same state in which he received it: if it is lost, or injured, or spoiled, by his fraud or gross negligence, he is responsible to the extent of the loss or injury. Jones, Bailm. 36, 46, 120 ; 17 Mass. 479 ; 2 Hawks, No. C. 145 ; l Dane, Abr. c. 17, art. 1 and 2. He is also bound to restore, not only the thing deposited, but any increase or profits which may have accrued from it: if an animal deposited bear young, the latter are to be delivered to the owner. Story, Bailm. & 99.

In the case of irregular deposits, as those with a banker, the relation of the banker to his customer is that of debtor and creditor, and does not partake at all of a fiduciary character. It ceases altogether to be the money of the depositor, and becomes the money of the banker. It is his to do what he pleases with it, and there is no trust created. 17 Wend. 94 ; 1 Meriv. 568. The legal remedy is a suit at law for debt: the balance cannot be reached by a bill in equity, as there is no trust raised. 2 Hon. L. Cas. $3 \dot{9}$; 1 Younge \& C. Cb. 464 . The banker is not liable for interest unless expressly contracted for; and the deposit is subject to the statute of limitations. 1 Phill. 401,$405 ; 2$ Hou. L. Cas. 39, 40. See Sewell, Banking; 4 Blackf. Ind. 495.

Deposits in the civil law are divisible into two kinds,-necessary and voluntary. A necessary deposit is such as arises from pressing necessity; as, for instance, in case of a fire, a shipwreck, or other overwhelming ealamity; and thence it is called miserabile depositum. La. Civ. Code, 2935. A voluntary deposit is such as arises without any such calamity, from the mere consent or agrecment of the parties. Dig. 16. 3. 2.
This distinction was msterial in the civil law in respect to the remody, for in voluntary deposits tho action was only in eimplum, in the other in duplum, or twofold, whenever the depositary was guilty of any default. The common law has made no such distinction. Jones, Bailm. 48.
Deposits are sgain divided by the civillaw into simple deposits and sequestrstions: the former is when there is hut one party depositor (of whatever number composed). having a common interest; the latter is where there are two or more depositurs, having es $b$ a difficent and adverse interest. These distinctions do not secm to have become incorporated into the common law. See Sitory, Bailm. zo 41-46.

DEPOSITION. The testimony of a witness reduced to writing, in due form of law, by virtue of a commission or other authority of a competent tribunal, or according to the provisions of some statute law, to be used on the trial of some question of fact in a court of justice.
2. Depositions were not formerly admitted in common-law courts, and were afterwards admitted from necessity, where the oral testimony of a witness could not be obtaincd. But in courts of chancery this is generally the only testimony which is taken. Adams, Equity, 363. In some of the United States, however, as, for instance, in Connecticut, both oral testimony and depositions are used, the same as in courts of common law. 2 Rev. Swift, Dig. 277.
3. In criminal cases, in the United States, depositions cannot be used without the consent of the defendant. 3 Greenleaf, Ev. & 11; 15 Miss. 475 ; 4 Ga .335.

The constitution of the United States provides that in all criminal prosecutions "the accused shall enjoy the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him.". Amend. of Const. art. 6. This principle is recognized in the constitutions or statutes of most of the states of the Union. 3 Greenleaf, Ev. $\% 11$; Const. of Ohio, art. 1, & 10 ; Const. of Comn. art. 1 , $\% 9$, etc.

In some of the states, provision is made for the taking of depositions by the accused. Conn. Comp. Stat. art. 6, & 162; 3 Greenleaf, Ev. 811.
4. Provision has been made for taking depositions to be used in civil cases, by an act of congress and by statute in most of the states.

The sot of September 24, 1789, s. 30, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 64, directs thst when the testimony of any person shall be necessary in any civil canse depending in any district, in any court of the United States, who shall live at a greater distance from the place of trial than one hundred miles, or is bound on a voyage to aea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of such district, and to a greater distance from the place of trial than as aforesaid, before the time of trial, or is ancient, or very infirm, the deposition of such person may be taken, de bene esse, before any justice or judge of aay of the courte of the United States, or before aoy chanceller, justice, or judge of a supreme or superior court, mayor or ehief magistrate of a city, or judge of a county court or court of common pleas of any of the United States, not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, or intercsted in the event of the cause : provided that a aotification from the magistrate before whom the deposition is to be taken, to the adverse party, to be present at the taking of the same, and to put interrogatories, if he think fit, be first made out and served on the adverse party, or his atterney, as either may be nearest, if either is within one bundred milea of the place of such caption, allowing time for their attendance after being notified, not less than at the rate of one day, Sundays exolusive, for every twenty miles' travel. And in causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, or other eauses of seizure, when a libel shall be filed, in which an adverse party is not named, and depositioes of persons circumatanced as aforessid shall be taken before a claim be put in, the like notification as aforesaid shall be given to the person having the agency or possession of the property libelled at the time of the capture or seizure of the ssme, if known to the libellant. And every persoe deposing as aforesaid shall be carefully examined and cantioned, and sworn or affirmed to testify the whole truth, and shall aubsoribe the testimony by him or her given, after the same shall be reduced to writing, which shall be done only by the magistrate taking the deposition, or by the deponent in his preaence. And the depositions so taken shall be retained by auch magistrate until he deliver the same with his own hand into the court for which they are taken, or aball, together with a certificate of the reasons as aforeaaid of their being taken, and of the notice, if any given, to the adrerse party, be by bim the said magistrate aealed up and directed to such court, and remain under his seal until openerl in court. And any person may be compelled to appear and depose as aforesaid, in the same manver as to appoar and testify in court. And in the trial of any cause of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction in a district court, the decree in which may be appealed from, if either party ahall suggest to and aatisfy the court that probably it will not be in his power to praduce the witnesses, there testifying, before the circuit court, should an appeal be had, and shall move that their testimony shall be taken down in writing, it shall be se done by the clerk of the court. And if an appeal be had, such testimony may be used on the trial of the asme, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court which shall try the appeal that the witnessee are theo dead, or gone out of the United States, or to a greater diatance than as aforesaid from the place where the oourt is aitting, or that, hy reasen of age, aickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, they are unable to travel or nppear at court; but dot otherwise. And ualesa the same aball be made to appear on the trial of any cause, with reapect to witnesses whose depositions may have been taken therein, such depositions shall not be admitted or used in the cause. Provided that nothing herein shall be construed to preventany court of the United Statea from granting a dedimus potestatem, to take depositions according to common usage, when it may be necessary to prevent a failure or delay of justice,which power they shall severally possess; nor to extend to depesitions taken in perpetuam rei memoriam, which, if they relate te matters that may be cognizable in any court of the United States, a circuit court, on application thereto made as a court of equity, may, according to the usages in chancery, direct to be taken. Brightly, Dig. 264.
In any cause before a ceurt of the United States, it ahall be lawful for such court, in its discretion, to admit in evidence any deposition taken in per. petuam rei memeriam, which would be so admissiblo in a court of the state wherein such cause is pending, according to the laws thereef. Act of Feb. 20, 1812; Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws, 264.

The act of January 24, 1827, 3 Story, J. S. Laws, 2040, authorizes the clerk of any court of the United States within which a witncas resides, or where he is found, to isaue a subpoeaa to campel the attendance of such wituess; and a neglect of the wituess to attend may be puaiahed by the court whose clerk has issued the subpeean, as for a contempt. And when papers are wanted by the parties litigant, the judge of the court within which they are may issue a subpoena duces tecum, and enforce obedience by puaishment as for a contempt. Brightly, Dig. U.S. Laws, 264.
5. Some of the statutes of the several states provide that courts may issue commissions to take depositions; others, that the parties may take them by giving notice of the time and place of taking the deposition to the opposite party. The privilege of taking them is generally limited to cases where the witness lives out of the state or at a distance from the court, or where he is sick, aged, about to leave the state, or where, from some other cause, it would be impossible or very inconvenient for him to attend in person. If the deposition is not taken according to the requirements of the statute authorizing it, it will, on objection being made by the opposite party, be rejected.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The act of depriving a clergyman, by a competent triLunal, of his clerical orders, to punish him for some offence and to prevent his acting in future in his clerical character. Ayliffe, Parerg. 206.

DEPOSITO. In Spanish Law. A real contract by which one person confides to the custody of another an object on the condition that it shall be returned to him whenever he shall require it.

DEPOSITOR. He who makes a deposit.

DEPREDATION. In French Law.
The pillage which is made of the goods of a decedent.

DEPRIVATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. A censure by which a clergyman is deprived of his parsonage, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical promotion or dignity. See Ayliffe, Parerg. 206; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 393.

DEPUTY. Ooe authorized by an officer to exercise the office or right which the officer possesses, for and in place of the latter.
2. In general, ministerial officers can appoint deputies, Comyns, Dig. Officer (D 1), unless the office is to be exercised by the ministerial officer in person; and where the office partakes of a judicial and ministerial character, although a deputy may be made for the performance of ministerial acts, one cannot be made for the performance of a judicial act: a sheriff cannot, therefore, make a deputy to hold an inquisition, under a writof inquiry, though he may appoint a deputy to serve a writ.
3. In general, a deputy has power to do every act which his principal might do; but a deputy cannot make a deputy.

A deputy should always act in the name of his principal. The principal is liable for the deputy's acts performed by him as such, and for the neglect of the deputy, 3 Dane, Abr. c. 76, a. 2; and the deputy is liable himself to the person injured for his own tortious acts. Dane, Abr. Index; Comyns, Dig. Officer (D), Fiscount (B). See 7 Viner, Abr. 556; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 68; 16 Johns. N. Y. 108.

DEPUTY DISTRICT ATTORNEY. An officer appointed by the district attorney of the United States to act for him in certain cases. See 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1530 ; Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws. 227.

DERELICT. Abandoned; deserted; cast away.

Land left uncovered by the receding of water from its former bed. 2 Rolle, Abr. 170; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 262; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 109.
When so left by degrees, the derelict land belongs to the owner of the soil adjoining; but when the sea retires suddenly, it belongs to the government. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 262; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 239; 1 Sumn. C. C. 328,490 ; 1 Gall. C. C. 133; Bee, Adm. 62, 178, 260 ; Ware, Dist. Ct. 332.

Personal property abandoned or thrown away by the owner in such manncr as to indicate that he intends to make no further claim thereto. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 9; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 9; 1 C. B. 112 ; Broom, Max. 261.

It applies as well to property abandoned at sea as on land. 1 Mas. C. C. 373; 1 Sumn. C. C. 207,336 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 357 . A vessel which is abandoned and deserted by her crew without any purpose on their part of returning to the ship, or any hope of saving or recovering it by their own exertions, is derelict. 2 Parsons, Marit. Law, 615 et seq.; 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 607; 2 Cranch, 240; Ole. Adm. 77 ; Lee, Shipping & Ins. 261.
derivative. Coming from another; taken from something preceding; secondary: as, derivative title, which is that acquired from another person.
There is considerable difference between an original and $ఇ$ derivative titile. When the acquisition is original, the right thus acquired to the thing becomes property, which must be unqualificd and unlimited, and, since no one but the occupant has any right to the thing, he must have the whole right of disposing of it. But with regard to derivative acquisition it may be otherwise; for the person from whom the thing is acquired may not have an unlimited right to it, or he may convey or traasfer it with certain reservations of right. Derivative title nust always be by contract.
Derivative conveyances are those which pre-suppose some precedent conveyance, and serve only to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 324 .
DEROGATION. The partial abrogation of a law. To derogate from a law is to enact something which impairs its utility and force; to abrogate a law is to abolish it entirely.
DESAFUERO. In Spanish Law. An irregular action committed with violence against law, custum, or reason.
DESCENDANTS. Those who bave issued from an individual, including his children, grandchildren, and their children to the remotest degrce. Ambl. 327; 2 Brown, Ch. 30, 230; 3 id. 367 ; 1 Roper, Leg. 115 ; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1956.
The descendants from what is called the direct descending line. The term is opposed to that of ascendants.
There is a difference between the number of ascendants and descendants which a man may have: every one has the same order of ascendants, though they may not be exactly alike as to numbers, because some may be descended frum a common ancestor. In the line of descendants they fork differently accordiog to the number of children, and continue longer or shorter as generations continue or cease to exist. Many families become extinct, while others continuc : the line of descendants is, therefore, diversified in each family.

DESCENT. Hereditary succession.
Title by descent is the title by which one person, upon the death of another, acquires the real estate of the latter as his heir at law. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 201; Comyns, Dig. Discent (A).
It was one of the principles of the feudal system that on the death of the tenant in fee the land should descend, and not ascend. Hence the title by inheritance is in all cases called descent, although by statute law the title is sometimes made to ascend.
The English doctrinc of primogeniture, by which by the common law the eldest son and his issue take the whole real estate, has been universally abolished in this country. So, with few exceptions, has been the distinction between male and feinale heirs.
2. The rules of descent are applicable only to real estates of inheritance. Estates for the life of the deceased, of course, terminate on his death; estates for the life of another are governed by peculiar rules.
Terms of years, and other estates less than freehold, are regarded as personal estate, and, on the death of the owner, vest in his executor or administrator.
3. The rules of descent are prescribed by the statute laws of the several states; and, although they correspond in some respects, it is doubtful whether in any two they are precisely alike. An abstract of these laws is here given, taken, by permission, from the excellent work of Professor Washburn on the American Law of Real Property (Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 1864).

The rules of descent, preseribed by the statutes of the several United Ststes, are as follows:-

equally. 2. To the brothers and sisters, or their desceadants. 3. If none of these, to the father, if liviag; if not, to the mother. 4. If there be neither of these, then to the next of kin in equal degree. 5. If there be none of the above-mentioned kindred, then to the busband or wife ; and in default of these it escheats to the atate. 6. There is no representation among collaterals except with the descendants of brothers and aiaters of the intestate. 7. There is ne distinetion between the whole and half blood, cxcept that, in caze the inheritance was ancestral, those not of the blood of the anceator are excluded as againgt those of the same degree. Ala. Cede, 1852, $8 \%$ 1572-1576.
In Arkaneas, real estate of inheritance descends -1. To the children or their descendants in equal parts. 2. To the father, then to the mother. 3. To the brothers and sisters, or their desceudanta. 4. To the grandfather, grandmother, uncles, and aunts, and their descendanta, in equal parts; and日o on, passing to the nearest liagal ancestor and his descendints. 5. If there be no such kindred, then to the husband or wife; and in default of these it escheats to the state. 6. The descendants of the intestate, in all cases, take hy right of represeatation, where they are in different degrees. 7. If the estate come from the fatber, and the intestate die without descendanta, it goes to the father and his heira; and if the estate bo maternal, then to the mother and her heirs. But if the estate be an acquired one, it goes to the father for life, remainder to the collateral kindred; and in default of father, then to the mother for life, and remainder to collateral heirs. 8. In default of father and mother, then first to the brothers and sisters, and their descendanta of the father; then to those of the mother. This applies only where there is no near kindred, lineal or cellateral. 9. The halfblood inherita equally with the whole blood in the same degree ; but if the estate be ancestral, it goes to those of the blood of the ancestor from whom it was derived. 10. In all cases not provided for by the statute, the inheritance descen ls according to the course of the common law. Dig. Ark. Stat. 1858 , в. 56.

In California-1. If there be a surviving husband or wife, and only one child, or the issue of one child, in equal shares to the aurviving husband or wife, and child, or issue of such child. If one parent he dead, his or her share goes to the brothers and sisters of the deceased, who then hare three-fourths. If both parents be dead, the whole goes to the brothers and sisters and their issne. 3. If the brothers and sisters are all of the same marriage, they share equally. If they are of differeot marriages, the portion is divided equally between the paternal and maternal lines of the intestate, the german brothers and sisters taking a part in each line. If the brothers aod sisters are on one side only, they take the whole, to the exclusion of all relations of the other line. 4. If there be no issue, nor parent, ner brothers, nor aiaters, nor their issue, then the inheritance goes to the cascendants in the paternal and maternal lines, one maiety to each,--those in each line taking per capita. If there is in the neareat degree but one ascendant in the two lines, be excludes all others of a remeter degree, and takes the whole. 5. If there be none of the heirs above mentioned, then the inheritance goes to the collateral relations of the intestate,-thase in the nearest degree excluding all others. It there are several persons in the came degree, they take per capitu. 6. Representation takea place ad infinitum in the direct deacending line, hut does not take place in faver of ascendanta,-the nearest in degree always excluding those of a degrec auperier or more remote. 7. In the collateral line, repregentation is admitted in favor of the issue of the brothers and sistera of the intestate, whether they succeed in concurrence with the uncles and aunta, or whether the brothers and sisters, being dead, their iasue ancceed in equal or nnequal degrees. 8. When representation is admitted, the partition is made per atirpes; and if one root has produced several branches, the subdivision is also made by reats in each branch, and the memhers of the hranch take between themselves per capita. La. Civ. Code, art. 882-910.
In Maine. The law of descents in Maine was originally derived frem that of Massachusette, and ia now the same, except that in Maine there is no provision that in default of kindred the estate shall descend to the widow or to the husband. The statute of Maine regulates the desceat of the real estate of the intestate without further specification. Me. Rev. Stat. 1847, c. 75, 38 1, 2.

In $N_{e} \%$ York, the real estate of an intestate de-scencls-1. To his linenl descendants. 2. To his facther. 3. Ta his mother. 4. To his cellateral relatives. Subject, however, to these rules: (1) Lineal descendants, being in equal degree, take in equal parts; (2) If any of the children of the intestate are living and others are dead, leaving issue, such issue tuke by representation; (3) The preceding rule applies to all descendante of unequal degrees: se that those who are in the nearest degree of consanguinity take the share which would bave descended to thein had all the descendants in the same degree been living, and the children in each degree take the share of their parents; (4) If there he $n \theta$ descendants, but the father be living, he takes the whole, unless the inheritance came to the intestate on the part of his mother, and the mother be living; but if she be dead, then the inheritance descending on ber part goes to the father for life, and the reversion to the hrothere and sisters of the intestate and their descendants; but if there be none living, then to the father in fee. 5. If there be no descendants and no father, or a father net entitled to take as above, then the inheritance descends to the mother for life, and the reversion to the brothers and sisters of the intestate and their descendants, by representation; hat if there be none such, then to the mother in fee. 6. If there be no father or mother capable of inheriting the catate, it descends, in the cases berenfter specified, to the collateral relatives,-in equal parts if they are of cqual degree, bowever remote from the intcstate. 7. If all the brothers and sisters of the intcstate be living, the inheritance deacends to them; but if some be dead, leaving issue, the issue take by right of representation; and the some rule applies to all the direct lineal dercendants of brothers and eisters, to the remotest degrec. 8. If there be ne heirs entitled to lake under either of the preceding sectione, the inberitance, if the same shall have come to the intestate on the part of his father, shall descend(1) to the brothers and sisters of the father of the intentate in equal sheres, if all be living; (2) if some be living ond others dead, leaving issue, then according to the right of representation; (3) if all the bruthers and sisters are dead, then to their descendonts. In oll cases the interitance is to descend in the same manner as if all such brothers and sisters had been hrothers and sisters of the intestate. 9. If there be no brothers and sisters, nor descendants of such, of the father's side, then the inberitance goes to the brothere and sistere of the mother and their descendants, in the same manner. 10. Where the inl critance has come to the intestate on the part of his mother, the same descends to the brothers and sisters of the mother ond to their descendante; and if there be no such. to those of the fothor, as before prescribed. 11. If the inherit: nce has not come to the intertate on the purt of either father or mother, it descends to collaterals on both sides, in equal shores. 12. Relatives of the balfblood inherit equally with the whole blood, unless the inheritance came to the intestate by iescent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors,-in which case none inherit who are not of the blood of that ancestor. 13. In all cases nut ctherwise provided fer, the inheritance descends according to the cousse of the cammon law. 14. Real estate held in trust for any other person, if not devised hy the persun for whose use it is held, descends to his heirs, according to the preceding rules. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 4th ed. pp. 157-161.

In Noith Garoline, when any person dies seised of any inheritance, or of any right thereto, or entitled to any interest thercin, it descends according to the folluwing rules:-1. Inheritances lineally descend to the iseve of the person who died last sciscd, hut do not lineally ascond, excopt as kereinafter stated. 2. Females inherit equally with males, and younger with older children. 3. Lincal descendants represent their ancestor. 4. On failure of lineal doscenclants, where the inheritance has heen transmitted by descent or otherwise from an ancestor to whom the intertate was an beir, it gees to the next onlloteral relations of the blood of that ancestor, suhject to the two Ireceding rules. 5. When the inheritance is not $\varepsilon \theta$ derived, or the blood of such ancestor is extinct, then it goes to the next collateral relation of the person last seised, whether of the paternal or maternal line, subject to the sqme rules. 6. Collateral relations of the half-hlood inherit equally with those of the whole blood, and the degrees of relationship are computed acourding to the rules which prevail in descents at common law: provided that if there he no issue, nor brother, nor sister, nor issue of such, the inheritance vests in the father, if living, and if not, then in the mother, if living. 7. If there be no heirs, the widow is deemed such, and inherits. 8. An estate for the life of nother is deemed an inheritance; and a person is deemed to have been seised, if he had any right, title, or interest in the inheritance. No. C. Rev. Code, 1854, c. 3S, p. 248.

In Ohio, when any persen dies intestate, haping title or right to mny real estate of inheritance which came to him by devise or deed of gift from any ancestor, such estate deacends-1. Tu the children, or their representatives. 2. To the husband or wife, relict of the intestate, during his or her natural life. 3. Te the brothers and sisters of the intestate of the blood of the aucestor, whether of the whole or half blood, or their representntives. 4. To the ancestor frem whom the estate aame by deed or gift, if liviag. 5. Te the brothers and sisters of such nncestor, or their representatives; and if there be no such, then to the brethers and sisters of the intestate of the half-bloed and their representatives, thongh not of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate came. 6. To the acxt of kin to the intestate, of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate came. 7. If the estate came net by descent, devise, or deed of gift, it descends as follows:(1) Te the childreo of the iotestate and their repreentatives; (2) To the busband or wife of the intestate; (3) To the brethers and sisters of the whole hleod and their representatives; (4) To brethers and sisters ef the half-bloed and their legal representatives; (5) To the father, or, if the father be dead, to the mother; (6) Te the next of kin to and of the bleod of the intestate. 8. If there be no kindred, then to the surviving husband or wife as an estato of inheritince; and if there be no such relict, it escheats to the state. Rev. Stat. 1860, c. 36, $8 \%$ 1-3.

In Orezon, the rules of descent are the same as in Massachusetts, except that io Oregon it is provided that if the intestate leave ne issue, nor father, and no brother nor sister, living at his death, the estate shull descend to his mother te the exclusion of the issue of his deceased brethers or sisters; and there is ne provisien, as there is in Massnchusetts, that in default of kiadred the estate shall descend to the surviving husbund or wife, if nuy. Oreg. Stat. c. 11, p. 379.

In Pennsyluania, real estate descends-1. To children aod their descendants; equally, if they are wll ia the smme degree; if not, then by representation, the issuc in cvery case tiking only such share as wauld have descended to the parent, if living. 2. Io defunlt of issue, then to the father and $m$ ther during their jeint lives and the life of the surviver of them; and nfter them to the brothers and sisters of the intestate of the whele bleod, and their ebildren by representation. 3. If there be none of these, then to the next of kin, being the descendants of brothers and sisters of the whole blsed. 4. If none of these, to the futher and mother, if living, or the survivor of them, in fee. 5. In defuult of these, to the brothers and misters of the half-blood and their children by representation. 6. In defoult of all persons above describad, then to the next of kin of the intestate. 7 . Before the aet of 27 th April, 1855, no representation mong esllaterals was allowed after brothers aod sisters' ehildren; but by that aet it was permitted to the grandehildren of brothers and sistere, and the children of unoles and munts. 8. Ne person can jnherit min estate unless he is of the blood of the ancestor from whom it descended, or by whom it was given or devised te the intestate. 9. In default of knewn heirs or kindred, the estate is vested in the surviving husband or wife. 10. In default of these it eschents to the state. Purdon, Dig. Peon. Laws, ed. 1857, pp. 452, 1129 ; 9th ed. 1861, p. 562.

In Rhode Island, where any pergen having title to any real eatate of inheritance dies intestate, such estate descends in equal portioos-1. To his children or their descendants. 2. To the father. 3. To the mother, brothers, and sisters, and their descendants. 4. If there be none of these, the inheritanee goes in equal moieties to the paternal and maternal kindred, ench in the following course: -(1) to the grandfather, if there be any; (2) te the grandmether, ancles, and aunts, on the same side, and their descendunts; (3) to the great-grandfathers, or great-grandfather; (4) to the greatgrandmothers, or great-grandmother, and the brothers and sisters of the grandfathers and grandmothers and their descendants, and so on witheut ead,-passing first to the nearest lineal male ancestors, and for want of them to the lineal female oncestors in the same degree, and the descendants of such male and female lineal ancestors. 5. No right in the inheritance acerues te any persons whatsoever, other than to the children of the intestate, anless such persons be in being, and capable, in law, to take as heirs, at the time of the intestate's death. 6. When the inheritauce is directed to go by moietics, as above, to the paternal and maternal kindred, if there be no such kindred on the one part, the whele gres to the other part; and if there be none of either part, the whole goes to the husband or wife of the intestate; and if the wife or hoshand be dead, it goes to his or her kindred in the like course as if such husband or wife hod survived the intestate and then died entitled to the estate. 7. The descendants of any person deceased inherit the estate which such person would have inherited had such person survived the intestate. 8. If the estate came by descent, gift, or devise, from the parcot or other kindred of the intestate, and such intestate die without children, it goes to the next of kin to the intestate, of the blood of the persea from whom such estate came or descended, if any there be. R. I. Rev. Stat. 1857, e. 159, $& \%$ 1-6. In definult of heirs, the estate is tiken possession of by the town where it may be. R. I. Rev. Stat. 1857, c. 160.

In South Curolima, when any persen pessessed of, interested in, or entitled to any real estate in his own right, in fee-simple, dies intestate, it de-scends-1. Onc-third to the widow in fie, the remainder te the children. 2. Lineal descendants represent their purents. 3. If there be ou issoe or other lineal descendant, then one half goes to the widow, and the other halt' to the father, or, if he be dend, to the mother. 4. It there be neither issue nor purent, then one half goes to the widow, and the other hnlf to the brothers aod sisters and their issue by representation. 5. If there be no issue, nor parent, nor brother, nor sister of the whele blood, but a widow, ond $n$ hrother or sister of the half-hlood, and a child or children of a brother or sister of the whole blcod, then the widow takes one moiety, and the other is divided equally between the 1 rothers and sisters of the half-blood, ond the children of the brothers and sisters of the whole blood,-the children of every decensed brother or sister of the whole blood taking among them $n$ share equal to the share of $n$ brether or sister of the holf-blocd. But if there be no brother or sister of the half-blood, then a moiety of the estate descends to the child or children of the deceased hrother or sister; and if there be no child of the whole blood, then to the brothers and sisters of the half-blocd. 6. If there be no issue, nor parent, nor brother, nor sister of the whole bloed, nor their chi!dren, ner any hrother nor sister of the half-blood, then one half goes to the widew and the other half to the lineal ancestors; but if there be none of these, then the winduw takes two-thirds and the residue gees to the next of kin. 7. If there be ne widow, her share in each of the preceding eases gees te the residue. 8. On the decease of the wife, the husband takes the same share in his wife's estate that she would hyve taken in his had sbe survived him, and the remainder goes in the sume manner ay ahove deseribed in case of the integtsey of a man. 9. If there be no widow nor issue, but a surviving parent and brothers and sisters, then it goes in equal shares tu the father, or, if he be dead, to the mother, and to the brothers and sisters and their issue by representation. 10. If there be no issue, pareot, nor bruther nor sister of the whole blood, nor their children, nor bruther nor sister of the half-bloud, nor lineal ancestor, nor next of kin, the whule goes to the surviving hushand or wife. 5 So. C. Stat. at Large, 162, 163, 305 ; 6 id. 284, 285.

In Tennessee, the laad of an iatestate descends1. Without refereace to the source of his title-(1) to all the soos and deughters equally, and to their descendsots by right of representation; (2) if there be aone of these, and oitber pareat be living, then to such parent. 2. If the estate was acquired by the intestate, and he died without issue-(1) to his brothers and sisters of the whole and half blood, born before or after his death, and to their issue by representation; (2) in default of these, to the father aod mother as teaunts in common; (3) if both be dead, then in equal moietics to the heirs of the father and mother in equal degree, or roprosenting those in equal degree, of relationship to the intestate; but if these are not in equal degree, then to the heirs nearest in blood, or reprosenting those pearest in blood, to the intestate, in preference to others more remote. 3. When the land came by gift, devise, or descent from a parent or the ancestor of a pareot, and he died withont issne-(1) if there be brothers and sisters of the pateroal line of the half-blood, and such also of the materaal line, then it descends to the brothers and sisters oa the part of the parent from whom the estats caroe, io the same mavoer as to brothers and sisters of the whole blood, until the line of such parent is exhausted of the half-blood, to the exclusion of the other line; (2) if no brothers or sisters, then to the parent, if living, from whom or whosa ancestors it came, in preference to the other pareot: (3) if both be dead, then to the heirs of the parent from whom or whose ancestor it came. 4. The same rules of descent are observed in lineal desceadants aod collaterals respectively, when the liaeal desceadants are further removed from their nacestor than graadehildren, and when the collaterals are further removed than childrea of brothers and sisters. 5. If there be no heirs, then to the bnsband or wife in fee-simple. 6. A child of color cannot inherit the estate of its muther's husband, unless the mother or husband was a persoc of eolor. Tean. Code, 1858, p. 476, 82 2420-2425.

In Texas, real estate of inheritance descends- 1 . To childrea and their descendants. 2. To father and mother in equal portions; but if oae be dead, then one half to the survivor and the other to brothers and sisters and their desceodants; but if there be none of these, then the whole goes to the surviving father or mother. 3. If there be neither father aor mother, then the whole to the brothers and sisters of the intestate and their descendaats. 4. If there be no kindred aforesaid, then the estate descends in two moieties, one to the pateraal and the other to the materoal kindred in the following course-(1) to the graadfather and grandmother equally; (2) if only one of these be living, then one half to each survivor and the other to the desceudants of the other; (3) if there be no such desceadants, then the whole to the surviving grandparent; (4) if there be no such, thea to the deseendants of the grandfather or grandmother, passing to the nearest lineal ancestors. 5. There is no distinction between ancestral and acquired estates. 0. If there be a surviving husband or wife, and a child or children and their issue, such survivor takes one-third of the estste for life, with remainder to children or their descendants. 7. If no issue or descendents, then the surviving husbaad or wife takes balf the land, without remainder over; and the other half passes according to the preceding rules. 8. Among collaterals, those of the halfblood inherit only half as much as those of the whole blood; but if all be of the balf-blood, they have wholo portions. 9. If all relations are in the sams degree, they take per cupita; otherwise, per stirpes. Oldham & White, Dig. Tex. Laws, 1859, p. 90.
In Vermout, when any person dies seised of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments within the state, or any right thereto, or is catitled to any interest therein, the estate descends-l. In equal shares to his children, or their representatives. 2. If he leave no issuc, his widow is entitled to the whole forever, if the estute does not exceed the sum of one thousand dollars. If it excecds this sum, then the widow is entitled to such sum and one-half of the remsinder of the estate; and the remainder descends as the whole would if no widow had survived; and if there be no kindred, the widow is entitled to the whole. 3. If there be no issue nor widow, the father takes the whole. 4. If there be neither of these, it goes to the brothers and sisters equally, and their representatives; and if his mother be liviog, she takes the same share as a brother or sister. 5. If none of the relatives above aamed survive, then it descends in equal shares to the next of kia, in equal degree; but no person is entitled by right of representation. 6. The degrees of kiadred are computed according to the rules of the civil law, and the half-blood inherits equally with the whole blood. 7. If there be no kindred, it escheats to the town for the use of the schools. Ft. Comp. Stat. 1850, c. 55, and Genl. Stats. 1863, c. 56, 82 1-3.
In Virginia, when a person having title to any real estate of inheritance dies intestate as to such estate, it descends-1. To his children and their descendants. 2. If there be none sucl, to the father. 3. If no father, to the mother and brothers and sisters and their descendants. 4. If there be none of those, then one-half goes to the pateraal, the other to the maternal, kindred, as follows:(1) to the grandfather; (2) to the grandmother, uncles and aunts on the same side, and their de sceodants; (3) to the great-graadfathers or great grandfather; (4) to the great-grandmothers, or great-grandmother, and the brothers and sisters of the grandfathers and grandmothers, and their descendants; and so on, passing to the nearest lincal male aacestors, and for want of these, to the nearest lineal female ancestors in the same degree, and their descendants. 5. If there be no paternal kindred, the whole estate goes to the maternal kindred; and vice versa. 6. If there be reither paternal nor maternal kindred, the whole goes to the hnsband or wife of the intestate; and if the husband or wife be dead, their kindred take the estate, io the ssme manner as though they had survived the intestate, and died. 7. Collaterals of the half-blood inherit only half as much as those of the whole blood. But if all the collnterals be of the half-blood, the ascending kindred (if any) have donble portions. 8. When the estate goes to children, or to the mother, brothers and sisters, ur to the grandmothers, uneles and aunts, or to any of his female lineal ancestors, with the children of his deceasod lineal ancestors, male and female, in the same degree, they take per capita; but if the degrees are unequal, they take per stirpes. Va. Code, 1849, c. 123, p. 522.

In Wisconsin, when any person dies seised of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of any right thereto, or eatitled to any interest therein, in fee simple or for the life of another, not having lawfully devised the same, they descend-1. In equal shares te children, and the issue of any deceased child by right of representation; and if there be no child, then te his other linesl descendsnts, cqually, if they are all in the ame degree of kindred to the intestate; otherwise, acoerding to the right of representation. 2. If there be ne issue, then to the widow for her life, and after her decease to his father; and if there be ne issue or widow, then te hia father. 3. If there be ne issue nur father, then te the widow fer life, and after ber decease in equal shares to his brothera and sisters, mad the children of snch by right of represeetation: previded that if he leave a mother she takes an equal share with his brethers and sistera. 4. If there be no issue, nor widow, nor father, then in equal shares to brethers and aisters, and to the ohildren of such by right of representation : previded if he leave a mether alae, she takes an equal share with his brothers and sisters. 5. If there be ne issue, nor widow, nor father, and no brother ner sister, then te his mother, to the exclusion of the issue, if any, of deceaaed brothers and siaters. 6. If there be nene of these, then to the next of kin in equal degree, but thesc claiming through the nearest ancestor to be preferred te these claiming threugh an ancester mere remote: provided, however, that if any peraen die, leaving soveral children, or leaving one child and the issue of one or more other ehildren, and any such aurviving child ahall die under age and net having been married, all the estate that came to the deceased child by inheritance from such deceased parent deacenda in equal shares to the ether children of the same parent, and te their issue by right of representation. 7. If, at the death of such child under age, all the other children of such deceased parent are alse dead, and any of them have left iasue, the estate that came te such child by inheritance from auch parent deacends to all the iasue of other children of the same parent equally, if they are in the same degree of kindred te aaid child, otherwise according te the right of representation. 8. If the intestate leave a widew, and ne kindred, his estate deacends to such widew. 9. If there be ne widew nor kindred, the estate escheats to the people of the atate fer the use of the primary school fund. 10. The degrees of kindred are computed according to the rules of the civil law; and kindred of the balf-blood inherit equally with these of the whele bleed, in the aame degree, unleas the inheritance be ancestral, in which ease those whe are net ef the bleed of auch ancester are excluded. Wisc. Rev. Stat. 1858, c. 02, p. 554.

DESCRIPTIO PERSON 3 . Description of the person. In wills, it frequently bappens that the word heir is used as a descriptio personoe: it is then a sufficient designation of the person. In criminal cases, a mэre descriptio persona or addition, if false, can be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement. 1 Metc. Mass. 151.

DESCRIPTION. An account of the accidents aud qualitics of a thing. Ayliffe, Pand. 60.

A written account of the state and condition of personal property, titles, papers, and the like. It is a kind of inventory, but is more particular in ascertaining the exact condition of the property, and is without any appraisement of it.
In Pleading. One of the rules which regulate the law of variance is that allegations of matter of essential description should be mroved as laid. It is impossible to explain with precision the meaning of these words; and the only practical mode of understanding the extent of the rule is to examine some of the leading decisions on the subject, and then to apply the reasoning or rulng contained therein to other analogous cases. With respect to criminal law, it is clearly established that the name or nature of the property stolen or damaged is matter of essential description. Thus, for example, if the charge is one of firing a stack of hay, and it turns out to have been a stack of wheat, or if a man is accused of stealing a drake, and it is proved to have been a goose, or even a duck, the variance is fatal. 1 Taylor, Ev. 8233.

DESERTION. In Criminal Law. An offence which consists in the abandonment of the public service, in the army or navy, without leave.
The act of March 16, 1802, s. 19, enacts that if any non-cemmissioned efficer, musician, or private, shall desert the service of the United Statca, he shall, in addition to the penalties mentioned in the rules and articlea of war, he liable to serve for and during such period as Ehall, with the time he may have served previous to his desertic $n$, amount to the full term of his enlistment; snd auch soldier shall and may be tried by a coart-martial and panished, althengh the term of hia enlisiment may have elapsed previeus to hia being apprchended or tried.

By the articles of war it is enscted that "any non-commissiened (ffecr or aeldier who shall, without leave from hia commanding efficer, absent himself from hia troop, company, nr detachment, shall, npen being convicted thereof, be punished, accurding to the nature of his offence, at the discretion of a ceurt-martial." Art. 21.
By the articles for the government of the navy, art. 16, it is enacted that "if nny person in the nary shall desert to an enemy, or rebel, he shall aufler death ;" and by art. 17, "if any persco in the navy shall desert, or shall entice others to desert, he shall auffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial aball sdjudge."

In Torts. The act by which a man abandons his wife and children, or either of them.

On proof of desertion, the courts possess the power to grant the wife, or such children as have heen deserted, alimony. And a continued desertion by either husband or wife, after a certain lapse of time, entitles the party deserted to a divorce, in most states.

DESERTION OF A SEAMAN. The abandonment, by a sailor. ct a ship or vessel, in which he had engaged 10 perform a voyage, before the expiration of his time, and without leave.
2. Desertion without just canse renders the sailor liable on his shipping articles for damages, and will, besides, work a forfeiture of his wages previously earned. 3 Kent, Comm. 155. It has been decided in England that lcaving the ship before the completion of the voyage is not desertion, in the case,first, of the seaman's entering the public service, eitber voluntarily or by impressment; and, second, when he is compelled to leave it by the inhuman treatment of the captain. 2 Esp. 269 ; 1 Bell, Comm. 514, 5th ed.; 2 C.

Rob. Adm. 232. And see 1 Sumn. C. C. 373 ; 2 Pet. Adm. 393 ; 3 Stor. C. C. 138.
3. To justify the forfeiture of a seaman's wages for absence for more than forty-eight hours, under the provisions of the act of congress of July 20,1790 , an entry in the $\log -$ book of the fact of his absence, made by the officer in charge of it on the day on which he absented himself, and giving the name of the absent seaman as absent without permission, is indispensable. 1 Wash. C.C. 48 ; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 212, 296.
Receiving a marine again on board, and his return to duty with the assent of the master, is a waiver or pardon of the forfeiture of wages previously incurred. 1 Pet. Adm. 160.
DESIGNATIO PERSON $x$. The description contained in a contract of the persons who are parties thereto.
In all contracts under seal there must be some designatio personce. In general, the names of the parties appear in the body of the deed, " between A B, of, &c., of the one part, and CD, of, &c., of the other part," being the common formula. But there is a sufficient designation and description of the party to be charged if his name is written at the foot of the instrument. 1 Ld. Raym. 2; 1 Salk. 214; 2 Bos. & P. 339.

When a person is described in the body of the instrument by the name of Cames, and he signs the name of John, on being sued by the latter name he caunot deny it. 3 Taunt. 505 ; Croke Eliz. 897, n. (a). See 11 Ad. & E. 594; 3 Perr. & D: 271.

DESIGNATION. The expression used by a testator to denote a person or thing, instead of the name itself.

A bequest of the farm which the testator bought of a person named, or of a picture which he owns, painted by a certain artist, would be a designation of the thing. A legacy "to the eldest son" of A would be a designation of the person. See 1 Roper, Leg. c. 2.

DESLINDE. In Spanish Law. The act of determining and indicating the boundaries of an estate, county, or province.

DESMEMORIADOS. In Spanish Law. Persons without memory. White, New Recop. lib. 1, tit. 2, c. 1, 84.

DESPACHEURS. . The name given, in some countries, to persons appointed to settle cases of average. Ord. Hamb. t. 21, art. 10.

Despatches. Official communicar tions of official persons on the affairs of government.

In general, the bearer of despatches is entitled to all the facilities that can be given him, in his own country, or in a neutral state; but a neutral cannot, in general, be the bearer of despatches of one of the belligerent parties. 6 C. Rob. Adm. 465. See 2 Dods. Adm. 54; 1 Edw. 274.

DESPERATE. Of which there is no hope.

This term is used frequently in making an inventory of a decedent's effects, when a debt is considered so bad that there is no hope of recovering it. It is then called a desperate debt, and, if it be so returned, it will be primáa facie considered as desperate. See Toller, Ex. 248; 2 Williams, Ex. 644; 1 Chitty, Praot. 580.

DESPITUS. A contemptible person. Fleta, 1. 4, c. 5, 84.
DESPOT. This word, in its original and most simple acceptation, signifies master and supreme lord; it is synonymous with monarch; but taken in bad part, as it is usually employed, it signifies a tyrant. In some states, despot is the title given to the sovereign, as king is given in others. Encyc. Lond.
DESPOTISM. That abuse of government where the sovereign power is not divided, but united. in the hands of a single man, whatever may be his official title. It is not, properly, a form of government. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. tit. prel. n. 32; Rutherforth, Inst. b. 1, c. 20, 81.
Deskenabie. Unreasonable. Brit. ton, c. 121.
DESTINATION. The intended appli cation of a thing.
For example, when a testator gives to a hospital a sum of money to be applied in erecting buildings, he is said to give a destination to the legacy. Mill-stones taken out of a mill to be picked, and to be returned, have a destination, and are considered real estate, although detached from the freehold. Heirlooms, although personal chattels, are, by their destination, considered real estate; and money agreed or directed to be laid out in land is treated as real property. Newland, Contr. c. 3; 3 Wheat. 577; 2 Bell, Comm. 2; Erskine, Inst. 2. 2. 14; Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, c. 6, 89 . See Easement ; Fixtures.

In Common Law. The port at which a ship is to end her voyage is called her port of destination. Pardessus, n. 600.
DESUETUDE. Disuse.
DETAINER. Detention. The act of keeping a person against his will, or of withholding the possession of goods or other personal or real property from the owner.
Detainer and detention are pretty much synenymous. If there be any distinction, it is perhaps that detention applies rather to the act considered as a fact, detainer to the act considered as something done by some person. Detainer is more frequently used with reference to real estate than in application to personal preperty.
2. All illegal detainers of the person amount to false imprisonment, and may be remedied by habeas corpus.
A detainer or detention of goods is either lawful or unlawful; when lawful, the party having possession of them cannot be deprived of it. The detention may be unlawful although the original taking was lawful: as when goods were distrained for rent, and the rent was afterwards paid; or when they were pledged, and the money borrowed, and interest was afterwards paid. In these and the like cases the owner should make a demand, and, if the possessor refuses to restore them, trover, detinue, or replevin will lie, at the optivn of the plaintiff.
3. There may also be a detainer of land; and this is either lawful and peaceable, or unlawful and forcible. The detainer is lawful where the entry has been lawful and the estate is beld by virtue of some right. It is unlawful and forcible where the entry has been unlawful and with force, and it is retained by force against right; or even where the entry has been peaceable and lawful, if the detainer be by force and against right: as, if a tenant at will should detain with force after the will has determined, he will be guilty of a forcible detainer. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 64, s. 22; 2 Chitty, Pract. 238; Com myns, Dig. Detainer, B 2; 8 Cow. N. Y. 216 ; 1 Hall, N. Y. 240 ; 4 Johns. N. Y. 198; 4 Bibb, Ky. 501. A forcible detainer is a distinct offence from a forcible entry. 8 Cow. N. Y. 216. See Forcible Entry and Detainer.

In Practice. A writ or instrument, issued or made by a competent officer, authorizing the keeper of a prison to keep in his custody a person therein named. A detainer may be lodged against one within the walls of a prison, on what account soever he is there. Comyns, Dig. Process, E (3 B).
DETENTION. The act of retaining and preventing the removal of a person or property.
2. The detention may be oceasioned by accidents, as the detention of a slip ly calms, or by ice; or it may be hostile, as the detention of persons or ships in a foreign country by order of the government. In general, the detention of a ship does not change the nature of the contract; and therefore sailors will be entitled to their wages during the time of the detention. I Bell, Cornm. 5th ed. 517, 519 ; Mackeldy, Civ: Law, 8210.
3. A detention is legal when the party has a right to the property, and has come lawfully into possession. It is illegal when the taking was unlawful, as in the case of forcible entry and detainer, although the party may have a right of possession; but in some cases the detention may be lawful although the taking may have been unlawful. 3 Penn. St. 20. When the taking was legal, the detention may be illegal: as, if one borrow a horse, to ride from A to B, and afterwards detain him from the owner, after demand, such detention is unlawful, and the owner may either retake his property, or have an action of replevin or detinue. 1 Chitty, Pract. 135 . In some cases the detention heomes criminal although the taking was lawful, as in embezzlement.
DETERMINABLE. Liable to come to an end by the happening of a contingency: as, a determinable fee. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1695.

DETERMINABLE FEE (also called a qualified or base fee). Une which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification an-nexed to it is at an end. A limitation to a man and his heirs on the part of his father affords an example of this species of estate. Littleton, 8254 ; Coke, Litt. 27 a, 220 ; 1 Preston, Est. 449;' 2 Blackstone, Comm. 109; Cruise, Dig. tit. 1, 882 ; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1695.

DETERMINATE. That which is ascertained; what is particularly designated: as, if I sell you my horse Napoleon, the article sold is here determined. This is very different from a contract by which I would hare sold you a horse, without a particular designation of any horse. 1 Bouvier, Inst. nn. $947,950$.
DETERMINATION. The decision of a court of justice.

The end, the conclusion, of a right or authority : as, the determination of a lease. Comyns, Dig. Estates by Grant (G 10, 11, 12).
The determination of an authority is the end of the authority given; the end of the return-day of a writ determines the authority of the sheriff; the death of the principal determines the authority of a mere attorney.

DETERMINE. To come to an end. To bring to an end. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 121; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 380.
DETINET (Lat. detinere, to detain; detinet, he detains). In Pleading. An action of debt is said to be in the detinet when it it alleged merely that the defendant withholds or unjustly detains from the plaintiff the thing or amount demanded.
The action is so brought by an executor, 1 Wms. Saund. 1; and so between the contracting parties when for the recovery of such things as a ship, horse, etc. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 156.
An action of replevin is said to be in the detinet when the defendant retains possession of the property until after judgment in the action. Buller, Nisi P. 52; Chitty, Plead. 145.

It is said that anciently there was a form of writ adapted to bringing the action in this form; but it is not to be found in any of the books. 1 Chitty, Plead. 145.
In some of the states of the United States, however, the defendant is allowed to retain possession upon giving a bond similar to that required of the plaintiff in the comnon-law form: the action is then in the detinet. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 146, n.; 5 Watts & S. Penn. 556; 8 Ark. 510; 2 Sandf. N. Y. 68; 13 Ill. 315; 1 Dutch. N. J. 390.
The jury are to find the value of the chattels in such case, as well as the damage sustained. See Debet et Detinet; Detinuit.
DETINUE (Lat. detinere,-de, and tenere -to hold from ; to withhold).

In Practice. A form of action which lies for the recovery, in specie, of personal chattels from one who acquired possession of them lawfully but retains it without right, tngether with danages for the detention. 3
Blackstone, Comm. 151.

It is generally laid down as necesanry to the maintenance of thia action that the original taking ahould have been lawful, thus diatinguishing it from replevin, whioh lies in oase the original taking is unlawful. Brooke, Abr. Detinue, 21, 36, 63. It is said, however, by Chitty, that it lies in caaes of tortious taking, except as a distress, and that it is thus distinguished from replevin, which lay originally only where a distress was made, as was claimed, wrongfully. 1 Chitty, Plead. 112, 113. Sea 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 152, and notes. In England this action has yielded to the more practieal and leas technical action trover, but ia much used in the slaveholding states of the United States for the rcoovery of slaves. 4 Munf. Va. 72; 4 Ala. 221; $3 \mathrm{Bibb}, \mathrm{Ky}$.510 ; 16 Ov. Tenn. 187; 10 Ired. No. C. 124.
2. The action lies only to recover such goods as are capable of being identified and distinguished from all others. Comyns, Dig. Detinue, B, C; Coke, Litt. 286 b; 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. $500 ; 5$ id. 1.; 15 B. Monr, Ky. 479 ; 2 Greene, Iowa, 266; 5 Sneed, Tenn. 562 , in cases where the defendant had originally lawful possession, which be retains without right, 12 Ala. 279 ; 2 Mo. 45 ; 4 B. Monr. Ky. 365 ; 15 id. 479 ; 11 Ala. n. s. 322 ; as where goods were delivered for application to a specitic purpose, 4 Bos. \& P. 140 ; but a tort in taking may be waived, it is said, and detinue brought, 2 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 268 ; 14 Mo. 491; 15 Ark. 235 ; that it lies whether the taking was tortious or not. 18 Ala. 151; 9 Ala. n. s. 780 ; 1 Mo. 749. The property must be in existence at the time, 2 Dan. Ky. 332; 10 Ala. 123; 1 Ala. N. s. $203 ; 1$ Ired. No. C. 523 ; see 10 Ala. 123 ; 23 Ala. n. s. 377 ; $13^{\prime}$ Mo. 612 ; 12 Ark. 368 ; but need not be in the possession of the defendant. 1 Dan. Ky. 110; 3 id. $36 ; 5$ Yerg. Tenn. 301; 1 Brev. So. C. 301; 3 Miss. 304 ; 19 Ala. n. s. 491 ; 1 Hempst. C. C. 111 ; 23 Mo. 389 ; 18 B. Monr. Ky. 86. See 4 Dev. \& B. No. C. 458 ; 10 Ired. No. C. 124.
3. The plaintiff must have had actual possession, or a right to immediate possession, 2 Mo. 45; 1 Wash. Va. 308; 3 Munf. Va. 122; 4 id. 72; 4 Bibb, Ky. 518; 7 Ala. n. s. 189; 6 Ired. No. C. 88; 2 Jones, No. C. 168 ; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 178 ; but a special property, as that of a bailee, with actual possession at the time of delivery to the defendant, is sufficient. 2 Wms . Saund. $47 b, c, d ; 9$ Leigh, Va. 158; Cam. & N. No. C. 416; 1 Miss. 315; 5 id. 742 ; 4 B. Monr. Ky. 365 ; 2 Mo. 45 ; 22 Ala. 534. A demand is not requisite, except to entitle the plaintiff to damages for detention between the time of the demand and that of the commencement of the action. 1 Bibb , Ky. 186; 4 id. 340; 1 Mo. 9 ; 14 id. 491 ; 3 Litt. Ky. 46 ; 3 Munf. Va. 122; 8 Ala. 279 ; 12 Ala. n. s. 135 ; 1 Hempst. C. C. 179.

The declaration may state a bailment or trover; though a simple allegation that the goods came to the defendant's hands is sufficient. Brooke, Abr. Detinue, 10. The bailment or trover alleged is not traversable. Brooke, Abr. Detinue, 1, 2, 50. It must describe the property with accuracy. 2 Ill. 206 ; 13 Ired. No. C. 172; 2 Greene, Iowa, 266.

The plea of non-detinet is the general issue, and special matter may be given in evidence under it, Coke, Litt. 283; 16 Eng. L. & Eq. $514 ; 2$ Munf. Va. 329 ; 4 id. 301 ; 6 Humphr. I'enn. 108; 31 Ala. N. s. 136 ; including title in a third person, 3 Dan. Ky. 422 ; 17 Ala. 303 ; 12 Ala. N. s. 823, eviction, or accidental loss by a bailee. 3 Dan. Ky. 36 .
4. The defendant in this action frequently prayed garnishment of a third person, whom he alleged owned or had an interest in the thing demanded; but this be could not do without confessing the possession of the thing demanded, and making privity of bailment. Brooke, Abr. Garnishment, 1, Interpleader, 3. If the prayer of garnishment was allowed, a sci. fa. issued against the person named as garnishee. If he made default, the plaintiff recovered against the defendant the chattel demanded, but no damages. If the garnishee appeared, and the plaintiff made default, the garnishee recovered. If both appeared, and the plaintiff recovered, he bad judgment against the defendant for the cbattel demanded, and a distringas in execution; and against the garnishee a judgment for damages, and a fi. fa. in execution.
5. The judgment is in the alternative that the plaintiff recover the goods, or the value thereof if he cannot have the property itself, 9 Ala. 123; 7 Ala. n. s. 189; 5 Munf. Va. 166; 1 Bibb, Ky. 484 ; 7 B. Monr. Ky. 421 ; 4 Yerg. Tenn. $470 ; 8$ Humphr. Tenn. $406 ; 5$ Mo. 489 ; 4 Ired. Eq. No. C. 118 ; 7 Gratt. Va. $343 ; 4$ Tex. 184 ; 12 id. 54 ; with damages for the detention, 4 Ala. 221; 1 Ired. No. C. 523 ; 13 Mo. 612; 8 Gratt. Va. 578 ; 16 Ala. n. s. 271, and full costs.

The verdict and judgment must be such that a special remedy may be had for a recovery of the goods detained, or a satisfaction in value for each parcel in case they or either of them cannot be returned. 7 Ala. n. s. 189, 807; 4 Yerg. Tenn. 570; 2 Humphr. Tenn. 59 ; 5 Miss. $489 ; 3$ T. B. Monr. Ky. 59 ; 6 id. 52 ; 4 Dan. Ky. 58; 3 B. Monr. Ky. 313.
DETINUIT (Lat. he detained).
In Pleading. An action of replevin is said to be in the detinuit when the plaintiff acquires possession of the property claimed by means of the writ. The right to retain is, of course, subject in such case to the judgment of the court upon his title to the property claimed. Buller, Nisi P. 521.

The declaration in such case nced not state the value of the goods. 6 Blackf. Ind. 469 ; 7 Ala. N. s. 189.

The judgment in such case is for the damage sustained by the unjust taking or detention, or both, if both were illegal, and for costs. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3562.

DEVASTATION. Wasteful use of the property of a deceased person : as, for extravagant funeral or other unnecessary expenses. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 508 .

DEVASTAVIT. A mismanagement and waste by an executor, administrator, or other trustee, of the estate and effects trusted to him as such, by which a loss occurs.
2. Devastavit by direct abuse takes place when the executor, administrator, or trustee sells, embezzles, or converta to his own use the goods intrusted to him, Comyns, Dig. Administration (I) ; releases a claim due to the estate, 3 Bacon, Abr. 700; Hob. 266; Croke Eliz. $43 ; 7$ Johns. N. Y. 404; 9 Mass. 352 ; or surrenders a lease below its value. 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 376; 3 P. Will. 330. These instances sufficiently show that any wilful waste of the property will be considered a direct devastavit.
3. Devastavit by mal-administration most frequently occurs hy the payment of claims which were not due nor owing, or by paying others out of the order in which they ought to be paid, or by the payment of legacies before all the debts are satisfied. 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 394 ; 5 Rawle, Penn. 266.
4. Devastavit by neglect. Negligence on the part of an executor, administrator, or trustee may equally tend to the waste of the estate as the direct destruction or mal-administration of the assets, and render him guilty of a devastavit. The neglect to sell the goods at a fair price within a reasonable time, or, if they are perishable goods, before they are wasted, will be a devastavit; and a neglect to collect a doubtful debt which by proper exertion might have been callected will be so considered. Bacon, Abr. Executors, L.
5. The law requires from trustees good faith and due diligence, the want of which is punished by making them responsible for the losses which may be sustained by the property intrusted to them: when, therefore, a party has been guilty of a devastavit, he is required to make up the loss out of his own estate. See Cumyns, Dig. Administration, I; 11 Viner, Abr. 306 ; 1 Belt, Suppl. to Ves. 209 ; 1 Vern. Ch. 328; 7 East, 257; 1 Binn. Penn. 194; 1 Serg. & R. Penn. $241 ; 1$ Johns. N. Y. 396 ; 1 Caines, Cas. N. Y. 96 ; Bacon, Abr. Executors, L; 11 Toullier, 58, 59, n. 48.

DEVENERUNT (Lat. devenire, to come to). A writ directed to the king's escheators when any of the king's tenants in capite dies, and when his son and heir dies within age and in the king's custody, commanding the escheat, or that by the oaths of twelve good and lawful men they shall inquire what lands or tenements by the death of the tenant have come to the king. Dy. 360 ; Termes de la Ley; Keilw. 199 a; Blount; Cowel.

DEVIATION. In Insurance. Varying from the risks insured against, as described in the policy, without necessity or just cause, after the risk has begun. 1 Phillips, Ins. 8 977 et seq.
2. The mere intention to deviate is not a deviation. Usage, in like cases, has a great weight in determining the manner in which the risk is to be run, the contract being understood to have implied reference thereto in the absence of specific stipulations to the oontrary. 1 Phillips, Ins. c. xii. sects. i.-viii. ; 38 Me. 414 ; 30 Penn. St. 334 ; 18 Mo. 193 ; 19 N. Y. 372. A variation from risks described in the policy from a necessity which is not inexcusably incurred does not forfeit the insurance, 1 Phillips, 1ns. & 1018: as, to seek an intermediate port for repairs necessary for the prosecution of the voyage, 1 Phillips, Ins. 81019 ; changing the course to avoid disaster, 1 Phillips, Ins. z 1023 ; delay in order to succor the distressed at sea, 1 Phillips, Ins. 8 1027; 6 East, 54; 2 Crauch, 240,$258 ; 2$ Wash. C. C. 80 ; 1 Sumn. C. C. 328 ; damage merely in defence against hostile attacks. 1 Phillips, Ins. $z_{8} 1030$.
3. Change of risk in insurance against fire, so as to render the insured subject, or its surroundings, or the use made of it, different from those specified in the application, will discharge the underwriters. 1 Phillips, Ins. $\frac{8}{8} 1036 ; 17$ Barb. N. Y. 11; 2 N. Y. 210; 7 Cush. Mass. 175 ; 8 id. 583 ; 6 Gray, Mass. 185; 19 Penn. St. 45 ; 13 B. Monr. Ky. 282 ; 23 Mo. 453 ; 4 Zabr. N. J. 447 ; 1 Dutch. N. J. 54 ; 4 Wisc. 20.

Change of risk under a life-policy in con travention of its express provisions will de. feat it, in like manner, 1 Phillips, Ins. & 1039, though such a policy docs not appear to have any implied conditions other than those relative to fraud common to all contracts.

The effect of a deviation in all kinds of insurance is to discharge the underwriters, whether the risk is thereby enhanced or not; and the doctrine applies to lake and river navigation as well as that of the oceav. 1 Phillips, Ins. $\% 987$.
4. In Contracts. A change made in the progress of a work from the original plan agreed upon.

When the contract is to build a house ac. cording to the original plan, and a deviation takes place, the contract must be traced as far as possible, and the additions, if any have been miade, must be paid for according to the usual rate of charging. 3 Barnew. & Ald. 47. And see 1 Ves. Ch. $60 ; 10$ id. $306 ; 13$ id. 73,81 ; 14 id. 413 ; 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 38 ; 3 Cranch, 270 ; 5 id. 262 ; 9 Pick. Mass. $z 98$; Chitty, Contr. 168.

The Civil Code of Lonisiana, art. 2734, provides that when an architect or other workman has undertaken the building of a house by the job, according to a plot agreed on between him and the owner of the ground, he cannot claim an increase of the price agreed on, on the plea of the original plot having been changed and extended, unless he can prope that such changes have been made in compliance with the wishes of the proprietor.

DEVISAVIT VEL NON. In Practice. The name of an issue sent out of a court of chancery, or one which exercises chancery jurisdiction, to a court of law, ta try the validity of a paper asserted and denied to be a will, to ascertain whether or not the testator did devise, or whether or not that paper was his will. 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 437 ; 2 Atk. Ch. 424; 5 Penn. St. 21.

DEVISE. A gift of real property by a person's last will and testament.

The term devise, properly and technically, applics only to real estate; the object of the devise must, therefore, be that kind of property. 1 Hill, Abr. c. 36, nn. 62-74. But it is also sometimes improperly applied to a bequest or legacy. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 209ゝ et seq.; 4 Keut, Comm. 489 ; 8 Viner, Abr. 4I; Camyns, Dig. Eatates by Devise.
2. In regard to a lapsed devise, where the devisce dies during the life of the testator, the estate so levised will go to the heir, notwithstanding a residuary devise. But if the devise be void, as where the devisee is dead at the date of the will, or is made upon a condition precedent which never happens, the estate will go to the residuary devisce, if the words are sufficiently comprehensive. 2 Vern. Ch. 39t; 15 Ves. Ch. 589 ; 3 Whart. Penn. 477; 4 Kent, Comm. 541, 542, and cases cited in notes. But some of the cases hold in that case, cven, that the estate goes to the heir. 6 Conn. 292; 4 Ired. Eq. No. C. 320. By the English law a residuary bequest operates upon all the personal estate which the testator is possessed of at the time of his death, and will include such as would have gone to pay specific legacies which lapse or are void. 4 Ves. Ch. 708, 732; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 115 : 6 id. 600; 4 Hawks, No. C. 215 ; 1 Dan. Ky. 206; 1 Dev. & B. Eq. No. C. 115, 116 ; l Jarman, Wills, 585 599.
3. A general devise of lands will pass a reversion in fee, even though the testator had other lands which will satisfy the words of the devise, and although it be highly improbable that he had in mind such reversion. 3 P. Will. Ch. 56; 3 Atk. Ch. 492; Cowp. 808; 3 Brown, Parl. Cas. 478 ; 4 Brown, Ch. 338 ; 1 Metc. Mass. 281 ; 8 Ves. Ch. 256 ; 15 id. 396.

A general devise will pass leases for years, if the testator have no other real cstate upon which the will may operate; hut if he have both lands in fee and lands for years, i devise of all his laids and tencments will commonly pass only the lands in fee-simple. Croke Car. 293; 2 Atk. Ch. 450 ; 1 Ed. Ch. $151 ; 6 \mathrm{Sim} . \mathrm{Ch} .99$. But if a contrary intention appear from the will, it will prevail. 5 Ves. Ch. 540 ; 9 East, 448; 6 Term, 345.
4. A devise in a will can never be regarded as the execution of a power, unless that intention is manifest: as, where the will would otherwise have nothing upon which it could operate. But the devise to have that operation need not necessarily refer to the power in express terms. But where there is an interest upon which it can operate, it shall be referred to that, unless some other intention is obvious. 6 Coke, $176 ; 1$ Atk. Ch. 559; 6 Madd. Ch. 190; 4 Kent, Comm. 334, 335 ; 1 Jarman, Wills, 628 et seq.
5. The devise of all one's lands will not generally carry the interest of a mortgagee in premises, unless that intent is apparent. 2 Vern. Ch. 621 ; 3 P. Will, 61 ; 1 Jarman, Wills, 633-637. The fact that the mortgagee is in possession is sometimes of impertance in determining the purpose of the devise.

But many cases hold that the interest of a mortgagee or trustee will pass by a general devise of all one's lands, unless a contrary intent he shown. 13 Johns. N. Y. 537 ; 8 Ves. Ch. 407 ; l Jac. & W. Ch. 494. But see 9 Barnew. & C. 267. This is indeed the result of the modern decisions. 4 Kent, Comm. 539, 540; 1 Jarman, Wills, 638 et seq. It seems clear that a devise of one's mortgages will pass the beneficial title of the mortgagee. 4 Kent, Comin. 539.
6. Devises are contingent or vested,-that is, after the death of the testator. Contingent when the resting of any estate in the derisee is made to depend upon some future event, in which case, if the event never occur, or until it does occur, no estate vests under the devise. But when the future event is referred to merely to determine the time at which the devisee shall come into the use of the estate, this does not hinder the vesting of the estate at the death of the testator. I Jarman, Wills, c. xxvi., and numerous cases cited. The law favors the construction of the will that shall vest the estate. 21 Pick. Mass. 311; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 205. Bui this construction must not be carried to such an extent as to dofeat the manifest intent of the testator. 21 Pick. Mass. 311; 7 Metc. Mass. 171. Where the estate is given absolutely, hut only the time of possession is deferred, the devisee or legatee acquires a transmissible interest although he never arrive at the age to take possession. 1 Ves. Son. Ch. 44, 59, 118; 4 Pick. Mass. 198; 7 Metc. Mass. 173. Consult Redfield, Wills.

DEVISEE. A person to whom a devise has been made.
All persons who are in rerum natura, and oven embryos, may be devisees, unless excepted by some positive law. But the devisee must be in existence, except in casc of devises to charitable uses. Story, Eq. Jur. 88 1146, 1160; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 688; 2 How. 127; 4 Wheat. 33, 49. See Cnaritable Uses. In general, he who can acquire property by his labor and industry may receive a devise. Cam. & N. No. C. 353. Femes covert, infants, aliens, and persons of non-sane memory may be devicees. 4 Kent, Comm. 506; 1 Harr. Del. 524. Corporations in England and in some of the United States can be devisees only to a limited extent. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 687.

DEVISOR. A testator. One whe devises real estate.

Any person who can sell an estate may, in goneral, devise it; and there are some disabilities to a sale which are not such to a devise. Infancy, as a disability, is partially removed in California, Illinois, Maryland, and Mississippi. Coverture, as a disability, is likewise removed entirely, or to some extent, in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, and Vermont. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 685,686. As to how far idiocy or lunacy is a disability, see $21 \mathrm{Vt} .170 ; 9$ Conn. 102 ; 26 Wend. N. Y. 255; 7 Pick. Mass. 94 ; 18 id. 115; 1 Phill. Eecl. 90; I Jarman, Wills, 1st Am. ed. 29, notes.

DEVOIR. Duty. It is used in the statute of 2 Ric. II. c. 3 , in the sense of duties or customs.

DEVOLUTION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The transfer, by torfeiture, of a right and power which a person has to another, on account of some act or negligence of the person who is vested with such right or power? for example, when a person has the right of presentation and he does not present within the time prescribed, the right devolves on his next immediate superior. Ayliffe, Parerg. 331.

DI COLONNA. In Maritime Law. The contract which takes place between the owner of a ship, the captain, and the mariners, who agree that the voyage shall be for the benefit of all. The term is used in the Italian law. Targa, cc. 36, 37 ; Emerigon, Mar. Loans, s. 5.

The Now England whalers are owned and navigated in this manner and under this species of contract. The captain and his mariners are all interested in the profits of the voyage in certain proportion, in the same manner as the captain and crew of a privateer, according to the agreement between them. Such agreements werc very common in former times, all the marincrs and the masters being interested in the vojage. It is necessary to know this in order to understand many of the provisions of the laws of Oleron, Wisbuy, the Consolato del Maro, and other ancient codes of maritime and commercial law. Hall, Mar. Loans, 42.

DICTATOR. In Roman Law. A magistrate at Rome iuvested with absolute power. His authority over the lives and fortunes of the citizens was without bounds. His office contimued but for six months. Hist. de la Jur. Dig. 1.'2. 18, I. 1. 1.

DICTUM (also, Obiter Dictum). An opinion expressed by a court, lut which, not being necessarily involved in the case, lacks the force of an adjudication.

It frequently happens that, in assigning its opinion upon a question hefore it, the court discusses collateral questions and expresses a decided opinion upon them. Such opinions, however, arc froquently given witbout much reflection or without previous argument at the har; and as, mureover, they do not enter into the adjudication of the point before it, they have only that authority which may be accorded to the opinion, wore or less deliberato, of the individual judge who announces it. It may be observed that in recent times, particularly in those jurisdictions where appeals are largely favored, the aucient practice of courts in this respect is much modified. Formerly, judges aimed to confine their opinion to the precise point involved, and were glad to make that point as narrow as it might justly be. Where appcals are frequent, however, a strong tendency may be seen to fortify the judgment given with every principle that can be invoked in its benalf,-those that are merely coliateral, as well as those that are necessarily involved. In some courts of last resort, also, when there are many judges, it is not unfrequently the case that, while the court come to one and the same conclusion, the different judges may be led to that conclusion by different views of the law, so that it becomes difficult to determine what is to be regarded as the principle upon which the case was decided and what shall be deemed mere dicta. According to the more rigid rule, an exprcssion of opinion bowever deliberate upon a question however fully argued, if not cssential to the disposition that was made of the case, may be regarded as a dictum; but it is, on the other band, said that it is difficult to see why, in a philosophical point of view, the opinion of the court is not as persuasive on all the points which wore so involved in the cause that it was the duty of counsel to srgue them, and which were deliherately passed over hy the court, as if the decision had hung upon but one point. 1 Abbott, N. DIGEST. A compilation arranged in an orderly manner.

The namo is given to a great variety of topical compilations, abridgments, and analytical indices of reports, statutes, etc. When reference is mado to the Digest, the Pandecte of Justinian aro intended, they being the authoritative compilation of the civil law. As to this Digest, and the mode of citing it, see Pandects. Other digests are referred to hy their distinctive names. For some account of digests of the civil and canon law, and thase of Iudian law, qee Clyil Laws, Code, and Canon Law.

The digests of English and American law are for the most part deemed not autborities, but simply manuals of rcference, by which the reader may find his way to the original cases which are anthorities. 1 Burr. 364; 2 Wils. 1, 2. Some of them, however, which have been the careful work of scholarly lawyers, possess an independent value as original repositories of the law. Bacon's Abridgment, which has long heen deservedly popular in this country, and Comyas' Digest, aleo often cited, are examples of thase. The carlier English digests are those of Statham (Hen. VI.), Fitzherbert, 1516, Braoke, 1573, Rolle, Danvere, Nelson, Viner, and Petersdorf. Of these Rolle and Viner are still not unfrequently cited, and some others rarely. The several digests by Coventry & Hughes, hy Harrison, and by Chitty, tugether afford a convonient index for the American reader to the English reports. In most of the United States one or mare digests of the atate reports have heen puhlished, and in some of them digests or t-pical arrangements of tho statutes. There are also digests of the federal reports, the federal statutes, and one known as the United States Digest, which representa the reports of the federal and the state courts together. Dane's Abridgment of American Law has been commended hy high authority (Story's article in N. Am. Rev. July, 1826), but it has not maintained a position as a work of general use. There are also numerous digests of cases on particnlar titles of the law.

DIGNIIARY. In Ecclesiastica Iaw. An ecelesiastie who helds a dignity or berefice which gives him some pre-eminence over mere priests and canons, such as a bishop, archbishop, prebendary, ete. Swift; Burn, Law Diet.
DIGNITIES. In English Law. Titles of honor.
They are considered as incorporeal hereditaments. The genius of our government forbids their admission into the republic.
DILACION. In Spanish Law. The time granted by law or by the judge to parties litigant for the purpose of answering a demand or proving some disputed fact.
DILAPIDATION. A species of ecelesiastical waste whieh occurs whenever the incumbent suffers any edifices of bis ecclesiastical living to go to ruin or deeay. It is either voluntary, ly pulling down, or permissive, by suffering the ehurch, parsonage-houses, and other buildings, thereunto belenging to deeay. And the remedy for either lics either in the spiritual court, where the canon law prevails, or in the courts of common law. It is also held to be gocd eause of deprivation if the bishop, parsen, or other ecclcsiastical person dilapidates buildings or euts down timber growing on the patrimony of the chureh, unless for neeessary repairs; and that a writ of prohilition will also lie against him in the eommon-law evurts. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 91.
DILATORY DEFENCE. In Chancery Practice. One the oljeet of which is to dismiss, suspend, or obstruet the suit, without touching the merits, until the impcdiment or obstacle insisted on shall be removed. See Defence.

DILATORY PLEA. One which goes to defeat the particular action brought, merely, and which does not answer as to the general right of the plaintiff DILIGENCE. In Scotch Law. Proeess. Execation.

Diligence against the heritage. A writ of exeeution by which the ereditor proceeds against the real estate of the debtor.
Diligence incident. A writ or process for citing witnesses and examining havers. It is equivalent to the English subpoena for witnesses and rule or order for examination of parties and for interrogatories.
Diligence to examine havers. A process to obtain testimony: equivalent to a bill of ciseovery in cbancery, or a rule to compel oral examination and a subperna duces tecum at common law.

Diligence aganst the person. A writ of execution by which the creditor proceeds against the person of the debtor: equivalent to the English ca. sa.

Second diligence. Second letters issued where the first have been disrogarded. A similar result is produced in English practice by the attachment for contempt.
Summary diligence. Diligence issued in a summary manner, like an execution of a warrant of attorney, cognovit actionem, and the like, in English practice.
Diligence against witnesses. Process to compel the attendance of witnesses: equivalent to the English subpœna. See Paterson, Comp.
DIME (Lat. decem, ten). A silver coin of the United States, of the value of ten cents, or one-tenth of the dollar.
The act of 1792 provided for the coinage of "dismes, each to be of the value of one-tenth of a dollar, or unit, and to contain thirty-seven grains and two sixteenth-parts of a grain of pure, or fortyone grains and three fifth-parts of a grain of standard, silver" (viz.: 892.4 thousandths fine). See Act of April 2, 1792, sect. 9, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 248. Dimes were first regularly issned from the mint in 1796. The standard fineness remained unchanged until 1837, when it was altered to nine-tenths,-nine parts to he of pure silver, and oric of copper, the dime to weigh forty-one and onefourth grains. Act of Jan. 18, 1837, 83 8, 9, 5 U . S. Stat. at Large, 137. The act of 1853 provided "That from and after the first day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-two [three], the weight of the half-dollar, or piece of fifty cents, shall be one hundred and ninety-two grains, and the quarterdollar, dime, and half-dime shall be, respeetively, one-half, one-fifth, and one-tenth of the weight of said half-dollar." Aet of Feh. 21, 1853, 33 1, 2, 10 U. S. Stat. at Large, 160. The weight of the dime enined sizce the passage of the last-eited act, consequantly, is 38.4 grains; and by the same aet it is made a legal tender in payment of dehts for all sums not exceeding five dollars.

DIMINUTION OF THE RECORD.

In Practice. Incompleteness of the record of a oase sent up from an inferior to a superior court.

When this exists, the parties may suggest a dimination of the record, and pray a writ of certiorari to the justices of the court below to certify the whole record. Tidd, Pract. 1100; 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 472; Colke, Entr. 2今̀2; 8 Viner, Abr. 552; 1 Lilly, Abr. 245; 1 Nelson, Abr. 658 ; Croke Jac. 597 ; Croke Car. $91 ; 1$ Ala. $20 ; 4$ Dev. No. C. $575 ; 1$ Dev. & B. No. C. 382; 1 Munf. Va. 119. See Certiorart.
dIOCESE. The territorial extent of a bishup's jurisdiction. The circuit of overy bishop's jurisdiction. Coke, Litt. 94 ; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 111; 2 Burns, Ecel. Law, 158.

DIPLOMA. An instrument of writing, executed bya corporation or society, certifying that a certain person therein nanied is entitled to a certain distinction therein mentioned.

It is usually granted by learned institutions to their members, or to persons who have studied in them.

Proof of the seal of a medical institution and of the sigaatures of its officers thereto affixed, by comparison with the seal and signatures attached to a diploma receized by the witness from the same institution, has been held to be competent evidence of tha genuineness of the instrument, although the witness never saw the officers write their names. 25 Wend. N. Y. 469.
This word, which is also written doploma, in the civil law signifies letters issued by a prince. They are so called, it is supposed, a dupplicatis tabellis, to which 0 vid is thought to allude, 1 Amor. 12, 2, 27 , when he says, Tunc ego vos duplices rebus pro nomine sensi. Sueton. in Augustum, c. 26. Seals also were called Diplomata. Vicat, Diploma.
DIPLOMACY. The science which treats of the relations and interests of nations with natione.
DIPLOMATIC AGENTS. Public of ficers who have been commissioned according to law to superintend and transact the affairs of the government which has employed them, in a foreign country. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 5.
These agents are of divers orders and are known by different denominations. Those of the first order are almost the perfect representatives of the government by which they are commissioned: they are legates, nuncios, internuncios, ambassadors, ministers, plenipotentiaries. Those of the second order do not so fully represent their government: they are envoys, residents, ministers, chargés d'affaires, and consuls. See these several words.
DIPLOMATICS. The art of judging of ancient charters, public documents, or diplomas, and discriminating the true from the false. Encyc. Lond.
DIPSOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A disease produced by drunkenness, and, indeed, other causes, which overmasters the will of its victim and irresistibly impels him to drink to intoxication. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8304 . How far the law will hold a party responsible for acts committed while the mind is overwhelmed by the effects of liquor so taken is an open question!.

DIRECT. Straightforward; not collateral. The direct line of descent is formed by a series of relationships between persons who descend successively one from the other.
Evidence is termed direct which applies immediately to the fact to be proved, without any intervening procese, as distinguished from circumstantial, which applies immediately to collateral facts supposed to have a connection, near or remote, with the fact in controversy.

The examination in chief of a witness is called the direct examination.
DIRECTION. The order and government of an institution; the persons who compose the board of directors are jointly called the direction. Direction, in another sense, is nearly synonymous with instruction (q.v.).

In Practice. That part of a bill in chancery which contains the address of the bill to the court: this must, of course, contain the apprapriate and technical description of the court. See Bill.

DIRECTOR OF THE MINT. An officer appointed by the president of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, who has the control and management of the mint, the superintendence of the officers and persons employed therein, and the general regulation and superintendence of the busimess of the several branch mints and of the assay office. Act of Congress, Jan. 18, 1837, sects. 1, 2, 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 136.
2. The general direction of the hranches of the mint of the United States shall be under the control and regulation of the director of the mint at Pbiladelphia, subject to the approbation of the seeretsry of the treasury; and for that purpose it ahall be the duty of the said director to preseribe such regulations, and require auch returns, periodically, and oceasioanlly, as shall appear to him to be neceeseary to carry into effect the purposes of the law establishing the branches; also, for the parpose of discrimioating the ceias which ehall be stamped at each branch, and at the mint itself; also, for the purpose of preserving uniformity of weight, form, and fincoess in the coins stamped at each place, and for that purpose to require the traasmission and delivery to him, at the mint, from time to time, of such pareels of the coinage of each branch as he shall think proper, to be anbjected to ench assays and tests as he shall dircet. Aot of Mareh 3, 1835, 8 4, 4 U. S. Stat. at Large, 775.
3. The director of the mint has pewer to appoiat, with the approbation of the president of the United States, assistants to the assayer, melter aad refiner, chief coiner, and engraver, and clerks for the director [and treasurcr], whenever, on representntion made by the director to the preeident, it shall be the opinign of the preeident that such assistants or elerke are necessary; and it is made the duty of the assistants to aid their prineipals in the exeeution of therr reapcetive offices, and of the clerks to perform such duties as shall be prescribed for them by the director. Act of Jan. 18, 1837, $q 3$, 5 U . S. Stat. at Large, 137 . Altered as to the words io brackets by resolution of Mareh 3, 1851, 0 Stat. at Large, $6+7$.
4. Whenever any officer of the mint shall be temporarily absent on account of aickness or any other sufficient cause, it shall be lawful for the director, with the coasent of the said officer, to appoint some person attached to the miat to act in the place of euch officer during his absence, and to employ snch workmen and servants ia the miat as be shall, from time to time, find necessary. Act of Jan. 18, 1837, द̌ 4, 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 137.
5. It is the duty of the director to cause assays to be made, from time to time, of such fereign coins as may be known to our commerce, to determine their arerage weight, finencss, and value. and to embrace in his anoual report a atatement of the results thereof. This annual report embraces the operations of the mint and its branchee, and the assay office, for each fiseal year, which terminates on the 30 th of June, and appears in the report of the secretary of the trensury on the finances. See Act of Feb. 21, 1857, $363,4,13$ U. S. Stat. at Large, 163. The salary of the director of the mint, as fixed by the aet of Jaa. 18, 1837, &7, 5 U. S. Stat. at Larige, 137, is three thousand five huadred dolars.
DIRECTORS. Persons appointed or elected according to law, authorized to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation or company. The whole of the directors collectively form the board of directors.
2. They are generally invested with certain powers by the acts of the legislature to which they owe their existence.

In modern corporations created by statutes, it is generally contemplated by the charter that the business of the corporation shall be transacted excIusively by the directors. 2 Caines, N. Y. 381. And the acts of such a board, evidenced by a legal vote, are as completely binding upon the corporation, and as complete authority to their agents, as the most solemn acts done under the corporate seal. 8 Wheat. $357,358$.
3. To make a legal board of directors, they must meet at a time when, and a place where, every other director has the opportunity of attending to consult and be consulted with; and there must be a sufficient number present to constitute a quorum. 3 La. 574 ; 6 id. 759; I3 id. 527. See Il Mars. 288; 5 Litt. Ky. 45; I2 Serg. & R. Penn. 256; 1 Pet. 46.
4. Directors of a corporation are trustees, and as such are required to use due diligence and attention to its concerns, and are bound to a faithful discharge of the duty which the sitnation imposes. They are liable to the stockholders whenever there has been gross negligence or frand, but not for unintentional errors. 1 Edw. Ch. N. Y. $513 ; 8$ Mart. La. к. s. $80 ; 3$ La. 575. See 4 Mann. & G. 552.
5. Provision is usually made, in the act under which a company is incorporated, for the election of directors. Such election usually takes place once a year, and is generally by a vote of the etockholders. In the banking laws of many of the states, directors of banks are made personally liable for the debts of the bank when they have exceeded their powers.
DIRIMANT IMPEDIMENTS. Those bars which annul a consummated marriage.
DISABILITY. The want of legal capacity. See Abatement; Devise; Deed; Limitation ; Parties.
disabling statutes (also called the Restraining Statutes). The acts of 1 Eliz. c. 19, 13 Eliz. c. 10 , 14 Eliz. ce. 11, 14, I8 Eliz. c. 11, and 43 Eliz. c. 29, ly which the power of ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporations to lease their lands was restricted. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 319, 321 ; Coke, Litt. 44 $a ; 3$ Stephen, Comm. 140.
DISA FFIRMANCE. The act by which a person who has entered into a voidable contract, as, for example, an infant, disagrees to such contract and declares he wiil not abide by it.

Disaffirmance is express or implied:-the former, when the declaration is made in terms that the party will not abide by the contract; the latter, when he does an ant which plainly manifests his determination not to abide by it: as, where an infant made a deed for his land. and on coming of age he made a deed for the same land to anctlier. 2 Dev. \& B. No. C. 320 ; 10 Pet. $58 \cdot 13$ Mass. 371, 375.
DISAFFOREST. To restore to their | former condition lands which have been turned into forest. To remove from the operation of the forest laws. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 416.
DISAVOW. To deny the authority by which an agent pretends to have acted, as when he has exceeded the bounds of his authority.

It is the duty of the principal to fulfil the contracts which have been entered into by his authorized agent; and when an agent has exceeded his authority he onght promptly to disavow such act, so that the other party may have his remedy against the agent. See Agent; Principal.

DISBAR. In English Law. To expel a barrister from the bar. Wharton.

DISCEPIIO CAUS.巴 (Lat.). In Roman Law. The argument ot a cause by the counsel on both sides. Calvinus, Lex.

DISCHARGE. In Practice. The act by which a person in confinement under some legal process, or held on an accusation of some crime or misdemeanor, is set at liberty; the writing containing the order for his being so set at liberty is also called a discharge.

The discharge of a defendant, in prison under a ca. sa., when made by the plaintiff, has the operation of satisfying the debt, the plaintiff having no other remedy. 4 Term, 526.

But when the discharge is in consequence of the insolvent laws, or the defendant dies in prison, the debt is not satisfied. In the first case the plaintiff has a remody against the property of the defendant acquired after his discharge, and in the last case against the executors or administrators of the delstor. Bacon, Abr. Execution, D; Bingham, Execution, 206 .

DISCHARGE OF A JURY. The removal of a case from the consideration of a jury.
2. In criminal cases this can only take place by consent of the prisoner, Foster, Cr. Law, $10 \hat{0}$; 6 Carr. \&P. 151; 1 Carr. \& K. 201 ; 5 Cox, Cr. Cas. 501 ; 1 Humphr. DISCLAIMER. A disarowal; a renunciation: as, for example, the act by which a patentee renounces part of his title of invention.

Of Eistates. The act by which a party refuses to accept an estate which has been conveyed to him. Thus, a trostee is caid to disclaim who releases to his fellow-trustees his estate, and relieves himself of the trust. 1 Hill, Real Prop. 354.

Of Tenancy is the act of a person in possession, who denies holding the estate of the person who claims to be the owner. 2 Nev. & M. 672. An affirmation, by pleading or otherwise, in a eourt of record, that the reversion is in a stranger. It works a forfeiture of the lease at common law, Coke, Litt. 251 ; 1 Cruise, Dig. 109, but not, it is said, in the United States. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 93. Equity, it is said, will not aid a tenant in denying his landlord's title. 1 Pet. 486.

In Patent Law. See Patent.

In Pleading. A renunciation by the defendant of all claim to the subject of the demand made by the plaintiff's bill. Cooper, Eq. Plead. 309 ; Mitford, Eq. Plead. Jorem. ed. 318.

In Equity. It must, in general, be accompanied by an answer, 10 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 105 ; 2 Russ. $458 ; 2$ Younge & C. Cli. 546 ; 9 Sim. Ch. 102 ; 2 Bland, Ch. Md. 678 ; and always, when the defendant has so connected himself with the matter that justice cannot be done otherwise. 9 Sim. Ch. 102; Hinde, Ch. Pr. 208; 1 Anstr. 37. It must renounce all claim in any capacity and to any extent. 0 Gill & J. Md. 152. It may be to part of a bill only, but it must be clearly a scparate and distinct part of the bill. Story, Eq. Plead. \% 839. A disclaimer may, in general, be abandoned, and a claim put in upon subsequent discovery of a right. Cooper, Eq. Plead. 310.

At Law. In real actions, a disclaimer of tenancy or estate is frequently added to the plea of non-tenure. Littleton, $8391 ; 10$ Mass. 64. The plea may be either in abatement or in bar, 13 Mass. 439 ; 7 Pick. Mass. 31, as to the whole or any part of the demanded premises. Stearns, Rcal Act. 193.

At common law it is not pleaded as a bar to the action, nor is it strictly a plea in abatement, as it does not give the plaintiff a better writ. It contains no prayer for judgment, and is not conoluded with a verification. It is in effect an offer by the plaintiff to yield to the claim of the demandant and admit his title to the land. Stearns, Real Act. 193. It cannot, in general, be made by a person incapable of conveying the land. It is equivalent to a judgment in favor of the demandant, except when costs are demanded, 13 Mass. 439 , in which case there must be a replication by the demandant, 6 Pick. Mass. 5 ; but no formal replication is requisite in Pennsylvania. 5 Watts, Penn. 70; 3 Penn. St. 367. And see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 93.

DISCONTINUANCE OF ESTATES. An alienation made or suffered by the tenant in tail, or other tenant seised in autre droit, by which the issue in tail, or heir or successor, or those in reversion or remainder, are driven to their action, and cannot enter.

The term discontinuance is used to distinguish those cases where the party whose freehold is ousted can restore it only by action, from those in which he may restore it by entry. Coke, Litt. 325 a; 3 Blackstone, Cumm. 171 ; Adams, Ej. 35-41; Comyns, Dig.; Bacon, Abr.; Viner, Abr.; Cruise, Dig. Index; 2 Saund. Index.

In Pleading. The chasm or interruption which occurs when no answer is given to some material mattor in the preceding pleading, and the opposite party neglects to take advantage of such omission. See Comyns, Dig. Pleader, W ; Bacon, Abr. Pleas, P. It is distinguished from insufficient pleading by the fact that the pleading does not profess to answer all the preceding pleading in a case of discontinuance. 1 Wms . Saund. 28, n.

It constitutes error, but may be cured after verdict, by stat. $32 \mathrm{Hen}. \mathrm{VIII}. \mathrm{c}. \mathrm{80}$, after judgment by nil dicit, confession, or non sum informatus, under stat. 4 Anne, c. 16. See, generally, 1 Saund. 28 ; 4 Rep. $62 a$.

In Practice. The chasm or interruption in proceedings occasioned by the failure of the plaintiff to continue the suit regularly from time to time, as he ought. 3 Blackst. Comm. 296. The entry upon record of a discontinuance has the same effect. The plaintiff cannot discontinue after demurrer joined and entered, or after verdict or writ of inquiry, without leave of court, Croke Jac. $35 ; 1$ Lilly, Abr. 473 ; 6 Watts \& S. Penn. $14 \frac{7}{7}$; and is generally liable for costs when he discontinues, though not in all cases. See 1 Johns. N. Y. 143 ; 3 id. 249 ; 6 id. 333 ; 18 id. 252; 1 Caines, N. Y. 116; 2 id. 380; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (W 5) ; Bacon, Abr. Plea (5 P).

DISCONTINUOUS SERVITUDE.

An easement made up of repeated acts instead of one continuous act, such as right of way, drawing water, etc.

DISCOUNT. In Contracts. Interest reserved from the amount lent at the time of making a loan. An allowance sometimes made for prompt payment. As a verb, it is used to denote the act of giving money for a bill of exchange or promissory note, deducting the intercist.

The taking legal interest in advance is not usurious; but it is only allowed for the benefit of trade and where the bill or note discounted is meant for circulation and is for a short term. 2 Cow. N.Y. 678, 712; 3 Wend. N.Y. 408.

There is a difference between buying a bill and discounting it. The former word is used when the seller docs not indors. the bill and is not accountablo for its payment. Sce Putbier, De l' Csure, n. 128; 3 Pet. 40; Blydenburgh, Usury; Sewell, Banking.

In Practice. A set-off or defalcation in an action. Viner, Abr. Discount.

DISCOVERT. Not covert; unmarried. The term is applied to a woman unmarried, or widow, - one not within the bonds of matrimony.

DISCOVERY (Fr. decouvrir, to uncover, to discover). The act of finding an unknown country.

The nations of Europe adopted the principle that the discovery of any part of Ameriea gave title to the government by whose subjects or by whose authority it was made, as against all European governmeats. Tbis title was to be consummated by possession. 8 Wheat. 543; 16 Pct. 367; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 518.

An invention or improvement. Actof Cong. July 4, 1836, 36.

In Practice. The disclosure of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or the production of deeds, writings, or things in his possession or power, in order to maintain the right or title of the party asking it, in some suit or proceeding in another court.
It was originally an cquitable form of procedure, and a bill of discovery, strictly so called, was brought to assist parties to suits in other courts.

Every bill in equity is in some sease a bill of discovery, since it seeks a disclosure trom the defendant, on bis oath, of the truth of the circumstances constituting the plaintiff's case as propounded in his bill, story, Eq. Jur. & 1483; but the term is technically applied as defined above. See 4 R. I. 450; 2 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 273. Msny important questions bave arisen out of the exercise of this pewer by equity; but these are of comparatively fittle praotical importance in England and many of the states of the United States, where parties may be made witnesses and compelled to produce books and papers in oourts of law.
2. Such bills are greatly favored in equity, and are sustained in all cases where some well-founded objection does not exist against the exercise of the jurisdiction. Story, Eq. Jur. & 1488; 8 Conn. 528; 2 Harr. & G. Md. 382. See 17 Mass. 117 ; 22 Me .207 ; 4 Hen. & M. Va. 478 ; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 418. Some of the more important of the objections are, -first, that the subject is not cognizable in any municipal court of justice, Story, Eq. Jur. 81489 ; second, that the court will not lend its aid to obtain a discovery for the particular court for which it is wanted, as where the court can itself compel a discovery, 1 Atk. Ch. 258; 2 Ves. Ch. 451 ; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 547; 2 Edw. Ch. 605; 37 N. H. 55 ; see 9 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 580 ; 6 Ves. Ch. 821 ; third, that the plaintiff is not entitled by reason of personal disability; fourth, that the plaintiff has no title to the character in which he sues, 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 639 ; fifth, that the value of the snit is beneath the dignity of the court; sixth, that the plaintiff has no interest in the subject-matter or title to the discovery required, 2 Brown, Ch. 321 ; 1 Ves. 3. Courts of equity which have once obtained jurisdiction for purposes of discovery will dispose of a canse tinally, if proper for the consideration of equity, though the remedy at law is fully adequate. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 64 k-70; 1 Munf. Va. 98 ; 1 A. K. Marsh. 463, 468 ; 15 Me. 82; 2Johns. Ch. N. Y. 424 ; 1 Des. So. C. 208; 2 Ov. Tenn. 71; 1 Harr. Ch. Mich. 12. See 4 Harr. & J. Md. 46; 6 Ala. n. s. 299. Consult Adams; Story, Eq. Jur. ; Greenleaf; Phillipps, Ev.; Wigram, Disc.; Joy, Conf.
DISCREDIT. To deprive one of credit or confidence.

In general, a party may discredit a witness called by the opposite party, who testifies against him, by proving that his character is such as not to entitle him to credit or confidence, or any other fact which shows he is not entitled to belief. It is clearly settled, also, that the party voluntarily calling a witness cannot afterwards impeach his character for truth and veracity. 1 Mood. & R. 414; 3 Barnew. & C. 746. But if a party calls a winness who turns out unfavorable, he may call another to prove the same point. 2 Campb. 556; 2 Stark. 334; 1 Nev. & M. 34; 4 Barvew. & A. 193; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 229; Roscoe, Civ. Ev. 96.

DISCREPANCY. A difference between one thing and another, between one writing and another; a variance.

A material discrepancy exists when there is such a difference between a thing alleged and a thing offered in evidence as to show they are not substantially the same: as, when the plaintiff in his declaration for a malicious arrest averred that "the plaintiff, in that action, did not prosecute his said suit, but therein made default," and the record was that he obtained a rule to discontinue.

An immaterial discrepancy is one which does not materially affect the cause: as, where a declaration stated tliat a deed bore date in a certain year of our Lord, and the deed was simply dated "March 30, 1701." 2 Salk. 658; 19 Johns. N. Y. $49 ; 5$ Taunt. 707 ; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 301 ; 8 Miss. 428; 2McLean, C. C. 69 ; 1 Metc. Mass. 59 ; 21 Pick. Mass. 486.

DISCRETION. In Practice. The equitable decision of what is just and proper under the circumstances.

The discretion of a judge is said to be the law of tyrants: it is always unknown; it is different in different men; it is casual, and depends upon constitution, temper, and passion. In the best, it is oftentimes caprice; in the worst, it is every vice, folly, and passion to which human nature is liable. Optima lex quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis: optimus judex qui minimum sibi. Baeon, Aph.; 1 Cas. 80, a.; 1 Powell, Mortg. 247 a; 2 Belt, Suppl. to Ves. 391; Toullier, liv. 3, n. 338; 1 Lilly, Abr. 447.
2. There is a species of discretion which is nuthorized by express law aod without which justice cannot be administered: for example, if an old offender, a man of much intelligence and cunning, whose talents render him dangerous to the commuoity, induces a young man of weak intellect to commit a larceny in company with himself, they are both limble to be punished for the offence. The law, forcseeing such a case, has provided that the punishment should be proportioned so as to do justice, and it has left such apportionmeat to the diseretion of the judge. It is evident that without such discretion justice could not be administered; for one of these parties assuredly descrves a much more severe punishment than the other.
3. And many matters relating to the trial, such as the order of giving evidence, granting of new trials, etc., are properly left mainly or entirely to the discretion of the judge.

In Criminal Law. The ability to know and distinguish between good and evil,-between what is lawful and what is unlawful.
4. The age at which children are said to have discretion is not very accurately ascertained. Under seven years, it seems that no circumstances of mischicvous diecretion can be admitted to overthrow the strong presumption of innocence which is raised by an age so tender. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 27, 28; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 23. Between the ages of seren and fourteen the infant is, primâ facie, destitute of criminal design; but this presumption diminishes as the age increases, and even during this interval of youth may be repelled by positive evidence of vicious intention; for tenderness of years will not excuse a maturity in crime, the maxim in these cases being malitia supplet cetatem. At fourteen, children are said to have aequired legal diseretion. I Hale, Pl. Cr. 25.

DISCRETIONARY TRUSTS. Those which cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment: as, when a fund is given to trustees to be distributed in certain charities to be sclected by the trustees.

DISCUSSION. In Civil Law. A proceeding, on the part of a surety, by which the property of the principal debtor is made liable before resort can be had to the sureties: this is called the benefit of discussion. This is the law in Louisiana. La. Civ. Code, art. 3014 3020. See Domat, 3, 4, 1-4; Burge, Suret. 329, 343, 348; 5 Tcullier, 544 ; 7 id. 93 ; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1414.

DISFRANCHISTMENT. The act of depriving a member cf a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 192 .

It differs from amotion ( 7 . v.), which is applienble to the removal of an officer frrm office. leaviag him his rights as a member. Willcock, Corp. n. 708 ; Angell & A. Corp. 237. And sec Expulsion.

DISGRACE. Ignominy; shame; dis* honor. No witness is required to disgrace himself. 13 How. St. Tr. 17, 334 ; 16 id. 161. See Crimination; Degrade.

DISHERISON. Disinheritance; depriving one of au inheritance. Obsolete. See Disinherison.

DISHERITOR. One who disinherits, or puts another out of his freehold. Obsolete.

DISHONOR. A term applied to the non-tulfilment of commercial engagements. To dishonor a bill of exchange, or a promissory note, is to refuse or neglect to pay it at maturity.

The holder is bound to give notice to the parties to such instrument of its dishonor; and his laches will discharge the indursers. Chitty, Bills, $556-278,394,595$.

DISINHERISON. In Civil Law. The act of depriving a forced heir of the inheritance which the law gives him.

In Louisiana, forced heirs may be deprived of their legitime, or legal portion, and of the scisin granted them by law, for just cause. The disinherison must be made in proper form, by name and expressly, and for a just cause; otherwise it is null. See La. Civ. Cude, art. 1609-1616.

DISINHERITANCE. The act by which a person deprives his heir of an inheritance, who, without such act, would inherit.

By the common law, any one may give his estate to a stranger, and therehy disinherit his heir apparent. Ccoper, Justin. 405; 7 East, 1.6.

DISINTERESTED WITNESS. One who has no interest in the cause or matter in issue, and who is lawfully competent to testify.
In North Carolina and Tennessee, wills to pass lands must le attested by disiuterested witnesses.
DISJUNCTIVE ALLEGATIONS. In Pleading. Allegations which charge a party disjunctively, so as to leave it unceriain what is relied on as the accusation against him.

An indictment, information, or complaint which charges the defendant with one or other of two offences, in the disjunctive, as, that he murdered or caused to be murdered, forged or caused to be forged, wrote and published or caused to be writton and published, is lad for uncertanty. 8 Mcd. 350; 1 Salk. 342. s71; 2 Strange. 500 ; Cas. temp. Mardw. 370; 5 Barnew. & C. $251 ; 1$ Carr. & K. 243; 1 Younge & J. Exch.22. An indictment whicl arerred that $S$ made a forcible entry into two closes of meadow or pasture was held to be kad. 2 Rolle, Abr. 81. A complaint which alleges an unlawful sale of "spirituous or intexicating liquor" is bad for uncertainty. 2 Gray, Mass. 501. So is an information which alleges that N sold beer or ale without an excise license. G Dowl. & R. 143. And the same rule applies if the defendant is charged in two different characters in the disjunctive: as, quod A existcns servus sive deputatus, took, etc. 2 Rolle, Ahr. 663.

DISJUNCTIVE TERM. One which is ylaced between two contraries, by the affirming of one of which the other is taken away: it is usually expressed by the word or. See 3 Ves. Ch. $450 ; 7$ id. 454 ; 2 Roper, Leg. 290 ; 1 P. Will. 433; 2 id. 283 ; 2 Cox, Ch. 213 ; 2 Atk. Ch. 643 ; 3 id. 83, 85 ; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 67 ; 2 Strange, 1175 ; Croke Eliz. 525 ; Poll. 645; 1 Bingh. 500; 3 Term, 470; Ayliffe, Pand. 56; 2 Miles, Penn. 49.

In the civil law, when a legacy is given to Caius or Titius, the word or is considered and, and both Caius and Titius are entitled to the legacy in equal parts. 6 Toullier, n. 704. See Copulative Term; Construction, subdivision And, Or; also, Bacon, Abr. Conditions (P5).

DISME. Dime, which see.

DISMISS. To remove. To send out of court. Formerly used in chancery of the removal of a cause out of court without any farther hearing. The term is now used in courts of law also.

DISORDERIY HOUSE. In Criminal Law. A house the inmates of which behave so badly as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood.

The keeper of such house may be indicted for keeping a public nuisance. Hardr. 344 ; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. h. 1, c. 78, ss. 1, 2 ; Bacon, Abr. Inns, A; 1 Russell, Crimes, 298; 1 Wheel. Cr. Cas. N. Y. 290; 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 342 ; 2 id. 298 ; Bacon, Abr. Nuisances, A; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 167, 168, note. The husband must be joined with the wife in an indictment to suppress a disorderly house. Justice's Case, Law, 16; 1 Show. 146.

DISORDERLY PERSONS. A class of offenders described in the statutes which punish them. See 4 Blackstone, Comm. 169.

DISPARAGEMENT. In Old English Law. An injury by union or comparison with some person or thing of inferior rank or excellence.

Marriage without disparagement was marriago to one of suitable rank and character. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 70; Coke, Litt. $82 b$. The guardian in chivalry had the right of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony; and provided he tendered a marriage without disparagement or inequality, if the infant refused, he was obliged to pay a valor maritagii to the guardian.

Disparagare, to connect in an unequal marriage. Spelman, Gloss. Disparagatio, disparagement. Used in Magna Charta (9 Hen. III.), c. 6. Disparagation, disparagement. Kelham. Disparage, to marry unequally. Usel of a marriage proposed by a guardian between those of unequal rank and injurious to the ward.

DISPAUPER. In English Law. To deprive a person of the privilege of suing in formn pauperis.

When a person has been admitted to sue $n$ forma pauperis, and before the suit is ended it appears that the party has become the owncr of a sufficient estate real or personal, or has been guilty of some wrong, he may to dispaupered.
DISPENSATION. A relaxation of inw for the benetit or advantage of an individual. In the United States, no power exists, excent in the legislature, to dispense with law; and then it is not so much a dispensation as a change of the law.

DISPONE. In Scotch Law . i iechnical word essential to the conveyance of heritable property, and for which no equivalent is accepted however clear may be the meaning of the party. Paterson, Comp.

DISPOSSESSION. Ouster; a wreng that carries with it the amotion of possession. An act whereby the wrong-doer gets the actual cccupation of the land or hereditament. It includes abatement, intrusiou, disseisin, discontinuance, deforcement. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 167.

DISPUTATIO FORI (Lat.). Argument in court. DuCange.

DISSEISEE. One who is wrongfully put out of possession of his lands; one who is disseised.

DISSEISIN. A privation of seisin. A usurpation of the right of seisin and possession, and an exercise of such powers and privileges of ownership as to keep out or displace him to whom these rightfully belong. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 283.

It takes the seisin or estate from one man and places it in another. It is an ouster of the rightful owner from the seisin or estate in the land, and the commencement of a new estate in the wrong-doer. It may be by abatement, intrusion, discontinuance, or deforcement, as well as by disseisin properly so called. Every dispossession is not a disseisin. A disseisin, properly so called, requires an ouster of the freehold. A disseisin at clection is not a disseisin in fuct, 2 Preston, Abstr. tit. 279 et scq., but liy admission only of the injured party, for the purpose of trying his right in a real action. Cuke, Litt. 277; 2 Me. 242; 3 id. 316 ; 11 id. 309 ; 4 N. 11.371 ; 5 Cow. N. Y. 371 ; 6 Johns. N. Y'. 197; 5 Pet. 402 ; 6 Pick. Mass. 172; 6 Metc. Mass. $439 ; 4$ Kent, Comm. 485.

Disscisin may be effected either in corporeal inheritances, or incorporeal. Disseisin of things corporeal, as of hcuses, lands, etc., must be by entry and actual dispossession of the freehold: as if a man enters, by force or fraud, into the housc of another, and turns, or, at least, keeps, him or his servants out of possession. Disseisin of incorporeal Lereditaments cannot be an actual dispossession ; fcr the subject itself is neither capable of actual bodily possession nor dispossession. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 169, 170. See 15 Mass. 495 ; 6 Pick. Mass. 172; 14 id. 374; 6 Johns. N. Y. 197; 2 Watts, Penn. 23 ; 1 Vt. 155; 10 Pet. 414; 11 id. 41 ; 1 Dan. Ky. 279; 11 Me. 408; 8 Viner, Abr. 79 ; 1 Swift, Dig. $504 ; 1$ Cruise, Dig. *65; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 12 ; Bacon, Abr.; 2 Suppl. to Ves. 343 ; Dane, Abr. Index; 1 Chitty, Pract. 374, note (r).

DISSEISOR. One who puts another out of the possession of his lands wrongfully.

DISSENT. A disagreement to something which has been done. It is express or implied.
2. The law presumes that every person to whom a conveyance has been made has given his assent to it, because it is supposed to be for his bencit. To rebut the presumption, his dissent must be expressed. See 4 Mas. C. C. 206; 11 Wheat, 78 ; 1 Binn. Penn. 502; 2 id. 174 ; 6 id. 338 ; 12 Mass. 456 ; 17 id. 552 ; 3Johns. Ch.N.Y. 261 ; 4 id. 136,529; Assent, and the authorities there cited.

DISSOLUTION In Contracts. The dissolution of a contract is the anulling its effects between the contracting parties.

The dissolution of a partnership is the putting an end to the partnership. Its dissolution does not affect contracts made between the partners and others: so that they are eutitled to all their rights, and are liable on their obligations, as if the partnership had not been dissolved. See Partnership; 3 Kent, Comm. 27 ; Dane, Abr. ; Gow, Partn.; Watson, Partu.; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

In Practice. The act of rendering a legal proceeding null, or changing its character: as, a foreign attachment in Pennsylvania is dissolved by entering bail to the action; injunctions are dissolved by the court.

DISSUADE. In Criminal Law. To induce a person not to do an act.

To dissuade a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indictable offence at common law. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 21, s. 15. The mere attempt to stifle evidence is also criminal although the persuasion should not succeed, on the general principle that an incitement to commit a crime is in itself criminal. 1 Russell, Crimes, 44; 2 East, 5, 21 ; 6 id. 464 ; 2 Strange, 904 ; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 925.

DISTRACTED PERSON A term used in the statutes of Illinuis, Ill. Rev. Laws, 1833, p. 332, and New Hampshire, Dig. N. H. Laws, 1830, p. 339, to express a state of insanity.

DISTRACTIO. In Civil Law. The sale of a pledge by a debtor. The appropriation of the property of a ward by a guardian. Calvinus, Lex.

DISTRAFERE To withdraw; to sell. Distrahere controversias, to diminish and settle quarrels; distrahere matrimoniam, to dissolve marriage; to divorce. Calvinus, Lex.

DISTRAIN. To take as a pledge property of another, and keep the same until he performs his obligation or until the property is replevied by the sheriff. It was used to secure an appearance in court, payment of rent, performance of services, etc. 3'Blackstone, Comm. 231 ; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 32 (B) (C), 223. See Distress.

DISTRESS (Fr. distraindre, to draw away from). The taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of a wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured, to procure satis. faction for the wrong done. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 6. It is generally resorted to for the purpose of enforcing the payment of rent, taxes, or other duties, as well as to exact compensation for such damages as result from the trespasses of cattle.
2. This remedy is of great antiqnity, and ia said by Spelman to have prevailed among the Gothic nations of Europe from the breaking up of the Roman Empire. The English atatutea since the daya of Magna Charta have, from time to time, extended and modified its features to meet the exigencies of the times. Our atate legislatures have generally, and with some alterations, adopted the English provisions, recognizing the old remedy as a salutary and necessary one, equally conducive to the security of the landlord and to the welfare of society. As a means of collecting rent, however, it is becoming unpopular in the United Statea, as giving an undue advantage ti landlords over other creditors in the collection of debts. Taylor, Landl. & T. ${ }^{3} 556$; 2 Dall. Penn. 68; 2 Halst. N. J. 29; 1 Harr. & J. Md. 3; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 299; 1 Blackf. Ind. 409; 1 Bihb, Ky. 607; 2 Leigh, Va. 370; 3 Dan. Ky. 209.
3. In the New England atates the law of attachment on mesme process has superseded the law of distreas. 3 Pick. Mass. 105, 360 ; 4 Dane, Abr. 126. The state of New York has expressly abolished it by atatuto. The courts of North Caroling hold it to he inconaistent with the apirit of ber lawa and government, and declare that the common process of distress does not exist in that state. 2 M'Cord, So. C. 39 ; Cam. & N. No. C. 22 . In Georgia it is limited to the cities of Savannah and Augusta; while in Ohio, Alabama, and Tennessee there are no statutory provisions on the subject, except in the former state to secure to the landlord a share of the crops in preference to an execution creditor. Griffith, Law Reg. 404; Aiken, Dig. 357. Mississippi has abolished it by statute; but property cannot be taken in exccution on the premises unlees a year's rent, if it be due, is first tendered to the landlord. And in Louisiana the landlord may follow goods removed from his premisea for fiftecn days after remoral, provided they continue to be the property of the teannt. La. Civ. Code, 2675.
4. To authorize a distress for rent there must be an actual demise, and not a mere agreement for one, at a certain fixed rent, payable either in money, in produce, or by services. But a parol demise will be sufficient, and the terms, although not immediately obvious, may be capable of being reduced to a certainty. Coke, Litt. $96 a ; 9$ Wend. N. Y. 322 ; 3 Penn. St. 31; 1 Bay, So. C. 315. Thus, an agreement that the lessee shall pay no rent, provided he make repairs, and the value of the repairs is uncertain, would not authorize the landlord to distrain. Add. Penn. 347. Bnt where the rent is a certain quantity of grain, the landlord may distrain for so many bushels in arrear, and name the value, in order that if the goods should not be replevied, or the arrears tendered, the officer may know what amount of money is to be raised by the sale; and in such case the tenant may tender the arrears in grain. 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 52. See 3 Watts & S. Penn. 531.
5. A distress can only be taken for rent in arrear, and not, therefore, until the day after it is due; unless by the terms of the leaso it is made payable in advance. 4 Cow. N. Y. 516; 3 Munf. Va. 277. But no previous demand of rent is necessary, except where the conditions of the lease require it. Nor will the right be extinguished either by an unsatisfied judgment for the rent or by taking a promissory note therefor, unless such note has been accepted in absolute payment of the rent. 5 Hill, N. Y. 651; 3 Penn. St. 490.
6. It may be taken for any kind of rent the detention of which beyond the day of payment is injurious to him who is entitled to receive it. At common law, the distrainer must have possessed a reversionary interest in the premises out of which the distress issued, unless he had expressly reserved a power to distrain when he parted with the reversion. 2 Cow. N. Y. 652; 16 Johns. N. Y. 159; 1 Term, 441; Coke, Litt. 143 b. But the English statute of 4 Geo. II. c. 28 substantially abolished all distinctions between rents, and gave the remedy in all cases where rent is reserved upon a lease. The effeot of the statute was to separate the right of distress from the reversion to which it had before been incident, and to place every species of rent upon the same tooting as if the power of distress had been expressly reserved in each case. This statute has been enacted in most of the United States. Taylor, Landl. & T. 8560.
\%. As to the different classes of persons who may distrain, it is held that each one of several joint tenants may distrain for the whole rent and account to the others for their respective shares thereof, or they may all join together for the purpose. 4 Bingh. 562; 2 Ball & B. Ch. Ir. 465. But tenants in common have several estates, and each one may distrain for his separate share, 1 MoClel. & Y. Exch. 107; Croke Jac. 611; Colje, Litt. 317; unless the rent be of an entire thing, as of a house, in which case they must all join, as the subject-matter is inoapable of division. Coke, Litt. 197 a; 5 'Ferm, 246.
8. A husband as tenant by the curtesy distrains for rent due to his wife, although it may be due to her as an executrix or administratrix. 2 Saund. 195; 1 Ld. Raym. 369. A widow after her dower has been admeasured may distrain for her third of the rent. Coke, Litt. 32 a. So may an heir at law, or advisee, fur that which becomes due to them respectively, after the death of the aucestor, in respect to their reversionary estate. 5 Cow. N. Y. 501 ; 1 Saund. 287. So of guardians, trustees, or agents who make leases in their own names, as well as the assignee of the reversion which is subject to a lease. 2 Hill, N. Y. 475 ; 5 Carr. & P. 379.
9. With respect to what thinge may be distrained, they are generally whatever goods may be found upon the premises, whether they belong to the tenant, an under-tenant, or to a stranger. 13 Wend. N. Y. 256; 1 Rawle, Penn. 435 ; 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 57 ; 7 Harr. & J. Md. 120 ; 4 Rand. Va. 334 ; 1 Bail. So. C. 497; Comyns, Dig. Distress (B1).

Thus, it has been held that a gentleman's chariot which stood in a coach-house belonging to a common livery-stable keeper was distrainable by the landlord for the rent due him by the livery-stable keeper for the coachhouse. 3 Burr. 1498. Or if cattle are put on the tenant's land by consent of the owners of the beasts, they are distrainable by the landlord immediately after for rent in arrear. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 8. And the necessily of this rule is justified by the consideration that the rights of the landiord would be liable to be defeated by a great variety of frauds and collusions, if his remedy should be restricted to such goods enly as he could prove to be the property of the tenant.
10. There are, however, a great variety of things which, for obvious reasons, are privileged from distress, either by statute or at common law. Thus, the goods of a person who has some interest in the land jointly with the distrainor, as those of a joint ienant, although found upon the land, cannot be distrained. The goods of executors and aciministrators, or of the assignee of an insolvent regularly discharged according to law, cannot in Pennsylvania le distrained for more than one year's rent. Nor can the gocds of a former tenant, rightfully on the land, be distrained for ancther's rent. For example, a tenant at will, if quitting upon notice from his landlord, is entitled to the emblements, or growing crops; and therefcre, even after they are reaped, if they remain on the land for the purpose of husbandry, they cannot be distrained for rent due by the second tenant. Willes, 131. And they are equally protected in the hands of a vendee; for they cannct be distrained although the purchaser allow them to remain uncut after they hare come to maturity. 2 Ball & B. Ch. Ir. 362; 5 J. B. Moore, 97.
11. As every thing which is distrained is presumed to le the property of the tenant, it will follow that things wherein he can have no absolute and valuable property, as cats, dogs, rabbits, and all animals feree naturce, cannot be distrained. Yet if deer, which are of a wild nature, are kept in a private enclosure for the purpose of sale or profit, this so far changes their nature, by reducing them to a kind of stock or merchandise, that they may be distrained for rent. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 7. Nor can such things as cannot be restored to the owner in the same plight as when they were taken, as milk, fruit, and the like, he distrained. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 9. So thinge affixed or annexed to the freehold, as furnacers, windows, doors, and the like, cannot be distrained, because they are not personal chattels, but belong to the realty. Coke, Litt. 47 b . And this rule extends to such things as are essentially a part of the freehold although for a time removed therefrem, as a millstone remored to be picked; for this is matter of necessity, and still remains, in contemplation of law, part of the freebold. For the same reason, an anvil fixed in a smith's shop cannot be distrained. Brooke, Abr. Distress, pl. 23 ; 4 Term, 567 ; Willes, 512; 6 Price, Exch. 3; 2 Chitt. Bail. 167.
12. Goods are also privileged in cases where the proprietor is either compelled from neccesity to place his goods upon the land, or where he does so for commercial purposes. 17 Sorg. \& R. Penn. 139; 7 Watts \& S. Penn. 302; 8 id. 302 ; 4 Halst. N. J. $110 ; 1$ Bay, So. C. 102,170 ; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 39 ; 3 Ball \& B. 75 ; 6 J. B. Moore, 243; 8 id. 254; 1 Bingh. 283; 2 Carr. \& P. 353; 1 Crompt. \& M. Exch. 380. In the first case, the goods are exempt because the owner has no option: hence the goods of a traveller in an inn are exempt from distress. 7 Hen . VII. M $1, \mathrm{p}$. 1; Hammond, Nisi P. 380 a; 2 Keny. 439; Barnes, 472 ; 1 W. Blackst. 483; 3 Burr. 1408. In the other, the interests of the conmunity require that commerce should be encouraged; and adventurers will not engage in speculations if the property embarked is to be made liable for the payment of debts they never contracted. Hence goods landed at a wharf, or deposited in a warchouse on storage, cannot be distrained. 17 Serg \& R . Penn. 138; 5 Whart. Penn. 9, 14; 21 Me. 47; 23 Wend. N. Y. 462. Valuable things in the way of trade are not liable to distress: as, a horse standing in a smith's shop to be shod, or in a common inn, or cloth at a tailor's house to be made into a coat, or corn sent to a mill to be ground; for those are privileged and protected for the benefit of trade. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 8. On the same principle, it has beon decided that the goods of a boarder are not liable to be distrained for rent due by the keeper of a boarding-house, 5 Whart. Pcnn. 9 , unless used by the tenant with the boarder's consent and without that of the landlord. 1 Hill, N. Y. 565.
13. Goods taken in execution cannot be distrained. The law in some states gives the landlord the right to claim payment out of the proceeds of an execution for rent not exceeding one year, and he is entitled to payment up to the day of seizure, though it be in the middle of a quarter, 2 Yeates, Penn. 274 ; 5 Binn. Penn. 505 ; but he is not entitled to the day of sale. 5 Binn. Penn. 505. See 18 Johns. N. Y. 1. The usual practice is to give notice to the sheriff that there is a certain sum due to the landlord as arrears of rent,-which notice ought to be given to the sheriff, or person who takes the goods in execution upon the premises; for the sheriff is not bound to find out whether rent is due, nor is he liable to an action unless there has been a demand of rent before the removal. 1 Strange, 97, 214; 3 Taunt. 400; 2 Wils. 140; Comyns, Dig. Rent (D 8) ; 11 Johns. N. Y. 185. This notice can be given by the immediate landlord only. A ground-landlord is not ontitled to his rent out of the goods of the under-tenant taken in execution. 2 Strange, 787. And where there are two executions, the landlord is not entitled to a year's rent on each. See 2 Strange, 1024. Goods distrained and replevied may be distrained by another landlord for subsequent rent. 2 Dall. Penn. 68.
14. By special acts of some of the legislatures, it is provided that tools of a man's trade, some designated household furniture, school-books, and the like, shall be exempted from distress, execution, or sale. And by a recent act of assembly of Pennsylvania, April 9, 1849, property to the value of three hundred dollars, exclusive of all wearingapparel of the defendant and bis family, and all Bibles and school-bcoks in use in the family, are exempted from levy and sale on execution or by distress for rent.
15. Besides the above-mentioned goods and chattels which are abselutely privileged from distress, there are others which are conditionally so, but which may be distrained under certain circumstances. These arebeasts of the plough, which are exempt if there be a sufficient distress besides on the land whence the rent issues, Ccke, Litt. 47 a; Bacon, Abr. Distress, B; implements of trade, as a loom in actual use, where there is a sufficient distress besides, 4 Term, 565 ; other things in actual use,-as a horse whereon a person is riding, an axe in the liands of a person cutting weod, and the like. Coke, Litt. $47 a$.
16. At common law a distress could not be made after the expiration of the leare. To remedy this evil, the legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act making it "lawful for any person having any rent in arrear or due upon any lease for life or years or at will,ended or determined, to distrain for such arrears after the determination of the said respective leases, in the same manner as they might have done if such lease had not been ended: provided that such distress be made during the continuance of such lessor's title or interest." Act of March 21, 1772, s. 14, 1 Smith, Penn. Laws, 375. Similar legislative enactments exist in most of the other states. In the city and county of Philadelphia, the landlord may, under certain circumstances, apportion his rent, and distrain before it becomes due. See act of March 25,1825, s. 1 , Pamph. Laws, 114.

1\%. A distress may be made either upon or off the land. It generally follows the rent, and is, consequently, confined to the land out of which it issues. If two pieces of land, therefore, are let by two separate demises, although both be contained in one lease, a joint distress cannot be made for them; for this would be to make the rent of one issue out of the other. Rep. temp. Hardw. 245 ; 2 Strange, 1040. But where lands lying in different counties are let together by one demise at one entire rent, and it does not appear that the lands are separate from each other, one distress may be made for the whole rent. 1 Ld. Raym. 55; 12 Mod. 76. And where rent is charged upon land which is afterwards held by several tenants, the grantee or landlord may distrain for the whole upon the land of any of them; hecause the whole rent is deemed to issue out of every part of the land. Rolle, Abr. 671. If there be a house on the land, the distress may be made in the house; if the outer door or window be open, a distress may be taken out of it. Rolle, Abr. 671. If an outer door be open, an inner door may be broken for the purpose of taking a distress, but not otherwise. Comb. 47 ; Cas. temp. llard. 168. Barges on a river, attaehed to the leased premises (a wharf) by ropes, cannot be distrained. 6 Bingh. 150.
18. By the 5 th and 6th sections of the Pennsylvania act of assembly of March 21, 1772 , copied from the 11 Geo. Il. c. 19 , it is enacted that if any tenant for life, years, at will, or otherwise, shall fraudulently or clandestinely convey his goods off the premiscs to prevent the landlord from distraining the same, sueh person, or any person by him lawfully authorized, may, within thirty days after such conveyanee, seize the same, wherever they shall be found, and dispose of them in such manner as if they had been distrained on the premises. Provided that the landlord shall not distrain any goods which shall have been previously sold, bon $\hat{0}$ fide and for a valuable consideration, to one not privy to the fraud. To bring a case within the aet, the removal must take place after the rent becomes due, aud must be secret, not made in open day; for such removal cannot be said to be clandestine within the meaning of the act. 3 Esp. Nisi P. $15 ; 12$ Scrg. $\& \mathrm{R}$. Penn. 217; 7 Bingh. 48; 1 Mood. \& M. 535. This English statute has been re-enacted iu most of the states. It has, however, been made a question whether gools are protected that were fraudulently removed on the night before the rent had become due. 4 Campb. 135. The goods of a stranger eannot be pursued: they can be distrained only while they are on the premises. 1 Dall. Ponn. 440.
19. A distress for rent may be inade either by the person to whom it is due, or, which is the preferable mode, by a constable, or bailiff, or other offieer properly authorized by him. If made by a constable, it is necessary that he should be properly authorized to make it; for whieh purpose the landlord should give him a written authority, or, as it is usually called, a warrant of distress; but a sulbsequent assent and recognition given by the party for whose use the distress has been made is sufficient. Hammond, Nisi P. 382.

Being thus provided with the requisite authority to make a distress, he seizes the tenant's goods, or some of them in the name of the whole, and declares that he takes them as a distress for the sum expressed in the warrant to be due by the tenant to the landlord, and that he takes them by virtue of the said warrant; which warrant he ought, if required, to show. 1 Leon. 50. Whem making the distress, it ought to be made for the whole rent; but if goods cannot be found at the time sufficient to satisfy the whole, or the party mistake the value of the thing distrained, he may make a second distress. Bradb. 129, $130 ; 2$ Troubat & H. Praet. 155. It must be taken in the daytime after sunrise and lefore sunset; except for damage feasant, whieh may be in the night. Coke, Litt. 142 a.
20. As soon as a distress is made, an inventory of the goods should be made, and a copy of it delivered to the tenant, together with a notice of taking sueh distress, with the eause of taking it, and an opportunity thus afforded the owner to replevy or redeem the goods. This notice of taking a distress is not required by the statute to be in writing; and, therefore, parol or verbal notice may le given either to the tenant on the premises, or to the owner of the goods distrained. 12 Mod. 76. And although notice is directed by the act to specify the cause of taking, it is not material whether it accurately state the period of the rent's beeoming due, Dougl. 279 , or even whether the truc cause of taking the goods be expressed therein. 7 Term, 654. If the notice be not personally given, it should be left in writing at the tenant's house, or, according to the directions of the act, at the mansion-couse, or other most notorious place on the premises charged with the rent distrained for.
21. The distrainor may leave or impound the distress on the premises for the five days mentioned in the act, but becomes a trecpasser after that time. 2 Dall. Penn. 69. As in many eases it is desirable, for the sake of the tenant, that the goods shculd not be sold as soon as the law permits, it is usual for him to sign an agreement or consent to their remaining on the premises for a longer time, in the custody of the distrainor, or of a person by him appointed for that purpose. While in his possession, the distrainor carnot use or work eattle distrained, unless it be for the owner's benefit, as to milk a eow, or the like. 5 Dane, Abr. 34.
22. Before the goods are sold, they must be appraised by two reputable freelielders, who shall take an oath or affirmation, to be administered by the sheriff, under-sheriff, or coroner, in the words mentioned in the act. The next requisite is to give six days' public notice of the time and place of sale of the things distrained; after whieh, if they have net been replevied, they may be sold by the proper officer, who may apply the proceeds to the payment and satisfaction of the rent, and the expenses of the distress, appraisement, and sale. The overplus, if any, is to be paid to the tenant. A distramor has always been held strictly accountable for any irregularity he might commit, although aeeidental, as well as for the taking of any thing more than was reasonably required to satisfy the demand. Bradby, Dist.; Gilbert, Rent; Tayler, Landl. & T.

DISTRESS INFINITE. In English Practice. A process commanding the slieriff to distrain a person from time to time, and continually afterwards, by taking his gocds by way of pledge to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon. In this case no distress can be immoderate, because, whatever its value may be, it cannot be sold, but is to be immediately restored on satisfaction being made. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 231. It was the means anciently resorted to to compel an appearance. See Attachment; Arrest.

DIsTRIBUTION. In Practice. The division by order of the court having authority, among those entitled thereto, of the residue of the personal estate of an intestate, after payment of the debts and charges.
/ The term sometimes denotes the division of a residue of both real and personal estate, and also the division of an estate according to the terms of a will.
2. The title to real estate vests in the heirs by the death of the owner; the legal title to personal estate, by such death, vests in the executor or administrator, and is transferred to the persons beneficially interested, by the distribution. 4 Conn. 347.
The law of the domicil of the decedent governs in the distribution of his personal estate, unless otherwise provided by statute. See Domral ; Conflict of Laws. In Alabama, Arkansas, California, Conneeticut, Florid!, Georyia, Illinois, Indiann, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pemsyluania, South Curolina, Texas, snd Vermont, the rules for the distribution of personal property are, hy statute, the same as those of the descent of real estate, where no distinction is made between real estate ancestral and non-ancestral, and, where such distinction is mude, of resl estate non-ancestral. In Delaware, by statute, the residue of the estate of a deceased person, after the payment of all legal demands and charges, must be distrihuted to and among the children of the intestate and the lawful issue of such children who may bave died before the intestate. If there be none such, then to and among the brothers snd sisters of the intestate of the whole blood, and the lawful issue of such of them as may have died before the intestate. If there be none such, then to the father of the intestate, or, if he be dead, to the mother. If they be both dead, then to and among the next of kin to the intestate, in equal degrees, and to lawful issue of such kin as shall have died before the intestate. Provided that if the intestate be a marricd womsn at the time of her death, her husbend shall be entitled to the whole residue, or, if the intestate leave a widow, she shall be entitled nbsolutely, if there be issue of the intestate, to one-third part of such residue; or if there be no such issue, but hrothers, sisters, or other kin, to one-half part such residue; or, if there be no kin to the intestate, to the whole of such residue.
4. Distribution among children, brothers, or other kin in equal degree, must be in equal portions; but the issue of such of them as shall have died before the intestate shall take according to stocks, by right of representation; and this rule holds although the distrihution be entirely smong such issue. Del. Laws (1852), 304.

In Maryland, it is provided that when all the debts of an intestate, exhihited sad proved, ©r notified and not barred, shall have been discharged, or settled and sllowed to he retained, ss bercin directed, the adminstratur shall 1 roceed to ruke distribution of the surplus as follows. If the intestate leave a widow, and no child, psrent, grandehild, brother, or sister, or the child of a brother or sister, of the said intestate, the said widow shall be entitled to the whole. If there be a widow and $a$ child or obildren, or a deseendant ur descendants from a child, the widow shall bave oue-third only. If there be a widow and no cbild, or descendants, of the intestate, but the said intestate shall leave a father, or mother, or brother, or sister, or child of a brother or sister, the widow shall have onc-half. The surplus, exclnsive of the widow's share, or the whale surplus, if there be no widow, shall go as follows.
5. If there be children sud no other descendant, the surplus shall be divided equally amongst them. If there be a child or children, and a child or children of a decensed child, the child ur children of such decessed child shall take such share as his, her, or their deceased pisent would, if alive, he entitled to; and every other derecndant or other descendants in existence at the death of the intestate shall stand in the place of his, ber, or their deceased ancestor: provided that if any child or desecndsnt shall have been advanced by the intertate ly settlement or portion, the same shall be reekoned in the surplus, and if it he equsl or supcrior to a share; such ehild or descendarit shall be cachuded; but the widow shall have no udvantage by bringing such advancement into reckoning; and maintenance, or edncation, or moncy given withont a view to a portion or settlement in life, shall not be decmed advancement; and in ail osses those in equal degree, elsiming in the place of sn ancester, shall take equal shares. If there be a father snd no child or descendant, the father shall have the whole. If there be a brother or sister, or child or descendant of a brother or sistr, and no child, desecndant, or father of the intcstate, the said brother, sister, or child, or descendant of a brother or sister, shall have the whole. Every brother and sister of the intestate shall be entitled to an equal share; and the child or children of a brother or eister of the intestate shall stand in the place of such brother or sister. If the intestate leave a mother and no child, descendant, father, brother, sister, or child or descendsnt of a brother or sister, the mother shall be entitled to the whole; snd in ease there be no father, a mother shall have sn equal share with the brothers and sisters of the deceased, and their children and descendants.
6. After children, descendants, father, mother, brothers, snd sisters of the dectased and their descendants, all collateral relations in equal degree shall take; and no representation amongst such collatersls shall be allowed; snd there shall be no distinction between the whole and half blood. If there be no collaterals, a grandfather may take; and if there be two grandfathers, they shall take alike; and a grandmother, in case of the death of her husband the grandfather, shall take as be might have done. If any person entitled to distribution shall die before the ssme be msde, his or her share shall go to his or her representatires. Posthumous children of intestates shall take in the same manner $s s$ if they bad been born before the decease of the intestate; but no other posthumons relation sball be considered ss entitled to distribution in his or her own right. If there be no relations of the intestate within the fifth degree,-which degree shall be reckoned by counting down from the common ancestor to the more remote,--the whole surplus shall belong to the state, to be applied as the legislature shall hereafter direet, saving to the dif-fircnt schools in this state tha rights which, by existing laws, they now respectively possess. Dursey, Md. Lams (1798), 401.

DISTRICT. A certain portion of the country, separated from the rest for some special purposes.

The Unitcd States are divided into judicial districts, in each of which is established a district court; they are also divided into election districts, collceticn districts, etc.

DISTRICT ATTORNEYS OF THE
UNITED STATES. Officers appuinted in cach judicial district, whose duty it is to prosccute, in such district, all delinquents, fcr crimes and offences cognizable under the authority of the United States, and all civil actions in which the United States shall be concerned, except in the suprcme ecourt, in the district in which the court shall be holden.

DISTRICT COURT. See Courts of the United States, $\ddagger \%$ 68-94, and the articles on the rarious states.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. A portion of the cuuntry, originally ten miles square, which was ceded to the United States by the states of Virginia and Maryland, over which the national government has exclusive jurisdiction.

Under the constitution, enngress is outhorized to "excreise exclusive jurisdietion in all cases whatsoever, cver such district, not exceeding tea miles square, as may, by eession of particular states and the acceptance of eongress, heeome the seat of government of the United States." In pursuanee of this authurity, the states of Maryland and Virginia ceded to the United States a small territory on the biaks of the Potemace, and eongress, by the act of July 16, 1790, вecepted the same, for the permanent seat of the goverament of the United States.

By the act of July 11, 1846, eongress retroceded the county of Alexandria, part of the Distriet of Columbia, to the state of Virginia.

The scat of government was removed from Philadelphia to the district in December, 1800. As it exists at present, it constitutea but one county, called the ecunty of Washington.

It seems that the Distriet of Columbia ond the territorial districts of the United Ststes are not states within the meaning of the eonstitution and of the Judiciary Aet, so as to enable a citizen thercof to sue a citizen of one of the atates in the federal courts. 2 Cranch, 445 ; 1 Wheat. 91.

The Judicial Power.

The supreme court eonsists of four justices, appointed by the president of the United States, who hold office during good behavior. Of these, one is appointed as chief justice.
The supreme court possesses the powers formerly possessed hy the circuit court for the district, and the judges severally possess the powers formerly possessed and exercised by the judges of the circuit court. Any one of said judges may also hold a district court of the United States for the Distriat of Columbia, with the powers and jurisdiction possessed and excroised by other district courts of the United States. Any one of said justices may also hold a criminal court for the trial of all crimes and offences arising within said district, with the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the criminal court for the district.
Provision is made for holding general terms by three of the justices, and special terms hy one of the justices. Jury trials, and equity eases in which no jury is had, are also to he had at these special terms, except in certain cases.
The circuit court, district court, and criminal courts for the district are abolished, and the causes transferred to the supreme court. 13 U. S. Stat. at Large, 762.
Appeals from the decision of the commissioner of patents may he made to either of the judges. 10 Stat. at Large, 75. Appeals and writs of error lie from this court to the supreme court, where the matter in dispute is of the value of one thousand dollars or upwards, exclusive of costs, or where a judge of the supreme csurt may direct an appeal or writ of error, if the matter in dispute shall he of the value of one hundred dollars, exclusire of costs. The chief justice of'this court is also authorized to deliver up fugitivos from justice, or persons fleeing from service, in the same manner as the executive authority of the several states is required to do. It exercises an appellate criminal jurisdiction.
The orphans' court and the register's court onnsist each of ooe judge, appointed by the president and scnate, to hold his office during good behavior. Thoy have cognizance of all matters relating to tha probate of wills, administration and management of the estates of decedents, and care of minors, including the appointment and regulation of the conduct of guardians. An appeal lies from their decisions to the circuit court. Law, U. S. Courts, 238. See 14 Pet. 33; 15 id. 1.
Levy courts are courts of limited jurisdiotion, composed of the magistrates of the district. Thes, courts possess and exorcise the same powers and perform the same duties and receive the same fces and emoluments as thelevy courts or commissioners of county for the state of Maryland. Law, U. S. Coarts, 240.
Justiceg' courts may also he held by justices of the peace. See Act 1801, c. 15; 1823, c. 24; 1841, f. 11; 3 Cranch, 331.

DISTRINGAS. A writ directed to the sheritf, commanding him to distrain a person of his goods and chattels to enforce a compliance with what is required of him.

It is used to compel an appearance where the party cannot be found, and in equity may be availed of to compel the appearance of a corporation aggregate. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4191 ; Comyns, Dig. Process (D 7) ; Chitty, Pract.; Sellon, Pract.

A form of execntion in the actions of detinue and assize of nuisance. Brooke Abr. pl. 26 ; 1 Rawle, Penn. 44.

DISTRINGAS JURATORES (Lat. that you distrain jurors). A writ commanding the sheriff to have the bodies of the jurors, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 354. It issues at the same time with the venire, though in theory afterwards, founded on the supposed neglect of the juror to attend. 3 Stephen, Comm. 590.

DISTRINGAS NUPER VICE COMITUM (Lat. that you distrain the late sheriff). A writ to distrain the goods of a sheriff who is out of office, to compel him to bring in the body of a defendant, or to sell goods attached under a f. fa., which he ought to have done while in office, but has failed to do. 1 Tidd, Pract. 313.

DISTURBANCE. A wrong done to an incorporeal hereditanent by hindering or disquieting the owner in the enjoyment of it. Finch, 187 ; 3 Blackstone, Cumm. 235; 1 Swift, Dig. 522 ; Comyns, Dig. Action upon the Case, Pleader (3 I 6); 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 298 ; 41 Me .104 . The remedy for a disturbance is an action on the case, or, in some instances in equity, by an injunction.

DISTURBANCE OF COMMON. Any act done by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or hindered. The remedy is by distress (where beasts are put on his common) or by action on the case, provided the damages are large enough to admit of his laying an action with a per quod. Croke Jac. 195; Coke, Litt. 122; 3 Blackstone, Cumm. 237; 1 Saund. 546 ; 4 Term, 71.

DISTURBANCE OF FRANCEISE.

Any acts done whereby the owner of a franchise has his property damnified or the profits arising thence diminished. The remedy for such disturbance is a special action on the case. Croke Eliz. 558; 2 Saund. 113 b; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 236; 28 N. H. 438.

Equity will grant an injunction against disturbance of a franchise in certain cases. Adams, Eq. $211 ; 6$ Paige, Ch. N. Y. 554; 12 Pet. 91 ; 8 Gill & J. Md. 479.

DISTURBANCE OF PATRONAGE.

 The hindrance or obstruction of the patron to present his clerk to a benefice. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 242. The principal remedy was a writ of right of advowson; and there were also writs of darrein presentment, and of quare impedit. Coke, 2d Inst. 355 ; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 31.DISTURBANCE OF TENURE. Breaking the connection which subsists between lord and tenant. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 242 ; 2 Stephen, Cumm. 513.

DISTURBANCE OF WAYS. This happens where a person who hath a right of way over another's ground by grant or prescription is obstructed by enclosures or other obstacles, or by ploughing acrose it, by which means he cannot enjoy his right of way, or at least in so commodious a manner as he might have done. 3 Sharswood, Blacket. Comm. 242; 5 Gray, Mass. 409; 7 Md. 352; 23 Penn. St. 348; 29 id .20.

DITTAY. In Scotch Law. A technical term in civil law, signifying the matter of charge or ground of indictment against a person accused of crime. Taking up dittay is obtaining informations and presentments of crime in order to trial. Skene, de verb, sig.; Bell, Dict.
DIVIDEAND. A portion of the principal or profits divided among several owners of a thing.
The term is usually applied to the division of the profits arising out of bank or other stoeks, or to the division among the creditors of the effeets of an inselvent estate.

In another sense, according to some old authorities, it signifies one part of an indenture.

DIVISIBLE. That which is susceptible of being divided.

A contract cannot, in general, be divided in sueh a manner that an action may be brought, or a right accrue, on a part of it. 2 Penn. 454. But some contracts are susceptible of division: as, when a reversioner sells a part of the reversion to one man and a part to another, each shall have an action for his share of the rent which may accrue on a contract to pay a particular rent to the reversioner. 3 Whart. Penn. 404. See Apportionment. But when it is to do several things at several times, an action will lie upon every default. I5 Pick. Mass. 409. See 1 Me. 316; 6 Mass. 344.

DIVISION. In English Law. A particular and ascertained part of a county. In Lincolushire division means what riding does in Yorkshire.

DIVISION OF OPINION. Disagreement among those called upon to decide a matter.

When, in a company or society, the parties having a right to vote are so divided that there is not a plurality of the whole in favor of any particular proposition, or when the voters are equally divided, it is said there is division of opinion. The term is especially applied to a disagreement among the judges of a court such that no decision can be rendered upon the matter referred to them.

When the judges of a court are divided into three classes, each holding a different opinion, that class which has the greatest number shall give the judgment: for example, on a habeas corpus, when a court is composed of four judges, and one is for remanding the prisoner, another is for discharging him on his own recognizance, and the two others are for discharging him absolutely, the judgment will be that he be discharged. Rudyard's Case; Bacon, Abr. Habeas Corpus ( B 10 ), Court, 5 . When a division of opinion exists in the United States circuit court, the cause may be certified to the supreme court for decision. Act of Congr. April 29, I802, & 6. See Courts of the United States; Circuit Court.

DIVORCE. The dissolution or partial suspension, by law, of the marriage relation.

The dissolution is termed diverce from the bond af matrimony, or, in the Latin form of the expression, a vinculo matrimauiz; the suspension, divurce from bed snd hoard, a mensa et thoro. The former divoree puts an end to the marriage; the latter lesves it in full foree. Bishup, Marr. & Div. & 292. The term divoree is sometinues also applied to a sentence of nullity, which establighes that a sur:posed or pretended marriage cither never existed at all, or at least was voidable at the election of one or both of the parties.

The more correct modern ussge, however, confines the signification of divorce to the dissolution of a valid narriage. What has been known as a divoree a measa et thora msy more properly be termed a legal separation. So slso a sentence or decree which renders a marriage void ab intio, and hsstardizes the issue, should be distinguished from one which is entirely prospeetive in its operation; and for that purpose the former may be termed a sentenee of nullity. The present article will aeeordingly be confined to divorce in the strict aceeptatiou of the term. For the other hranches of the subject, see Sefarationa Mensa et Thoro; Nullity of Marriage.
2. Marriage being a legal relation, and not (as sometimes supposed) a mere contract, it can ouly be dissolved by legal anthority. The relation originates in the consent of the parties, but, once entered into, it must continue until the death of either husband or wife, unless sooner put an end to by the sovereign power. Bishop, Marr. \& Div. c. 3. In England, until recently, no authority existed in any of the judicial courts to grant a divorce in the strict sense of the term. The subject of marriage and divoree generally belonged exclusively to the various ecclesiastical courts; and they were in the constant habit of granting what were ternied divorces a mensa et thoro, for rarious causes, and of pronouncing sentences of nuility; but they had no power to dissolve a marriage, valid and binding in its origin, for causes arising subsequent to its solemnization. For that purpose recourse must be had to parliament. 2 Burns, Eccl. Law (Phillim. ed.), 202. 203; Macqueen, Parl. Pract. $44^{\circ} \mathrm{et}$ seq. But by the statute of 20 \& 21 Vict. (1857) c. 85, entitled "An act to amend the law relating to divorce and matrimonial causes in England," a new court was created, to be called "The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes," upon which was conferred exclusively all jurisdiction over matrimonial matters then vested in the various ecelesiastical courts, and also the jurisdiction theretofore exercised by parliament in granting divorces.

In this country the usage has been various. Formerly it was common for the various state legislatures, like the English parliament, to grant divorces by special act. Latterly, however, this practice has fallen into disrepute, and is now much less common. In several cases, also, it has been expressly prohibited by recent state constitutions. Bishop, Marr. & Dir. c. 33. Generally, at the present time, the jurisdiction to grant divorces is conferred by statute upon courts of equity, or courts possessing equity powers, to be exercised in accordance with the general principles of equity practice, subject to such modifications as the statute may direct. The practice of the English ecclesiastical courts, which is also the foundation of the practice of the new court for divoree and matrimonial causes in England, has never been adopted to any considerable extent in this country. Bishop, Marr. & Div. & 28, and note.
3. Numerous and difficult questions are constantly arising in regard to the validity in one state of divorces granted by the courts or legislature of another state. The subject is fuliy and ably treated in Bisbop on Marriage and Divorce, c. 32. The learned author there states the following propositions, which he elaborates with great care:-first, the tribunals of a country have no jurisdiction over a cause of divorce, wherever the offence may have occurred, if neither of the parties has an actual bonâ fide donicil within its territory; secondly, to entitle the court to take jurisdiction, it is sufficient for one of the parties to be domiciled in the country; both need not be, neither need the citation, when the domiciled party is plaintiff, be served personally on the defendsnt, if such personal service cannot be nade; thirdly, the place where the offence was committed, whether in the country in which the suit is brought or a foreign country, is immaterial ; fourthly, the domicil of the parties at the time of the offence committed is of no consequence, the jurisdiction depending on their domicil when the proceeding is instituted and the judgment is rendered; $f f t h l y$, it is immaterial to this question of jurisdiction in what country or under what system of divorce laws the marriage was celebrated. It should be observed, however, that the last proposition but one is not sustained by suthority in Pennsylvania and New Hampshire, it being held in those states that the tribunals of the country alone where the parties were domiciled when the delictum occurred hare jurisdiction to grant a divorce. 7 Watts, Penn. 349; 8 Watts & S. Penn. 251; 6 Penn. St. 449; 34 N. H. 518 , and cases there cited; 35 id. 474 . And for the law of Louisiana, see 9 La. Ann. 317. In Pennsylvania, the rule has been changed by statute of 26 th April, 1850, & 5. See 30 Penn. St. 412, 416. Andin regard to the second proposition it is to be observed that without personal citation within the state the divorce is not of binding effect in any other state. See Conflict of Laws; Domicil, $& 11$.
4. It was never the practice of the English parliament to grant a divorce for any other cause than adultery; and it was the general rule to grant it for simple adultery only when committed by the wife, and upon the application of the husbend. To entitle the wife, other circumstauces must ordinarily concur, simple adultery committed by the husband not being sufficient. Marqueen, Parl. Pract. 473 et seq. The recent English statute of $20 \& 21$ Vict. c. 85 , before referred to, prescribes suhstantially the same rule,-it being provided, $\frac{8}{2} 27$, that the husband may apply to bave his marriage dissolved "on the ground that his wife has, since the celebration thereof, bcen guilty of adultery," and the wife, "on the ground that, since the celebration thereof, her husband has been guilty of incestuous bigamy, or of bigamy with adultery, or of rape, or of sodomy, or bestiality, or of adultery coupled with such cruelty as without adultery would have entitled her to a divorce a mensa et thoro, or of adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable excuse, for two years or upwards."

In this country the question depends upon the statutes of the several states, the provisions of which are far from uniform. In South Carolina, a divorce is not allowed for any cause; in New York, only for adultery; but in most of the states it is sllowed for several causes, e.g. adultery, cruelty, wilful desertion for a specified period, habitual drunkenness, etc. In some of the states, slso, the matter is left, wholly or in part, to the discretion of the court. See Bishop, Marr. & Div. c. 26 . For more specific information, recourse must be had to the statutes of the several states.
5. Some of the principal defences in suits for divorce are,-Connivance, or the corrupt consent of a party to the conduct in the other party whereof he afterwards complains. This bars the right of divorce, because no injury was received; for what a man has consented to he cannot say was an injury. Bishop, Marr. \& Div. $\mathrm{Z}_{3} 332$. Collusion. This is an agreement between husband and wife for one of them to commit, or appear to commit, a breach of matrimonial duty, for the purpose of ensbling the other to obtain the legal remedy of divorce, as for a real injury. Where the act has not leen done, collusion is a real or attempted fraud upon the court; where it has, it is also a species of connivance: in either case it is a bar to any claim for divorce. Bishop, Marr. \& Div. 850. Condonation, or the conditional forgiveness or remission by the husband or wife of a matrimonial offence which the other has committed. While the condition remains unlroken, condonation, on whatever motive it proceeded, is an absolute bar to the remedy for the particular injury condoned. Bishop, Marr. \& Div. \&3254. For the nature of the condition, and other matters, see Condonstron. Recrimination. This is a defence arising from the complainant's being in like guilt. With the one of whom he complains. It is incompetent for one of the parties to a marriage to come into court and complain of the other's violation of matrimonial duties, if the party complaining is guilty likewise. When the defendant sets up such riolation in answer to the plaintiff's suit, this is called, in the matrimonial law, recrimination. Bishop, Marr. \& Div. \& 389.

The foregoing defences, though available in all divorce csuses, are more frcquently applicable where a divorce is sought on the ground of adultery.
6. The consequences of divorce aro such as flow from the sentence by operation of law, or flow from either the sentence or the proceeding by reason of their heing directly ordered by the court and set down of record. Bishop, Marr. & Div. 8548 . In regard to the former, they are chiefly such as result immediately and necessarily from the definition and nature of a divoree. Being a dissolution of the marriage relation, the parties have no longer any of the rights, nor are subject to any of the duties, pertaining to that relation. They are henceforth single persons to all intents and purposes. It is true that the statutes of some of the states contain provisions disabling the guilty party from marrying again; but these are in the nature of peual regulations, collateral to the divorce, and whieh leave the latter in full foree. Bishop, Marr. & Div. 88 655-659.
\%. In regard to rights of property as between husband and wife, a sentence of divoree leaves them as it finds them. Consequently, all transfers of property which were actually executed, either in law or fact, continue undisturbed: for example, the personal estate of the wife, reduced to possession by the husband, remains his after the divorce the same as before. But it puts an end to all rights depending upon the marriage and not actually vested: as, dower in the wife, all rights of the husband in the real estate of the wife, and his right to reduce to possession her ehoses in action. Bishop, Marr. & Div. 8660 ; 27 Miss. 630, 637; 17 Mo. 87 ; 6 Ind. $229 ; 6$ Watts & S. Penn. 85, 88; 4 Harr. Del. 440 ; 8 Conu. 541; 10 id. 225 ; 2 Md. 429 ; 8 Mass. 99 ; 10 id. 260 ; 10 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 420,$424 ; 5$ Blackf. Ind. $309 ; 5$ Dan. Ky. 254; 6 Watts, Penn. 131. In respeet to dower, however, it should be observed that a contrary doctrine has been settled in New York, it being there held that immediately upon the marriage being solemnized the wife's right to dower becomes perfect, provided only she survives her husband. 4 Barb. N.Y. 192 ; 4 N.Y. 95 ; 6 Du. N.Y. 102, 152, 153.
8. Of those eonsequences whieh result from the direction or order of the court, the most important are-Alimony, or the allowance which a husband, by order of court, pays to his wife, living separate from him, for her maintenance. The allowance may be for her use either during the pendency of a suit,-in which ease it is called alimony pendente lite,-or after its termination, called permanent alimony. Bishop, Marr. & Div. 8549 . As will be seen from the foregoing definition, alimony, especially permanent alimony, pertains rather to a separation from bed and board than to a divorce from the bond of matrimony. Indeed, it is generally allowed in the latter case only in pursuance of statutory provisions. Bishop, Marr. & Div. \% 563. See Alimony, 8 2. It is provided by statute in several of our states that, in case of divoree, the court may order the hushand to restore to the wife, when she is the innocent party, and sometimes even when she is not, a part or the whole of the property which he received by the marriage. In some cases, also, the eourt is authorized to divide the property between the parties, this being a substitute for the allowance of alimony. For further particulars, recourse must be had to the statutes in question. See, also, Bishop, Marr. & Div. cc. 28-30.
9. The custody of children. In this country, the tribunal hearing a divoree eause is generally authorized by statute to direct, during its pendency and afterwards, with which of the parties, or with what other person, the children shall remain, and to make provision out of the husband's estate for their maintenanee. There are fow positive rules upon the subject, the matter being left to the discretion of the court, to be exercised according to the circumstances of eaeh case. The general principle is to consult the welfare of the child, rather than any supposed rights of the parents, and as between the parents to preter the innocent to the guilty. In the absence of a controlling neeessity or very strong propricty arising from the circumstances of the case, the father's claim is to be preferred. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 3d ed. 453 ; 40 N.H. 272; 16 Piek. Mass. 203 ; 3 Hill, N. Y. 299; 24 Barb. N.Y. $521 ; 27$ id. 9, and eases cited; Bishop, Marr. & Div. c. 29.

By the civil law, the child of parents divoreed is to be brought up by the innocent party at the expense of the guilty party. Ridley's View, pt. 1, e. 3, 89 , citing 8 th Collation.

DOCK. The enelosed space oecupied by prisoners in a criminal court. The epace between two wharves.

DOCKET. A formal record of judicial proceedings; a brief writing. A small piece of paper or parchment laving the effect of a larger. Blount. An alstract. Cowel.

To docket is said to be by Blacketone to abstract and enter into n book. 3 Blackstent, Conin. 397. The essential idea of a modern docket, then, is an entry in brief in a proper book of all the important acts done in court in tho condurt of each case from its commencement to its conclusion. See Colby, Pract. 154, 155.
In common use, it is the name given to the bock containing these abstracts. The name of trialdocket is given to the book containing ths cases which are liable to be tried at a speoified term of the court. The docket should cuntain the names of the parties and a minute of every proceeding in the case. It is kept by the clerk or prothonotary of the court. A sheriff's docket is not a reoord. 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 91.

DOCTORS COMMONS. An institution near St. Paul's Cathedral, where the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts are held.

In 1768 a royal charter was ohtained by virtue of which the members of the society sud their suecessors were incorporated under the name and title of "The College of Doctors of Laws exercent in the Ecclesiustioal and Admiralty Courts." The college consists of a president (the dean of the arches for the time-heing) and of those doctors of laws who, having regularly taken that degree in either of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and having been admitted advocates in pursuance of the rescript of the arohbishop of Canterbury, shall have been elected fellows of the college in the manner prescribed hy the charter.

DOCUMENTS. The deeds, agreements, title-papers, letters, receipts, and other written instiruments used to prove a fact.

In Clvil Inaw. Evidence delivered in the forms established by law, of whatever nature such evidence may be. The term is, however, applied principally to the testimony of witnesses. Saviguy, Dr. Rom. & 165.

DOG. A well-known domestic animal.
In almost all languages this word is a term or name of concumely or reproach. See 3 Bulstr. 226; 2 Mod. 260; 1 Lcon. 148; and the title Action on the Case for Defamation in the Digests; Minsheu, Dict.
2. A dog is said at common law to have no intrinsic value, and he cannot, therefore, be the subject of larceny, 4 Blackstone, Comm. 236; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 571; Bell, Cr. Cas. 36 ; but it is otherwise in England, by statute. But the owner has such property in him that he may maintain trespass for an injury to his dog, or trover for a conversion, 1 Metc. Mass. 555 ; "for a man may have property in some things which are of so base nature that no felony can be committed of them: as, of a bloodhound or mastiff." 12 Hen. 4. A man has a right to keep a dog to guard his premises, but not to put him at the entrance of his house; because a person coming there on lawful business may be injured by him ; and this, though there may be another entrance to the house. 4 Carr. & P. 297; 6 id. 1. But if a dog is chained, and a visitor so incautiously go near him that he is bitten, be has no right of action against the owner. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 154.

DOGMA. In Civil Law. This word is used in the first chapter, first section, of the second Novel, and signifies an ordinance of the senate. See, also, Dig. 27. 1.6.

DOLLAR (Germ. Thaler). The money unit of the United States.
2. It was established under the confederation by resolution of congress, July 6, 1785. This was originally represented by a silver piece only; the coinage of which was anthorized by the act of congreas of Aug. 8, 1786 . The same act also esteblished a dccimal aystem of coinage and accounts. 1 Brown & D. U. S. Laws, 646. But the coinage was not cffeoted until after the passage of the act of April 2, 1792 , establishing a mint, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 246 ; and the first coinage of dollars commenced in 1794. The law last cited provided for the coinage of "dollars or units, esch to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar, as the same was then current, and to contain three hundred and seventy-ons grains and four-sixtecnth parts of a grain of purs silver, or four hundred and sixteen grains of standard silver."
3. The Spanish dollar known to our legislation was the dollar coined in Spanish America, North and South, which was abundunt in our currency, in contradistinction to the dollar coined in Spain, which was rarely secn in the United States. The intrinsic value of the two coins was the same; hut, as a general (not invariable) distinction, the American coinage bore pillars, and the Spsnish an eacutoheon or shield : all kinda bore tho roys! effigy.
4. The milled dollar, so called, is in contradistinction to the irregular, misshapen coinage nicknamed cob, whioh a century ago was executed in the Spanish-American provinces,-chiefly Mexican. By the use of a milling machins the pieces were figured on the edge, end assumed a true circular form. The pillar dollar and the milled dollar were in effect the same in value, and, in general tarms, the same coin; though there are pillar dollars (" cobs") which ars not milled, and there are milled dollars (of Spain proper) which havo no pillars.
5. The weight and fineness of the Spanish milled and pillar dollars is eight and one-half pieces to a Castilian mark, or four hundred and seventeen and tifteen-seventeanths grains Troy. The limitation of fuar hundred and fifteen grains in our law of 1806, April 10, 2 U. S. Stat. at Large, 374, was to mact the losa by wear. The legal ficeneas of theas dollars was ten dineros, twenty granos, equal to nine hundred and two and aeveu-ninth thousandtha; the actual fineness was somewhat variable, and always below. The Spaniah deller and all othor foreign coins are ruled ont by the aot of congress of Feh. 21, 1857, 13 U. S. Stat. at Large, 1856-57, 163, they being no longer a legal tender. But the statements hereia given are aseful for the auke of comparison: moreover, many contracts still in existence provide for payment (of ground-rents, for example) in Spanish milled or pillar dollars. The following terme, or their equivalent, are frequently used in agreements made about the close of the last and the heginning of the present oentury: "silver milled dollars, each dollar weighing aeventeen pennyweighta and aix grains at least." This was equal to four hundred and fourteen graina. The stindard fineness of United States silver cein from 1792 to 1836 was fourteen huadred and eighty-five parte fine ailver in sixteen hundred and sixty-feur. Consequently, a piece of coin of four hundred and fourteen grains ahould contain three hundred and eixty-nine and forty-six huodredths grains pure silver. The market price of silver, based on the mint price, is now ona bundred and twentytwo and one-half centa in gold per onnce of feur hundred and eighty grains standard, i.e. nine-tenths fine. This is equivalent to one handrod and twenty-twe and one-half cents for four hundred and thirty-two grains of pure silver. Then, hy the rule of proportion, As 432 is to $122 \frac{1}{2}$, so is 369.46 to (aay) $\$ 1.04 .77$; which is consequently the value of the silver dollar referred to, "each dollar weighing aeventeen pennyweighta and six grains at least."
6. By the act of Jan. 18, 1837, \& 8, 5 U. S. 8tat. at Large, 187, the standard weight and fineness of the dollar of the United States was fixed as follows: "of one thousand parts by weight, nine hundred shall be of pure metal, and one hundred of alloy," the alloy to consist of copper; and it was further provided that the weight of the silver dollar ahall be four hundred and twelva and ode-half grains ( $412 \frac{1}{2}$ ).
7. The weight of the silver dollar has not been changed by subsequent legislation; but the proportionate weight of the lower denemination of ailver coins has heen diminiahed by the act of Feb. 21, 1853, 11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 160 . By this act the half-dellar (and the lower coins in proportion) is reduced io weight fourteen and one-quarter graina below the previoua coinage: ao that the ailver dollar which was embraced in this act weighs twenty-eight and one-half grains more than tioo half-dollars. The ailver dollar has, consequently, ccased to be current in the United States; hat it coatinues to be coined to supply the demanda of the West India trade and a local demand for cabinets, etc.
8. By the act of March 3, 1849, a gold dollar was authorized to be coined at the mint of the United States and the several hranchea theroof, conformably in all respects to the atandard of gold coins now established by law, except that on the reverse of the piece the figure of the eagle shall he omitted. It is of the weight of 25.8 grains, and of the fineness of uine hundred thousandths.

DOLO. The Spanish form of dolus.

DOLUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A fraudulent address or trick used to deceive some one; a fraud. Dig. 4. 3. 1. Any subtle contrivance by words or acts with a design to eircumvent. 2 Kent, Comm. 560 ; Code, 2.21.

Dolus differs from culpa in this, that the latter proceeda from an error of the understanding, while to constitute the former there must be a will or intention to do wrong. Wolffiua, Inat. & 17.

It aeems doubtful, however, whether the general use of the word dolus in the oivil law is not rather that of very great negligence, than of fraud, as uaed in the common law.

Such acts or omissions as operate as a deception upon the other party, or violate the just eonfidence reposed by him, whether there be a deceitful intent (malus animus) or not. Pothier, Traite de Depôt, nn. 23, 27; Story, Bailm. & 20 a; 2 Kent, Comm. 506, n.

DOLUS MALUS (Lat.). Fraud. Deceit with an evil intention. Distinguished from dolus bonus, justifiable or allowable deeeit. Calvinus, Lex.; Broom, Max. 349; 1 Kaufmann, Mackeld. Civ. Law, 165. Misconduct. Magna negligentia culpa est, magna culpa dolus est (great negligence is a fault, a great fault is fraud). 2 Kent, Comm. 560, n .

DOM. PROC. (Domus Procerum). The house of lords. Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.

DOMAIN. Dominion; territory governed. Possession; estate. Land about the mansionhouse of a lord. The right to dispose at our pleasure of what belongs to us.

A diatinction haa heen mada hetween property and domain. The former is said to be that quality which is conceived to be in the thing itaelf, considored as belonging to such or such person, exclusively of all others. By the latter is understood that right which the owner bas of disposiag of the thing. Hence domain and property are said to be correlative terms: the one is the active right to dispose of, the other a paasive quality which follows the thing and places it at the disposition of the owner. 3 Toullier, n. 83. But this distinction ia too subtle fur practical use. Puffendorff, Droit de la Nut. l. 4, c. 4, &2. See 1 Blackatone, Comm. 105, 106; 1 Bouvier, Inat. n. 456 ; Clef dea Lois Rom.; Domat: 1 Hill, Abr. 24 ; 2 id. 237.

DOMBOC (spelled, also, often, Dombec. Sax.). The name of eodes of laws among the Saxons. Of these king Alfred's was the most famous. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 46; 4 id. 411.

The domboc of king Alfred is not to be confounded with the domesday-book of William the Conqueror.

DOME (Sax.). Doom; sentence; judgment. An oath. The homager's oath in the black book of Hereford. Blount

DOMESDAY, DOMESDAY-BOOK (Sax.). An ancient reeord made in the time of William the Conqueror, and now remaining in the English exchequer, consisting of two volumes of unequal size, eontaining minute and aceurate surveys of the lands in England. It has been printed, also. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 49, 50 .

A varicty of ingenious accounts are given of the origin of this term by the old writers. The commoner opinion seems to be that it was so called from the fulnesa and completeness of the survey making it a day of judgment for the value, extent, and qualitiea of every piece of land. Sce Spelman, Gloss.; Blount; Termea de la Ley.
It was practically a oareful censos taken and recorded in the exchequer of the kingdom of England.

DOMESMEN (Sax.). An inferior kind of judges. Men appointed to doom (judge) in matters in controversy. Cowel. Suitors in a court of a manor in ancient demesne, who are judges there. Blount; Whishaw; Termes de la Ley.

DOMESTICS. Those who reside in the same house with the master they serve. The term does not extend to workmen or laborers employed out-of-doors. 5 Binn. Penn. 167 ; Merlin, Répert. The act of congress of April 30,1790 , s. 25 , uses the word domestic in this sense.

Formerly this word was used to designate those who resided in the house of another, however exalted their station, and who performed services for him. Voltaire, in writing to the French queen, in 1748, says, "Deign to consider, madam, that I am one of the domestics of the king, and consequently yours, my companions, the gentlemen of the king," etc.; but librarians, secretaries, and persons in such hon rable employments would not probably he considered domestics, although they might reside in the houses of their respective employers.

Pothier, to point out the distinction hetween a domestic and a servant, gives the following example :-A literary man who lives and lodges with you, solely to be your companion, that you may profit hy his conversation and learning, is your domestic ; for all who live in the same house and eat at the same table with the owner of the house are his domestics; but they are not servants. On the contrary, your valet-de-chambre, to whom you pay wages, and who sleeps out of your hnuse, is not, properly speaking, your domestic, but your servant. Pothier, Proc. Cr. sect. 2, art. 5, & 5; Pothier, Ohl. 710, 828; 9 Toullier, n. 314; H. de Pansey, Des Justices de Paix, c. 30, n. 1.

DOMICIL. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Lieber, Encyc. Am.; 10 Mass. 188 ; 11 La. 175; 5 Metc. Mass. 187 ; 4 Barb. N. Y. 505 ; Wall. Jr. C. C. 217; 9 Ired. No. C. 99; 1 Tex. 673 ; 13 Me .255 ; 27 Miss. 704; 1 Bosw. N. Y. 673 .
2. Domicil may be either national or domestic. In deciding the question of national domicil, the point to be determined will be in which of two or more distinct nationalities a man has his domicil. In deciding the matter of domestic domicil, the question is in which subdivision of the nation does the person have his domicil. Thus, whether a person is domiciled in England or France would be a question of national domicil, whether in Norfolk or Suffolk county, a question of domestic domicil. The distinction is to be kept in mind, since the rules for determining the two domicils, though frequently, are not necessarily the same. See 2 Kent, Comm 449 ; Story, Confl. Laws, 39 et seq.; Westlake, Priv. Int. Law, 15 ; Wheaton, Int. Law, 123 et seq.
3. The Romanists and civilians seem to attach about equal importance to the place of business and of residence as fixing the place of domicil. Pothier, Introd. Gen. Cout. d'Orléans c. 1, art. 1, & 8 ; Encyc. Mod. Domicil; Denizart; Story, Confl. Laws, 842.

This may go far towards reconciling the di crepancies of the common law and civil la as to what law is to govern in regard to col tracts. But at common law the main que tion in deciding where a person has his domic is to decide where he has his home and whe he exercises his political rights.

Legal residence, inhabitancy, and domic are generally used as synonymous. 1 Brad Surr. N. Y. 70; 1 Harr. Del. 383; 1 Spenc. I J. 328 ; 2 Rich. So. C. 489 ; 10 N. H. 452 ; Wash. C. maining there for an indefinite period and as a place of fixed present domicil, constitutes domicil, though there be a floating intention to return. 2 Bos.& P. 228; 3 LIagg. Ecel. 374. Both inhabitancy and intention are to a great extent matters of fact, and may be gathered from slight indications. 17 Pick. Mass. 231; 4 Cush. Mass. 190; 1 Mete. Mass. 242; 5 id. 587 ; 1 Sneed, Tenn. 63. The place where a person lives is presumed to be the place of domicil until facts establish the contrary. 2 Bos. & P. 228, it.; 2 Kent, Comm. 532.
6. Domicil is said to be of three sorts, domicil by birth, by choice, and by operation of law. The place of birth is the domicil by birth, if at that time it is the domicil of the parents. Story, Confl. Laws, $46 ; 2$ Hagg. Ficel. 405 ; 5 Tex. 211. See 10 Rich. So. C. 38. If the parents are on a journey, the actual domicil of the parents will generally be the place of domicil. 5 Ves. Ch. 750; Westlake, Priv. Int. Law, 17. Children of ambassadors, and children born on seas, take the domicil of their parents. Story, Confl. Laws, $\frac{8}{2} 48$.

The domicil of an illegitimate child is that of the mother, Story, Confl. Laws. $846 ; 35$ Me. 411; 8 Cush. Mass. 75; see Westlake, Priv. Int. Law, 19, where the place of birth is said to be their domicil at common law; Cald. 559 ; of a legitimate child, that of the father. 2 Hagg. Ecel. 405 ; 1 Binn. Penn. 349. The domicil by birth of a minor continues to be his domicil till changed. 1 Binn. Penn. 349; 3 Zabr. N. J. 394• 8 Blackf. Ind. 345.
7. Domicil by choice is that domicil which a person of capacity of his free will selects to be such. Residence by constraint, which is involuntary by banishment, arrest, or inprisonment, will not work a change of domicil. Story, Confl. Laws, 847 ; 3 Ves. Ch. 198, 202; 11 Conn. 234; 5 Tex. 211; 1 Milw. 191.

Domicil is conferred in many cases by operation of law, either expressly or consequentially. Children born in foreign lands, of parents who are at the time citizens of the United States, have their domicil of birth in the United States. $10^{\circ}$ Rich. Eq. So. C. 38. See 26 Barb. N. Y. 383.

The domicil of the husband is that of the wife. 9 Bligh, Hon. L. 83,$104 ; 2$ Stockt. N. J. 238 ; 29 Ala. n. s. 719 . A woman on marriage takes the domicil of her husband, and a husband, if entitled to a divorce, may obtain it though the wife be actually resident in a foreign state. 2 Clark & F. Hou. L. 488; 1 Add. Penn. 5, 19; 1 Dow. 11T ; 2 Curt. Ecel. 351. See, also, 15 Johns. N. Y. 121; 1 Dev. & B. Eq. No. C. 588; 11 Pick. Mass. $410 ; 14$ id. $181 ; 2$ Strobh. Eq. So. C. 174. But, if entitled to a divorce, the wife may acquire a separate domicil, which may be in the same jurisdiction. Bishop, Marr. & Div. ${ }^{3} 728$; 16 Jur. 366. She may rest on her husband's domicil for the purpose. 15 N. H. 159; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 389; 5 Yerg. Tenn. 203; 6 Humphr. Tenn. 148; 8 Watts & S. Penn. 251. See 8 亿 10.
8. A wife divorced a mensa et thoro may acquire a separate domicil so as to sue her husband in the United States courts, 21 How. 445 ; so where the wife is deserted. 5 CaI. 280; 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 52; 2 Kent, Comm. 573.

The domicil of a widow remains that of her deceased husband until she makes a change. Story, Confl. Laws, & 46; 18 Penn. St. 17. It seems that the domicil of the ward will follow that of the guardian, Story, Confl. Laws, ${ }^{2}$ 506, n.; 1 Binn. Penn. 349; 5 Ves. Ch. 750; 3 Mer. Ch. 67 ; 9 Mass. 543 ; 5 Pick. Ambassadors and other foreign ministers retain their domicil in the country to which they belong and which they represent. 3 C. Rob. Adm. 13, 27 ; 4 id. 26 ; 14 Beav. Rolls, 441. This does not apply to consuls and other commercial agents. 1 C . Rob. Adm. 79; Thornt. 445; 1 Barb. N. Y. 449 ; Encyc. Am. Domicil.

Commercial domicil. There may be a commercial dumicil acquired .by maintenance of a commercial establisbment in a conntry, in relation to transactions connected with such establishments. 1 Kent, Comm. 82; 2 id. 11, 12.
9. Change of domicil. Any person, sui juris, may make any bonâ fide change of domicil at any time. 5 Madd. Ch. $379 ; 5$ Pick. Mass. 370; 35 Eng. L. & Eq. 532 . And the oljject of the change does not affect the right, if it be a genuine change with real intention of permanent residence. 3 Wash. C. C. 546; 5 Mas. C. C. 70; 1 Paine, C. C. 594; 2 Sumn. C. 11. The law of the place of domicil governs as to all acts of the parties, when not controlled by the lex loci contractus or lex rei sitce. Personal property of the woman follows the law of the domicil upon marriage. It passes to the husband, if at all, in such cases as a legal assignment by operation of the law of domicil, but one which is recognized extra-territorially. 2 Rose, Bank. 97 ; 20 Johns. N. Y. 267 ; Story, Confl. Laws, 8423.

A divorce valid under the law of the domicil of both parties is good everywhere. Story, Confl. Laws, & 230 a; 9 Me. 140; 2 Blackf. Ind. 407 ; 8 Ala. n. s. 45 ; 11 id. 826 ; 14 Mass. 227; 8 N. 12. The state and condition of the person according to the law of his domicil will generally, though not universally, be regarded in other countries as to acts done, rights acquired, or contracts made in the place of his native domicil; but as to acts, rights, and contracts done, acquired, or made out of his native domicil, the lex loci will generally govern in respect to his capacity and condition. 2 Kent, Comm. 234. See Lex Loci.

If a person goes into a foreign country and engages in trade there, be is, by the law of nations, to be considered a merchant of that country, and subject for all civil purposes, whether that country be hostile or neutral, 8 Term, 31; 3 Bos. & P. 113; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 12 ; 4 id. 107; 1 Hagg. Adm. 103, 104; 1 Pet. C. Mass. 286. Distribution of the effects of insolvent or bankrupt debtors is to be made according to the law of the domicil, subject to the same qualifications. Story, Confl. Laws, & 323-328, 423 a. See Conflict of Lafs.

DOMINANT. That to which a servitude or easement is due, or for the henefit of which it exists. Distinguished from servient, that from which it is due.

DOMINICUM (Lat. domain; demain; demesne). A lordship. That of which one has the lordship or ownership. That which remains under the lord's immediate charge and control.

In this sense it is equivalent to the Saxon bordlande. Spelman, Gloss; ; Blount. In regard to lands for which the lord received servicee and homage merely, the daminicun was in the tenant.

Property; domain: any thing pertaining to a lord. Cowel.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A church, or any other building consecrated to God. DuCange.

DOMINIUM (Lat.). Perfect and complete property or ownership in a thing.

Plenum in re dominiun,-plena in re potestas. This right is composed of three priacipal elements, viz.: the right to use, the right to enjoy, and the right to dispose of the thing, to the exclusion of every other person. To use a thing, jus utendi tantum, consists in employing it for the purposes for whieh it is fit, without destroying it, and which employment can therefore be repeated; to enjoy a thing, jus fruendi tantum, consiets in receiving the fruits which it yields, whether natural or civil, quidquid ex re nascitur; to dispose of a thing, jus abutencli, is to destroy it, or to transfer it to another. Thus, he who has the use of a horse may ride him, or put him in the plough to cultivate his own soil; but he has no right to hire the horse to another and receive the civil fruits which he may produce in that way.

On the other hand, he who has the enjoyment of a thing is entitled to reeeive all the profits or revenues which may be derived from it, either from natural or civil fruits.

And, lastly, he who has the right of disposing of a thing, jus ahutendi, may sell it, or give it away, etc., subjeet. however, to the rights of the usuary or usufructuary, as the case mey be.

These three elemente, usuz, fructus, abusus, when united in the same person, conetitute the dominium; hut they may be, and frequently are, separated: so that the right of disposing of a thing may helong to Primue, and the righte of using and enjoying to Secundus, or the right of enjoying alone may helong to Secundus, and the right of using to Tertius. In that case, Primus is always the owner of the thing, hut he is the naked owner, inasmuch as for a certain time he is actually deprived of all the principal advantages that can be derived from it. Secundus, if he has the use and enjoyment, jus utendi et fruendi simul, is called the nsufructuary, usus-fructuarius; if he has the enjoyment only, jus fruendi tantum, he ie the fructuarius; and Tertius, who has the right of use, jus utendi tontum, is called the usuary,-usuarius. But this diememberment of the elcmente of the dominium is essentially temporary : if no shorter period has been fixed for its duration, it terminates with the life of the usuary, fructuary, or usufructuary; for which reaoon the rights of use and usufruet are called personal servitudes. Besides the separation of the elements of the doninium among different persons, there may also be a jus in re, or dismemberment, so far as real estates are concerned, in favor of other estates. Thus, a right of way over my land may exist in favor of your house; this right is so completely attached to the house that it can never be separated from it, except by its entire extinetion. This class of jura in re is called predial or real servitudes. To constitute this servitude, there must be two eatates belonging to different owners; these eatates are viewed in some measure as juridical persona, capable of acquiring righta and incurring obligations. The estate in favor of which the servitude exists is the creditor-estate; and the estate by which the servitude is due, the debtorestate. 2 Mariadé, 343 et seq.
DOMINIUM DIRECTUM (Lat.). Legal ownership. Ownership as distinguished from enjoyment.

DOMINIUM DIRECTUM ET UTILE (Lat.). Full ownership and possession united in une person.

DOMINIUM UTILE (Lat.). The beneficial ownership. The use of the property.

DOMINUS (Lat.). The lord or master; the owner. Ainsworth, Lat. Lex. The owner or proprietor of a thing, as distinguished from him who uses it merely. Calvinus, Lex. A master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney. Story, Ag. & 3; Ferriere, Dict.
In Civil Law. A husband. A family. Vicat, Vue. Jur.
DOMINUS LITIS (Lat.). The master of a suit. The client, as distinguished from an attorney.

And yet it is said, although he who has appointed an attorney is properly called dominns litis, the attorney himself, when the cause has been tried, hecomes the dominus litis. Vicat.

DOMIT $\boldsymbol{\text { E }}$ (Lat.). Tame; subdued; not wild.

DONATARIUS (L. Lat.). One to whom something is given. A donee.

DONATIO (Lat.). A gift. A transfer of the title to property to one who receives it without paying for it. Vicat. The act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of the same from himself to another person, without any consideration.
2. A donation is never perfected until it has been accepted; for an acceptance is rtquisite to make the donation complete. See Assent; Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 9; Clef des Lois Rom.; 2 Kent, Comm. 438 ; 25 Barb. N. Y. 505 ; 2 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 305 ; 28 Ala. N. s. G41. In old English law and in the modern law, in several phrases, the word retains the extended sense it has in the civil law.
3. Its literal translation, gift, has acquired in real law a more limited meaning, being applied to the conveyance of estates tail. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 316; Littleton, 859 ; West, Symb. $8254 ; 4$ Cruise, Dig. 51. There are several kinds of donatio: as, donatio simplex et pura (simple and pure gift, without compulsion or consideration); donatio absoluta et larga (an absolute gift); donatio conditionalis (a conditional gift); donatio stricta et coarctura (a restricted gift: as, an estate tail).

DONATIO INTER VIVOS (Lat. a gift between living persons). A contract which takes place by the mutual consent of the giver, who divests himself of the thing given in order to transmit the title of it to the donee gratuitously, and the donee, who accepts and acquires the legal title to it. This donation takes place when the giver is not in any immediate apprehension of death, which distinguishes it from a donatio mortis causa (q.v.). 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 712. See, also, La. Civ. Code, art. 1453; Inst. 2.7.2; Cooper, Inst. notes 474, 475 ; U. S. Dig. tit. Gift.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA (Lat. a gift in prospect of death). A gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another, the possession of any personal goods, to kecp as his own in case of the donor's decease. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 514. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1455.

The civil law defines it te be a gift under apprehension of daath: as, when any thing is given upon qondition that if the dener dies the donee shall pessess it abselutely, or return it if tho donor bhould survive or should repent of having made the gift, er if the denee should die befere the donor. 1 Miles, Penn. 109-117.
It differs from a legacy, inasmuch as it dees net require proof in the ceurt of probate, 2 Strange, 777; see 1 Bligh, N. s. 531 ; and ne assent is requircd from the executor to perfect the denee's title. 2 Ves. Ch. $120 ; 1$ Sim. & S. Ch. 245 . It differs from a gift inter vivos because it is amhulatory and revecable during the doner's life, heoause it may be made te the wife of the doner, and beeause it is liable for his debts.
2. To constitute a good donatio mortis caus $\hat{a}$ : first, the thing given must be personal property, 3 Binn. Penn. 370 ; a bond, 3 Binn. Penn. 370 ; 3 Madd. Ch. 184 ; bank notes, 23 Penn. St. 59; 2 Brown, Ch. 612; and a check offored for payment during the life of the donor will be so considered. 4 Brown, Ch. 286. Not so a promissory note of the sick man made in his last illness. 5 Barnew. \& C. 501 ; 14 Pick. Mass. 204; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 76 ; 2 Barb. N. Y. 94 ; 21 Vt. 238. See 24 Pick. 201 ; 33 N. H. 520 ; 18 Conn. 410 ; 11 Md. 424 ; 4 Cush. Mass. 87.
Secand, the gift must be made by the donor in peril of death, and to take effect only in case the giver die. 3 Binn. Penn. 370; 4 Burn, Eccl. Law, 110.

Third, there must be an actual delivery of the subject to or for the donee, in cases where such delivery can be made. 3 Binn. Penn. 370; 2 Ves. Ch. 120 ; 2 Gill & J. Md. 268 ; 4 Gratt. Va. 472 ; 31 Me. 422 ; 14 Barb. N. Y. 243; 7 Eng. L. & Eq. 134. See 9 Ves. Ch. 1; 7 Taunt. 224. But such delivery can be made to a third person for the use of the donee. 3 Binn. Penn. 370.

It is an unsettled question whether such kind of gift appearing in writing, without delivery of the subject, can be supported. 2 Ves. Ch. 120; 3 Ired. Ch. No. C. 268. By the Roman and civil law, a gift mortis caus $\hat{a}$ might be made in writing. Dig. lib. 39 t. 6, l. 28 ; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. $440 ; 1$ id. 314.
3. A donatio causâ mortis does not require the executor's assent, 2 Ves. Ch. 120 ; is revocable by the donor during his life, 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 339; 27 Mc. 196; 3 Woodb. & M. C. C. $519 ; 34$ N. H. 439, by recovery, 3 Macn. & G. 664 ; Williams, Ex. 651, or resumption of possession, 7 Taunt. 233; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 433 ; but not by a subsequent will, Prec. Chanc. 300 ; but may be satisfied by a subsequent legaoy. 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 314. And see 1 Ired. Ch. No. C. 130. It may be of any amount of property. 24 Vt .591 . It is liable for the testator's dehts. 1 Phill. Ch. 406. See 18 Ala. N. s. 27.

DONATIOPROPTER NUPTIAS (Lat. gift on account of marriage). In Roman Law. A gift made by the husband as a security for the marriage portion. The effect of the act of giving such a gift was different according to the relation of the parties at the time of making the gift. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Called, also, a mutual gift.
The name was originally applied to a gift made before marriage, and was then called a donatio ante nuptias; but in process of time it was allowed to be made after marriage as well, and was then called a donatio propter nu] tias.

DONED. He to whom a gift is made or a bequest given; one who is invested with a power of appointment: he is sometimes called an appointee. 4 Kent, Comm. $316 ; 4$ Cruise, Dig. 51.
DONIS, STATUTE DE. The stat. Westm. 2, namely, 13 Edw. I. c. 1, called the statute de donis conditionalibus. This statute revives, in some sort, the ancient feudal restraints which were originally laid on alienations. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 12.

DONOR. He who makes a gift. One who gives lands in tail. Termes de la Ley.

DONUM (Lat.). A gift.

The differenee between donum and numus is said to be that donum is more general, while numus is speoific. Numur is said to mean donum with a oause for the giving (though not a legal censideration), as on account of marriage, etc. Donum is said to he that which is given from no necessity of law or duty, but frem free will, "from the absence of whicb, if they are not given, ne blame arises; but if they are given, praise is due." Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

DOOM. Judgment.

DOOR. The place of usual entrance in a house, or into a room in the house.
2. 'l'o authorize the breach of an outer door in order to serve process, the process must be of a criminal nature; and even then a demand of admittance must first have been refused. 5 Coke, $93 ; 4$ Leon. 41; T. Jones, $234 ; 1$ N. II. 346 ; 10 Johns. N. Y. 263; 1 Root, Conn. 83, 134; 21 Pick. Mass. 156. The outer door may also be broken open for the purpose of executing a writ of habere facias. 5 Coke, 93; Bacon, Abr. Sheriff ( N 3 ).
3. An outer door cannot, in general, be broken for the purpose of serving civil process, 13 Mass. 520 ; but after the defendant has been arrested, and he takes refuge in his own house, the officer may justify breaking an outer door to take him. Fost. 320; 1 Rolle, 138; Croke Jac. 555; 10 Wend. N. Y. 300; 6 Hill, N. Y. 597. When once an officer is in the house, he may break open an inner door to make an arrest. Kirb. Conn. 386; 5 Johns. N. Y. 352; 17 id. 127. See 1 Toullier, n. 214, p. 88.

DORMANT. Sleeping; silent; not known; not acting. He whose name and transactions as a partner are professedly concealed from the world. 2 Harr. & G. Md. 159; 5 Cow. N. Y. 534; 4 Mass. 424; Collyer, Partn. 84 ; Story, Partn. Index. The term is applied, also, to titles, rights, etc.

DOS (Lat.). In Roman Law. That which is received by or promised to the husband from the wife, or any one else by her influence, for sustaining the burdens of matrimony. There are three classes of dos. Dos profectitia is that which is given by the father or any male relative from his property or by his act; dos adventitia is that which is given by any other person or from the property of the wife herself; dos receptitia is where there is a stipulation connected with the gift relating to the death of the wife. Vicat; Calvinus, Lex.; DuCange; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 147.

In English Law. The portion bestowed upon a wife at her marriage by her husband. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 100 ; 1 W ashburn, Real Prop. 147; 1 Cruise, Dig. 152.

Dower generally. The portion which a widow has in the estate of her husband after his death. Park, Dower.

Abstract

This use of the word in the English law, though, as Spelman shows, not strictly correct, has still the authority of Tacitus (de Mor. Germ. 18) for its use. And if the general mesning of marriage portion is given to it , it is strictly as applicshle to a gift from the husband to the wife as to one from the wife to the hnshand. It occurs often, in the phrase dos de dote peti non debet (dower should not he sought of dower). 1 Wsshburn, Real Prep. 209.

DOS RATIONABILIS (Lat.). A reasonable marriage portion. A reasonable part of her husband's estate, to which every widow is entitled, of lands of which her husband may have endowed her on the day of marriage. Coke, Litt. 336. Dower, at common law. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 134.
DOT (a French word adopted in Louisiana). The fortune, portion, or dowry which a woman brings to her husband by the marriage. 6 Mart. La. n. s. 460.
DOTAL PROPERTY. By the civil law in Louisiana, by this term is understood that property which the wife brings to the busband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. La. Civ. Code, art. 2315.
DOTATION. In French Law. The act by which the founder of a hospital, or other charity, endows it with property to fulfil its destination.
DOTE. In Spanish Law. The property and effects which a woman brings to her husband for the purpose of aiding him with the rents and revenues thereof to support the expenses of the marriage. Loas Pa:tidas, 4. 11. 1. "Dos," says Cajas, " ost pecunia marito, nuptiarum causa, data vel promissa." The dower of the wife is inalienable, except in certain specified cases, for which see Escriche, Dic. Raz. Dote.
DOTE ASSIGNANDO. In English Law. A writ which lay in favor of a widow, when it was found by office that the king's tenant was seised of tenements in fee or feetail at the time of his death, and that he held of the king in chief.
DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. Dower unde nihil habet, which title see.
double costs. See Costs.
DOUBLE OR TREBLE DAMAGES.
In sume cases it is provided by statute that a party may recover double or treble damages. In these cases the jury find such damages as they think proper, and the court enhances them in the judgment. Brooke. Ahr. Damages, pl. 70; Coke, 2d Inst. 416; 1 Wils. 126 ; 1 Mass. 155. The damages are actually douhled or trebled, as the case may be,-not assessed, like double or treble costs.
DOUBLE EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of twenty dollars or units.
It is so called becsuse it is twice the value of the eagle, and, consequently, weighs five hundred and sixteen grains of standard fineness, namely, nine hundred thonsandtbs fine. It is a legal tender for twenty dollare to any amonnt. Act of March 3, $1849,6 \mathrm{~J} . \mathrm{S}$. Stat. st Lsrge, 397. The double eagle is the largest coin issued in the United States, and of grester velue than any now issued in any other country, except the ohan of Japan, whieh, however, psitskes more of the character of a har of gold than of that of z coin. The first issuc of the double eagle was made in 1849 .
DOUBLE INSURANCE. Is where divers insurances are made upon the same interest in the same subject against the same risks in favor of the same assured, in proportions exceeding the value. 1 Phillips, Ins.敩 359, 366.

A like excess in one policy is over-insurance. If the valuation of the whole interest in one poliey is dounle that in another, and half of the value is insured in each policy according to the valuation in that policy, it is not a double insurance; its being so or not depends on the aggregate of the proportions, one-quarter, ona-half, etc., insured by each pelioy, not upon the aggregate of the amounts.
2. In England, each underwriter is liable for the whole amount insured by him until the assured is fully indemnified, and either on paying over his proportion pro rata is entitled to contribution from the other; but no one can be liable over the rate at which the subject is rated in his policy.

In the United States, the policies generally provide that the prior underwriters shall be fiable until the assured is fully indemnified, and underwriters for the excess are exonerated; but the excess is to be ascertained by the aggregate of the proportions, as a quarter, half, etc., to make up the integer. 1 Pbillips, Ins. 8361 ; 1 W. Blackst. 416; 1 Burr. 489; 15 B. Monr. Ky. 432, 452; 18 III. 553.

In the United States, by a clause usually introduced into policies, the prior underwriters are liable until the whole value is covered, and subsequent underwriters are exonerated as to the surplus amount. This clause does not apply to double insurance by simultaneous policies. 1 Phillips, Ins. & 362; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 475.

DOUBLE PLEA. The alleging, for one single purpose, two or more distinct grounds of defence, when one of them would be as effectual in law as both or all. See Dupliurty.

By the statute 4 Anne, c. 16, in England, and by similar statutes in most if not all of the states of the United States, any defendant in any action or suit, and any plaintiff in replevin in any court of record, may plead as many several matters as may be necessary for a defence with leave of court. This statute allows double pleading; but each plea must be single, as at common law, Lawes, Plead. 131; 1 Chitty, Plead. 512; and the statute does not extend to the subsequent pleadings. Comyns, Dig. Pleader (E 2); Story, Plead. 72-76; 5 Am . Jur. 260; Gould, Plead. c. 8; Doctrina Plac. 222. And in criminal cases a defendant cannot plead a special plea in addition to the general issue. 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 85.

DOUBLE VOUCHER. Avoucher which occurs when the person first vouched to warranty comes in and vouches over a third person. See a precedent, 2 Blackstone, Comm. App. V. p. xtii.; Voucher.

The necessity for double voucher arises when the tenant in tail is not the tenant in the writ, but is tenant by warranty; that is, where he is vouched, and comes in and confesses the warranty. Generally speaking, to accomplish this result a previous conveyance is necessary, by the tenant in tail, to a third person, in order to make such third person tenant to a writ of entry. Preston, Conv. 125, 126.

DOUBLE WASTE. When a tenant bound to repair suffers a house to be wasted, and then unlawfully fells timber to repair it, he is said to commit double waste. Coke, Litt. 53. See Waste.

DOUBT. The uncertainty which exists in relation to a fact, a proposition, or other thing; an equipoise of the mind arising from an equality of contrary reasons. Ayliffe, Pand. 121.
2. The mest embarrassing position of a judge is that of being in doubt; and it is frequently the lot of the wisest and most enlightened to be in this condition: those who have little or no experience usually find no difficulty in deciding the most problematical questiona.

3 Some rules, not always infallible, have been adopted in doubtful cases, in order to arrive at the truth. 1. In civil casea, the douht ought to operata against him who, having it in his power to prove facts to remove the doubt, has neglected to do so. In cases of fraud, when there ia a doubt, the presumption of innocence ( $q . v$.) ought to remove it. 2 . In criminal cases, whenever a reaconable doubt exists as to the guilt of the accused, that doubt ought to operate in his favor. In such cases, particularly when the liberty, honor, or life of an individual is at stake, the evidence to convict ought to he clear and devoid of all reasonahle doubt.
4. The term reasonable doubt is often used, but not easily defined. It is not mere possihle doubt; because every thing relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possiblo or imaginary dount. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in such a condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. The burden of proof is upon the prosecutor. All the presumptions of law independent of evidence are in favor of innocence; and avery person is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. If upon such proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal. For it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is mora likely to be true than the contrary; hut the evidence must estanlish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty,-a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientieusly upon it. This is proof beyond reasonahle doubt; because if the law, which mostly depends upon considerations of a moral nature, should go further than this and require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether. DOVE. The name of a well-known bird.
Doves are animals ferce naturce, and not the subject of larceny unless they are in the owner's custody: as, for example, in a dovehouse, or when in the nest before they can fy. 9 Pick. Mass. 15.
In a very recent case it was held that larceny may be committed of pigeons which, though they have access to the open air, are tame and unreclaimed and return to their house or box. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 361. See 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 362, note; 4 Carr. & P. 131.
DOWAGER. A widow endowed; one who has a jointure.

In England, this is a title or addition given to the widows of princes, dukes, earls, and other noblemen, to distinguish them from the wives of the heir, who have right to bear the title.

DOWER (from Fr. douer, to endow). The provision which the law makes for a widow out of the lands or tenements of ber husband, for her support and the nurture of her children. Coke, Litt. 30 a ; 2 Black|stone, Comm. 130 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 35; Washhurn, Real Prop. 146.
2. There were five species of dower in England:-

Dower by custom, where a widow became entitled to a specified portion of her husband's lands in consequence of some local or particular custom.

Dower ad ostium ecclesio, where a man of full age, on coming to the church-door to be married, endowed his wife of a certain portion of his lands.

Dower ex assensu fratris, which differed from dower ad ostium ecclesia only in being made out of the lands of the husband's father and with his consent.

Dower de la plus belle, where the widow, on suing the guardian in chivalry for dower, was required by him to endow herself of the fairest portion of any lands she might hold as guardian in socage, and thus relcase from dower the lands of her husband held in chivalry. This was abolished along with the military tenures, of which it was a eonsequence. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 132, н.

Dower by common law, where the widow was entitled during her life to a third part of all the lands and tenements in fee-simple or fee-tail of which her busband was seised at any time during the coverture, and of which any issue she might have had might by possibility have been heir.

Since the passage of the Dower Act in England, $3 & 4$ Will. IV. c. 105, all these species of dower, except that hy custom and by the common law, have ceased to exist. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 135, n. Dower in the United States, although regulated by statutes differing from each other in many respects, conforms substantially to that at the common law. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 149.
3. Of what estates the wife is dowable. Her pight to dower is always determined by the laws of the place where the property is situate. Story, Confl. Laws, $& 448$; 1 Miss. 281 ; 4 Iowa, 381 ; 3 Strobh. So. C. 562.

She is entitled to one-third of all lands, tenements, or hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, of which her husband may have been seised during the coverture, in fee or in tail. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 131.

She was not endowable of a term of years, however long. Park, Dow. 47; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 36. In Missouri, her right attaches. to a leasehold of twenty years, Rev. Stat. 1855, 668 ; also to the personal estate in general, under certain conditions. Mo. Rev. Stat. (1855) 669; 16 Mo. 478. Similar statutes are found in many of the other states.

The inheritance must be an entire one, and one of whieh the husband may have corporeal seisin or the right of immediate corporeal seisin. Park, Dow. 47; Firıch, 368; Plowd. 506; 1 Smedes & M. Ch. Miss. 107.

Dower does not attach in an estate held in joint tenancy; hut the widow of the survivor has dower. Park, Dow. 72; Coke, Litt. & 45; 15 Pet. 21. But where the principle of survivorship is abolished, this disability does not exist. 9 Dan. Ky. 185; 2 Strobh. So. C. 67 ; Mo. Rev. Stat. (1855) 351.

An estate in common is subject to dower. Park, Dow. 42; 13 Mass. 504; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 653 ; 3 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 500 ; 6 Gray, Mass. 314.

In the case of an exchange of lands, the widow may claim dower in either, but not in both, Coke, Litt. 31 b ; if the interests are unequal, then in both. 7 Barb. N. Y. 633 ; 32 Me. 412 ; 1 N. H. 65.

She is entitled to dower in mines belonging to her husband, if opened by him in his lifctime on his own or another's land. 1 Taunt. 402; 1 Cow. 460.

She had a right of dower in various species of incorporeal hereditaments: as, rights of fishing, and rents. Coke, Litt. $32 a ; 2$ Blackstonc, Comm. 132 ; Park, Dow. 36; 1 Bland. Ch. Mich. 227. The rents should be estates of inheritance. 2 Cruise, Dig. 291.
4. In most of the states she is dowable of wild lands. 2 Dougl. Mich. 141; 10 Ga. 321 ; 2 Rob. Va. 507 ; 3 Dan. Ky. 1ع1; 8 Ohio, 418 : contra, 15 Mass. 157 ; 1 Pick. Mass. 21 ; 14 Me. 409 ; 2 N. H. 56.

She has no right of dower in a pre-emption claim, 16 Mo. $4^{7} 8 ; 2$ Ill. 314 ; nor, as a general thing, in shares of a ecrpcration. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 166. See 6 Dan. Ky. 107 ; Park, Dow. 113.

At law there was nothing to prerent ber from having duwer in lands which her liusband held as trustee. But, as she would take it subject to the trust, courts of equity were in the habit of restraining her from claiming her dower in lands which she would be compelled to hold entirely to another's use, till it was finally established, and remains the same both in England and the United States, that she is not entitled to dower in any thing her hushand may bold as a mere trustee. Hill, Trust. 269; 8 Ohio, 412: 2 Ohio St. 415 ; 5 B. Monr. Ky. 152 ; Park, Duw. 105.

A mortgagee's wife, although her huskand has the technical seisin, has no dowable interest till the estate becomes irredeeniable. 4 Dane, Abr. 671; 13 Ark. 44; 4 Kent, Comm. 42.
5. At common law she was not endowable in the estate of a cestui qui trust. 2 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 387; 4 Kent, Comm. 43; 1 Hempst. C. C. 251. But by the Dower Act this restriction was removed in England. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105 ; Park, Dow. $138 ; 1$ Spence, Eq. Jur. 501. In the United States the law upon this subject is not uniform. 12 Pet. 201; 19 Me. 141; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. | 554; 7 Ala. 447 ; 1 Hen. & M. Va. 92 . In some, dower in equitable estates is given by statutes, Mo. Rev. Stat.' (1855) 668 ; while in others the severe common-law rule has not been strictly followed by the courts. 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 452 ; 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 318; 6 Dan. Ky. 471; 8 Humphr. Tenn. 537; 1 Jones, No. C. 430; 3 Gill, Md. 304.

She is generally conceded dower in an equity of redemption. 15 Pet. 38; 34 Me. $50 ; 3$ Pick. Mass. 475; 4 Gray, Mass. 46 ; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 452 ; 2 Blackf. Ind. 262; 1 Rand. Va. 34t; 1 Hill, N. Y. 200; 1 Conn. 559 ; 29 N. II. 564; 1 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 361.
In reference to her husband's contracts for the purchase of lands, the rule seems to be, in those states where dower is allowed in equitable estates, that her right attaches to her husband's interest in the contract, if at his death he was in a condition to enforce specific performance. 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 318; 5 Blackf. Ind. 406; 1 Hen. & M. Va. 92; 1 B. Monr. Ky. 93; 2 Ill. 314; 2 Ohio St. 512; 7 Gray, Mass. 533; 19 Ill. 545; 1 Jones, No. C. 430. If his interest has been assigned before his death, or forfeited, or taken on execution, her dower-right is defeated. 29 Penn. St. 71: 6 Rich. Eq. Stı. C. 72; 4 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 451; 16 Ala. 522; 16 B. Monr. Ky. 114; 1 Hen. & M. Va. 91 .
6. She is entitled to dower in lands actually purchased by her husband and upon which the vendor retains a lien for the unpaid purchase-money, subject to that lien, 12 B. Monr. Ky. 261; 8 Blackf. Ind. 120; 2 Bland. Ch. Mich. 242; 1 Humphr. Tenn. 408; 7 id. 72, or upon which her husband has given a mortgage to secure the purchase-money, subject to thatmortgage. 10 Rich. Eq. So. C. 285.
She is not entitled to dower in partnership lands purchased by partnership funds and for partnership purposes, until the partnership debts have been paid. 4 Metc. Mass. 537; 5 id. 562; 4 Miss. 372 ; 10 Leigh, Va. 406; 5 Fla. 350 ; 20 Mo. 174. She has been denied dower in land purchased by several for the purposes of sale and speculation. 3 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 428.
Sometimes she is allowed dower out of money the proceeds of real estate sold by order of court, or by the wrongful act of an agent or trustee. 14 Pick. Mass. 345 ; 11 Ala. n. s. 33; 3 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 434; 12 B. Monr. Ky. 172; 7 Humphr. Tenn. 72.
Her claim for dower has been held not subject to mechanics' liens. 7 Metc. Mass. 157; 8 Ill. 511; 8 Blackf. Ind. 252; 1 B. Monr. Ky. 257.

She is not entitled to dower in an estate pur auter vie, 5 Cow. N. Y. 388, nor in a vested remainder. $5 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H} .240,469$; 10 id. 403; 2 Leigh, Va. 29 ; 12 id. 248 ; 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 161 ; 1 Barb. N. Y. 500.
In some states she has dower only in what the husband died seised of. 6 McLean, C.C. $442 ; 1$ Root, Conn. 50 ; 2 No. C. 253.
7. Requisites of. Three things are usually said to be requisite to the consummation of a title to dower, viz.: marriage, seisin of the husband, and his death. 4 Kent, Comm. 36.

The marriage must be a legal one; though, if voidable and not void, she will have her dower unless it is dissolved in his lifetime. 14 Miss. 308; Coke, Litt. 33 a; Lambert, Dow. 14; 1 Cruise, Dig. 164. As to the legality of marriages, see Bishop, Marr. & Div.

The husband must have been seised in the premises of an estate of inheritance at some time during the coverture. It may not be an actual seisin : a seisin in law with the right of immediate corporeal seisin is sufficient. 22 Pick. Mass. 283 ; 7 Mass. 253; 39 Me. 25 ; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 635 ; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 554; 1 Cruise, Dig. 166. It is not necessary that the seisin of the husband should be a rightful one. The widow of a disseisor may have dower against all who have not the rightful seisin. Park, Dow. 37; 4 Dane, Abr. 668.

So, allhough the estate is a defeasible one, provided it is one of inheritance, she may claim her dower until it is defeated. Coke, Litt. 241; 3 Halst. N. J. 241 ; 10 Ccke, 95 ; Seymour's case ; Lambert, Dow. 19.
The seisin is not required to remain in the husband any particular length of time. It is sufficient if he is seised but an instant to his own benefit and use, 11 Rich. Eq. So. C. 417; 14 Me . 290; 37 id. 508; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 132; but a mere instantaneous seisin for some other purpose than proprietorship will not give the wife dower. 14 Me . 290; 4 Miss. 369 ; 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 95 ; 27 Ala. n. s. 578 ; 15 Vt. 39 ; 2 Gill & J. Md. 318; 6 Metc. Mass. 475; 1 Atk. Ch. 442.
Where he purchases land and gives a mortgage at the same time to secure the purchasemoney, such incumbrance takes precedence of his wife's dower. 15 Johns. N. Y. 458; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 18; 4 Mass. 566; 5 N. H. 479 ; 10 id. $500 ; 7$ Halst. N. J. $52 ; 1$ Bay, So. C. 312; 37 Me. 11; 2 Hill, Ch. So. C. 260 ; 3 Cush. Mass. 551.
For the character of the seisin requisite to give dower in equitable estates, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 179.

The death of the husband. 1 Cruise, Dig. 168. What was known as civil death in Enge land did not give the wife right of dower. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. 130. Imprisonment for life is declared civil death in some of the states. Mo. Rev. Stat. (1855) 642.
8. How dower may be prevented or defeated. At common law, alienage on the part of the husband or wife prevented dower from attaching. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 131; 1 Cow. N. Y. $89 ; 16$ Wend. N. Y. $617 ; 2$ Mo. 32. This disability is partially done away with in England, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, and is almost wholly abolished in the United States.
It is well established that the wife's dower is defeated whenever the seisin of her husband is defeated by a paramount title. Coke, Litt. 240 b; 4 Kent, Comm. 48.
The foreclosure of a mortgage given by the husband before marriage, or by the wife and husband after marriage, will defeat her right of dower. 15 Johns. N. Y. 458; 4 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 678; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 18; 1 Ind.

527; 19 Miss. 164; 2 Rob. Va. 384; 8 Blackf. Ind. 174; 4 Harr. Del. 111. Like foree would be given to a vendor's lien or mortgage for the purchase-money, or to a judgment lien outstanding at the time of marriage.

Her right to dower in the estate which she has joined with her husband in mortgaging is good against every one but the mortgagee. 3 Miss. 692; 18 Ohio St. 567 ; 14 Pick. Mass. 98; 1 Mete. Mass. 390 ; 5 N. H. 470; 29 id. 564; 37 Me .509 . The same is true in regard to an estate nortgaged by her husband before coverture. 3 Pick. Mass. $475 ; 5 \mathrm{id} .146 ; 14$ id. 98. In neither case would the husband have the right to cut off her claim for dower by a release to the mortgagee, or an assignment of his equity of redemption. 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 452, 482; 17 Mass. 564; 2 Pick. Mass. 517 ; 5 id. 146 ; 14 id. $98 ; 2$ Hill, Ch. So. C. 252 ; 8 IIumphr. Tenn. 713; 1 Rand. Va. 344 ; 34 Me. 50 ; 2 Blackf. Ind. 262; 2 Halst. N. J. 392. As to a purchase and mortgage for the purchase-money before marriage, in which the husband releases the equity of redemption after marriage, see 6 Cow. N. Y. 316.
9. An agreement on the part of the husband to convey before dower attaches, if enforced, will extinguish her claim. 4 Kent, Comm. 50; 4 Hen. & M. Va. 376.

Dower will not be defeated by the determination of the estate by natural limitation: as, if the tenant in fee dies without heirs, or the tenant in tail. 8 Coke, 34 ; Park, Dow. 82, 157; 4 Kent, Comm. 49 ; 12 B. Monr. Ky. 73.

Whether it will be defeated by a conditional limitation by way of executory devise or shifting use, is not yet fully settled. Coke, Litt. $241 a$, Butler's note, 170 ; Sugden, Pow. 333 ; Park, Dow. 168-186; 3 Bos. & P. 652 ; 2 Atk. Ch. 47 ; 1 Leon. 167. But it seems that the weight of American authority is in favor of sustaining dower out of such estates. 9 Penn. St. 190. See 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 216.

Dower will be defeated by operation of a collateral limitation: as, in the ease of an estate to a man and his heirs so long as a tree shall stand, and the tree dies. 3 Preston, Abstr. 373 ; Park, Dow. 163; 4 Kent, Comm. 49.

In some states it will be defeated by a sale on execution for the debts of the husband. 5 Gill, MI. 94; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 18; 8 Penn. St. 1ミ0; 1 Humphr. Tenn. 1; 11 Mo. 204; 19 id .621 ; 3 Dev . No. C. 3. In Missouri it is defeated by a sale in partition. 22 Mo . 202. See 22 Wend. N. Y. 498; 2 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 577; 3 id. 500.

It is defeated by a sale for the payment of taxes. 8 Ohio St. 430.

It is also defeated by exercise of the right of eminent domain during the life of the husband. Nor has the widow the right of oompensation for such taking. The same is true of land dedicated by her husband to public use. 2 Ohio, 25; 3 Ohio St. 24; 4 Sandf. N. Y. 456; 9 N. Y. 110.
10. How dowcr may be barred. A divorce from the bonds of mutrinony was at eummon law a bar to dower, 2 Blackstone, Comm. 130; 4 Kent, Cumm. 54; 4 Barb. N. Y. 192; but the woman's right to dower or something equivalent to it is reserved by statutes in most of the states, if she is the innocent party. Bishop, Marr. & Div. 8663 ; 6 Du. N. X. 102.
By the early statute of Westminster 2d, a wife who eloped and lived in adultery with another man forfeited her dower-right. This provision has been re-enacted in several of the states, 9 Mo. 555; Mo. Rev. Stat. 1855, 672, and recognized as common law in others. 2 Brock. Va. 256 ; 3 N. H. 41 ; 13 Ired. No. C. 361 ; 4 Dane, Abr. 676 : contra, 24 Wend. N. Y. 193.

The widow of a convicted traitor could not recover dower, 2 Blackstone, Comm. 130, 131; but this principle is not recognized in this country. Williams, Real Prop. 103, n.
Nor does she in this country, as at common law, forfeit her dower by oonveying in fee the estate assigned to her. 4 Kent, Comm. 82 ; Williams, Real Prop. 121, 125, n.; 1 B. Monr. Ky. 88 .
The most common mode formerly of barring dower was by jointure. 1 Washbura, Real Prop. 217; 14 Gratt. Va. 518; 8 Mo. 22; 19 id. 469 ; 23 id. 561 ; 14 Ohio St. 610; 8 Conn. 79.
Nuw it is usually done by joining with her husband in the act of conveying the estate. Once this was done by levying a fine, or suffering a recovery, 4 Kent, Comm. 51 ; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 137 ; now by deed executed in concurrence with her husband and acknow. ledged in the form required by statute, Williams, Real Prop. 189, which latter is the mode prevailing in the United States.
11. The husband must usually join in the act. 5 B. Monr. Ky. 352 ; 3 Dan. Ky. 316; 19 Pemn. St. 361; 3 Mass. 353; 8 Pick. Mass. 532; 6 Cush. Mass. 196; 14 Me. 432; 33 id. 396: contra, 2 N. H. 507.
She should be of age at the time. 2 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 359 ; 1 B. Monr. Ky. 76; 6 Leigb, Va. 9; 1 Barb. N. Y. 399; 16 Wend. N. Y. 617; 8 Miss. 437 ; 10 Ohio St. 127.
Words of grant will be sufficient although no reference is made in the deed to dower co nomine. 12 How. 256; 16 Ohio St. 236.
In most of the states her deed must be acknowledged; and that, too, in the form pointed out by statute, 6 Ohio St. 510 ; 2 Binn. Penn. 341 ; 1 Bail. So. C. 42]; 1 Blackf. Ind. 379; which must appear in the certificate. 13 Barb. N. Y. 50.
She cannot release her dower by parol. See 5 T. B. Monr. Ky. 57 ; 3 Zabr. N. J. 62 A parol sale of lands in which the husband delivers possession does not exclude dower: 3 Sneed, Tenn. 316.
It has been held that she may bar her claim for dower by her own acts operating by way of estoppel. 2 Ohio, 506 ; 1 Rand. Va. 344 . 2 Ohio St. 511; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 94; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 18; 8 Penn. St. 199; 1 Ind. 354; 5 Gill, Md. 94. See 22 Ala. n. s. 104;

26 id. 547 ; 2 Const. So. C. 59 ; 8 Penn. St. 359; 1 Rich. Eq. So. C. 222.

A release of dower has been presumed after a long lapse of time. 4 N. H. $321 ; 3$ Yeates, Penn. 507.

At common law there was no limitation to the claim for dower. 4 Kent, Comm. 70 ; Park, Dow. 311. As to the statutes in the different states, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 217.

Upon the doctrine of dos de dote, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 209.
In some states she bas the right to elect to take half of the husband's estate in lieu of dower under certain contingencies. 28 Mo . 293-300.

It seems that a contract to marry on condition that the wife should receive no portion of the husband's lands may be valid. 9 Rich. Eq. So. C. 434.
12. How and by whom dower may be assigned. Her right to have dower set out to her accrues immediately upon the death of her husband: but until it is assigned she has no right to any specific part of the estate. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 139. She was allowed by Magna Charta to occupy the principal mansion of her husband for forty days after his death, if it was on dowable lands. This right is variously recognized in the states. Mu. Rev. Stat. (1855) 672; 2 Mo. 163; 16 Ala. n. s. 148 ; 20 id. 662 ; 7 T. B. Monr. Ky. 337; 5 Conn. 462; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 222, note. In Missouri and several other states, she may remain in possession of and enjoy the principal mansion-house and messuages thercto belonging till dower has been assigned. 5 T. B. Monr. Ky. 561; 4 Blackf. Ind. 331. This makes her tenant in common with the heir to the extent of her right of dower; and an assignment only works a severance of the tenancy. 4 Kent, Comm. 62; 2 Mo. 163.

There were two modes of assigning dower: one by "common. right," where the assignmentwas bylegal process; the other "against common right," which rests upon the widow's assent and agreement.
13. Dower of "common right" must be passigned by metes and bounds, where this is possible, unless the parties agree to a different form. 2 Penn. N. J. $521 ; 1$ Rolle, Abr. 683; Style, 276; Perkins, 407.

If assigned "against common right," it must be by indentare to which she is a party. Cuke, Litt. 34 b; 1 Pick. Mass. 189, 314 ; 1 Roper, Husb. & W. 410; 1 Bright, Husb. & W. 377 .

Where assigned of common right, it must be unconditional and absolnte, Coke, Litt. 34 $b$, n. 217; 1 Rolle, Abr. 682; and for her life. 1 Bright, Husb. & W. 379.

Where it is assigned not by legal process, it must be by the tenant of the freehold. Coke, Litt. $35 a$. It may be done by an infant, 2 Blackstone, Comm. 133; 1 Pick. Mass. 314; 2 Ind. 336 ; or by the guardian of the heir. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 136; 37 Me. 509.

As between the widow and heir, she takes her dower according to the value of the property at the time of the assignment. 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 290; 4 Kent, Comm. 67-69; 4 Miss. 360; 15 Me. 371; 2 Harr. Del. 336; 13 Ill. 483 ; 9 Mo. 237.
14. As between the widow and the husband's alienee, she takes her dower according to the value at the time of the alienation. 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 258; 2 Edw. Ch. N. Y.. 577 ; 4 Leigh, Va. 498. This was the ancient and well-established rule. 4 Kent, Comm. 65; 2 Johns. N. Y. 484; 9 Mass. 218; 3 Mas. C. C. 347. But in this country the rule in respect to the alienee seems to be that if the land has been enhanced in value by his labor and improvements, the widow shall not share in these, 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 289; 9 Mass. 218; 3 Mas. C. C. 347; 4 Leigh, Va. 498; 2 Blackf. Ind. 223; 4 Miss. $360 ; 10$ Ohio St. 498; 16 Me. 80 ; 9 Ala. N. s. 901 ; 10 Md .746 ; 13 Ill . 483; if it has been enhanced by extraneous circumstances, such as the rise and improvement of property in the neighborhood, she is to have the full benefit of this. 5 Blackf. Ind. 406; 3 Mas. C. C. 375 ; 6 McLean, C. C. 422 ; 5 Call, Va. 433; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 452; Williams, Real Prop. 191, note.
There seems to be no remedy for her now in either country where the land has deteriorated in value by the waste and mismanagement of the alienee or by extraneous circumstances, 10 Mo. 746; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 290; 3 Mas. C. C. 368 ; 5 Blackit. Ind. 406; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 452 ; but she must be content to take her dower in the property as it was at the time of her husband's death, when her right first became consummate. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 239.
As to the remedies afforded both by law and equity for the enforcement of dower, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 226.
15. Nature of the estate in dower. Until the death of her husband, the wife's right of dower is not an interest in real estate of which value can be predicated. 9 N. Y. 110. And although on the death of her husband this right becomes consummate, it remains a chose in action till assignment. 4 Kent, Comm. 61; 1 Barb. N. Y. 500; 5 id. 438; 32 Me. 424; 2 Cow. N. Y. 651 ; 5 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 12; 10 Mo. 746.

Until assignment, she has no estate which she can convey or which can be taken on execution for her debts. 2 Keen, 527 ; 1 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 500 ; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 448 ; 9 Miss. 489; 1 Dev. & B. No. C. 437; 14 Mass. 378: contra, 10 Ala. n. s. 900 .
But where she does sell or assign this right of action, equity will protect the rights of the assignee and sustain an action in the widow's name for his benefit. 4 Rich. So. C. 516; 10 Ala. n. s. $900 ; 7$ Ired. Eq. No. C. 152.

She can release her claim to the one who is in possession of the lands, or to whom she stands in privity of estate. 11 IIl. 384; 13 in. 483; 17 Johns. N. Y. 167; 32 Me. 424 ; Park, Dow. 335 ; 32 Ala. n. s. 404.

But as soon as the premises have been set out and assigned to her, and she has entered upon them, the frechold vests in her by virtue of her husband's seisin. Coke, Litt. $239 a$; 4 Mass. 384 ; 6 N. Y. 394 ; 4 Dev..& B. No. C. 442.

Her estate is a continuation of her husband's by appointment of the law. 1 Pick. Mass. 189; 4 Me. 67; Park, Dow. 340. See Scribner, Dower (1864).

DOWRESS. A woman entitled to dower. See Dower

DOWRY. Formerly applied to mean that which a woman brings to her husband in marriage: this is now called a portion. This word is sometimes confounded with dower. See Coke, Litt. 31; La. Civ. Code, art. 2317 ; Dig. 23. 3. 76; Code, 5. 12. 20.

DRAGOMAN. An interpreter employed in the east, and particularly at the Turkish court.

The act of congress of August 26, 1842, c. 201, s. 8 , declares that it shall not be lawful for the president of the United States to allow a dragoman at Constantinople a salary of more than two thousand five hundred dollars.

DRAIN. To conduct water from one place to ancther, for the purpose of drying the former.
The right of draining water through another man's land. This is an easement or servitude acquired by grant or prescription. See 3 Kent, Comm. $436 ; 7$ Mann. & G. 354 ; Washburn, Easements, Index.

DRAW. To drag (on a nurdle) to the place of execution. Anciently no hurdle was allowed, but the criminal was actually dragged along the road to the place of execution. A part of the ancient punishment of traitors was the being thus drawn. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 92, 377.
DRAWBACK. An allowance made by the government to merchants on the re-exportation of certain imported goods liable to duties, which in some cases consists of the whole, in cthers of a part, of the duties which had been paid upon the importation. For the various acts of congress which regulate drawbacks, see Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws.

DRAWEE. A person to whom a bill of exchange is addressed, and who is requested to pay the amount of money therein mentioned. See Bill of Exchange DRAWER. The party who makes a bill of exchange.

DRAWING. Every person who applies for a patent for an invention is required, by the act of congress of July 4, 1836, sec. 6, to furnish duplicate drawings illustrative of that invention: provided from the nature of the case the invention can be so illustrated. One of these drawings is to be kept on file in the patent-office, the other is intended to be attached to the patent when issued. Drawings are also required on application for a patent for a design. See Patents.

DRAWLATCHES. Thieves; robbers. Cowel.
DREIT DREIT. Droit droit. Deuble right. A union of the right of possession and the right of property. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 199.
DRIFTWAY. A road or way over which eattle are driven. 1 Taunt. 279; Selwyn, Nisi P. 1037; Wcolrych, Ways, 1. The term is in use in Rhode Island. 2 Hilliard, Abr. Prop. 33.
DRIP. - The right of drip is an casement by which the water which falls on one house is allowed to fall upon the land of another.
Unless the owner has acquired the right by grant or prescription, he has no right so to construct his house as to let the water drip over his neighbor's land. 1 Rolle, Abr. 107. See 3 Kent, Comm. 436 ; Dig. 43. 23. 4, 6 ; 11 Ad. & E. 40.
DRIVER. One employed in conducting a coach, carriage, wagon, or other vehicle, with horses, mules, or other animals.
2. Frequent accidents occur in consequence of the neglect or want of skill of drivers of public stage-coaches, for which the employers are responsible.
3. The law requires that a driver should possess reasonable skill and be of good habits for the journey: if, therefore, he is not acquainted with the road he undertakes to drive, 3 Bingh. 314 , 321 ; drives with reins so loose that he cannot govern his horses, 2 Esp. 533 ; does not give notice of any sorious danger on the road, 1 Campb. 67 ; takes the wrong side of the road, 4 Esp .273 ; incautiously comes in collision with another carriage, 1 Stark. 423 ; 1 Campb. 167 ; or does not exercise a sound and reasonable discretion in travelling on the road to avoid dangers and difficultios, and any accident happens by which any passenger is injured, both the driver and his employers will be responsible. 2 Stark. 37; 2 Esp. 533 ; 11 Mass. 57; 6 Term. 659; 1 East, 106; 4 Barnew. & Ald. $590 ; 2$ McLean, C. C. 157. See Comyon Carriers of Passengers.
DROF-LAND. (Drift-land.) A yearly payment made by some to their landlords for driving their cattle through the manor to fairs and markets. Cowel.
DROIT (Fr.). In French Law. Law. The whole body of law, written and unwritter.

A right. No law exists without a duty. Toullier, n. 96 ; Pothier, Droit.
In English Law. Right. Coke, Litt. 158.
A person was said to have droit droit, plurimum juris, and plurimum possessionis, when he bad the freehold, the fee, and the property in him. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 406.

DROIT D'ACCESSION. In French Law. That property which is acquired by making a new species ont of the material of another. Modus acquirandi quo quis cx aliena materià suo nomine novam specicm faciens bona fide ejus speciei dominium consequitur.

It is a rule of the civil law that if the thing can be reduced to the former matter it belongs to the owner of the matter, e.g. a statue made of gold ; but if it cannot so be reduced it belongs to the person who made it, e.g. a statue made of marble. This subject is treated of in the Code Civil de Napoleon, art. 565, 577 ; Merlin, Répert. Accession; Malleville's Discussion, art. 565. See Accession.

DROITS OF ADMIRALTY. Rights claimed by the government over the property of an enemy. In England, it has been usual in maritime wars for the government to seize and condemn, as droits of admiralty, the property of an enemy fonnd in her ports at the breaking out of hostilities. 1 C . Rob. Adm. 196; 13 Ves. Ch. 71; 1 Edw. Adm. 60; 3 Вов. & P. 191.

DROIT D'AUBAINE. A rule by which all the property of a deceased foreigner, whether movable or immovable, was confiscated to the use of the state, to the exclusion of his heirs, whether claiming ab intestato or under a will of the deceased.

The word aubaine signifies hospes loci, peregrinut advena, a stranger. It is derived, according to some, from alibi, elsewhere, natus, born, from which the word albinue is ssid to be formed. Others, as Cujas, derive the word directly from advenn, by which word aubains or strangers are desiganted in the capitularies of Charlemagne. Ses DuCange; Trévoux, Dict. Ses Aubaine.

DROIT-CLOSE. The name of an ancient writ directed to the lord of ancient demesne, and which lies for those tenants in ancient demesne who hold their lands and tenements by charter in fee-simple, in feetail, for life, or in dower. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev 23.

DROITURAL. What belongs of right; relating to right: as, real actions are either droitural or possessory,--droitural when the plaintiff seeks to recover the property. Finch, Law. 257.

DROVE-ROAD. A road for driving cattle. A right of way for carriages does not involve necessarily a right to drive cattle, or an easement of drove-road.
DRUGGIST. One who deals in medicinal substances, vegetable, animal, or mineral, uncompounded.
In Americs the term druggist is used synonymously with apothecary, although, strietly speaking, a druggist is one who deals in medicinsl substances, vegetahle, animal, or mingral, hefors heing compounded, which composition and combination are really the businoss of the apothecery. The term is here used in its double sense. In England an apothscary is a sub-physicisn, or privileged practitioner. He is the ordinary medical man, er family medical attendant, in that oountry.

The utmost care is required of those who prepare medicines or sell drugs, as the least carelessness may prove injurious to health or fatal in its results. Any mistake made by the druggist, if the result of ignorance or carelessness, renders him liable to the injured party. 13 B. Monr. Ky. 219; 7 N. Y. 397. An apothecary, or his apprentice, if guilty of criminal negligence, and fatal re sults follow, may be convicted of manslaughter. 1 Lew. Cr. Cas. 169.

DRUNKENNESS. In Medical Jurisprudence. The condition of a man whose mind.is affected by the immediate use of intoxicating drinks.
2. This condition presents various degrees of intensity, ranging from a simple exhilaration to a state of utter unconsciousness and insensibility. In the popular phrase, the term drunkennesis is applied only to those degrees of it in which the mind is manifestly disturbed in its operations. In the osrlier stages it frequently haprens that the mind is not only not disturbed, but sets with extracrdinary clearuess, promptitude, and rigor. In the latter the thoughts ohviously succeed ons another without mueh relevance or coherence, the pereeptive faeulties are active, but the impressions are misconeeived, as if they passed through a distorting medium, and the refleetive powers eesse to act with any degres of effeiency. Some of the intermediate stages may be easily reecgnized; hut it is not always possible to fix upon the exact moment when they suceeed ons another. In some persons peeuliarly eonstituted, a fit of intoxication presents few if any of these suceessive stages, snd the mind rapidly loses its self-control, sud for the tims is actually frenzied, as if in maniacal paroxysm, though the amount of the drink may be comparatively small. The same phenomeoon is observed sometimes in persons who have had some iojury of the head, who are deprived of thsir reason by the slight. st indulgence.
3. The babitual a buse of intoxicating drinks is usually followed hy a pathological condition of tho brain, which is manifested by a degree of intellectual obtuseaess, and soms insensibility to moral distioctions onee readily discerned. The mind is more exposed to the forcs of foreign influences, and more readily indueed to regard things in tho light to which others bave directed them. In others it produces a permanent mental derangement, which, it the person continues to indulge, is easily mistaken hy ecmmon observers for the immediate cffects of hard drinking. These two re-sults-the mediate and the immediate effects of drinking-may eoexist; but it is no less necessary to distinguish them from each other, beaause their legal consequenees may be very different. Moved by the latter, a person goes into the street and abuses or assaults his neighbors; moved by the former, the same person makes his will, and cuts off those who bave the strungest elaims upon his bounty with a shilling. In a judieial investigation, one elass of witpesses will attribute all his extravagances to drink, whils another will see octhing in them but the effeet of insanity. The medical jurist should not bs misled by either party, but bs able to refer esch particular act to its proper source.
4. Another remarkable form of drunkeoness is called dipsomania. Rather suddenly, and perbaps without much preliminary indulgence, a person manifests an insatiable thirst for strong drink, which no eonsiderstions of propriety or prudencs ean induce him to eontrol. He generally retires to some secluded place, and there, during a period of a few days or wceks. he swallows encrmous quantities of liquor, until his stomach refuses to hear any more. Vomiting sueceeds, followed hy siokness, depression, and disgust for all intoxieating drinks. This affection is often periodical, the paroxysms reourring at periods varying from thres months to several yanrs. Somstimes the indulgence is more continuous and limited, sufficient, however, to derange the mind, without producing sickness, and equally beyond control. Dipsomania may result fr m moral causes, such as anxiety, disappointment, grief, sense of responsibility; or physical, consisting chicfly of some anomalous condition of the stomach. Esquirol, Mal. Men. ii. 73 ; Marc, de la Folie, ii. 605; Ray, Med. Jur. 497; Macnish, Anatomy of Drunkenness, chap. 14.
5. The cemmon law shews but little disposition to afford relief, either in civil or criminal cases, from the immediate effects of drunkenness. It has never censidered mere drunkenness alone as a sufficient reason for invalidating any act. When carried so far as to deprive the party of all consciousuess, strong presumption of fraud is raised; and on that ground courts may interfere. 1 Ves. Ch. 19; 18 id . 12. Drunkenness in such a degree as to render the testator unconscious of what he is abont, or less capable of resisting the influence of others, avoids a will. Shelford, Lun. 274, 304. In actions for torts, drunkenness is not regarded as a reason for mitigating damages. Coke, Litt. $247 a$. Courts of equity, teo, have declined to interfere in favor of parties pleading intoxication in the performance of some civil act. 1 Story, Eq. 8232.
6. In England, drunkenness has never been admitted in extenuation for any offences committed under its immediate influence. "A drunkard who is voluntarius demo," says Coke, "hath no privilege thereby: whatever ill or hurt he deth, his drunkenness deth aggravate it." Lawyers have occasionally shown a disposition to distinguish hetween the guilt of one who commits an offence unconsciously, though in consequence of viciens indulgence, and that of anether who is actuated by malice aferethought and acts deliberately and coolly. In Pennsylvania; as early as 1794 , it was remarked by the courts on one occasion that, as drunkenness clouds the understanding and excites passion, it may be evidence of passion only, and of want of malice and design. Add. Penn. 257. In 1819, Justice Holroyd decided that the fact of drunkenness might he taken into consideration in determining the question whether the act was premeditated or done only with sudden heat and impulse. Rex $v$. Grundley, 1 Russell, Crimes, 8. This particular decision, however, was, a few years afterwards, pronounced to be not correct law. 7 Carr. & P. 145. Again, it was held that drunkenness, by rendering the party more excitable under provncation, might be taken into consideration in determining the sufficiency of the provocation. 7 Carr. & P. 817. More recently (1849), in Rex v. Monkhouse, 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 55 , it was declared that there might exist a state of drunkenness which takes away the pewer of forming any specific intention.
7. In this country, conrts bave gone still further in regarding drankenness as incompatible with some of the elements of crime. It has been held, where murder was defined to be wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing, that the existence of these attributes is not compatible with drunkenness. 13 Ala. n. s. 413 ; 4 Humphr. Tenn. 136; 9 id. $570 ; 11$ id. 154 ; 1 Speers, So. C. 384 .'

It has been already stated that strong drink sometimes, in consequence of injury of the head, or some peculiar constitutional susceptibility, produces a paroxysm of frenzy immediately, under the influence of which the person commits a criminal act. Cases of this kind have been too seldom tried to make it quite certain hew they weuld be regarded in law. It is probable, however, that the plea of insanity would ke deprived of its validity by the lact that, sane or insane, the party was confessedly drunk. In a case where injury of the head had been followed hy occasional parexysms of insanity, in one of which the prisoner killed his wife, it appeared that he bad just been drinking, and that intoxication had semetimes brought on the paroxysms, though they were not always preceded by drinking. The court ruled that if the mental disturbance were produced by intexication it was not a valid defence; and accordingly the prisener was convicted and executed. Trial of M'Donongh, Ray, Med. Jur. 514. The principle is that if a person voluntarily deprives himself of reason, he can claim ne exemption from the ordinary consequences of crime. 3 Paris & Fonbl. 39. Milder views have been advoeated by writers of note, and they will sooner or later, ne doubt, appear in judicial decisions. Mr. Alison, referring to the class of cases just mentioned, calls it inhuman to visit them with the extreme punishment etherwise suitable. Prin. of Crim. Law of Scotland, 654. Dipsomania weuld hardly be considered, in the present state of judicial opinion, a valid detence in a capital case. In minor cffences, especially if attended by extenuating circumstances, it might be more favorably regarded.
8. The law does recognize two kinds of inculpable drunkenness, viz.: that which is produced by the "unskilfulness of the physician," and that which is produced by the "contrivance of enemies." Russell, Crimes, 8. To these we should be disposed to add that ahove descriked, where the party drinks ne more liquer than he has habitually used without heing intuxicated, but which exerts an unusually potent effect on the brain, in consequence of certain pathological conditions. See 5 Gray, Mass. 86; 11 Cush. Mass. 479 ; 1 Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 113124.

DRY EXCHANGE. A term invented for disguising and covering usury,-in which something was pretended to pass on beth sides, when in truth nothing passed on one side; whence it was called dry. Stat. 3 IIen. VII. c. 5; Wolffius, Ins. Nat. $& 657$

DRY RENT. Rent-seck; a rent reserved witheut a clause of distress.

DUCAT. The name of a foreign coin.
The ducat, or sequin, was originally a gold coin of the middle ages, apparently a descendant from the bezant of the Greek-Roman Empire. For many centuries it constituted the principal international currency, being intended, or supposed, to be made of pure gold, though subsequently settled at a basis a little below. It is now nearly obsolete in every part of the world．Its average value is about $$ 2.26$ of our money．It is said they ap－ peared earliest in Venice，and that they hore the fol－ lowing motto：Sit tidi，Christe，datus，quem tu regis， iste Ducatus，－Whence the name ducat．
2．The silver ducat was formerly a coin of Na－ ples，Feighing three hundred and forty－eight grains， eight hundred and forty－two thousandths fine； consequent value，in our money，about eighty－one cents；hut it now existe only as a money of account．

DUCES TECUM LICET I」ANGUI－ DUS．A writ directing the sheriff to bring a person whom he returned as so sick that he could not he brought without endangering his life．Blount；Cowel．The writ is now obsolete．See Subpena Duces Tecum．

DUE．Just and proper．
A due presentment and demand of pay－ ment must be made．See 4 Rawle，Penn． 307 ； 3 Leigh，Va． 389 ； 3 Cranch， 300.

What ought to be paid；what may be de－ manded．

It differs from owing in this，that sometimes what is owing is not due：a note payable thirty days after date is owing immediately after it is delivered to the payce，hut it is not due until the thirty days have clapsed．

Bills of exchange and promissory notes are not due until the end of the three days of grace，unless the last of these days happen to fall on a Sunday or other holiday，when it becomes due on the Saturday before，and not on the Monday following．Story，Prom． Notes，$\% 440 ; 1$ Bell，Comm．410；Story， Bills，$& 233$ ； 2 Hill，N．Y． 587 ； 14 Me． 264.

DUE－BII工．An acknowledgment of a debt in writing is so called．This instru－ ment differs from a promissory note in many particulars：it is not payable to order，nor is it assignable by mere indorsement．See IOU；Promissory Notes．

DUE PROCESS OF LAW．Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice． 3 Story，Const．254，661； 18 How．272； 13 N．Y． 378.

This term，which oceurs in the amendments to the United States constitution and in the conetitu－ tions of several of the states，is considered by Coke as equivalent to the phrase＂law of the land＂（used in Magna Charta，c．29），and is said by him to denote＂indictment or presentment of good and lawful men．＂Coke，2d Inst．50．The full signifi－ cance of the clause＂law of the land＂is said by Ruffin，C．J．，to he that statutes which would de－ prive a citizen of the rights of person or property without a regular trial according to the course and usage of the common law would not be the law of the land． 4 Dev．No．C． 15 ．For different defini－ tions given to eimilar provisions occurring in the various state oonstitutions，see 19 Wend．N．Y． 659 ； 4 Hill，N．Y． $145 ; 2$ Speers，So．C．767； 2 Yerg． Tenn． 554 ； 10 id． 71 ； 3 Humphr．Tenn．483．And see further，on this suhjeot，Sullivan，Lect．402； Comyne，Dig．Imprisonment（H4）； 2 Kent，Comm． 13； 1 Reeve，Hist．Eng．Law， 249 ； 12 N．Y．202； 13 id．378； 18 id． $199 ;$ R．M．Charlt．Ga．302； 1 Surt．C．C．311； 11 How．437； 13 id． 142

DUM FUIT IN PRISONA（L．Lat．）． In English Law．A writ which lay for a man who had aliened lands under duress by imprisonment，to restore to him his proper estates．Coke，2d Inst． 482.

DUM FUIT INFRA FETATEM（Lat．）． The name of a writ which lies when an infant has made a feoffment in fee of his lands or for life，or a gift in tail．

It may be sued out by him after he comes of full age，and not before；but in the mean time he may enter，and his entry remits him to his ancestor＇s rights．Fitzherbert，Nat． Brev． 192 ；Coke，Litt．247， 337.

DUM NON FUIT COMPOS MEN－ TIS（Lat．）．The name of a writ which the heirs of a person who was non compos mentis， and who aliened his lands，might have sued out to restore him to his rights．

DUM SOIA（Lat．while single or un－ married）．A phrase applied to single wo－ men，to denote that something has been done， or may be done，while the woman is or vas unmarried．Thus，when a judgment is ren－ dered against a woman dum sola，and after－ wards she marries，the scire facias to revive the judgment must be against both husband and wife．

DUMB．One who cannot speak；a person who is mute．

DUMB－BIDDING．In sales at auction， when the amount which the owner of the thing sold is willing to take for the article is written，and placed by the owner under a candlestick，or other thing，and it is agrced that no bidding shall avail unless equal to that，this is called dumb－bidding．Babing－ ton，Auct． 44.

DUNGEON．A cell under ground；a place in a prison built under ground，dark， or but indifferently lighted．In the prisons of the United States there are few or no dun－ geons．

DUNNACE．Pieces of wood placed against the sides and bottom of the hold of a vessel，to preserve the cargo from the effect of leakage，according to its nature and quality．Abbott，Shipp． 227.

DUODECIMA MANUS (Lat.). Twelve hands. The vaths of twelve men, including himself, by whom the defendant was allowed to make his law. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 343.

DUPLEX QUERELA (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. A complaint in the nature of an appeal from the ordinary to his next immediate superior for delaying or refusing to do justice in some ecclesiastical cause. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 247; Cowel ; Jacobs.

DUPLEX VALOR MARITAGII (Lat. double the value of a marriage). Guardians in chivalry had the privilege of proposing a marriage for their infant wards, provided it were done without disparagement, and if the wards married without the guardian's consent they were liable to forfeit double the value of the marriage. Coke, Litt. 82 b; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 70.

DUPLICATE (Lat. duplex, double). The double of any thing. A document which is essentially the same as some other instrument. 7 Mann. & G. 93.

A duplicate writing has but one effect. Each duplicate is complete evidence of the intention of the parties. When a duplicate is destroyed, for example, in the case of a will, it is presumed both are intended to be destroyed; but this presumption possesses greater or less force, owing to circumstances. When only one of the duplicates is in the possession of the testator, the destruction of that is a strong presumption of an intent to revoke both; but if he possessed both, and destroys but one, it is weaker; when he alters one, and afterwards destroys it, retaining the other entire, it has been held that the intention was to revoke both. 1 P . Will. Ch. 346 ; 13 Ves. Ch. 310. But that seems to be doubted. 3 Hagg. Eccl. 548.

In English Law. The certificate of discharge given to an insolvent debtor who takes the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors.

DUPLICATIO (Lat. a doubling). The defendant's second answer ; that is, the answer to the plaintiff's replication.

DUPLICATUM JUS (Lat. a twofold or double right). Words which signify the same as dreit dreit, or droit droit, and which are applied to a writ of right, patent, and such other writs of right as are of the same nature, and do as it were flow from it as the writ of right. Booth, Real Act. 87.

DUPLICITY. In Pleading. (Lat. duplex, twofold; double.) The union of more than one cause of action in one court in a writ, or more than one defence in one place, or more than a single breach in a replication. 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 381.
2. The union of several facts constituting together but one cause of action, or one defence, or one breach, does not constitute duplicity. 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. $381 ; 10$ Vt. 353 ; 3 Harr. & M'H. Md. 455 ; 2 Blackf. Ind. 85; 4 Zabr. N. J. 333 ; 16 Ill. 133 ; 1 Dev. No.
C. 397 ; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 464 ; 10 Me. 83 ; 14 Pick. Mass. 156 ; 33 Miss. 474 ; 4 Ind. 109. It must be of causes on which the party relies, and not merely matter introduced in explanation. 28 Conn. 134; 14 Mass. 157. In trespass it is not duplicity to plead to part and justify or confess as to the residue. 17 Pick. Mass. 236. If only one defence le valid, the objection of duplicity is not sustained. 2 Blackf. Ind. 385; 14 Pick. Mass. 156.
3. It may exist in any part of the pleadings, declaration, 23 N. H. 415; 2 Harr. Del. 162, pleas, 4 McLean, C. C. 267; 2 Miss. 160, replication, 5 Blackf. 1nd. 451; 4 Ill. 74; 6 Mo .460 , or subsequent pleadings, 24 N. H. 120; 4 McLean, C. C. 388 ; 1 Wash. C. C. 446 ; 8 Pick. Mass. 72 ; and was at common law a fatal defect, 20 Mo .229 ; 23 N. H. 415, to be reached on special demurrer only. 18 Vt. 363 ; 10 Gratt. Va. 255 ; 13 Ark. 721 ; 1 Cush. Mass. 137; 5 Gill, Md. 94; 5 Blackf. Ind. 451. The rules against duplicity did not extend to dilatory pleas so as to prevent the use of the various classes in their proper order. Coke, Litt. $304 a$; Stephen, Plead. App. n. 56.

Owing to the statutory changes in the forms of pleading, duplicity seems to be no longer a defect in many of the states of the United States, either in declarations, 8 Ark. 378, pleas, 1 Cush. Mass. 137; 7 J.J. Marsh, Ky. 335 , or replications, 32 Mass. 104; 8 Ind. 96 ; though in some cases it is allowed only in the discretion of the court, for the furtherance of justice. 32 Mo. 185.

DUPIY. In Scotch Law. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. The same as duplicatio. Maclaurin, Forms of Pract. 127.
DURANTE ABSENTIA. See Administration.

DURANTE BENEPLACITO (Lat.). During good pleasure. The ancient tenure of English judges was durante beneplacito. 1 Sbarswood, Blackst. Comm. 267, 342.

DURANTE MINORE 届TATE (Lat.). During the minority.

During his minority an infant can enter into no contracts, except those for his benefit. If he should be appointed an executor, administration of the estate will be granted, durante minore atate, to another person. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1555.

DURANTE VIDUITATE (Lat.). During widowhood.

DURESS. Personal restraint, or fear of personal injury or imprisonment. 2 Metc. Ky. 445.

Duress of imprisonment exists where a man actually loses his liberty. If a man be illegally deprived of his liberty until he sign and seal a bond, or the like, he may allege this duress and avoid the bond. 2 Bay, So. C. 211; 9 Johns. N. Y. 201 ; 10 Pet. 137. But if a man be legally imprisoned, and, either to procure his discharge, or on any other fair account, seal a bond or a deed, this is not by duress of imprisonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it. Coke, 2 d Inst. 482 ; 3 Caines, N. Y. 168; 6 Mass. 511 ; 1 Lev. 69 ; 1 Hen. & M. Va. 350; 17 Me .338 . Where the proceedings at law are a mere pretext, the instrument may be avoided. AI. 92; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 136.

Duress per minas, which is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem or loss of limb, must be upon a sufficient reason. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 131. In this case, a man may avoid his own act. Lord Coke enumerates four instances in which a man may avoid his own act by reason of menaces:--for fear of loss of life; of member; of mayhem; of imprisonment. Coke, 2d Inst. 483; 2 Rolle, Abr. 124; Bacon, Abr. Duress, Murder, A; 2 Strange, 856 ; Foster, Cr. Law, 322; 2 Ld. Raym. 1578; Savigny, Dr. Rom. & 114.

It has been held that restraint of goods under circumstances of hardship will avoid a contract. 2 Bay, So. C. 211 ; 9 Johns. N. Y. 201 ; 10 Pet. 137. But see 2 Metc. Ky. 445 ; 2 Gall. C. C. 337.

The violence or threats must be such as are calculated to operate on a person of ordinary firmness and inspire a just fear of great injury to person, reputation, or fortune. The age, sex, state of health, temper, and disposition of the party, and other circumstances calculated to give greater or less effect to the violence or threats, must be taken into consideration.

Violence or threats are cause of nullity, not only where they are exercised on the contracting party, but when the wife, the husband, the descendants or ascendants, of the party are the object of them.

If the violence used be only a legal constraint, or the threats only of doing that which the party using them had a right to do, they shall not invalidate the contract. A just and legal imprisonment, or threats of any measure authorized by law and the circumstances of the case, are of this description. See Norris Peake's Evid. 440, and the cases cited, also, 6 Mass. Rep. 506, for the general rule at common law.

But the mere forms of law to cover coercive proceedings for an unjust and illegal cause, if used or threatened in order to procure the assent to a contract, will invalidate it ; and arrest without cause of action, or a demand of bail in an unreasonable sum, or threat of such proceeding, by this rule invalidate a contract made under their pressure.
All the above articles relate to cases where there may be some other motive besides the violence or threats for making the contract. When, however, there is no other cause for making the contract, any threats, even of slight injury, will invalidate it. Id. 1853.

See, generally, 2 Watts, Penn. 167 ; 1 Bail. So. C. 84; 6 Mass. 511 ; 6 N. H. 508; 2 Gall. C. C. 337.

DUties. In its most enlarged sense, this word is nearly equivalent to taxes, embracing all impositions or charges levied on persons or things; in its more restrained sense, it is often used as equiralent to customs, or imposts. Story, Const. 8949 . See, for the rate of duties payable on goods and merchandise, Brightly, U. S. Dig. Index.

DUTY. A human action which is exactly conformable to the laws which require us to obey them.

It differs from a legal obligation, because a duty cannot always he enforced by the law: it is our duty, for example, to be temperate in eating, hut we arc under no legal obligation to be so; we ought to love our neighbors, but no law obliges us to love them.

DWELLING-HOUSE. A building inhabited by man. A house usually occupied by the person there residing, and his family. The apartment, building, or cluster of buildings in which a man with his family resides. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8165.
The importance of an exact signification for this word is often felt in criminal oases; and yet it is very difficult to frame an exact definition which will apply to all cases. It is said to he equivalent to mansion-house. 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 199; 4 Strohh. So. C. 372; 13 Bost. Lsw Rep. 157; 7 Mann. & G. 122. See 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 181; 4 C. B. 105; 4 Call, Va. 109.
It must be a permanent structure, 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 557; 1 Russcll, Crimes, Greaves ed. 798; must be inhabited at the time. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 490; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 1018, n.; 33 Me. 30; 26 Ala. n. s. 145 ; 10 Cush. Mass. 479; 18 Johns. N. Y. 115 ; 4 Call, Va. 109. It is sufficient if a part of the structure only be used for an abode. DYING DECLARATIONS. See Declarations.

DYING WITHOUT ISSUE. Not having issue living at the death of the decedent. 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 514. In Eng. land this is the signification, by statutes 7 Will. IV., 1 Vict. c. $26, z$ 29. See 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 362 et seq.

DYNASTY. A succession of kings in the same line or family.

DYSNOMY. Bad legislation; the enactment of had laws.

DYSPEPSIA. A state of the stomach in which its functions are disturbed, without the presence of other diseases, or when, if other diseases are present, they are of minor importance. Dunglison, Med. Dict.

Dyspepsia is not, in general, considered as a disease which tends to shorten life, so as to make a life uninsurable, unless the complaint has become organic dyspepsia, or was of such a degree at the time of the insurance as by its excess to tend to shorten life. 4 Taunt. 763.

DYVOUR. In Scotch Law. A bankrupt.

DYVOUR'S HABIT. In Scotch Law.
A habit which debtors who are set free on a cessio bonorum are obliged to wear, unless in the summons and process of cessio it be libelled, sustained, and proved that the bankruptey proceeds from misfortune. And bankrupts are condemned to submit to the habit, even where no suspicion of fraud lies against them, if they have been dealers in an illicit trade. Erskine, Pract. Scot. 4, 3, 13.

E.

E CONVERSO (Lat.). On the other hand; on the contrary.

E PLURIBUS UNUM (Lat. one from more). The motto of the United States coat of arms.

EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of ten dollars.

It weighs two hundred and fifty-eight grains of standard fineness; that is to say, of one thousand parts by weight, nine hundred shall be of pure metal and one hundred of alloy, the alloy consisting of silver and copper. For proportion of alloy in gold coins of the United States since 1853, see Half-eagle. For all sums whatever the eagle is a legal tender of payment for ten dollars. Act of Jan. 18, 1837, & 10; 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 138.

EALDERMAN (Sax.). A Saxon title of honor. It was a mark of honor very widely applicable, the ealdermen being of various ranks. It is the same as alderman, which see.

EAR-MARK. A mark put upon a thing for the purpose of distinction. Money in a bag tied and labelled is said to have an earmark. 3 Maule & S. 575.

EAR-WITNESS. One who attests to things he has heard himself.

EARL. In English Law. A title of nobility next below a marquis and ahove a viscount.

Earls were anciently called enmites, because they were wont comitari regem, to wait npon the king for counsel and advice. They were also called shiremen, because each earl had the civil government of a shire. After the Norman conquest they were called counts, whence the shires obtained the names of counties. They have now nothing to do with the government of counties, which has entirely devolved on the sheriff, the earl's deputy, or vicecomes.

EARL MARSHAL. An officer who formerly was of great repute in England. He held the court of chivalry alone as a court of honor, and in connection with the lord high constable as a court having criminal jurisdiction. 3 Blackstone. Comm. 68; 4id. 467. The duties of the office now are restricted to the settlement of matters of form merely. It would appear, from similarity of duties and from the derivation of the title, to be a relic of the ancient office of alderman of all England. See Alderman.

EARLDOM. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. The dignity only remains now, as the jurisdiction has been given over to the sheriff. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 339.

EARNEST. The payment of a part of the price of goods sold, or the delivery of part of such goods, for the purpose of binding the contract.

The effect of earnest is to bind the goods cold; and, upon their being paid for without default, the buyer is entitled to them. But; notwithstanding the earnest, the money must be paid upon taking away the goods, hecause no other time for payment is appointed; earnest only binds the liargain, and gives the buyer a right to demaud, hut a demand without payment of the money is void; after earnest given, the vendor cannot sell the goods to another without a default in the vendee, and therefore, if the latter does not come and pay, and take the goods, the vendor ought to go and request him, and then, if he does not come, pay for the goods, and take them away in convenient time, the agreement is dissolved, and he is at liberty to sell them to any other person. 1 Salk. 113; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 447; 2 Kent, Comm. 389 ; Ayliffe, Pand. $450 ; 3$ Campb. 426.

EASEMENT. A right in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with a general property in the owner. 2 W ashburn, Real Prop. 25.

A privilege which the owner of one adjacent tenement hath of another, existing in respect of their several tenements, by which that owner against whose tenement the privilege exists is obliged to suffer or not to do something on or in regard to his own land for the advantage of him in whose land the privilege exists. Termes de la Ley, Easements; Bell, Law Dict. (ed. 1838) Easements, Servitude; 1 Serg. \& R. Penn. 298; 3 Barnew. \&C.339; 5 id. 221 ; 3 Bingh. 118; 2 M'Cord, $^{\prime}$ So. C. 451 ; 3 id. 131, 194; 14 Mass. 49 ; 3 Pick. Mass. 408.
In the civil law, the land against which the privilege exists is called the servient tenement; its proprietor, the servient owner; he in whose favor it exists, the dominant owner; his land. the dominant tenement. And, as these rights are not personal and do not change with the persons who may own the respective estates, it is very common to personify the estates as themselves owning or enjoying the easements. 4 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 72; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 254; 16 Pick. Mass. 522.
2. Easements have these essential qualities. There must be two tenements owned by several proprietors: the dominant, to which the privilege is attached; the servient, upon which it is imposed. Tudor, Lead. Cas. 108; 17 Mass. 443. Easements, strictly considered, exist only in favor of, and are imposed only on, corporeal property. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 25. They confer no right to any profits arising from the servient tenement. 4 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 72; 4 Pick. Mass. 145; 5 Ad. & E. 758; 30 Eng. L. & Eq. 189; 3 Nev. & P. 257. They are incorporeal. By the common law, they may be temporary; by the civil law, the cause must be perpetual. They impose no duty on the servient owner, except not to change his tenement to the prejndice or destruction of the privilege. Gale, Easem. 3d ed. 1-18; Washburn, Easem. Index.
3. Easements are as various as the exigences of domestic convenience or the purposes to which buildings and land may be applied.
The following attach to land as incidents or appurtenances, viz.: the right-
Of pasture on other land; of fishing in other waters; of taking game on other land; of way over other land; of taking wood, minerals, or other produce of the soil from other land; of receiving air, light, or heat from or over other land; of receiving or discharging water over, or having support to buildings from, other land, 3 Ell. B. & E. 655 ; of going on other land to clear a mill-stream, or repair its banks, or draw water from a spring there, or to do some other act not involving ownership; of carrying on an offensive trade, 2 Bingh. n. c. 134; 5 Metc. Mass. 8; of hurying in a church, or a particular vault. Washburn, Easem.; N. Y. Civ. Code, pp. 149, 150; 8 Hon. L. Cas. 362; 3 Barnew. & Ad. 735 ; 11 Q. B. 666.
4. Some of these are affirmative or posi-tive,-i.e. anthorizing the commission of acts on the lands of another actually injurious to it: as, a right of way,-or negative, being only consequentially injurious: as, forbidding the owner from building to the obstruction of light to the dominant tenement. Tudor, Lead. Cas. 107; 2 Washbnrn, Real Prop. 26.

All easements must originate in a grant or agreement, express or implied, of the owner of the servient tenement. The evidence of their existence, by the common law, may be by proof of the agreement itself, or by prescription, requiring actual and uninterrupted enjoyment immemorially, or for upwards of twenty years, to the extent of the easement claimed, from which a grant is implied. A negative easement does not admit of possession; and, by the civil law, it cannot be acquired by prescription, and can only be proved by grant. Use, therefore, is not essential to its existence. Gale, Easem. 23, 81, 128; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 263; Bell, Law Dict. Servitudes.

In this country the use of windows to upwards of twenty years seems in severa of the states, contrary to the English rule and conformable to the rule of the civil law not to be evidence of a right to tontinue ther as against an adjoining owner. See Anciend Ligets; 19 Wend. N. Y. 309; 2 Conn. 597 10 Ala. N. s. 63; 6 Gray, Mass. 255; 26 Me 436; 16 Ill. 217.
5. Easements are extinguished: by re. lease; by merger, when the two tenemente in respect of which they exist are united under the same title and to the same person: by nocessity, as by a license to the servieni owner to do some act inconsistent with its existence; by cessation of enjoyment, when acquired by prescription,-wthe non-user being ovidence of a relcase where the abandonmeni has continued at least as long as the user from which the right arose. In some cases a shorter time will suffice. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 56-60, 82-85, 453-456; Wasbburn, Easem. EAStern tebim. In English Law. One of the four terms of the courts. It is now a fixed term, beginning on the 15 th of April and ending the 8th of May in every year. It was formerly a movable term.
EAT INDE GINY DIE. Words used on an acquittal, or when a prisoner is to be discharged, that he may go without day; that is, that he be dismissed. Dane, Abr. Index.

EAVES-DROPPERS. In Criminal

 Law. Such persons as wait under walls or windows or the eaves of a bouse, to listen to discourses and thereupon to frame mischievous tales.The conmoñ-law punishment for this offence is fine and finding sureties for good behavior. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 167; Dane, Abr. Index ; 1 Russell, Crimes, 302; 2 Ov. Tenn. 108.
aCCHYMOGIS. In Medical Jurispıudence. Rlackness. It is an estravasation of blood by rupture of capillary vessels, and hence it follows contusion; but it. may exist, as in cases of scurvy and other morbid conditions, without the latter. Ryan, Med. Jur. 172.
ECCXISIA (Lat.). An assemblyy. A Christian assembly; a church. A place of religious worship. Spelman, Gloss.
In the civil law this word retains its clasgical meaning of an assembly of whatever character. DuCange; Calvinns, Lex.; Vicat. Voc. Jur.; Acts xix. 39. Ordinarily in the New Testament the word denotes a Christian assembly, and is rendered into English by the word church. It occurs iwice in the gospels, Matt. xvi. 18, xviii. 17. but frequently in the other psrts of the New Testament, heginning with Aets ii. 47. Ecclesia there never denotes the huilding, howerer, as its English equivalent church does. In the law, generally, the word is used to denote a place of religious worship. Spelman, Gloss. See Ceurce.
ECCLESIASTIC. A clergyman; one destined to the divine ministry: as, a bishop, a priest, a deacon. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. prél. t. 2, s. 2, n. 14.

ECCLESIASTICAL CORPORA-

 TIONS. Such corporations as are composed of persons who take a lively interest in the advancement of religion, and who are associated and incorporated for that purpose. Angell & A. Corp. & 36.Corporations whose members are spiritual persons are distinguished from lay corporations. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 470. They are generally called religious corporations in the United States. 2 Kent, Comm. 274; Angell & A. Corp. 837.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS (called, also, Courts Christian). In English Ecclesiastical Law. The generic name for certain courts in England having cognizance mainly of spiritual matters.

The jurisdiction which they formerly exercised in testamentary and matrimonial causes has been taken away. Stat. $20 & 21$ Vict. c. 77, & 3, c. 85, & 2; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95. See 3 Blackstone, Comm. 67.

They consist of the archdeacon's court, the consistory courts, the court of arches, the court of peculiars, the prerogative courts of the two archbishops, the faculty court, and, on appeal, the privy council.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW. The law of the church.

The existence in England of a separate order of ecclesiastical courts, and a separate system of law by them administered, may be traced back to the time of William the Conqueror, who eeparated the civil and the ecclesiastical jurisdictions, and forbade tribunsls of either clase from assuming eagnizance of cases pertaining to the other. The elements of the English ecclesiastical law sre the canon law, the civil law, the common lew of England, snd the statutes of the realm. The jurisdiction of the ecclesiastioal tribunals extended to matters concerning the order of clergy snd their discipline, and slso to such affairs of the laity ss "concern the health of the soul;" and under this latter theory it grasped slso cases of marriage and divorce, and testamentary causes. But in very recent times, 1830-1858, these latter subjects have been taken from these courts, snd they are now eubetantially confined to administering the judicisl authority sud discipline incident to a national ecclesiastical establishment. See, also, Canon Law.

ECLAMPSIA PARTURIENTIUM. In Medical Jurisprudence. The name of a disease accompanied by apoplectic convulsions, and which produces aberration of mind at childbirth.

The word eclampsia is of Greek origin. Significat eplendorem fulgorem effulgentiam, et emicationem quales ex oculis aliquando prodeunt. Metaphorice sumitur de emicatione flammse vitulis in pubertate et æetatis vigore. Castelli, Lex. Medic.

An ordinsry person, it is said, would ecarcely ohserve it, and it requires the prsctised snd skilled eye of a physician to discover thst the pstient is acting in total unconsciousness of the nsture and effect of her sets. There cs.n he but little douht that many of the tragical cases of infanticide proceed from this cause. The criminal judge snd lswyer esnnot inquire with too much care into the symptoms of this disesse, in order to discover the guilt of the mother, where it exists, and to ssoertsin her innooence, where it doee not. See two well-reported cases of this kind in the Boston Medical Journsl, vol. 27, no. 10, p. 161.
EDICT (Lat. edictum).
A law ordained by the sovereign, by which he forbids or commands something: it extends either to the whole country or only to some particular provinces.

Edicte are somewhat similar to public proclsmativns. Their difference consitst in this, that the former hsve suthority and form of law in themselves, whereas the latter sre, st most, declarstions of a law hefore enscted.
Among the Romans this word sometimes signified a citation to appcar before a judge. The edicts of the emperors, also called constitutiones principium, were new laws which they msde of their own motion, either to decide csses which they had foreseen, or to abolish or change some sncient lsws. They were different from rescripts or decrces, which were answers given in deciding questions brought before them. These edicts contributed to the formation of the Gregorian, Hermogenian, Theodosian, and Justinisn codes. See Dig. 1. 4. 1. 1; Inst. 1. 2. 7 ; Code, 1. 1; Nov. 139.

EDICTS OF JUSTINIAN. Thirteen constitutions or laws of this prince, found in most editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, after the Novels. Being confined to matters of police in the provinces of the empire, they are of little use.

EDICTUM PERPETUUM (Lat.). The title of a compilation of all the edicts. The collection is in fifty books, and was made by Salvius Julianus, a jurist acting by command of the emperor Adrian.

Parts of this collection are cited in the Digest.

EPFECT. The operation of a law, of an agreement, or an act, is called its effect.

By the laws of the United States, a patent cannot be granted for an effect only, but it may be for a new mode or application of machinery to produce offects. 1 Gall. C. C. 478. See 4 Mas. C. C. 1 ; 1 Pet. C. C. 394 ; 2 N. H. 61.

EFFECTS. Property, or worldly substance. As thus used, it denotes property in a more extensive sense than goods. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 284.

In a will, "effects" may carry the whole personal estate, 5 Madd. Ch. 72; 6 id. 119 ; Cowp. 299; 15 Ves. Ch. 507; but not real estate, unless the word "real" be added. 2 Powell, Dev. Jarman ed. 167; 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 450 . When preceded or followed in a will hy words of narrower import, if the bequest is not residuary, it will be confined to species of property of the same kind (ejusdem generis) with those previously described. 13 Ves. Ch. 39 ; 15 id. 326 ; Roper, Leg. 210. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 384, n.
When "the effects" passes realty, and when personalty, in a will, see 1 Jarman, Wills, Perk. ed. 585, 590, 591, n.

EFFIGY. The figure or representation of a person.

To make the effigy of a person with an intent to make him the object of ridicule, is a libel (q.v.). Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 2; 14 East, 227 ; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 866.
In France an execution by effigy or in effigy is adopted in the case of a criminal who has fled from justice. By the public exposure or exhibition of a picture or representation of him on a scaffold, on Which his name and the deoree condemning him wre written, he is deemed to undergo the punishtreat to which he has been sentenced. Since the adoption of the Code Civil, the practice has heen to affix the names, qualities, or addition, and the fesidence, of the oondemned person, together with an extract from the sentence of condemnation, to a post set upright in the ground, instead of exhibiting a portrait of him on the acaffeld. Répert. de Villargues; Biret, Vocab.

EFFRACTION. A breach made by the use of force.

EFFRACTOR. One who breaks through; one who commits a burglary.

EGO. I, myself. This term is used in forming genealogical tables, to represent the person who is the object of inquiry.

EIGNE. A corruption of the French word aine. Eldest, or first-born.

It is frequently used in our old law-books: bastard eigne signifies an elder bastard when spoken of two children, one of whom was born before the marriage of his parents and the other after : the latter is called mulier puisne. Littleton, sect. 399.

EIK. In Scotch Law. An addition: as, $e i k$ to a reversion, eik to a confirmation. Bell, Dict.

EINETIUS. In English Law. The oldest; the first-born. Spelman, Gloss.

EIRE, or EYRE. In English Law. A journey.
Justices in eyre were itinerant judges, who were sent once in seven years with a general commission into divers counties, to hear and determine such causes as were called pleas of the crown. See Justices in Eyre.

EISNE. The senior; the oldest son. Spelled, also, eigne, einsne, aisne, eign. Termes de la Ley; 1 Kelham.

EISNETIA, EINETIA (Lat.). The share of the oldest son. The portion acquired by primogeniture. Termes de la Ley; Coke, Litt. 166 b; Cowel.

EJECTIONE CUSTODIF (Lat.). A

 writ which lay for a guardian to recover the land or person of his ward, or both, where he had been deprived of the possession of them. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 139, L. ; Coke, Litt. 199.EJECTIONE FIRM共 (Lat. ejectment from a farm). This writ lay where lands or tenements were let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or a stranger ejected or ousted the lessee of his term. The plaintiff, if he prevailed, recovered the term with damages. This writ is the original foundation of the action of jectment. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 199;

EJECTMENT (Lat. e, out of, jacere, to throw, cast; ejicere, to cast out, to eject).
In Practice. A form of action by which possessory titles to corporeal hereditaments may be tried and possession obtained.
A form of action which lies to regain the possession of real property, with damages for the unlawful detention.
In its origin, this action was an aotion of trespass which lay for a tenant for years, to recover damages against a persen who had ousted him of his possession without right. To the judgment for domages the courts soon added a judgment for possession, upon which the plaintiff hecame entitled to a writ of possession. As the disadvantages of real actions as a means of recovering landa for the benefit of the real owner from the possession of one who held them without title beeame a aerious obstacle to their use, thia form of action was taken advantage of by Ch. J. Rolle to accomplish the same result.

In the original action, the plaintiff had been obliged to prove a lease from the person shown to have title, on entry uader the lease, and an ouster by some third person. The modified action as sanctioned by Rolle was brought by a fictitious person as lessee against another fietitious persen (the casual ejecter) alleged to have committed the ouster. Service was made upon the tenatit in possessien, with a notice annexed from the casual ejector to appeal and defend. If the tenant failed to do this, judgment was given by default and the claimant put in possession. If he did appear, he was allowed to defend only by entering into the consent rule, by which he confessed the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster to have been made, leaving only the title ia queation. The tenant by a subsequent statute was obliged, under heary penalties, to give notice to his lessor of the pendency of the acticn.
The action has heen superseded in England by a form preseribed by the Common Law Procedure Act (1852, $z z$ 170-220), and has heen materially modified in many of the states of the United States, though still retaining the name; but is retained in ita original form in others, and in the United States ccurts for those states in which it exiated when the circuit courts were organized. In some of the United States it has never been in use. Sce 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 198-207.
2. The action lies for the recovery of corporeal hereditaments only, 7 Watts, Pa. 318; 5 Denio, N. Y. 389, including a room in a house, 1 Harris, N. EJECTUM. That which is thrown up by the sea. 1 Pet. Adm. App. 43.

EJERCITORIA. In Spanish Law. The action which lies against the owner of a vessel for debts contracted by the master, or contracts entered into by him, for the purpose of repairing, rigging, and victualling the same.

EJUSDEM GENERIS (Lat.). Of the same kind.

In the construction of laws, wills, and other instruments, when certain things are enumerated, and then a phrase is used which might be construed to include other things, it is generally confined to things ejuedem generis: as, where an act (9 Anne, c. 20) provided that a writ of quo warranto might issue against persons who should nsurp " the offices of mayors, bailiffs, port-reeves, and other offices, within the cities, towns, corporate boroughs, and pluces, within Great Britsin," etc., it was held that "other offices" meant offices ejusdem generis, and that the word "places" signified places of the same kind; that is, that the offices must be corporate offices, and the places must be corporate places. 5 Term, 375, 379; 1 Barnew. & C. 237; 5 id. 640; 8 Dowl. & R. 393.
So, in the construction of wills, when certain articles are enumerated, the term goode is to be restricted to those ejusdem generis. Bacon, Abr. Legaeies, B; 3 Rand. Va. 191; 2 Atk. Ch. 113; 3 id. 61.

ELDEST. He or she who has the greatest age.

The laws of primogeniture are not in force in the United States: the eldest child of a family cannot, therefore, claim any right in consequence of being the eldest.

ELECTION. Choice; selection. The selection of one man from amongst more to discharge certain duties in a state, corporation, or society.

The obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both.
Etymologically, election denotes choice, selection out of the number of those choosing. Thus, the election of a governor would he the choice of someindividual from the body of the electors to perform the duties of governor. In common use, however, it has come to denote such a selection made hy a distinotly defined body-as a board of aldermen, a corporation, or state-conducted in such a manner that each individual of the body choosing shsll have an equal voice in the choioe, hut without regard to the question whether the person to be chusen is a member of the body or not. The word cccurs in law frsquently in such a sense, especially iu governmontal law and the law of corporstions.

But the torm has slso sequired a more technical signification, in which it is oftener used as a legal tsrm, which is substantially the choice of one of two rights or things, to each nne of which the party choosing has equsl right, but both of which he cannot hsve. This option occurs in fewer instances at law than in equity, and is in the former hrench, in general, a question of practics.

At Law. In contracts, when a debtor is obliged in an alternative obligation to do one of two things, as to pay one hundred dollars or deliver one hundred bushels of wheat, he has the choice to do one or the other until the time of payment ; he has not the choice, however, to pay a part in each. Pothier, Obl. part 2, c. 3, art. 6, no. 247; 11 Johns. N. Y. 59. Or, if a man sell or agree to deliver one of two articles, as a horse or an ox, he has the election till the time of delivery,-it being a rule that, "in case an election be given of two several things, always he which is the first agent, and which ought to do the first act, shall have the election." Coke, Litt. $145 a ; 7$ Johns. N. Y. 465 ; 2 Bibb, Ky. 171. On the failure of the person who has the right to make his election in proper time, the right passes to the opposite party. Coke, Litt. 145 a; Viner, Abr. Election (B, C) ; Pothier, Obl. no. 247 ; Bacon, Abr. Election, B; 1 Des. Ch. So. C. 460 ; Hopk. Ch. N. Y. 337 . It is a maxim of law that, an election once made and pleaded, the party is concluded : electio semel facta, et placitum testatum,non patitur regressum. Coke, Litt. 146; 11 Johns. N. Y. 241.

Other cases in law arise: as in case of a person holding land by two inconsistent titles, 1 Jenk. Cent. Oas. 27, dower in a piece of land and that piece for which it was exchanged. 3 Leon. 271. See Sugden, Pow. 498 et seq.

In Equity. The doctrine of election presupposes a plurality of gifts or rights, with an intention, express or implied, of the party who has a right to control one or both, that one should be a substitute for the other. 1 Swanst. Ch. 394, note (b); 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 491 ; 2 Roper, Leg. White ed. 480-578.

Where an express and positive election is required, there is no claim, either at law or in equity, to but one of the ohjects between which election is to be made; but in many cases there is apparent, from the whole of an instrument, the intention that the party to be benefited shall be benefited on certain conditions. In such cases, equity will require the party to elect.

The question whether an election is required occurs most frequently in case of devises; but it extends to deeds, 1 Swanst. Ch. 400, 401 ; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. & 1075, n. ; but there must be a clear intention by the testator to give that which is not his property, 1 Sim. Ch. 105 ; 18 Ves. Ch. 41 ; 1 Ed. Ch. 532; cases of transactions involving property of the wife, 23 Beav. Rolls, 457 ; 25 id. 97 ; satisfaction of dower, Ambl. Ch. 466, 682; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. $325 ; 2$ Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 452 ; 14 Sim. Ch. $258 ; 2$ Ed. Ch. 237; 1 Drur. & Warr. 107. And if the testator has some interest in the thing disposed, the presumption that he intended to dispose only of his interest must be overruled to make a case of election. 6 Dow, 149, 179; 1 Ves. Ch. 515.

The doctrine does not apply to creditors. 12 Ves. Ch. 354 ; 1 Powell, Dev. Jarman ed. 437.

An election may be made by persons under legal disabilities as to conveyances. 4 Kay & J. Ch. 409 ; 9 Mod. 35 ; 1 Swanst. Ch. 413 ; 2 Mer. Ch. 483. See 1 Macn. & G. 551; 9 Beav. Positive acts of acceptance or renunciation are not indispensable, but the question is to be determined from the circumstances of eacb case as it arises. 4 Beav. Rolls, 103; 21 id. 447 ; 13 Price, Exch. 782; 1 M'Clel. 541 ; 15 Penn. 430. And the election need not be made till all the circumstances are known. 1 Brown, Ch. 186, 445 ; 3 id. 255 ; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. 222 ; 12 Ves. Ch. 136 ; 1 M'Clel. & Y. 569. Sce, generally, 2 Story, Eq. Jur. $3_{6}$ 1075-1098; 1 Swanst. Ch. 402, note; 2 Roper, Leg. White ed. 480-578.

In Practice. A choice between two or more means of redress for an injury or the punishment of a crime allowed by law.

The selection of one of several forms of action allowed by law.

The choice of remedies is matter demanding practical judgment of what will, upon the whole, hest securs the end to be sttained. Thus, a remedy msy bs furnisbed by law or equity, and st law, in a variety of actions resembling each other in si me particulsrs. Actually, however, thechoice is greatly narrowed by ststutory regulstions in modern law, in most csses. See 1 Chitty, Plead. 207-214

It may be laid down as a general rule that when a statute prescribes a new remcdy the plaintiff has his election either to adopt euch remedy or proceed at common law. Such statutory remedy is cumulative, unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication takes away the common-law remedy. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 32; 6 id. 20 ; 5 Johne. N. Y. 175; 10 id. 389 ; 16 id. $220 ; 1$ Call, 243 ; 2 Me . 404; 5 id. 38 ; 6 Harr. & J. Md. 383; 4 Halst. 384; 3 Chitty, Pract. 130.

In Criminal Law. In point of law, no objection can be raised, either on demurrer or in arrest of judgment, though the defendant or defendants be charged in different counts of an indictment with different offences of the same kind. Indeed, on the face of the record every count purports to be for a separate offence, and in misdemeanors it is the daily practice to receive evidence of several libels, several assaults, several acts of fraud, and the like, upon the same indictment. In cases of felony, the courts, in the exercise of a sound discretion, are accustomed to quash indictments containing several distinct charges, when it appears, before the defendant has pleaded and the jury are charged, that the inquiry is to include several crimes. When this circumstance is discovered during the progress of the trial, the prosecutor is usually called upon to select one felony, and to confine himself to that, unless the offences, though in law distinet, seem to constitute in fact but parts of one continuous transaction. Thus, if a prisoner is charged with receiving several articles, knowing them to have been stolen, and it is proved that they were received at separate times, the prosecutor may be put to his election; but if it is possible that all the goods may have been received at one time, he cannot be compelled to abandon any part of his aceusation. 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 146; 2 Mood. & R. 524. In another ease, the defendant was eharged in a single count with uttering twenty-two forged receipts, which were severally set out and purported to be signed by different persons, with intent to defraud the king. His counsel contended that the proseentor ought to elect upon which of these reeeipts he would proceed, as amidst such a variety it would be almost impossible for the prisoner to conduct his defence. As, however, the indictment alleged that they were all uttered at one and the same time, and the proof corresponded with this allegation, the court refused to interfere; and all the judges subsequently held that a proper discretion had been exercised. 2 Leaeh, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 877 ; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 934. See 8 East, 41 ; 2 Campl. 132; 3 Term, 106; 11 Clark & F. Hon. L. 155 ; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 427; 5 Metc. Mass. 532; 12 Cush. Mass. 612, 615; 12 Serg. & R. ELECTOR. One who has the right to make choice of publie offeers; one who has a right to vote.

The qualifications of electors are generally the same as those required in the person to be elected. To this, however, there is one exeeption: a naturalized citizen may be an eleetor of president of the United States, although he eould not constitationally be elected to that office. See the articles on the varions states.

ELECTORS OF PRESIDENT. Persons eleeted by the people, whose sole duty is to elect a president and viee-president of the United States.

The constitution provides, Amend. art. 12, that "the electers shall meet io their respective states, and vote by ballot for president aod vice-president, one of whem, at least, shall net be an inhabitant of the sume state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the persen voted for as presideat, and in distinct ballets the persen veted fer as vicepresident; aod they shall make distinct lists of all persons veted for as president, and of all persoos voted for as vice-president, and of the number of votes fer each; which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the geveroment of the United States, directed to the president of the senate; the president of the senate shall, in the presence of the senate and the heuse of representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted; the persen having the greatest number of vetes for president shall be the president, if such number be the majerity of the whole number of electors sppeinted; aod if ne person have such majerity, then from the persons haviog the bighest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of these veted for as president, the house of representatives shall ohoose immediately, by ballot, the president. But in cheosing the president the votes shall be taken by states, the representation frem each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpese shall consist of a member or members frum twe-thirds of the states, and a majerity of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the house of representatives shall not choose a president, whenever the right of cheice shall develve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, theo the vicc-president shall act as president, as in the case of the death or other censtitutional disubility of the president.
"The persun having the greatest number of vetes as vice-president shall be vicc-president, if such number be a majority of the whele number of electors appointed; and if ne persen have a majority, then from the twe highest numbers en the list the senate shall cheose the vice-president ; a querum for the purpose shall censist of twe-thirds of the whele number of senaters, and a majerity of the whele number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the effice of president shall be cligible to that of vicepresident of the United States." See 3 Story, Const. 823 1448-1470.

ELEEMOSYNARIUS (Lat.). An almoner. There was formerly a lord almoner to the kings of England, whose duties are described in Fleta, lib. 2, cap. 23. A chief officer who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distribnted them to pions and charitable uses. Cowel.

ELEEMOSYNARY CORPORATIONS. Such private corporations as are instituted for purposes of charity, their object being the perpetnal distribution of the bounty of the founder of them to such persons as he direeted. Of this kind are hospitals for the rolief of the impotent, indigent, sick, and deaf or dumb. Angell & A. Curp. & 39; 1 Kyd, Corp. 26; 4 Conn. 272; 3 Bland, Ch. Md. 407; 1 Ld. Raym. 5; 2 Term, 346. The distinction between ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations is well illustrated in the Dartmouth College ease, 4 Wheat. 681. See, also, Angell & A. Corp. & 39; 1 Sharswood, Blaekst. Ccmm. 471
ELEGIT (Lat. eligere, to choose). A writ of execution directed to the sheriff, commanding him to make delivery of a moiety of the party's land and all his goods, beasts of the plough only excepted.

The sheriff, on the reeeipt of the writ, holds an inquest to ascertain the value of the lands and goods he has seized, and then they are delivered to the plaintiff, who retains them until the whole deht and damages have been paid and satisfied. During that term he is called tenant by elegit. Coke, Litt. 289. See Powell, Mortg. Index ; Watson, Sher. 206 ; 1 C. B. N. s. 568.

The name was given because the plaintiff has his ehoiee to aecept either this writ or a fi. fa.

By statute, in England, the sheriff is now to deliver the whole estate instead of the half. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 418, n. The writ is still in use in the United States, to some extent, and with somewhat different modifications in the rarions states adopting it. 4 Kent, Comm. 431, $436 ; 10$ Gratt. Va. 580 ; 1 Hill, Abr. 555, 556.

ELISORS. In Practice. Two persons appointed by the court to return a jury, when the sheriff and the coroner have been challenged as incompetent: in this case the elisors return the writ of venire directed to them, with a panel of the jurors' names, and their return is final, no challenge being allowed to their array. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 355 ; 1 Cow. N. Y. 32 ; 3 id. 296.
FLLL. A measure of length.
In old English the word signifies arm, which sense it still retains in the word elbow. Nature has no standard of measure. The cubit, the ell, the span, palm, hand, finger (being taken from the individual whe uses them), are variable measures. So of the foot, pace, mile, or mille passucm. Seo Report on Weights and Measures, by the secretary of state of the United States, Feb. 22, 1821.

ELOGIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A will or testament.

ELOIGNE. In Practice. (Fr. Eloigner, to remove to a distance; to remove afar off.) A return to a writ of replevin, when the chattels have been removed out of the way of the sheriff.

ELONGATA. In Practice. The return made by the sheriff to a writ of replevin, when the goods have been removed to places unknown to him. See, for the form of this return, Watson, Sher. Appx. c. 18, s. 3, p. 454; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 148.

On this return the plaintiff is entitled to a capias in withernam. See Withernam; Watson, Sher. 300,301 . The word eloigne is sometimes used as synonymons with elongata.

ELOPEMENT. The departure of a married woman from her husband and dwelling with an adulterer. Cowel; Blount; Tomlin.

While the wife resides with her husband and cohabits with him, however exceptionable her conduct may be, yet he is bound to provide her with necessaries and to pay for them; but when she elopes, the huskand is no longer liable for her alimony, and is not bound to pay debts of her contracting, when the separation is notorious; and whoever gives her credit does so, under these circumstances, at his peril. Chitty, Contr. 49 ; 4 Esp. 42; 3 Pick. Mass. 289 ; 1 Strange, 647, 706; 6 Term, 603; 11 Johns. N. Y. 281 ; 12 id. 293 ; Buller, Nisi P. 135 ; Starkie, Ev. pt. 4, p. 699 . It has been said that the word has no legal sense, 2 W . Blackst. 1080 ; but it is frequently used, as is here shown; with a precisely defined meaning.

ELSEWHERE. In another place.
Where one devises all his land in $A, B$, and $C$, three distinct towns, and elsewhere, and bad lands of much greater value then those in $A, B$, and $C$, in anothor county, the lands in the other county were decreed to pass by the word "elsewhere;" and by Lord Chancellor King, assisted by Raymond, C. J., and other judges, the word "elsowhere" was adjudged to be the same as if the testator had said he devised all his lands in the three towns particularly mentioned, or in any other place whatever. 3 P. Will. Ch. 56. Sec. also, Chanc. Prec. 202 ; 1 Vern. Ch. 4, b.; 2 id. 461,560 ; 3 Atk. Ch. 492 ;

Cowp. 360, 808; 2 Penn. St. 912; 5 Brown, Parl. Cas. 496; 1 East, 456.
As to the effect of the word "elsewhere" in the case of lands not purchasped at the time of making the will, see 3 Atk. Ch. 254 ; 2 Veutr. 351.
ELUVIONES. Spring-tides.
EMMANCIPATION. An act by which a person who was once in the power of another is rendered free.

This is of importance mainly in relation to the emancipation of minors from the parental control. See 3 Term, $355 ; 6$ id. 247 ; 8 id. 479 ; 3 East, 276 ; 10 id. 88 ; 11 Vt. 258 , 477. See Cooper, Justin. 441, 480 ; 2 Dall. Penn. 57, 58; La. Civ. Code, b. 1, tit. 8, c. 3; Ferrière, Dict. de Jurisp. Emancipation.

EMBARGO. A proclamation, or order of state, usually issued in time of war or threatened bostilities, prohibiting the departure of ships or goods from some or all the ports of such state, until further order. 2 Wheat. 148.
2. The detention of ships by an embarge is such an injury to the owner as to entitle bim to recover on a policy of insurance against "arrests or detainments." And whether the embargo be legally or illegally laid, the injury to the owner is the same, and the insurer is equally liable for the loss occasioned by it. Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 12, s. 5 ; 1 Kent, Comm. 60; 1 Bell, Dict. 517, 5 th ed.
3. An embargo detaining a vessel at the port of departure, or in the course of. the voyage, does not of itself work a dissolution of a charter-party, or of the contract with the seamen. It is only a temporary restraint imposed by authority for legitimate political purposes, which suspends for a time the performance of such contracts, and leaves the rights of parties untouched. 1 Bell, Dict. 517; 8 Term, $259 ; 5$ Johns. N. Y. 308; 7 Mass. 325 ; 3 Bos. & P. 405-434; 4 East, 546-566.

EMBEZZLEMENT. In Criminal Law.
The fraudulently rewoving and secreting of personal property with which the party has been intrusted, for the purpose of applying it to his own use.
2. The principles of the common law not being found adequate to protect general owners against the fraudulent conversion of property by persons standing in certain fiduciary relations to those who were the subject of their peculations, certain statutes have been enacted, as well in England as in this country, creating new criminal offences and annexing to them their proper punishments. The general object of these statutes doubtless was to embrace, as criminal offences punishable by law, certain cases where, although the moral guilt was quite as great as in larceny, yet the technical objection arising from the fact of a possession lawfully acquired by the party screened him from punishment. 2 Metc. Mass. 345; 9 id. 142.
3. A taking is requisite to constitute a larceny; an embezzlement is in substance and essentially a larceny, aggravated rather than palliated by the violation of a trust or contract, instead of being, like larceny, a trespass. The administration of the common law has been not a little embarrassed in discriminating the two offences. But they are so far distinct in their character that, under an indictment oharging merely a larceny, evidence of embezzlement is not sufficient to authorize a conviction; and in cases of embezzlement the proper mode is to allege sufficient matter in the indictment to apprize the defendant that the charge is for embezzlement. Although the statutes declare that a party shall be deemed to have committed the crime of simple larceny, yet it is a larceny of a peculiar character, and must be set forth in its distinctive character. 8 Metc. Mass. 247 ; 9 id. 138 ; 9 Oush. Mass. 284.
4. When an embezzlement of a part of the cargo takes place on board of a ship, either from the fault, fraud, comnivance, or negligence of any of the crew, they are bound to contribute to the reparation of the loss, in proportion to their wages. When the embezzlement is fixed on any individual, be is solely responsible; when it is made by the crew, or some of the crew, but the particular offender is unknown, and, from the circumstances of the case, strong presumptions of guilt apply to the whole crew, all must contribute. The presumption of innocence is always in favor of the crew; and the guilt of the parties must be established beyond all reasonable doubt before they can be required to contribute. 1 Mas. C. C. 104; 4 Bos. & P. 347 ; 3 Johns. N. Y. 17; 1 Marshall, Ins. 241 ; Dane, Abr. Index; Weskett, Ins. 194; 3 Kent, Comm. 151; IIard. Ky. 529; Parsons, Marit. Law, Index.

Stringent provisions are made by several acts of congress against the embezzlement of arms, muaitions, and habiliments of war, property stored in public storehouses, letters, precious metals, and coins from the mint. See acts of Apr. 30, 1790, $& 16,1$ Story, U. S. Laws, 86 ; Apr. 20, 1818, 3 id. 1715 ; Mch. 3, 1825, 3 id. 1991; Mch. 3, 1825, & 24, 3 id. 2006.

EMBLEMENTS (Fr.embler, or emblaver, to sow with coin. The profits of the land sown). The right of a tenant to take and carry away, after his tenancy has ended, such annual products of the land as have resulted from his own care and labor. Coke, Litt. 55 b; 4 Harr. & J. Md. 139; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 118.

It is a privilege allowed to tenants for life, at will, or from year to year, hecause of the uncertainty of their estates and to encourage husbandry. If, however, the tenancy is for ycars, and its duration depends upon no contingency, a tenant when he sows a crop must know whether his term will continue long cnough for him to reap it, and is not permitted to re-enter and cut it after his term has ended. 4 Bingh. 202; 10 Johns. N. Y. 361 ; 5 Halst. N. J. 128.
2. This privilege extends to cases where a lease has been unexpectedly terminated by the act of God or the law; that is, by some unforeseen event which happens without the tenant's agency: as, if a lease is made to husband and wife so long as they continue in that relation, and they are atterwards divorced by a legal sentence, the husband will be entitled to emblements. Oland's case, 5 Coke, 116 b . A similar result will follow if the landlord, having the power, terminates the tenancy by notice to quit. Croke Eliz. 460. See other cases of uncertain duration, 9 Johns. N. Y. 112 ; 8 Viner, Abr. $364 ; 3$ Penn. St. 496. But it is otherwise if the tenancy is determined by an act of the tenant which works a forfeiture: as if, being a woman, she has a lease for a term of years provided she remains so long single, and she terminates it by marrying; for this is her own act. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 470; 1 Price, Exch. $53 ; 8$ Wend. N. Y. 584. A landlord who re-enters for a forfeiture takes the emblements. 7 Bingh. 154.
3. All such crops as in the ordinary course of things return the labor and expense bestowed upon them within the current year become the subject of emblements,-consisting of grain, peas, beans, hemp, flax, and annual roots, such as parsnips, carrots, turnips, and potatoes, as well as the artificial grasses, which are usually renewed like other crops. But such things as are of spontaneous growth, as roots and trees not annual, and the fruit on such trees, although ripe, and grass growing, even if ready to cut, or a second crop of clover, although the first crop taken before the end of the term did not repay the expense of cultivation, do not fall within the description of emblements. Croke Car. 515 ; Croke Eliz. 463 ; 10 Juhns. N. Y. 361 ; Coke, Litt. 55 b; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. 8534.
4. But although a tenant for years may nat be entitled to emblements as such, yet by the custom of the country, in particular districts, he may be allowed to enter and reap a crop which he has sown, after his lease has expired. Dougl. 201 ; 16 East, 71 ; 7 Bingh. 465. The parties to a lease may, of course, regulate all such matters by an express stipulation; but in the absence of such stipulation it is to be understood that every demise is open to explanation by the general usage of the country, where the land lays, in respect to all matters about which the lease is silent; and every person is supposed to be cognizant of this custom and to contract in reference to it. 2 Pet. 138; 5 Binn. Penn. 285. The rights of tenants, therefore, with regard to the away-going crop will differ in different sections of the country: thus, in Pennsylvania and New Jersey a tenant is held to be entitled to the grain sown in the autumn before the expiration of his lease, and coming to maturity in the following summer, 1 Penn. 224; 2 Watts & S. Penn. 22; 2 South. N.J. 460 ; while in Delaware the same custom is said to prevail with respect to wheat, but not as to oats. 1 Harr. Del. 522.
5. Of a similar nature is the tenant's right to remove the mauure made upon the farm during the last year of the tenancy. Good husbandry, which, without any stipulation therefor, is always implied by law, requires that it should either be used by the tenant on the farm, or left by him for the use of his successor; and such is the general rule on the subject in England as well as in this country. 15 Wend. N. Y. 169 ; 2 Hill, N. Y. 142 ; 2 N. Chipm. Vt. 115 ; 1 Pick. Mass. 371. A different rule has been laid down in South Carolina, 2 Ired. No. C. 326 ; but it is clearly at variance with the whole current of American authorities upon this point. Straw, however, is incidental to the crop to which it belongs, and may be removed in all cases where the crop may be. 22 Barb. N. Y. 568; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 509.
6. There are sometimes, also, mutual privileges, in the nature of emblements, which are founded on the common usage of the neighborhood where there is no express agreement to the contrary, applicable to both outgoing and incoming tenants. Thus, the outgoing tenant may by custom be entitled to the privilege of retaining possession of the land on which his away-going crops are sown, with the use of the barns and stables for housing and carrying them away; while the incoming tenant has the privilege of entering during the continuance of the old tenancy for the purposes of ploughing and manuring the land. But, independent of any custom, every tenant who is entitled to emblements has a right of ingress, egress, and regress to cut and carry them away, and the same privilege will belong to his vendee,-neither of them, however, having any exclusive right of possession. Taylor, Landl. & Ten. $z^{2} 543$.

EMBRACEOR. In Criminal Law. He who, when a matter is on trial between party and party, comes to the bar with one of the parties, and, having received some reward so to do, speaks in the case or privily labors the jury, or stands there to survey or overlook them, thereby to put them in fear and doubt of the matter. But persons learned in the law may speak in a case for their clients. Coke, Litt. 369; Termes de la Ley.

EMBRACERY. In Criminal Law.

 An attenipt to corrupt or influence a jury, or any way incline them to be more favorable to one side than to the other, by money, promises, threats, or persuasions, whether the juror on whom such attempt is made give any verdict or not, or whether the verdict be true or false. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 259; Bacon, Abr. Juries, M 3: Coke, Litt. 157 b, $369 a$; Hob. 294; Dy. 84 a, pl. 19; Noy, 102; 1 Strange, 643 ; 11 Mod. 111, 118; Com. 601; 5 Cow. N. Y. 503.EMENDA (Lat.). Amends. That which is given in reparation or satisfaction for a trespass committed; or, among the Saxons, a compensation for a crime. Spelman, Gloss.
EMENDALS In EngHish Law. This ancient word is said to be used in the accounts of the inner temple, where so much in emendals at the foot of an account signifies so much in bank, in stock, for the supply of emergencies. Cunningham, Law Dict.
EMENDATIO PANIS ET CEREVI-recting the weights and measures of bread and ale. Cowel.
EMIGRANT. One who quits his country for any lawful reason, with a design to settle elsewhere, and who takes his family and property, if he has any, with him. Vattel, b. 1, c. $19,8224$.
EMIGRATION. The act of removing from one place to another.
It is sometimes used in the same sense as expatriation; but there is some difference in the signification. Expatriation is the act of abandoning one's country; while emigration is, perhaps not strictly, applied to the act of removing from one part of the country to another. See 2 Kent, Comm. 36.
EMINENCE. A title of honor given to cardinals.

EMINENT DOMAIN. The power to take private property for public use. 6 How. 530.

The superior right of property subsisting in a sovereignty, by which private property may in certain cases be taken or its use controlled for the public benefit, without regard to the wishes of the owner.
The highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity, giving a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state whenever the public good requires it. 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 73.
2. There seems to be no objection to considering this right, theoretically at least, as so much of the original proprietorship retained by the sovereign power in granting lands or franchises to individuals or corporations wherever the common-law theory of original proprietorship prevails. An analogical arrangement at least in support of this view is derived from the able examination and explanation of the origin of the jus publicum given in 7 Cush. Mass. 90 . See, also, the remarks of Daniell, J., in 6 How. 533.
It is well settled that the power exists only in cases where the public exigency demands its exercise. See remarks of Woodbury, J., and cases cited by him, 6 How. 545.
3. This right is distinguished from public domain, which is property owned absolutely ly the state in the same manner as an individual holds his property. 37 Am. Jur. 121; 2 Kent, Comm. 339; 3 Yerg. Tenn. 389; 6 How. 540.

Whether the exercise of the right is justifiable in cases where the statute does not provide compensation, is unsettled. That it may be excrcised, 3 Hill, So. C. 100: contra, 2 Kent, Comm. 339, n.; and dicta in 4 Term, 794; 1 Rice, So. C. 383 ; 3 Leigh, Va. 337.

It makes no difference whether corporeal property, as land, or incorporeal, as a franchise, is to be affected by the exercise of the right. 23 Pick. Mass. 360 ; 6 How. 529; 1 Rice, So. C. 383 ; 11 N. H. 19; 17 Conn. 454.

EMISSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. The act by which any matter whatever is thrown from the body: thus, it is usual to say, emission of urine, emission of semen, etc.

Emission is not necessary in the commission of a rape to complete the offence. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 628 ; 4 Carr. & P. 249 ; 5 id. 297; 6 id. 251; 9 id. 31 ; 1 Const. So. C. 354 ; Add. Penn. 143. See 1 East, Pl. Cr. 436-440. It is, however, essential in sodomy. 12 Coke, 36. But see 1 Va. Cas. 307.

TO EMIT. To put out ; to send forth.
The tenth section of the first article of the constitution contains various prohihitions, among which is the following: "No state shall emit bills of credit." To emit bills of credit is to issue paper intended to circulate through the community for its ordinary purposes, as money. which paper is redeemable at a future day. 4 Pet. 410, 432; Story, Const. & 1358. See Bills of Credit.

EMMENAGOGUES. In Medical Jurisprudence. The name of a class of medicines which are believed to have the power of favoring the discharge of the menses. These are black hellebore, savine (see Juniperus Sabina), madder, mercury, polygala, senega, and pennyroyal. They are sometimes used for the criminal purpose of produciug abortion (q.v.). They always endanger the life of the woman. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 316 ; Dunglison, Med. Dict.; Parr, Med. Dict.; 3 Paris & F. Med. Jur. 88.

EMPPEROR. This word is synonymous with the Latin imperator: they are both derived from the verb imperare. Literally, it signifies he who commands.

Under the Roman republic, the title emperor was the generic name given to the com-manders-in-chief in the armies. But even then the application of the word was restrained to the successful commander, who was declared emperor by the acclamations of the army, and was afterwards honored with the title by a decree of the senate.

It is now used to designate some sovereign prince who bears this title. Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 23.

EMPHYTEOSIS. In Civil Law. The name of a contract by which the owner of an uncultivated piece of land granted it to another, either in perpetuity or for a long time, on condition that he should improve it by building, planting, or cultivating it, and should pay for it an annual rent, with a right to tho grantee to alienate it, or transmit it by descent to his heirs, and under a condition that the grantor should never re-enter as long as the rent should be paid to him by the grantee or his assigns. Inst. 3. 25.3; 18 'Toullier, n . 144.

EMPEYTEUTA. The grantee under a contract of emphyteusis or emphyteosis. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Hallam, Mid. Ag. c. ii. p. 1.

EMPLAZAMIENTO. In Spanish Law. The citation given to a person ly order of the judge, and ordering him to appear before his tribunal on a given day and hour.
EMPRESTIDO. In Spanish Law. A loan. Something lent to the borrower at his request. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 18, l. 70.

EMPTIO, EMPTOR (Lat. emere, to huy). Emptio, a buying. Emptor, a buyer. Emptio et venditio, buying and selling.

In Roman Law. The name of a contract of sale. DuCange; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

EN AUTRE DROIT (Fr.). In the right of another.

EN DEMEURE (Fr.). In default. Used in Louisiana. 3 Mart. La. N. s. 574.

EN OWEL MAIN (L. Fr.). In equal hand. The word owel oceurs also in the phrase owelty of partition. See 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 427.

EN VENTRE SA MERE (Fr.). In its mother's womb. For certain purposes, as of inheritance, etc., a child en ventre sa mère is to be considered as in leeing.

ENABLING POWERS. A term used in equity. When the donor of a power, who is the owner of the estate, confers upon persons not seised of the fee the right of creating interests to take effect out of it, which could not be done by the donee of the power unless by such authority, this is called an enabling power. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1628. and others, were empowered to make leases for their lives or for twenty-one years, which they could not do before. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 319 ; Coke, Litt. 44 a; 3 Stephen, Comm. 139.

ENABLING STATUTE. The act of 32 Henry VIII. c. 28, by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, ENACT. To establish by law; to perform or effect; to decree. The usual formula in inaking laws is, Be it enacted.

ENAJENACION. In Spantsh Law. The act by which one person transfers to another a property, either gratuitously, as in the case of a donation, or by an owner's title, as in the case of a sale or an exchange.
enceinte (Fr.). Pregnant. See Pregnancy.

ENCLOSURE. An artificial fence around one's estate. See Close.

ENCOMIENDA. A charge or mandate conferring certain important privileges on the four military orders of Spain, to wit, thgse of Santiago, Calatraya, Alcantara, and M.ntesa. In the legislation of the Indias, it signified the concession of a certain nomber of Indians for the purpose of instructing them in the Christian religion and defending their persons and property.

ENCROACH. To gain unlawfully upon the lands, property, or authority of another: as if one man presseth upon the grounds of another too far, or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service and the lord exact three. So, too, the Spencers were said to encroach the king's authority. Blount; Plowd. 94 a. Quite a memorable instance of punishment for encroaching (accroaching) royal power took place in 21 Edw. III. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 80. Taking fees by clerks of the courts has beed held eneroaching. 1 Leon. 5.
ENEMY. A nation which is at war with another. A citizen or a subject of such a nation. Any of the subjects or citizens of a state in amity with the United States, who have commenced or have made preparations for commencing hostilities against the United States, and also the citizens or subjects of a state in amity with the United States, who nre in the service of a state at war with them. See Salk. 635; Bacon, Abr. Treason, G.
By the term enemy is also understood a person who is desirous of doing injury to another. The Latins had two terms to signify these two classes of persons: the first, or the publie enemy, they called hostis, and the latter, or the private enemy, inimicus.
An enemy cannot, as a general rule, enter into any contract which can be enforced in the courts of law; but the rule is not withont exceptions: as, for example, when a state permits expressly its own citizens to trade with the enemy; and perhaps a contract for necessaries, or for money to enable the individual to get home, might be enforced. 7 Pet. 586.
ENFEOFF. To make a gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. See Feoffment.
ENFRANCHISE. To make free; to incorporate a man in a society or body politic. Cunningham, Law Dict.
ENFRANCHISEMENT. Giving freedom to a person. Admitting a person to the freedom of a city. A denizen of England, or a citizen of London, is said to be enfranchised. So, too, a villein is enfranchised when he obtains his freedom from his lord. Termes de la Ley; 11 Coke, 91 ; Jacob, Law Dict.
ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLD. I'he change of the tenure by which lands are held from copyhold to freehold, as by a conveyance to the copyholder or by a release of the seignorial rights. 1 Watkins, Copyholds, 362 ; 1 Stephen, Comm. 208; 2 id. 51 .

ENGAGEMENT. In French Law. A contract. The obligations arising from a quasi contract.

The terms obligation and engagement are said to he synonymous, 17 Toullier, n. 1 ; but the Code seems specially to apply the term engagement to those obligations which the law imposes on a man without the intervention of sny contract, either un the part of the ohliger or the obligee. Art. 1370.

ENGLESHIRE. A law was made by Canute, tor the preservation of bis Danes, that, when a man was killed, the hundred or town should be liable to be amerced, unless it could be proved that the person killed was an Englishman. This proof was called Engleshire. It consisted, generally, of the testimony of two males on the part of the father of him who had been killed, and two females on the part of his mother. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 447; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 195; Spelman, Gloss. See Francigena.
ENGROSS (Fr. gros.). To copy the rude draught of an instrument in a fair, large hand. To write out, in a large, fair hand, on parchment. The term is applied to statutes, which, after being read and acted on a sufficient number of times, are ordered to be engrossed. Anciently, also, used of the process of making the indenture of a fine. 5 Coke, 39 b.
In Criminal Law. To buy up such large quantities of an article as to obtain a monopoly of it for the purpose of selling at an unreasonable price. The tendency of modern English law is very decidedly to restrict the application of the law against engrossing; and it is very doubtful if it applies at all oxcept to obtaining a monopoly of provisions. 1 East, 143. Merely buying for the parpose of selling again is not necessarily engrossing. 14 East, $406 ; 15 \mathrm{id} .511$. See 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 159, n., for the law upon this subject.
ENGROSSER. One who engrosses or writes on parchment in a large, fair hand. One who purchases large quantities of any commodity in order to have the command of the market and to sell them again at higb prices.
ENGROSSING. The offence committed by an engrosser. Writing on parchment in a large, fair hand. See Engross enitia pars (L. Lat.). The part of the eldest. Coke, Litt. 166 ; Bacon, Abr. Coparceners (C).
When partition is voluntarily made among coparceners in England, the eldest has the first choice, or primer election (q.v.); and the part which she takes is called enitia pars. This right is purely personal, and descends: it is also said that even her assignee shall enjoy it; but this has been doubted. The word enitia is said to be derived from the old French eisne, the eldest. Bacon, Abr. Coparceners (C); Keilw. 1 a, $49 a ; 2$ And. 21 ; Croke Eliz. 18.
ENJOIN. To command; to require: as, private individuals are not only permitted, but enjoined, by law, to arrest an offender when present at the time a felony is committed or a dangerous wound given, on pain of fine and imprisonment if the wrong-doer escape through their negligence. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 587 ; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 298, 304 ; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 12, s. 13 ; Ry. & M. Cr. Cas. 93.

To command or order a defendant in equity to do or not to do a particular thing by writ ut' injunction. See Injunction.

BNLARGE. To extend: as, to enlarge a rule to plead is to extend the time during which a defendant may plead. To enlarge means, also, to set at liberty: as, the prisoner was enlarged on giving bail.

ENLARGING. Extending, or making more comprehensive: as, an enlarging statute, which is one extending the common law.

ENLISTMENT. The act of making a contract to serve the government in a subordinate capacity, either in the army or navy. The contract so made is also called an enlistment. See, as to the power of infants to enlist, 4 Binn. Penn. 487; 5 id. 423 ; 6 id. 255 ; 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 87 ; 11 id. 93.

ENORMIA (Lat.). Wrongs. It occurs in the old Latin forms of pleading, where, after a specific allegation of the wrongs done by the defendant, the plaintiff alleges generally that the defendant did alia enormia (other wrongs), to the daniage, etc. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. & 278; 1 Chitty, Plead. 397. See Alia Enormia.

ENQUETE. In Canon Law. An examination of witnesses in the presence of a judge authorized to sit for this purpose, taken in writing, to he used as evidence in the trial of a cause. The day of hearing must be specified in a notice to the opposite party. 9 Low. C. 392. It may be opened, in some cases, before the trial. 10 Low. C. 19.

ENROLL. To register; to enter on the rolls of chaucery, or other courts; to make a record.

ENROLMENT. In English Law. The registering or entering on the rolls of chancery, king's bench, common pleas, or exchequer, or by the clerk of the peace in the records of the quarter sessions, of any lawful act: as, a recognizance, a deed of bargain and sale, and the like. Jacob, Law Dict.

ENTAIL. A fee abridged or limited to the issue, or certain classes of issue, instead of descending to all the heirs. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 66; Cowel; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 112, n.

To restrict the inheritance of lands to a particular class of issue. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 66; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 113. See Estates Tail.

ENTENCION. In Old English Law.

 The plaintiff's declaration.ENTER. To go upon lands for the purpose of taking possession; to take possession. In a strict use of terms, entry and taking possession would seem to be distinct parts of the same act; but, practically, entry is now merged in taking possession. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 10, 32 ; Stearns, Real 'Act. 2.

To cause to be put down upon the record.

An attorney is said to enter his appearance, or the party himself may enter ar appearance.

ENTIRE. That which is not divided; that which is whole.

When a contract is entire, it must, in general, be fully performed before the party can claim the cumpensation which was to have been paid to him: for example, when a man hires to serve another for ove year, he will not be entitled to leave him at any time before the end of the year, and claim compensation for the time, unless it be done by the consent or default of the party hiring. 6 Vt. 35 ; 2 Pick. Mass. 267 ; 4 id. 103,114 ; 9 id. 298; 10 id. 209; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 26, 246; 4 Me. 454 ; 2 Penn. 454 ; 15 Johns. N. Y. 224 ; 19 id. 337 ; 6 Harr. & J. Md. 38. See Divisible.
ENTIRETY. This word denotes the whole, in contradistinction to mojety, which denotes the half part. A husband and wife, when jointly seised of land, are seised by entireties, and not pur mie, as joint tenants are. Jạcob, Law Dict. ; 2 Kent, Comm. 132; 4 id. 362 ; 3 Penv. $350,367$.

ENTREGA. In Spanish Law. Delivery.

ENTREPOT. A warehouse. A magazine wherc goods are deposited which are to be again removed.

ENTRY. In Common Law. The act of setting down the particulars of a sale, or other transaction, in a merchant's or tradesman's account-broks: such entries are, in general, primâ facie evidence of the sale and delivery, and ot work done; but unless the entry be the original one, it is not evidence.

The submitting to the inspection of officers appointed by law, who hare the collection of the costoms, goods imported into the United States, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of cstimating the duties to be paid thereon.

The act of March 2, 1799, s. 36, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 6C6, and the act of March 1, 1823, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1881, regulate the manner of making entries of gocds.

In Criminal Law. The act of entering a dwelling-house, or other building, in order to commit a crime.
2. In cases of lurglary, the least entry with the whole or any part of the lody, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is sufficient to complete the offence. Coke, 3d Inst. 64.

It is an entry if a person descend a chimney but is arrested hefore he can get low enough to enter any room; it is an contry to open a window entirely, but not to pusb it up or down when partly opened; putting a finger or a pistol over a threshold is an entry, but not a centre-bit or crowbar, these instruments being intended for breaking, and not for committing a felony. Sir M. Hale makes a "quære," however, with a " seeming" to the contrary, as to an entry by a bullet fired into a house. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 555. It is submitted, says Wilmot (Dig. Law of Burglary, 58 ), that the only possible way in whieh the discharging a loaded gun or pistol into a dwelling-honse from the outside could be held burglary would be by laying the intent to commit felony by killing or wounding, or generally to commit felony; and quare, whether the breaking and entry requisite to complete the burglary would be satisfied by such diseharge? It is not necessary in all cases to show an actual entry by all the prisoners: there may be a constructive entry as well as a constructive breaking. A, B, and C come in the night by consent to break and enter the house of D to commit a felony. A only actually breaks and enters the house; B stands near the door, but does not actually enter ; C stands at the lane's end, or orchard-gate, or field-gate, or the like, to wateh that no help come to aid the owner, or to give notiee to the others if help comes: this is burglary in all, and all are principals. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 555. See Burglary.
Upon Real Estate. The act of going upon the lands of another, or lands elaimed as one's own, with intent to take possession.
3. In general, any person who has a right of possession may assert it by a peaceable entry, without the formality of a legal action, and, being so in possession, may retain it, and plead that it is his soil and freehold. 3 Term, 295. A notorious act of ownership of this kind was always equivalent to a feodal investiture by the lord, and is now allowed in all cases where the original entry of a wrong-doer was nolawful. But, in all cases where the first entry was lawful and an apparent right of possession was thereby gained, the owner of the estate cannot thus enter, but is driven to his action at law. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 175. See Re-Entry.
4. At common law, no person could make a valid sale of land unless he had lawfully entered, and could make livery of seisin,that is, could make an actual delivery of possession to the purchaser. This provision was early incorporated into the English statutes, to guard against the many evils produced by selling pretended titles to land. A pretended title within the purview of the law is where one person claims land of which another is in possession holding adversely to the claim. 1 Plowd. $88 a$; Littleton, 8347 ; 9 Wend. N. Y. 511 . And now every grant of land, except as a release, is void as an act of maintenance if, at the time it is made, the lands are in the actual possession of another person claiming under a title adverse to that of the grantor. 4 Kent, Comm. 446; 5 Johns. N. Y. 489 ; 6 Mass. 418 .
5. In a more limited sense, an entry signifies the simply going upon another person's premises for seme particular purpose. The right to land is exclusive, and every unwarranted entry thereon without the owner's leave, whether it be enclosed or not, or unless the perscn entering have an authority given him by law, is a trespass. 12 Johns. N. Y. 408; 19 id. 385 ; 2 Mass. 127. But the owner's license will sometimes be presumed, and then will continue in foree until it is actually revoked by the owner. 10 Johns. N. Y. 246 ; Wilks. 195 ; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. z 766.
Authority to enter upon lands is given by law in many cases. See Arrest.
6. So the proprletor of goods or chattels may enter the land of another upon which they are placed, and remove them, provided they are there without his default: as, where his tree has blown down into the adjoining elose by the wind, or his fruit has fallen from a branch which overhung it. 20 Viner, Abr. 418.

A landlord also may enter, to distrain or to demand rent, to see whether waste has been committed, or repairs made, and may go into the house for either purpose, providd the outer door be open. Croke Eliz. 876; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. & 627. So, if he is bound to repair, he has a right of entry giren him by law for that purpose. Moore, 889. Or if trees are excepted out of a demise, the lessee has a right of entering to prune or fell them. 11 Coke, 53; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. 8767.
7. Every traveller also has, by law, the privilege of entering a common inn, at all seasonable times, provided the host has sufficient accommodation, which if he has not it is for him to declare.

So any man may throw down a public nuisanee; and a private one may be thrown down by the party grieved, and this before any prejudice happens, but only from the probability that it may happen. 5 Coke, 102. And see 1 Brownl. 212; 12 Mod. 510; W. Jones, 221; 1 Strange, 683. To this end, the abator has authority to enter the close in which it stands. See Nuisance.
ENTRY AD COMMUNEM LEGEM.
In English Law. A writ which lay in favor of the reversioner, when the tenant for term of life, tenant for term of another's life, tenant by the curtesy, or tenant in dower, had aliened and died. Tomlin, Law Diet.
ENTRY, WRIT OF. In Old Practice. A real action breught to recover the possession of lands from one who wrongfully withholds possession thereof.
Such writs were said to be in the Quibus, where the suit was brought against the party who committed the wrong; in the Per, where the tenant against whom the action was brought was either heir or grantee of the original wrong-doer; in the Per and Cui, where there had been two descents, two alienations, or a deseent and an alienation; in the Post, where the wrong was removed beyond the degrees mentioned.

The abovo designations are derived from significant Latin words in the respective forms adaptod to the cases given. A descent or alienation on the part of the disseisor oonstituted a degree (sco Colve, Litt. $239 a$ ); and at common law the writ could be brought only within the degrees (two), tho demsndant after that being driven to his writ of right. Bv the statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. III. e. 30 (A. D. 1267), however, a writ of entry, ufter ( $p o s t$ ) those degrees had heen passed in the alienation of the estate, was allowed. Where there had been no descent and the demandant himself had been dispossesscd, tho writ ran, $P$ reoipe $A$ quad reddat $B$ sex acras tenx, etc., de quihus idem $A$, ete. (command $A$ ta restare to $B$ six acres of land, etc., of which the same A, etc.) ; if there had been a descent after the deseription came, the clause, in quod idem $A$ non habet ingressun nisi per $C$ qui illud ei demiait (into which the said A, the tenant, has no entry but through $C$, the original wrongdoer); where there were two desoents, uisi per $D$ oui $\boldsymbol{O}$ illud demisit (but hy D, to whom C demised it); where it was beyond the degrees, nisi post disseisinam quam $C$ (but after the disseisin which $C$, the original disseisor, did, ete.).

The writ was of many varieties, also, according to the character of the title of the claimant and the circumstances of the deprivation of possession. Booth enumerates and discusses twelve of these, of which some are sm' disseisin, sur intrusion, ad communem legem, ad terminum qui preterit, cui in rita, cui ante diunrtium, etc. Either of these might, of eourse, be brought in any of the four degrees, as the circumstances of the case required. The use of writs of entry has been long since abolished in England; but they are still in use in a modified form in some of the United States, as the common means of recovering possession of realty against a wrongful accupant. 2 Pick. Mass. 473; 7id.36; 10 id. 359 ; 5 N. H. $450 ; 6$ id. 555. See Stearns, Real Act.; Booth, Real Act.; Reg. Brev. 229; Rastell, Entr. 279 b; Coke, Litt. 238 b.

ENURE. To take or have effect. To serve to the use, benefit, or advantage of a person. The word is often written inure. A release to the tenant for life enures to him in reversion ; that is, it has the same offect for him as for the tenant for life. A diseharge of the principal enures to the bencfit of the surety.

ENVOY. In International Law. A minister of the second rank, on whom his sovereign or government has conferred a degree of dignity and respectability which, without being on a level with an ambassador, immediately fullows, and, among ministers, yields the pre-eminence to him alone.

Envoys are either ordinary or extraordinary: by custom the latter is held in greater consideration. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 6, 872.

EORLE (Sax.). An earl. Blount; 1 Blackstone, Cumm. 398.

EPILEPSY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A disease of the brain, which occurs in paroxysms with uncertain intervals hetween them.

These parcxysms are characterized by the loss of sensation, and convulsive motions of the muscles. When long continued and violent, this disease is very apt to end in dementia. It gradually destroys the memory and impairs the intellect, and is one of the causes of an unsound mind. 8 Ves. Ch. 87. See Dig. 50. 16. 123; 21. 1.4. 5.

FPIQUEYA. In Spanish Law. The benignant and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person. This word is derived from the Greek, and is synonymous with the word equity. See Murillo, nn. 67, 68.

EPISCOPACY. In Ecclesiastical
VoL. I.-34

Law. A form of government by diocesan bishops; the office or condition of a bishop.

EPISCOPALIA (L. Lat.) In Ecclesiastical Law. Synodals, or payments due the bishop.

EPISCOPUS (L. Lat.). In Civil Law.

 A superintendent; an inspector. Those in each municipality who had the charge and oversight of the bread and other provisions which served the citizens for their daily food, were so called. Vicat; DuCange.A bishop. These bishops, or episcopi, wero held to the the successors of the apostles, and have various titles at different times in history and according to their different duties. It was applied generally to those who had authority or were of peculiar sanctity. After the fall of the Roman empire they came to hare very considerable judicial powers. Du. Cange; Vicat; Calvinus, Lex.

EPISTOLA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Rescripts; opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision.

Answers of the emperors to petitions.
The answers of counsellors (juris-consulta), as Ulpian and others, to questions of law proposed to them, were also called epistola.

Opinions written out. The term originally signified the same as literce. Vicat.

EQUATITY. Likeness in possessing the same rights and being liable to the same duties. See 1 Toullier, nn. 170, 193.
2. Persons are all equal before the law, whaterer adventitious advantages some may possess over others. All persons are protected by the law, and obedienoe to it is required from all.

Judges in court, while exercising their functions, are all upon an equality, it being a rule that inter pares non est potestas: a judge cannot, therefore, punish another judge of the same court for using any expression in court, although the words used might have been a contempt in any other person. Bacon, Abr., Of the Court of Sessions, Of Justices of the Peace.
3. In contracts, the law presumes that the parties act upon a perfect equality: when, therefore, one party uses any frand or deceit to destroy this equality, the party grieved may avoid the contract. In case of a grant to two or more persons jointly, without designating what each takes, they are presumed to take in equal proportions. 4 Day, Conn. 395.

It is a maxim that when the equity of the parties is equal the law must prevail, 3 Call, Va. 259, and that, as between differont creditors, equality is equity. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3725; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 181. See Kames, Eq. 75.

EQUINOX. The name given to two periods of the year when the days and nights are equal; that is, when the space of time between the rising and setting of the sun is one-half of a natural day. Dig. 43. 13. 1.8. See Day.

PQUITABLE ASSETS. Such assets as are chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity, and which do not fall under the description of legal assets.

Those portions of the property which by the ordinary rules of law are exempt from aebts, but which the testator has voluntarily charged as assets, or which, being non-existent at law, have been created in equity. Adams, Eq. 254 et seq.

They are so called because they can be reached only by the aid and instrumentality of a court of equity, and because their disuribution is governed by a different rule from that which governs the distribution of legal assets. 2 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 4, pt. 2, c. 2, $\frac{z}{8}$ 1, and notes; 2 Vern. Ch. 763; Willes, 523 ; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 486; Story, Eq. Jur. 8552 .

The doctrine of equitable assets has been much restricted in the United States generally. 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 651 ; 5 Pet. 160 ; 2 Brock. C. C. 325 ; 3 Dan. Ky. 18 ; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 499; 3 Ired. Ch. No. C. 259.
See, generally, Adams, Eq. 254 et seq.; Story, Eq. Jur. 8552.

EQUITABLE ESTATE. A right or interest in land, which, not having the properties of a legal estate, but being merely a right of which courts of equity will take notice, requires the aid of such court to make it available.

These estates consist of uses, trusts, and powers. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1884. They possess in some respects the qualities of legal estates at modern law. 1 Pet. 508 ; 13 Pick. EQUITABLE MORTGAGE. A lien upon real estate of such a character that it is recognized in equity as a security for the payment of money and is treated as a mortgage.

Such a mortgage may arise by a deposit with the lender of money of the title-deeds to an estate. Story, Eq. Jur. द $1020 ; 1$ Brown, Ch. Perkins ed. 269, note; 17 Vcs. Ch. 230 ; 2 Mylne & K. ## EQUITATURA. In Old English Law.

 Needful equipments for riding or travelling.EQUITY. A branch of remedial justice by and through which relief is afforded to suitors in the courts of equity.
In the broad gense in which this term is scme. timee used, it aignifies natural justice.

In a more limited application, it denotey equal justice between contending parties. This is ita moral signification, in reference to the rights of partiss having conflicting claima; hut applied to courts and their jurisdiction and proceedings, it has a more reatrained and limited signification.
One division of courts is into currts of law and courta of equity. And equity, in this relation and application, is a branch of remedial justice by and throngh which relief ie afforded to suitors in the courta of equity.
The difference between the remedial justice of the courts of common law and that of the courts of equity is marked and material. That administered hy the courts of law is limited by the principles of the common law (which are to a great extent positive and inflexible), and especially by the nature and character of the process and pleadings, and of the judgments which those courts can render; because the pleadings cannot fully present all the mattera in controversy, nor can the judgmente be adapted to the special exigencies which may exist in particular cases. It is not uncommon, alao, for cases to fail in those courts, from the fact that too few or too many persons have been joinad as parties, or because the pleadings have not been framed with sufficient technical precision.

The remedial process of the courts of equity, on the other hand, admits, and, generally, requires, thal all persons having an intercest shall he made partiea, and makes a large allowance for amendments by summoning and disobarging parties atier the commencoment of the suit. The pleadings are usually framed so as to present to the consideration of tbe court the whole case, with its poesible legal rights, and all its equities,-that is, all the grounds upon whieh the suitor is or is not entitled to relief upon the principles of equity. And its final remediai process may be so varied aa to meet the require. ments of these equities, in cases where the juriadio. tion of the courts of equity exists, by "commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong." Ir other words, its final process is varied bo at te anable the courts to do that equitable justice be tween the parties which the case demands, eithe by commanding what is to be done, or prohibiting what is threatened to be done.

The principles npon which, and the modes anc forme by and through which, justice is administerec in the United States, are derived to a great exten from those which were in existence in England a the time of the settlement of this country; and i is therefore important to a correct understanding of the nature and character of our own jnris prudence, not only to trace it back to its intro duction here on the early gettlement of the colonies but also to trace the Engligh jurisprudence from it earliest inception as the edministration of law founded on principles, down to that period. It i in this way that we are enabled to explain man. things in our own practice which would otherwis be entirely obscure. This is particularly true o: the principles which regulate the jurisdiction an! practice of the courta of equity, and of the prin ciples of equity as they are now applied and ad ministered in the courts of law which at th present day have cquitable jurisdiction conferred upon them hy statutes passed for that purpose. And for the purpose of a competent understanding of the oourse of decisions in the courts of equity in Englsnd, it is necessary to refer to the origin of tho equitable jurisdiotion there, and to trace its history, inquiring upon what principles it was originally founded, and how it has heen enlarged and sustaioed.

The study of equity jurisprudence, therefore, comprises an inquiry into the origin and history of the courts of equity; the distinctive principles upon which jurisdiction in equity is founded; the nature, character, and extent of the jurisdiction itself; its peculiar remedies; the rules and maxims which regulate its admioistration; its remedial process and proceedings, and modes of defence; and its rules of evidence and practice.
2. Origin and History. The courts of equity may be said to have their origin as far back as the Aula or Curia Regis, the great court in which the king administered justice in person, assisted by his counsellors. Of the officers of this court, the chancellor was one of great trust and confidence, next to the king himself; but his duties do not distinctly appear at the present day. On the dissolution of that court, he exercised separate duties.

On the introduction of seals, be had the keeping of the king's seal, which he affixed to charters and deeds; and he had some authority in relation to the king's grants, perhaps annulling those which were alleged to have been procured by misrepresentation or to have been issued unadvisedly.

As writs came into use, it was made his duty to frame and issue them from his court, which as early as the reign of Henry II. was known as the chancery. And it is said that he exercised at this period a sort of equitahle jurisdiction by which he mitigated the rigor of the common law, - to what extent it is impossible to determine. He is spoken of as one who "anauls unjust laws, and executes the rightful commands of the pious prince, and puts an end to what is injurious to the people or to morals,"-which would form a very ample jurisdiction; but it seems probable that this was according to the authority or direction of the king, given from time to time in relation to particular cases. He was a principal member of the king's council, after the conquest, in which, among other things, all applications for the special exercise of the prerogative in regard to matters of judicial cognizance were discussed and decided upon. In connection with the council, he exercised a separate authority in cases in which the council directed the suiters to proceed in chancery. The court of chancery is said to have sprung from this council. But it may be said that it had its origin in the prerogative of the king, by which he undertook to administer justice, on petitions to himself, without regard to the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts, which he did through orders to his shancellor. The great council, or parliament, also sent matters relating to the king's grants, ric. to the chancery; and it seems that the chancellor, although an ecolesiastic, was the principal actor as regards the judicial business which the select or king's council, as well as the great council, had to advise upon or transact. In the reign of Edward I. the power and authority of the chancellor were extended by the statute of Westminster 2d.
3. In the time of Edward III. proceedings in chancery were commenced by petition or bill, the adverse party was summoned, the parties were examined, and chancery appears as a distinct court for giving relief in cases which required extraordinary remedies, the king having, "by a writ, referred all such matters as were of grace to be dispatched by the chancellor or by the keeper of the privy seal."

It may be considered as fully established, as a separate and permanent jurisdiction, from the 17th of Richard II.

In the time of Edward IV. the chancery had come to be regarded as one of the four principal courts of the kingdom. From this time its jurisdiction and the progress of its jurisdiction become of more importance to us.

It is the tendency of any system of legal principles, when reduced to a practical application, to fail of effecting such justice between party and party as the special circumstances of a case may require, by reason of the minuteness and inflcxibility of its rules and the inability of the judges to adapt its remedies to the necessities of the controversy under consideration. This was the case with the Roman law; and, to remedy this, edicts were issued from time to time, which enahled the consuls and prætors to correct "the scrupulosity and mischievous subtlety of the law;" and from these edicts a code of equitable jurisprudence was compiled.

So the principles and rules of the common law, as they were reduced to practice, became in their application the means of injustice in cases where special equitable circumstances existed, of which tho judge could not take cognizance because of the precise nature of its titles and rights, the inflexible character of its principles, and the technicality of its pleadings and practice. And, in a manner somewhat analogous to the Roman mode of modification, in order to remedy such hardships, the prerogative of the king or the authority of the great council was exercised in ancient times to procure a more equitable measure of justice in the particular case, which was accomplished through the court of chancery.
4. This was followed by the "invention" of the writ of subpona, by means of which the chancery assumed, upon a complaint made directly to that court, to require tho attendance of the adverse party, to answer to such matters as should be objected against him. Notwithstanding the complaints of the commons, from time to time, that the course of proceeding in chancery " was not according to the course of the common law, lut the practice of the holy church," the king sustained the authority of the chancellor, the right to issue the writ was recognized and regulated by statute, and other statutes aere passed conferring jurisdiction where it bad not been taken before. In this way, without any compilation of a code, a system of equitable jurisprudence was established in the court of chancery, enlarging from time to time; the decisions of the court furnishing an exposition of its principles and of their applioation. It is said that the jurisdiction was greatly enlarged under the administration of Cardinal Wolsey, in the time of Henry VIII. a controversy took place between Chancellor Ellesmere and Lord Coke, C. J., of the king's bench, in the time of James I., respecting the right of the chancellor to interfere with the judgnents of the courts of law. The king sustained the chancellor; and from that time the jurisdiction then claimed bas heen maintained.

It is from the study of these decisions and the commentaries upon them that we are enabled to determine, with a greater or less degree of certainty, the time when and the grounds upon which jurisaiiction was granted or was taken in particular classes of cases, and the principles upon which it was administered. And it is occasionally of importance to attend to this; because we shall see that, chancery having once obtained jurisdiction, that jurisdiction continues until expressly taken away, notwithstanding the intervention of such changes as, if they had been made earlier, would have rendered the exercise of jurisdiction by that cuurt incom. patihle with the principles upon which it is founded.
5. A brief sketch of some of the principal points in the origin and history of the court of chancery may serve to show that much of its jurisdiction exists independent of any atatute, and is founded upon an assumption of a power to do equity, having its first inception in the prerogative of the king, and his commands to do justice in individual cases, extending itself, through the action of the chancellor, to the issue of a writ of summons to appear in his court without any special authority for that purpose, and, upon the return of the subpeona, to the reception of a complaint, to a requirement upon the party summoned to make answer to that complaint, and then to a bearing and decree, or judgment, upon the merits of the matters in controversy, according to the rules of equity and good conscience.

It appears as a noticeable fact that the jurisdiction of the chancery proceeded originally from, and was sustained by, successive kirgs of England against the repeated remonstrances of the commons, who were for adhering to the common law; though not, perhaps, approving of all its rigors, as equity had been to some extent acknowledged as a rule of decision in the common-law courts.

This opposition of the commons may have been owing in part to the fact that the chancellor was in those days usually an ecclesiastic, and to the existing antipathy among the masses of the people to almost every thing Boman.
The master of the rolls, who for a long period was a judicial officer of the court of chancery, second only to the chancellor, was originally a clerk or keeper of the rolls on records, hut seems to have acquired his ju dicial authority from being at times directed by the king to take cognizance of and determine matters submitted to him.
6. Distinctive Principles. It is quite ap. parent that some principles other than those of the common law must regulate the exer. cise of such a jurisdiction. That law could not mitigate its rigor upon its own principles. And as, down to the time of Edward III., and, with few exceptions, to the 21st of Henry VIII., the chancellors were ecclesiastics, much more familiar with the principles of the Roman law than with those of the common law, it was hut a matter of course that there should be a larger adoption of the principles of that law; and the study of it is of some importance in this connection. Still, that law cannot be said to he of authority even in equity proceedings. The commons were jealous of its introduction. "In the reign of Richard 1I. the barons protested that they would never suffer the kingdom to be governed by the Roman law, and the judges prohibited it from being any longer cited in the common-law tribunals."
This opposition of the barons and of the common-law judges furnished very sufficient reasons why the chancellors should not profess to adopt that law as the rule of decision, In addition to this, it was not fitted, in many respects, to the state of things existing in England; and so the chancellors were of necessity compelled to act upon equitable principles as expounded by themselves. In later times the common-law judges in that country bave resorted to the Roman law for principles of decision to a much greater extent than they have given credit to it.
7. Since the time of Henry VIII. the chancery bench has been occupied by some of the ablest lawyers which England has produced, and they have given to the proceedings and practice in equity definite rules and forms, which leave little to the personal dis cretion of the chancellor in determining whal equity and good conscience require. The discretion of the chancellor is a judicial dis cretion, to be exercised according to the principles and practice of the court.

The avowed principle upon which the juris diction was at first exercised was the ad ministration of justive according to honesty equity, and conscience,-which last, it is said was unknown to the common law as a prin ciple of decision.
In the 15th of Richard II. two petitions addressed to the king and the lords of parlia ment, were sent to the chancery to be heard with the direction, "Let there he done, hy thi authority of parliament, that which right anc reason and good faith and good conscienc demand in the case."

These may be said to be the general pria ciples upon which equity is administered a the present day.

The distinctive principles of the courts of equity are shown, also, by the classes of cases in which they exercise jurisdiction and give relief,-allowing it to be sought and administered through process and proceedings of less formality and technicality than are required in proceedings at law. This, however, has its limitations, some of its rules of pleading in defence heing quite technical. And it is another peculiar feature that the relief is administered by a decree or process adapted to the exigencies of the particular case.
8. Jurisdiction. It is difficult to reduce a jurisdiction so extensive and of such diverse component parts to a rigid and precise classification. But an approach to it may be made. The general nature of the jurisdiction has already been indicated. It exists-
First, for the purpose of compelling a discovery from the defendant, respecting the truth of the matters alleged against him, by an appeal to his conscience to speak the truth. The discovery is enforced by requiring an answer to the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint, in order that the plaintiff may use the matters disclosed in the answer, as admissions of the defendant, and, thus, evidence for the plaintiff, either in connection with and in aid of other evidence offered by the plaintiff, or to supply the want of other evidence on his part; or it may be to avoid the expense to which the plaintiff must be put in procuriug other cvidence to sustain his case.
When the plaintif's complaint, otherwise called a bill, prays for relief in the same suit, the statements of the defendant in his answer are considered by the court in forming a judgment upon the whole case.
To a certain extent, the statements of the defendant in answer to the bill are evidence for himself also.
The discovery which may be required is not only of facts within the knowledge of the defendant, but may, also, be of deeds and other writings in his possession.
The right to discovery is not, however, an unlimited one : as, for instance, the defendant is not bound to make a discovery which would subject him to punishment, nor, ordinarily, to discover the title upon which he relies in his defence; nor is the plaintiff entitled to require the production of all papers which he may desire to look into. The limits of the right deserve careful consideration. The discovery, when had, may be the foundation of equitable relief in the same suit, in which case it may be connected with all the classes of cases in which relief is sought; or it may be for the purpose of being used in some other court, in which case the jurisdiction is designated as an assistant jurisdiction.
9. Second, where the courts of law do not, or did ngt, recognize any right, and therefore could give no remedy, hut where the courts of equity recognize equitable rights and, of course, give equitable relief. This has been -lenominated the exclusive jurisdiction. In this class are trusts, charities, forfeited and imperfect mortgages, penalties and forfeitures, imperfect consideration.

Uses and trusts have been supposed to have had their origin in the restrictions laid ly parliament upon conveyances in morimain,that is, to the church for charitable, or rather for ecclesiastical, purposes.

It may well be that the doctrine of equitable titles and estates, unknown to the common law but which could be enforced in chancery, bad its origin in conveyances to individuals for the use of the church in order to avoid the operation of these restrictions,the conscience of the feoffee being bound to permit the church to have the use according to the design and intent of the feoffiment.
But conveyances in trust for the use of the church were not by any means the only cases in which it was desirable to convey the legal title to one for the use of another. In mauy instances, such a conveyance offered a convenient mode of making provision for those who, from any circumstances, were unable to manage property advantageously for themselves, or to whom it was not desirable to give the control of it; and the pro pricty in all such cases of some protection to the beneficiary is quite apparent. The court of chancery, by recognizing that he had an interest of an equitable character which could be protected and enforced against the holder of the legal titlo, exercised a jurisdiction to give relief in cases which the courts of common law could not reach consistently with their principles and modes of procedure.

Mortgages, which were originally estates conveyed upon condition, redeemable if the condition was performed at the day, but abso lute on non-performance, the right to redeem being thereby forfeited, owe their origin to the court of chancery; which, acting at first, perhaps, in some case where the non-performance was by mistake or accident, soon recognized an equitable right of redemption after the day, as a general rule, in order to relieve against the forfeiture. This became known as an equity of redemption,-a designation in use at the present day, although there has long been a legal right of redeniption in such cases.

Relief against penalties and forfcitures also was formerly obtained only through the aid of the court of chancery.

In most of the cases which fall under this head, courts of law now exercise a concurrent jurisdiction.
10. Third, where the courts of equity administer equitable relief for the infraction of legal rights, in cases in which the courts of law, recognizing the right, give a remedy according to their principles, modes, and forms, but the remedy is deemed by equity inadequate to the requirements of the case This is sometimes called the concurreut jurisdiction. This class embraces fraud, mista亡̌e, accident, administration, legacies, contribution, and cases where justice and conscience require the cancellation or reformation of instruments, or the rescission, or the specific performance of contracts.

The courts of law relieve against fraud, mistake, and accident where a remedy can be had according to their modes and forms; but there are many cases in which the legal remedy is inadequate for the purposes of justice.

The modes of investigation and the peculiar remedies of the courts of equity are often of the greatest importance in this class of cases.
Transfers to defeat or delay creditors; and purchases with notice of an outstanding title; come under the head of fraud.
It has been said that there is a less amount of evidence required to prove fraud, in equity, than there is at law; but the soundness of that position may well be doubted.
The court does not relieve in all cases of accident and mistake.
In many cases the circumstances are such as to require the cancellation or reformation of written instruments or the specific performance of contracts, instead of damages for the breach of them.
Fourth, where the court of equity administers a remedy because the relations of the parties are such that there are impediments to a legal remedy. Partnership furnishes a marked instance. Joint-tenancy and marshalling of assets may be included.
From the nature of a partnership, there are mpediments to suits at law between the several partners and the partnership in relation to matters involved in the partnership; and impediments of a somewhat similar character exist in other cases.
Fifth, where the forms of proceeding in the courts of law are not deemed adequate to the due invertigation of the particulars and details of the case. This class includes account, partition, dower, ascertainment of boundaries.
11. Sixth, where, from a relation of trust and confidence, or from consanguinity, the parties do not stand on equal ground in their dealings with each other: as, the relations of parent and child, guardian and ward, attorney and client, principal and agent, executor and administrator, legatees and distributees, trustee and cestui que trust, etc.
Seventh, where the court grant relief from considerations of public policy, because of the mischief which would result if the court did not interfere. Marriage-brokage agreements, contracts in restraint of trade, buying and selling public affices. agreements founded on corrupt considerations, usury, gaming, and contracts with expectant heirs, are of this class.
Cases of this and the preceding class are sometimes considered under the head of constructive fraud.
Eighth, where a party from incapacity to take care of his rights is under the special care of the court of equity, as infants, idiots, and lunatics.
This is a branch of jurisdiction of very ancient date, and of a special character, said to be founded in the prerogative of the king.

In this country the court does not, in gene. ral, assume the guardianship, but exercises an extensive jurisdiction over guardians, and may hold a stranger interfering with the property of an infant accountable as if he were guardian.

Ninth, where the court recognizes an obligation on the part of a husband to make provision for the support of his wife, or to make a settlement upon her, out of the property which comes to her by inheritance or otherwise.

This jurisdiction is not founded upon either trust or fraud, but is derived originally from the maxim that he who asks equity should do equity.

Tenth, where the equitable relief appropriate to the case consists in restraining the commission or continuance of some act of the defendant, administered by means of a writ of injunction.
Eleventh, the court aids in the procuration or preservation of evidence of the rights of a party, to be used, if necessary, in some subsequent proceeding, the court administering no final relief.
12. Peculiar remedies, and the manner of administering them. Under this head are-specific performance of contracts; ve-execution, reformation, rescission, and cancellation, of contracts or instruments ; restraint by injunction; bills quia timet; bills of peace; protection of a party liable at law, but who has no interest, by bill of interpleader ; election between two inconsistent legal rights; conversion; priorities; tacking; marshalling of securities; application of purchase-money.

In recent periods, the principles of the court of chancery have in many instances been acted on and recognized by the courts of law (as, for instance, in relation to mortgages, contribution, etc.) so far as the rules of the courts of law admitted of their in troduction.

In some states the entire jurisdiction has, by statute, been conferred upon the courts of law, who exercise it as a separate and distinct branch of their authority, upon the principles and according to the modes and forms previously adopted in chancery.

In a few, the jurisdictions of the courts of law and of equity have been amalgamated, and an entire system has heen substituted, administered more according to the principles and modes and forms of equity than the principles and forms of the common law.
13. Rules and maxims. In the administration of the jurisdiction, there are certain rules and maxims which are of special sig. nificance.

First, Equity having once had jurisdiction of a subject-matter because there is nc remedy at law, or because the remedy is inadequate, does not lose the jurisdiction merely because the courts of law afterwards give the same or a similar relief.

Second, Equity follows the law. This is true as a general maxim. Equity follows the law, except in relation to those matters which give a title to equitable relief becauss the rules of law would operate to sanction fraud or injustice in the particular case.

Third, When there is equal equity, the law must prevail. The ground upon which the suitor comes into the court of equity is that be is entitled to relief there. But if his adversary has an equally equitable case, the complainant has no title to relief.

Fourth, Equality is equity: applied to cases of contribution, apportionment of moneys due among those liable or benefited by the payment, abatement of claims on account of deliciency of the means of payment, etc.
Fifth, He who seeks equity must do equity. A party cannot claim the interposition of the court for relief unless he will do what it is equitable should be done by him as a condition precedent to that relief.

Sixth, Equity considers that as done which ought to have been done. A maxim of much more limited application than might at first be supposed from the broad terms in which it is expressed. In favor of parties who would have had a benefit from something contracted to be done, and who have an equitable right to have the case considered as if it had been done, equity applies this maxim. Illustration: when there is an agreement for a sale of land, and the vendor dies, the land may be treated as money, and the proceeds of the sale, when completed, go to the distributees of personal estate, instead of to the heir. If the vendee dies before the completion of the purchase, the purchase-money may be treated as land for the benefit of the heir.
14. Remedial process, and defence. A suit in equity is ordinarily instituted by a complaint, or petition, called a bill; and the defendant is served with a writ of summons, requiring him to appear and answer, called a subpoena.
The forms of proceedings in equity are such as to bring the rights of all'persons interested before the court; and, as a general rule, all persons interested should be made parties to the bill, either as plaintiffs or defendants.
There may be amendments of the bill; or a supplemental bill,-which is sometimes necessary when tbe case is beyond the stage for amendment.
In case the suit fails by the death of the party, there is a bill of revivor, and after the cause is disposed of there may be a bill of review.
The defence is made by demurrer, plea, or answer. If the defendant has no interest, he may disclaim. Discovery may be obtained from the plaintiff, and further matter may be introduced, by means of a cross-bill, brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, in order that it may be considered at the same time.
If the plaintiff elects, he may file a replication to the defendant's answer.
The final process is directed by the decree, which being a special judgment can provide relief according to the nature of the case. This is sometimes by a perpetalal injunction.
There may be a bill to execute, or to impeach, a decree.
15. Evidence and practice. The rules of evidence, except as to the effect of the answer and the taking of the testimony, are, in general, similar to the rules of evidence in cases at law. But to this there are exceptions.

The answer, if made on oath, is evidence for the defendant, so far as it is responsive to the calls of the bill for discovery, and as such it prevails, unless it is overcome by something more than what is equivalent to the testimony of one witness. If without oath, it is a mere pleading, and the allegations stand for proof.

If the answer is incomplete or improper, the plaintiff may except to it, and it must be so amended as to be made sufficient and proper.

The case may be heard on the bill and answer, if the plaintiff so elects, and sets the case down for a hearing in that mode.
If the plaintiff desires to controvert any of the statements in the answer, he files a replication by which he denies the truth of the allegations in the answer, and testimony is taken.
The testimony, according to the former practice in chancery, is taken upon interrogatories filed in the clerk's office, and propounded by the examiner, without the presence of the parties. But this practice has been very extensively modified.
If any of the testimony is improper, there is a motion to suppress it.
The case may be referred to a master to state the accounts between the parties, or to make such other report as the case may require ; and there may be an examination of the parties in the master's office. Exceptions may be taken to his report.
The hearing of the case is before the equity judge, who may make interlocutory orders or decrees, and who pronounces the final decree or judgment. There may be a rehearing, if sufficient cause is shown.

At the present day, in England and in several of the United States the proceedings are very much simplified.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. A right which the mortgagor of an estate has of redeeming it, after it has been forfeited at law by the non-payment at the time appointed of the money secured by the mortgage to be paid, by paying the amount of the debt, interest, and costs.

The phrase equity of redemption is indiscriminately, though often incorrectly, applied to the right of the mortgagor to regain his eatate, both before and after breach of condition. In North Carolina, by statute, the former is oalled a legal right of redemption, and the latter the equity of redemption, thereby keeping a just distinction between these estates. 1 No.C. Rev. Stat. 266; $4 \mathrm{M}^{\prime}$ Cord, So.C. 340. The intcrest is recognized at law for many purposes: as a subsisting estate, although the mortgagor in order to enforce his right is obliged to resort to an equitable. proceeding, administered generally in courts of equity, but in some states by courts of law, 11 Serg. \& R. Peon. 223, or in some states may pay the debt and have an action at law. 18 Johns. N. Y. 7, 110; 1 Halst. N. J. 466: 2 Harr. \& M'H. Md. 9.
2. This estate in the mortgagor is one which he may devise or grant, 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 544, and which is governed by the same rules of devolution or descent as any other estate in lands. 10 Conn. 243; $2 \mathrm{Sim} . \&$ S. Ch. 323 ; 2 Hare, Ch. 35. He may mortgage it, 1 Pick. Mass. 485, and it is liable for his debts, 3 Metc. Mass. 81 ; 21 Me .104 ; 7 Watts, Penn. 475; 15 Ohio, 467 ; 1 Caines, Cas. N.Y. 47; 4 B. Monr. EQUIVALENT. Of the same value. Sumetimes a condition must be literally accomplished in formâ specificâ; but some may be fulfilled by an equivalent, per cequipolens, when such appears to be the intention of the parties: as, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, and then die, my executor may fulfil my engagement; for it is equivalent to you whether the money be paid to you by me or by him. Rolle, Abr. 451; 1 Bonvier, Inst. n. 760 .

EQUIVOCAL. Having a double sense.
In the construction of contracts, it is a general rule that when an expression may be taken in two senses, that shall be preferred which gives it effect. See Construction; Interpretation; Dig. 22. 1. 4, 45. 1. 80. 50. 17.67.

EQUULEUS (Lat.). A kind of rack for extorting confessions. Encyc. Lond.

ERASURE. The obliteration of a writing. It will render it void or not under the same circumstances as an interlincation. See 5 Pet. 560 ; 11 Coke, 88 ; 4 Cruise, Dig. 368; 13 Viner, Abr. 41 ; Fitzg. 207 ; 5 Bingh. 183; 3 Carr. &P. 55 ; 2 Wend. N. Y. 555 ; 11 Conn. 531; 5 Mart. La. 190; 2 La. 291 ; 3 id. 56 ; 4id.270. ERCISCUNDUS (Lat. erciscere). For dividing. Familice erciscundoe actio. An action for dividing a way, goods, or any matter of inheritance. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

EREGIMUS (Lat. we have erected). A word proper to be used in the creation of a new office by the sovereign. Bacon, Abr. Offices, E.

EROTIC MANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A name given to a morbid activity of the sexual propensity. It is a disease or morbid affection of the miud, which fills it with a crowd of voluptnons images, and hurries its victim to acts of the grussest licentiousness, in the absence of any lesion of the intellectual powers. See Mania.

ERRANT (Lat. errare, to wander). Wandering. Justices in eyre were formerly said to be errant (itinerant). Cowel.

ERROR. A mistake in judgment or deviation from the truth in matters of fact, and from the law in matters of judgment.

Error of fact will excuse the party acting illegally but honestly, in many cases, will avoid a contract in sume instances, and when mutual will furnish equity with a ground for interference. 15 Me .45 ; 20 Wend N. Y. 174 ; 5 Conn. 71 ; 12 Mass. 36. See Mistake

Error in law will not, in general, excuse a man for its violation. A contract made under an error in law is, in general, binding; for, were it not so, error would be urged in almost every case. 2 East, 469 . See 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. $166 ; 8$ Cow. N. Y. 195 ; 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 249 ; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 156; 1 Younge & C. Ch. 232; 6 Barnew. & C. 671 ; Bowyer, Comm. 135; 3 Savigny, Dr. Rom. App. viii.

But a foreign law will for this purpose be considered as a fact. 15 Me. 45 ; 9 Pick. Mass. 112; 2 Puthier, Obl. Evans ed. 369, etc.

ESCAMBIO. In Old English Law. A writ granting power to an linglish merchant to draw a bill of exchange on another who is in a foreign country. Reg. Orig. 194.
ESCAMBIUM. Exchange, which see.
ESCAPE. The deliverance of a person who is lawfully imprisoned, out of prison, before such a person is entitled to such deliverance by law. 5 Mass. 310.

The voluntarily or negligently allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave the place. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8917.

Departure of a prisoner from custody before he is discharged by due process of law.

Esoape takes place without force; prison-hreach, with violence; reseue, through the intervention of third parties.

Actual escapes are those which take place when the prisoner in fact gets out of prison and unlawfully regains his liberty.

Constructive escapes take place when the prisoner obtains more liberty than the law allows, although he still remains in confinement. Bacon, Abr. Escape (B); Plowd. 17; 5 Mass. 310; 2 Mas. C. C. 486.

Negligent escape takes place when the prisoner goes atlarge, unlawfully, either because the building or prison in which he is confined is too weak to hold him, or because the keeper by carelessness lets him go out of prison.

Voluntary escape takes place when the prisoner has given to him voluntarily any liberty not authorized by law. 5 Mass. 310; 2 N. Chipm. Vt. 11.
2. When a man is imprisoned in a proper place under the process of a court having jurisdiction in the case, he is lawfully imprisoned, nutwithstanding the proceedings may be irregular, 1 Crawf. & D. Cr. Cas. 203; but if the court has not jurisdiction the imprisonment is unlawful, whether the process be regular or otherwise. Bacon, Abr. Escape in Civil Cases (A 1); 5 Johns. N. Y. 89; 13 id. 378; 1 C.رw. N. Y. 300; 8 id. 192; 1 Root, Conn. 288.

Letting a prisoner, confined under final process, out of prison for any even the shortest time, is an escape, although he afterwards re'urn, 2 W . Blackst. 1048 ; 1 Rolle, Abr. 826 ; and this may be (as in the case of imprisonment under a ca. sa.) although an officer may accompany him. 3 Coke, $44 a$; Plowd. 37; Hob. 202; 1 Bos. & P. 24; 2 W. Blackst. 1048.
3. In criminal cases, the prisoner is indictable for a misdemeanor, whether the escape be negligea or voluntary, 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. Cumm. ed. 189; Croke Car. 209; 7 Conn. 384; 16 id .47 ; and the officer is also indictable. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, z 924. If the offence of the prisoner was a felony, a voluntary escape is a felony on the part of the officer, 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 19, 825 ; if negligent, it is a misdemeanor only in any case. 2 Bishop. Crim. Law, 8925. It is the duty of the ,fficer to rearrest after an escape. 6 Hill, N. Y. 344.
4. In civil cases, a prisoner may be arr ested who escapes from custody on mesne process, and the officer will nut be liable if he rearrest him, Croke Jac. 419 ; but if the escape be voluntary from imprisonment on mesne process, and in any case if the escape be from final process, the officer is liable in damages to the plaintiff, and is not excused by retaking the prisoner. 2 Term, 172 ; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 56. Nothing but an act of God or the enemies of the country will excuse an escape. 24 Wend. N. Y. 381 ; 2 Murph. So. C. 386; 1 Brev. So. C. 146. Sec 5 Ired. No. C. 702; 5 Watte & S. Penn. 455; 17 Wend. N. Y. 543.

ESCAPE WARRANT. A warrant issued in England against a person who being charged in custody in the king's bench or Flect prison, in execution or mesne process, escapes and goes at large. Jacob, Law Dict.
ESCHEAT (Fr. escheoir, to happen). An accidental reverting of lands to the original lord.
In case of escheat by failure of heirs, by corruption of blood, or by conviction of certain crimes, the foud fell hack into the lord's hands by a termination of the tenure. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 24.

An obstruction of the course of descent, and a consequent determination of the tenure, by some unforcseen contingency ; in which case the land naturally results back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor or lord of the fee. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 244.
The estate itself which so reverted was called an escheat. Spelman, Gloss. The term included also other property which fell to the lord: as, trees which fell down, etc. Cowel.
2. All escheats under the English law are declared to be strictly feudal and to import the extinction of tenure. Wright, Ten. 115117; 1 W. Blackst. 123.

In this country, however, the state steps in, in the place of the feudal lord, by virtue of its sovereignty, as the original and ultimate proprietor of all the lands within its jurisdiction. 4 Kent, Comm. 424. See 10 Gill & J. Md. 450; 3 Danc, Abr. 140. It is, perhaps, questionable how far this incident exists at common law in the United States generally. In Maryland the lord pronrietor was originally the owner of the land, as the crown was in England. In most of the states the right to escheat is secured by statute. 4 Kent, Comm. 424; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 24,27 ; $2 i d .443$.

It seems to be the universal rule of civilized society that when the deceased owner has left no heirs it should vest in the public and be at the dispossl of the government. Code, 10. 10. 1 ; Domat, Droit Pub. liv. 1, t. 6 , s. 3, n. 1. See 10 Viner, Abr. 139 ; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 250; 1 Swift, Dig. 156; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 244, 245; 5 Binn. ESCEEATOR. The name of an officer whose duties are generally to ascertain what escheats have taken place, and to prosecute the claim of the sovereign for the purpose of recovering the escheated property. 10 Viner, Abr. 158; Coke, Litt. 13 b; Tomlin; Termes de la Ley. His office was to be retained hut one year; and no one person could hold the office more than once in three years. Termes de la Ley.

ESCRIBANO. In Spanish Law. The public officer who is lawtully authorized to reduce to writing and verify by his signature all judicial acts and proceedings, as well as all acts and contracts entered into between private individuals.

ESCROW. A deed delivered to a stranger, to be hy him delivered to the grantee upon the happening of certain conditions, upon which last delivery the transmission of title is complete.

The delivery must be to a stranger. 8 Mass. 230. See 9 Coke, 137 b; T. Moore, 642; 5 Blackf. Ind. 18 ; 23 Wend. N. Y. 43 ; 2 Dev. & B. No. C. $530 ; 4$ Watts, Penn. 180 ; 22 Me. 569. The second delivery must be conditioned, and not merely postponed. 3 M3tc. Mass. 412 ; 8 id. 436; 2 Barnew. & C. 82 ; Sheppard, Touchst. Preston ed. 58. Care should be taken to express the intent of the first delivery clearly. 2 Johns. N. Y. 248 ; 10 Wend. N. Y. 310 ; 8 Mass. 230 ; 22 Me . 569; 14 Conn. 271 ; 3 Green, Ch. N. J. 155. An escrow has no effect as a deed till the performance of the condition, 21 Wend. N.Y.267, takes effect from the second delivery. 1 Barb. N. Y. 500. See 3 Metc. Mass. 412; 6 Wend. N. Y. 666 ; 16 Vt. 563 ; 30 Me 110 ; 10 Penn. St. 285.

ESCUAGE. In Old English Law. Service of the shield. Tenants who hold their land by escuage hold by knight's service. 1 Thomas, Coke, Litt. 272; Littleton, $895,86 b$.

ESKIPPAMENTUM. Tackle or furniture; outfit. Certain towns in England were bound to furnish certain ships at their own expense and with double skippage or tackle. The modern word outfit would seem to render the passage quite as satisfactorily; though the conjecture of Cowel has the advantage of antiquity

ESKIPPER, ESKIPPARE. To ship. Kelham ; Rastell, Entr. 409.

ESKIPPESON. Shippage, or passage by sea. Spelled, also, skippeson. Cowel.

ESNECY. Eldership. In the English law, this word signifies the right which the eldest coparcener of lands has to choose one of the parts of the estate after it has been divided.

ESPERA. The period fixed by a competent judge within which a party is to do certain acts, as, e.g., to effect certain payments, present ducuments, etc.; and more especially the privilege granted by law to debtors, allowing them certain time for the payment of their indebtedness.

ESPLEES. The products which the land or ground yields: as, the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn or other produce of the arable, rents and services." Termes de la Ley. See 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 275 ; Dane, Abr. Index.

ESPPOUSALS. A mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other at some other time: it differs from a marriage, because then the contract is completed. Wood, Inst. 57.

ESQUIRE. A title applied by courtesy to officers of almost every description, to members of the har, and others. No one is entitled to it by law; and therefore it confers no distinction in law.

In England, it is a title next above that of a gentleman and helow that of a knight. Camden reckinsup four kinds of esquires particularly regerded by the heralds: the eldest sons of khights, and their eldest sons in perpetual succession; the eldest scns of the younger sons of peers, and their eldest sons in like perpetual succession; esquires created by the king's letters patent, or other investiture, and their eldest sons; esquires by virtue of their office, as justices of the peace, and others who bear any office of trust under the crown.

ESSENDI QUIETAM DE THEOLONIA (Lat. of being quit of toll). A writ which lay anciently for the citizens or burgesses of a town which was entitled to exemption from toll, in care toll was demanded of them. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brey. 226, I.

ESSOIN, ESSOIGN. In Old English Law. An excuse for not appearing in court at the return of the procese. Presentation of such excuse. Spelman, Gloss. ; 1 Sellon, Pract. 4 ; Comyns, Dig. Exoine, B 1. Essoin is not now allowed at all in personal actions. 2 Term, 16 ; 16 East, 7 (a); 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 278, note.

ESSOIN DAY. Formerly, the first day in the term was essoin day; now practically abolished. Dowl. 448; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 278, n .

ESSOIN ROLL. The roll containing the essoins and the day of adjournment. Roscoe, Real Act. 162 et seq.

ESTABLISH. This word occurs frequently in the constitution of the United States, and it is there used in differeut meanings. 1. To settle firmly, to fix unalterably: as, to establish justice, which is the avowed object of the constitution. 2. To make or form: as, to establish an uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies, - which evidently does not mean that these laws shall be unalterably established as justice. 3. To found, to create, to regulate: as, Congress shall have power to establish post-roads and post-offices. 4. Tc found, recognize, confirm, or admit : as, Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. 5. To create, to ratify, or confirm : as, We, the people, etc., do ordain and establish this constitution. 1 Story, Const. $z 454$.

ESTABLISHMENT, ESTABLISSE-
MENT. An ordinance or statute. Especially nsed of those ordinances or statutes passed in the reign of Edw. I. Coke, 2d Inst. 156; Britton, c. 21.

Establissement is also used to denote the settlement of dower by the husband upon his wife. Britton, c. 102.

ESTADAL. In Spanish Law. In Spanish America this was a measure of land of sisteen square varas, or yards. 2 White , Coll. 139.
estadia. In Spanish Law. Called, also, Sobrestadia. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, has to pay demurrage on account of his delay in the execution of the contract.

ESTATE (Lat. status, the condition or circumstances in which the ownor stands with reference to his property). The degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest which a person has in real property.

This word has several meanings. 1. In its most extensive sense, it is applied to signify every thing of which riehes or fortune may consist, and ineludes personal and real property: hence we say, personal estate, real estate. 8 Ves. Ch. $504 ; 16$ Johns. N. Y. 587 ; 4 Mete. Mass. 178 ; 3 Craneh, 97 . 2. In itsmore limitcd sense, the werd estate is applied to lands. It is so applicd in two senses, The first describes or points ont the land itself, without aseertaining the extent or nature of the interest therein : as, "my estate at A." The second, whioh is the proper and technical meaning of estate, is the degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest which one has in real property: as, an estate in fee, whether the same be a fee-simple or fee-tail, or an estate for life or for years, etc. Lerd Ceke says, Estate signifies such inheritance, freehold, term of years, tenancy by statute merchant, staple, eligit, or the like, as any man hath in lands or tenements, ete. Coke, Litt. $383+5,650 a$. See Janes, Land Office Titles in Penna. 165-170. estate per autre vie. An estate for the life of another. 1 W ashburn, Real Prop. 88; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 120.

estate Upon CONDItion. See Condition.

ESTATE IN COPARCENERY. An estate which several persons hold as one heir, whether male or female. This estate has the three unities of time, title, and possession; bnt the interests of the coparceners may be unequal. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 414; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 188; 4 Kent, Comm. 366.
estate by the curtesy. That estate to which a husband is entitied upon tho death of his wife in the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession in feesimple or in fee-tail during their coverture; provided they have had lawful issue born alive and possibly capable of inheriting her estate. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 128; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. & 1074; Cuke, Litt. 30 a; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Cumm. 126; 1 Grecnleaf, Cruise, Dig. 153; 4 Kent, Comm. 373, note a. See Curtesy.
ESTATE IN DOWER. An estate which a widow has for her life in some portion of the lands and tenements of which her husband was seised at any time during coverture, and which her issue might have inherited if she had any, and which is to take effect in possession from the death of her husland. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 149; Park, Dow. 5; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 129; 4 Kent, Comm. 41; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 64. See Dower.

estate by elegit. See Elegit.

ESTATE IN EXPECTANCY. An estate giving a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. One in which the right to pernancy of the profits is. postponed to some future period. 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 701. estate in fee-simple. The estate which a man has where lands are given to him and to his hreirs absolutely without any end or limit put to his estate. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 106; Plowd. 557; 1 Preston, Est. 425 ; Littleton, z 1 ; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 51. The word simple does not add any significance, but is used to mark fully the distinction between an unqualitied fee and a fee-tail or any class of conditional estates. . 1 Washlmin, Real Prop. 51.
estate in fee-tail. An inheritable estate which will descend to certain classes of heirs. The words "heirs of the body" of, etc. are the proper words of creation, 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 51, said to exist ly virtue of the statute de Donis. Crabb, Real Prop. 8971 ; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 79. See, generally, DuCange ; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 20, 79 ; Littleton, $\neq 18$; Sullivan, Lect. xvi.-xviii.; Wright, Ten. 187; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 66; 1 Gray, Mass. 286 ; 5 id. 523 ; 35 N. H. 176; 26 Penn. St. 126; 8 Gill, Md. 18.
estate of inheritance. An estate which may descend to heirs. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 51; 1 Stephen, Comm. 218.

All freehold estates are estates of inheritance, except estates for life. Crabb, Real Prop. 8945. estate of joint tenancy. The estate which subsists where sereral persons have any suhject of property jointly between them in equal shares by purchase. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 406; Williams, Real Prop. 112; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 180. The right of survivorship is the distinguishing characteristic of this estate. Littleton, & 280. In most of the United States the presumption is that all tenants holding jointly hold as tenants in common, unless a clear intention to the contrary be sbown. 6 Gray, Mass. 428; 7 Mass. 131; 5 Halst. N. J. 42 ; 20 Ala. N. s. 112; 1 Root, Conn. 48; 2 Ohio, 306 ; 10 Ohio, 1; 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 191; 3 Vt. 543; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 547 ; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 829; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 408.
estate for life. A freehold estate, not of inheritance, but which is held by the tenant for his own life or the life or lives of one or more other persons, or for an indefinite period, which may endure for the life or lives of persons in being, and not beyond the period of a life. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 88: 2 Crabb, Real Prop. $81020 ; 1$ Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 102; Coke, Litt. 42 a; Bracton, lib. 4, c. 28, 8207 . When the measure of duration is the tenant's own life, it is called an estate "for the tenant's own life;" when the measure of duration is the life of another person, it is called an estate "per (or pur) autre vie." 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 88; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 120; Coke, Litt. 41 b; 4 Kent, Comm. 23, 24.

Estates for life may be created by act of law or by act of the parties: in the former case they are called legal, in the latter, conventional. The legal life estates are estates-tail after possibility of issue extinct, estates by dower, estates by curtesy, jointures. 34 Me . 151; 5 Gratt. Va. 499; 1 Cush. Mass. 95 ; 6 id. 87 ; 24 Penn. St. 132 ; 6 Ind. 489; 3 Eng. L. \& Eq. $345 ; 5 \mathrm{Md} .219 ; 1$ Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 103.

The chief incidents of life estates are a right to take reasonable estovers, and freedom from injury by a sudden termination or disturbance of the estate. Under-tenants have the same privileges as the original tenant; and acts of the original tenant which would destroy his own claim to these privileges will not affect them. See 19 Penn. St. 323.

Their right, however, does not of course, as against the superior lord, extend beyond the life of the original tenant. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 122; 1 Rolle, Abr. 727; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 88 et seq.; Coke, Litt. 41 $b$ et seq.; 2 Flintoff, Real Prop. 232; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 102 et seq.

ESTATE IN POSSESSION. An estiate where the tenant is in actual pernancy or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. 8 $2322 ; 2$ Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 163; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 701.

ESTATE IN REMAINDER. An estate limited to take effect in possession, or in enjoyment, or in both, subject only to any term of years or contingent interest that may intervene immediately after the regular expiration of a particular estate of freehold previously created together with it, by the same instrument, out of the same subject of property. 2 Fearne, Cont. Rem. (Smith's ed.) 8 159; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 163; 1 estate in Reversion. The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 175; Coke, Litt. 22; Crabb, Real Prop. & 2345. The residue of an estate which always continues in him who made a particular grant. Plowd. 151; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 817; Coke, Litt. $22 b, 142 b$. It is an estate in expectancy created by law.

EState IN SEVERALTY. An estate held by a person in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest-doring his estate. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 179; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 829; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 112.

ESTATE BY STATUTE MERCHANT. An estate whereby the creditor, under the custom of London, retained the possession of all bis debtor's lands until his debts were paid. 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 515. See Statute Merchant.
gState at sufferance. The interest of a tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 392; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 150; Coke, Litt. 57 b; Smith, Landl. & T. 217 ; Crabb, Real Prop. 8 1543. This estate is of infrequent occurrence, but is recognized as so far an estate that the landlord must enter before he can bring ejectment against the tenant. 3 Term, 292; 8 id. 403 ; 1 Mann. & G. 644. If the tenant has personally left the house, the landlord may break in the doors, 1 Bingh. 58; 17 Pick. Mass. 263, 266; and the modern rule seems to be that the landlord may use force to iegain possession, subject ouly to indictment if any injury is committed against the public peace. 7 Term, 431; 1 Cush. Mass. 482; 7 Metc. Mass. 147; 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 437 ; 4 Johns. N. Y. $150 ; 1$ Watts & S. Penn. 90 ; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 390, $39 €$; 7 Mann. & G. 316; 13 Johns. N. Y. 235; 13 Pick. Mass. 36.
estate tail. See Estate in FeeTall.
estate in vadio. Pledge. See Mortgage.

ESTATE AT WILL. An estate in lands which the tenant has by entry made thereon under a demise, to hold during the joint wills of the parties to the same. Coke, Litt. 55 a; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 10; Smith, Landl. &T. 16; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 145; 4 Kent, Comm. 110; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 370. Estates properly at will are of very infrequent nccurrence, being generally turned into estates for years or from year to year by the decisions of the courts ur by statute. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. $370 ; 4$ Kent, Comm. 115; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 14; 4 Rawle, Penn. 123; 1 Term, 159.

ESTATE FOR YEARS. An interest in lands by virtue of a contract for the possession of them for a definite and limited period of time. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 140; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. ž 1267; Bacon, Abr. Leases; Williams, Real Prop. 195; 1 Waslburn, Real Prop. 298; 1 Platt, Leases, 47. Such estates are frequently called terms. The length of time for which the estate is to endure is of no importance in ascertaining its character, unless otherwise declared by statute. 15 Mass. 439; 1 N. H. $350 ; 13$ Serg. & R. Penn. 60; 4 Kent, Comm. 93. See 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 252, note.
estates of the realm. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 153. Sometimes called the three estates.

ESTER IN JUDGMENT. To appear before a tribunal either as plaintiff or defendant.

ESTOPPEL. The preclusion of a person from asserting a fact by previous conduct, inconsistent therewith, on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to call in question.

A preclusion, in law, which prevents a man from alleging or denying a fact, in consequence of his own previous act, allegation, or denial of a contrary tenor. Stephen, Plead. 239.

A plea which neitber admits nor denies the facts alleged by the plaintiff, but denies his right to allege them. Gould, Plead. c. 2, 339 .

A special plea in bar, which happens where a man has done some act or executed some deed which precludes him from averring any thing to the contrary. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 308.

Where a fact has been admitted or asserted for the purpose of influencing the conduct or deriving a benefit from another so that it cannot be denied without a breach of good faith, the law enforees the rule of good morals as a rule of policy, and precludes the party from repudiating bis representations or denying the truth of his admissions. 5 Ohio, 199; Rawle, Cov. 3d ed. 407.
This doctrine of law gives rise to a kind of pleading that is neither by way of traverse, nor confession and avoidanee, viz.: a pleading that, waiving any question of fact, relies merely on the estoppel, and, after stating the previous act, allegation, or denial of the opposite party, prays judgment if he shall be received or admitted to aver contrary to what he before did or said. This pleading is called a pleading by way of estoppel. Stephen, Plead. 240.
Formerly the questions of regarding estoppel arose almost entirely in relation to transfers of real property, and the rules in regard to one kind of estoppel were quite fully elaborated. In more modern time the principle bas come to be applied to all eases where one by words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces bim to act on that belief or to alter his own previuus position. 2 Exch. 653; 1 Zabr. N. J. 403; 28 Me. 525; 9 N. Y. 121; 16 Wend. N. Y. $531 ; 40 \mathrm{Me} .348$. See, as to the reason and propriety of the doctrine, Coke, Litt. 352 a; 11 Wend. N. Y. 117; 13 id. 178 ; 3 Hill, N. Y. 219; 1 Dev. \& B. No. C. 464; 12 Vt. 44.
2. By Deen. Such as arises from the provisions of a deed. It is a general rule that a party to a deed is estopped to deny any thing stated therein which has operated upon the other party: as, the inducement to accept and act under such deed, 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 464; 7 Conn. 214; 13 Vt. 158; 3 Mo. 373; 5 Ohio, 199; 10 Cueh. Mass. 163; and see 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 23 ; 7 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 14; 15 Mass. 307; 13 Pick. Mass. 116; 3 Cal. 263; 6 id. 153; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 507; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 411; 6 Ohio, 366; including a deed made with covenant of warranty, which estops even as to a subsequently acquired title, 11 Jobns. N. Y. 91 ; 13 id. 316 ; 14 id. 193; 9 Cow. N. Y. 271: 3 Pick. Mass. 52; 13 id. 116; 24 id. $324 ; 3$ Metc. Mass. $121 ; 13$ N. H. 389; 20 Me. 260; 3 Ohio, 107; 12 Vt. 39. But sce 13 Pick. Mass. 116; 5 Gray, Mass. 328; 4 Wend. N. Y. 300; 11 Ohio, 475; 14 Me. 351; 43 id. 432.
3. To create an estoppel, the deed must be grod and valid in its form and execution, 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 41, and must convey no title upon which the warranty can operate in case of a covenant. 3 McLean, C.C. 56; 9 Cow. N. Y. 271; 2 Preston, Abstr. 216. Estoppels affect only parties and privies in blood, law, or estate. 6 Bingh. n. c. 79 ; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 103; 6 Mass. 418; 24 Pick. Mass. 324; 35 N. H. 99 ; 5 Ohio, 190 : 11 id. 478; 2 Dev. No. C. 177; 13 N. H. 389. See 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 480. Estoppels, it is said, must be reciprocal. Coke, Litt. $352 a$. But see 4 Litt. Ky. 272 ; 15 Mass. 499; 11 Ark. 82; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 5 Hare & W. ed. 664. And see 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 458-481.
4. By Matter of Record. Such as arises from the adjudication of a competent court. Judgments in courts of record, and decrees and other final determinations of ecclesiastical, maritime, and military courts, work estoppels. 4 Kent, Comm. 101 h ed. 293 ; 4 Mass. $6: 5$; 10 id. 155 ; 1 Mnnf. Va. 466; 3 East, 345, 356 ; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 362.

By Matter in Pays. Such as ariees from the acts and declarations of a person by which he designedly induces another to alter his position injuriously to himeelf. 17 Conn. 345, 355; 18 id. 138; 5 Den. N. Y. 154. This principle has been applied to cases of dedication of land to the public use, 6 Pet. 438; 19 Pick. Mass. 405, of the owner's standing by and seeing land improved upon, 8 Wend. N. Y. 483; 4 Watts & S. Penn. 323, or sold, 7 Watts, Penn. 168; 11 N. H. 201; 2 Dan. Ky. $13 ; 13$ Cal. $359 ; 1$ Woodb. & M. C. C. 213; 21 Me .130 ; 40 id. 348 , without making claim. But see 16 Pick. Mass. 457; 2 Metc. Mass. 423; 36 Me 178. Sce Admission; Confession. Consult 4 Kent, Ccmm. 10th ed. 293, n.; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 458-481; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 5 Hare & W. ed.; Rawle, Cov. 3d ed. c. 9 .
ESTOVERS (estouviers, necessaries; from estoffer, to furnish). The right or privilege which a tenant has to furnish himself with so much wood from the demised premises as may be sufficient or necessary for his fuel, fences, and other agricultural operations. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 35 ; Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 232; 10 Wend. N. Y. 639.
2. Any tenant may claim this right, whether he be a tenant for life, for years, or at will ; and that withont waiting for any special leave or assignment of the lessor, unless he is restrained by some provision contained in his lease. Sheppard, Touchst. 3, n. 1. Nor does it appear to be necessary that the wood should all be consumed upon the premises, provided it is taken in good faith for the use of the tenant and his servants, and in reasonable quantities, with the further qualification, also, that no substantial injury be done to the inheritance. 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 573.
3. Where several tenants are granted the right of estovers from the same estate, it becomes a common of estovers; but no one of such tenants can, by underletting his land to two or more persons, apportion this right among them; for in this way he might surcharge the land, and the rights of his cotenants, as well as those of the landlord, would be thereby invaded. In case, therefore, of the division of a farm among several tenants, neither of the under-tenants can have estovers, and the right, ennsequently, becomes extinguished. 10 Wend. N. Y. 650 ; 4 Coke, $36 ; 8 i d .78$. There is much learning in the old books relative to the creation, apportionment, suspension, and extinguishment of these rights, very little of which, however, is applicable to the condition of things in this country, except perhaps in the state of Nerv York, where the entanglements produced by grants of the manor-lands have led to some litigation ou the sulject. Taylor, Landl. & Ten. 8220. See 4 Washburn, Real Prop. 99; 7 Bingh. 640; 7 Pick. Mass. 152; 17 id. 248 ; 14 Me. 221 ; 2 N. H. 130 ; 7 ial. 341; 7 Ired. Eq. No. C. 197; 6 Yerg. Tenn. 334; 5 Mas. C. C. 13.

ESTRAYS. Cattle whose owner is unknown. 2 Kent, Comm. 359; Spelman, Gloss. Any beast, not wild, found within any lordship, and not owned by any man. Cowel; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 297; 2 id. 14. These belonged to the lord of the soil. Britton, c. 17.
estreat. A true copy or note of some original writing or record, anl especially of fines and amercements imposed by a conrt, extracted from the record, and certified to a proper officer or officers authorized and required to collect them. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 57, 76. A forfeited recognizance taken out from among the other records for the purpose of being sent up to the exchequer, that the parties might be sued thereon, was said to be ostreated. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 253

ESTREPEMENT. A common-law writ for the prevention of waste.

The writ lay at enmmon law to prevent a purty in possession from committing waste on an estate ths title to which was disputed, after judgment obtained in any real action and before possession was delivered by the sheriff.
But, as waste might be committed in some cases pending the suit, the statute of Gloucester gave another writ of estrepement pendente placito, commanding the shoriff firmly to inhibit the tenant "ne faciat vartum vel atrepementum pendente placito dicto indiscusso." By virtue of either of these writs, the sheriff may resist those who commit waste or offer to do so; and he might use sufficient force for the purpose. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 225, 226.
2. This writ is sometimes directed to the sheriff and the party in possession of the lands, in order to make him amenable to the court as for a contempt in case of his disobedience to the injunction of the writ. At common law the process proper to bring the tenant into court is a venire facias, and thereon an attachment. Upon the defendant's coming in, the plaintiff declares against him. The defendant usually pleads "that he has done no waste contrary to the prohibition of the writ." The issue on this plea is tried by a jury, and in case they find against the defendant they assess damages which the plaintiff recovers. But, as this verdict convicts the defendant of a contempt, the court proceed against him for that cause as in other cases. Coke, 2d Inst. 329 ; Rastell, Entr. 317; More, 100; 1 Bos. & P. 121; 2 Lilly, Reg. Estrepement; 5 Coke, 119 ; Reg. Brev. 76, 77.
3. In Pennsylvania, by legislative enactment, the remedy by estrepement is extended for the benefit of any owner of lands leased for years or at will, at any time during the continuance or after the expiration of such demise, and due notice given to the tenant to leave the same, agreeably to law; or for any purchaser at sheriff or coroner's sale of lands, etc., after he has been declared the highest bidder by the sheriff or coroner; or for any mortgagee or judgment-creditor, after the lands bound by such judgment or mortgage shall have been condemned by inquisition, or which may be subject to be sold by a writ of venditioni exponas or levari facias. See 10 Viner, Abr. 497 ; Wondfall, Landl. & Ten. 447 ; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 17; 7 Comyns, Dig. 659.

FTCFTERA (Lat.). And others; and other things.

The abbreviation etc. was formerly much used in pleading to avoid the inconveniences attendant upon making full and half defence. See Drfence. It is not generally to be used in solemn instruments. See 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 427.

ET DE HOC PONIT SE SUPER PATRIAM (Lat.). And of this he puts himsclf upon the country. The Latin form of concluding a traverse. See 3 Blackstone, Comm. 313.

ET HOC PARATUS EST VERTFICARE (Lat.). And this he is prepared to verify. The Latin form of concluding a plea in confession and aroidance; that is, where the defendant has confessed all that the plain. tiff has set forth, and has pleaded new matter in avoidance. 1 Salk. 2.
ET HOC PETIT QUOD INQURIATUR PER PATRIAM (Lat.). And this he prays may be inquired into by his country. The conclusion of a plea tendering an issue to the country. 1 Salk. 3.
ET INDE PRODUCIT SECTAM (Lat.). And thereupon he brings suit. The Latin conclusion of a declaration, except against attorneys and other officers of the court. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 295.
ET MODO AD HUNC DIEM (Lat.). And now at this day. The Latin form of the commencement of the record on appearance of the parties.
ET NON (Lat.). And not. These words are sometimes employed in pleading to convey a pointed denial. They have the same effect as " without this," absque hoc.
vier, Inst. u. 2981, note.
EUNDO MORANDO BT REDEUNDO (Lat.). This Latin phrase signifies going, remaining, and returning. It is omployed in cases where a person, either as a party, a witness, or one acting in some other capacity, as an elector, is privileged from arrest, in order to give him the freedom necessary to the performance of his respective ebligations, to signify that he is protected from arrest eundo morando et redeundo. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3380.

EUNOMY. Equal laws and a well-adjusted constitution of government.
EUNUCH. A male whose organs of generation have been so far removed or disorganized that he is rendered incapable of reproducing his species. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. prél. tit. 2, в. 1, n. 10.

EVASION (Lat. evadere, to avoid). A subtle device to set aside the truth or escape the punishment of the law: as, if a man should tempt another to strike him first, in erder that he might have an opportunity of returning the blow with impunity. He is, nevertheless, punishable, because he becomes himself the aggressor in such a case. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. $31,8824,25$; Bacon, Abr. Fraud, A.
EVICTION. Depriving a person of the possession of his lands or tenements.

Technically, the dispossession must be by judgment of law; if otherwise, it is an ouster.
Total eviction takes place when the possessor is wholly deprived of his rights in the promises. Partial eviction takes place when the possessor is deprived of only a portion of them: as, if a third person comes in and ejects him from the possession of half his land, or establishes a right to some easement over it, by a title which is prior to that under which he holds.
2. With respect to the demised premises, an eviction consists in taking from a tenant some part of the premises of which he was in possession, not in refusing to put him in possession of something which by the agreement with his landlord he should bave enjoyed. 12 Wend. N. Y. 529. And in order to effect a suspension of rent there must be something equivalent to an expulsion from the premises, and nut a mere trespass or disturbance in the enjoyment of them. 4 Wend. N. Y. 505; 5 Sandf. N. Y 542; T. Junes, 148; 1 Yerg. Tenn. 379.
3. It is not necossary, however, in order to produce the eviction of a tenant, that there should be an actual physical expulsion; for a landlord may do many acts tending to diminish the enjoyment of the premises, short of an expulsien, which will amount to an eviction in law: as, if he erects a nuisance so near the demised premises as to deprive the tenant of the use of them, or if he otherwise intentionally disturbs the tenant's enjoyment to such an extent as to injure his business or destroy the comfort of himself and family, it will amount to an eviction. ${ }^{8}$ Cow. N. Y. 727 ; 2 Ired. No. C. 350 ; 1 Sandf. N. Y. 260; 4 N. Y. 217.
4. The remedy for an exiction depends chiefly upon the corenants in the deed under which the party held. When the grantee suffers a total eviction, if he has a covenant of seisin or for quiet enjoyment, he recovers from the grantor the consideration-muney which be paid for the land, with interest, and not the enhanced value of the premises, whether such value has been created loy the expenditure of money in improrements thereon, or by any other more general cause. 14 Wend. N. Y. 38; 2.Mass. 432; 2 Wheat. Penn. 62. And this seems to be the general rule in the United States. 3 Caines, N. Y. 111; 4 Johns. N. Y. 1; 13 id. 50; 4 Dall. Penn. 441; Cooke, Tenn. 447; 1 Hen. & M. Va. 202; 5 Munf. Va. 415; 4 Halst. N. J. 139; 2 Bibb, Ky. 272. In Massachusetts, the measure of damages on a covenant of warranty is the value of the land at the time of eviction. 3 Mass. 523 ; 4 id. 108. See, as to other states, 1 Bay, So. C. 19, 265 ; 3 Des. Eq. So. C. 245 ; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 413 ; 3 Call, Va. 326.
5. With respect to a lessee, however, who pays no purchase-money, the rule of damages upon an eviction is different; for be recovers nothing, except such expenses as he may have been put to in defending bis'possession; and as to any improvements he may have made upon the premises, he stands upon the same general footing with a purchaser. The rents reserved in a lease, where no other consideration is paid, are regarded as a just equivalent for the use of the demised premises. Upon an eviction the rent ceases, and the lessee is therehy relieved from a burden which must be deemed equal to the benefit he would have derived from the continued enjoyment of the property. 2 IIill, N. Y. 105. And see 1 In. N. Y. 343 ; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. 8317.
6. When the eviction is only partial, the damages to be recovered under the corenant of seisin are a ratable part of the original price, and they are to bear the same ratio to the whole consideration that the value of the land to which the title has failed bears to the value of the whole tract. The contract is not rescinded, so as to entitle the vendes to the whole consideration-money, but only to the amount of the relative value of the part lost. 5 Johns. N. Y. 49; 12 id. 126 ; La. Civ. Code, 2490; 4 Kent, Comm. 462. See 6 Bacon, Abr. 44; 1 Saund. 204, note 2, 322 a, note 2; 1 Buavier, Inst. n. 656.

EVIDENCE. That which tends to prove or disprove any matter in question, or to influence the belief respecting it. Belief is produced by the consideration of something presented to the mind. The matter thus presented, in whatever shape it may come, and through whatever material organ it is derived, is evidence. Prof. Parker, Lectures on Medical Jurisprudence, in Dartmouth College, N. H.

The word evidence, in legal acceptation, includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. 1 Grecnleaf, Ev. c. 1, $\ell 1$.

That which is legally submitted to a jury, to enable them to decide upon the questions in dispute, or issues, as pointed out by the pleadings, and distinguished from all comment and argument, is termed evidence. 1 Starkie, Ev. pt. 1, & 3.
2. Evidence may be considered with reference to its instruments, its nature, its legal character, its effect, its object, and the modes of its introduction.

The instruments of evidence, in the legal acceptation of the term, are:-

1. Judicial notice or recognition. There are divers things of which courts take judicial notice, without the introduction of proof by the parties: such as the territorial extent of their jurisdiction, local divisions of their own countries, seats of courts, etc. If the judge needs information on subjects, he will soek it from such sources as he deems authentic. See 1 Greenleaf, Er. c. 2.
2. Public records; the registers of official transactions made by officers appointed for the purpose: as, the public statutes, the judgments and proceedings of courts, etc.
3. Judicial writings: such as inquisitions, depositions, etc.
4. Publie documents having a semi-official character: as, the statute-books published under the authority of the government, documents printed by the authority of congress, etc.
5. Private writings: as, deeds, contracts, wills.
6. Testimony of witnesses and, sometimes, of the parties to a cause.
7. Personal inspection, by the jury or tribunal whose duty it is to determine the matter in controversy: as, a view of the locality by the jury, to enable them to determine the disputed fact, or the better to understand the testimony, or inspection of any machine or weapon which is produced in the cause.
There are rules prescribing the limits and regulating the use of these different instruments of evidence, appropriate to each class.
8. In its nature, evidence is direct, or presumptive, or circumstantial.

Direct evidence is that means of proof which tende to show the existence of a fact in question, without the intervention of the proof of any other fact.
It is that evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. Evidence is direct and positive when the very facts in dispute are communicated by those who have the actual knowledge of them by means of their senses. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 116; 1 Starkie, Ev. 19. In one sense, there is but little direct or positive proof, or such proof as is acquired by means of one's own sense; all other evidence is presumptive; but, in common acceptation, direct and positive evidence is that which is communicated by one who bas actual knowledge of the fact.

Presumptive evidence is that which shows the existence of one fact, by proof of the existence of another or others, from which the first may be inferred; because the fact or facts shown have a legitimate tendency to lead the mind to the conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be proved.
Presumptive evidence has been divided into presumptions of law and presumptions of fact.
4. Presumptzons of law, adopted from motives of public policy, are those which ariss in certain cases by force of the rules of law, directing an inference to be drawn from proof of the existence of a particular fact or facts.
They may be conclusive or inconclusive.
Conclusive presumptions are those which admit of no averment or proof to the contrary. Thus, the records of a court, except in some proceeding to amend them, are conclusive evidence of the matter there recorded being presumed to be rightly made up.

Inconolusive or disputable presumptions of law are those where a fact is presumed to exist, either from the general experience of mankind, or from policy, or from proof of the existence of certain other facts, until something is offered to show the contrary. Thus, the law presumes a man to be sane until the contrary appears, and to be innocent of the commission of a crime until he is proved to be guilty. So, the existence of a person, or of a particular state of things, being shown, the law presumes the person or state of things to continue until something is offered to conflict with that presumption. See Best on Presumption, ch. ii.
But the presumption of life may be rebutted by another presumption. Where a party has been absent from his place of residence for the term of seven years, without having been heard of, this raises a presumption of his death, until it is encountered by some evidence showing that he is actually alive, or was so within that period.
5. Presumptions of fact are not the subject of fixed rules, but are merely natural pre-sumptions, such as appear, from cummon experience, to arise from the particular circumstances of any case. Some of these are "founded upon a knowledge of the human character, and of the motives, passions, and feelings by which the mind is usually influonced." 1 Starkie, Ev. 27.

They may be said to be the conclusions drawn by the mind from the natural connection of the circumstances disclosed in each case, or, in other words, from circumstantial evidence.

Circumstantial evidence is sometimes used as synonymous with presumptive evidence; but presumptive evidence is not necessarily and in all cases what is usually understood by circumstantial evidence. The latter is that evidence which tends to prove a disputed fact by proof of other facts which have a legitimate tendency, from the laws of nature, the usual connection of things, the ordinary transaction of business, etc., to lead the mind to a conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be established. See 1 Starkie, Ev. 478. Presumptive evidence may sometimes be the result, to some extent, of an arbitrary rule-as in the case of the presumption of death after an absence of seven years without being heard of-derived by analogy from certain statutes.

The jurists and the jury draw conclusions from circumstantial evidence, and find one fact from the existence of other facts shown to them, -some of the presumptions being so clear and certain that they have become fixed as rules of law, and others having greater or less weight according to the circumstances of the case, leaving the matter of fact inquired about in doubt until the proper tribunal to determine the question draws the conclusion.
6. In its legal character, evidence is primary or secondary, and primâ facie or conclusive.

Primary evidence. The best evidence, or that proof which most certainly exhibits the true state of facts to which it relates. The law requires this, and rejects secondary or inferior evidence when it is attempted to be substituted for evidence of a higher or superior nature. For example, when a written contract has been entered into, and the object is to prove what it was, it is requisite to produce the original writing, if it is to be attained; and in that case no copy or other inferior evidence will be received.

This is a rule of policy, grounded upon a reasonable suspicion that the substitution of inferior for better evidence arises from sinister motives, and an apprehension that the best evidence, if produced, would alter the case to the prejudice of the party. This rule relates not to the measure and quantity of evideace, but to its quality when compared with some other evidence of superior degree.

To this general rule there are several exceptions. 1. As it refers to the quality rather than to the quantity of evidence, it is evident that the fullest proof that every case admits of is not requisite: if, therefore, there are several eye-witnesses to a fact, it may be sufficiently proved by one only. 2. It is not always requisite, when the matter to be proved has been reduced to writing, that the writing should be produced: as, if the narrative of a fact to be proved has been committed to writing, it may yet be proved by parol evidence. A receipt for the payment of money, for example, will not exclude parol evidence of payment. 4 Esp. 213. Acd see 7 Barnew. & C. 611; 1 Campb. 439; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 566.
7. Secondary evidence. That species of proof which is admissible when the primary evidence cannot be produced, and which becomes by that event the best evidence. 3 Yeates, Penn. 530.
But before such evidence can be allowed it must be clearly made to appear that the superior evidence is not to be had. The person who possesses it must be applied to, whether be be a stranger or the opposite party: in the case of a stranger, a subpoena and attachment, when proper, must be taken out and served; and in the case of a party, notice to produce such primary evidence must be proved before the secondary evidence will be admitted. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 116 ; 4 Binn. Penn. 295, note ; 6 id. 228, 478; 7 East, 66; 8 id. 278; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 296. After proof of the due execution of the original, the contents should be proved by a counterpart, if there be one, for this is the next best evidence; and it seems that no evidence of a mere copy is admissible until proof has been given that the counterpart cannot be produced. 6 Term, 236. If there be no counterpart, a copy may be proved in evidence by any wituess who knows that it is a copy, from having compared it with the original. Buller, Nisi P. 254; 1 Kebl. 117; 6 Binn. Penn. 234; 2 Taunt. 52 ; 1 Campl. 469 ; 8 Mass. 273. If regularly recorded, an office copy may be given in evidence. If there be no copy, the party may produce an abstract, or even give parol evidence of the contents of a deed. 10 Mod. 8; 6 Term, 556.
But it has been decided that there are no degrees in secondary evideuce; and when a party has laid the foundation for such evidence, he may prove the contents of a deed by parol, although it appear that an attested copy is in existence. 6 Carr. & P. 206; 8 id. 389.

Primat facie evidence is that which appears to be sufficient proof respecting the matter in question, until something appears to controvert it, but which may be contradicted or controlled.

Conclusive evidence is that which establishes the fact: as in the instance of conclusive presumptions.

Evidence may be conclusive for some purposes but not for others.
8. Admissibility of evidence. In considering the legal character of evidence, we are naturally led to the rules which regulate its competency and admissibility, although it is not precisely accurate to say that evidence is in its legal character competent or incompetent; because what is incompetent for the consideration of the tribunal which is to pronounce the decision is not, strictly speaking, evidence.

But the terms incompetent evidence and inadmissible evidence are often used to designate what is not to be heard as evidence: as, witnesses are spoken of as competent or incompetent.

As the common law excludes certain classes of persons from giving testimony in particular cases, because it deems their exclusion conducive, in general, to the discovery of the truth, so it excludes certain materials and statements from being introduced as testimony in a cause, for a similar reason. Thus, as a general rule, it requires witnesses to speak to facts within their own knowledge, and excludes hearsay evidence.

Hearsay is the evidence, not of what the witness knows himself, but of what he has heard from others.

Such mere recitals or assertions cannot be received in evidence, for many reasons, but principally for the following:-first, that the party making such declarations is not on oath; and, secondly, because the party against whom it operates has no opportunity of cross-examination. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 185. See, for other reasons, 1 Starkie, Er. pt. 1, p. 44. The general rule excluding hearsay evidence does not apply to those declarations to which the party is privy, or to admissions which he himself has made.

Admissions are the declarations which a party by himself, or those who act under his authority, make of the existence of certain facts. See Admission.

A statement of all the distinctions between what is to be regarded as hearsay and what is to he deemed original evidence would extend this article too far.

The general principle is that the mere declaration, oral or written, of a third person, as to a fact, standing alone, is inadmissible.
9. Res gesta. But where evidence of an act done by a party is admissible, his declarations made at the time, having a tendency to elucidate or give a character to the act, and which may derive a degree of credit from the act itself, are also admissible, as part of the res gesto. 9 N. H. 271.

So, declarations of third persons, in the presence and hearing of a party, and which tend to affect his interest, may be shown in order to introduce his answer or to show an admission by his silence.

Confessions of guilt in criminal cases come within the class of admissions, provided they have heen voluntarily made and have not been obtained by the hope of favor or by the fear of punishment. And if made under such inducements as to exclude them, a subsequent declaration to the same effect, made after the inducement has ceased to operate, and having no connection with the hopes or fears which have existed, is admissible as evidence. 17 N. H. 171. See Admissions; Confession.
10. Dying declarations are an exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence, and are admitted, under certain limitations in cases of homicide, so far as the circumstances attending the death and its cause are the suliject of them. See Declaration; Dying Declarations.

Opinions of persons of skill ànd experience, called experts, are also admissible in certain cases, when, in order to the better understanding of the evidence or to the solution of the question, a certain skill and experience are required which are not ordinarily possessed by jurors.

In several instances proof of facts is excluded from public policy: as, professional communications, secrets of state, proceedings of grand jurers, and communications between husband and wife.

Many facts, from their very nature, either absolutely or usually exclude direct evidence to prove them, being such as are either necessarily or usually imperceptible by the senses, and therefore incapable of the ordinary means of proof. These are questions of pedigree or relationship, character, prescription, custom, bonndary, and the like; as also questions which depend upon the exercise of particular skill and judgment. Such facts, some from their nature, and others from their antiquity, do not admit of the ordinary and direct means of proof by living witnesses ; and, consequently, resort must be had to the best means of proof which the nature of the cases affords. See Bocndary; Custom; Opinion; Pedigree; Prescription.

11. The effect of evidence. As a general rule, a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction directly upon a point in issue is a bar between the same parties, 1 Phillipps, Ev. 242; and privies in blood, as an heir, 3 Mod. 141 , or privies in estate, 1 Ld . Raym. 730 ; Buller, Nisi P. 232, stand in the same situation as those they represent: the verdict and judgment may be used for or against them, and is conclusive. See Res Judicata.

The constitution of the United States, art. 4, s. 1, declares that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. And congress may, by general laws, prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof." See Authentication; 7 Cranch, 408, 481; 9 id. 192; $\ddagger$ Wheat. 234; 10 id. $469 ; 17$ Mass. $546 ; 2$ Yeates, Penn. 532; 3 Bibb, Ky. 369 ; 2 Marsh. Ky. 293; 5 Day, Conn. 563.

As to the effect of foreign laws, see Forrign Laws. For the force and effect of foreign judgments, see Foreign Judgments.
12. The objoct of evidence is next to be considered. It is to ascertain the truth between the parties. It has been discovered by experience that this is done most certainly by the adoption of the following rules, which are now binding as law.-1. The evidence must be confined to the point in issue. 2. The substance of the issue must be proved; but only the substance is required to be proved. 3. The affirmative of the issue must be proved.

It is a general rule, both in civil and criminal cases, that the evidence shall be confined to the point in issue. Justice and convenience require the observance of this rule, particularly in criminal cases; for when a prisoner is charged with an offence it is of the ntmost importance to him that the facts laid before the jury should consist exclusively of the transaction which forms the subject of the indictment, and which alone he has come prepared to answer. 2 Russell, Cr. 694; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 166.

To this general rule there are several exceptions, and a variety of cases which do not fall within the rule. In general, evidence of collateral facts is not admissible; but when such a fact is material to the issue joined between the parties, it may be given in evidence: as, for example ${ }_{\text {t }}$ in order to prove that the acceptor of a bill knew the payee to be a fictitions person, or that the drawer had general authority from him to fill up bills with the name of a fictitious payee, evidence may be given to show that he had accepted similar bills before they could, from their date, have arrived from the place of date. 2 H. Blackst. 288.

When special damage sustained by the plaintiff is not stated in the declaration, it is not one of the points in issue, and, therefore, evidence of it cannot be received; yet a damage which is a necessary result of the defendant's breach of contract may be proved notwithstanding it is not in the declaration. 11 Price, Exch. 19.

In general, evidence of the character of either party to a suit is inadmissible; yet in some cases such evidence may be giren. See Character.

When evidence incidentally applies to another person or thing not included in the transaction in question, and with regard to whom or to which it is inadmissible, yet if it bear upon the point in issue it will be received. 8 Bingh. 376. And see 1 Phillipps, Ev. 158; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1035 ; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 985 ; 4 Bos. & P. 92 ; Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 376; 2 Yeatcs, Penn. 114; 9 Conn. 47.
13. The acts of others, as in the case of conspirators, may be given in evidence against the prisoner, when referable to the issue; but confessions made by one of several conspirators after the offonce has been completed, and when the conspirators no longer act in concert, cannot be received. See Confession : 3 Pick. Mass. 33 ; 10 id. 497 ; 2 Pet. 364 ; 2 Va. Cas. 26! ; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 9, 220; 1 Rawle, Penn. 362, 458 ; 2 Leigh, Va. 745 ; 2 Day, Cas. Conn. $205 ; 2$ Barnew. & Ald. 573, 574.

In criminal cases, when the offence is a cumulative one, consisting itself in the commission of a number of acts, evidence of those acts is not only admissible, but essential to support the charge. On an indictment against a defendant for a conspiracy to canse himself to be believed a man of large property, for the purpose of defranding tradesmen, after proof of a representation to one tradesman, evidence may therenpon be given of a representation to another tradesman at a different time. 1 Campb. 399; 2 Day, Conn. 205 ; 1 Johns. N'. Y. 99 ; 4 Rog. 143; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 193.
To prove the guilty knowledge of a prisoner with regard to the transaction in question, evidence of other offences of the same kind committed by the prisoner, though not charged in the indictment, is admissible against him : as, in the case where a prisoner had passed a counterfeit dollar, evidence that he had other counterfeit dollars in his possession is evidence to prove the guilty knowledge. 2 Const. So. C. 758,$776 ; 1$ Bail. So. C. 300; 2 Leigh, Va. 745 ; 1 Wheel. Cr. Cas. N. Y. 415 ; 3 Rog. 148 ; Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 132; 1 Campb. 324; 5 Rand. Va. 701.
14. The substance of the issue joined between the parties must be proved. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 190. Under this rule will be considered the quantity of evidence required to support particular averments in the declaration or indictment.

And, first, of civil cases. 1. It is a fatal variance in a contract if it appear that a party who ought to have been joined as plaintiff has been omitted. 1 Saund. $291 h$, n.; 2 Term, 282. But it is no variance to omit a person who might have been joined as defendant; becanse the non-joinder ought to have been pleaded in abatement. 1 Saund. 291 d, n. 2. The consideration of the contract must be proved; but it is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out in his declaration, or prove on the trial, the several parts of a contract consisting of distinct and collateral provisions : it is sufficient to state so much of the contract as contains the entire consideration of the act, and the entire act to be done in virtue of such consideration, including the time, manner, and other circumstances of its performance. 6 East, $568 ; 4$ Barnew. & Ald. 387.
15. Secondly. In criminal cases, it may be laid down that it is, in general, sufficient to prove what constitutes an offence. It is enough to prove so much of the indictment as shows that the defendant has committed a substantive crime therein specified. 2 Campb. 585 ; 1 IIarr. & J. Md. 427. If a man be indieted for robbery, he may be found gailty of larceny and not guilty of the robbery. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 302. The offence of which the party is convicted must, however, be of the same class with that of which he is charged. 1 Leach, 14; 2 Strange, 1133.

When the intent of the prisoner furnishes one of the ingredients in the offence, and several intents are laid in the indictment, each of which, together with the act done, constitutes an offence, it is sufficient to prove one intent only. 3 Stark. 35.
16. 3. When a person or thing necessary to be mentioned in an indictment is described with circumstances of greater particularity than is requisite, yetthose circumstancesmust be preved. 3 Rog. 77; 3 Day, Conn. 283. For example, if a party be charged with stealing a black horse, the evidence must correspond with the averment, although it was unnecessary to make it. Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 77; 4 Ohio, 350.
4. The name of the prosecutor or party injured must be proved as laid; and the rule is the same with reference to the name of a third person introduced into the indictment, as descriptive of some person or thing.
5. The affirmative of the issue must be proved. The general rule with regard to the burden of proving the issue requires that the party who asserts the affirmative should prove it. But this rule ceases to operate the moment the presumption of law is thrown into the other scale. When the issue is on the legitimacy of a child, therefore, it is incumbent on the party asserting the illegitimacy to prove it. 2 Selwyn, Nisi P. 709. See Onus Probandi; Prescmption; 2 Gall. C.C. 485 ; I M'Cord, So. C. 573.

1\%. Modes of proof. Records are to be proved by an exemplification, duly authenticated (see Authentication), in all cases where the issue is nul tiel record. In other cases, an examined copy, duly proved, will, in general, be evidence. Foreign laws are proved in the mode painted out under the article Foreign Laws.

Private writings are proved by producing the attesting witness; or in case of his death, absence, or other legal inability to testify, as if after attesting the paper he becomes infamous, his handwriting may be proved. When there is no witness to the instrument, it may be proved by the evidence of the handwriting of the party, by a person who has seen him write or in a course of correspondence has become acquainted with his hand. See Comparison of Handwriting; 5 Binn. Penn. $349 ; 6$ Serg. & R. Penn. 12, 312; 10 id. 110 ; 11 id. 333, 347 ; 3 Wash. C. C. R. 3I; I Rawle, Penn. 223; 3 id. 312 ; 1 Ashm. Penn. 8; 3 Penn. 136.
Buoks of original entry, when duly proved, are primâ facie evidence of goods sold and delivered, and of work and labor done. See Original Entry.
18. Proof by witnesses. The testimony of witnesses is called oral evidence, or that which is given viva voce, as contradistinguished from that which is written or documentary. It is a general rule that oral evidence shall in no case be received as equivalent to, or as a substitute for, a written instrument, where the latter is required by law ; or to give effect to a written instrument which is defective in any particular which by law is essential to its validity; or to contradict, alter, or vary a written instrument, either appointed by law, or by the contract of the parties, to be the appropriate and autbentic memorial of the particular facts it recites; for by doing so, oral testimony would be admitted to usurp the place of evidence decidedly superior in degree. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 27, 464 ; Add. Penn. 36 I; 2 Dall. Penn. 172; I Yeates, Penn. 140; I Binn. Penn. 6I6; 3 Marsh. Ky. 333 ; I Bibb, Ky. 27I; 4 id. 473 ; II Mas. 30 ; 13 id. 443 ; 3 Conn. 9 ; I2 Johns. N. Y. 77 ; 20 id. $49 ; 3$ Campb. 57 ; 1 Esp. Cas. 53 ; I Maule & S. 21 ; Bunb. 175.

But parol evidence is admissible to defeat a written instrument, on the ground of fraud, mistake, etc., or to apply it to its proper subject-matter, or, in some instances, as ancillary to such application, to explain the meaning of doubtful terms, or to rebut presumptions arising extrinsically. In these cases, the parol evidence does not usurp the place, or arrogate the authority of, written evidence, but either shows that the instrument ought not to be allowed to operate at all, or is essential in order to give to the instrument its legal effect. 1 Murph. No. C. 426 ; 1 Des. So. O. 465 ; 4 id. 21 I ; I Bay, Sa. C', 247; 1 Bibb, Ky. 271 ; II Mass. 30. See 1 Pet. C. C. 85 ; I Binn. Penn. 610; 3 id. 587 ; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 340 ; Pothier, Obl. pl. 4, c. 2.

See, generally, the treatises on Evidence, of Gilbert, Phillipps, Starkie, Roscoe, Swift, Bentham, Macnally, Peake, Greenleaf; Beat on Presumption; Bouvier, Inst. Index; and the various Digests.

EVIDENCE, CIRCUMSTANTIAL. The proof of facts which usually attend other facts sought to be proved; that which is not direct evidence. For example, when a witness testifies that a man was stabbed with a knife, and that a piece of the blade was found in the wound, and it is found to fit exactly with another part of the blade found in the possession of the prisoner, the facts are directly attested, but they only prove circumstances; and hence this is called circumstantial evidence.
2. Circumstantial evidence is of two kinds, namely, certain and uncertain. It is certain when the conclusion in question necessarily follows: as, where a man had received a mortal wound, and it was found that the impression of a bloody left band had been made on the left arm of the deceased, it was certain some other person than the deceased must hare made such mark. 14 IIow. St. Tr. 1334. But it is uncertain whether the death was caused by suicide or by murder, and whether the mark of the bloody hand was made by the assassin, or by a friendly hand that came too late to the relief of the deceased. See Circumstances.

EVIDENCE, CONCLUSIVE. That

 which, while uncontradicted, satisfies the judge and jury ; it is also that which cannot be contradicted.The record of a court of common-law jurisdiction is conclusive as to the facts therein stated. 2 Wash. Va. 64; 2 Hen. & M. Va. 55 ; 6 Conn. 508. But the judgment and record of a prize-court is not conclusive evidence in the state courts, unless it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and whether it had or not, the state courts may decide. I Conn. 429. See, as to the conclusiveness of the judgments of foreign courts of admiralty, 3 Cranch, 458; 4 id. 421, 434 ; Giln. Va. 16; 1 Const. So. C. 381 ; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 537.

EVIDENCE, DIRECT. That which applies immediately to the factum probandum, without any intervening process: as, if $A$ testifies he saw $B$ inflict a mortal wound on C, of which he instantly died. 1 Greenleaf, Er. 813.

EVIDENCE, EXTRINSIC. External evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like.

It is a general rule that extrinsic evidence cannot be admitted to contradict, explain, vary, or change the terms of a contract or of a will, except in a latent ambiguity, or to rebut a resulting trust. 14 Johns. N. Y. 1; 1 Day, Conn. 8; 6 id. 270.

EVOCATION. In French Law. The act by which a judge is deprived of the cognizance of a suit over which he had jurisdiction, for the purpose of conferring on other judges the power of deciding it. It is like the process by writ of certiorari.

EWAGE. A toll paid for water-passage. Cowel. The same as aquagium.

EWBRICE. Adultery; spouse-breach ; marriage-breach. Cowel; Tomlin, Law Dict.

EX $\not \subset Q U O$ ET BONO (Lat.). In justice and good dealing. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. $\% 965$.

EX CONTRACTU (Lat.). From contract. A division of actions is made in the common and civil law into those arising ex contractu (from contract) and ex delicto (from wrong or tort). 3 Blackstone, Comm. 117; 1 Chitty, Plead. 2; 1 Mackeldy, Civ. Law, & 195.

EX DEBITO JUSTITI平 (Lat.). As a debt of justice. As a matter of legal right. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 48.

EX DELICTO (Lat.). Actions which arise in consequence of a crime, misdemeanor, fault, or tort are said to arise ex delicto: such are actions of case, replevin, trespass, trover. 1 Chitty, Plead.2. See Ex Contractu; Actions.

EX DOLO MALO (Lat.). Out of fraud or deceit. When a cause of action arises from fraud or deceit, it cannot be supported: ex dolo malo non oritur actio. See Maxims.

EX GRATIA (Lat.). Of favor. Of grace. Wurds used formerly at the beginning of royal grants, to indicate that they were not made in consequence of any claim of legal right.

EX INDUSTRIA (Lat.). Intentionally. From fixed purpose.

EX MALEFICIO (Lat.). On account of misconduct. By virtue of or out of an illegal act. Used in the civil law generally, and sometimes in the common law. Browne, Stat. Frauds, 110, n.; Broom, Leg. Max. 351.

EX MERO MOTU (Lat.). Mere motion of a party's own free will. To prevent injustice, the courts will, ex mero motu, make rules and orders which the parties would not strictly be entitled to ask for.

EX MORA (Lat.). From the delay; from the default. All persons are bound to make amends for damages which arise from their own default.

EX MORE (Lat.). According to custom.
EX NECESSITATE LEGIS (Lat.). From the necessity of law.

EX NECESSITATEREI (Lat.). From the necessity of the thing. Many acts may be done ex necessitate rei which would not be justifiable without it; and sometimes property is protected ex necessitate rei which under other circumstances would not be so. For example, property put upon the land of another from necessity cannot be distrained for rent. See Distress; Necessity.

EX OFFICIO (Lat.). By virtue of his office.

Many powers are granted and exercised by public officers which are not expressly delegated. A judge, for example, may be ex officio a conservator of the peace and a justice of the peace.
EXPARTE (Lat.). Of the one part. Many things may be done ex parte, when the opposite party has had notice. An affidavit or deposition is said to be taken ex parte when only one of the parties attends to taking the same.

EX PARTE MATERNA (Lat.). On the mother's side.

EX PARTE PATERNA (Lat.). On the father's side.

EX POST FACTO (Lat.). After the act. An estate granted may be made good or avoided by matter ex post facto, when an election is given to the party to accept or not to accept. 1 Coke, 146.

EX POST FACTO LAW. A statute which would render an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed. 6 Cranch, 138 ; 1 Kent, Comm. 408. A law made to punish acts committed before the existence of such law, and which had not been declared crimes by preceding laws. Mass. Declar. of Rights, pt. 1, s. 24 ; Md. Declar. of Rights, art. 15.
2. By the constitution of the United States, congress is forbidden to pass ex post facto laws. U. S. Const. art. 1, &9. And by $& 10$, subd. 1, of the same instrument, as well as by the constitutions of many, if not all, of the states, a similar restriction is imposed upon the state legislatures. Such law is void as to those cases in which, if given effect, it would be ex post facto; but so far only. In cases arising under it, it may have effect; for as a rule for the future it is not ex post facto.
3. There is a distinction between ex post facto laws and retrospective laws: every ex post facto law must necessarily be retrospective, but every retrospective law is not an ex post facto law ; the former only are prohilited.
It is fully settled that the term ex post facto, as used in the constitution, is to be taken in a limited sense as referring to criminal or penal statutes alone, and that the policy, the reason, and the humanity of the prohibition against passing ex post facto laws do not extend to civil cases, to cases that merely affect the private property of citizens. Some of the most necessary acts of legislation are, on the contrary, founded upon the principles that private rights must yield to public exigencies. 3 Dall. Penn. $386 ; 8$ Wheat. 89 ; 17 How. 463 ; 6 Cranch, 87 ; 8 Pet. 88 ; 11 id. 421. See 1 Cranch, 109 ; 9 id. 374; 1 Gall. C. C. 105; 2 Pet. 380, 523, 627 ; 3 Story, Const. 212; Sergeant, Const. Law, 356; 2 Pick. Mass. 172; 11 id. 28; 9 Mass. 363 ; 2 Root, Conn. $350 ; 5$ T. B. Monr. Ky. 133; 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 563 ; 3 N. H. 475 ; 7 Johns. N. Y. 488; 6 Binn. Penn. 271; 2 Pet. 681 ; Retrospective.
4. Laws under the following circumstances are to be considered ex post facto laws within the words and intent of the prohibition: 1. Every law that makes an act done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. 2. Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was when committed. 3. Every law that changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed; though it would be otherwise of a law mitigating the punislıment. 3 Story, Const. 212. 4. Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offence, in order to convict the offender ; though it might be otherwise of a law merely modifying the remedy or mode of procedure. 3 Dall. Penn. 390. See Retrospective.

EX PROPRIO MOTU (Lat.). Of his own accord.
EX PROPRIO VIGORE (Lat.). Byits own force. 2 Kent, Comm. 457.
ex relatione (Lat.). At the information of; by the relation. A bill in equity, for example, may in many cases be brought for an injunction to restrain a public nuisance ex relatione (by information of) the parties immediately interested in or affected by the nuisance. 18 Ves. Ch. 217; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 382 ; 6 id. 439 ; 13 How. 518 ; 12 Pet. 91.

EX TEMPORE (Lat.). From the time; without premeditation.
EX VI TERMINI (Lat.). By force of the term.
EX VISCERIBUS (Lat. from the bowels). From the vital part, the very essence of the thing. 10 Coke, 24 b; 2 Metc. Mass. 213. Ex visceribus verborum (from the mere words and nothing else). 10 Johns. N. Y. 494; 1 Story, Eq.

EX VISITATIONE DEI (Lat.). By or from the visitation of God. This phrase is frequently employed in inquisitions by the coroner, where it signifies that the death of the deceased is a natural one.

EXACTION. A wilful wrong done by an officer, or by one who, under color of his office, takes more fee or pay for his services than the law allows.

Between extortion and exaction there is this differenee: that in the former ease the officer exterts more than his due, when something is due to him; in the latter, he exacta what is not hia due, when' there is nothing due to him. Coke, Litt. 368 .
EXACTOR. In Old English and Civil Law. A collector. Exactor regis (collector for the king). A collector of taxes or revenue. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Spelman, Gloss. The term exaction early came to mean the wrong dene by an officer, or one pretending to have authority, in demanding or taking any reward or fee for that matter, cause, or thing which the law allows not. Termes de la Ley.

EXAMINATION. In Criminal Law. The investigation by an authorized magistrate of the circumstances which constitute the gronnds for an accusation against a person arrested on a criminal charge, with a view to discharging the person so arrested, or to securing his appearance for trial by the proper court, and to preserving the evidence relating to the matter.
Practically, it is accomplished by bringing the person accuaed, together with witnesses, Lefore a magiatrate (generally a justice of the peaee), who thereupon takes down in writing the evideuce of the witnesaes, and any statementa which the prisoner may aee fit to make. If no eanee for detention appears, the party is discharged from arrest. If sufficient cause of auspicion appears to warrsnt putting him on trial, he is eummitted, or required to give bail or enter into a reeognizance to appear at the proper time for trial. The witnesses are alsu frequently required to recognize for their appearance ; though in ordiuary cases only their own reoognizanee is required. The magiatrate signs or certifies the minutes of the evidenee which be has taken, and it ia delivered to the court beff re whom the trial is to be had. The object of an examination is to enable the judgo and jury to aee whether the witneases are consistent, and to ascertain whather the offence ia bailable. 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 552. And see 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 296.
2. At common law, the prisoner could not be interrogated by the magistrate; but under the statutes 1 \& 2 Phil. \& M. c. 13, 2 \& 3 Phil. $\& \cdot M$. c. 10, the provisions of which have been substantially adopted in most of the United States, the magistrate is to examine the prisoner as well as the witnesses. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8224 ; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 296; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 44; Ry. \& M. Cr. Cas. 432.

The examination should be taken and completed as soon as the nature of the case will admit. Croke Eliz. 829; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 585; 2 id. 120. The prisoner must not be put upon oath, but the witnesses must. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 106. The prisoner has no right to the assistance of an attorney; but the privilege is granted at the discretion of the magistrate. 2 Dowl. & R. 86; 1 Barnew. & C. 37 ; Paley, Conv. Dowl. ed. 28. The magistrate's return and certificate are conclusive evidenue, and exclude parol evidence of what the prisoner said on that occasion with reference to the charge. 2 Carr. & K. 223 ; 5 Carr. & P. 162; 7. id. 267 ; 8 id. 605 ; 1 Mood. & M. 403 ; 1 Hayw. No. C. 112. See Confession ; Recognizance; Stat. 7 Geo. 1V.c. $64 ; 11 & 12$ Vict. c. 42 ; and the statutes of the various states.

In Practice. The interrogation of a witness, in order to ascertain his knowledge as to the facts in dispute between parties.
3. The examination in chief is that made by the party calling the witness; the crossexamination is that made by the other party; an examination de bene esse is one made out of court before trial, as a matter of precaution. See De.Bene Esse.
The examination is to be made in open oourt, when practicable; but when, on account of age, siokness, or other cause, the witness cannot be so examined, then it may be made befere authorized commissioners. In the examination in chief the council cannot ask leading questions, except in particular cases. See Cross-Examination; Leading Question.

The interrogation of a person who is desirous of performing some act, or availing himself of some privilege of the law, in ordor to ascertain if all the requirements of the law have been complied with, conducted by and before an officer having authority for the purpose.

There are many acts which oan be of validity and binding foree only upon an examinatiod. Thus, in many states, a married woman must be privately examined as to whether she has given her consent freely and without restraint to a deed which she appears to have executed, see Acknowledgment; an insolvent who wishes to take the benefit of the insolvent laws, one who is about to beoome bound for another in legal proceedings, a bankrupt, etc., must submit to an examination; though the examination of a hankrupt is rather in the nature of a criminal proceeding. See Insolvency; Justification; Bail.

EXAMINED COPY. A phrase applied to designate a paper which is a copy of a record, public book, or register, and which has been compared with the original. 1 Campb. 469.

Such examined copy is admitted in evidence, because of the public inconvenience which would arise if such record, public book, or register were removed from place to place, and because any fraud or mistake made in the examined copy would be so easily detected. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. $& 91$; 1 Starkie, Ev. 189-191. But in an answer in chancery on which the defendant was indicted for perjury, or where the original must be produced in order to identify the party by proof of handwriting, an examined copy would not be evidence. I Mood. & R. 189. See Copy.

EXAMINERS. Persons appointed to question students of law in order to ascertain their qualifications before they are admitted to practice.

EXAMINERS IN CHANCERY. Officers who examine, upon oath, witnesses produced on either side upon such interrogatories as the parties to any suit exhibit for that parpose. Cowel.

The exeminer is to administer an oath to the party, and then repeat the interrogatories, one at a time, writing down the answer himself. 2 Daniell, Chanc. Pract. 1062. Anciently, the examiner was one of the judges of the court: hence an examination before the examiner is said to be an examination in court. 1 Daniell, Chanc. Pract. 1053.

EXANNUAL ROLL. A roll containing the illeviable fines and desperate debts, which was read yearly to the sheriff (in the ancient way of delivering the sheriff's accounts), to see what might be gotten. Hale, Sheriffs, 67 ; Cowel.

EXCAMB. In Scotch Jaw. To exchange. Excambion, exchange. The words are evidently derived from the Latin excambium. Bell, Dict. See Exchange.

EXCAMBIATOR. An exchanger of lands.; a broker. Obsolete.
EXCAMBIUM (Lat.). In English Law. Exchange; a recompense. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 442.

EXCEPTION (Lat. excipere : ex, out of, capere, to take).

In Contracts. A clause in a deed by which the lessor excepts something cut of that which he granted before by the deed.

The exclusion of something from the effect or operation of the deed or contract which would otherwise be included.
An exception differs from a reservation,-the former being always of part of the thing granted, the latter of a thing not in e8se, but newly created or reserved; the exception is of the whole of the part excepted ; the reservation may be of a right or interest in the particular part affected by the reservation. See 5 R . I. 419 ; 41 Me . 177; $42 \mathrm{id}$. 9. An exception differs, also, from an explanation, which, by the use of a videlicet, proviso, etc., is allowed only to explain doubtful olauses precedent ${ }_{1,}$ or to separate nd distribute generals into particp lars. 3 Pick. Mass. 272.
To make a valid exception, these things must concur : first, the exception must be hy apt words, as, "saving and excepting," etc., see 30 Vt. 242 ; 5 R. I. 419 ; 41 Me .177 ; second, it must be of part of the thing previously described, and not of some other thing; third, it must be of part of the thing only, and not of all, the greater part, or the effect of the thing granted, 11 Md. 339 ; 23 Vt. $395 ; 10$ Mo. 426 ; an exception, therefore, in a lease which extends to the whole thing demised is void; fourth, it must be of such thing as is severable from the demised premises, and not of an inseparable incident, 33 Penn. St. 251; fifth, it mast be of such a thing as he that excepts may have, and which properly belongs to him ; sixth, it must be of a particular thing out of a general, and not of a particular thing out of a particnlar thing; seventh, it must be particularly described and set forth; a lease of a tract of land except one acre would be void, because that acre was not particularly described. Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 10; Coke, Litt. 47 a; 12 Me. 337 ; Wright, Ohio, 711 ; 3 Johns. N. Y. $375 ; 5$ N' Y. 33; 8 Conn. 369 ; 6 Pick. Mass. 499 ; 6 N.
H. 421 ; 4 Strobh. So. C. 208; 2 Tayl. No. C. 173. Exceptions against common right and general rules are construed as strictly as possible. 1 Barton, Conv. 68; 5 Jones, No. C. 63.

In Equity Practice. The allegation of a party, in writing, that some pleading or proceeding in a cause is insufficient.
In Civil Law. A plea. Merlin, Répert.
Declinatory exceptions are such dilatory exceptions as merely decline the jurisdiction of the judge before whom the action is brought. La. Code Proc. 334.

Dilatory exceptions are such as do not tend to defeat the action, but only to retard its progress.
Declinatory exoeptions have this effect, as well as the exception of discussion offered by a third possessor or by a surety in an hypothecary action, or the exception taken in order to call in the warrantor. 7 Mart. La. к. s. 282; 1 La. 38, 420.

Peremptory exceptions are those which tend to the dismissal of the action.

Some relate to forms, others arise from the law. Those which relate to forms tend to have the canse dismissed, owing to some nullities in the proceedings. These must be pleaded in limine lititi. Peremptory exceptions fonnded on law are those which, without going into the merits of the cause, show that the plaintiff cannot maintain his action, oither because it is prescribed, or because the cause of action has been destroyed or extinguished. These may be plended at any time previous to definitive judgment. Id. art. 343, 346; Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 1, c. 2, ss. 1, 2, 3. These, in the French law, are called Fine de non recevoir.

In Practice. Objections made to the decisions of the court in the course of a trial. See Bill of Exception.

EXCEPTION TO BAIL. An objection to the special bail put in by the defendant to an action at law made by the plaintiff, on grounds of the insufficiency of the bail. 1 Tidd, Pract. 255.

EXCHANGE. In Commercial Law. A negotiation by which one person transfers to another funds which he has in a certain place, either at a price agreed upon or which is fixed by commercial usage.
This transfer is made by means of an instrument which represents such funds and is well known by the name of a bill of exchange. The price above the par value of the funds so transferred is called the premium of exchange, and if under that value the difference is called the dis-count,-0ither being called the rate of exchange.

The transfer of goods and chattels for other goods and chattels of equal value. This is more commonly called barter.

The profit which arises from a maritime loan, when such profit is a percentage on tho money lent, considering it in the light of money lent in one place to he returned in another, with a difference in amount in the sum borrowed and that paid, arising from the difference of time and place. The term is commonly used in this sense by French writers. Hall, Mar. Loans, 56, n.

The place where merchants, captains of vessels, exchange-agents, and brokers assemble to transact their business. Code de Comm. art. 71.

The par of exchange is the value of the money of one country in that of another, and is either real or nominal. The nominal pan is that which has been fixed by law or usage, and, for the sake of uniformity, is not altered, the rate of exchange alone fluctuating. The real par is that based on the weight and fineness of the coins of the two countries, and fluctuates with changes in the coinage. The nominal par of exchange in this country on England, settled in 1799 by act of congress, is four dollars and forty-four cents for the pound sterling; but by successive changes in the coinage this value has been increased, the real mint par at present being a little over four dollars and eighty-seven cents. The course of exchange means the quotations for any given time: as, the course of exchange at New York on London was at 108 to 109 during the month.
In Conveyancing. A mutual grant of equal interests in land, the one in consideration of the other. 2 Blackstone, Comm, 323; Littleton, 62 ; Sheppard, Touchst. 289; Watkins, Conv. It is said that exchange in the United States does not differ from bargain and sale. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2055.

There are five circumstances necessary to an exchange. That the estates giren be equal. That the word excambium, or exchange, he used,-which cannot be supplied by any other word, or described by circumlocution. That there be an execution by entry or claim in the life of the parties. That if it he of things which lie in grant, it be by deed. That if the lands lie in several counties, or if the thing lie in grant, though they be in one county, it he by deed indented. In practice this mode of conveyancing is vearly obsolete.

See Cruise, Dig. tit. 32; Comyns, Dig.; Coke, Litt. 51; 1 W ashburn, Real Prop. 159 ; Hard. Ky. 593; 1 N. H. 65; 3 Harr. & J. Md. 361 ; 3 Wils. 489; Watkins, Conv. h. 2, c. 5 ; 3 Wood, Conv. 243.

EXCHEQUER (L. Lat. secccarium, Nor. Fr. eschequier). In English Law. A department of the government which has the management of the collection of the king's revenue.
The name is said to be derived from the chequered cloth which covered the table on which some of the king's accounts were made up and the amounts indicated by counters.
It consists of two divisions, one for the receipt of revenue, the ather for administering justice. Coke, 4th Inst. 103-116; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 44, 45. See Court of Exchequer; Court of Exchequer Chamber.
EXCHEQUER BILLS. Bills of credit issued by authority of parliament.
They constitute the medium of transaction of husiness between the bank of England and the government. The exchequer bills contain a guarantee from government which secures the holders against loss by fluctuation. Wharton ; MeCulloch, Comm. Diet.

EXCISE. An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, and frequently upon the retail sale. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 318 ; Story, Const. $&$ 950 ; Act of Congr. July 1, 1862.

EXCLUSIVE (Lat. ex, out, claudere, to shut). Shutting out; debarring from participation. Shut out; not included.

An exclusive right or privilege, as a copyright or patent, is one which may be exercised and enjoyed only by the person authorized, while all others are forbidden to interfere.

When an act is to be done within a certain period from a particular time, as, for example, within ten days, one day is to be taken inclusive and the other exclusive. See Hob. 139 ; Cowp. 714 ; Dougl. 463 ; 2 Mod. 280; 3 Penn. St. 200 ; 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 43 ; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 581 ; 3 East, 407 ; Comyns, Dig. Estates (G 8) Temps (A); 2 Chitty, Pract. 69, 147.

EXCOMMUNICATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical sentence pronounced by a spiritual judge against a Christian man, by which he is excluded from the body of the church, and disabled to bring any action or sue any person in the commonlaw courts. Bacon, Abr.; Coke, Litt. 133, 134.In early times it was the most frequent and most severe method of exeouting ecclosiastical censure, although proper to be used, said Justinian (Nov. 123), only upon grave occasions. The effect of it was to remove the excommunicated person not only from the sacred rites, but from the society of men. Is a certain sense it interdicted the use of fire and w.ter, like the punishment spoken of by Cæsar (lib. 6, de Bell. Gall.) as inflicted by the Druids. Innocent IV. called it the nerve of ecclesiastical discipline. On repentance, the excommunicated person was absolved and received again to communion. These are said to be the powers of biading and loosing,-the keys of the kingdom of heaven. This kind of punishment seems to have been adopted from the Romas usage of interdicting the use of fire aad water. Fr. Duaren, De Sacris Eocles. Ministeriis, lib. 1, cap. 3. See Ridley, View of the Civil and Ecclesiaatical Law, 245, 246, 249.

EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO

(Lat. for taking an excommunicated person).
In Ecclesiastical Law. A writ issuing out of chancery, founded on a bishop's certificate that the defendant had been excommunicated, returnable to the king's bench. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 415 ; Bacon, Abr. Excommunication, E. See statutes 3 Edw. I. c. 15, 9 Elw. II. c. $12,2 & 3$ Edw. VI. c. 13 , $5 & 6$ Edw. VI. c. 4, 5 Eliz. c. 23, 1 Hen. V. c. 5 ; Croke Eliz. 224, 680 ; Croke Car. 421 ; Croke Jac. 567 ; 1 Ventr. 146 ; 1 Salk. 293, $294,295$.

EXCOSABLE HOMICIDE. In Crimi-

hal Law. The killing, of a human being, when the party killing is not altogether free from blame, but the necessity which renders it excusable may be said to have been partly induced by his own act. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 220.

EXCUSATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Excuse. A cause for exemption from a duty, such as absence, insufficient age, etc. Vicat. Voc. Jur., and references there given.

EXCOSATOR (Lat.). In English Lavo.

An excuser.

In Old German Law. A defendant; he who utterly denies the plaintiff's claim. DuCange.

EXCUSE. A reason alleged for the doing or not doing a thing.
2. This word presenta two ideas, differing easentially from cach other. In one cate an excuse may be made in order to show that the party accused is not guilty; in another, by showing that though guilty he is less so than he appears to be. Take, for cxample, the case of a sheriff who has an execution against an individual, and who, in performance of his duty, arrests him: in an action by the defendant against the sheriff, the latter may prove the facts, and this shall be a sufficient excuse for him : this is an excuse of the first kind, or a complete justification ; the sheriff was guilty of no offence. But suppose, secondly, that the sheriff has an execution against Paul, and by mistake, and without any malicious design, he arresta Pcter instead of Paul: the fact of his baving the exccution against Paul and the mistake being made will not justify the shexiff, but it will extenuate and excuse his conduct, and this will be an excuse of the second kind.
3. Persons are sometimes excused fur the commissiun of acts which ordinarily are crimes, either hecause they had no intention of doing wrong, or hecuuse they had no power of judging, and therefure had no eriminal will, or, having power of judging, they had no choice, and were compelled by necessity. Among the first class may be placed infants under the age of discretion, lunatics, and married wrmen committing an offence in the presence of their husbands not malzm in se, as treason or murder, 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 44, 45; or in offences relating to the domestic concern or management of the house, as the kee, ing of a bawdyhouse. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 1, s. 12. Aming acts of the second kind may be classed the beating or killing another in self-defence, the destruction of property in order to prevent a.more serious calamity, as the tearing down of a house on fire to prevent its spreading to the neighboring property, and the like. See Dalloz, Dict.

EXCUSSIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Exhausting the principal dclitor before proceeding against the surety. Discussion is used in the same sense in Scotch law. Vicat, Excussionis Beneficium.

EXECUTE. To complete; to make; to perform ; to do; to follow out.

The term is frequently used in law: as, to execute a dced, which means to make a deed, including especially signing, sealing, and dclivery. To execute a contract is to perform the contract. To execute a use is to merge or unite the equitable estate of the cestui que use in the legal estate, under the statute of uses. To execute a writ is to do the act commanded in the writ. To execute a criminal is to put him to death according to law, in pursuance of his sentence.

EXECUTED. Done; completed; effectuated; performed; fully disclosed; vested; giving present right of enjoyment. The term is used of a variety of subjects.
EXECUTED CONSIDERATION. A consideration which is wholly past. To make an executed consideration a valid foundation for a promise, there must have been an antecedent request. Such request may be implied, however. 1 Parsons, Contr. 391.

EXECUTED CONTRACT. One which has been fulfilled. One which has been wholly performed: as, where $A$ and $B$ agree to exchange horses and do so immediately. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 443. One in which both parties have done all that they are required to do.

EXECUTED ESTATE. An estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not dependent upon any subsequent circumstance or contingency. They are more commonly called estates in possession. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 162.

An estate where there is vested in the grantee a present and immediate right of present or future enjoyment. An estate which confers a present right of present enjoyment.
When the right of enjoyment in possession is to arise at a future period, only the ostate is exccuted; that is, it is morely vested in point of interest: where the right of immediate enjoyment is annexed to the estate, then only is the estate vested in possession. 1 Preston, Est. 62; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 392.

Executed is synonymous with vested. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 11.

EXECUTED REMAINDER. One giving a preseut interest, though the enjoyment may be future. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 31; ©Blackatone, Comm. 168. See Vested Remainder.

EXECUTED TRUST. A trust of which the scheme has in the outset been completely declared. Adams, Eq. 151. One in which the devise or trust is directly and wholly declared by the testator or settler, so as to attach on the lands immediately under the deed or will itself. 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 385; 1 Jac. & W. 570.

EXECUTED USE. A use with which the possession and legal title have been united by statute. 1 Stephen, Comm. 339 ; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 335, note; 7 Term, 342; 12 Ves. Ch. $89 ; 4$ Mod. 380 ; Comb. 312.

EXECUTED WRIT. A writ the command in which has been obeyed by the person to whom it was directed.

EXECUTION. The accomplishment of a thing; the completion of an act or instrument; the fulfilment of an undertaking. Thus, a contract is executed when the act to be done is performed; a deed is executed when it is signed, sealed, and delivered.

In Criminal Law. Putting a convict to death, agreeably to law, in pursuance of his sentence This is to be performed by the sheriff or his deputy. See 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 403.

In Practice. Putting the sentence of the law in force. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 412. The act of carrying into effect the final judgment or decree of a court.

The writ which directs and authorizes the officer to carry into effect such judgment.

Final execution is one which authorizes the money due on a judgment to be made out of the property of the defendant.

Execution quousque is such as tends to an end, but is not absolutely final: as, for example, a capias ad satisfuciendum, by virtue of which the body of the defendant is taken, to the intent that the plaintiff shall be satisfied his debt, etc., the imprisonment not being absolute, but until he shall satisfy the same. 6 Coke, 87.
2. Execution, in civil actions, is the mode of obtaining the debt or damages or other thing recorered by the judgment; and it is cither for the plaintiff or defendant. For the plaintiff upon a judgment in debt, the execu. tion is for the debt and damages; or in assumpsit, covenant, case, replevin, or trespass, for the damages and costs; or in detinue, for the goods, or their value, with damages and costs. For the defendant upon a judgment in replevin, the execution at common law is for a return of the goods, to which damages are superadded by the statutes 7 Hen. TIII. c. 4 , $& 3$, and 21 Hen. VIII. c. 19,83 ; and in other actions upon a judgment ef non pros., non suit, or verdict, the execution is for the costs only. Tidd, Pract. 993.

After final judgment signed, and eren before it is entered of record, the plaintiff may, in general, at any time within a year and a day, and whilst the parties to the judgment continue the same, take out execution; provided there be no writ of error depending or agreement to the contrary, or, where this is allowed, security entered for stay of execution. But after a year and a day from the time of signing judgment (five years in Pennsylvania) the plaintiff cannot regularly take out execution without reviving the judgment by scire facias, unless a ficri facias or capias ad satisfaciendum, etc. was previously sued cut, returned, and filed, or he was hindered from suing it out by a writ of error; and if a writ of error be brought, it is, generally speaking, a supersedeas of execution from the time of its allowance; provided bail, when necessary, be put in and perfected in due time. See Tidd, Pract. 994.

Writs of execution are judicial writs issuing out of the court where the record is upon which they are grounded. Hence, when the record has been removed to a higher court by writ of error or certiorari, or on appeal, either the execution must issue out of that ecurt, or else the record must be returned to the inferior court by a remittitur (q.v.) for the purpose of taking out execution in the court below. The former is the practice in England; the latter, in some of the states of America.
3. The object of execution in personal actions is effected in one or more of the three following ways. 1. By the seizure and sale of personal property of the defendant. 2. By the seizure of his real property, and either selling it or detaining it until the issues and profits are sufficient to satisfy the judgment. 3. By seizing his person and holding him in custody until he pays the judgment or is judicially declared insolvent.

Thase proceedings, though taken at the instance and under the direction of the party for whom judgment is given, are considered the act of the law itself, and are in all cases performed by the authorized minister of the law. The party or his attorney obtains, from the office of the court where the record is, a writ, based upon and reciting the judgment, and directed to the sheriff -(or, where he is interested or otherwise disqualified, to the coroner) of the county, commanding him, in the name of the sovereign or of the state, that of the goods and chattels or of the lands and tenements of the defendant in his bailiwick he cause to be made or lcoied the sum recovered, or that he seize the person of the defendant, as the case may be. and have the same before the court at the return-day of the writ. This writ is delivered by the party to the officer to whom it is directed, who thenceforth becomes responsible for his performance of its mandate, and in case of omission, mistake, or misconduct is liable in damages to the person injured, whether he be the plaintiff, the defendant, or a stranger to the writ.

When property is sold under execution, the proceeds are applied to the satisfaction of the judgment and the costs and charges of the proceedings; and the surplus, if there be any, is paid to the defendant in execution.
4. Execution against persanal property. When the property consists of goods and chattels, in which are included terms for years, the writ used is the fieri facias. If, after levying on the goods, etc. under a fieri facias, they remain unsold for want of buyers, etc., a supplemental writ may issue, which is called the venditioni exponas. At common law, goods and chattels might also be taken in execution under a levarifacias; though now perhaps the most frequent use of this writ is in executions against real property.

When the property consisted of choses in action, whether debts due the defendant or any other sort of credit or interest belonging to him, it could not be taken in execution at common law; but now, under statutory provisions in many of the states, such property may be reached by a process in the nature of an attachment, called an attachment execution or execution attachment. See AttachMENT.

Execution against real estate. Where lands are absolutely liahle for the payment of debts, and can be sold in execution, the process is by ficri facias and venditioni exponas. In Pennsylvania the land cannot be sold in execution unless the sheriff's jury, under the fieri facias, find that the profits will not pay the debt in seven years. And, in general, lands are not subject to sale under execution, but, after a levy has been made under the fieri facias, are appraised by the sheriff's jury, and delivered to the plaintiff at the valuation until the debt is paid out of the profits. In England, only half the land can be thus taken, and the writ, though in form a fieri facias, is called an elegit (q.v.). If the sheriff delay to deliver lands thus appraised into the plaintiff's possession, he may be constrained by a writ called the liberari jacias.

There are in England writs of execution against land which are not in general use here. The extent, or extendi facias (q.v.), is the usual process for the king's debt. The levari facias (q.v.) is also used for the king's debt, and for the subject on a recagnizance or statute staple or merchant (q.v.), and on a judgment in scire facias, in which latter case it is also generally employed in this country.
5. Execution against the person. This is effected by the writ of capias ad satisfacien. dum, under which the sheriff arrests the defendant and imprisons him till he satisfies the judgment or is discharged by process of law. See Insolvency. This execution is not final, the imprisonment not being absolute; whence it has been called an execution quousque. 6 Coke, 87.

Besides the ordinary judgment for the payment of a sum cettain, there are specific judgments, to do some particular thing. To this the execution must correspond: on a judgment for plaintiff in a real action, the writ is a habere facias seisinam; in ejectment it is a habere facia posscssionem; for the defendant in replevin, as has already been mentioned, the writ is de retorno halendo.

Still another sort of judgment is that in rem, confined to a particular thing: such are judgments upon mechanics' liens and municipal claims, and, in the peculiar practice of Pennsylvania, on scire facias upon a mortgage. In such cases the execution is a writ of levari facias. A confession of judgment upon warrant of attorney, with a restriction of the lien to a particular tract, is an analogous instance; but in such case there is no peculiar form of execution; though if the plaintiff should, in violation of his agreement, attempt to levy on other land than that to which his judgment is confined, the court on motion would set aside the execution.

EXECUTION PAREE. In French Law. A right founded on an act passed before a notary, by which the creditor may immediately, without citation or summons, seize and cause to be sold the property of his debtor, out of the proceeds of which to receive his payment. It imports a confession of judgment, and is not unlike a warrant of attorney. La. Code of Proc. art. 732; 6 Toullier, n. 208; 7 id. 99.

EXECUTIONER. The name given to him who puts criminals to death, according to their sentence; a hangman.

In the United States, executions are so rare that there are no executioners by profession. It is the duty of the sheriff or marshal to perform this office, or to procure a deputy to do it for him.

EXECUTIVE. That power in the govern ment which causes the laws to be executed and obeyed.
It is usually confiden to the hands of the ohief magistrate: the president of the United States is invested with this authority under the national gevernment; and the governor of each state has the executive power in his hands.
The officer in whom the executive power is vested.

The constitution of the United States directs that "the executive power shall be vested in a president of the United States of America." Art. 2, s. 1. See Story, Const. b. 3, c. 36.

EXECUTOR. One to whom another man commits by his last will the execution of that will and testament. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 503.

A person to whom a testator by his will commits the execution, or putting in force, of that instrument and its codicils. Fonblanque, Rights and Wrongs, 307.

Lord Hardwicke, in 3 Atk. Ch. 301, says, "The proper term in the civil law, as to geods, is hares testamentarius; and executor is a barbarous term, unknown to that law." And again, "What we call executor and residuary legatee is, in the civil law, universal heir." Id. 300.

The word executor, taken in its broadest sense, has three acceptations. 1. Exeoutor a lege constitutus. He is the ordinary of the diocese. 2. Executor ab epiecopo constitutus, or exeeutor dativus; and that is he who is called an administrator to an intestate. 3. Executor a testator coustitutus, or cxecutor testamentarius ; and that is he who is usually meant when the term executor is used. 1 Williams, Exec. 185.

A general executor is one who is appointed to administer the whole estate, without any limit of time or place or of the subjectmatter.

An instituted executor is one who is appointed by the testator without any condition, and who has the first right of acting when there are substituted executors.
An example will show the difference between an instituted and a substituted executor. Suppose a mitn makes his son his executor, but if he will not act he appoints his brother, and if neither will act, his cousin: here the son is the instituted executor in the first degree, the brother is said to be substituted in the secend degree, the cousin in the third degree, and so on. See Swinburne, Wills, pt. 4, s. 19, pl. 1.
A rightful executor is one lawfully appointed by the testator, by his will. Deriving his authority from the will, he may do most acts before he obtains letters testamentary; but he must be possessed of them before he can declare in an action brought by him as such. 1 P. Will. Ch. 768; Williams, Exec. 173.

An executor de son tort is one who, without lawful authority, undertakes to act as executor of a person deceased. See Executor de son Tort.

A special excecutor is one who is appointed or constituted to administer either a part of the estate, or the whole for a limited time, or only in a particular place.
$A$ substituted executor is a person appointed executor if anotlier person who has been appointed refuses to act.

A $n$ executor to the tenor is a person who is not directly appointed by the will an executor, but who is charged with the duties which appertain to one: as, "I appoint A B to discharge all lawful demands against my will." 3 Phill. Eccl. 116; 1 Ecul. ©́4; Swinburne, Wills, 247 ; Wentworth, Exsc. pt. 4, s. 4, p. 230.
2. Qualification. Generally speaking, all persons who are capable of making wills, and many others besides, may be executors. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 503. The king may be an executor. So may a corporation sole. So may a corporation aggregate. Toller, Exec. 30,31 . So may an alien, if he be not an alien enemy residing abroad or unlawfully continuing in the country. So may married women and infants; and even infants unborn, or en ventre sa mere, may be executors. 1 Dane, Abr. c. 29 a 2, $& 3$; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 40. But in England an infant cannot act solely as executor until his full age of twentyone years. Meanwhile, his guardian or some other person acts for him, as administrator cum test. ann. See Administration. A married woman cannot be executrix without her husband's consent. But a man by marrying an executrix becomes executor in her right, and is liable to account as such. 2 Atk. Ch. 212; 1 Des. So. C. 150;
3. Persons attainted, outlaws, insolvents, and persons of bad moral character, may be qualified as executors, because they act en autre droit and it was the choice of the testator to appoint them. 6 Q. B. 57 ; 12 B . Monr. Ky. 191; 7 Watts & S. Penn. 244 ; 3 Salk. 162. Poverty or insolvency is no ground for refusing to qualify an executor; but an insolvent executor may be compelled to give security. 2 Halst. Ch. N. J. $9 ; 2$ Barb. Ch. N. Y. 351. And in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode lsland, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and Kentucky, a bond is required from executors, similar to or identical with that required from administrators. The testator may, by express direction, exempt from the obligation of giving a bond with sureties any trustees whom he appoints or directs to be appointed, but not his executor; because the creditors of the estate must look to the funds in the executor's hands.
Idiots and lunatics .cannot be executors; and an executor who becomes non compos may be removed. 1 Salk. 36. In Massachusetts, by Rev. Stat. c. 63, $\% 7$, when any executor shall become insane, or otherwise incapuble of discharging his trust, or evidently unsuitable therefor, the judge of probate may remove him. 11 Metc. Mass. 104. A drunkard may perform the office of executor, 12 B . Monr. Ky. 191; 7 Watts & S. Penn. 244 ; but in some states, as Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, there are statutes providing for his removal.
4. Appointment. Executors can be appointed only by will or codicil; but the word "executor" need not be used, and the appointment may be constructive. 3 Phill. Eccl. 118 ; 10 B. Monr. Ky. 394 ; 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 32; 2 Speers, So. C. 97. Even a direction to keep accounts will, in the absence of any thing to the contrary, constitute the person addressed an executor.

The appointment of an executor may be absolute, qualified, or conditional. It is $a b-$ solute when he is constituted certainly, immediately, and without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time. Toller, Exec. 36. It may be qualified as ta the time or place wherein, or the subject-matters whereon, the office is to be exercised. 1 Williams, Exec. 204. Thus, a man may be appointed executor, and his term made to begin or end with the marriage of testator's daughter; or his authority may be limited to the state, as Pennsylvania; or to one class of property, as if A be made exeoutor of goods and chattels in possession, and B of choses in action. Swinburne, Wills, pt. 4, s. 17, pl. 4 ; Off. Exec. 20 ; 3 Phill. Ecel. 424. Still, as to ereditors, three limited executors all act as one executor, and may be sued as one. Croke Car. 293. Finally, an executor may be appointed conditionally, and the condition may be precedent or subsequent. Such is the case when $A$ is appointed in case $B$ shall resign. Godolphin, Orph. Leg. pt. 2, c. 2, $& 1$.
5. Assignment. An executor cannot assign his office. In England, if he dies having proved the will, his own executor becomes also the original testator's executor. But if he dies intestate, an administrator de bonis non of the first testator succeeds to the cxecutorship. And an administrator de bonis non succeeds to the executorship in both these cvents, in the United States generally, wherever a trust is annexed to the office of executor. 4 Munf. Va. 231; 7 Gill, Md. 81 ; 8 Ired. Eq. No. C. 52; 17 Me. 204; 1 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 565 ; 4 Fla. 144.

Acceptance. The appointee may accept or refuse the office of executor. 3 Phill. Eccl. 577 ; 4 Pick. Mass. 33 ; 34 Me. 37. But his acceptance may be implied by acts of authority over the property which evince a purpose of accepting, and by any acts which would make him an executor de son tort, which see. So his refusal may be inferred from his keeping aloof from all management of the estate. 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. $388 ; 16$ Conn. 291; 2 Murph. Eq. No. C. 85 ; 9 Ala. 181 ; 16 Serg. & R. Penn. 416. If one of two or more appointees accepts, and the others decline, he becomes sole executor. An administrator de bonis non cannot be joined with an executor.
6. Acts before probate. The will itself is the sole source of an executor's title. Probate is the evidence of that title. Before probate, an executor may do nearly all the acts which he can do after. He can receive payments, discharge debts, collect and recover assets, sell bank-stock, give or receive notice of dishonor, initiate or maintain proceedings in bankruptcy, sell or give away goods and chattels, and pay legacies. And when he has acted before probate he may be sued before probate. 6 Term, 295; 4 Metc. Mass. 42l. He may commence, but he cannot maintain, suits before probate, except such suits as are founded on his actual posn session. 3 Carr. & P. 123; 7 Ark. 404; 3 Me. 174; 3 N. H. 517. So in some scates he cannot sell land without letters testamentary, 7 Oranch, 115 ; 9 Wheat. 565 ; nor transfer a mortgage, 1 Pick. Mass. 81 ; nor remain in his own state and sue by attorney elsewhere, 12 Metc. Mass. 423; nor indorse a note so as to be sued, in some states, as New Hampshire and Maine. 5 Me. $261 ; 2$ N. H. 291. And see 2 Pet. 239 ; 7 Johns. N. Y. 45 ; Byles, Bills, 40 ; Story, Prom. Notes, 304 ; Story, Bills, 250 ; Parsons, Bills.
7. Powers of executors. An executor may do, in general, whatever an administrator can. See Administrator. His authority dates from the moment of his testator's death. Comyns, Dig. Administration (B 10); 5 Barnew. \& Ald. 745 ; 2 W. Blackst. 692. When once probate is granted, his acts are good until formally reversed by the court. 3 Term, 125; 15 Serg. \& R. Penn. 39. In some states he has power over both real and personal estate. 3 Mass. 514; l Pick. Mass. 157. In the majority be has power over the real estate only when expressly empowered by the will, or when the personal estate is insufficient, or by a grant of letters testamentary. 9 Serg. \& R. Penn. 431; 2 Root, Conn. $438 ; 25$ Wend. N. Y. $224 ; 3 \mathrm{M}^{\prime}$ Cord, So. C. 371 ; 9 Ga. 55 ; Gordon, Law Dec. 93. The will may direct him to sell lands to pay debts, but the money resulting is usually held to be equitable assets only. 9 Barnew. \& C. 489 ; 3 Brev. No. C. 242 ; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 499. In equity, the testator's intention will be regarded as to whether the surplus fund, after a sale of the real estate and payment of debts, shall go to the heir. 1 Williams, Exec. 555, Am. note. An executor's power is that of a mere trustee, who must apply the goods for such purposes as are sanctioned by law. 4 Term, 645 ; 9 Coke, 88 ; Coke, 2d Inst. 236.
8. Chattels real go to the executor; but he bas no interest in freehold terms or leases, unless by local statute, as in South Carolina. But the wife's chattels real, unless taken into possession by her husband during his lifetime, do not pass to his executors. I Williams, Exec. 579, note; 5 Whart. Penn. 138; 4 Ala. n.s. $350 ; 7$ How. Miss. 425. The husband's act of possession must effect a complete alteration in the nature of the joint interest of husband and wife in her chattels real, or they will survive to her.

Chattels personal go to the executor. Such are emblements. Brooke, Abr. Emblements; 4 Harr. & J. Md. 139. Heir-looms and fixtures go to the heir ; and as to what are fixtures, see Fixtures, and 1 Williams, Exec. 615, Am. note; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 114, Am. note. The widow's separate property and paraphernalia go to her. For elaborate collections of cases on the effect of nuptial con tracts about property upon the executor's right, see 1 Williams, Exec. 634, Am. note 2: 2 id. 636, note 1; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 40. Donations mortis causa go to the donee at once, and not to the executor. 1 Nott & M'C. Su. C. 237.
9. Suits. In general, a right of action founded on a tort or malfeasance dies with the person. But personal actions founded upon any obligation, contract, debt, covenant, or other duty to be performed, survive, and the executor may maintain them. Cowp. 375; 1 Wms. Saund. 216, n. By statutes in England and the United States this common-law right is much extended. An executor may now have trespass, trover, etc. for injuries done to the intestate during his lifetime. Except for slander, for libels, and for injuries inflicted on the person, executors may bring personal actions, and are liable in the same manner as the deceased would have been. 2 Brod. & B. $102 ; 2$ Maule & S. $415 ; 2$ Johns. Cas. N.Y. 17 ; 1 Md. 102; 15 Ala. n. s. 253; 5 Blackf. Ind. 232;6 T. B. Monr. Ky. 40; 3 Ohio, 211. Should his death have been cansed by the neyligance of any one, they may bring an action for the benefit of the family. Executors may also sue for stocks and annuities, as being personal property. So they may sue for an insurance policy. And for all these purposes they may take legal proceedings by action, suit, or summons.
10. Wife's choses. In general, choses in action given to the wife cither before or after marriage survive to her, provided her husband have not reduced them to possession before his death. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 452. A promissory note given to the wife during coverture comes under this rule in England, 12 Mees. & W. Exch. 355; 7 Q. B. 864; but not so in this country generally. 4 Dan. Ky. 333; 15 Conn. 587 ; 17 Me. 301 ; 17 Pick. Mass. 391 ; 20 id . 556. Mere intention to reduce choses into possession is not a reduction, nor is a mere appropriation of the fund. 5 Ves. Ch. $515 ; 11$ Serg. & R. Penn. 377; 5 Whart. Penn. 138; 2 Hill, Ch. So. C. 644; 4 Ala. n. s. 350 ; 14 Ohio, 100.

Other suits. For actions accruing after the testator's death, the executor may sue either in his own name or as executor. This is true of actions for tort, as trespass or trover, actions on contract and on negotiable paper. 3 Nev. & M. 391; 4 Hill, N. Y. 57; 19 Pick. Mass. 432 ; 4 Jones, No. C. 159 . So he may bring replevin in his own name, 6 Fla. 314; and so, in short, wherever the money, when recovered, will be assets, the executor may sue as executor. 20 Wend. N. Y. 668; 6 Blackf. Ind. 120; 1 Pet. 686.
11. Other powers. An executor may sell terms for years, and may even make a good title against a specific legatec, unless the sale be fraudulent. So he may underlet a term. He may indorse a promissory noteor a bill payable to the testator or his order. 10 Miss .687.

Co-executors. Co-executors are regarded in law as one individual; and hence, in general, the acts of one are the acts of all. Comyns, Dig. Administration (B 12); 9 Cow. N. Y. 34; 4 Hill, N. Y. 492. Hence the assent of one executor to a legacy is sufficient, and the sale or gift of one is the sale or gift of all. So a payment by or to one is a payment by or to all. 8 Blackf. Ind. 170; 10 Ired. No. C. 263; 2 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 151. But each is liable only for the assets which have come into his own hands. 11 Johns. N. Y. 21. So he alone who is guilty of tort or negligence is answerable for it, unless his co-executor has connived at the act or helped him commit it. A power to sell land, conferred by will upon several executors, must be executed by all who proved the title. 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 262. But if only one executor consents to act, his sale under a power in the will would be good, and such refusal of the others may be in pais. Croke Eliz. 80; 3 Dan. Ky. 195. If the will gives no direction to the executors to sell, but leaves the sale to the discretion of the executors, all must join. But see less strict rules in 8 Penn. St. 417; 2 Sandf. N. Y. $512 ; 1$ N. Y. 341. On the death of one or more of several joint executors, their rights and powers survive to the survivor. Bacon, Abr. Executor (D) ; Sheppard, Touchst. 484.
12. Duties. The following is a brief summary of an executor's duties:-
First. He must bury the deceased in a manner suitable to the estate left behind. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 508. But no unreasonable expenses will be allowed, nor any unnecessary expenses if there is risk of the estate's proving insolvent. 1 Barnew. & Ad. $260 ; 2$ Carr. & P. 207; 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 64; 1 Ashm. Penn. 314. In England the present limit to funeral expenses appears to be twenty pounds where the testator dics insolvent.

Second. Within a convenient time after the testator's death, he should collect the goods of the deceased, if he can do so peaceably ; if resisted, he must apply to the law for redress.

Third. He must prove the will, and take out administration. In England there are two ways of proving a will,--in common form, and in form of law, or solemn form. In the former, the executor propounds the will,--i.e. presents it to the registrar, in the absence of all other interested parties. In the latter, all parties interested are summoned to show cause why execution should not issue. Fonblanque, Rights and Wrongs, p. 313.
Fourth. Ordinarily, he must make an inventory of personal property at least, and, in some states, of real estate also. $5 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H} .492$; 11 Mass. 190; 9 Me. 53 ; 1 Browne, Penn. 87.

Fifth. He must next collect the goods and chattels, and the claims inventoried, with reasonable diligence. And he is liable for a loss by the insolrency of a debtor, if it results from his gross delay. 6 Watts, Penn. 46 ; 15 Ala. n. s. 328.
13. Sixth. He must give notice of his appointment in the statute form, and should advertise for debts and credits. 2 Ohio, St . 156. See forms of advertisements, 1 Chitty, Pract. 521.

Seventh. The personal effects he must deal with as the will directs, and the surplus must be turned into money and divided as if there was no will. An administrator must at once collect, appraise, and sell the whole. The safest mathod of sale is a public auction.

Eighth. He must keep the money of the estate safely, but not mixed with his own, or he may be charged interest on it. He is also charged when he has misemployed funds or let them lie idle, provided a want of ordinary prudence is proved against him. 4 Mass. 205; 2 Bland, Ch. Md. 306; 1 Sumn. C.C.14; 2 Rand, Va. 409 ; 4 Harr. N.J. 109 ; 3 Des. So. C. 241. And, generally, interest is to be charged on all money received by an executor and not applied to the use of the estate. 1 Bail. Eq. So. C. 98; 1 Dev. Eq. So. C. 369; 6 J. J. Mirsh. Ky. 94 . But an administrator cannot he charged with interest on money allowed him for commission. 10 Penn. St. $408 ; 2$ Jones, No. C. 347.

Ninti.l. He must be at all times ready to a.ccount to the proper authorities, and must astually file an account within the year generally prescriked by statute.

Tenth. He must pay the debts and legacies in the order required by law. Funeral expenses are preferred debts, and so are debts to the United States, under certain limitations respecting insolvency, by act of congress. 2 Kent, Comm. 418-421. Otherwise there is no one order of payment universal in the United States.
14. Legacies. Bequests to charitable uses are legal and valid. 2 Roper, Leg. 1115, Am. note; 1 Jarman, Wills, 197 ; 4 Kent, Cumm. 235, 508; 2 Williams, Exec. 908, Ain. note. The executor must give his assent to a legacy hefore the legatee's title is complete and perfect. 8 How. 170; 19 Ala. n. s. 686; 4 Fla. 144. If without cause he refuse this assent, he may be compelled to give it hy a court of equity. But assent may he implied and presumed. 10 Hare, Ch. 177; 9 Esch. 680; 1 Bailcy, Eq. So. C. 50t; 6 Call, Va. 55 ; 10 Johns. N. Y. 30 . A legatee cannot sue for his legacy until the time given to the executor for payment has expired. This time is commonly one year. 16 Beav. Rolls, 298; 15 Ala. 507; 2 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 202.

A legacy made to an infant must be paid to his guardian, and not to him or his father. 3 Atk. Ch. 629; 9 Vt. 41 . A legacy made to a married woman must be paid to her husband; but to herself if it be to her sole and separate use.

A lapsed legacy is one which is made to a legatee who dies before the testator. 1 Eq . Cas. Abr. 295. An ädemption occurs when a specific legacy does not remain in specie as it was described in the will. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. & 1115 ; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 262. The great rule in legacies is, that if the testator's estate is not sufficient for paying all his debts and legacies, first, the debts must be paid in full; secondly, the specific legacies are to be paid; thirdly, general legacies are to be paid, in full if possible, if not, pro rata.
15. Pay. Commissions are not allowed on - legacy given in trust to an executor. l

Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 198, 321. Reasonable expenses are always allowed an executor. 5 Gray, Mass. $26 ; 28$ Vt. 765; 3 Cal. 287; 1 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 248; 2 id. 291; 29 Miss. 72. When one of two co-executors has done nothing, he should get no commission. 20 Barb. N. Y. 91. In England, executors cannot charge fur personal trouble or loss of time, and can only be paid for reasonable expenses.

In England the jurisdiction of probate, until recently, belonged to the coclesiastical courts. It is now exereised in the new court of probate, which holds its sittings in Westminster Hall. There is a principal registry of wills, situated in Doctors Commens, and forty district registries, scattered throughout England and Walcs, each presided over by a district registrar, by whom probate is granted where the application is unopposed. See Fonhlanque, Rights and Wrongs, 311. In the United States the jurisdiction is rested in surrogates, judges of probate, registrars of wills, county courts, etc. See Administration.

EXECUTOR DE SON TORT. Ong who attempts to aci as executor without law. ful authority.
2. If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor without any just authority (as, by intermeddling with the guods of the deceased, and many other transactions), he is called in law an executor of his own wrong, de son tort. 2 Blackstone, Ccmn. 507 ; $4 M^{\prime}$ Cord, So. C. $286 ; 12$ Conn. $213 ; 8$ Miss. 437 ; 14 Eng. L. \& Eq. $510 ; 3$ Litt. Ky. 163 . If a man kill the cattle of the testator, or take his goods to satisfy a debt, or collect money due him, or pay out such money, or carry on his business, or take possession of his house, etc., he becomes an executor de son tort.
3. But a stranger may perform many acts in relation to a testator's estate without becoming liable as executor de son fort. Such are locking up his goods for preservation, burying the deceased in a manner suitable to his fortune, paying for the funeral expenses and those of the last sickness, making an inventory of his property to prevent loss or fraud solely, feeding his cattle, milking his couss, repairing his honse, etc. Such acts are held to be offices of kindness and charity. 19 Mo. $196 ; 28$ N. H. 473 . Nor does paying the debts of the deceased with one's own money make one an executor de son tort. 8 Rich. So. C. 29. As to what acts will render a person so liable, see Godolphin, Orph. Leg. 91 ; 1 Dane, Abr. 561 ; Buller, Nisi P. 48 ; Comyns, Dig. Administration (C 3); 8 Johns. N. Y. $426 ; 15$ Serg. & R. Penn. 39 ; 26 Me. 361 ; 6 Blackf. Ind. 367.
4. An executor de son tort is liable only for such assets as come into his hands, and is not liable for not reducing assets to possession. 2 Rich. Eq. So. C. 247 . And it has been held that he is only liable to the rightful administrator. 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 477. But see 9 Leigh, Va. 79 ; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 423 , which imply that he is also liable to the heir at law. He cannot be sued except for fraud, and he must be sued as executor. I Brayt. Vt. 116 ; 11 Ired. No. C. 215; 3 Penn. St. 129 ; 5 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 170. But in general he is liable to all the trouble of an executorship, with none of its profits. And the law on this head seems to have been borrowed from the civil-law doctrine of pro hacredi gestio. See Heineccius, Antiq. Syntagma, lib. 2, tit. 17, $\%$ 16, p. 468.
5. An executor de son tort is an executor only for the purpose of being sued, and not for the purpose of suing. 11 Ired. No. C. 215. He is sued as if rightful executor. But if he defends as such he becomes thereby also an executor de son tort. Lawes, Plead. 190, note; 4 B. Monr. Ky. 136; 1 M'Cord, Ch. So. C. 318; 21 Miss. 688 ; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 435. When an executor de son tort takes out letters of administration, his acts are legalized, and are to be viewed in the same light as if he had been rightful administrator when the goods came into his hands. 19 Mo. 196; 15 Mass. 325; 4 Harr. Del. 108; 8 Johns.N. Y. 126. But see, contra, 2 N. H. 475. A voluntary sale by an executor de son tort confers only the same title on the purchaser that he himself had. 6 Exch. 164; 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 145 ; 15 Jur. 63 ; 20 Ala. n. s. 587.
6. It is held that in regard to land no man can be an executor de son tort. 1 Root, Conn. 183; 7 Serg. \& R. Penn. 192; 10 id. 144. In Arkansas it is said that there is no such thing as a technical executor de son tort. 17 Ark. 122, 129. Other recent cases on this subject are, 35 Mc .287 ; 15 N. H. 137 ; 17 Mo .91 ; 23 Miss .544 ; $13 \mathrm{Ga} .478 ; 23$ Ala. n. s. 548 ; $2 \overline{5}$ id. 353 ; Busb. No. C. 399 ; 12 La. Ann. 245, 344.
EXECUTORY. Performing official duties ; contingent; also, personal estate of a deceased; whatever may be executed,-as, an executory sentence or judgment.

EXECUTORY CONSIDERATION. Something which is to be done after the promise is made, for which it is the legal equivalent. See Consideration.

EXECUTORY CONTRACT. One in which some future act is to be done: as, where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do any act at a future day.

EXECUTORY DEVISE. Such a limit--tion of a future estate in lands or chattels as the law admits in case of a will, though contrary to the rules of limitation in conveyances at common law.
2. In the case of chattels this ia more properly called an executory bequest. By the executory deviae no estate vests at the death of the devisor or testator, but only on the future contingency. It is only an indulgence to the last will and testament which ia supposed to be made by one innps consilii. When the limitation by devise is such that the future intereat falls within the rules of contingent remainders, it ia a contingent remsinder, and not an executory deviae. 4 Kent, Comm. 257; 1 Edw. Ch. 27; 3 Term, 763.
3. If a particular eatate of freebold be first devised, capahle in ita own nature of supporting a remainder, followed by a limitation which ia not immediately connected with, or does not immediately commence from, the expiration of the particulur eatate of freehold, the latter limitation cannot take effect as a remainder, but may operate as an executory devise. E. g., if land be devised to $A$ for life, and after bis deceese to B in fee, B takea a (vested) remainder, because bia estate js immediately connected with, and commences on, the limitation of A's eatate. If land be limited to $A$, and one yesr after his decease to $B$ in fee, the limitation to $B$ is not such a one as will be a remainder, hut may operate as an executory devise. If land be limited to $A$ for life, and ofter bia decease to $B$ and his heirs, with a proviso that if $B$ survive $A$ and die, without issue of bia body living at bis decease, then to $C$ and hia heirs, the limitation to $B$, etc. prevents an immediste connection of the estate limited to $C$ with the life estate of $A$, and prevents its commencement on the death of A. It must operate, if at all, as an executory devise. Butler's note (c) to Fearne on Cont. Rem. p. 897.
4. An exeoutory devise differs from a remainder in three very material respects:-

First. It needs no particular estate to support it. Second. By it a fee-simple or other less csiate may be limited on a fee-simple. Third. By this a remainder may be limited of a chattel intercat after a particular eatate for life created in the same. The first is a case of freehold commencing in futuro. A makes a devise of a future estate on a certain contingency, and till the contingency happens does not dispose of the fee-aimple, but leavea it to dcscend to his heirs at law. 1 T. Raym. 82; 1 Salk. 226 ; 1 Lutw. 748.

The second case is a fee upon a fee. A devises to $A$ and his heirs forever, which is a fee-simple, and then, in case $A$ dies before be is twenty-one years of age, to B and his heirs.
The third cuse: a remainder in a term of years after a life estate. A grants a term of one thousand resrs to $B$ for life, remainder to $C$. The conmon law regards the term for years as swallowed up in the grant for life, which, being a freehold, is a greater estate, and the grantee of auch a term for life oould alien the whole. An exception is made in favor of wills. 2 Kent, Comm. 285; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 59; 1 Des. So. C. 271; 4 id. 340; 1 Bsy, So. C. 78.
5. To prevent perpetuities, a rule has been adopted that the contingency on which an executory dovise depends must take effect, if at all, during the time of a life or lives in being and twenty-one years after and the months allowed for gestation, in order to reach beyond the minority of a person not in esse at the time of making an executory devise. 3 P. Will. $258 ; 7^{\circ}$ Term, 600; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 174; 7 Cranch, 456; 1 Gilm. Va. 194; 2 Hayw. No. C. 375. For example, lands are devised to such unborn son of a feme covert as shall first reach the age of twenty-one years. The utmost length of time that can happen before the estate can vest is the life of the mother and the subsequent infancy of her son.

But such a bequest after an indefinite failure of issue is bad. 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 62; Watkins, Conv. 112, 116; Thomas, Coke, Litt. 515, 516, 595, 596.
6. An executory devise is generally indestructible by any alteration in the estate out of or after which it was limited.

In England, if the executory devise is limited on an estate tail, the tenant in tail can bar it, as well as the entail, by deed, under stat. $3 & 4$ Will. IV. c. 74. If the executory devise be expectant on a fee, there are no means of preventing its taking effect on the contingency.
executory estates. Interests which depond for their enjoyment upon some subsequent event or contingency. Such estate may be an executory devise, or an executory remainder, which is the same as a contingent remainder, because no presentinterest passes.
EXECUTORY PROCESS (Via Executoria). In Louisiana. A process which can be resorted to in two cases, namely: 1. When the right of the creditor arises from an act importing confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor.
2. When the creditor demands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. Code of Practice, art. 732.

EXECUTORY TRUSTS. A trust is called executory when some further act is requisite to be done by the author of the trust or his trustees to give it its full effoct.
2. In the case of articles made in contemplation of marriage, and which are, therefore, preparatory to a settlement, so in the case of a will directory of a future conveyance to be made or executed by the trustees named therein, it is evident that something remains to be done. The trusts are said to be executory, because they require an ulterior act to raise and perfect them: i.e. the actual settlement is to be made or the conveyance to be executed. They are instructions, rather than complete instruments, in themselves.
3. The court of chancery will, in promotion of the supposed viows of the parties or the testator and to support their manifest intention, give to the words a more enlarged and 'beral construction than in the case of legal limitations or trusts executed. 1 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1; 1 Sanders, Uses and Trusts, 237; White. Lead. Cas. 18; 3 Wood, p. 479. Where a voluntary trust is executory and not executed, if it could not be enforced at law because it is a defective conveyance, it is not helped in favor of a volunteer in a court of equity. 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 498, 500 ; 4 Paige,

Ch. N. Y. 305; 1 Dev. Eq. No. C. 93. But where the trust, though voluntary, has been executed in part, it will be sustained or enforced in equity. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 329; 7 Penn. St. 175, 178; White, Lead. Cas. 176; 6 Ves. Ch. 656; 18 id. 140 ; 1 Keen, Reg. Cas. 551; 3 Beav. Rolls, 238.

EXECUTORY USES. Springing uses which confer a legal title answering to an executory devise.
Thus, when a limitation to the use of $A$ in fee is defeasible by a limitation to the use of B to arise at a future period, contingency, or event, these contingent or springing uses differ herein from an executory devise: there must be a person seised to such uses at the time the contingency happens, elas they can never be executed by the statute. Therefore, if the estate of the feoffee to such use be destroyed, by alienation or otherwise, before the contingency arises, the uae is destroyed forever. 1 Coke, 134, 138; Croke Eliz. 439. Whereas by an exceutory devise the frechold itself is transferred to the future devisee. In buth casea, a fee may bo limited after a fee. Poll. 78; 10 Mod. 423.

EXECUTRIX. A woman who has been appointed by will to execute such will or tes tament. See Executor.

EXEMPIARY DAMAGES. In Practice. Damayes alluwed as a punishment for torts committed with fraud, actual malice, or deliberate violence or oppression.2. The principle appears to be now well established in nearly all the states of the Union, though it is denied in some, that in actions for torts strictly so called, where gross fraud, or actual malice, or deliberate violence or oppression appears, the jury are not confined te a strict compensation for the plaintiff's loss, Jut may, in assessing damages, allow a sum as a punishment of the defendant for his wrong committed upon the plaintiff. Such an allowance is termed "smart-money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages. They are assessed in one sum, with any allowance the jury may think proper tomake as compensation for the actual loss sustained; and the whole sum is awarded to the injured party. The propriety of allowing damages to be given by way of punishment under any cir. cumstances has been strenuously denied in many of the cases, and the question has given rise to extensive discussion; but the weight of authority is decidedly that such allowance, in a suitable case, is proper. Actions of libel, assault and battery, seduction, false imprisonment, and the like, are those in which this principle is most frequently invoked. To trace the discussion of this subject, consult 13 Ala. n. s. 490; 27 id. $678 ; 28$ id. 236 ; 15 Ark. 452; 3 Day, Conn. 447; 6 Conn. 508; 7 id . 274 ; 10 id .384 ; $15 \mathrm{id} .225,267$; 4 Ill . 373; 7 id. 432; 16 id. 283; 5 Ind. 322; 13 B. 3. In some of the above cases, a qualification of the rule allowing exemplary damages has been asserted; viz., that they should be carefully denied whenever the defendant is criminally liable to punishment for the wrong done, by indictment and fine or otherwise. 4 Cush. EXEMPLUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A copy. A written authorized copy. Used also in the modern sense of example: ad exemplum constituti singulares non trali (exceptional things must not be taken for examples). Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat; Coke, Litt. 24 a.

EXEMPTION. The right given by law to a debtor to retain a portion of his property without its being liable to execution at the suit of a creditor, or to a distress for rent.
In general, the sheriff may seize and sell all the property of a defendant which he can find, except such as is exempted by the common law or by statute. The common law was very niggardly of these exceptions: it allowed only the necessary wearing-apparel; and it was once holden that if a defendant had two gowns the sheriff might sell one of them. Comb. 356. But in modern times, with perhaps a prodigal liberality, a considerable amount of property, both real and personal, is exempted from execution by the statutes of the several states. 3 Bouvier, Inst. 576, & 3387.

EXEMPTS. Persons who are not bound by law, but excused from the performance of duties imposed upon others.

By act of congrese Feb. 24, 1864, c. 13, вeo. 10, 13 U . S. Stat. at Large, 8 , it is enacted that suoh persons as are rejected as physically or mentally unfit for the service, all persone actually in the military or naval service of the United States at the time of the draft, and all persons who have

Ann. 183.
EXPILATION. In Clvil Law. The crime of abstracting the goods of a succession.
This is said not to be a theft, because the property no longer belongs to the deceased, nor to the heir before he has taken possession. In the common law, the grant of letters testamentary, or letters of administration, relates hack to the time of the death of the testator or intestate: so that the property of the estate is vested in the executor or administrator from that period.

EXPIRATION. Cessation; end: as, the expiration of a lease, of a contract or statute.

In general, the expiration of a contract puts an end to all the engagements of the parties, except to those which arise from the non-fulfilment of obligations created during ite existence. See Partnership; Contract.

When a statute is limited as to time, it expires by mere lapse of time, and then it has no force whatever; and, if such a statute repealed or supplied a former statute, the first statute is, ipso facto, revived by the expiration of the repealing statute, 6 Whart. Penn. 294; 1 Bland, Ch. Md. 664, unless it appear that such was not the intention of the legislature. 3 East, 212 ; Bacon, Abr. Statute (D).

EXPIRY OF THE LEGAL. In Scotch Law. The expiration of the term within which the subject of an adjudication may be redeemed on payment of the debt adjudged for. Bell, Dict.; 3 Jurid. Styles, 3d ed. 1107.

EXPLICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The fourth pleading : equivalent to the surrejoinder of the common law. Calvinus, Lex.

EXPORTATION. In Common Law. The act of sending goods and merchandise from one country to another. 2 Mann. & G. 155 ; 3 id. 959.

In order to preserve equality among the states in their commercial relations, the constitution provides that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any state." Art. 1, s. 9. And, to prevent a pernicious interference with the commerce of the nation, the tenth section of the first article of the constitution contains the following prohibition: "No state shall, without the consent of congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid hy any state on imports or exports shall be for the use of the treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the congress." See 12 Wheat. 419 ; Importation.

EXPOSE. A French word, sometimes applied to a written document containing the reasons or motives for doing a thing. The word oceurs in diplomacy.

EXPOSITION DE PART. In French Law. The abandonment of a child, unable to take care of itself, either in a public or private place.
If the child thus exposed should be killed in consequence of such exposure, as, if it should be devoured by animals, the person so exposing it would be guilty of murder. Rosc. Crim. Ev. 591.

EXPOSURE OF PERSON. In Criminal Law. Such an intentional exposure, in a public place, of the naked body, as is calculated to shock the feelings of chastity or to corrupt the morals.
This offence is indictable on the ground that every public show and exhibition which outrages decency, shocks humanity, or is contrary to good morals, is punishable at common law. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, & 318. An indecent exposure, though in a place of public resort, if visible by only one person, is not indictable as a common nuisance. An omnibus is a public place sufficient to support the indictment. 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 338; Templ. & M. Cr. Cas. 23 ; 2 Carr. & K. 933; 2 Cox, Cr. Cas. 376; 3 id. 183; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 207. EXPRESS. Stated or declared, as opposed to implied. That which is made known and not left to implication. It is a rule that when a matter or thing is expressed it ceases to be implied by law: expressum facit cessare tacitum. Coke, Litt. 183; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 97.
EXPRESS ABROGATION. A direct repeal in terms by a subsequent law referring to that which is abrogated.

EXPRESS ASSUMPSIT. A direct undertaking. See Assumpsit; Action.

EXPRESS CONSIDERATION. Consideration expressed or stated by the terms of the contract.

EXPRESS CONTRACT. One in which the terms are openly uttered and avowed at the time of making. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 443; 1 Parsone, Contr. 4. One made in express words. 2 Kent , Comm. 450 . See Contracts.

EXPRESS TRUST. One declared in express terms. See Trusts.

EXPRESS WARRANTY. One expressed by particular words. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 300. The statements in an application for insurance are usually allowed to constitute an express warranty. 1 Phillips, Ins. 346. See Warranty.

EXPROMISSIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The species of novation by which a creditor accepts a new debtor, who becomes bound instead of the old, the latter being released. 1 Bouvier, 1nst. h. 802. See Novation.

EXPROMISSOR. In Civil Law. The person who alone becomes bound for the debt of another, whether the latter were obligated or not. He differs from a surety, who is bound together with his principal. Dig. 12. 4. 4 ; 16. 1. 13 ; 24. 3. 64.4 ; 38.1.37. 8.

EXPULSION (Lat. expellere, to drive out). The act of depriving a member of a body politic or corporate, or of a society, of his right of membership therein, by the vote of such body or society, for some violation of his duties as such, or for some offence which renders him unworthy of longer remaining a member of the same.
By the constitution of the United Ststes, art. 1, s. $5, \frac{8}{2}$ 2, each house may determine the rales of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member. Io the case of John Smith, a seostor from Ohic, who wss expelled from the senate in 1807, the committee made a report which embraces the following points:-
First. That the senate may expel e member for a high misdemeanor, such se a coaspiracy to commit treason. Its suthority is not confined to an act dune io its presence.
Second. That a previous conviction is not requisite in order to suthorize the senste to expel a member from their body for a high offence against the United States.

Third. That slthough a bill of indictment against a party for treason and misdemeanor hss heen abandoned, hecause a previous indictment rgainst the principal party had terminsted in sin acquittal, owing to the inadmissibility of the evidence upon that indictment, yet the senate may examine the evidence for themselves, and if it be sufficieat to satisfy their minds thst the party is guilty of a high misdemeanor it is a suffioient ground of expulsion.
Fourth. That the fifth and sixth articles of the smendments of the oonstitution of the United States, containing the general rights and privileges of the oitizen as to criminal prosecutions, refer only to prosecutions at law, and do not affect the jurisdiction of the scoate as to expulsion.
Fifth. That before a committee of the senate, sppointed to report an opinion relative to tho honor and privileges of the senste, snd the facts respecting the conduct of the member implisated, such member is not entitled to be heard in his defence hy counsel, to have compulsory process for witneeses, or to be confrented with his aceusers. It is before the senate that the member charged is entitled to be heard.
Sixth. In determining on expulsion, the senate is not hound by the forms of judicisl proceedings or the rules of judicial evidence; nor, it scems, is the ssme degree of proof essentis! which is required to conviet of a crime. The pexwer of expulsion must, in its osture, he diseretionary, sod its exereise of a more summary obaracter. I Hall, Law Journ. 459, 465.
2. Corporations have the right of expulsion in certain cases, as such power is necessary to the good order and government of corporate bodies; and the cases in which the inherent power may be exercised are of three kinds. 1. When an offence is committed which has no immediate relation to a member's corporate duty, but is of so infamous a nature as to render him unfit for the society of honest men; such as the offences of perjury, forgery, and the like. But before an expulsion is made for a cause of this kind it is necessary that there should be a previous conviction by a jury, according to the law of the land. 2. When the offence is against his duty as a corporator, in which case he may be expelled on trial and conviction before the corporation. 3. The third is of a mixed nature, against the member's duty as a corporator, and also indictable by the law of the land. 2 Binn. Penn. 448. See, also, 2 Burr. 536.
3. Members of what are called joint-stock incorporated companies, or, indeed, members of any corporation owning property, cannot, without express authority in the charter, be expelled, and thus deprived of thcir interest in the general fund. Angell & A. Corp. 238.

EXTENSION. In Common Law. This term is applied among merchants to signify an agreement made between a debtor and his creditors, by which the latter, in order to enable the former, embarrassed in his circumstances, to retrieve his standing, agree to wait for a definite length of time after tbeir several claims become due and payable, before they will demand payment.

Among the French, a similar agreement is known by the name of attermoiement. Merlin, Répert. mot Attermoiement.

EXTENSION OF PATENT (sometimes termed Renewal of Patent). In Patent Law. An ordinary patent was formerly granted for the term of fourteen years. But the law made provision that when any patentee, without neglect or fault on his part, had failed to obtain a reasonable remnneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed ypon the same and the introduction thereof into use, he might obtain an extension of such patent for the term of seven years longer. A fee of forty dollars was required from the Applicant, and a public notice of sixty days was to be given of the application. No extension could be granted after the patent had once expired.

The extènsion of a patent is intended for the sole benefit of the inventor; and where it is made to appear that he will receive no penefit therefrom, it will not be granted. The assignee, grantee, or licensee of an interest in the original patent will retain no right in the extension, unless by reason of some express stipulation to that effect: But Where any person has a right to use a specific machine under the original patent, he will still retain that right after the extension. See act of 1836,818 , and act of $1848, \% 1$; Patents. By act of congress of March 2, 1861, c. $88,816,12$ U. S. Stat. at Large, 249, patents are to be granted for the term of geventeen years, and further extension is forbidden. This does not apply to patents for designs, which may be issued for three and a half, seven, or fourteen years, and are capable of extension.

EXTENT. A writ, issuing from the exchequer, by which the body, goods, and lands of the debtor may all be taken at once to satisfy the judgment.
It is so called because the sheriff is to cause the lands to be appraised at their full extended value before he delivers them te the plaintiff. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 131. The writ eriginally lay to enforce judgments in oass ef recognizances or debts acknowledged on statutes merchant or staple, see stat. 13 Edw. I. de Mercatoribus; 27 Edw. III. o. 9 ; and, by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39, was exten ded to debts iue the crown. The term is sometimes used in the various states of the United States to denete writs which give the credlter possession of the debtor's lands for a limited time till the debt be paid. 16 Mass. 186.

Extent in aid is an extent issued at the suit or instance of a crown-debtor against a person indebted to himself. This writ was much abused, owing to some peculiar privileges possessed by crown-debtors, and its use was regulated by stat. 57 Geo. III. c. 117. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 419.

Extent in chief is an extent issued to take a debtor's lands into the possession of the crown. See $2 & 3$ Vict. c. $11 ; 5 & 6$ Vict. c. 86, 88.

EXTENUATION. That which renders a crime or tort less heinous than it would be vithout it. It is opposed to aggravation.

In general, extenuating circumstances god in mitigation of punishment in criminal cases, or of damages in those of a civil nature.

EXTERRITORIALITY (Fr.). This term (exterritorialite) is used by French jurists to signify the immunity of certain persons, who, although in the state, are not amenable to its laws: foreign sovereigns, ambassadors, ministers plénipotentiary, and ministers from a foreign power, are of this class. Foelix, Droit Intern. Prive, liv. 2, tit. 2, c. 2, 8. 4. See Ambassador; Confllict of Laws; Minister; Privilege.

EXTINGUISHMENT. The destruction of a right or contract. The act by which a contract is made void. The annihilation of a collateral thing or subject in the subject itself out of which it is derived. Preston; Merg. 9. For the distinction between an extinguishment and passing a right, see 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Cumm. 325, note.

An extinguishment may be by matter of fact and by matter of law. It is by matter of fact either express, as when one receives satisfaction and full payment of a delst and the creditor releases the debtor, 11 Johns. N. Y. 513 , or implied, as when a person hath a yearly rent out of lands and becumes owner, either by descent or purchase, of the estate subject to the payment of the rent, and the latter is extinguished, 3 Stew. 60 ; but the person mnst hare as high an estate in the land as in the rent, or the rent will not be extinct. Coke, Litt. 147 b.

There are numerous cases where the clain is extinguished by operation of law: for example, where two persons are jointly but not severally liable for a simple contract-debt, a judgment obtained against one is at common law an extinguishment of the claim on the other debtor. 1 Pet. C. C. 301; 2 Johns. N. Y. 213.

See, generally, Bouvier, Inst. Index ; Coke, Litt. 147 b; 1 Rolle, Abr. 933 ; 7 Viner, Abr. 367 ; 11 id. 461 ; 18 id. 493-515; 3 Nelson, Abr. 818; Bacon, Abr.; 5 Whart. ## EXTINGUISHMENT OF COMMON.

Loss of the right to have common. This may happen from various causes: by the owner of the common right becoming owner of the fee; by severance from the land; by release; by approvement. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 75 ; 2 Stephen, Comm. 41; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 341 et seq.; Coke, Litt. 280; Burton, Real Prop. 437; i Bacon. Abr. 628; Croke Eliz. 594.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COPY-
HOLD. This takes place by a union of the copyhold and freehold estates in the same person; also by any act of the tenant showing an intention not to hold, any longer of his lord. Hutt. 81; Croke Eliz. 21; Williams, Real Prop. 287 et seq.; Watkins, Copyholds, Index.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF A DEBT.

EXTRADITION

Destruction of a debt. This may be by the creditor's accepting a higher security. Plowd. 84; 1 Salk. 304; 1 Md. 492; 5 id. 389 ; 24 Ala. n. s. 439. A judgment recovered extinguishes the original debt. 13 Mass. 148; 1 Pick. Mass. 118; Hill & D. N. Y. 392. A deht evidenced by a note may be extinguished by a surrender of the note. 10 Cush. Mass. 169; 29 Penn. St. 50; 3 Ind. 337. As to the effect of payment in extinguishing a debt, see Parment. See, generally, 35 N. H. 421 ; 29 Vt. 488 ; 6 Fla. 25 ; 20 Ga. 403 ; 12 Barb. N. Y. 128

EXTINGUISHMENT OF RENT. A destruction of the rent by a union of the title to the lands and the rent in the same person. Termes de la Ley; Cowel; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 325, note.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF WAYS. Destruction of a right of way, effected usually by a purchase of the close over which it lies by the owner of the right of way. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. Index.

EXTORSIVELY. A technical word used in indictments for extortion.

When a person is charged with extorsively taking, the very import of the word shows that he is not acquiring possession of his own. 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 387. In North Carolina the crime may be charged without using this word. 1 Hayw. No. C. 406.

EXTORTION. The unlawful taking by any officer, by color of his office, of any money or thing of value that is not due to him, or more than is due, or before it is due. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 141; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 68, s. 1 ; 1 Russell, Crimes, *144.

In a large sense the term includes any oppression under color of right; but it is generally and constantly used in the more limited technical sense above given.

To constitute extortion, there must be the receipt of money or something of value; the taking a promissory note which is void is not sufficient to make an extortion. 2 Mass. 523 ; 16 id. 93, 94. See Bacon, Abr.; Coke, Litt. 168. It is extortion and oppression for an officer to take money for the performance of his duty, even though it be in the exercise of a discretionary power. 2 Burr. 927. See 6 Cow. N. Y. $661 ; 1$ Caines, N. Y. 130; 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 426; 3 Penn. 183; I Yeates, Penn. 71; 1 South. 324; 1 Pick. Mass. 171; 7 id. 279 ; 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 387.

EXTRA-DOTAL PROPERTY. In

 Louisiana this term is used to designate that property which forms no part of the dowry of a woman, and which is also called parar phernal property. La. Civ. Code, art. 2315.EXTRA-JUDICIUM. Extra-judicial; out of the proper cause. Judgments rendered or acts done by a court which has no jurisdiction of the subject, or where it has no jurisdiction, are said to be extra-judicial.

EXTRA QUATUOR MARIA (Lat. beyond four seas). Out of the realm. 1-Blackstone, Comm. 157.

EXTRA-TERRITORIALITY. That

 quality of laws which makes them operate beyond the territory of the power enacting them, upon certain persons or certain rights. See Wheaton, Int. Law, 6th ed. 121 et seq.EXTRA VIAM. Out of the way. When, in an action of trespass, the defendant pleads a right of way, the defendant may reply extra viam, that the trespass was committed beyond the way, or make a new assignment. 16 East, 343, 349.

EXTRACT. A part of a writing. In general, an extract is not evidence, because the whole of the writing may explain the part extracted, so as to give it a different. sense; but sometimes extracts from publio. books are evidence, as extracts from the registers of births, marriages, and burials, kept according to law, when the whole of the matter has been extracted which relates to the cause or matter in issue.

EXTRADITION (Lat. ex, from, traditio, handing over). The surrender by one sovereign state to another, on its demand, of persons charged with the commission of crime within its jurisdiction, that they may be dealt with according to its laws.

The surrender of persons by one sovereign state or political community to another, on its demand, pursuant to treaty stipulations between them.

The surrender of persons by one federal state to another, on its demand, pursuant to their federal constitution and laws.
2. Without treaty stipulations. Public jurista are not agreed as to whether extradition, independent of treaty stipulations, is a matter of imperative duty or of discretion merely. Some have maintained the doctrine that the obligation to surrender fugitive criminals was perfect, and the duty of fulfilling it, therefore, imperative, especially where the crimes of which they were accused affected the peace and safety of the state; but others regard the obligation as imperfect in its nature, and a refusal to surrender such fugitives as affording no ground of offence. Of the former opinion are Grotius, Heineccius, Burlamaqui, Vattel, Rutherforth, Schmelzing, and Kent; the latter is maintained by Puffendorf, Voet, Martens, Kliiber, Leyser, Kluit, Saalfeld, Schmaltz, Mittermeyer, Heffter, and Wheaton.

Many states have practised extradition without treaty engagements to that effect, as the result of mutual comity and convenience; others have refused. The United States has always declined to surrender criminals unless hound by treaty to do so. Wheaton, Int. Law, 171; 1 Kent, Comm. 9th ed. 39, n.; 1 Opin. Attys. Gen. 511 ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 575.
3. Under treaty stipulations. The sovereignty of the United States, as it respects foreign states, being vested by the constitution in the federal government, it appertains to it exclusively to perform the duties of extradition whioh, by treaties, it may assume, 14

Pet. 540; and, to enable the executive to discharge such duties, congress passed the act of Aug. 12, 1848, 11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 302.

Treaties have been made between the United States and the following foreign states for the mutual surrender of persons charged with any of the crimes specified, viz. :-
4. Greal Britain. Aug. 9, 1842 (8 U. S. Stat. at Large, 576). Crimes,-murder, assault with intent to commit murder, piracy, arson, robbery, forgery, and utterance of forged paper.

Most of the foregoing treaties contain pr visions relating to the evidence required 1 authorize an order of extradition; but fo these and some points of practice in suc cases, see Fugitive from Justice.
5. The United States has made treatic for the mutual surrender of deserting seame with the following foreign states: Austrit Belgium, Brazil, Central America, Chil China, Columbia, Ecuador, France, Greec Guatemala, Hanover, the Hanseatic town. Hawaiian Islands, Mecklenburg-Schweri Mexico, New Granada, Peru, Portugal, Pru sia, Russia, Sardinia, Two Sicilies, Spai Sweden and Norway, and Venezucla.
It also made treaties with numerous India tribes, as nations or distinct political con munities, in many of which the lndians hat stipulated to surrender to the federal autho: ities persons accused of crime against th laws of the United States; and in some tr party treaties they have stipulated for mutus extradition of criminals to one another. I U. S. Stat. at Large, 612, 703.
6. Between federal states, by art. iv. sec. i $\delta_{2} 2$ of the constitution of the United States, is provided that "a person charged in an state with treason, felony, or other crime, wh shall flee from justice and be found in anoth state, shall, on demand of the executive al thority of the state from which he fled, 1 delivered up to be removed to the state havin the jurisdiction of the crime."

The act of congress of Feb. 12, 1793, 1 I S. Stat. at Large, 302, prescribed the mode c procedure in such cases, and imposed a lik duty upon the territories northwest or sout of the river Ohio.
For some points of practice relating to th subject, see Fugitive from Justice; also, Hurd, Hab. Corp. 592-633.
EXTRA-JUDICIAL. That which does not belong to the judge or his jurisdiction, notwithstanding which he takes cognizance of it. Extra-judicial judgments and acts are absolutely void. See Coram non Judice; Merlin, Répert. Excès de Fouvoir.

EXTRANEUS. In Old English Law. One foreign born; a foreigner. 7 Rep. 16.

In Roman Law. An heir not born in the family of the testator. Those of a foreign state. The same as alienus. Vicat, Voc. Jur. ; DuCange.

EXTRAVAGANTES. In Canon Law. The name given to the constitutions of the popes posterior to the Clementines.

They are thus called, quasi vagantes extra corpus jurie, to express that they were out of the canonical law, which at first contained only the decrees of Gratian: afterwards the Decretals of Gregory IX., the Sexte of Boniface VIII., the Clementines, and at last the Extravagantes, were added to it. There are the Extravagantes of John XXII. and the common Extravagantes. The first contain twenty epistles, decretals, or constitntions of that pope, divided under fifteen titles, without any subdivision into books. The others are epistles, decretals, or constitutions of the popes who occupied the holy see either before or after John XXII. They are divided into books, like the decretals.
EXTREMIS (Lat.). When a person is sick beyond the hope of recovery, and near death, he is said to be in extremis.

A will made in this condition, if made without undue influence, by a person of sound mind, is valid. As to the effect of declarations of persons in extremis, see Dying Declarations; Declarations.

EY. A watery place; water. Coke, Litt. 6.
EYE-WITNESS. One who saw the act or fact to which he testifies. When an eyewitness testifies, and is a man of intelligence and integrity, much reliance must be placed on his testimony; for he has the means of making known the truth.
EYOTT. A small island arising in a river. Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, s. b; Bracton, 1. 2, c. 2. See Islann.

EYRE. See Eire.
EYRER. To go about. See Erre.
F. The sixth letter of the alpbabet. A fighter or maker of frays, if he had no ears, was to be branded in the cheek with this letter. Cowel. Those who had been guilty of falsity were to be so marked. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 392.

FABRIC LANDS. In English Law. Lands given for the repair, rebuilding, or maintenance of cathedrals or other churches.

It was the custom, says Cowel, for almost every onc to give by will more or less to the fabric of the cathedral or parish ehurch where he lived. These lands so given were called fabrio lands, because given ad fabricam ecelesier reparandan (for repairing the fabric of the churoh). Called by the Saxons timber-land8. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

FABRICARE (Lat.). To make. Used of an unlawful making, as counterfeiting coin, 1 Salk. 342, and also of a lawful coining.

FACIAS (Lat. facere, to make, to do). That you cause. Occurring in the phrases scire facias (that you cause to know), fieri facias (that you cause to be made), etc. Used also in the phrases Do ut facias (I give that you may do), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), two of the four divisions of considerations made by Blackstone, 2 Comm. 444.

FACIO UT DES (Lat. I do that you may give). A species of contract which occurs when a man agrees to perform any thing for a price either specifically mentioned or left to the determination of the law to set a value on it: as, when a servant hires himself to his master for certain wages or an agreed sum of money. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 445.
FACIO UT FACIAS (Lat. I do that you may do). A species of contract in the civil law which occurs when I agree with a man to do his work for him if he will do mine for me; or if two persons agree to marry together, or to do any other positive acts on both sides; or it may be to forbear on one side in consideration of something done on the other. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 444.
FACT (Lat. factum). An action; a thing done. A circumstance.

Fact is much used in modern times in distinction from law. Thus, in every case to be tried there are facts to be shown to exist to which the law is to be applied. If law is, as it is said to be, a rulo of action, the fact is the action shown to have been done, and which should have been done in accordance with the rule. Fact, in this sense, means a thing done or existing.

Material facts are those which are essential to the right of action or defence.
Immaterial facts are those which are not essential to the right of action or defence.
Material facts must be shown to exist; immaterial facts need not. The existence of facts is generally determined by the jury; but there are many facts of which a court takes cognizance. See Junge; Jury; Cognizance. As to pleading material facts, see Gould, Plead. c. 3,828 . And see 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3150.

FACTIO TESTAMENTI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The power of making a will, including right and capacity. Also, the power of receiving under a will. Vicat, Voc. Jur.
FACTOR. An agent employed to sell goods or merchandise consigncd or delivered to him, by or for his principal, for a compensation, commonly called factorage or commission. Paley, Ag. 13; 1 Livermore, Ag. 68 ; Story, Ag. 833 ; Comyns, Dig. Merchant, B; Malynes, Lex Merc. 81; Beawes, Lex Merc. 44 ; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 193; 2 Kent, Comm. 3d ed. 622, note d; l Bell, Comm. 385, 88408 , 409; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 143.
When the agent accompanies the ship, taking a eargo aboard, and it is consigned to him for sale, and he is to purchase a return cargo out of the proceeds, such agent ie properly called a factor: he is, however, nsually known by the name of a supercargo. Beawes, Lex Merc. 44, 47 ; Livermore, Ag. 69, 70; 1 Domat, b. 1, t. 16, & 3, art. 2.
A factor differs from a broker in some important partieulars: namely, he may buy and sell for his principal in his own name, as well as in the name of his principal; on the contrary, a broker acting as auch should buy and sell in the name of his principal. 3 Chisty, Com. Law, 193, 210, 541; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 143, 148; 3 Kent, Comm. 3d ed. 622, note d. Again, a factor is intrusted with the possession, management, disposal, and control of the goode to be bought and eold, and has a speeial property and a lien on them; the broker, on the contrary, has usually no such possession, management, eontrol, or disposal of the goods, nor any such special property or lien. Paley, Ag. 13, Lloyd's ed.; 1 Bell, Comm. 385. The business of factors in the United States is done by commission merchants, who are known by that name, and the term factor is but little used. 1 Parsons, Contr. 78.
2. A domestic factor is one who resides in the same country with his principal.

By the usages of trade, or intendment of law, when domestic factors are employed in the ordinary businese of buying and selling goods, it is preeumed that a reciprocal credit between the principal and the agent and third persons has been given. When a purchase has been made by such a faetor, he, as well as his principal, is deemed liable for the debt; and in casc of a sale the buyer is responsible both to the factor and principal for the purchase-money; but this presumption may be rebutted by proof of exclusive credit. Story, Ag. 38 267, 291; 293; Palcy, Ag. 243, 371; 9 Barnew. & C. 75 ; 15 East, 62.

A foreign factor is one who resides in a different country from his principal. 1 Term, 112; 4 Maule & S. 576.

Foreign factors are held personally liable upon all contracts made by them for their employers, whether they describe themsolves in the eontract as agents or not. In such cases the presumption is that the credit is given exclusively to the factor. But this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a contrary agreement. Story, Ag. 3 268; Paley, Ag. 248, 373 ; Buller, Nisi P. 130 ; Smith, Merc. Law, 66; 2 Livermore, Ag. 249; 1 Bos. & P. 398 ; 15 East, 62 ; 9 Barnew. & C. 78.
3. His duties. He is required to use reasonable skill and ordinary diligence in his vocation. 1 Ventr. 121. He is bound to obey his instructions, 3 N. Y. 62; 14 Pet. 479 ; 5 C. B. 895 ; but when he has none he may and ought to act according to the general usages of trade, 14 Pet. 479; 7 Taunt. 164;

5 Day, Conn. 556; 3 Caines, N. Y. 226; 1 Stor. C. C. 43 ; to sell for cash when that is usual, or to give credit on sales when that is customary. He is bound to render a just. account to his principal, and to pay him the moneys he may receive for him.

His rights. He has the right to sell the goods in his own name; and, when untrammelled by instructions, he may sell them at such times and for such prices as, in the exercise of a just discretion, he may think best for his employer. 3 C. B. 380 . He is, for many purposes, between himself and third persons, to be considered as the owner of the goods. He may, therefore, recover the price of goods sold by him in his own name, and, consequently, be may receive payment and give receipts, and discharge the debtor, unless, indeed, notice has been given hy the principal to the debtor not to pay. He has a lien on the goods for advances made by him, and for his commissions. He has no right to barter the goods of his principal, nor to pledge them for the purpose of raising money for himself, or to secure a debt he may owe. 5 Cush. Mass. 111; 2 Mass. 398; 13 id. 178; $1 \mathrm{M}^{\prime}$ Cord, So. C. 1 ; 1 Mas. C. C. 440 ; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y, 429. See 3 Den. N. Y. 472 ; 13 Eng. L. \& Eq. 261. But he may pledge them for advances made to his principal, or for the purpose of raising money for him, or in order to reimburse himself to the amount of his own lien. 2 Kent, Comm. 3d ed. 625-628; 4 Johns. N. Y. 103; 7 East, 5 ; Story, Bailm. 88 325-327. Another exception to the general rule that a factor cannot pledge the goods of his principal is, that he may raise money by pledging the goods for the payment of duties or any other charge or purpose allowed or justified by the nsages of trade. 2 Gall. C. C. 13; 6 Serg. \& R. Penn. 386 ; Paley, Ag. 217 ; 3 Esp. 182.
4. It may be laid down as a general rule that when the property remitted by the principal, or acquired for him by his order, is found distinguishable in the hands of the factor, capable of being traced by a clear and connected chain of identity, in no one link of it degenerating from a specific trust into a general debt, the creditors of the factor who has become bankrupt have no right to the specific property, Cook, Bank. Laws, 400; 2 Strange, 1182; 3 Maule & S. 562, even where it is money in the factor's hands. 2 Burr. 1369; 5 Ves. Ch. 169; 5 Term, 277 ; 14 N. H. 38; 2 Dall. Penn. 60 ; 2 Pick. Mass. 86 ; 5 id. 7. And see Willes, 400; 1 Bos. & P. 539,648 , for the rule as to promissory notes.

But the rights of third persons dealing bon $\hat{a}$ fide with the factor as a principal, where the name of the principal is sunk eutirely, are to be protected. 7 Term, $360 ; 3$ Bingh. 139; 6 Maule \& S. 14.

The obligations and rights of factors have been made the subject of explicit legislation in some states. See Penn. Stat. Apr. 14, 1834. See, generally, 1 Parsons, Contr. 80 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 625 et seq.; Story, Bailm. 38325 et seq.

FACTORAGE. The wages or allowances paid to a factor for his services: it is more usual to call this commissions. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1013; 2 id. n. 1288.

FACTORIZING PROCESS. A process for attaching effects of the debtor in the hands of a third party. It is substantially the same process known as the garnishee process, trustee process, process by foreign attachment. Drake, Attach. & 45 I.

FACTORY. In Scotch Law. A contract which partakes of a mandate and locatio ad operandum, and which is in the English and Anerican law-books discussed under the title of Principal and Agent. 1 Bell, Comm. 259.

FACTUM. A deed; a man's own act and deed. A culpable or criminal act; an act not founded in law. A deed; a written instrument under seal: called, also, charta. Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 295.

The difference between factum and charta originally would seem to have been that factum denoted the thing done, and charta the evidence thereof. Coke, Litt. 9 b . When a man denies by his plea that he made a deed on which he is sued, he pleads non est factum (he did not make it).

In wills, factum seems to retain an active signification and to denote a making: See 11 How. 358.

A fact. Factum probandum (the fact to be proved). 1 Greenleaf, Ev. & 13.

A portion of land granted to a farmer; otherwise called a hide, bovata, etc. Spelm.

In French Law. A memoir which contains concisely set down the fact on which a contest has happened, the means on which a party founds bis pretensions, with the refutation of the means of the adverse party. See Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FACULTY. In Canon Law. A license; an authority. For example, the ordinary, having the disposal of all seats in the nave of a church, may grant this power, which when it is delegated is called a faculty, to another.

Faculties are of two kinds: first, when the grant is to a man and his heirs in gross; second, when it is to a.person and his heirs as appurtenant to a house which he holds in the parish. 1 Term, 429, 432; 12 Coke, 106.

In Scotch Law. Ability or power. The term faculty is more properly applied to a power fonnded on the consent of the party from whom it springs, and not founded on property. Kames, Eq. 504.

FAESTING-MEN. Approved men who were strong-armed. Subsequently the word seems to have been used in the sense of rich, and hence it probably passed into its later and common meaning of pledges or bondsmen, which, by Saxon custom, were bound to answer for each other's good bebavior. Cowel; DuCange.

FAIDA. In Saxon Law. Great and open hostility which arose on account of some murder committed. The term was applied only to that deadly enmity in deference to which, among the Germans and other northern nations, if murder was committed, punishment might be demanded from any one of kin to the murderer by any one of the kin of the murdered man. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.

FAILLITE (Fr.). Bankruptcy; failure. The condition of a merchant who ceases to pay his deb̀ts. 3 Massè, Droit Comm. 171; Gnyot, Répert.

FAILURE OF ISSUE. A want of issue to take an estate limited over by an executory devise.

Failure of issue is definite or indefinite. When the precise time for the failure of issue is fixed by the will, as in the case of a devise to Peter, but, if he dies without issue living at the time of his death, then to another, this is a failure of issue definite. An indefinite failure of issue is the very converse or opposite of this, and it signifies a general failure of issue, whenever it may happen, without fixing any time, or a certain or definite period, within which it must happen. 2 Bunvicr, Inst. n. 1849. See Dving wifhout 1ssue.

FAILURE OF RECORD. The neglect to produce the record atter having pleaded it. When a defendant pleads a matter and offers to prove it by the record, and then pleads nut tiel record, a day is given to the defendant to bring in the record; if he fails to do so, he is said to fail, and, there being a failure of record, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. Termes de la Ley. See the form of entering it, 1 Wms . Saund. 92 , u. 3 .
FAINT PLEADER. A false, fraudnlent, or collusory manner of pleading, to the deception of a third person.

FAIR. A public mart or place of buying and selling. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 274. $\AA$ greater species of market, recurring at more distant intervals.

A fair is usually attended by a greater conesurse of people than a market, for the amusement of whom various exhibitions are gotten up. McCulloch, Comm. Dict.; Wharton, Dict. 2d Lond. ed

A solemn or greater sort of market, granted to any town by privilege, for the more speed 5 and commodious provision of such things as the subject needeth, or the utterance of such things as we abound in above our own use and occasions. Cowel ; Cunningham, Law Dict. A privileged market.

A fair is a franchise which is obtained by a grant from the crown. Coke, 2d Inst. 220; 3 Mod. 123; 3 Lev. 222; 1 Ld. Raym. 341 ; 2 Saund. 172; 1 Rolle, Abr. 106; Tomlin: Cunningham, Law. Dict.

In the United States, fairs are almost unknown. They are recognized in Alabama, Aiken, Dig. 409, note, and in North Carolina, where they are regulated by statute. 1 No. C. Rev. Stat. 282.

FAIR-PLAY MEN. A local irregular tribunal which existed in Pennsylvania about the year 1769.

About the year 1769 there was a tract of country in Pennsylvania, situate between Lycoming creets and Pine creek, in which the proprietaries prohibited the making of surveys, as it was doubtful whether it had or had not been ceded by the Indiaus. Although gettlements were forbidden, yet adventurers settled themselves there. Being without the pale of ordinary authorities, the inhabitants annually elected a tribunal, in rotation, of three of their number, whom they denominated fair-play men, who had authority to decide all disputes as to houndaries. Their decisions were final, and enforced by the whole community en masse. Their decisions are said to have been just and equitable. 2 Smith, Penn. Laws, 195 ; Sergeant, Land Laws, 77.

FAIR PLEADER. The name of a writ given by the statute of Marlebridge, 52 Hen . III. c. 11. See Beau Pleader.

FAIT. Any thing done.

A deed lawfully executed. Comyns, Dig. Fait.

Femme de fait. $\mathbf{A}$ wife de facto.
FAITOURS. Idle persons; idle livers; vagabonds. Termes de la Ley; Cowel; Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALCARE (Lat.). To cut or mow down. Falcare prata, to cut or mow down grass in meadows hayed (laid in for hay), was a custimary service for the lord by his inferior tenants. Kennett, Gloss.

Falcator. The tenant performing the service.
Falcatura. A day's mowing. Falcatura una. Once mowing the grass.

Falcatio. A mowing.
Falcata. That which was mowed. Kennett, Gloss. ; Cowel ; Jacobs.

FALCIDIA. In Spanish Law. The fourth portion of an inheritance, which legally belongs to the heir, and for the protection of which he has the right to reduce the legacies to three fourth-parts of the succession, in order to protect his interest.

FALCIDIAN LAW. In Roman Law.

 A statute or law restricting the right of disposing of property by will, enacted by the people during the reign of Augustus, on the proposition of Falcidius, who was a tribune, in the year of Rome 714.Its principal provision gave power to fathers of families to bequeath three-fourths of their property, but deprived them of the power to give away the other fourth, which was to deseend to the heir. Inst. 2. 22. This fourth was termed the Falcidian portion.
A similar principle has been adopted in Louisiana, Where donations inter vivos or mortis caus $\hat{a}$ cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the disposer if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half, if he leaves two childrea; and one-third, if he leaves three or a greater number. Civ. Code, art. 1480 .
A similar principle prevailed in England in earlier times; and it was not until after the Restoratien that the power of a father to dispose of all his property by will became fully estahlished. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 11. As to the carly history of testamentary law, see Maine on Ancient Law.

At the present day, by the oommon law, the power of the father to give all his property is unqualified. He may bequeath it to bis children equally, to one in preference to another, or to a stranger in exclusion of all,-except that his widow has a right of dower in his real property. In some of the states the statutes anthorizing bequests and devises to charitable corporations limit the amount which a testator may give, to a certain fraction of his estate.

FALDAGE. The privilege which anciently several lords reserved to themselves of setting up fulds for sheep in any fields witbin their manors, the better to manure them, and this not only with their own but their tenants' sheep. Called, variously, secta faldare, fold-course, free-fold, faldagin. Cunningham, Law Dict. ; Cowel ; Spelman, Gloss.

FALDFEY. A compensation paid by some customary tenants that they might have liberty to fold their own sheep on their own land. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowel; Blount.
FALILO. In Spanish Law. The final decree or judgment given in a lawsuit.

FALSA DEMONSTRATIO NON VOCET. See Maxims.

Faise action. See Feigned Action.
FALSE CLAIM. A claim made by a man for more than his due. An instance is given where the prior of Lancaster claimed a tenth part of the venison in corio as well as in carne, where he was entitled to that in carne only. Manwood, For. Laws, cap. 25, num. 3.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT. Any unlawful restraint of a man's liberty, whether in a place made use of for imprisonment generally, or in one used only on the particular occasion, or by words and an array of force, without bolts or bars, in any locality whatever. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8669 ; 8 N. H. 550; 9 id. 491; 7 Humphr. Tenn. 43; 12 Ark. 43 ; 7 Q. B. 742 ; 5 Vt. 588 ; 3 Blackf. Ind. 46; 9 Johns. N. Y. 117; 1 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 345.

The remedy is, in order to be restored to liberty, by writ of habeas corpus, and, to recover damages for the injury, by action of trespass vi et armis. To punish the wrong done to the public by the false imprisonment of an individual, the offender may be indicted. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 218, 219 ; 2 Burr. 993. See Bacon, Abr. Trespass (D 3); Dane, Abr. Index; 9 N. H. 491 ; 2 Brev. No. C. 157 ; 6 Ala. n. s. 778 ; 2 Harr. Del. 538; 3 Tex. 282; 12 Metc. Mass. 56 ; 10 Cush. Mass. 375.

FALSE JUDGMENT. The name of a writ which lies when a talse judgment has been given in the county court, court baron, or other courts not of record. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 17, 18 ; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3364.

FALSE PERSONATION. See PERsonation.
FALSE PRETENCES. In Criminal Law. False representations and statements, made with a fraudulent design to ohtain "money, goods, wares, and merchandise," with intent to cheat. 2 Bouvier, Inst. $n$. 2308.

A representation of some fact or circumstance, calculated to mislead, which is not true. 19 Pick. Mass. 184.

The pretence must relate to past events. Any representation or assurance in relation to a future transaction may be a promise, or covenant, or warranty, but cannot amount to a statutory false pretence. 19 Pick. Mass. I85; 3 Term, 98 . It must be such as to impose upon a person of ordinary strength of mind, 3 Hawks, No. C. 620; 4 Pick. Mass. 178; and this will doubtless be sufficient. 11 Wend. N. Y. 557. But, although it may be difficult to restrain false pretences to such as an ordinarily prudent man may avoid, yet it is not every absurd or irrational pretence which will he sufficient. See 14 fll. 348 ; 17 Me .211 ; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 828; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 592 ; Russ. & R. 127. It is not necessary that all the pretences should be false, if one of them, per se, is sufficient to constitute the offence. 14 Wend. N. Y. 547. And although other circumstances may have induced the credit, or the delivery of the property, yet it will be sufficient if the false pretences had such an influence that without them the credit would not bave been given or the property delivered. 11 Wend . N. Y. $557 ; 13$ id. $87 ; 14$ id. 547 . The false pretences must have been used before the contract was completed. 13 Wend. N. Y. 311 ; I4 id. 546.
The question is modified in the different states by the wording of the statutes, which vary from each other somewhat. It may be laid down as the general rule of the interpretation of the words "by any false pretence," which are in the statutes, that wherever a person fraudulently represents as an existing fact that which is not an existing fact, and so gets money, etc., that is an offence within the acts. See 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 559; 3 Carr. & K. 98.
There must be an intent to cheat or defraud some person. Russ. \& R. Cr. Cas. 317; 1 Stark. 396. This may be inferred from a false representation. 13 Wend. N. Y. 87. The intent is all that is requisite: it is not necessary that the party defrauded should sustain any loss. 11 Wend. N. Y. 18; 1 Carr. \& M. 516, 537; 4 Pick. Mass. 177. See, generally, 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, ${ }_{2} 341$ et seq.; 19 Pick. Mass. $179 ; 8$ Blackf. Ind. 330; 10 Harr. Penn. 253; $2 \pm$ Me. 77; 5 Ohio St. 280; 4 Barb. N. Y. 151; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 131; 8 id. 12.
FALSE RETURN. A return made by the sheriff, or other ministerial officer, to a writ, in which is stated a fact contrary to the truth, and injurious to one of the parties or some one having an interest in it.

In this case the officer is liable for damages to the party injured. 2 Esp. Cas. 475. See Falso Retorno Brevium.
FALSE TOKEN. A false document or sign of the existence of a fact,-in general used for the purpose of fraud. See 2 Starkie, Ev. 563.

FALSEHOOD. Any untrue assertion or proposition. A wilful act or declaration contrary to the truth.

It does not always and necessarily imply a lie or wilful untruth, but is generally used in the second sonse here given. It is eominitted either by ths wilful act of the party, er by dissimulation, or by words. It is wilfnl, for example, when the uwner of a thing sells it twice, by different centracts, to different individuals, unknewn to them ; for in this the seller must wiffully deolare the thing is lis ewn when he knows that it is not se. It is committed by dissimulation when a crediter, having an understanding with his former debtor, sclls the land of the lattor although he has been paid the debt which was due to him. Falseheod by werd is committed when a witness swears to what be knows net te be true. See Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 362.

FALSIFY. In Chancery Practice. To prove that an item in an account before the court as complete, which is inserted to the debit of the person falsifying, should have been omitted.

When a bill to open an account has been filed, the plaintiff is sometimes allowed to surcharge and falsify such account; and if any thing has been inserted that is a wrong charge, he is at liberty to show it; and that is a falsification. 2 Ves. Ch. 565 ; 11 Wheat. 237. See Surcharge.

In Criminal Law. To alter or make false.
The alteration or making false a record is punishable at common law by statute in the states, and, if of records of the United States courts, by act of congress of April 30, 1790. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 86.

In Practice. To prove a thing to be false. Coke, Litt. $104 b$.

FALSING. In Scotch Law. Making or proving false. Bell, Dict.

FALSING OF DOOMS. In Scotch Law. Protesting against a sentence and iaking an appeal to a higher tribunal. Bell, Dict.

An action to set aside a decree. Skene.
FALSO RETORNO BREVIUM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. The name of a writ which might have been sued out against a sheriff for falsely returning writs. Cunningham, Law Dict.
familia (Lat.). In Roman Law. A family.

This word bad four different acceptations in the Reman law. In the first and most restricted sense it designated the pater-familias,--his wife, his children, and other descendants subjeet to his paternal power. In the second and more enlarged sense it comprehended all the agnates,-that is to say, all the different families who weuld all be subject to the paternal authority of a cemmon chief if he were still living. Here it has the same meaning as agnatia. In a third acceptatien it comprises the slaves and those whe are in mancipio of the chief, -although censidcred only as things, and witheut any tie of relationship. And, lastly, it significs the whele fortune er patrimeny of the chief. See Pater-Famlias; 1 Ortelan, 28.

In Old English Law. A household. All the servants belonging to one master. DuCange ; Cowel. A sufficient quantity of land to maintain one family. The same quantity of land is called sometimes mansa (a manse), familia, carucata. DuCange; Cunningham, Law Dict. ; Cowel ; Creasy, Church Hist.

FAMIIIIE ERCISCUNDF (Lat.). In

Civil Law. An action which lay for any of the co-heirs for the division of what fell to them by inheritance. Stair, Inst. 1. 1, tit. 7, & 15.

FAMILY. Father, mother, and children. All the individuals who live under the anthority of another, including the servants of the family. All the relations who descend from a common ancestor or who spring from a common root. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 16 ; 9 Ves. Ch. 323.
In the construction of wills, the word family, when applied to personal property, is synonymous with kindred, or relations. It may, nevertheless, be confined to particular relations by the context of the will, or may be enlarged by it, so that the expression may in some cases mean children, or next of kin, and in others may even include relations by marriage. 1 Roper, Leg. $115 ; 1$ Hov. Suppl. to Ves. Ch. 365, notes 6 and 7; 2 Ves. Ch. 110; 4 id. 708; 5 id. $156 ; 17$ id. 255 ; 3 East, 172 ; 5 Maule & S. 126. See Legatee ; Dig. 50. 16. 195. 2.

FAMIILY ARRANGEMENTS. An agreement made between a father and his son, or children, or between brothers, to dispose of property in a different manner to that which would otherwise take place.

In these cases, frequently, the mere rclation of the parties will give effect to bargains otherwise without adequate consideration. 1 Chitty, Pract. 67; 1 Turn. & R. Ch. 13.

FAMILY BIBLE. A Bible containing a record of the biriss, marriages, and deaths of the members of a family.

An entry by a father, made in a Bible, stating that Peter, his eldest son, was born in lawful wedlock of Maria, his wife, at a time specified, is evidence to prove the legitimacy of Peter. 4 Campb. 401. But the entry in order to be evidence must be an original entry; and, when it is not so, the luss of the original must be proved before the copy can be received. 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 135. See 10 Watts, Penn. 82.

FAMILY MEETINGS (called, also, family councils).

In Louisiana. Meetings of at least five relations, or, in default of relations of minors or other persons on whose interest they are called upon to deliberate, then of the friends of such minors or other persons.
2. The appointment of the members of the family meeting is made by the judge. The relations or friends must be selected from among those domiciliated in the parish in which the meeting is held ; the relations are selected according to their proximity, beginning with the nearest. The relation is preferred to the connection in the same degree; and among relations of the same degree the eldest is preferred. The under-tutor must also be present. 6 Mart. La. n. s. 455.

The family meeting is held before a justice of the peace, or notary public, appointed by the judge for the purpose. It is called for a fixed day and hour, by citations delivered at least three days before the day appointed for that purpose.
3. The members of the family meeting, be fore commencing their deliberations, take an oath before the officer before whom the meet ing is held, to give their advice according ts the best of their knowledge touching the interests of the person respecting whom they are called upon to deliberate. The officer beforf whom the family meeting is held must make a particular proces-verbal of the deliberations. cause the members of the family meeting tc sign it, if they know how to sign, and must sign it himself, and deliver a copy to the parties that they may have it homologated. La. Civ. Code, art. 305-3I1; Code Civ. b. 1. tit. 10, c. 2, s. 4.

FAMOSUS LIBELLUS(Lat.). Among the civilians these words signified that species of injuria which corresponds nearly to libe] or slander.
FANEGA. In Spanish Law. A meat sure of land, which is not the same in every province. Diccionario de la Acad.; 2 White. Coll. 49. In Spanish America, the fanega consisted of six thousand four hundred square varas, or yards. 2 White, Coll. 138.

FARDEL. The fourth part of a yard land. Spelman, Gloss. According to others, the eighth part. Noy, Complete Lawyer, 57 Cowel. See Cunningham, Law Dict.
FARE. A voyage or passage. The money paid for a voyage or passage. The latter it the modern signification. 1 Bouvier, Inst. $n$ 1036.

FARM. A certain amount of provision reserved as the rent of a messuage. Spel man, Gloss.
Rent generally which is reserved on a lease: when it was to be paid in money, it was called blanche firme. Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Black. stone, Comm. 42.

A term. A lease of lands; a leasehold in. terest. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 17; ${ }^{1}$ Reeve, Ilist. Eng. Law, 301, n.; 6 Term, 532 2 Chitty, Plead. 879, n. e. The land itself, le to farm or rent. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 368.
A portion of land used for agricultura purposes, either wholly or in part. 18 Pick Mass. 553; 2 Binn. Penn. 238.
It is ususlly the chief messuage in a village o: town whereto belongs great demesno of all sort Cowel; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Termes de la Ley

A large tract or portion of lsnd taken by a leas under a yearly rent payable by the tenant. Tom lin, Law Dict.

From this latter sense is derived its common me dern signification of a large tract used for culti vation or other purposes, as raising stock, whethe bired or owned by the occupant, including a mes susge with out-huildings, gardens, orchsrd, yard cte. Plewd. 195; Touchst. 93.

In American low, the word has almest exclu sively this latter mesning of a portion of land use for agricultural purposes, either wholly or in part 2 Binn. Penn. 238; 18 Pick. Mass. 553; 6 Met Mass. 529; 2 Hilliard, Resl Prop. 338 et seq.

By the conveyance of a farm will pass : messuage, arable land, meadow, pasture wood, etc. belonging to or used with it Coke, Litt. 5 a; Sheppard, Touchst. $93 ; 4$ Oruise, Dig. 321; Brooke, Abr. Grants, 155; Plowd. 167.

In a will, the word farm may pass a freehold, if it appear that such was the intention of the testator. 6 Term, 345 ; 9 East, 448. See 6 East, 604, n.; 8 id. 339; 1 Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 609.

FARM LET. Technical words in a lease creating a term for years. Coke, Litt. $45 b$; 2 Mod. 250; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. Index, Lease.
FARM OUT. To rent for a certain term. The collection of the revenue among the Romans was farmed out.

FARMER. The lessee of a farm. It is said that every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called farmer. This word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandman. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowel; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 318.

In common parlance, and as a term of description in a deed, farmer means one who cultivates a farm, whether he owns it or not. There may also be a farmer of the revenue or of other personal property as well as lands. Plowd. 195; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FARRIER. One who takes upon himself the public employment of shoeing horses.

Like an innkceper, a common carrier, and other persons who assume a public employment, a farrier is hound to serve the public as far as his employment goes, and an action lies against him for refusing, when a horse is brought to him at a reasonable time for such purpose, if he refuses, Oliphant, Horses, 131 ; and he is liable for the unskilfulness of himself or servant in performing such work, 1 Blackstone, Comm. 431, but not for the malicious act of the servant in purposely driving a nail into the foot of the horse with the intention of laming him. 2 Salk. 440.

FARVAND. Standing by itself, this word signifies "passage by sea or water." In charter-parties, it means voyage or passage by water. 18 C. B. 880.
fast estate. Real property. A tern sometimes used in wills. 6 Johns. N. Y. 185; 9 N. Y. 502.
fastermannes. Securities. Bondsmen. Spelman, Gloss.
father. He by whom a child is begotten.
2. By law the father is bound to support his children, if of sufficient ability, even though they have property of their own, 1 Brown, Ch. 387; 4 id. 224; 2 Cox, N. J. 223; 4 Mass. 97; 5 Rawle, Penn. 323; 6 Ind. 67; but if the falher be without means to maintain and educate his children according to their future expectations in life, courts of equity will make an allowance for these purposes out of the income of their estates, and, in an urgent case, will even break into the principal. 19 Ala. n. s. $650 ; 1$ Ves. Ch. 160 ; IP Will. Ch. 493; 2 id. 22; 4 Sandf. N. Y.'

568; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 100; 2 Ired. No. C. 354; 2 Ashm. Penn. 332; 5 R. I. 269; 1 Coop. Eq. 52. The father is not bound, however, without some agreement, to pay another for maintaining them, 9 Carr. & P. 497 ; nor is he bound by their contracts, even for necessaries, unless an actual authority he proved, or a clear omission of his dnty to furnish such necessaries, 2 Stark. 501 ; 20 Eng. L. & Eq281 ; 10 Barb. N. Y. 483; 24 id. 634; 15 Ark. 137; 3 N. H. 270; 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 287; 18 Ga. 457, or unless he suffers them to remain abroad with their mother, or forces them from homo by hard usage. 3 Day, Conn. 37. See Parent: Mother. The obligation of the father to maintain the child ceases as soon as the child becomes of age, however wealthy the father may be, unless the child becomes chargeable to the public as a pauper. 1 Ld . Raym. 699. The cbligation also ceases during the minority of the child, if the child voluntarily abandons the home of his father, either for the purpose of seeking his fortune in the world or to avoid parental discipline and restraint. 16 Mass. 28; 4 IIl. 179; 14 Ala. 435.
3. During the lifetime of the father, he is guardian by nature or nurture of his children. As such, however, he has charge only of the person of the ward, and no right to the control or possession either of his real or personal estate. 7 Cow. N. Y. 36; 15 Wend. N. Y. 63 ; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 3; 3 Pick. Mass. 213; 14 Ala. 388. He is entitled to the custody of his children even in preference to the mother, 24 Barb. N. Y. 521 ; 6 Rich. Eq. So. C. 249, $344 ; 2$ Serg. & R. Penn. 176; though children of very tender years will not be taken from the mother where their health requires a mother's care, 3 Binn. Penn. $320 ; 25$ Wend. N. Y. 64; 2 Zabr. N. The rights of the father, while his children remain in his custody, are to have authority over them, to enforce all his lawful commands, and to correct them with moderation for disobedience, 2 Humphr. Tenn. 283; and these rights, the better to accomplish the purposes of their education, he may delegate to a tutor or instuuctor. 2 Kent, Comm. 205. He may maintain an action for the seduction of his daughter, or for any injury to the person of his child, so long as he has a right to its services. 5 East, 47; 2 Mces. & W. Exch. 539; 13 Gratt. Va. 726; 6 Ind. 262; Wsie, Dist. Ct. 75; 24 Wend. N. Y. $429 ; 7$ Watts, Penn. 62. Generally, the father is entitled to the services or earnings of his children during their minority, so long as they remain members of his family, 4 Mas. C. C. 380; 7 Mass. 145 ; 2 Gray, Mass. 257; 17 Ala. s.s. 14; but be may relinquish this right in favor of his children, 12 Mass. 375 ; 2 Mete. Mass. 39 ; 7 Cow. N. Y. 92 ; 14 Ala. N. s. 753 ; 11 Humphr. Tenn. 104 ; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 207; 2 Vt. 290 ; 29 id. 514 ; 21 Penn. St. 222 ; and be will be presumed to have thus relinquished this right if he abandons or neglects to support and educate his children. Ware, Dist. Ct. 462 ; 3 Barb. N. Y. 115; 6 Ala. n. s. 501; 15 Mass. 272.
4. An agreement of the father, by which his minor child is put out to service, ceases to be binding upon the child after the father's death, unless made by indentures of apprenticeship. $34 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H} .49$. The power of the father ceases on the arrival of his children at the age of twenty-one; though if atter that age they continue to live in the father's family, they will not be allowed to recover for their services to him upon an implied promise of payment. 3 Penn. St. 473; 33 N. H. 581; 22 Mo. 439; 6 Ind. 60 ; 10 Ill. 296.

A step-father is not bound to support and educate his step-children, nor is he entitled to their custody, labor, or earnings, unless he assumes the relation of parent. 11 Barb. N. Y. 224; 19 Penn. St. 360; 18 Ill. 46; 1 Busb. No. C. $110 ; 3$ N. Y. 312 .

FATHOM. A measure of length, equal to six feet.
The word is probably derived from the Teutonio word $f a d$, which signifies the thread or yarn drawn out in spinning to the length of the arm, before it is run upon the spindle. Webster; Minsheu.

FATUOUS PERSON. One entirely destitute of reason: is qui omnino desipit. Erskine, Inst. b. 1, tit. 7, s. 48.

FAUBOURG. A district or part of a town adjoining the principal city: as a faubourg of New Orleans. 18 La .286.

FAUCES TERRA (Lat. jaws of the land). Projecting headlande or promontories, including arms of the sea. Such arms of the sea are said to be inclosed within the fauces terrex, in contradistinction to the open sea. 1 Kent, Comm. 367. Where these fauces approach so near that a man standing on one shore can discern what another man is doing on the other shore, the water inclosed is infra corpus comitatum (within the body of the county). Andr. 231; Coke, 4th Inst. 140; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 804; 5 Wheat. 106; 5 Mas. C. C. 290 ; 1 Stor. C. C. 259.

FAULT. An improper act or omission, which arises from ignorance, carelessness, or negligence. The act or omission must not have been meditated, and must have caused some injury to another. Leç. Elém. 8783. See Dolus; Neqligence; 1 Miles, Penn. 40.

Gross fault or neglect consists in not ohserving that care towards others which a man the least attentive usually takes of his own affairs. Such fault may, in some cases, afford a presumption of fraud, and in very gross cases it approaches so near as to be almost undistinguishable from it, especially when the facts seem hardly consistent with an honest intention. But there may be a gross fault without fraud. 2 Strange, 1099; Story, Pailm. 88 18-22; Toullier, 1. 3, t. 3, 8231.

Ordinary faults consist in the omission of that care which mankind generally pay to their own concerns; that is, the want of ordinary diligence.

A slight fault consists in the want of that care which very attentive persons take of their own affairs. This fault assimilates itself to, and in some cases is scarcely distinguishable from, mere accident or want of foresight.
This division has been adopted by common lawyers from the civil law. Although the civilisns generally agree in this division, yet they are not without a difference of opinion. See Pothier, Observation générale sur le précédent Traité, et sur les suivants, printed at the end of his Traité des Obligations, where he cites Accurse, Alciat, Cujas, Duaren, D'Avezan, Vinnius, and Heineccius, in support of this division. On the other side the reader is referred to Thomasius, tom. 2, Dissertationem, page $1006 ; \mathrm{Le}$ Brun, cited by Jones, Bailm. 27; and Toullier, Droit Civil Frangais, liv. 3, tit. 3, \& 231.
2. These principles established, different rules have been made as to the responsibilities of parties for their faults in relation to their contracts. They are reduced by Pothier to three.

First. In those contracts where the party derives no benefit from his undertaking, he is answerable only for his gross faults.

Second. In those contracte where the parties have a reciprocal interest, as in the contract of sale, they are responsible for ordinary neglect.

Third. In those contracts where the party receives the only advantage, as in the case of loan for use, he is answerable for bis slight fault. Pothier, Observ. Générale; Traité des Oblig. & 142; Jones, Bailm. 119; Story, Bailm. 12. See, also, Ayliffe, Pand. 108; La. Civ. Code, 3522; 1 Comyns, Dig. 413; 5 id. 184; Weskett, Ins. 370.

FAUTOR. In Spanish Law. Accomplice; the person who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime.
FAUX. In French Law. A falsification or fraudulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Biret, Vocabulaire des Six Codes.
Toullier says (tom. 9, n. 188), "Faux may be understood in three ways: in its most extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention; it is nearly synonymous with lying; in a less extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutatio veritatis crm dolo facta; and lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudulent slteration of the truth in those cases ascertained and punished by the law." See Crimen Falsi.
FAVOR. Bias; partiality; lenity; prejudice.
The grand jury are sworn to inquire into all offences which have been committed, and into all vinlations of law, without fear, favor, or affection. See Grand Jury. When a juror is influenced by bias or prejudice, so that there is not sufficient ground for a principal challenge, he may nevertheless be challenged for favor. See Ceallenge; Bacon, Abr. Juries, E; Dig. 50. 17. 156. 4 ; 7 Pet. 160.

FEALTY. That fidelity which every man who holds lands of another owes to him of whom he holds.

Under the feudal system, every owner of lands held them of some superior lord, from whom or from whose ancestore the tensnt had reoeived them. By this connection the lord heoame hound to protect the tenant in the enjoy ment of the lend granted to him; and, on the other hand, the tenant was bound to be faithful to his lord and to defend him against all his enemies. This obligation was called fidelitae, or fealty. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 263; 2 id. 86; Coke, Litt. 67 b; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1566.

This fealty was of two corts: thst which is gencral, and is due from every subject to his prince; the other specisl, and required of auch only as in respect of their fee are tied by this oath to their landlorde. 1 Blackstone, Comim. 367; Cowel.

The oath or obligation of fealty was one of the essential requisites of the feudsl relation. 2 Sharswood, Blsekst. Comm. 45, 86; Littleton, 83 117, 131; Wright, Ten. 35; Termes de le Ley; 1 Washhurn, Real Prop. 19. Feslty wes due alike from fresholders and tenants for years ss su incident to their estates to be psid to the reversioner. Coke, Litt. 67 b . Tenants at will did not have fealty. 2 1 lintoff, Real Prop. 222; Burton, Real Prop. 395,』; 1 Washburn, Resl Prop. 371.

It has now fallen into disuse, snd is no longer exacted. 3 Kent, Comm. 510 ; Wright, Ten. 35 , 55; Cowel.

FEAR. In Criminal Law. Dread; consciousness of approashing danger.

Fear in the person robbed is one of the ingredients required to constitute a robbery from the person; and without this the felonious taking of the property is a larceny. It is not necessary that the owner of the property should be in fear of his own person: but fear of violence to the person of his child, 2 East, Pl. Cr. 718, or to his property, id. 731; 2 Russell, Crimes, 72, is sufficient. 2 Russell, Crimes, 71-90. See Putring in Tear; Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 12, p. 106 ; Dig. 4. 2. 3. 6.

FEASTS. Certain established periods in the Christian church. Formerly the days of the feasts of saints were used to indicate the dates of instruments and memorable events. 8 Toullier, n. 81. These are yet used'in England: there they have Easter term, Hilary term, etc.

FECIALES. Amongst the ancient Romans, that order of priests who discharged the duties of ambassadors. Subsequently their duties appear to have related more particularly to the declaring war and peace. Calvinus, Lex.

FEDERAL. A term commonly used to express a league or compact between two or more states.

In the United States the central government of the Union is federal. The constitution was adopted " to form a more perfect union' among the states, for the purpose of self-protection and for the promotion of their mutual happiness.

FEF. A reward or wages given to one for the execution of hie office, or for professional eervices, as those of a counsellor or physician. Cowel.
Fees differ from costs in this, that the former are, ss above mentioned, a recompense to the officer for his services; snd the latter, an indemnifiestion to the party for monsy lsid out and expended in his suit. 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 248; 9 Wheat. 262. See 4 Binn. Penn. 267.

That which is held of some superior on condition of rendering him services.

A fee is defined hy Spelman (Feuds, c. 1) as the right which the tenant or vassal has to the use of lands, while the sbsolute property remsined in a superior. But this early and strict meaning of the word speedily passed into its modern signification of an estate of inheritance. 2 Blackst. Comm. 106; Cowel; Termes de le Ley; 1 Washbern, Real Prop. 51; Coke, Litt. 1 b; 1 Preston, Est. 420 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 514. The term may be used of other property ss woll as lands. Old Nat. Brev. 41.
The term is generally used to denote $s s$ well the land itself so held, as the estate in the lsnd, which seems to be its atricter mesning. Wright, Ten. 19, 49; Cowel. The word fee is explsined to signity that the land or other subject of property belongs to its owner, and is transmissible, in the case of an individual, to those whom the law appoints to succeed him, under the appellstion of heirs; snd, in the csse of corporate bodies, to those who are to taks on themselves the corporate function, and, from the manner in which the body is to be continued, are denominated successors. 1 Coke, Litt. 271 b; Wright, Ten. 147, 150; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 104, 106 ; Bouvier, Inst. Index.
The compase or circuit of a manor or lordship. Cowel.
A fee-simple is an estate belonging to a man and his heirs absolutely. See FeeSimple.

A fee-tail is one limited to particular classes of heirs. See Estate in Fee-Tail.
A determinable fee is one which is liable to be determined, but which may continue forever. 1 Plowd. 557 ; Sheppard, Touchst. 97 ; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 109; Croke Jac. 593; 10 Viner, Abr. 133 ; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 187; 3 Atk. Ch. 74 ; Ambl. Ch. 204; 9 Mod. 28. See Determinable Fee.

A qualified $f e e$ is an interest given to a man and certain of his heirs at the time of its limitation. Littleton, 8254 ; Coke, Litt. 27 a, 220; 1 Preston, Eist. 449. Sce Qualified Fee.
A conditional fee includes one that is either to commence or determine on some condition. 10 Coke, 95 b; Preston, Est. 476; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 9. See Conditions.

FED-FARM. Land held of another in fee,- that is, in perpetuity by the tenant and his heirs at a yearly rent, without fealty, homage, or other services than such as are specially comprised in the feoffment. Cowel. Fealty, however, was incident to a holding in fee-farm, according to some authors. Spelman, Gloss. ; Termes de la Ley.

Land held at a perpetual rent. 2 Sbarswood, Blackst. Comm. 43.

FEE-FARM RENT. The rent reserved on granting a fee-farm. It might be onefourth the value of the land, according to Cowel, one-third, according to other authors. Spelman, Glose. ; Termes de la Ley.

FEE-SIMPIEE. An estate of inheritance. Coke, Litt. 1 b; 2 Blackstone, Comm.
106. The word simple adds no meaning to the word fee standing by itself. But it excludes all qualification or restriction as to the persons who may inherit it as heirs, thus distinguishing it from a fee-tail, as well as from an estate which though inheritable is subject to conditions or collateral determination. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 51; Wright, Ten. 146; 1 Preston, Est. 420; Littleton, $\frac{8}{2} 1$.
It is the largest possible estate which a man can have, being an absolute estate in perpetuity. It is where lands are given to a man and to his heirs absolutely, without any end or limitation put to the estate. Plowd. 557; Atkinson, Conv. 183; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 106.

Feb-tail (Fr. tailler, to dock, to shorten). An inheritable estate which can descend to certain classes of heirs only. It is necessary that they should be heirs " of the body" of the ancestor. It corresponds with the feudum talliatum of the feudal law. The estate itself is said to have been derived from the Roman system of restricting estates. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 21; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 66; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 112, n. See, also, Coke, $2 d$ Inst. 333 ; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 607 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 14 et seq.
FEHMGERICHTE An irregular tribunal which existed and flourished in Westphalia during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

From the close of the fourteenth century its importance rapidly diminished; and it was finally suppressed by Jerome Bonaparts in 1811. See Bork, Geschichte der Westphalichen Vehmgerichte; Paul Wigand, Das Fehmgericht Westphaleus.
feigned action. In Practice. An action brought on a pretended right, when the plaintiff has no true cause of action, for some illegal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true: it differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. Coke, Litt. 361, 8689.
FEIGNED ISSUE. In Practice. An issue brought by consent of the parties, or by the direction of a court of equity, or of such courts as possess equitable powers, to determine before a jury some disputed matter of fact which the court has not the power or is unwilling to decide. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 452 ; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

FELAGUS (Lat.) One bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. DuCange. A friend bound in the decennary for the good behavior of another. One whe took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was murdered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the fathor or mother of the deceased; if he had none, to the lord; if he had none, to his felagus, or sworn brother. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowel; DuCange.
FELO DESE (Lat.). In Criminal Law. A felon of himself; a self-murderer.
To be guilty of this offence, the deceased must have had the will and intention of committing it, or clse he committed no crime.

As he is beyond the reach of human laws, he cannot be punished. The English law, indeed, attempted to inflict a punishment by a barbarous burial of his body, and by forfeiting to the king the property which he owned and which would belong to his relations. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 9 ; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 189.

FELON. One convicted and sentenced for a felony.

A felon is infamous, and cannot fill any office or become a witness in any case unless pardoned, except in cases of absolute necessity for his own preservation and defence: as, for example, an affidavit in relation to the irregularity of a judgment in a cause in which he is a party. 2 Salk. 461; 2 Strange, 1148; 1 Mart. La. 25 ; Starkie, Er. pt. 2, tit. Infamy. As to the effect of a conviction in one state where the witness is offered in another, see 17 Mass. 515; 2 Harr. & M'H. Md. 120, 378; 1 Harr. & J. Md. 572. As to the effect upon a copartnership of one of the partners becoming a felon, see 2 Bonvier, Inst. n. 1493.

FELONIA (Lat.). Felony. The act or of fence by which a vassal forfeited his fee. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex. Per feloniam, with a criminal intention. Coke, Litt. 391.

Felonice was formerly used also in the sense of feloniously. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FELONIOUS HOMICIDE. The killing of a human creature, of any age or sex, without justification or excuse. It may include killing oneself as well as any other person. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 188. Mere intention to commit the homicide was anciently beld equally guilty with the commission of the act. But it was early held that the intention must be manifested by an act. Cald. 397; Foster, Crim. Law, 193; 1 Russell, Crimes, 46, notes.

FELONIOUSLY. In Pleading. This is a technical word which must be introduced into every indictment for a felony, charging the offence to have been committed feloniously: no other word nor any circumlocution will supply its place. Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G 6); Bacon, Abr. Indictment (G 1) ; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 172, 184; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 25 , s. 55 ; Croke, Car. 37 ; Williams, Just. Indict. iv.; Croke Eliz. 193; 5 Coke, 121; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 242; 1 Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 154.
FELONY. An offence which oceasions a total forfeiture of either lands or goods, or both, at common law, to which capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of guilt. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 94, 95 ; 1 Russell, Crimes, 42; 1 Chitty, Pract. 14; Coke, Litt. 391 ; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 37; 5 Wheat. 153, 159.
In American law the word has no clearly defined meaning at common law, but includes offences of a considerable gravity. 1 Park. Crim. N. Y. 39; 4 Ohio St. 542. It is defined, however, by statute clearly and fully in many of the states.

It has been held that receiving stolen goods was a felony so as to justify arrest, 5 Cush. Mass. 281; 6 Binn. Penn. 316 ; 2 Term, 77, and that the following were not: adultery. 2 Bail. So. C. 149; 5 Rand. Va. 627; 16 Vt . 551; assault with intent to murder, 13 Ired. No. C. 505 ; impeding an officer in the discharge of his duty, 25 V t. 415 ; involuntary manslaughter by negligence, 15 Ga. 343; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 423 ; mayhem, 5 Ga. 404 ; 7 Mass. 245 ; perjury, 1 R. M. Charlt. Ga. 228; 5 Exch. 378; piracy. 1 Salk. 85; 10 Wheat. 495.

FEMALE. The sex which bears young.
It is a general rule that the young of female animals which belong to us are ours; nam fretus ventrem sequitur. Inst. 2. 1. 19; Dig. 6. 1. 5. 2. The rule is, in general, the same with regard to slaves; but when a female slave comes into a free state, even without the consent of her master, and is there delivered of a child, the latter is free.

FEME, FEMME. A Toman.
FEME COVERT. A married woman. See Marrien Woman; Coverture.

FEMININE. Of or belonging to females.
When the feminine is used, it is generally confined to females: as, if a man bequeathed all his mares to his son, his horses would not pass. See 3 Brev. No. C. 9 .

FENCE. A building or erection between two contiguous estates, so as to divide them, or on the same estate, so as to divide one part from another.

Fences are regulated by local laws. In general, fences on boundaries are to be built on the line, and the expense, when made no more expensively than is required by law, is borne equally between the parties. See the following cases:-2 Miles, Penn. 337, 395 ; 2 Me. 72; 11 Mass. 294; 3 Wend. N. Y. 142; 2 Metc. Mass. 180; 15 Conn. 526; Bouvier, Inst. Index. For modifications of the rule, see 32 Penn. St. 65; 28 Mo. 556.

A partition fence is presumed to be the common property of both owners of the land. 8 Barnew. & C. 257, 259, note a; 20 Ill. 334. When built upon the land of one of them, it is his; but if it were built equally upon the land of both, at their joint expense, each would be the owner in severalty of the part standing on his own land. 5 Taunt. 20; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. $\%$ 617. See 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 79, 80.

In Scotch Law. To hedge in or protect by certain forms. To fence a court, to open in due form. Pitcairn, Cr. Law, pt. 1, p. 75.

FENCE-MONTH. A month in which it is forhidden to hunt in the forest. It begins fifteen days before midsummer and ends fifteen days after. Manwood, For. Laws, c. 23. There were also fence-months for fish. Called, also, defence-month, because the deer are then defended from "scare or harm." Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.; Cumingham, Law Dict.

FENGELD (Sax.). A tribute exacted for repelling enemies. Spelman, Gloss.

FEOD. Said to be compounded of the two Saxon words feoh (stipend) and odh (property) ; by others, to be composed of feoh (stipend) and hod (condition). 2 Blackstone, Comm. 45 ; Spelman, Gloss. See Fee.
FEODAL. Belonging to a fee or feud; feudal. More commonly used by the old writers than feudal.
FEODAL ACTIONS. Real actions. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 117.

FEODARY. An officer in the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court, by virtue of the statute 32 Hen . VIII. c. 46, to be present with the escheator at the finding offices and to give in evidence for the king as to value and tenure. He was also to survey and receive rents of the ward-lands and assign dower to the king's widows. The office was abolished by stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24; Kennett, Gloss. ; Cowel.
FEODI FIRMA (L. Lat.). Fee-farm, which see.
FEODUM. The form in use by the old English law-writers instead of feudum, and having the same meaning. Feudum is used generally by the more modern writers and by the feudal law writers. Littleton, 81 ; Spelman, Gloss. There were various classes of feoda.

Feodum militaris or militare (a knight's fee); feodum improprium (an improper or derivative feud); feodum proprium (a pure or proper fee); feodum simplex (a fee-simple); feodum talliatum (a fee-tail). 2 Blackstone, Comm. 58, 62 ; Littleton, 88 1, 13; Spelman, Gloss.
FEOFFAMENTUM. A feoffment. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 310.
feoffare. To bestow a fee. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 91.
FEOFFEE. He to whom a fee is conveyed. Littleton, $\ell 1$; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 20.

FEOFFEE TO USES. A person to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party. One holding the same position with reference to a use that a trustee does to a trust. 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 333. He answers to the haces fiduciarius of the Roman law.
FEOFPMENT. A gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. It operates by transmutation of possession; and it is essential to its completion that the seisin be passed. Watkins, Conv. 183.
The conveyance of a corporeal hereditament either by investiture or by livery of seisin. 1 Sullivan, Lect. 143; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 33.
The instrument or deed by which such hereditament is conveyed.
This was one of the earliest modes of conveyance used in the common law. It signified originally the grant of a fee or feud; but it came in time to signify the grant of a free inheritance in fee, respect being had rather to the perpetuity of the estate granted, than to the feudal tenure. I Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 90. The feoffment was likewise accompanied by livery of seisin. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 33. The conveyance by feoffment with livery of seisin has become infrequent, if not obsolete, in England, and in this country has not been used in practice. Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 4, 83 ; Sheppard, Touchst. e. $9 ; 2$ Blackstone, Comm. 20 ; Coke, Litt. 9; 4 Kent, Comm. 467 ; Perkins, e. 3; Comyns, Dig.; 12 Viner, Abr. 167 ; Bacon, Abr.; Dane, Abr. c. 104; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 33; 1 Sullivan, Lect. 143 ; Stearns, Real Act. 2; 8 Cranch, 229.
FEOFFOR. He who makes a feoffment. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 20; Litt. द̌ 1.
FEOH (Sax.). A reward; wages; a fee. The word was in common use in these senses. Spelman, Feuds.

FERA BESTIA. Wild beasts.
FERA NATURA (Lat. of a wild navure ; nntamed). A term used to designate aninials not usually tamed, or not regarded as reclaimed so as to become the subjects of property.
2. Such animals belong to the person who has captured them only while they are in his power; for if they regain their liberty his property in them instantly ceases, unless they have animum revertendi, which is to be known only by their habit of returning. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 386; 3 Binn. Penn. 546 ; Brooke, Abr. Propertie, 37; Comyns, Dig. Biens, F; 7 Coke, 17 b; 1 Chitty, Pract. 87 ; Inst. 2. 1. 15 ; 13 Viuer, Abr. 207.
3. Property in animals ferce natures is not acquired by hunting them and pursuing them : if, therefore, another person kills such animal in the sight of the pursuer, he has a right to appropriate it to his own use. 3 Caines, N. Y. 175. But if the pursuer brings the animal within his own coutrol, as by entrapping it or wounding it mortally, so as to render escape impossible, it then belongs to him, id.; though if he abandons it another person may afterwards acquire property in the animal. 20 Johns. N. Y. 75. The owner of land has a qualified property in animals ferce naturce when, in consequence of their inability and youth, they cannot go away. See Year B. 12 II. VIII. ( 9 B, 10 A); 2 Blackstone, Comm. 394; Bacon, Abr. Game.

FERTA (Lat.). In Old English Law. A weekday; a holiday; a day on which process may not be served; a fair; a ferry. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 17.
ferife (Lat.). In Civil Law. Holidays. Numerous festivals were called by this name in the early Roman empire. In the later Roman empire the single days occurring at intervals of a week apart, commencing with the seventh day of the ecclesiastical year, were so called. DuCange.

FERIAL DAYS. Originally and properly, days free from labor and pleading.

In statute 27 Hen . VI. c. 5, working-days. Cowel.

FERME (Sax.). A farm; a rent; a lease; a house or land, or both, taken by indenture or lease. Plowd. 195; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Cowel. See Farm.

FERMER, FERMOR. A lessee; a farmer. One who holds a term, whether of lands or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

FERRIAGE. The toll or price paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry.
FERRY. A liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a reasonable toll. 42 Me. 9; 3 Zabr. N. J. 206; Woolrych, Ways, 217. The term is also used to designate the place where such liberty is exercised. 4 Mart. La. n. s. 426.
2. In England, ferries are established by royal grant or by prescription, which is an implied grant; in the United States, by legislative authority, exercised either directly or by a delegation of powers to courts, commissioners, or municipalities. 7 Pick. Mass. 344 ; 15 id. 243 ; 11 Pet. 420 ; 20 Conn. 218 ; 8 Me. 365 ; 18 Ark. 19. Without such authority no one, though he may be the owner of both banks of the river, has the rigbt to keep a public ferry, 3 Mo. 470; 13 Ill. 27; 6 Ga. 130; 11 Pet. 420 ; Willes, 508 ; though after twenty years' uninterrupted use such authority will be presumed to have heen granted. 2 Dev. No. C. 402 ; 1 Nott \& M'C. So. C. $389 ; 4$ Ill. 53; 7 Ga. 348. The franchise of a ferry will, in preference, be granted to the owner of the soil, but may be granted to another; and by virtue of the right of eminent domain the eoil of another may be condemned to the use of the ferry, upon making jnst compensation. 6 Barnew. $\mathbb{C} \mathrm{C} .703$; 5 Yerg. Tenn. $189 ; 7$ Humph. Tenn. 86; 2 Der. No. C. 403 ; 9 'Ga. 359 ; 6 Dan. Ky. 242 ; 8 Me. $365 ; 2$ Cal. 262. If the termini of the ferry be a highway, the owner of the fee will not be entitled to compensation, 3 Kent, Comm. 421, n.; 4 Zabr. N.J. 718; 7 Gratt. Va. 205; 1 T.B. Monr.Tenn. 348 ; though in Pennsylvania a different doctrine prevails. 1 Yeates, Penn. 167; 9 Serg. \& R. Penn. 31; 3 Watts, Penn. 219.
3. One state has the right to establish ferries over a navigable river separating it from another state or from a foreign territory, though its jurisdiction may extend only to the centre of such river; and the exercise of this right does not conflict with the provision in the constitution of the United States conferring upon congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states," nor with any law of congress upon that subject. 11 Wend. N. Y. 586 ; 3 Yerg. Tenn. 387; 3 Zabr. N. J. 206; 4 id. 718; 2 Gilm. Va. 197; 16 B. Monr. Ky. 699. A state may at its pleasure erect a new ferry so near an older ferry as to impair or destroy the value of the latter by drawing away its custom, unless the older franchise be protected by the terms of its grant. 15 Pick. Mass. 243 ; 6 Dan. Ky. 43 ; 9 Ga. 517 ; 6 How. 507; 16 id. 524 ; 7 III. 197; 13 id. 413 ; 1 La. Ann. 288; 10 Ála. N. s. $37 ; 25$ Wend. N. Y. 628. But if an individual, without authority from the state, erect a new ferry so near an older ferry, lawfully established, as to draw away the custom of the latter, such individual will be liable to an action on the case for damages, or to a suit in equity for an injunction in favor of the owner of the latter. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 219; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 234; 2 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 432; 3 Wend. N. Y. 618; 3 Ala. 211; 17 Ala. n.s. 584 ; 16 B. Monr. Ky. 699; 4 Jones, No. C. 277; 3 Murph. No. C. 57.
4. The franchise of a ferry is an incorporeal hereditament, and as such it descends to heirs, is subject to dower, may be leased, sold, and assigned, 5 Comyns, Dig. 291; 12 East, 334; 2 McLean, C. C. 376;3 Mo. 470 ; 7 Ala. n. s. $\check{5} 5$; 9 id. 529 ; but, nevertheless, being a franchise in which the public have rights and interests, it is subject to legislative regulation for the enforcement and protection of such rights and interests. 10 Barb. N. Y. 223 ; 4 Zabr. N. J. 718 ; 11 B. Monr. Ky. 361 ; 9 Mo. 560 .
5. The owners of ferries are common carriers, and liable as such for the carriage of the goods and persons which they receive upon their boats. They are bound to have their ferries furnished with suitable boats, and to be in readiness at all proper times to transport all who apply for a passage. 3 Mod. 289; 1 Salk. $12 ; 3$ Humphr. Tenn. 245 ; 3 Penn. St. $3 \pm 2$; 5 Mo. 36 ; 12 Ill. 344 ; 5 Cal. 360 ; 10 Mees. \& W. Exch. 161 ; 3 Ala. v.s. 392. They must have their flats so made and so guarded with railings that all drivers with horses and carriages may safely enter thereon; and as soon as the carriage and horses are fairly on the drops or slips of the flat, and during their transportation, although driven by the owner or his servant, they are in the possession of the ferryman, and the owners of the ferry are answerable for the loss or injury of the same, unless occasioned by the fault of the driver. 1 M Cord, So. C. $439 ; 16$ Eng. L. \& Eq. 437 ; 14 Tex. 290; 28 Miss. 792; 4 Ohio St. 722; 7 Cusb. Mass. 154. If, however, the ferry be rented, the tonant and not the owner is subject to these liabilities, because such tenant is pro hac vice the owner. 1 Ala. $366 ; 3$ id. 160 ; 12 Ired. No. C. $1 ; 26$ Barb. N. Y. 618; 22 Vt. 170. See Washburn, Easements.

FERRYMAN. One employed in taking persons across a river or other stream, in boats or other contrivances, at a ferry. 3 Ala. 160; 8 Dan. Ky. 158. A ferryman ought to be privileged from being pressed as a soldier or otherwise.

FESTING-MAN. A bondsman; a surety; a pledge; a frank-pledge. It was one privilege of monasteries that they should be free from festing-men, which Cowel explains to mean not to be bound for any man's forthcoming whe should transgress the law. Cowel.

FESTING-PENNY. Earnest given to servants when hired or retained. The same as arles-penny. Cowel.

FESTINUM REMEDIUM (Lat. a speedy remedy). A term applied to those cases where the remedy for the redress of an injury is given without any unnecessary delay. Bacon, Abr. Assise, A. The action of dower is festinum remedium, and so is that of assise. ferters. A sort of iron put on the leg of a malefactor or a person accused of crime.

When a prisoner is brought into ceurt to plead, he shall not be put in fetters. Coke, 2 d Inst. 315; Coke, 3d Inst. 34; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 119 ; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 28, s. 1; Kel. 10; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 417. An officer having arrested a defendant on a civil suit, or a person accused of a crime, has no right to handcuff him unless it is necessary or he has attempted to make his escape. 4 Barnew. & C. 596.
FEU. In Scotch Law. A holding or tenure where the vassal in place of military service makes his return in grain or money. Distinguished from wardholding, which is the military tenure of the country. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Intt. lib. ii. tit. 3, 87.
FEU ANNUALS. In Scotch Law. The reddendo, or annual return frem the vassal to a superior in a feu holding. Wharton, Dict. 2d Lond. ed.
FEU HOLDING. A bolding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service. Bell, Dict.
FEDD. Land held of a superior on condition of rendering him services. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 106.
A hereditary right to use lands, rendering services therefor to the lord, while the property in the land itself remains in the lord. Spelman, Feuds, c. 1.
The same as feod, fief, and fee. 1 Sullivan, Lect. 128; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 34; Dalrymple, Feud. 99 ; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 18.

In Scotland and the North of England, a combination of all the kin to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. Termes de la Ley; Whishaw.
FEUDA. Fees.
FEUDAL LAW, FEODAL LAW. A system of tenures of real property which prevailed in the countries of western Europe during the middle ages, arising from the peculiar political condition of those countries, and radically affecting the law of personal rights and of mopable property.
2. Although the feudal system has never obtained in this country, and is long since extinct throughout the greater part of Europe, some understanding of the theory of the system is essential to an accurate knowledge of the English constitution, and of the doctrines of the common law in respect to real property. The feudal tenure was a right to lands on the oondition of performing services and rendering allegiance to a superior lord. It hed ite origin in the militery immigrations of the Northmen, who overran the falling Roman empire. Many writers heve sought to trase the heginning of the system in earlier periods, and resemblances more or less distinct have been found in the tenures prevailing in the Roman republic and empire, in Turkey, in Hindostan, in ancient Tuscany, es well as in the system of Celtic olanship. Haliam, Mid. Ag. vol. 1; Stuart, Soc. in Europe; Robertson, Hist. of Charles V.; Pinkerton, Diss. on the Goths; Montesquieu, Esp. des Lois, livre xxx. e. 2; Meyer, Esprit, Origine et Progrès des Inst. judiciaires, tom. 1, p. 4.
3. But the origin of the feudal system is so obvieus in the cireumstsnces under which it arose, that perhaps there is no other connection between it and these earlier systems than that all are the outgrowth of politicel conditions somewhat similar. It has been seid that the system ie nothing more than the natursl fruit of conquest; hut the fact that the eonquest was hy immigrants, and that the conquerors made the acquired country their permanent abode, is sa important element in the case, and iu so far as other oonquests bave fallen short of this the militery tenures resulting bave fallen short of the feudal system. The military chieftains of the northern nstions allotted the lands of the countries they occupied smong themselves and their followers, with a view at once to strengthen their own power and asoendency and to provide for their followers.
Some lsnds were allotted to individusls as their own proper estates, and these were termed sllodial; but, for the most part, those lands which were not retained by the chieftain he assigned to his comites, or knights, to be held by his permission, in return for which they assured him of their allegiance and undertook for him military service.
4. It resnlted that there was a general dismemberment of the political power into many petty nations and petty sovercignties. The violenoe und disorders of the times rendered it neeessary hoth for the strong to seek followers and for the weak to seek a protecting allegisnce; and this operated on the one hand to lesd the vassals to divide again among their immediate retainers the lands which they had reeeived from the paramount lord, upou similar terms, and by this subinfeudation the number of fiefs was largely increased; and the same circumstances operated on the other band to absorb the allodial eststes by inducing allodial proprietors to surrender their lunds to some neighboring ohieftain and receive them agnin from him under feudal tenure. Every one who held lands upon a feudal tenure was hound, when enlled upon by his benefactor or immediate lord, to defend him, and sueh lord mas, in turn, subordinate to his superior, and bound to defend him, and so on upwnrds to the pursmount lord or king, who in theory of the law was the ultimate owner of all the lunds of the realm. The services which the vassale were bound to render to their lords were chiefly military; hut many other benefits were required, sueh as the power of the lord or the good will of the tenant would sanction.
5. This system came to its height upon the continent in the empire of Charlemagne and his suecessors. It was eompletely established in England in the time of William the Norman and William Rufus bis son; and the system thue established may be esid to be the fonndation of the English law of real property and the position of the landed aristooraoy, and of the oivil oonetitution of the realm. And when we reffect that in the middle ages resl property had a relative importance far beyond that of movable property, it is not sarprising that the system should have left its traces for a long time upon the law of personal re. lations and personal property. The feudal tenures were originally temporary, at the will of the lord, or from year to yesr; afterwards they came more commonly to be held for the life of the rassal; and gradually they sequired au inheritsble quality, the lord reoognizing the heir of the vassal $a s$ the vassal's suocessor in his service.
6. The chief incidents of the tenure by military service were-Aids,-a peeuniary tribute requircd by the lord in an emergency, e.g. a ransum for his person if taken prisonor, or money to make his son a knight or to marry bis daughter. Relieff,-the oonsideration which the lord demanded upon the death of a vassel for allowing the vassal's heir to succeed to the possession ; snd conneeted with this may be mentioned primer aeisin, which was the compensation that the lord demanded for having entered upon the land and protected the possession until the heir appeared to claim it. Fines upon alienation,-a consideration exacted by the lord for giving bis consent that the yassal should transfer the estate to another, who should gtand in hie place in respect to the services owed. Eseheat.-W here on the desth of the vassal there was no heir, the land reverted to the lord; also, where the rassal was guilty of treason; for the guilt of the vassal Was deemed to taint the hlood, aud the lord wonld no longer recognize him or his heirs. Wardehip and Maritage.- Where the beir was & minor, the lord, as in condition of permitting the estate to descend to one who could nut render militsry service, assumed the guardisnship of the heir, and, as such, exercised custody hoth of his person and of the property, without accounting for the profits, until the heir, if a male, was twenty-one and could undertake the military services, or, if n female, unil ehe was of a marriageable age, when on her marriage ber husband might render the services. The lord claimed, in virtue of his guardisnship, to make a suituble match for his ward, and if wards refused to comply they were muleted in damages.
7. Feudal tenures were abolished in England hy the ststute 12 Car. II. e. 24; but the principles of the system still remain at the foundation of the English and American liw of real property. Although in many of the states of the United States all lands are held to be allodial, it is the theory of the law that the ultimate right of property is in the state; and in most of the states escheat is regulated by statute. "The principles of the feudal system are so interwoven with every pert of our jurisprudence," says Ch. J. Tilghman, " that to attempt to eradicate them would be to destroy the whole." 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 447; 9 id. 333. "Though our property is allodial," says Cb. J. Gibson, "yet feudal tenures may be said to exist among us in their consequences nod the qualities which they originally imparted to estates: as, for instance, in preeluding every limitation founded on an abeynnce of the fee." 3 Watts, Penn. 71; 1 Whart. Penn. 337; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 188; 13 Penn. St. 35.
Many of these incidents are rapidly disappesring, however, by legislotive changes of the law.
8. The principles of the feudal law will he found in Littleton's Tenuree; Wright's Tenures; 2 Blackstone, Comm. e. 5; Dulrynple's Hist. of Feudal Property; Sullivan's Leetures; Book of Fiefs; Spelman's Treatise of Feuds and Tenures; Cruise's Digest ; Le Griand Coutumier; the Sulie Lnws; the Capitularies; Les Establissements de St. Louie; Assiee de Jérusalem ; Pothier, des Fiefs; Merlin, Rép. Fendalite; Dalloz, Diet. Fendalité; Guizot, Ensaig sur ${ }^{1}$ 'Histoire de France, Essai 5ème.
The principal original colleetion of the feudel law of oontinentel Earope is a digest of the twelfth century, Feudorum Consuetudines, which is the foundation of many of the subsequent compilations. The American student will porhaps find no more convenient source of information than Blackstone's Commentaries, Sharswood's ed. vol. 2, 43, and Greenleaf's Cruise, Dig. Introd.

FEUDUM. A feud, fief, or fee. A right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. Spelman, Gloss. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land. This form of the word is used by the feudal writers. The earlier English writers generally prefer the form feodum; but the meaning is the same.

Feudum antiquum. A fee descended from the tenant's ancestors. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 212. One which had been possessed by the relations of the tenant for four generations. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum apertum. A fee which the lord might enter upon and resume either through failure of issue of the tenant or any crime or legal cause on his part. Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Blackstone, Comm, 245.

Feudum francum. A free feud. One which was noble and free from talliage and other subsidies to which the plebeia feuda (vulgar feuds) were subject. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum hauberticum. A fee held on the military service of appearing fully armed at the ban and arriere ban. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum impraprium. A derivative fee.
Feudum individuum. A fee which could descend to the eldest son alone. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 215.

Feudum ligium. A liege fee. One where the tenant owed fealty to his lord against all other persons. Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 367.

Feudum maternum. A fee descending from the móther's side. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 212.

Feudum nobile. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum novum. One which began with the person of the feudatory, and did not come to him by descent.

Feudun novum ut antiquum. A new fee held with the qualities and incidents of an ancient one. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 212.

Feudum paternum. A fee which the paternal ancestors had held for four generations. Calvinus, Lex. ; Spelman, Gloss. One descendible to heirs on the paternal side only. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 223. One which might be held by males only. DuCange.

Feudum proprium. A genuine original feud or fee, of a military nature, in the hands of a military person. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 57.

Feudum talliatum. A restricted fee. One limited to descend to certain classes of heirs. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 112, n. ; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 66 ; Spelman, Gloss. See, generally, Le Grand Coutumier; Spelman, Feuds; DuCange; Calvinus, Lex.; Dalrymple, Feuds; Pothier, des Fiefs; Merlin, Répert. Feodalité.

FIANZA (Span.). Surety. The contract by which one person engages to pay the debt or fulfil the obligations of another if the lattes should fail to do so.

FIAR. In Scotch Law. One whose property is charged with a life-rent.

FIAT. An order of a judge or of an officer whose authority, to be signified by his signature, is necessary to authenticate the particular acts. A short order or warrant of the judge, commanding that something shall be done. See 1 Tidd, Pract. 100, 108.

FIAT IN BANKRUPTCY. An order of the lord chancellor that a commission of bankruptcy shall issue. 1 Deacon, Bank. 106.

Fiats are abolished by $12 & 13$ Vict. c. 116.
FICTION. The legal assumption that something which is or may be false is true.
2. The expedient of fictions is sometimes resorted to in law for the furtherance of justice. The lawmaking power has no need to resort to fictions; it may establish its rules with simple reference to the truth; but the courts, which are confined to the administration of existing rules, and which lack the power to change those rules, even in hard cases, have frequently avoided the injustice that their application to the aetual facts might cause, by assuming, in behalf of justice, that the actual facts are different from what they really are. Thus, in English law, where the administration of criminal justice is by prosecution at suit of the crown, the courts, rather than disregard the rules under which all other parties stand in respect to their neglect to appear and prosecute their suits, adopt the fiction that the king is legally ubiquitons and always in court, so that he can never be non-suited. Fictions are a singular illustration of the stahility and the justies of the common law, which did not hesitate to deny plain matters of fact, if that were the only way to avoid either violating the law or using the law against justice.
3. Fictionsare to be distinguished on the one hand from presumptions of law, and on the other hand from estoppels. A presumption is a rule of law prescribed for the purpose of getting at a certain conclusion, though arbitrary, where the subject is intrinsically liable to douht from the remoteness, diserepancy, or actual defect of proofs. Thus, an infant under the age of seven years is conclusively presumed to be without diseretion. Proof that he had discretion the court will not listen to. In the nature of the suhject, there must be a limit, which it is better should be a general though arbitrary one than be fluctuating and uncertain in each case. An estoppel, on the other band, is the rule by which a person is precluded from asserting a fact by previous conduct inconsistent therewith on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to question.
4. The familiar fictions of the civil law and of the earlier common law were very numerous; but the more useful of them have either been superseded by authorized changes in the law or have gradually grown as it were into distinct principles, forming exceptions or modifications of those principles to evade which they were at first contrived, As there is no just reason for resorting to indirection to do that which might be done directly, fictions are rapidly disappearing before the increasing barmony of our jurisprudence. See 4 Bentham, Ev. 300; 2 Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 43. But they have doubtless heen of great utility in conducing to the gradual amelioration of the law ; and, in this riew, fiction, equity, and legislation have been named together as the three methods of the improvement of the law.
5. Theoretical writers have classified fictions as of five sorts: abeyance, when the fee of land is supposed to exist for a time without any particular owner during an outstanding freehold estate, 2 Blackstone, Comm. 107; 1 Cruise, Dig. 67-70; Merlin, Rép. Abeyance; 1 Comyns, Dig. 175; 1 Viner, Abr. 104; the doctrine of remitter, by which a party who has been disseised of his freehold, and afterwards acquires a defective title, is remitted to his former good title; that one thing done to-day is considered as done at a preceding time by the doctrine of relation; that, because one thing is proved, another shall be presumed to be true, which is the case in all presumptions; that the heir, executor, and administrator stand by representation in place of the deceased. Again, they have been classified as of three kinds: positive, when a fact which does not exist is assumed; negative, when a fact which does exist is ignored; and fictions by relation, when the act of one person is taken as if it were the act of a different person,-e.g. that of a servant as the act of his master; when an act at one time or place is treated as if performed at a different time or place; and when an act in relation to a certain thing is treated as if it were done in relation to another thing which the former represents,-e.g. where delivery of a portion of goods sold is treated as giving possession of the whole. Best, Pres. 27.
6. Fictions being resorted to simply for the furtherance of justice, Coke, Litt. 150 ; 10 Coke, 42 ; 1 Price, Exch. 154 ; 1 Cowp. 177, several maxims are fundamental to them. First, that that which is impossible shall not be feigned. D'Aguesseau, QEuvres, tome iv. pp. 427,447 c, Plaidoyer; 2 Rolle, 502. Second, that no fiction shall be allowed to work an injury. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 43 ; 17 Johns. N. Y. 348. Third, a fiction is not to be carried further than the reasons which introduced it necessarily require. 1 Lilly, Abr. 610; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 320 ; Best, Pres. 820.

FICTITIOUS ACTION. A suit brought on pretence of a controversy when no such oontroversy in truth exists, Such actions have usually been brought on a pretended wager, for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law. Courts of justice were constituted for the purpose of deciding really existing questions of right between parties; and they are not bound to answer impertinent questions which persons think proper to ask them in the form of an action on a wager, 12 East, 248. Such an attempt has been held to be a contempt of court ; and Lord Hardwicke in such a case committed the parties and their attorneys. Rep. temp. Hardw. 237. See, also, Comb. 425 ; 1 Coke, 83 ; 6 Cranch, 147, 148. See, also, Feigned Actions.

FICTITIOUS PARTY. Where a suit is brought in the name of one who is not in being, or of one who is ignorant of the suit and has not authorized it, it is said to be brought in the name of a fictitious plaintiff. To bring such a suit is deemed a contempt of court. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 133.

FICTITIOUS PAYED. When a contract, such as negotiable paper, is drawn in favor of a fictitious person, and has been indorsed in such name, it is deemed payable to bearer as against all parties who are priyy to the transaction; and a holder in good faith may recover on it against them. 2 H . Blackst. 178, 288 ; 3 Term, 174, 182, 481; 1 Camph. 130; 19 Ves. Ch. 311. And see 10 Barnew. & C. 468 ; 2 Sandf. N. Y. 38 ; 2 Du. N. Y. 121.

FIDEI-COMMISSARIUS (L. Lat.); In Civil Law. One who has a bencficial interest in an estate which, for a time, is committed to the faith or trust of another. This term has nearly the same meaning as cestui que trust has in the common law. 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 295 ; Story, Eq. Jur. & 966; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

Fidei-commissary and fide-commissary, anglicized forms of this term, have been proposed to take the place of the phrase cestui que trust, but do not seem to have met with any favor.

According to DuCange, the term was sometimes used to denote the executor of a will.

FIDEI-COMMISSUM (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. A trust. A devise was made to some person (heres fiduciarius), and a request annexed that he should give the property to some one who was incapable of taking directly under the will. Inst. 2. 23. 1; 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, Dig. 295; 15 How. 357. A gift which a man makes to another through the agency of a third person, who is requested to perform the will of the giver.
2. The rights of the beneficiary were merely rights in curtesy, to be obtained by entreaty or request. Under Augustus, however, a system was commenced, which was completed by Justinian, for enforcing such trusts. The trustee or executor was called hares fiduciarius, and sometimes fide-jussor. The beneficial heir was called harcs fidei-commissarius.
3. The uses of the common law are said to have been borrowed from the Roman fideicommissa. 1 Greenleaf, Cruise, 295; Bacon, Read. 19 ; 1 Madd. Ch. 446 ; Story, Eq. Jur. \% 966. The fidei-commissa are supposed to have been the origin of the common-law system of entails. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 21 ; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 60. This has been doubted by others. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1708.

FIDE-JUSSIO. An act by which any one binds himself as an additional security for another. This giving security does not destroy the liability of the principal, but adds to the security of the surety. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Hallifax, Annals, b. 2, c. 16, n. 10.

FIDE-JUSSOR. In Civil Law. One who becomes security for the debt of another, promising to pay it in case the principal does not do so.
He differs from a oo-obligor in this, that the latter is equally bound to a debtor with his prinoipal, while the former is not liable till the prinoipal has failed to fulfil his engagement. Dig. 12. 4. 4 ; 16. 1. 13 ; 24. 3. 64 ; 38.1 .37 ; 50. 17. 110 ; 6. 14 . 20; Hall, Pract. 33; Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 300; Clerke, Prax. tit. 63-65.
The obligation of the fide-jussor was an accessory contract; for, if the principal obligation was not previously coutracted, his engagement then took the name of mandate. Lę̧. Elém. ̧̨ 872; Code Nap. 2012.
FIDUCIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A contract by which we sell a thing to some onethat is, transmit to him the property of the thing, with the solemn forms of emancipation -on condition that he will sell it back to us. This species of contract took place in the emancipation of children, in testaments, and in pledges. Pothier, Pand.
FIDUCIARY. This term is borrowed from the civil law. The Roman laws called a fiduciary heir the person who was instituted heir, and who was charged to deliver the succession to a person designated by the testament. Merlin, Répert. But Pothier, Pand. vol. 22, says that fiduciarius hereres properly signifies the person to whom a testator has sold his inheritance under the condition that he should sell it to another. Fiduciary may be defined in trust, in confidence.

FIDUCIARY CONTRACT. An agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another on the condition that he will restore it to him. The following formula was employed: Ut inter bonos agere oportet, ne propter te fidemque tuam frauda. Cicero, de Offic. lib. 3, cap. 13; Leę. du Dr. Civ. Rom. 38237, 238. See 2 How. 202, 208; 6 Watts & S. Penn. 18; 7 Watts, Penn. 415.

FIEf. A fee, feod, or feud.
FIEF D'HAUBERK. A fee held on the military tenure of appearing fully armed on the ban and arriere-ban. Feudum hauberticum. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex. ; DuCange. A knight's fee. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 62.
fief tenant. The holder of a fief or fee.
figl. In Spanish Law. An officer who keeps possession of a thing deposited under authority of law. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 9, 1. 1.

FIELDAD. In Spanish Law. Sequestration. This is allowed in six cases by the Spanish law where the title to property is in dispute. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 3, 1. 1. fierding courts. Ancient Gothic courts "in the lowest instance:" so called because four were instituted within every superior district or hundred. Their jurisdiction was limited within forty shillings, or three marks. 3 Stephen, Comm. 393; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 34; Stiernhook, De Jure Goth. i. 1, c. 2.

FIERI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be made). In Practice. A writ directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the goods and chattels of the judgment-debtor the sum or debt recovered.
It receives its name from the Latin words in the writ (used when legal proceedings were conducted in Latin (quod fieri facius de bonis et catallis, that you csuse to be made of the goods and chattels). It is the form of execution in common use where the judgment-debtor has personal property.
2. The foundation of this writ is a judgment for debt or damages; and the party who has recovered such a judgment is generally entitled to it, unless he is delayed ly the stay of execution which the law allows in certain cases after the rendition of the judgment, or by proceedings in error.
3. The writ is issued in the name of the commonwealth or of the government, as required by the constitution, and directed to the sheriff, commanding him that of the goods and chattels and (where lands are liable for the payment of debts) of the lands and tenements of the defendant, therein named, in his bailiwick, he cause to be levied as well a certain debt of - dollars, which the plaintiff (naming him), in the court of (naming it), recovered against him, as - - dollars, like money, which to the said plaintiff were adjudged for his damages which he had by the detention of that debt, and that he (the sheriff) have that money before the judges of the said court, on a day certain (being the return-day therein mentioned), to render to the said plaintiff his debt and damages aforesaid, whereof the said defendant is convict. It must be tested in the name of the officer, as directed by the constitution or laws, as of some day during the term, 2 Caines, N . Y. 81 : as, "Witness the honorable John B. Gilson, our chief justice, at Philadelphia, the tenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight." It must be signed by the prothonotary or clerk of the court, and sealed with its seal. The amount of the debt, interest, and costs must also be indorsed on the writ. This form varies as it is issued on a judgment in debt, or on one obtained for damages merely.
4. The execution, being founded on the judgment, must, of course, follow and be warranted by it. 2 Saund. $72 \mathrm{~h}, \mathrm{k}$; Bingham, Ex. 186; 2 Cow. N. Y. 454. Hence, where there is more than one plaintiff or defendant, it must be in the name of all the plaintiffs against all the defendants. 6 Term, 525 . It is either for the plaintiff or the defendant. When it is against an executor or administrator for a liability of the testator or intestate, it is conformable to the judgment, and must be only against the goods of the deceased, unless the defendant has made himself personally liable by his false pleading, in which case the judgment is de bonis testatoris si, et si non, de bonis propriis. 1 Serg. \& R. Penn. 453; 4 id. 394 ; 18 Johns. N. Y. 502; 1 Hayw. No. C. 598; ' 2 id. 112.
5. At common law, the writ bound the goods of the defendant or party against whom it was issued, from the toste day; by which is to be understood that the writ bound the property against the party himself, and all claiming by assignment from or by representation under him, 4 East, 538: so that a sale by the defendant of his goods to a bona $\hat{a}$ fide purchaser did not protect them from a fieri facias tested before, although not issued or delivered to the sheriff till atter, the sale, Croke Eliz. 174; Croke Jac. 451; 1 Sid. 271; but by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3 , \& 16, it was enacted "that no writ of fieri facias, or other writ of execution, shall bind the property of the goods of the party against whom such writ of execution is sued forth, but from the time that such writ shall be delivered to the sheriff, under-sheriff, or coroners, to be executed; and for the better manifestation of the said time, the sheriffs, etc., their deputies or agents, shall, upon the receipt of any such writ (without fee for doing the same), indorse upon the back thereof the day of the month and year whereon he or they received the same;" and the same or similar provisions have been enacted in most of the state $\rightarrow$ of the Unite 1 States. 2 Serg. \& R. Penn. 157 ; 1 Whart. Penn. 377; 8 Johns. N. Y. 446; 12 id. 320; 3 Harr. Del. 512.
6. The execution of the writ is made by levying upon the goods and chattels. of the defendant or party against whom it is issued; and, in general, seizing a part of the goods in the name of the whole on the premises is a good seizure of the whole. 1 Ld. Raym. 725; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 142; 4 Wash. C. C. 29; 1 Munf. Va. 209; 2 Hill, N. Y. 666; 5 Ired. No. C. 192; 7 Ala. n. s. 619. But see 1 Whart. Penn. 377 ; 6 Halst. N. J. 218. It may be executed at any time before and on the returnday, 13 Tex. 507 , but not on Sunday, where it is forbidden by statute. Watson, Sher. 173; 5 Coke, 92; Comyns, Dig. Execution, C 5.
\%. The sheriff cannot break the outer door of a house for the purpose of executing a fieri facias, 5 Coke, 92, nor unlatch an outer door, 4 Hill, N. Y. 437 ; nor can a window be broken for this purpose. W. Joness, 429. He may, however, enter the house, if it be open, and, being once lawfully entered, he may break open an inner door or chest to seize the goods of the defendant, even without any request to open them. 4 Taunt. 619; 3 Bos. & P. 223; Cowp. 1. Although the sheriff is authorized to enter the loouse of the party to search for goods, he cannot enter that of a stranger for that purpose, without being guilty of a trespass, unless the defendant's goods are actually in the house. Comyns, Dig. Exceution (C 5); 1 Marsh. 565. The sheriff may break the outer door of a barn, 1 Sid. 186; 1 Kebl. 689, or of a store disconnected with the dwellinghouse and forming no part of the curtilage. 16 Johns. N. Y. 287.
8. At common law a fi. fa. did not authorize a sheriff to seize bank-bills, checks, or promissory notes; but it is utherwise now, by stat. $1 \& 2$ Vict. c. $110, \ell_{8} 12$ and $3 \& 4$ Vict. c. 82; and this statute law is equivalent to the law of many of the United States. 2 Va . Cas. 246; 1 Bail. So. C. 39 ; 14 Conn. 99 ; 1 Hempst. Ark. $91 ; 29$ Penn. St. 240 . Among the things which may be taken on a fi. fa. are growing corn, 2 Dan. Ky. 205; 2 Rawle, Penn. 161; standing timber, 4 Zabr. N.J. 150 ; spirituous liquors, 30 Vt. 436 ; 33 N. H. 441 ; pianos. 30 Vt .224.

FIERI FECI (L. Lat.). In Practice. The return which the sheriff or other proper ufficer makes to certain writs, signifying, "I have caused to be made."

When the officer has made this return, a rule may be obtained upon him after the return-day, to pay the money into court, and, if he withholds payment, an action of debt may be had on the return, or assumpsit for money had and received may be sustained against him. 3 Johns. N. Y. 183.
FIFTEENTHS. A temporary aid, consisting of a fifteenth part of the personal property in every township, borough, and city in the kingdom. The valuation of the kingdom was fixed and a record made in the exchequer of the amount (twenty-nine thousand pounds). This valuation was not increased as the property in the kingdom increased in value; whence the name csme in time to be a great misnomer. Coke, 2d Inst. 77; Coke, 4th Inst. 34; 2Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 309 ; Cowel.
FIGHTNITE (Sax.). A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. Called also by Cowel forisfactura pugnce. The amount was one hundred and twenty shillings. Cowel.
FIGURES. Numerals. They are either Roman, made with letters of the alphabet: for example, mpcclxivi; or they are Arabic, as follows: 1776.
2. Roman figures may be used in contracts and law proceedings, and they will be held valid; but Arabic figures, probably owing to the ease with which they may be counterfeited or altered, have been holden not to be sufficient to express the sum due on a contract; but it seems that if the amount payable and due on a promissory note be expressed in figures or ciphers, it will be valid. Story, Bills, $z 42$, note ; Story, Prom. Notes, $z^{2} 21$.
3. Figures to express numbers are not allowable in indictments; but all numbers must be expressed in words at length, except in setting forth a copy of a written instrument. And complaints are governed by the same rule in cases over which magistrates have final jurisdiction. But the decisions on this point are not uniform. And in most of them the proper distinction between the use of figures in the caption and in the body of an indictment has not been observed. In America, perhaps the weight of authority is contrary to the law as above stated. But, at all events, a contrary practice is unclerical, uncertain, and liable to alteration; and the courts which have sustained such practice have uniformly cautioned against it. See 13 Viner, Abr. 210; 1 Chit. 319.
4. Bills of exchange, promissory notes, checks, and agreements of every description are usually dated with Arabic figures: it is, however, better to date deeds and other formal instruments by writing the words at length. See 5 Toullier, n. 336; 4 Yeates, Penn. 278; 2 Johns. N. Y. 233; 2 Miss. 256: 6 Blackf. Ind. 533; 1 Vt. 336.

FILACER. An officer of the common pleas, whove duty it was to file the writs on which he made process. There were fourteen of them; and it was their duty to make out all original process. Cowel; Blount. The office is now abolished.

FILE. A thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe keeping and ready turning to the same. Spelman, Gloss. ; Cowel ; Tlomlin, Law Dict. Papers put together and tied in bundles. A paper is said also to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer and by him received to be kept on file. 13 Viner, Abr. 211 ; 1 Littleton, 113; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 7, 207.

Filiate. To declare whose child a bastard is. 2 W. Blackst. 1017.

FILIATION. In Civil Law. The descent of son or daughter, with regard to his or her father, mother, and their ancestors.

Nature always points out the mother by evident signs, and, whether married or not, she is always -ertain: mater eemper certa est, etiamei vulgo conceperit. There is not the same certainty with regard to the futher, and the relation may not know or may feign ignorance as to the paternity; the law has therefore established a legal presumption to serve as a foundation for paternity and filiation.
2. When the mother is or has been married, her husband is presumed to be the father of the children born during the coverture, or within a competent time afterwards, whether they were conceived during the coverture or not: pater is est quem nuptice demonstrant.

This rule is founded on two presumptions: one on the cohabitation before the birth of the child; and the other that the mother has faithfully observed the vow she made to her husband.
3. This presumption may, however, be rebutted by showing either that there has been no cohabitation, or some physical or other impossibility that the husband could be the father. See Access; Bastard; Gestation; Natural Children; Paternity; Putative Father. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 302 et seq.

FILIUS (Lat.). A son. A child.
As distinguished from heir, flitius is a term of nature, heree a term of law. 1 Powell, Dev. 311. In the civil law the term was used to denote a child generally. Calvinus, Lex.; Vioat, Voo. Jur. Its use in the phrase nulling filius would seem to indicate a use in the sense of legitimate son, a bastard being the legitimate sen of nobody; though the word is usually rendered a son, whether legitimate or illegitimate. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FILIUS FAMILIAS (Lat.). A son who is under the control and power of his father. Story, Confl. Laws z 61; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FIIIUS MULIERATUS (Lat.). The first legitimate son horn to a woman who has had a bastard son by her busband before her marriage. Called, also, mulier, and mulier puisne. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 248.
FILIUS NULLIUS (Lat. son of nobody). A bastard. Called, also, filius populi (son of the peuple). 1 Blackstone, Comm. 459; 6 Coke, 65 a.
FILIUS POPULI (Lat.). A son of the people; a bastard.

FIIUM AQU $\boldsymbol{\pi}$ (Lat. a thread of water). This may mean either the middle line or the outer line. Altum filum denotes high-water mark. Blount. Filum is, however, used almost universally in connection with aquo to denote the middle line of a stream. Medium filum is sometimes used with no additional meaning. See 4 Pick. Mass. 468; 24 id. 344 ; 3 Caines, N. Y. 319 ; 6 Cow. N. Y. 579; 5 Wend. N. Y. 423 ; 26 Wend. N. Y. 404; 20 Johns. N. Y. 91 ; 4 IIIIl, N. Y. 369 ; 4 Mas. C. C. 397 ; 2 N. H. 369 ; 1 Halst. N. FILUM FOREST $\boldsymbol{T}$ (Lat.). The border of the forest. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 419; 4 Inst. 303 ; Manw. Purlieu.
FILUM VIA (Lat.). The middle line of the way. 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 98.

FIN DE NON RECEVOIR. In French Law. An exception or plea tunded on law, which without entering into the merits of the action shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it, either because the time during which it ought to have been brought has elapsed, which is called prescription, or that there has been a compromise, accord and satisfaction, or any other cause which has destroyed the right of action which once subsisted. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 1, c. 2, s. 2, art. 2; Story, Confl. Laws, & 580.

FINAL DECREE. A decree which finally disposes of the whole question, so that nothing further is left for the court to adjudicate upon. See 2 Daniell, Chanc. Pract. Perkins ed. 1199, n.
A decree which terminates all litigation on the same right. 1 Kent, Comm. 316 .
A decree which disposes ultimately of the suit. Adams, Eq. 375. After such decree has been pronounced, the cause is at an end, and no further hearing can be had. Adams, Eq. 388.
FINAL JUDGMENT. A judgment which puts an end to the action by declaring that the plaintiff has either entitled himself, or has not, to recover the remedy he sues for. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 398. A judgment which determines a particular cause and terminates all litigation on the same right. 1 Kent, Comm. 316 A judgment which cannot be appealed from, lut is perfectly conclusive as to the matter adjudicated upon. 24 Pick Mass. 300; 2 Pet. 294; 6 How 201, 209.

FINAL PROCESS. Writs of execution. So called to distinguish them from mesne process, which includes all process issuing before judgment rendered.

FINAL SENTENCE. One which puts an end to a case. Distinguished from interlocutory. See Sentence.

FINALIS CONCORDIA (Lat.). A decisive agreement. A fine. A final agreement.

A final agreement entered by the parties by permission of court in a suit actually brought for lands. Subsequently the bringing suit, entry of agreement, etc. became merely formal, but its entry upon record gave a firm title to the plaintiff. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 70; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 143; 2 Flintoff, Real Prop. 673; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 689.

Finis est amicabilis compositio et finalis concordia ex consensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum (a fine is an emicable settlement and decisive agrcement hy consent and agreament of our lord the king or his justices). Glanville, lih. 8, c. 1.

Talis concordia finalis dicitur eo quod finem imposuit negotio, adeo ut neutra purs litigantium ab eo de cetero poterit recidere (such concerd is called final hecause it puts an end to the hueiness, so that neither of the litigants can afterwarde recede from it). Glanville, lih. 9, c. 3 ; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FINANCES. The public revenue or resources of a government or state. The income or means of an individual or corporation. It is somewhat like the fiscus of the Romans. The word is generally used in the plural.

Money resources generally. The state of the finances of an individual or corporation, being his condition in a monetary point of view. The cash be has on hand, and that which he expects to receive, as compared with the engagements he has made to pay.

FINANCIER, FINANCIAN. One who manages the finances or public revenue. Yersons skilled in matters appertaining to the judicious management of money affairs.

FINDER. One who lawfully comes to the possession of another's personal property, which was then lost.
2. The finder is entitled to certain rights, and liable to duties which he is obliged to perform. This is a species of deposit, which, as it does not arise ex contractu, may be called a quasi deposit; and it is governed by the same general rules as common deposits. The finder is required to take the same reasonable care of the property found as any voluntary depositary ex contractu. Doctor & Stud. Dial. 2, c. 38 ; 2 Bulstr. 306, 312 ; 1 Rolle, 125.
3. The finder is not bound to take the goods he finds ; yet, when be does undertake the custody, he is required to exercise reasonable diligence in preserving the property; and he will be responsible for gross negligence. Some of the old authorities laid down that "if a man find butter, and by his negligent keeping it putrefy, or if a man find garments, and by bis negligent keeping they be moth-eaten, no action lies." So it is if a man finds goods and lose them again. Bacon, Abr. Bailment, D; and in support of this position Leon. 123, 223 ; Ow. 141 ; 2 Bulstr. 21, are cited. But these cases, if carefully examined, will not, perhaps, be found to decide the point as broadly as it is stated in Bacon. A finder would doubtless be held responsible for grose negligence.
4. On the other hand, the finder of an article is entitled to recover all expenses which have necessarily occurred in preserving the thing found: as, if a man were to find an animal, he would be entitled to he reimbursed for its keeping, for advertising in a reasonable manner that he had found it, and to any reward which may have been offered by the owner for the recovery of such lost thing. Domat, 1. 2, t. 9, s. 2, n. 2. See Story, Bailm. 835.

And when the owner does not reclaim the goods lost, they belong to the finder. 1 Blackstone, Comm. $296 ; 2$ id. $9 ; 2$ Kent, Comm. 290. The acquisition of treasure by the finder is evidently founded on the rule that what belongs to none naturally becomes the property of the first occupant: res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis.
5. As to the criminal responsibility of the finder, the result of the authorities is that if a man finds goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them, with intent to take the entire dominion over them, really believing when he takes them that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny; but if he takes them with the like intent, though lost or reasonably supposed to be lost, but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny. 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 335, 387; 2 id. $353 ; 2$ Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 18 ; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 580 ; Bell, Cr. Cas. 27 ; 2 Carr. & K. 841 ; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 117 ; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 623 ; 1 Hill, N. Y. 94 ; 22 Conn, 153. In Regina v. Thurborn, Parke, B., observes that it cannot be doubted that if, at this day, the punishment of death was assigned to theft and usually carried into effect, the misappropriation of lost goods would never be held to constitute that offence. See Taking.

FINDING. The result of the deliherations of a jury or a court. 1 Day, Conn. 238; 2 id. 12.

FINE. In Conveyancing. An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Coke, Litt. 120; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 349 ; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Recoveries.

A fine is se called because it putsan end not only to the suit thus commenced, hat also to all cther suits and controversies concerning the same matter. Such concords, eays Doddridge (Eng. Lawyer, 84, 85), have been in use in the ciril law, and are oslled transuctions, whereof they eay thus: Transactionce sunt de eis que in controversia sunt, a lite futura aut pendente ad certam compositionem reducuntur, danda aliquid vel accipiendo. Or shorter, thus: Transactio est de re dubia et lite ancipite ne dum ad finem ducta, non gratuita pactio. It is commonly defined an assurance by matter of record, and is fonnded upon a supposed previously existing right, and upon a writ requiring the party to perform his covenant; although a fine may be levied upon any writ by which lands may be demanded, charged, or bound. It has also been defined an acknowledgment on reoord of a previous gift or feoffment, and primá facie carries a fee, although it may he limited to an estate for life or in fee-tail. Preston, Conv. 200, 202, 268, 269; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 348, 349.
3. The stat. 18 Edw. I., called modus levandi fines, deolares and regulates the manner in which they should be levied and carried on; and that is as follows. The party to whom the land is conveyed or assured commences an action at law against the other, generally an action of covenant, by suing out a writ of prrecipe, called a writ of covenant, that the one shall convey the lands to the other, on the breach of which agreement the action is brought. The suit being thus commenced, then follows the licentia concordandi, or leave to compromise the suit. The concord, or agreement itself, after leave obtained by the court: this is usually an acknowledgment from the deforciants that the lands in question arc the lands of the complainants. Tho note of the fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord ; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement. The foot of the fine, or the conclusion of it, whioh includes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. See Cruise, Fines; Bacon Abr. Fines and Recoveries; Comyns, Dig. Fine.

In Criminal Law. Pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribnnal upon a person convicted of crime or misdemeanor. See Sheppard, Tonchst. 2; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Amercements.
4. The amount of the fine is frequently left to the discretion of the court, who ought to proportion the fine to the offence. To prevent the abuse of excessive fines, the constitution of the United States directs that "excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." Amendm. to the Constitution, art. 8.

FINE FOR ALIENATION. A sum of money which a tenant by knight's service, or a tenant in capite by socage tenure, paid to his lord for permission to alienate his right in the estate he held to another, and by that means to substitute a new tenant for himself. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 71, 89. These fines are now abolished. In France, a similar demand from the tenant, made by the lord when the former alienated his estate, was called lods et vente. This imposition was abolished, with nearly every other feudal right, by the French revolution.

FINE SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT COME CEO QUE IL AD DE SON DONE. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. By this the deforciant acknowledges in court a former feoffment or gift in possession to have been made by him to the plaintiff. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 352; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Sheppard, Touchst. c. 2; Comyns, Dig. Fine.

FINE SUR COGNIZANCE DE

 DROIT TANTUM. A tine upun acknow ledgment of the right merely. Generally used to pass a reversionary interest which is in the cognizor. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 351: Jacob, Law Dict. ; Comyns, Dig.FINE SUR CONCESSIT. A fine granted where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, thongh he acknowledges no precedent right, yet grants to the consignee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of a supposed composition. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 353 ; Sheppard, Tonchst. c. 2.

FINE SUR DONE GRANT ET
RENDER. A double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo and the fine sur concessit. It may be used to convey particular limitations of estates and to persons who are strangers or not named in the writ of covenant; whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc. conveys nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance, or at least freehold. Salk. 340 . In this last species of fines the cognizee, after the right is acknowledged to be in him, grants back again or renders to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 353; Viner, Abr. Fine; Comyns, Dig. Fine; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 33.

FINE-FORCE. An absolute necessity or inevitable constraint. Old Nat. Brev. 78 ; Perkins, 321 ; Plowd. 94 ; 6 Coke, 11 ; Cowel.

FINE AND RECOVERY ACT. The statute $3 & 4$ Will. IV. c. 74. This act abolished fines and recoveries. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 364, n.; 1 Stephen, Comm. 514.

FINEM FACERE (Lat.). To make or pay a fine. Bracton, 106 ; Skene.

FINES LE ROY. In Old English Law. A sum of money which any one is to pay the king for any contempt or offence; which fine any one that commits any trespass, or is convict that he falsely denies his own deed, or did any thing in contempt of the law, shall pay to the king. Termes de la Ley; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FINIUM REGUNDORUM ACTIO. In Civil Law. An action for regulating boundaries. 1 Mackeldy, Civ. Law, $& 271$.

FIRDNITE (Sax.). A mulet or penalty imposed on military tenants for their default in not appearing in arms or coming to an expedition. Cowel. A penalty imposed for murder committed in the army. Cowel.

FIRDSOCNE (Sax.). Exemption from military service. Spelman, Gloss.

FIRE. The effect of combustion. Webster, Dict.

The legal sense of the word is the same as the popular. 1 Parsons, Marit. Law. 231 et seq.
2. Fire is not a peril of the sea. In Scotch law, however, fire is an inevitable accident Bell Dict.

Whether a fire arises purely by accident, or from any other cause, when it becomes uncontrollable and dangerous to the public, a man may, in general, justify the destruction of a house on fire for the protection of the neighborhood; for the maxim salus populi est suprema lex applies in such case. 11 Coke, 13. See Accident; Act of God; 3 Wms. Saund. $422 a$, note 2; 3 Coke, Litt. 57 a, n. 1; Hammond, Nisi P. 171; 1 Cruise, Dig. 151, 152; 1 Viner, Abr. 215 ; 1 Rolle, Abr. 1; Bacon, Abr. Action on the Case, F; 2 Lois des Bâtim. 124; Newland, Contr. 323 ; 1 Term, 310; 6 id. 489; Ambl. 619.
3. When real estate is let, and the tenant covenants to pay the rent during the term, unless there are proper exceptions to such covenants, and the premises are afterwards destroyed by fire during the term, the rent must be paid although there be no enjoyment; for the common rule prevails, res perit domino. The tenant, by the accident, loses his term; the landlord, the residence. Story, Eq. Jur. & 102.
FIRE AND SWORD. Letters of fire and sword were the ancient means for dispossessing a tenant who retained possession contrary to the order of the judge and diligence of the law. They were directed to the sheriff, and ordered him to call the assistance of the county to dispossess the tenant. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. lib. iv. tit. 3, z 17.
FIREBOTE. An allowance of wood or estoves to maintain competent firing for the tenant. A sufficient allowance of wood to burn in a house. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 99. Tenant for life or years is entitled to it. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 35. Cutting more than is needed for present use is waste. 3 Dane, Abr. 238; 8 Pick. Mass. 312-315; Croke Eliz. 593 ; 7 Bingh. 640. The rules in Englaud and in this country are different in relation to the kind of trees which the tenant may cut. 11 Metc. Mass. 504; 7 Pick. Mass. 152; 7 Johns. N. Y. 227 ; 6 Barb. N. Y. 9 ; 2 Zabr. N. J. 521 ; 2 Ohio St. 180; 13 Penn. St. 438 ; 3 Leon. 16.
FIRKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to nine gallons. The word firkin is also used to designate a weight, used for butter and cheese, of fifty-six pounds avoirdupois.

FIRM. The persons composing a partnership, taken collectively.

The name or title under which the nembers of a partnership transact business.

The word is used as synonymous with partnership. The words "houso," "concern," and "company" are also used in the same sense. This name is in point of law conventional, and applicable only to the persons who, on cach particular occasion when the name is used, are members of the firm. A firm is usually described, in legal proceedings, as certain persons trading or carrying on husiness under and using the name, style, and firm of, etc. See 9 Q. B. 361 ; 9 Mees. & W. Exch. 347 ; 1 Chitt. Bail. 49.
2. It may be that the names of all the members of the partnership appear in the name or style of the firm, or that the names of only a part appear, with the addition of
"and company," or other words indicating a participation of others, as partners, in the business, 16 Pick. Mass. 428, 429, or that the name of only one of the partners, without such addition, is the name of the firm. It sometimes happens that the name of neither of the partners appears in the style of the firm.
The proper style of the firm is frequently agreed upon in the partnership articles; and where this is the case, it becomes the duty of every partmer, in signing papers for the firm, to employ the exact name agreed upon. Collyer, Partn. 8215 ; Story, Partn. 8202 . This may be necessary, not only to bind the firm itself, Story, Partn. z 102, but also to prevent the partner signing from incurring a personal liability both to third persons and to his copartners. Collyer, Partn. 8215 ; Story, Partn. ${ }_{8} 8202,202$; 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 268 ; 11 Ad. & E. 339; Pothier, Partn. nn. 100, 101.
3. So, the name which a partnership assume, recognize, and publicly use becomes the legitimate name and style of the firm, not less so than if it had been adopted by the articles of copartnership, 2 Pet. 186, 198; and a partner has no implied authority to bind the firm by any other than the firm name thus acquired. 9 Mees. & W. Exch. 284. Wherefore, where a firm consisted of $J$ B & C H, the partnership name being $J$ B only, and C H accepted a bill in the name of "J B & Co.," it was held that J B was not bound thereby. 9 Mees. & W. Exch. 284. See Dav. Dist. Ct. 325.
4. If the firm have no fixed name, a signing by onc, in the name of himself and company, will bind the partnership, 2 Ohin, 61 ; and a note in the name of one, and signed by him "For the firm, etc.," will bind the company. 5 Blackf. Ind. 99. Where the business of a firm is to be carried on in the name of B & D, a signature of a note by the names and surnames of the respective parties is a sufficient signature to charge the partnership. 3 C. B. 792. Where a written contract is made in the name of one, and another is a secret partner with him, both may be sued upon it. 2 Ala. 134; 5 Watts, Penn. 454.
5. Where partners agree that their business shall be conducted in the name of one person, whether himself interested in the partnership business or not, that is the partnership name, and the partners are bound by it. 6 Hill, N. Y. 322 ; 1 Den. N. Y. 405, 471, 481. Where that name is the name of one of the partners, and he does business also on his own private account, a contract signed by that name will not bind the firm, unless it appears to have been entered into for the firm ; but, if there be no proof that the contract was made for the firm, the presumption will be that it was made by the partner on his own separate account, and the firm will not be responsible. Story, Partn. & 139; Collyer, Partn. 8411 and note ; 5 Pick. Mass. 11; 9 id. 274; 1 Du. N. Y. 405 ; 17 Serg. & R. Penn. 165; 5 Mas. C. C. 176; 5 Pet. 529; 2 Bouvier, Inst. .. 1442 et seq. See Partners; Partnershlp.
5. The name of the firm should be distinct from the names of all other firms. When there is confusion in this respect, the partners composing one firm may, in some cases, be made responsible for the debts of another. See Peake, Cas. 80; 7 East, 210; 2 Bell, Comm, 5 th ed. $670 ; 3$ Mart. La. n.s. 39. As to the right of a surviving partner to carry on the business in the name of the firm, see 7 Sim. Ch. 127; Story, Partn. 8 100, note; Collyer, Partn. 8 162, note.

Merchants and lawyers have different notions respecting the nature of a firm. Merchants are in the habit of looking upon a firm as a body distinct from the members composing it. Cory, Accounts, 2d ed.; Lindley, Partn. c. vii. p. 163. The law looks to the partners themselves; any change among them destroys the identity of the firm; what is called the property of the firm is their property, and what are called the debts and liabilities of the firm are their debts and their liabilities. In point of law, a partner may be the debtor or creditor of his copartners; but he cannot be either debtor or creditor of the firm of which he is himself a member. 4 Mylne & C. Ch. 171, 172.
r. A firm can neither sue nor be sued, otherwise than in the name of the partners composing it. Consequently, no action can be bronght by the firm against one of its partners, nor by one of its partners against it; for in any such action one person at lcast would appear both as plaintiff and defendant, and it is considered absurd for any person to sue himself, even in form. 1 Barnew. & Ald. 664; 4 Myine & C. Ch. 171, 172; 6 Taunt. 598; 6 Pick. Mass. 320, 321 ; 5 Gill & J. Md. 487; Collyer, Partn. 8642 and note. For the same reason, one firm cannot bring an action against another if there be one or more persons partners in both firms. 6 Taunt. 597 ; 2 Bos. & P. 120.

Whenever a firm is spoken of by its name or style, the courts admit evidence to show what persons did in fact constitute the firm at the time in question. 6 Taunt. $15 ; 4$ Maule & S. 13 ; 2 Keen, Rolls, 255 . If persons trade or carry on business under a name, style, or firm, whatever may be done by them under that name is binding as much as if real names had been used. 1 Chitt. Bail. 707 ; 2 Carr. & P. 296; 2 Campb. 548 ; Hayes & S. Exch. Ir. 43.
8. Any change in the persons composing a firm is productive of a new signification of the name. If, therefore, a legacy is left to a firm, that is a legacy to those who compose it at the time the legacy vests, see 2 Keen, Rolls, 255; 3 Mylne & C. 507 ; 7 De Gex, M. & G. 673; and if a legacy is left to the representatives of an old firm, it will he payable to the executors of the survivors of the partners constituting the firm alluded to, and not to its successors in business. 11 Ir. Eq. 451 ; 1 Lindley, Partn. 166. Again, an authority given to a firm of two partners cannot, it would seem, be exercised by them and a third person afterwards taken into partnership with them. 6 Bingh. n. c. 201. See 4 Ad. & E. 832; 16 Sim. Ch. 121 ; 7 Hare, Ch. 351; 4 Ves. Ch. 649.

A name may be a trade-mark; and, if it is, the use of it by others will be illegal, if they pass off themselves or their own goods for the firm or the goods of the firm whose name is made use of. 2 Keen, Rolls, 213 ; 4 Kay & J. Ch. 747. Moreover, if this is done intentionally, the illegality will not be affected by the circumstance that the imitators of the trade-mark are themselves of the same name as those whose mark they imitate. 13 Beav. Rolls, 209; 3 De Gex, M. & G. 896.
9. An action by a firm may be defeated by a defence founded on the conduct of one of the partners. If one member of a firm is guilty of a fraud in entering into a contract on behalf of the firm, his fraud may be relied on as a defence to an action on the contract brought by him and his copartners; for their innocence does not purge his guilt. See Ry. & M. 178; 2 Smale & G. 422; 5 De Gex, M. & G. 160; 2 Beav. Rolls, $128 ; 10$ id. $523 ; 3$ Drew. Ch. 3; 3 Term, 454 ; 9 Barnew. & C. 241. The above rule seems not to rest upon the ground that the act of the one partner is imputable to the firm; it governs when the circumstances are such as to exclude the doctrine of agency. Thus, if a partner pledges partnership property, and in so doing clearly acts heyond the limits of his authority, still, as he cannot dispute the validity of his own act, he and his copartners cannot recover the property so pledged by an action at law. 5 Exch. 489. So, although a partner has no right to pay his own separate delt by setting off against it a debt due from his creditor to the firm, yet if he actually agrees that such set-off shall be made, and it is made accordingly, he and his copartners cannot afterwards in an action recover the debt due to the firm. 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 204; 7 Mann. & G. 607; 9 Barnew. & C. 532; 1 Lindley, Partn. 169, 170; 1 Maule & S. 751.
10. If a person becomes surety to a firm, it is important to ascertain whether he clearly contemplated changes in the firm, and agreed to become surety to a fluctuating body, or not. If he did, his liability is not discharged by any change among the members constituting the partnership at the time he became surety, 10 Barnew. & C. 122; 12 East, 400 : 2 Camph. 422; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 261 ; but if no such intention can be shown, then a contract of suretyship entered into with a firm will be deemed to be binding so long only as the firm remains unchanged, and consequently any change in it, whether by the death or the retirement of a partner, 7 Ilare, Ch. 50; 3 East, 484: 4 Taunt. 673; 4 Russ. 154; 1 Bingh. 452 ; 3 Q. B. 703; 7 T'crm, 254; 10 Ad. & E. 30 , or by the introduction of a new partner, 2 W. Blackst. 934 , immediately puts an end to the surety's liability so far as subsequent events are concerned. In all such cases the surety 5 position and risk are altered, and, whether he has in fact been damnified by the change or not, he has a right to say.
non in heec faedera veni. Similar doctrines apply to cases where a person becomes surety for the conduct of a firm. 3 Camph. 52; 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 580; 1 Bingh. 452. See 6 Q. B. 514; 4 Bos. & P. 34; 3 Exch. 320 ; 9 id. 197; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 79, 83; 8 Clark $&$ F. Hou. L. $214 ; 1$ Lindley, Partn. 172174; 1 Glyn & J. 389, 409; 2 id. 246; De Gex, 300; 2 Rose, Bank. 239, 328 ; 4 Dów & C. Hou. L. $426 ; 3$ Deas. 305.

FIRMA (L. Lat.). A farm or rent reserved on letting lands, anciently frequently reserved in provisions. Spelman, Gloss.; Cunningham, Law Dict.
A banquet; supper; provisions for the table. DuCange.

A tribute or custom paid towards entertaining the king for one night. Domesday ; Cowel.

A rent reserved to be paid in money, called then alba firma (white rents, money rents). Spelman, Ğloss.

A lease. A letting. Ad firmam tradidi (I have farm let). Spelman, Gloss.
A messuage with the house, garden, or lands, etc. connected therewith. Coke, Litt. 5 a; Sheppard, Touchet. 93. See Farm.

FIRMA FEODI (L. Lat.). Fee-farm. See Feodi-Firma.
FIRMAN. A passport granted by the Great Mognl to captains of foreign vessels to trade within the territories over which he has jurisdiction; a permit.
FIRMARIUS (L. Lat.): A fermor. A lessee of a term. Firmarii comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives or for year, by deed or without deed. Coke, 2 d Inst. 144,$145 ; 1$ Washburn, Real Prop. 107; 8 Pick. Mass. 312-315; 7 Ad. & E. 637.
FIRST FRUITS. The first ycar's whole profits of the spiritual preferments. There were three valuations (valor beneficium) at different times, according to which these first fruits were estimated, made in 1253, 1288, and 1318. A final valuation was made by the 26 Hen . VIII. c. 3.

They now form a perpetual fund, called Queen Anne's hounty, the income of which is used for the augmentation of poor livings. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 284, and notes; 2 Burn, Ecel. Law. 260.
FIRST IMPRESSION. First examination. First presentation to a court for examination or decision. A cause which presents a new question for the first time, and for which, consequently, there is no precedent, is said to be a case of the first impression.

FIRST PURCHASER. In the English law of descent, the first purchaser was he who first acquired an estate in a family which still owns it. A purchase of this kind signifies any mode of acquiring an estate, except by descent. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 220.

FISC. In Civil Law. The treasury of a prince; the public treasury. 1 Low. C. 361 .
Hence, to eonfifcate a thing is to appropriate it to the fisc. Paillet, Droit Publio, 21, n., gays that fiscue, in the Roman law, signified the treasura of the prince, and ararium the treasure of the stath. But this distinction was not observed in Franoe. See Law 10, f. De jure Fisci.

FISCAL. Belonging to the fisc, or public treasury.
FISH. An animal which inhabits the water, breathes by means of gills, swims by the aid of fins, and is oviparous.
Fishes in rivers and in the sea are considered as animals ferce naturce; consequently, no one has any property in them until they have been captured; and, like other wild animals, if, having been taken, they escape and regain their liberty, the captor loses his property in them.
FISH ROYAL. A whale, porpoise, or sturgeon thrown ashore on the coast of England belonged to the king as a branch of his prerogative. Hence these fish are termed royal fish. Hale, De Jure Mar. pt. 1, c. 7; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 290; Plowd. 305; Bracton, l. 3, c. 3.
FISHERY. A place prepared for catching fish with nets or hooks. This is commonly applied to the place of drawing a seine or net. 1 Whart. Penn. 131, 132.
A common of fishery is not an exclusive right, but one enjoyed in common with certain other persons. 3 Kent, Comm. 329.
$A$ free fishery is said to be a franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil. 3 Kent, Comm. 329.

A several fishery is one by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all others, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner. 5 Burr. 2814.
A distinction has been made batween a common fishery (commune piscarium), which may mesn for all mankind, as in the sea, and a common of fishery (communium piseariz), which is a right, in common with certain other persons, in a particular stresm. 8 Taunt. 183. Mr. Angell seems to think that common of fishery and free fishery are convertible terms. Law of Watercourses, c. 6, ss. 3, 4.
Mr. Woolrych eays that sometimes a free fishery is confounded with a several, sometimes it is said to be synonymous with common, and again it is trested as distinct from either. Lsw of Waters, etc. 97.
A several fishery, as its name imports, is an exclusive property: this, however, is not to he uoderstood as depriving the territorisl owner of his right to a several fishery when he grants to another person permission to fish; for be would continue to be the several proprietor although he should suffer a stranger to hold a coextensive right with himself. Woolryob on Wat. 96.
These distinotions in ralation to several, free, and common of fishery are not strongly marked, and the lines are sometimes sesrcely percaptible. "Instesd of going into the black-letter books to lasn what was a fishery, and $n$ free fishery, and a several fishery," ssys Huston, J., "I am disposed to regard our own aots, even though differing from old feudal law." 1 Whart. Penn. 132.

FIXTURES

2. The right of fishery is to be considered with reference to navigable waters and to waters not navigable; meaning, by the former, those in which the tide ebbs and flows; by the latter, those in which it does not. By the common law of England, the fisheries in all the navigable waters of the realm belong to the crown by prerogative, in such way, nevertheless, as to be common to all the subjects: so that an individual claiming an exclusive fishery in such waters must show it strictly by grant or prescription. In rivers not navigable the fisheries belong to the owners of the soil or to the riparian proprietors. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 39; Hale, De Jure Mar. c. 4; 1 Mod. 105; 6 id. 73; 1 Salk. 357 ; Willes, 265 ; 4 Term, 437 ; 4 Burr. 2162 ; Dav. 155; 7 Coke, 16 a; Plowd. 154 a. The common law has been declared to be the law in several of the United States, 17 Jolins. N. Y. 195; 19 id. $256 ; 20 i d .90 ; 6$ Cow. N.Y. 518; 3 N. H. 321 ; l Pick. Mass. 180; 4 id. 145; 5 id. 199; 5 Day, Conn. 72; 1 Baldw. C. C. $60 ; 5$ Mas. C. C. 191 ; 5 Harr. \& J. Md. 193; 2 Conn. 481. But in Pennsylvania, North Carolina, and South Carolina, the right of fishery in the great rivers of those states, though not tide-waters, is held to be vested in the state and open to all the world. 2 Binn. Penn. 475 ; 14 Serg. \& R. Penn. 71; 1 $M^{\prime}$ Cord, So. C. 580; 3 Ired. No. C. 277. The free light of fishery in navigable waters extends to the taking of shell-fish between high and low water-mark. 2 Bos. \& P. 472 ; 5 Day, Conn. 22; 37 Me. 472.
3. In Massachusetts and Maine, private fisheries are subject to legislative control. 5 Pick. Mass. $199 ; 9$ id. $87 ; 2$ Cush. Mass. 257 ; 6 id. 380 ; 13 Me. 417 ; 15 id. 9 ; 17 id. 106 ; see, also, 20 Johns. N. Y. 90; and public fisheries may be appropriated by towns in which the waters lie. 4 Mass. 140; 14 id. 488. Public fisheries are, of course, suhject to legislative regulation. 37 Me .472 ; 18 How. 571 ; 1 Baldw. C. C. 76. Private or several fisheries in navigable waters may be established by the legislatures, or may, perhaps, be acquired by prescription clearly proved, 16 Pet. 369 ; 6 Cow. N. Y. 369 ; 5 Ired. No. C. 118; 1 Wend. N. Y. 237 ; 4 Md. 262 ; 10 Cush. Mass. 369 ; and in some of the United States there are such private fisheries, established during the colonial state, which are still held and enjoyed as such: as, in the Delaware. 1 Whart. Penn. 145 ; 1 Baldw. C. C. 76. The right of private fishery may exist not only in the riparian proprietor, but also in another who has acquired it by grant orotherwise. Coke, Litt. 122 a, n. 7 ; Schultes, Aq. Rights, 40, 41 ; Angell, Waterc. 184. But see 2 Salk. 637. Such a right is held subject to the use of the waters as a highway, Angell, Tide-Wat. 80-83; 1 South. N. J. 61; 1 Jones, No. C. 299 ; 1 Campb. 516; 1 Whart. Penn. 136, and to the free passage of the fish. 7 East, 195 ; 1 Rice, So. C. 447; 5 Pick. Mass. 199 ; 10 Johns. N. Y. 236 ; 17 id. 195; 4 Mass. 522 ; $15 \mathrm{Me} .303,378$.
4. Oysters which have been taken, and i have thus become private property, may be planted in a new place flowed by tide-water and where there are none naturally, and yet remain the private property of the person planting them. 14 Wend. N. Y. 42 ; 4 Barb. N. Y. $592 ; 2$ R. I. 434. A state may pass laws prohibiting the citizens of other states from taking oysters within its territorial limits. 4 Wash. C. C. 371 ; Angell, TideWat. 156.

VoL. I.-38

FISK. In Scotch Law. The revenue of the crown. Generally used of the personal estate of a rebel which has been forfeited to the crown. Bell, Dict.

FISTUCA (Lat.; spelled, also, festuca; called, otherwise, baculum, virga, fustis). The rod which was transferred, in one of the ancient methods of feoffment, to denote a transfer of the property in land. Spelman, Gloss.

FIXING BAIL. In Practice. Rendering absolute the liability of special bail.

The bail are fixed upon the issue of a ca. sa. (capias ad satisfaciendum) against the defendant, 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 569; 16 Johns. N. Y. 117; 3 Harr. N. J. 9; 11 Tex. 15 , and a return of non est thereto by tho sheriff, 4 Day, Conn. 1; 2 Bail. So. C. 492 ; 3 Rich. So. C. 145 ; l Vt. 276; 7 Leigh, Va. 371, made on the return-day, 2 Metc. Mass. 590; 1 Rich. So. C. 421; unless the defendant be surrendered within the time allowed ex gratia by the practice of the court. 3 Conn. 316; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 24; 2 Johns. N. Y. $101 ; 9$ id. $84 ; 1$ Dev. No. C. $91 ; 11$ Gill & J. Md. 92; 2 Hill, N. Y. 216; 8 Cal. 552 ; 17 Ga. 88.

In New Hampshire, 1 N. H. 472, and Massachusetts, 2 Mass. 485, bail are not fixed till judgment on a sci. fa. is obtaincd against them, except by the doath of the defendant after a return of non est to an execution against him.

The death of the defendant after a return of non est by the sheriff prevents a surrender, and fixes the bail inevitably. 5 Binn. Penn. 332; 4 Johns. N. Y. 407; 3 M'Cord, So. C. $49 ; 4$ Pick. Mass. $120 ; 4$ N. H. 29 ; 12 Wheat. 604. See 1 Ov. Tenn. 224; 1 Ohio, 35 ; 2 Ga. 331.
In Georgia and North Carolina, bail are not fixed till judgment is ohtained against them. 3 Dev. No. C. 155; 2 Ga. 331.

FIXTURES. Personal chattels affixed to real estate, which may be severed and removed by the party who has affixed them, or by his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold.
2. Questions frequently arise as to whether given appendages to a house or land are to be considered part of the real estate, or whether they are to be treated as personal property: the latter are movable, the former not.

The annexation may be actual or constructive. 1st. By actual annexation is understood every mode by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. The artiele must not be merely laid upon the ground: it must be fastened, fixed, or set into the land, or into some such erection as is unquestionably a part of the realty; otherwise it is in no sense a fixture. Buller, Nisi P. 34; 3 East, 38; 9 id. 215; 1 Tannt. 21; Pothier, Traite des Choses, $\%$ 1. Locks, iron stoves set in brickwork, posts, and window-blinds, afford examples of sctual annexation. See 5 Hayw. No. C. 109; 20 Johns. N. Y. 29; 1 Harr. & J. Md. 289; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 553; 9 Conn. 63; 1 Miss. 508, 620 ; 7 Mass. 432; 15 id. 159; 4 Ala. 314. Some thinge, however, have been held to be parcel of the realty which are not annexed or fastened to it; for example, deeds or chattels which relate to the title of the inheritance and go to the heir. Sheppard, Touehst. 469. But loose, movable machinery used in prosecuting any business to which the freehold is adapted cannot be considered part of the real estate nor in any way appurtenant to it. 12 N. H. 205. See, however, 2 Watts & S. Penn. 116, 390. So deer in a park, fish in a pond, and doves in a dove-house, go to the heir, and not to the executor, being, like keys and heirlooms, constructively annexed to the inheritance. Sheppard, Touehst. 90; Pothier, Traité des Choses, 81.
3. The general rule is, that fixtures once annexed to the frcehold become part of the realty. But to this rule there are exceptions: as, first, where there is a manifest intention to use the fixture in some employment distinct from that of the oeeupant of the real estate; second, where it has been annexed merely for the purpose of carrying on a trade, 3 East, 88; 4 Watts, Penn. 330; for the fact that it was put up for such a purpose indicates an intention that the thing should not become part of the freehold. See 1 II. Blackst. 260. But if there is a clear intention that the thing should be permanently annexed to the realty, its being nsed for purposes of trade would not, perhaps, bring the case within one of the exceptions. 1 II. Blackst. 260.
4. With respect to the different classes of persons who claim the right to remove a fixture, it has been held that where the question arises between an executor and the heir at law the rule is strict that whatever belongs to the estate to which the fixture appertains will go to the heir; but if the ancestor manifested an intention (which it is said may be inferred from oircumstances) that the things affixed should be considered personalty, they will be so treated, and will go to the executor. See Bacon, Abr. Executor, Administrator; 2 Strange, 1141; 1 P. Will. Ch. 94; Buller, Nisi P. 34. As between a vendor and vendee the same strictness applies as between an executor and an heir at law; for oll fixtures whieh belong to the premises at the time of the sale, or which have been erected by the vendor, whether for purposes of trade or manufacture, or not, as potash-kettles for manufacturing ashes, and the like, pass to the vendee of the land, unless they have been expressly reserved by the terms of the contract. 6 Cow. N. Y. 663 ; 20 Johns. N.Y. 29. The same rule applies as between mortgagor and mortgs gee, 15 Mass. 159; 1 Atk. Ch. 477; 16 Vt. 124 ; 12 N. H. 205; and as between a devisee and the executor, things permanently annexed to the realty at the time of the testator's death pass to the devisee,-his right to fixtures being similar to that of a vendee. 2 Barnew. & C. 80 .
5. But as between a landlord and his tenant the strictness of the ancient rule has been much relaxed. The rule here is understood to be that a tenant, whether for life, for years, or at will, may sever at any time before the expiration of his tenancy, and carry away, all such fixtures of a chattel nature as he has himself erected upon the demised premises for the purposes of ornament, domestic convenience, or to carry on trade; provided, always, that the removal can be effeeted without material injury to the freehold. 16 Day, Conn. 322 ; 16 Mass. 449 ; 4 Pick. Mass. $310 ; 2$ Dev. No. C. 376 ; 1 Bail. So. C. 541 ; 7 Barb. N. Y. 263; 1 Den. N. Y. $92 ; 19$ N. Y. 234. There have been adjudications to this effect with respeet to bakers' ovens; salt-pans; earding-maehines; cider mills and furnaces; steam-engines; soap-boilers' vats and copper stills; millstones; Dutch barns standing on a foundation of briek-work set into the ground; a varnish-house built upon a similar foundotion, with a chimney; and to a ball-room, erected by the lessee of au inn, resting upon stone posts slightly imbedded in the soil; and also in regard to things ornamental or for domestic convenience: as, furnaces; stores; cupboards and shelves; bells and bell-pulls; gas-fixtures; pier- and chimney-glasses, although attached to the wall with screws; marble chimney-pieces; grates; windowblinds and curtains. The decisions, however, are adverse to the removal of hearthstones, doors, windows, locks and keys; because such things are peculiarly adapted to the house in which they are affixed; also, to all such substantial additions to the premises as conservatories, greenhouses (exeept those of a professional gardener), stables, pig-sties and other outhonses, shrubbery and flowers planted in a garden. Nor has the privilege been extended to erections for agricultural purposes; though it is difficult to perceive why such fixtures should stand upon a less favored basis than trade fixtures, when the relative importanec of the two arts is considered. Taylor, Landl. & Ten. 88544 550.
6. The time for exercising the right of removal is a matter of some importance. A tenant for years may remove them at any time before he gives up the possession of the premises, although it may be after his term has expired, and he is holding over. 1 Barnew. & C. 79; 2 East, 88. But tenents for life or at will, having uncertain interests in the land, have, after the determination of their estates not occasioned by their own fault, a reasonable time within which to remove their fixtures. 3 Atk. Ch. 13.
7. If a tenant quits possession of the land without removing such fixtures as he is entitled to, the property in them immediately vests in the landlord, and though they are subsequently severed the tenant's right to them does not revive. If, therefore, a tenant desires to have any such things upon the premises after the expiration of his term, for the purpose of valuing them to an incoming tenant, or the like, he should take care to get the landlord's consent; otherwise he will lose his property in them entirely. 1 Barnew. & Ad. 394; 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 450. The rights of parties with respect to particular articles are sometimes regulated by local customs, especially as between outgoing and inooming tenants; and in cases of this kind it becomes a proper criterion by which to determine the character of the article, and whether it is a fixture or not.

FHORIN (called, also, Gulder). A coin, originally made at Florence.

The name formerly applied to coins, both of gold and silver, of different values in different countries. In many parts of Germany, the florin, which is still the integer or money-unit in those countries, was formerly a gold piece, value ahout two dollars and furty-two cents. It afterwards hecame a silver eoin, variously rated at from forty to fifty-six cents, according to locality; hut by the Garman conventions of 1837 and 1838 the rate of nine-tenths fine and one hundred and sixty-three and seven-tenths grains troy per piece was adopted, making the value forty-ooe cents. Thie standard is the only one now used in Germany ; and the florin or guilder of the Netherlands is, alao, coined at nearly the theusandths), the value being the same. The florin same standard (weight, one hundred and sixty-six grains; fineness, eight hundred and ninety-six of Tuscany is only twenty-seven cents in value.

FOENS NAUTICUS (Lat.). The name given to marine interest.

The amount of such interest is not limited by law, because the lender runs so great a risk of losing his principal. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, t. 4, b. 76. See Marine Interest.

FGETICIDE. In Medical Jurisprudence. Receutly this term has been applied to designate the act by which criminal abortion is produced. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 288; Guy, Med. Jur. 133. See Infanticide.

FCETURA (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. The produce of animals, and the fruit of other property, which are acquired to the owner of such animals and property by virtue of his right. Bowyer, Mod.C.L.c. 14, p. 81.

FGETUS (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. An unborn cbild. An infant in ventre sa mère.
2. Until about the middle of the fourth month it is called embryo. At that time the development of the principal organs begins to be evident and they present something of their mature form.
Although it is often important to know the age of the foetus, there is great difficulty in ascertaining the fact with the precision required in courts of law. We are contident that nothing on this subjeot can be learned solely from its weight, size, or progreas towarde maturity.

The grast differenco between children at birth, as regards their weight and size, is an indication of their condition while within the womb, and is a sufficient evidence that nothing can be decided as to the age of the foetus hy its weight and size at different periode of its existence.
3. Thousands of bealthy infants have been weighed immediately after hirth, and the extremes have been found to he two and eighteen pounds. It is very rare indeed to find any weighing as little as two pounds, but by no means uncommon to find them weighing four ponnde. So it is with the length, which varies as much as that of the adult does from the average height of the race.
Neither can any thing positive be learned from the progress of development; for although the condition of the hones, cartilages, and other parts will generally mark with tolerable accuracy the age of a healthy foetus, yet an uncertainty will arise when it is found to be unhealthy. It has been clearly proved, by numerous dissections of new-born children, that the foetus is snbject to discases which interfere with the proper formation of parts, exhibiting traces of previous departure from health, which had interfered with the proper formation of parts and arrested the process of development.
4. Interesting as the different periode of development may be to the philosophical inquirer, they cannot be of much value in legal inquiries, from their extreme uncertainty in denoting precisely the age of the foetus by unerring conditions.

An approximation may be had by grouping all the facts connected with the history of the conception, with the progress of the ovum to maturity. See Dunglisan, Human Physiology, 391; 1 Beck, Mod. Jur. 239; Billord on Infante, Stewart trans. 36, 37, and App.; Ryan, Med. Jur. 137; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 403 ; Dean, Med. Jur. FOLC-GEMOTE (spelled, also, folkmote, folcmote, and folcgemote; from folc, people, and gemote, an assembly).

A general assembly of the people in a town, burgh, or shire.
The term was used to denote a court or judicial tribunal among the Saxnns, which possessed substantially the powers afterwerds exercised by the county courts and sheriff's tourn. These powers embraced the settlement of small claims, taking the oath of allegiance, preserving the laws, and making the neeessary arrangements for the preeervation of safety, peace, and the public weal. It appears that complaints were to be made before the folk-gemote held in London annually, of any mismanagement by the mayor and aldermen of that city. It was called, also, a burg-gemote when held in a burgh, and shire-gemote when held for a county. See Manwood, For. Laws; Spelman, Glose. ; De Brady, Gloes.; Cunningham, Law Diet.

FOLCLAND (Sax.). Land of the people. Spelman, Gloss. Said by Blackstone to be land held by no assurance in writing, but to have been distributed amongst the common people at the pleasure of the lord, and resumable at his discretion. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 90; Cowel.

It was, however, probably, land which bevonged to the community, and which, being parcelled out for a term to people of all conditions, reverted again to the commons at the expiration of the term. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 8; Wharton, Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed.

FOLC-RIGHT. The common right of all the people. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 65, 67.

FOLD-COURSE. In English Law. Land used as a sheep-walk.

Land to which the sole right of folding the cattle of others is appurtenant: sometimes it means merely such right of folding. The right of folding on another's land, which is called common foldage. Coke, Litt. $6 a$, note 1; W. Jones, 375; Croke Car. 432; 2 Ventr. 139.

FOLIO. A leaf. The references to the writings of the older law-authors are usually made by citing the folio, as it was the ancient custom to number the folio instead of the page, as is done in modern books.

A certain number of words specified by statute as a folio. Wharton. Originating, undoubtedly, in some estimate of the number of words which a folio ought to contain.

FONSADERA. In Spanish Law. Any tribute or loan granted to the king for the purpose of enabling him to defray the expenses of a war.

FOOT. A measure of length, containing one-third of a yard, or twelve inches. See Ell. Figuratively it signifies the conclusion, the end: as, the foot of the fine, the foot of the account.

FOOT OF THE FINE. The fifth part of the conclusion of a fine. It includes the whole matter, reciting the names of the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 351.

FOOTGELD. An amercement for not cutting out the ball or cutting off the claws of a dog's feet (expeditating him). To be quit of footgeld is to have the privilege of keeping dogs in the forest unlawed without punishment or control. Manwood, For. Laws, pt. 1, p. 86; Crompton, Jur. 197; Termes de La Ley; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FOR THAT. In Pleading. Words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration. "For that" is a positive allegation; "For that whereas" is a recital. Hammond, Nisi P. 9.

FOR WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. A general clause in a policy of insurance, intended to apply to all persons who have any insurable interest. 1 Phillips, Ins. 152. This phrase, or some similar one, must be inserted, to give any one but the party named as the insured rights under the policy. FORATHE. One who can take oath for another who is accused of one of the lesser crimes. Manwood, For. Laws, p. 3 ; Cowel.

FORBANER. To deprive forever. To shut out. 9 Ric. lI. cap. 2 ; 6 Hen. VI. cap. 4; Cowel.

FORBEARANCE. A delay in enforcing rights. The act by which a creditor waits for the payment of a debt due him by the debtor after it has become due. It is sufficient consideration to support assumpsit. See Assumpsit; Consideration.

FORCE. Restraining power; validity; binding effect.
A law may be said to be in force when it is not repealed, or, more loosely, when it can be carried into practical effect. An agreement is in force when the parties to it may be compelled to act, or are acting, under its terms and stipulations.

Strength applied. Active power. Power put in motion.

Actual force is where strength is actually applied or the means of applying it are at hand. Thus, if one break open a gate by violence, it is lawful to oppose force to force. See 2 Salk. 641 ; 8 Term, 78, 357. See Battery.

Implied force is that which is implied by law from the commission of an unlawful act. Epery trespass quare clausum fregit is committed with implied force. 1 Salk. 641; Coke, Litt. 57 b, 161 b, 162 a; 1 Saund. 81, 140, n. 4 ; 5 Term, 361 ; 8 id. 78, 358; Bacon, Abr. Trespass ; 3 Wils. 18 ; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 890; 6 East, 387 ; 5 Bos. & P. 365, 454.

Mere nonfeasance cannot be considered as force, generally. 2 Saund. 47; Coke, Litt. 161 ; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

If a person with force break a door or gate for an illegal purpose, it is lawful to oppose force to force; and if one enter the close of another vi et armis, he may be expelled immediately, withont a previous request; for there is no time to make a request. 2 Salk. $641 ; 8$ Term, 78, 357. When it is necessary to rely upon actual force in pleading, as in the case of a forcible entry, the words "manu forti," or "with a strong hand," should be adopted. 8 Term, 357, 358; 4 Cush. Mass. 441. But in other cases the words " $v i$ et armis," or "with force and arms," is sufficient.

FORCE AND ARMS. A phrase used in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now necessary in declarations, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence. 2 Chitty, Plead. 846, 850.

FORCED HEIRS. In Louisiana. Those persons whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate. reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them. La. Civ. Code, art. 1482. As to the portion of the estate they are entitled to, see Legitime. As to the causes for which forced heirs may be deprived of this right, see DisINHERISON.

FORCHEAPUM. Pre-emption. Blount.
FORCIBLE ENTRY OR DETAIN-
R. A forcible entry or detainer consists ER. A forcible entry or detainer consists in violently taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements, by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law. Comyns, Dig.; Gabbett, Crim. Law.
2. To make an entry forcible, there must be such acts of violence, or such threats, menaces, or gestures, as may give reason to apprehend personal injury or danger in standing in defence of the possession. But the force made use of must be more than is implied in any mere trespass. 8 Term, 357 ; 10 Mass. 409 ; 1 Add. Penn. 14 ; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. 8786.

Proceedings in case of a forcible entry or detainer are regulated by the statutes of the several states, and relate to a restitution of the property, if the individual who complains has been dispossessed, as well as to the punishment of the offender for a breach of the public peace. And the plea of ownership is no justification for the party complained of ; for no man may enter even upon his own lands in any other than a peaceable manner. Nor will he be excused if he entered to make a distress or to enforce a lawful claim, nor if possession was ultimately obtained by entreaty. $3^{\prime}$ Mass. 215; 1 Dev. \& B. No. C. 324 ; 8 Litt. Ky. 184 ; 8 Term, 361.
3. Upon an indictment for this offence at common law, the entry must appear to have been accompanied by a public breach of the peace; and, upon a conviction for either a forcible entry or detainer, the court will award restitution of the premises in the same manner as a judge in a civil court, under a statutory proceeding, is authorized to do upon a verdict rendered before him. 1 Ld . FORDAL (Sax.). A butt or headband. A piece.

FORE (Sax.). Before. (Fr.) Out. Kelham.
FORECLOSE. To shut out; to bar. Used of the process of destroying an equity of redemption. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 589 ; Daniell, Chanc. Pract. 1204; Coote, Mortg. 511; 9 Cow. N. Y. 382.

FORECLOSURE. In Practice. A proceeding in chancery by which the mortgagor's right of redemption of the mortgaged premises is barred or closed forever.
2. This takes place when the mortgagor has forfeited his estate by non-payment of the money due on the mortgage at the time appointed, but still retains the equity of redemption: in such case, the mortgagee may file a bill calling on the mortgagor, in a court of equity, to redeem his estate presently, or, in default thereof, to be forever closed or barred from any right of redemption.
3. In some cases, however, the mortgagee obtains a decree for a sale of the land under the direction of an officer of the court, in which case the proceeds are applied to the discharge of incumbrances, according to their priority. This practice has been adopted in Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. 4 Kent, Comm. 180. When it is the practice to foreclose without a sale, its severity is mitigated by enlarging the time of redemption from six months to six months, or for shorter periods, according to the equity arising from the circumstances. $1 d$. FOREFAULT. In Scotch Law. To forfeit; to lose.

FOREFAND RENT. In English Law. A species of rent which is a premium given by the tenant at the time of taking the lease, as on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations, which is considered in the nature of an improved rent. 1 Term, $486 ; 3$ id. 461 ; 3 Atk. FOREIGN. That which belongs to another country; that which is strange. 1 Pet. 343.

Every nation is foreign to all the rest; and the several states of the American Union are foreign to each other with respect to their municipal laws. 2 Wash. C. C. $282 ; 4$ Conn. $517 ; 6 i d .480 ; 2$ Wend. N. Y. $411 ; 1$ Dall. Penn. 458,463 ; 6 Binn. Penn. 321 ; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 203; 2 Hill, So. C. 319 ; 1 D. Chipm. Vt. 303; 7 T. B. Monr. But the reciprocal relations between the national government and the several states composing the United States are not considered as foreign, but domestic. 5 Pet. 398 ; 6 id. 317 ; 9 id. 607 ; 4 Cranch, 384 ; 4 Gill & J. Md. $1,63$.

FOREIGN ANSWER, An answer not triable in the county where it is made. Stat. 15 Hen. VI. c. 5 ; Blount.

FOREIGN APPOSER. An officer in the exchequer who examines the sheriff's estreats, comparing them with the records, and apposeth (interrogates) the sheriff what he says to each particular sum therein. Coke, 4th Inst. 107; Blount; Cowel, Foreigne. The word is written opposer, opposeth, by Lord Coke; and this signification corresponds very well to the meaning given by Blount, of examiner (interrogator) of the sheriff's accounts.

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT. A process by virtue of which the property of an absent debtor is seized for the purpose of compelling an appearance, and, in default of that, to pay the claim of the plaintiff. Sce Attachment.

FOREIGN COINS. Coins issued by the authority of a foreign government.

There were several acts of congress passed which renderod certain foreign gold and silver ooins a lagal tender in payment of debts upon certain prescribed oonditions as to fineness and weight. In making a report in 1854 on this subject, the lata director of the mint, Mr. Snowdon, suggested that there was no propriety or necessity for legalizing the ciroulation of the coins of other countries, and that in no other nation, except iu the case of some colonies, was this mixture of currencies admitted by law, either on the score of courtesy or convenience; and he recommended that if the laws whioh legalize foreign coins should he repealed, it would be proper to require an annual assay report upon the weight and fineness of such foreign ooins as frequently reach our shores, with a view to settle and determine their marketable value. Ex. Doc. No. 68, 33d Cong. 1st Session. This suggestion was subsequently repeated, and finally led to the passage of the act of Feh. 21, 1857, 11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 163, the third section of which is as follows:-That all former acts authorizing the currency of foreign gold or silver coins, and declaring the same a legal tender in payment for debts, are repealed; hut it shall he the duty of the director of the mint to cause assays to be made from time to time of such foreign coins as may be known to our commerce, to determine their average weight, fineness, and value, and to embrace in his anuual report a statement of the results thereof.

FOREIGN COUNTY. Another county. It may be in the same kingdom, it will still be foreign. See Blount, Foreign.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT. The statute 59 Geo. III. c. 69 , for preventing British citizens from enlisting as sailors or soldiers in the service of a foreign power. Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.; 4 Stephen, Comm. 226.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT. The judgment of a foreign tribunal.
2. The various states of the United States are in this respect considered as foreign to each other. In Louisiana it has been decided that a judgment rendered by a Spanish tribunal under the former government of that state is not a foreign judgment. 4 Mart. La. 301, 310.

Such judginents may be evidenced by exemplifications certified under the great seal of the state or country where the judgment is recorded, or under the seal of the court where the judgment remains, Gilbert, Er. 26 ; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8501 ; by a copy proved to be a true copy, or by the certificate of an officer authorized by law, which certificate must itself be properly authenticated. 2 Cranch, 238 ; 5 id. 335 ; 2 Caines, N. Y. 155 ; 7 Johns. N. Y. 514 ; 8 Mass. 273. The acts of foreign tribunals which are recognized by the law of nations, such as courts of admiralty and the like, are sufficiently authenticated by copies under seal of the tribunal. 5 Cranch, 335 ; 3 Conn. 171.
3. With regard to judgments in courts of sister states of the United States, it is enacted by the act of May 20,1790 , that the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as tbey have by law or usage in the courts of the state from whence the said records are or shall be taken; and by the act of March 27,1804 , that from and after the passage of this act all records and exemplifications of uffice books, which are or may be kept in any public office of any state, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any other court or office in any other state, by the attcstation of the keeper of the said records or books, and the seal of his office thereto annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county or district, as the case may be, in which such office is or may be kept, or of the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor or the keeper of the great seal of the state, that the said attestation is in due form and by the proper officer; and the said certificate, if given by the presiding justice of a court, shall be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify, under his hand and the seal of his office, that the said presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or if the said certificate be given by the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or keeper of the great scal, it shall he under the great seal of the state in which the said certificate is made. And the said records and exemplifications, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court and office within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts or offices of the state from whence the same are or shall he taken; and the provisions of both acts shall extend to the records, etc. of the territories.

As to the effect to be given to foreign judgments, see Conflict of Laws; Story, Conflict of Laws; Dalloz, Etranger.

FOREIGN LAWS. The laws of a foreign country.
2. The courts do not judicially take notice of foreign laws; and they must, therefore, he proved as facts. Cowp. 144; 3 Esp. Cas. 163; 3 Camph. 166; 2 Dow & C. Hou. L. 171; 1 Cranch, 38 ; 2 id. 187, 236, 237 ; 6 id. 274 ; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 193 ; 3 Gill & J. Md. 234 ; 4 Conn. 517 ; 4 Cow. N. Y. 515, 516, note; 1 Pet. C. C. 229 ; 8 Mass. 99 ; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 220; 10 Watts, Penn. 158. The manner of proof varies according to circumstances. As a general rule, the best testimony or proof is required; for no proof will be received which presupposes better testimony attainable by the party who offers it. When the best testimony cannot be obtained, secondary evidence will be received. 2 Cranch, 237.

Exemplified or sworn copies of written laws and other public documents must, as a general thing, be produced when they can be procured; but should they be refused by the competent authorities, then inferior proof may be admitted. Id.

When our own government has promulgated a foreign law or ordinance of a public nature as authentic, that is held sufficient evidence of its existence. 1 Cranch, 38 ; 1 Dall. Penn. 462; 6 Binn. Penn. 321; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 203.
When foreign laws cannot be proved by some mode which the law respects as being of equal authority to an oath, they must be verified by the sanction of an oath.
3. The usual modes of authenticating them are by an exemplification under the great seal of a state, or by a copy proved by oath to be a true copy, or by a certificate of an officer authorized by law, which must itself be duly authenticated. 2 Cranch, 238; 2 Wend. N. Y. 411; 6 id. 475; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 523 ; 15 id. 84 ; 2 Wash. C. C. 175.
Foreign unwritten laws, customs, and usages may be proved, and are ordinarily proved, by parol evidence; and when such evidence is objected to on the ground that the law in question is a written law, the party objecting must show that fact. 15 Serg. & R. Penn. 87; 2 La. 154.
Witnesses in Cuba examined under a commission touching the execution of a will testified, in general terms, that it was executed according to the law of that country; and, it not appearing from the testimony that there was any written law upon the subject, the proof was held sufficient. 8 Paige, Ch . N. Y. 446 .

A defendant pleaded infancy in an action upon a contract governed by the law of Jamaica: held that the law was to be proven as a matter of fact, and that the burden lay upon him to show it. 8 Johns. N. Y. 190.
4. Proof of such unwritten law is nsually made by the testimony of witnesses learned in the law and competent to state it correctly under oath. 2 Cranch, 237 ; 1 Pet. C. C. 225 ; 2 Wash. C. C. 175 ; 15 Serg. & R. Penn. 84; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 520; Cowp. 174; 2 Hagg. Adm. App. 15-144.

In England, certificates of persons in high authority have been allowed as evidence in such cases. 3 Hagg. Eccl. 767, 769.

The public seal of a foreign sovereign or state affixed to a writing purporting to be a written edict, or law, or judgment, is of itself the highest evidence, and no further proof is required of such public seal. 2 Oranch, 238; 2 Conn. 85; 1 Wash. C. C. 363 ; 4 Dall. Penn. 413, 416 ; 6 Wend. N. Y. 475 ; 9 Mod. 66.

But the seal of a foreign court is not, in general, evidence without further proof, and must, therefore, be established by competent testimony. 3 Johns. N. Y. 310; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 193; 4 Cow. N. Y. 526, n.; 3 East, 221.
5. By the act of May 26, 1790, it is provided "that the acts of the legislatures of the several states shall be authenticated by having the seal of their respective states atfixed thereto." See Record; Authentication. It may here be observed that the rules prescribed by acts of congress do not exclude every other mode of authentication, and that the courts may admit proof of the acts of the legislatures of the several states, although not authenticated under the acts of congress. Accordingly, a printed volume, purporting on its face to contain the laws of a sister state, is admissible as primâ facie evidence to prove the statute law of that state. 4 Cranch, 384; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 203; 6 Binn. Penn. 321; 5 Leigh, Va. 571.

The effect of foreign laws when proved is properly referable to the court: the object of the prouf of foreign laws is to enalle the court to instruct the jury what is, in point of law, the resnlt from foreign laws to be applied to the matters in controversy before them. The court are, therefore, to decide what is the proper evidence of the laws of a foreign country; and when evidence is given of those laws, the court are to judge of their applicability to the matter in issue. Story, Confl. Laws, 8 638; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 193; 3 id. 234, 242; 4 Conn. 517; Cowp. 174.
FOREIGN MATTER. Matter which must be tried in another county. Blount. Matter done or to be tried in another county. Cowel.

fortign plea. See Plea.

FOREIGN PORT. A port or place which is wholly without the United States. 19 Johns. N. Y. 375 ; 2 Gall. C. C. 4, $\mathbf{7}$; $\mathbf{1}$ Brock. C. C. 235. A port without the jurisdiction of the court. 1 Dods. Adm. 201 ; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 1; 1 W. Rob. Adm. 29; 6 Exch. 886 ; 1 Blatebf. \& H. Adm. 66, 71. Practically, the definition bas become, for most purposes of maritime law, a port at such distance as to make communication with the owners of the ship very inconvenient or almost impossible. See 1 Parsons, Marit. Law, 512, n.
FOREIGN VOYAGE. A voyage whose termination is within a foreign country. 3 Kent, Comm. 177, n. The length of the voyage has no effect in determining its character, but only the place of destination. 1 Stor. C. C. $1 ; 3$ Sumn. C. C. 342; 2 Bost. Law Rep. 146; 2 Wall. C. C. 264; 1 Parsons, Marit. Law, 31.
FOREIGNER. One who is not a citizen. Cuwel.

In the Old English Law, it seems to have been used of every one not an inhabitant of a city, at least with reference to that city. 1 H. Blackst. 213. See, also, Cowel, Fortigne.

In the United States, any one who was born in some other country than the United States, and who owes allegiance to some foreign state or country. I Pet. 343, 349. An alien. See Alien; Citizen.
FOREJUDGE. To deprive a man of the thing in question by sentence of court.
Among foreign writers, says Blount, forejudge is to banish, to expel. In this latter sense the word is also used in English law of an attorney who has been expelled from court for misconduct. Cowel; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FOREMAN. The presiding member of a grand or petit jury.
FORENSIS. Forensic. Belonging to court. Forensis homo, a man engaged in causes. A pleader; an advocate. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.
FOREST. A certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and offcers. Manwood, For. Laws, cap. 1, num. 1; Termes de la Ley; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 289.

A royal hunting-ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subject. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel; Manwood, For. Laws, cap. 1; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 83.
FOREST COURTS. In English Law. Courts instituted for the government of the king's forests in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which the deer were lodged. They comprised the courts of attachments, of regard, of sweinmote, and of justice-seat (which several titles see) ; but since the revolution of 1688 these courts, it is said, have gone into absolute desuetude. 3 Stephen, Comm. 439-441; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 71-74. But see 8 Q. B. 981.

FORESTAGIUM. A tribute payable to the king's foresters. Cowel.
FORESTALL To intercept or obstruct a passenger on the king's highway. Cowel; Blount. To beset the way of a tenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 170. To intercept a deer on his way to the forest before he can regain it. Cowel.
FORESTALLER. One who commits the offence of forestalling. Used, also, to denote the crime itself: namely, the obstruction of the highway, or hindering a tenant from coming to his land. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 170. Stopping a deer before he regains the forest. Cowel.
FORESTALIING. Obstructing the way. Intercepting a person on the highway.
FORESTALLING THE MARKET. Buying victuals on their way to the market before they reach it, with the intent to sell again at a higher price. Cowel ; Blount; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 158. Every device or practice, by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other provisions. Coke, 3d Inst. 196; Bacon, Abr.; 1 Russell, Crimes, 169 ; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 158; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 80, \%1. See 13 Viner, Abr. 430; 1. East, 132; 14 id. 406; 15 id. 511 ; 3 Maule & S. 67 ; Dane, Abr. Index.

FORESTARIUS. A forester. An officer who takes care of the woods and forests. De forestario apponendo, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste. Bracton, 316; DuCange.

FORESTER. A sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office in fee. Blount; Cowel.

FORETHOUGHTFELONY. In Scotch Law. Murder committed in consequence of a previous design. Erskine, b. iv. tit. 4, c. 50 ; Bell, Dict.
FORFANG. A taking beforehand. A taking provisions from any one in fairs or markets before the king's purveyors are served with necessaries for his majesty. Blount; Cowel.

FORFEIT. To lose as the penalty of some misdeed or negligence. The word includes not merely the idea of losing, but also of having the property transferred to another without the consent of the owner and wrongdoer.
This is the essential meaning of the word, whether it be that 4 n offender is to forfeit a sum of money, or an cstate is to be forfeited to a former owner for a breach of condilion, or to the king for some crime. Cowel says that forfeiture is general and confiscation a particular forfeiture to the king's exchequer. The modern distinction, however, seems to refer rather to a difference between forfciture as relating to acts of the owner and confiseation as relating to acts of the government. 1 Stor. C. C. 134; 13 Pet. 157; 11 Johns. N. Y. 293. Confiscation is more generally used of an appropriation of an enemy's property; forfeiture, of the taking possession of property to which the owner, who may be a citizen, has lost title through violation of law. See 1 Kent, Comm. 67; 1 Stor. C. C. 134.

FORFEITURE. A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they become vested in the party injured as a recompense for the wrong which he alone, or the public together with himself, hath sustained. 2 Blacketone, Comm. 267. A sum of money to be paid by way of penalty for a crime. 21 Ala. N. s. 672 ; 10 Gratt. Va. 700.
2. Forfeiture by alienation. By the English law, estates less than a fee may be forfeited to the party entitled to the residuary interest by a breach of duty in the owner of the particular estate. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 274.
In this country such forfeitures are almost unknown, and the more just principle prevails that the conveyance by the tenant operates only on the interest which he possessed, and does not affect the remainder-man or reversioner. 4 Kent, Comm. 81, 82, 424 ; 3 Dall. Penn. 486; 5 Ohio, 30 ; 1 Pick. Mass.

3. Forfeiture for crimes. Under the constitution and laws of the United States, Const. art. 3, 83 ; Act of April 30, 1790, & 24 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 88), forfeiture for crimes is nearly abolished. And when it occurs the state recovers only the title which the owner had. 4 Mas. C. C. 174 . See, also, Dalrymple, Feuds, c. 4, pp. 145-154; Foster, Crim. Law, $95 ; 1$ Washburn, Real Prop. 92.
4. Forfeiture by non-performance of conditions. An estate may be forfeited by a breach or non-performance of a condition annexed to the estate, either expressed in the deed at its original creation, or implied by law, from a principle of natural reason. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 281; Littleton, 8361 ; 1 Preston, Est. 478; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 794, 795 ; 5 Pick. Mass. 528; 2 N. H. 120; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 375 ; 32 Me. 394 ; 18 Conn. 535 ; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 190. Such forfeiture may be waived by acts of the person entitled to take advantage of the breach. 1 Conn. 79 ; 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 126; Walker, Am. Law, 299 ; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 454.

Forfeiture by waste. Waste is a canse of forfeiture. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 283 ; Coke, 2d Inst. 299; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 118.

See, generally, 2 Blackstone, Comm. ch. 18; 4 id. 382; Bouvier, Inst. Index : 2 Kent, Comm. 318; 4 id. 422; 10 Viner, Abr. 371, 394; 13 ıd. 436; Bacon, Abr. Forfeiture; Coniyns, Dig.; Dane, Abr.; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 252; Considerations on the Law of Forfeiture for High Treason, London ed. 1746; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 91, 92, 197, 118.

FORFEITURE OF A BOND. A failure to perforn the condition on which the obligee was to be excused from the penalty in the bond. Courts of equity and of law in modern practice will relieve from the forfeiture of a bond; and, upon proper cause shown, criminal courts will, in general, relieve from the forfeiture of a recognizance to appear. See 3 Yeates, Penn. 93; 2 Wash. C. C. 442 ; 2 Blackf. Ind. 104, 200 ; 1 Ill. 257.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry when he or she married contrary to the wishes of his or her guardian in chivalry.
2. The latter, who was the ward's lord, had an interest in controlling the marriage of his female wards, and he conld exact a price for his consent; and at length it became customary to sell the marriage of wards of both sexes. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 70.
3. When a male ward refused an equal match provided by his guardian, he was obliged, on coming of age, to pay him the value of the marriage,-that is, as much as he had been bona fide offered for it, or, if the guardian chose, as much as a jury would assess, taking into consideration all the real and personal property of the ward; atd the guardian could claim this value althongh ho might have made no tender of the mariage. Coke, Litt. 82 a; Coke, 2d Inst. 92 ; 5 Coke, 126 b ; 6 id .70 b .
4. When a male ward between the age of fourteen and twenty-une refused to accept an offer of an equal match (one without disparagement), and during that period formed an alliance elsewhere without his guardian's permission, he incurred forfeiture of marriage, -that is, he became liable to pay double the value of the marriage. Coke, Litt. $78 \mathrm{l}, 82 \mathrm{~b}$.

FORGAVEL. A small rent reserved in money; a quit-rent.

FORGERY. The falsely making or materially altering, with intent to defrand, any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8432.
The fraudulent making and alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 247.

Bishop, 2 Crim. Law. $\langle 432$, has collected seven definitions of forgery, and justly remarks that the books ahound in definitions. Coke says the term is "taken metaphorically from the smith, who beateth upon his anvil and forgeth what fashion and shape he will." Coke, 3 d Inst. 169.
2. The making of a vohole written instrument in the name of another with a fraudulent intent is undoubtedly a sufficient making; but a fraudulent insertion, alteration, or erasure, even of a letter, in any material part of the instrument, whereby a new operation is given to it, will amount to a forgery, 1 Strange, 18; 1 And. 101; 5 Esp. 100; 5 Strobh. So. C. 581; and this, although it be afterwards executed by a person ignorant of the deceit. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 855.

The fraudulent application of a true signature to a false instrument for which it was not intended, or vice versâ, will also be a forgery. 11 Gratt. Va. 822 ; 1 Add. Penn. 44. For example, it is forgery in an individual who is requested to draw a will for a sick person in a particular way, instead of doing so, to insert legacies of his own head, and then procure the signature of such sick person to be affixed to the paper without revealing to him the legacies thus fraudulently inserted. Noy, 101 ; F. Moore, 759, 760 ; Coke, 3d Inst. 170 ; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 70, s. 2; 2 Russell, Crimes, 318 ; Bacon, Abr. Forgery (A).

It has even been intimated by Lord Ellenborough that a party who makes a copy of a receipt and adds to such copy material words not in the original, and then offers it in evidence on the ground that the original has leen lost, may be prosecuted for forgery. 5 Esp. 100.
3. It is a sufficient making where, in the writing, the party assumes the name and character of a person in existence. 2 Rnssell, Crimes, 327 . But the adoption of a false description and addition where a false name is not assumed and there is no person answering the description, is not a forgery. I Russ. & R. 405.
Making an instrument in a fictitious name, or the name of a non-existing person, is as much a forgery as making it in the name of an existing person, 2 East, PI. Cr. 957 ; 2 Russell, Orimes, 328 ; and although a man may make the instrument in his own name, if he represent it as the instrument of another of the same name, when in fact there is no such person, it will be a forgery in the name of a non-existing person. 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 775 ; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 963. But the correctness of this decision has been doubted. Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 384.
4. Though, in general, a party cannot be guilty of forgery by a mere non-feasance, yet if in drawing a will he should fraudulently omit a legacy which he had been directed to insert, and by the omission of such bequest it would cause a material alteration iu the limitation of a bequest to another, as, where the omission of a devise of an estate for life to one causes a devise of the same lands to another to pass a present estate which would otherwise have passed a remainder only, it would be a forgery. F. Moore, 760; Noy, 101; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. e. 70, s. 6; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 856; 2 Russell, Crimes, 320.

It may be observed that the offence of forgery may be complete without a publication of the forged instrument. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 855 ; 3 Chitty, Crim. Law, 1038.
5. With regard to the thing forged, it may be observed that it has been holden to be forgery at common law fraudulently to falsify or falsely make records and other matters of a public nature, 1 Rolle, Abr. 65, 68; a parish register, 1 Hawkins, Pl.Cr.c. 70; a letter in the name of a magistrate, or of the governor of a gavel directing the discharge of a prisoner. 6 Carr. & P. 129 ; Mood. Cr. Cas. 379.

With regard to private writings, forgery may be committed of any writing which, if genuine, would operate as the foundation of another man's liability or the evidence of his right, 3 Greenleaf, Ev. 8 103; 2 Mass. 397; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 237; 8 Yerg. Tenn. 150 : as, a letter of recommendation of a person as a man of property and pecuniary responsibility, 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 8365 ; an acceptance of a conditional order for the delivery of goods, 3 Cush. Mass. 150 ; a false testimonial to character, Templ. & M. Cr. Cas. 207; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 492 ; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 285; a railway-pass, 2 Carr. & K. 604 ; a railroadticket, 3 Gray, Mass. 441; or fraudulently to testify or falsely to make a deed or will. I Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 70, & 10. Forgery may be of a printed or engraved as well as of a written instrument. 3 Gray, Mass. 441 ; 9 Pick. Mass. 312. A forgery must be of some document or writing: therefore the printing an artist's name in the corner of a picture, in order falsely to pass it off as an original picture by that artist, is not a forgery. 1 Dearsl. & B. Cr. Cas. 460.
6. The intent must be to defraud another; but it is not requisite that any one should have been injured: it is sufficient that the instrument forged might have proved prejudicial. 3 Gill & J. Mu. 2ะ0; 4 W ash. C.C. 726. It has been holden that the jury ought to infer an intent to defraud the person who would have to pay the instrument, if it were genuine, although from the manner of executing the forgery, or from the person's ordinary caution, it would not be likely to impose upon him; and although the object was general to defraud whoever might take the instrument, and the intention of the defrauding in particular the person who would have to pay the instrument, if genuine, did not enter into the contemplation of the prisoner. Russ. & R. 291. See Russell, Crimes, b. 4, c. 32, s. 3 ; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 853; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 367 ; 2 id. 775; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 400.
\%. Most, and perhaps all, of the states in the Union have passed laws making certain acts to be forgery, and the national legislature has also enacted several on this subject, which are here referred to; but these statutes do not take away the character of the offence as a misdemeanor at common law, but only provide additional punishment in the cases particularly enumerated in the statutes. 3 Cush. Mass. $150 ; 3$ Gray, Mass. 441 ; Act of March 2, 1803, 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 888; Act of March 3, 1813, 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1304; Act of March 1, 1853, 3 Story, U. S. FORINSECUS (Lat.), FORINSIC. Outward; on the outside; without; foreign; belonging to another manor. Silio forinsecus, the outward ridge or furrow. Servitium forinsecum, the payment of aid, scutage, and other extraordinary military services. Forinsecum manerium, the manor, or that part of it which lies outside the bars or town and is not included within the liberties of it. Cowel ; Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict. ; Jacob, Foreign Service; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 273.

FORISDISPUTATIONES. In CiVl Law. Arguments in court. Disputations or arguments before a court. 1 K ent, Comm. 530 ; Vicat, Voc. Jur. verb. Disputatio.

FORISFACERE (Lat.). To forfeit. To lose on account of crime. It may be applied not only to estates, but to a variety of other things, in precisely the popular sense of the word forfeit. Spelman, Gloss. ; DuCange.
To confiscate. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.
To commit an offence; to do a wrong. To do something beyond or outside of (foris) what is right (extra rationem). DuCange. To do a thing against or without law. Coke, Litt. $59 a$.

To disclaim. DuCange.
FORISFACTUM (Lat.). Forfeited.

Bona forisfacta, forfeited goods. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 299. A crime. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.

FORISFACTURA (Lat.). A crime or offeuce through which property is forfeited. Leg. Edw. Cunf. c. 32.

A fine or punishment in money.
Forfeiture. The loss of property or life in consequence of crime. Spelman, Gloss.
Forisfactura plena. A forfeiture of all a man's property. Things which were forfeited. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.
FORISFACTDS(Lat.). A criminal. One who has forfeited his life by commission of a capital offence. Spelman, Gloss.; Leg. Rep. c. 77; DuCange. Si quispiam forisfoctus poposcerit regis misericordiam, etc. (if any criminal shall have asked pardon of the king, etc.). Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 18.

Forisfactus servus. A slave who has been a free man but has forfeited his freedom by crime. Leg. Athelstan, c. 3 ; DuCange.

FORISFAMILIATED, FORISFA-miliatus. In Old English Law. Portioned off. A son was forisfamiliated when he had a portion of his father's estate assigned to him during his father's life, in lieu of his share of the inheritance, when it was done at his request and he assented to the assignment. The word etymologically denotes put out of the family, emancipated.

One who is no loriger an heir of the parent. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel. Similar in some degree to the modern practice of advancement.
FORISJUDICATIO (Lat.). In Old English Law. Forejudger. A forejudgment. A judgment of court whereby a mau is put out of possession of a thing. Cuke, Litt. 100 b; Cunninghan, Law Dict. forisjudicatus (Lat.). Forejudged; sent from court; banished. Deprived of a thing by judgment of court. Bracton, 250 b ; Coke, Litt. 100 b; DuCange.

FORISJURARE (Lat.). To forswear; to aljure; to abandon. Forisjurare parentilam. To remove oneself from parental authority. The person who did this lost his rights as heir. DuCange; Leg. Hen. I. c. 88.

Provinciam forisjurare. To forswear the country. Spelman, Gloss.; Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 6 .

FORM. In Practice. The model of an instrument or legal proceeding, containing the substance and the principal terms, to be used in accordance with the laws.
The legal order or method of legal proceedings or construction of legal instruments.
2. Form is ususlly put in contradistinotion to substance. For sxample, by the operation of the statute of 27 Eliz. o. 5, s. 1, sill merely formal defects in pleading, except in dilatory pleas, ars aided on general demurrer. The difference between matter of form and matter of substance, in general, under this statute, as lrid down by Lord Hobart, is that "that without which the right doth sufficiently appear to the court is form" " but that any defect "by reason whereof the right appears not" is a defect in substance. Hob. 233. A distinction somewhat more definits is that if the matter pleaded be in itself insuffioient, without reference to the manner of plesding it, the defect is substantial ; bur tiat if the fault is in the manner of alleging it, the defect is formal. Dougl. b83.
For example, the omission of a consideration in a declaration in assumpsit, or of the performance of a condition precedent, when snoh condition exists, of a conversion of property of the plaintiff, in trover, of knowledge in the defendant, in an sction for misebisf done by bis dog, of malice, in an aotion for malicious prosecution, and the like, are sll defects in substance. On the other hand, duylicity, a negative pregnant, argumentative pleading, a special plea, amounting to the general issue, omisaion of a day, when time is immaterisl, of a place, in transitory actions, and the like, ars only faults in form. Baoon, Abr. Plena, etc. (N 5, 6); Comyns, Dig. Pleader' (Q 7), 10 Coke, 95 a; 2 Strange, 694; Gould, Plead. e. 9, ${ }^{2}$ 亿 17, 18; 1 Black stone, Comm. 142.
3. At the same time that fastidious objections against trifing errors of furm, arising from mere olerical mistakes, are not encoursged or sanctioned by the courts, it bas been justly observed that "infinits mischief has been produced by the facility of the courts in overlooking matters of furm : it encourages carelesseness, and places ignorance too much upon a footing with knowledge amongst thoss who practise the drawing of pleadings." | Bis. & P. 59 ; 2 Binn. Penn. 434. See, generally, Buavier, Inst. Index.
forma pauperis. See In Forma Pauperis.
FORMALITY. The conditions which must be observed in making contracts, and the words which the law gives to be used in order to render them valid; it also signifies the conditions which the law requires to make regular proceedings.
FORMED ACTION. An action for which a form of words is provided which must be exactly followed. 10 Mod . 140.
FORMEDON. An aucient writ provided by stat. Westm. 2 ( 13 Edw. I.) c. 1, for him who hath right to lands or tenements by rirtue of a gift in tail. Stearns, Real Act. 322.

It is a writ in the nature of a writ of right, and is the highest remedy which a tenant in tail can have. Coke, Litt. 316.
This writ lay for those interested in an estate-tail who were liable to be defeated of their right by a discontinuance of the estatetail, who were not entitled to a writ of right absolute, since none but those who claimed in fee-simple were entitled to this. Fitzberbert, Nat. Brev. 255. It is called formedon because the plaintiff in it claimed per formam doni.
It is of three sorts: in the remainder; in the reverter; in the descender. 2 Preston, Abstr. 343.
The writ was abolished in England hy stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.
FORMEDON IN THE DESCENDER. A writ of formedon which lies where a gitt is made in tail and the tenant in tail aliens the lands or is disseised of them and dies, for the heir in tail to recover them, a ainst the actual tenant of the freehold. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 211 ; Littleton, & 595.

If the demandant claims the inheritance as an estate-tail which ought to come to him by descent from some ancestor to whom it was first given, his remedy is by a writ of formedon in the descender. Stearns, Real Act. 322.
It must have been brought within twenty years from the death of the ancestor who was disseised. 21 Jac. I. c. 16; 3 Brod. & B. 217; 6 East, 83; 4 Term, 300; 5 Barnew. & Ald. ; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 193, n.
FORMEDON IN THE REMAINDER. A writ of formedon which lies where lands are given to one for life or in tail with remainder to another in fee or in tail, and he who hath the particular estate dies without issue, and a stranger intrudes upon him in remainder and keeps him out of possession. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 211; Stearns, Real Act. 323; Littleton, & 597; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 293.

FORMEDON IN THE REVERTER. A writ of formedon which lies where there is a gift in tail, and afterwards, by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion falls in upon the doner, his heirs or assigns.
In this case the demandant must suggest the gift, his own right as derived from the donor, and the failure of heirs of the donee. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 293; Stearns, Real Act. 323; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 212 ; Littleton, 8597.
FORMER RECOVERY. A recovery in a former action.
2. It is a general rule that in a real or personal action a judgment unreversed, whether it be by confession, verdict, or demurrer, is a perpetual bar, and may be pleaded to any new action of the same or a like nature, for the same cause. Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I 12, n. 2); 6 Coke, 7 ; Hob. 4, 5 ; Ventr. 70.
3. There are two exceptions to this general rule. First, in the case of mutual dealings between the parties, when the defendant omits to set off his counter-demand, he may recover in a cross-action. Second, when the defendant in ejectment neglects to bring forward his title, he may avail himself of a new suit. 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 492, 502, 510 . It is evident that in these cases the cause of the second action is not the same as that of the first, and, therefore, a former recovery cannot be pleaded. In real actions, one is not a bar to an action of a higher nature. 6 Coke, 7. See 12 Mass. 337 ; Res Adjudiсата.
FORMULARIES. A cellection of the forms of proceedings among the Franks and other early European nations. Coke, Litt. Butler's note 77.
FORNICATION. In. Criminal Law. Onlawful carnal knowledge by an unmarried person of another, whether the latter be varried or unmarried.
Fornioation is distinguighed from adultery by the fact that the guilty person is not married.

Four cases of nolawful interconrse may arise: where both parties are married; where the man only is married ; where the woman only is married; where neither is married. In the first case such intercourse must be adultery; in the second case the crime is fornication only on the part of the woman, but adultery on the part of the man; in the third case it is edultery in the woman, and foruication (by atatute in some states, adultery) in the man; in the last case it is fornication only in both parties.

In some states it is indictable by statute, 6 Vt. 311 ; 2 Tayl. No. C. 165 ; 2 Gratt. Va. 555 , and where it is there may be a conviction for this offence on an indictment for adultery. 2 Dall. Penn. 124; 4 Ired. No. C. 231; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, & 12.

FORO. In Spanish Law. The place where tribunals hear and determine causes,exercendarum litium locus. This word, according to Varro, is derived from ferendo, and is so called because all lawsuits have reference to things that are vendible, which presupposes the administration of justice to take place in the markets.
FORPRISE. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. Cowel; Blount.

In ancther sense, the word is taken for any exaction. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FORSPEAKER. An attorney or advocate. One who speaks for another. Blount.

FORSTAL. An intercepting or stopping in the highway. See Forestali.

Forstaller, forstall, forstallare, forstallment, forstaller, may all be found under Forestall.

FORSWEAR. In Criminal Law. To swear to a falsehcod.

This word has not the same meaning as perjury. It does not, ex vi termini, signify a false swearing before an officer or court having authority to administer an oath, on an issue. A man may be forsworn by making a false oath before an incompetent tribunal, as well as before a lawful court. Hence, to say that a man is forsworn, will or will not be slander, as the circumstances show that the oath was or was not taken before a lawful authority. Heard, Libel & S. 88 16, 34 ; Croke Car. 378; Lutw. 292; 1 Rolle, Abr. 39, pl. 7; Bacon, Abr. Slander (B 3); Croke Eliz. 609 ; 1 Johns. N. Y. $505 ; 2$ id. $10 ; 13$ id. 48, 80 ; 12 Mass. 496 ; 1 Hayw. No. C. 116 .

FORTHCOMING. In Scotch Law. The action by which an arrestment (attachment) of goods is made available to the creditor or holder.
The arrestee and common debtor are called up before the judge, to hear sentence given ordering the debt to be paid or the arrested goods to be given up to the creditor arresting. Bell, Dict.
FORTHCOMING BOND. A bond given for the security of the sheriff, conditioned to produce the property levied on when required. 2 Wash. Va. 189; 11 Gratt. Va. 522.

FORTEWITH. As soon as by reasonable exertion, oonfined to the object, it may be accomplished. This is the import of the term; it varies, of course, with every particular case. 4 Tyrwh. 837; Styles, Reg. 452, 453.

FORTIA (Lat.). A word of art, signifying the furnishing a weapon of force to do the fact, and by force whereof the fact was committed, and he that furnished it was not present when the act was done. Coke, 2d Inst. 182.

The general meaning of the word is an unlawful force. Spelman, Gloss.; DuCange.

FORTUITOUS COLLISION. An accidental collision.

FORTUITOUS EVENT. In Civil Law. That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted. La. Code, art. 2522, no. 7.

That which neither of the parties has occasioned or could prevent. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2. An unforeseen event which cannot be prevented. Dict. de Jurisp. Cas fortuit.

There is a difference between a fortuitous event, or inevitable aocident, and irresistible foroe. By the former, commonly called the act of God, is meant any aceident produced by physical causes which are irresistible; such as a loss by lightning or storms, by the perils of the seas, by inundations and earthquakes, or by sudden death or illuess. By the latter is meant such an interposition of human agenoy as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncentrollable. Of this nature are losses oocasioned by the inroads of a hostile army, or by public encmies. Story, Bailm. ${ }_{8} 25$; Lois des Bât. pt. 2, o. 2, & 1.

Fortuitous events are fortunate or unfortunate. The accident of finding a treasure is a fortuitous event of the first class. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2, $z 2$.

Involuntary obligations may arise in consequence of fortuitous events. For example, when to save a vessel from shipwreck it is necessary to throw goods overhoard, the loss must be borne in common; there arises, in this case, between the owners of the vessel and of the goods remaining on board, an obligation to bear proportionably the loss which has been sustained. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. $2,82$.

See, in general, Dig. 50. 17. 23 ; id. 16. 3. 1 ; id. 19.2. 11 ; id. 44. 7. 1; id. 18. 6. 10; id. 13. 6. 18 ; id. 26. 7. 50 .

FORUM. In Roman Law. The paved open space in cities, particularly in Rome, where were held the solemn business assemblies of the people, the markets, the exchange (whence cedere foro, to retire from 'change, equivalent to "to become bankrupt"), and where the magistrates sat to transact the business of their office. It corresponded to the aropa of the Greeks. Dion. ILal. 1. 3, p. 200. It came afterwards to mean any place where causes were tried, locus exercendarum litium. Isidor. 1. 18, Orig. A court of justice.

The obligation and the right of a person to have his case decided by a particular court.

It is often synonymous with that signification of judicium which corresponds to our word court (which see), in the sense of jurisdiction : e.g. foro inserdicere, 1. 1, & 13, D. 1, 12; C. 9, & 4, D. 48, 19;
fori prescriptio, 1. 7, pr. D. 2, 8; 1. 1, C. 3, 24; forum rei accusator sequitur, 1. 5, pr. C. 3, 13. In this sense the forum of a person means both the obligation and the right of that person to have his cause decided by a particular court. 5 Glück, Pand. 237. What court shonld have cognizance of the oause depends, in general, apon tho person of the defendant, or upon the person of some one oonnected with the defendant.
2. Jurisdictions depending upon the person of the defendant. By modern writers upon the Roman law, this sort of jurisdiction is distinguished as that of common right, forum commune, and that of special privilege, forum privilegiatum.
(A.) Forum commune. The jurisdiction of common right was either general, forum generale, or special, forum speciale.
(a.) Forum generalc. General jurisdiction was of two kinds, the forum originis, which was that of the hirthplace of the party, and the forum domicilii, that of his domicile. The forum originis was either commune or proprium. The former was that legal status which all free-horn subjects of the empire, wherever residing, had at Rome when they were found there and had not the jus revocandi domum (i.e. the right of one absent from his domicile of transferring to the forum domicilii a suit instituted against him in the place of his temporary sojouln). L. 2, 883,4 , 5, D. 5, 1; 1. 28, & 4, D. 4, 6; 3 Glück, Pand. 188. After the privilege of Roman citizenship was conferred by Caracalla upon all freeborn subjects of the empire, the city of Rome was considered the common home of all, communis omnium patria, and every citizen, no matter where his domicile, could, unless protected by special privilege, be sued at Rome while there present. Noodt, Com. ad Dig. 5,1, p. 153 ; Hofacker, Pr. Jur. Civ. $z 4221$. The forum originis proprium, or forum originis speciale, was the court of that place of which at the time of the party's birth his father was a citizen, though that might possibly be neither his own birthplace nor the actual domicile of his father. Except in particular places, as Delphi and Pontus, where the nativity of the mother conferred the pririlege of ciivenship upon her son, the birthplace of the father only was regarded. L. $1, \%$ 2, D. 50, 1. The case of the nullius filius was also an exception. Such a person having no known father derived his forum originis from the birthplace of his mother. L. 9, D. 50, 1.

Adoption might confer a twofold citizenship, that of the natural and that of the adoptive father, 1. 7, C. 8, 48 ; but the latter was lost by emancipation. L. 16, D. 50 , 1. In general, the hirthplace of the father alone fixed the forum originis of the son. Amaya, Com. ad Tit. Ood. de incolis, n. 21, seq. 99. The forum originis was unchangeable, and continued although the party had established his domicile in another place: consequently, he could always be sued in the courts of that jurisdiction whenever he was there present. 6 Gliùck, Pand. p. 260.
3. Forum domicilii. The place of the domicile exercised the greatest influence over the rights of the party. (As to what constitutes domicile, see Domiche.) In general, one was subject to the laws and courts of his domicile alone, unless specially privileged. L. 29, D. 50, 1. This legal status, forum domicilii, was universal, in the sense that all suits of whatever nature, real or personal, petitory or possessory, might be instituted in the courts of the defendant's domicile even when the thing in dispute was not situated within the jurisdiction of such court, and the defendant was not present at such place at the commencement of the suit. 6 Glitick, Pand. 287 et seq. It seems, however, that as regarded real actions the forum domicilii was concurrent with the forum rei sitoe, id. 290, and, in general, was concurrent with special jurisdictions of all kinds; although in some exceptional cases the law conferred exclusive cognizance upon a special jurisdiction, forum speciale. In cases of concurrence the plaintiff had his election of the jurisdiction.
In another sense the forum domicilii was personal, as it did not necessarily descend to the heir of defendant. See jurisdiction ex persona alterius, at the end of this article.
4. Forum speciale, particular jurisdiction. These were very numerous. The more importantare: (1.) Forum continentic causarum. Sometimes two or more actions or disputed questions are so connected that they cannot advantageously be tried separately, although in strictness they belong to different jurisdictions. In such cases the modern civil law permits them to be determined in a single court, although such court would be incompetent in regard to a portion of them taken singly. This beneficial rule did not exist in tho Roman law, though formerly supposed to be derived thence. See 11 Glück, Pand. 8750 , and cases there cited. (2.) Forum contractus, the court having cognizance of the action on a contract. If the place of performance was ascertained by the contract, the court of that place had exclusive jurisdiction of actions founded thereon. 6 Gliuck, Pand. 296. If the place of performance was uncertain, the court of the place where the contract was made might have jurisdiction, provided the defendant at the time of the institution of the suit was either present at that place or had attachable property there. Id. 298.
(3.) Forum delicti, forum deprehensionis, is the jurisdiction of the person of a criminal, and may be the court of the place where the offence was committed, or that of the place where the criminal was arrested. The latter jurisdiction, forum deprehensionis, extended at most only to the preliminary examination of the person arrested; and even this was abolished by Justinian, Nov. lxix. c. 1, cxxxiv. c. 5 , on the ground that the examination as well as the punishment should take place on the spot where the crime was committed. 6 Glück, Pand. 8517.
5. (4.) Forum rei sitoe is the jurisdiction of the court of that place where is situated the thing which is the object of the action.

Such court had jurisdiction over all actions affecting the possession of the thing, and over all petitory actions in rem against the possessur in that character, and all such actions in personam so far as they were brought for the recovery of the thing itself. But such court had not jurisdiction of purely personal actions. Id. 8219.
5. Forum arresti is a jurisdiction unknown to the Roman law, but of frequent occurrence in the modern civil law. It is that over persons or things detained by a judicial order, and corresponds in some degree to the attachment of our practice. Id. ${ }_{8}^{2} 519$.
Forum geste administrationis, the jurisdiction over the accounts and administration of guardians, agents, and all persons appointed to manage the affairs of third parties. The court which appointed such administrator, or wherein the cause was pending in which such appoiniment was made, or within whose territorial limits the business of the administration was transacted, had exclusive jurisdiction over all suits arising out of his acts or brought for the purpose of compelling him to account, or hrought by him to recover compensation for his outlays. L. 1, C. 3,21 ; 6 Glück, Pand. &̨ 521.
6. Privileged jurisdictions, forum privilegiatum. In general, the privileged jurisdiction of a person held the same rank as the forum domicilii, and, like that, did not supplant the particular jurisdictions above named save in certain exceptional cases. The privilege was general in its nature, and applied to all cases not specially excepted, but it only arose when the person possessing it was sued by another; for he could not assert it when he was the plaintiff, the rule being, actor sequitur forum rei, the plaintiff must resort to the jurisdiction of the defendant. It was in general limited to personal actions; all reul actions brought against the defendant in the character of possessor of the thing in dispute followed the forum speciale. The privilege embraced the wife of the privileged person and his children so long as they were under his potestas. And, lastly, when a forum privilegiatum purely personal conflicted with the forum speciale, the former must yield. 6 Glick, Pand. 339-341. To these rules some exceptions occur, which will be mentioned below.

Privileged persons were: 1. Personce miserabiles, who were persons under the special protection of the law on account of some incapacity of age, sex, mind, or condition. These were entitled, whether as plaintifs or defendants, to carry their causes directly before the emperor, and, passing over the inferior courts, to demand a hearing before his supreme tribunal, whenever they had valid grounds for doubting the impartiality or fearing the procrastination of the inferior courts, or for dreading the influence of a powerful adversary. 6 Glück, Pand. & 522 . On the other hand, if their adversary, on any pretext whatever, had himself passed by the inferior courts and applied directly to the supreme tribunal, they were not bound to appear there if this would be disadvantageous to them, but, in order to avoid the increase of costs and other inconveniences, might decline answering except before their forum domicilii. The personce miserabiles thus privileged were minor orphans, widows, whether rich or poor, persons afflicted by chronic disease or other forms of illness (diuturno morbo fatigati et debiles), which included paralytics, epileptics, the deaf, the dumb, and the blind, etc., persons impoverished by calamity or otherwise distressed, and the poor when their adversary was rich and powerful, prosertion cum alicujus potentiam perhorrescant. This privilege was, however, not available when both parties were personce miserabiles; when it had been waived either expressly or tacitly; when the party had become persona miscrabilis since the institution of the action,-except always the case of reasonable suspicion in regard to the impartiality of the judge; when the party had become persona miserabilis through his own crime or fraud; when the cause was trivial, or belonged to the class of unconditionally privileged cases having an exclusive forum; and when the cause of action was a right acquired from a persona non miserabilis. 6 Gluíck, Pand. $\% 522$.
7. Clerici, the clergy. The privilege of clerical persons to be impleaded only in the episcopal courts commenced under the Christian emperors. Justinian enlarged the jurisdiction of these courts, not only by giving them exclusive cognizance of affairs and offences purely ecclesiastical, but also by constituting them the ordinary primary courts for the trial of suits brought against the clergy even for temporal causes of action. Nov. 83, Nov. 123, cap. 8, 21, 22, 23. The causes of action cognizable in the forum ecclesiasticum were-1. causce ecclesiastica mere tales, purely ecclesiastical, i.e. those pertaining to doctrine, church services and ceremonies, and right to membership; those relating to the synodical assemblies and church discipline; those relating to offices and dignities and to the election, ordination, translation, and deposition of pastors and other of-fice-bearers of the church, and especially those relating to the validity of marriages and to divorce; or, 2. causce ecclesiastica mixtce, mixed causes, i.e. disputes in regard to church lands, tithes, and other revenues, their management and disbursement, and legacies to pious uses, in regard to the boundaries of ecclesiastical jurisdictions, in regard to patronage and advowsons, in regard to burials and to consecrated places, as graveyards, convents, etc., and, lastly, in regard to offences against the canons of the church, as simony, etc. But the privilege here treated of was the personal privilege of the clergy when defendant in a suit to have the cause tried before the episcopal court; when plaintiff, the rule actor sequitur forum rei prevailed. All persons employed in the church service in an official capacity, even though not in holy orders, were thus privileged. But the privilege did not embrace real actions, nor personal ac tions brought to recover the possession of a thing: these must be instituted in the forum rei sitce. The jurisdiction extended to all personal actions, criminal as well as civil; although in criminal actions the ecclesiastical courts had no authority to inflict corporeal or capital punishment, being restricted to the canonical judgments of deprivation, degradation, excommunication, etc. 6 Glück, Pand. 8523.
8. Academici. In the modern civil law the officers and students of the universities are privileged to be sued before the university courts. This species of privilege was unknown to the Roman law. See 6 Glück, Pand. 8524.

Milites. Soldiers had special military courts as well in civil as criminal cases. In civil matters, however, the forum militare had preference only over the courts of the place where the soldier defendant was stationed; as he did not forfeit his domicil by absence on military duty, he might always be sued for debt in the ordinary forum domicilii, provided he had left there a procurator to transact his business for bim, or had property there which might be proceeded against. L. $3, \mathrm{C}$. 2,$51 ; 1.6$, eodem ; 1. 4, C. 7, 53. Besides this, the privilege of the forum militare did not extend to such soldiers as carried on a trade or profession in addition to their military service and were sued in a case growing out of such trade, although in other respects they were subject to the military tribunal. L. 7, C. 3,13 . If after an action had been commenced the defendant became a soldier, the privilege did not attacb, but the suit must be concluded before the court which had acquired jurisdiction of it. The forum militgre had cognizance of personal actions only. Actions arising out of real rights could be instituted only in the forum rei sitce. In the Roman law, ordinary crimes of soldiers were cognizable in the forum delicti. The modern civil law is otherwise. 6 Gliick, Pand. 418, 421.

There are many classes of persons who are privileged in respect to jurisdiction under the modern civil law who were not so privileged by the Roman law. Such are officers of the court of the sovereign, including ministers of state and councillors, ambassadors, noblemen, etc. These do not require extended notice.
9. Jurisdiction ex persona alterius. A person might be entitled to be sued in a particular court on grounds depending upon the person of another. Such were-1. The wife, who, if the marriage bad been legally contracted, acquired the forum of her busband, $1.65, \mathrm{D}$. 5 , 1; 1. ult. D. 50,$1 ; 1.19$, D. 2, 1, and retained it until her second marriage, $1.22,81$, D. 50,1 , or change of domicile. $\quad 39$, Voet. Com. ad Pand. D. 5, 1. 2. Servants, who possessed the jurisdiction of their master as regarded the forum domicilii, and also the forum privilegiatum, so far at least as the privilege was that of the class to which such master belonged and was not purely personal. Glitck, Pand. $\& 510$ b. 3. The heres, who in many cases retained the jurisdiction of his testator. When sued in the character of heir in respect to causes of action upon which suit had been commenced before the testator's death, he must submit to the forum which had acquired cognizance of the suit. Ll. 30, 34, D. 5,1 . When the cause of action accrued, but the aotion was not commenced, in the lifetime of the testator, the heir must submit to special jurisdictions to which the testator would have been subjected, as the forum contractus or gestoe administrationes, especially if personally present or possessing property within such jurisdiction. L. 19, D. 5, 1. But it is even now disputed whether in such case he was bound to submit to the general jurisdiction, forum domicilii, or the privileged jurisdiction, forum privilegiatum, of his testator; though the weight of the authorities is on the side of the negative. Gluick, Pand. $\% 560$ b. If the cause of action arose after the death of the testator, as in the case of the querela inofficiosi testamenti, of partition, of suits to recover a legacy or to enforce a testamentary trust, the heir must be pursued in his own jurisdiction, i.e. the forum domiciliii or forum rei sitce. 6 Glück, Pand. 252, and authorities there cited. And, a fortiori, if the action against the heir was not in that character, but merely in the capacity of possessor of the thing in dispute, the suit must be brought before the forum to which he was himself subject. Id. p. 251.

FORUM. At Common Law. A place. A place of jurisdiction. The place where a remedy is sought. Jurisdiction. A court of justice.

Forum conscientice. The conscience.
Forum contentiosum. A court. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 211.

Forum contractus. Place of making a contract. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

Forum domesticum. A domestic court. 1 W. Blackstone, 82 .

Forum domicilii. Place of domicil. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

Forum ecclesiasticum. An ecclesiastical court.

Forum rei gestce. Place of transaction. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

Forum rei sitce. The place where the thing is situated.
The tribunal which has authority to decide respecting something in dispute, located within its jurisdiction: therefore, if the matter in oontroversy is land or other immovahle property, the judgment pronounced in the forum rei aite is held to be of universal ohligation, as to all matters of right and title on which it professes to decide, in relation to suoh property. And the same principle applies to all other cases of proceedings in rem, where the subject is movable property, within the jurisdiction of the court prononnoing judgment. Story, Confl. Laws, 88 532, 545, 551, 591,592 ; Kaimes, Eq. b. 3, c. 8, z 4; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8541 .

Forum seculare. A secular court.
See, generally, DuCange; 2 Kent, Comm. 363 ; Story, Confl. Laws; Greenleaf, Ev.; Guyot, Rép. Univ.

FORWARDING MERCHANT. A person who receives and forwards goods, taking upon himself the expenses of transportation, for which be receives a compensation from the owners, but who has no concern in the vessels or wagons by which they are transported, and no interest in the freight.

Such a one is not deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman or agent. 12 Johns. N. Y. 232; 7 Cow. N. Y. 497. He is required to use only ordinary diligence in sending the property by responsible persons. 2 Cow. N. Y. 593. See Story, Bailm.

FOSSA (Lat.). In English Law. A ditch full of water, where formerly women who had committed a felony were drowned; the grave. Cowel.

FOSSATORIUM OPERATIO (Lat.). The service of laboring done by the inhabitants and adjoining tenants, for repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town. A contribution in lieu of such work, called fossagium, was sometimes paid. Kennet; Cowel.

FOUNDATION. The establishment of a charity. That upon which a charity is founded and by which it is supported.

This word, in the English law, is taken in two senses, fundatio incipiens, and fundatio perficiens. As to its political capacity, an act of incorporation is metaphorically called its foundation; but as to its dotation, the first gift of revenues is called the foundation. 10 Coke, 23 a.

FOUNDER. One who endows an institution. One who makes a gift of revenues to a corporation. 10 Coke, 33 ; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 481.

In England, the king is said to be the founder of all civil corporations; and where there is an act of incorporation, he is called the general founder, and he who endows is called the perficient founder. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 481.

FOUNDEROSUS. Out of repair. Croke Car. 366.

FOUNDLING. A new-born child abandoned by its parents, who are unknown. The settlement of such a child is in the place where found.
FOUR SEAS. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into The Western, including the Scotch and Irish; The Northern, or North Sea; The Eastern, being the German Ocean; The Southern, being the British Channel. Selden, Mare Clausum, lib. 2, c. 1 .
Within the four seas means within the jurisdiction of England. 4 Coke, 125; Coke, 2d Inst. 253.

FOURCHER (Fr. to fork). In English Law. A method of delaying an action formerly practised by defendants.
When an action was brought against two, who, being jointly concerned, were not hound to answer till both appeared, and they agreed not to appear both in one day, the appearance of one exoused the other's default, who had a day given him to appear with the other: the defaulter, on the day appointed, appeared; but the first then made default: in this manner they forked each other, and practised this for delay. See Coke, 2d Inst. 250 ; Booth, Real Act. 16.
FOWLS OF WARREN. Such fowls as are preserved under the game-laws in warrens. According to Manwood, these are partridges and pheasants. According to Lord Coke, they are either campestres, as partridges, rails, and quails, sylvestres, as woodcocks and pheasants, or aquatiles, as mallards and herons. Coke, Litt. 233.
FRACTION OF A DAY. A portion of a day. The dividing a day. Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 141.
The day may be divided, however, to show which of two acts was actually done first. 3 Burr. 1434; 4 Kent, Comm. 95, n.; 11 Hou. L. 411 .

FRAIS DE JUSTICE. Costs incurred incidentally to the action. See 1 Troplong, 135, n., 122; 4 Low. C. 77.

FRANC. A French coin, of the value of about eighteen cents.

FRANC ALIEN. In French Law. An absolutely free inheritance. Allodial lands. Generally, however, the word denotes an inheritance free from seignorial rights, though held subject to the sovereign. "Dumoulin, Cout. de Par. & 1 ; Guyot, Rép. Univ.; 3 Kent, Comm. 498, n.; 8 Low. C. 95.

FRANCHISE. A special privilege conferred by government on individuals, and which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right. Angell $& A$. Corp. 84.

A particular privilege conferred by grant from government and vested in individuals. 3 Kent, Comm. 458.

A branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of a subject. Finch, lib. 2, c. 14; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 37.

In a popular sense, the word seems to be synonymous with right or privilege: as, the elective franchise.

In the United States they are usually held by corporations created for the purpose, and can be held only under legisfative grant. 15 Pick. Mass. 243 ; 4 Ill. 53; 13 Pet. 519 ; 15 Johns. N. Y. 358. They are also liable for the debts of the owner, 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 24, but cannot be sold or assigned without the consent of the legislature. See Redfield, Railw. Index.

ERANCIGENA. A designation formerly given to aliens in England.
FRANKALMOIGNE. A species of ancient tenure, still extant in England, whereby a religious corporation, aggregate or sole, holds its lands of the donor, in consideration of the religious services it performs.
2. The services rendered being divine, the tenants are not bound to take an oath of fealty to a superior lord. A tenant in frankalmoigne is not only exempt from all temporal service, but the lord of whom he holds is also bound to acquit him of every service and fruit of tenure which the lord paramount may demand of the land held by this tenure. The services to be performed are either spiritual, as prayers to God, or temporal, as the distribution of alms to the poor. Of this latter class is the office of the queen's almoner, which is usually bestowed upon the archbishop of York, with the title of lord high almoner. The spiritual services which were due before the Reformation are described by Littleton, 8135 ; since that time they have been regulated by the liturgy, or book of common prayer of the church of England. Coke, 2 d Inst. 502 ; Coke, Litt. 93, 494 a. Hargrave ed. note (b); 2 Blackstone, Comm. 101 .
3. In the United States, religious corporations hold land by the same tenure with which all other corporations and individuals hold; and the only approach to a tenancy in frankalmoigne may be found in the exemption from taxation which is enjoyed by churches in common with charitable and scientific institutions. Our religious corporations are generally restricted to the holding of any more land than is required for the immediate purposes of their incorporation; nor can they make absolute sales without first obtaining the permission of a court of equity. Subject to this restriction, they have a fee-simple estate in their lands for the purpose of alienation, but only a determinable fee for the purpose of enjoyment. On a dissolution of the corporation, the fee will revert to the original grantor and his liens; but such grantor will be forever excluded by an alienation in fee; and in that way the corporation may defeat the possibility of a reverter. 2 Kent, Comm. 281 ; 2 Preston, Est. 50. FRANK FEE. Lands not held in ancient demesne. Called "' lands pleadable at common law." Reg. Orig. 12, 14; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 161 ; Termes de la Ley.

That which a man holds to himself and his heirs and not by such service as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor. The opposite of copyhold. Cowel. A fine had in the king's court might convert demesne-lands into frank-fee. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 368.

FRANK-FERME. Lands or tenements where the nature of the fee is changed by feoffment from knight's service to yearly ser. vice, and whence no homage but such as is contained in the fenffment may be demanded. Britton, c. 66, n. 3; Cowel; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 80.

FRANK-MARRIAGE. A species of estate-tail where the donee had married one of kin (as daughter or cousin) to the donor and held the estate subject to the implied condition that the estate was to descend to the issue of such marriage. On birth of issue, as in other cases of estate-tail before the statute De Donis, the birth of issue was regarded as a condition performed, and the estate thereupon became alienable by the donee. 1 Cruise, Dig. 71; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 67.

The estate is said to be in frank-marriage because given in consideration of marriage and free from services for three generations of descendants. Blount; Cowel. See, also, 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 115; 1 Stephen, Comm. 32.

FRANK-PLEDGE. A pledge or surety for freemen. Termes de la Ley.

The bond or pledge which the inhabitants of a tithing entered into for each onc of their number that he should be forthcoming to answer every violation of law. Each boy, on reaching the age of fourteen, was obliged to find some such pledge, or be committed to prison. Blount; Cowel.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE. The privilege of sonding certain matter through the public mails without payment therefor.

It is enjoyed by various officers of the federal government, theoretically for the public good. See Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws.

FRANKIEYN (spelled, also, Francling and Franklin). A frecman; a freeholder; a gentleman. Blount; Cowel.

FRATER (Lat.). Brother.
Frater consanguineus. A brother born from the same father, though the mother may be different.

Frater nutricius. A bastard brother.
Frater uterinus. A brother who has the same mother but not the same father.

Blount; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 232. See Brother.

FRAUD. The unlawful appropriation of another's property, with knowledge, by design, and without criminal intent.
Fraud is sometimes used as a term synonymous with covin, collution, and deceit, but improperly ao. Covin ia a secret contrivance between two or more parsons to defraud and prejudice another of hia rights. Collusion is an agreement between two or more persons to defraud snother under the forms of law, or to accomplish an illegal purpose. Deceit is a fraudulent contrivance by words or acts to deceive a third person, who, relying thereupon, without carelessness or negleet of hia own, sustains damage thereby. Coke, Litt. 357 b ; Bacon, Abr. Fraud.
2. Actual or positive fraud includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice, used to circumvent; cheat, or deceive another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 8186.
For instance, the misrepresentation by word or deed of material facts, by which one exercising reaaonahle disoretion and confidence is misled to his injury, whether the misrepresentation was known to be fales, or only not known to be trus, or even if made altogether innocently; the suppression of material facts whioh one party is legally or equi. tably bound to disclose to another; all cases of unconscientious advantage in bargains obtained by imposition, circumvention, aurpriae, and undue inc fluence over persons in general, and eapecially over those who are, by reason of age, infirmity, idiocy, lunaoy, drunkenneas, coverture, or other incapacity, unable to take due care of and protect their own rights and interesta; bargains of such an unconscionable nature snd of auch gross inequality as naturally lead to the presumption of fraud, impoaition, or undue influence, when the decree of the court can place the parties in sfatu quo; essea of surpriae and audden sation, without due deliheration, of which one party takea advantage; cabes of the fraudulent suppreasion or destruction of deeds and other instruments, in violation of, or injury to, the rights of others; fraudulent awards with intent to do injustice; fraudulent and illusory appointments and revocations under powers; frandulent prevention of acts to be done for tho henefit of others under false statements or false promises; frauds in relation to truats of a secret or special nature; frauds in verdicta, judgments, decreea, and other judicial proceedings; frauds in the confusion of houndaries of estates and matters of partition and dower; frauds in the administration of charities; and frauds upon creditora and other persons standing upon a like equity, are cases of actnal fraud. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. c. 6.
3. Legal or constructive fraud includes such contracts or acts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a fraud, yet by their tendency to deceive or mislead others, or to violate private or public confidence, are prohibited by law.

Thus, for instance, contracts against some general public policy or fixed artificial policy of the law; cases arising from some peculiar confidential or fiduciary relation between the parties, where advantage is taken of that relation by the person in whom the trust or confidence is repoaed, or by third persons; agreaments and other acts of parties which operate virtually to delay, defraud, and deccivo creditors; purchases of property, with full notice of the legal or equitable title of other persons to the same property (the purchaser becoming, hy construction, particepa criminis with the fraudulent grantor) ; and voluntsry conveysnces of real eatate, as affecting the title of subsequent purchssers. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. c. 7.

According to the civilians, positive fraud consists in doing one's self, or causing another to do, such things as induce the opposite party into error, or retain him there. The intention to deceive, which is the characteristic of fraud, is here present. Fraud is also divided into that which has induced the contract, dolus dans causum contractui, and incidental or, accidental fraud. The former is that which bas been the cause or determining motive of the contract, that without which the party defrauded would not have contracted, when the artifices practised by one of the parties have been such that it is evident that without them the other would not have contracted. Incidental or accidental fraud is that by which a person, otherwise "' determined to contract, is deceived on some accessories or incidents of the contract,-for example, as to the quality of the object of the contract, or its price, -so that he has made a bad bargain. Accidental fraud does not, according to the civilians, avoid the contract, but simply subjects the party to damages. It is otherwise where the fraud has been the determining cause of the contract, qui causam dedit contractui: in that case the contract is void. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 3, c. 2, n. 85 , n. 86 , et seq. See, also, 1 Malleville, Analyse de la Discussion du Code Civil, pp. 15,$16 ;$ Bouvier, Inst. Indes.
4. What constitutes fraud. 1. It must be such an appropriation as is not permitted by law. 2. It must be with knowledge that the property is another's, and with design to deprive him of it. 3 . It is not in itself a crime, for want of a criminal intent; though it may become such in cases provided by law. Livermore, Penal Law, 739.
Fraud, in its ordinary application to cases of contracts, includes any trick or artifice employed by one person to induce another to fall into or to detain him in an error, so that he may make an agreement contrary to his interest; and it may consist in misrepresenting or concealing material facts, and may be effected by words or by actions.

While, on the one hand, the courts have aimed to repress the practice of fraud, on the other, they have required that before relieving a party from a contract on the ground of fraud, it should be made to appear that on entering into such contract he exercised a due degree of caution. Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, succurrunt leges. A misrepresentation as to a fact the truth or falsehood of which the other party has an opportunity of ascertaining, or the concealment of a matter which a person of ordinary sense, vigilance, or skill might discover, does not in law constitute fraud. Misrepresentation as to the legal effect of an agreement does not avoid it as against a party whom such misrepresentation has induced to enter into it,-every man being presumed to know the legal effect of an instrument which he signs or of an act which he performs.
5. An intention to violate entertained at the time of entering into a contract, but not afterwards carried into effect, does not vitiate the contract. Per Tindal, C. J., 2 Scott, 588, 594; 4 Barnew. & C. 506, 512; per Parke, B., 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 115, 122. But when one person misrepresents or conceals a material fact which is peculiarly within his own knowle lge, or if it is also within the reach of the other party, is a device to induce him to refrain from inquiry, and it is shown that the concealment or other deception was practised with respect to the particular transaction, such transaction will be void on the ground of fraud. 6 Clark & F. Hou. L. 232; Comyn, Contr. 38; per Tindal, C. J., 3 Mann. & G. 446, 450. And even the concealment of a matter which may disable a party from performing the contract is a fraud. 9 Barnew. & C. 387 ; per Littledale, J.
6. Equity doctrine of fraud. It is sometimes inaccurately said that such and such transactions amount to fraud in equity, though not in law; according to the popular notion that the law allows or overlooks certain kinds of fraud which the more conscientions rules of equity condemn and punish. But, properly speaking, fraud in all its shapes is as odious in law as in equity. The difference is that, as the law courts are constituted, and as it has been found in centuries of experience that it is convenient they should be constituted, they cannot deal with fraud otherwise than to punish it by the infliction of damages. All those manifold varieties of fraud against which specific relief, of a preventive or remedial sort, is required for the purposes of substantial justice, are the subjects of equity and not of law jurisdiction.
7. What constitutes a case of fraud in the view of courts of equity, it would be difficult to specify. It is, indeed, part of the equity doctrine of fraud not to define it, not to lay down any rule as to the nature of it, lest the craft of men should find ways of committing fraud which might escape the limits of such a rule or definition. It includes all acts, omissions, or concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust or confidence justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another.

It is said by Lord Hardwicke, 2 Ves. Ch. 155, that in equity fraud may be presumed from circumstances, but in law it must be proved. His meaning is, unquestionably, no more than this:-that courts of equity will grant relief upon the ground of fraud established by a degree of presumptive evidence which courts of law would not deem suffcient proof for their purposes; that a higher degree, not a different kind, of proof may be required by courts of law to make out what they will act upon as fraud. Both tribunals accept presumptive or circumstantial proof, if of sufficient force. Circumstances of mere suspicion, leading to no certain results, will not, in either, be held sufficient to establish fraud.
8. The equity doctrine of fraud extends, for certain purposes, to the violation of that class of so-called imperfect obligations'Which are binding on conscience, but which haman laws do not and cannot ordinarily undertake to enforce: as in a large variety of cases of contracts which courts of equity do not set aside, but at the same time refuse to lend their aid to enforce. 2 Kent , Comm. 39; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 630; 1 Ball & B. Ch. Ir. 250, 251.

The following classification of frauds as a head of equity jurisdiction is given by Lord Hardwicke, 2 Ves. Ch. 155.

1. Fraud, or dolus malus, may be actual, arising from facts and circumstances of imposition. 2. It may be apparent from the intriusic nature and subject of the bargain itself, such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make, on the one hand, and no honest or fair man would accept, on the other. 3. It may be inferred from the circumstances and condition of the parties; for it is as much against conscience to take advantage of a man's weakness or necessity as of his ignorance. 4. It may be collected from the nature and circumstances of the transaction, as being an imposition on third persons.
2. Effect of. Fraud, both at law and in equity, when sufficiently proved and ascertained, avoids a contract $a b$ initio, whether the fraud be intended to operate against one of the contracting parties, or against third parties, or against the public. 1 Fonblanque, Eq. 3d ed. 66, note; 6 th ed. 122, and notes; Newland, Contr. 352; 1 W. Blackst. 465 ; Dougl. 450; 3 Burr. 1909; 3 Ves. & B. Ch. 42; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 155, 306, 698; 1 Schoales & L. 209 ; Verplank, Contr. passim; Domat, Lois Civ. p. 1, l. 4, t. 6, s. 3, n. 2.
The fraud of an agent by a misrepresentation which is embodied in the contract to which his agency relates, avoids the contract. But the party committing the fraud cannot in any case himself avoid the contract on the ground of the fraud. Chitty, Contr. 590, and cases cited.

As to frauds in contracts and dealings, the common law subjects the wrong-doer, in several instances, to an action on the case, such as actions for fraud and deceit in contracts on an express or implied warranty of title or soundness, etc. But fraud gives no action in any case without damage, 3 Term, 56 ; and in matters of contract it is merely a defence: it cannot in any case constitute a new contract. 7 Ves. Ch. 211 ; 2 Miles, Penn. Rep. 229. It is essentially ad hominem. 4 Term, 337, 338.
10. In Criminal Law. Without the express provision of any statute, all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are condemned by the common law, and punishable according to the heinousness of the offence. Coke, Litt. 3 b; Dy. 295 ; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 71.
In oonsidering frand in its criminal aspect, it is often difficult to determine whether facts in evidence constitute a fraud, or amount to a felony. It seems now to be agreed that if the property obtained, whether by means of a false token or a false pretence, be parted with absolutely by the owner, it is a fraud; but if the poseesgion only be parted with, and that possession be obtained by fraud, it will he felony. Bacon, Abr. Fraud; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 1066; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 673.
11. Of those gross frauds or cheats which, as being "levelled against the public justice of the kingdom," are punishable by indictment or information at the common law, 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, 84 , p. 821, the following are ex-amplse:--uttering a fictitious bank bill, 2 Mass. 77 ; selling unwholesome provisions, 4 Blackstone, Comm. 162; mala praxis of a physician, 1 Ld . Raym. 213 ; rendering false accounts, and other frauds, by persons in official situations, Rex o. Bembridge, cited 2 East, 136; 5 Mod. 179; 2 Campp. 269; 3 Chitty.

Crim. Law, 666; fabrication of news tendirg to the public injury, Starkie, Lib. 546; Hale, Summ. 132; et per Scroggs, C. J., Rex v. Harris, Guildhall, 1680; cheats by means of false weights and measures, 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, 83, p. 820 ; and, generally, the fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any doceitful or illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public, 2 East, PI. Cr. c. 18, 82 , p. 818, as with the common cases of obtaining property by false pretences.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF. The name commenly given to the statute 29 Car . II. c. 3, entitled "An Act for the Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries."
2. The multifarious provisions of this celebrated statute appear to be distributed under the following heads. 1. The creation and transfer of estates in land, both legal and equitable, such as at common law could be effected by parel, i.e. without deed. 2. Certain cases of contracts which at common law could be validly made by oral agreement. 3. Additional solemnities in cases of wills. 4. New liabilities imposed in respect of real estate held in trust. 5. The disposition of estates pur auter vie. 6. The entry and effect of judgments and executions. The first and second heads, however, comprise all that in the common professional use of the term is meant by the Statute of Frauds.
3. And they present this important feature, characterizing and distinguishing all the minor provisions which they both contain, $i . e$. that whereas prior to their enactment the law recognized only two great classes of contracts, conveyances, etc.,-these which were by deed and those which were by parol, including under the latter term alike what was written and what was oral,--these provisions introduced into the law a distinction between written parol and oral parol transactions, and rendered a writing necessary for the valid performance of the matters to which they relate. Those matters are the following:-conveyances, leases, and surrenders of interests in lands; declarations of trusts of interests in lands; special promises by executors or administrators to answer damages out of their own estate; special promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another ; agreements made upon consideration of marriage; contracts for the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them; agreements not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof; contracts for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards. All these matters must be, by the statute, put in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or his attorney.
4. In regard to contracts for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, the payment of earnest-money, or the acceptance and receipt of part of the goods, etc., dispenses with the written memerandum.
The substance of the statute, as regards the provisions above referred to, has been reenacted in almost all the states of the Union; and in many of them, other points coming within the same general policy, but not embodied in the original English statute, have been made the subject of more recent enactments: as, for instance, the requirement of writing to hold a party upon a representation as to the character, credit, etc. of a third person, which was provided in England by 9 Geo. IV. cap. 14, 86 , commonly called Lord Tenterden's Act. The legislation of the different states on these matters will be found collected in the Appendix to Browne's Treatise on the Statute of Frauds.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. A conveyance the object, tendency, or effect of which is to defraud another, or the intent of which is to avoid some duty or debt due by or incumbent on the party making it. 2 Kent, Comm. 440 ; 4 id. 462.
2. Fraudulent conveyances received early attention; and the statutes of 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 27 Eliz. c. 4 , made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 18, declared all conveyances made with intent to defraud creditors, etc. to be void. By a liberal construction, it has become the settled English law that a voluntary conveyance shall be deemed fraudulent against a subsequent purchaser even with notice. 9 East, 59; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 296; Roherts, Fraud. Conv. 2, 3.

Voluntary conveyances are not so construed in the United States, however, where the suhsequent purchaser has notice, especially if there be a good consideration. 2 Gray, Mass. 447.

These statutes have been generally adopted in the United States as the foundation of all the state statutes upon this subject. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 353; 4 Kent, Comm. 462, 463.
3. But although such conveyance is void as regards purchasers and creditors, it is valid as between the parties. 6 Watts, Penn. 429, 453; 5 Binn. Penn. 109; 1 Yeates, Penn. 291; 3 Watts & S. Penn. $255 ; 4$ 1red. No. C. 102; 9 Pick. Mass. 93 ; 20 id. 247, 354; 1 Ohio, 469; 2 South. N. J. 738; 2 Hill, So. C. 488; 7 Johns. N. Y. 161 ; 1 W. Blackst. 262. An offence within the 13 Eliz. c. $5, ~ \% 3$, is also indictable. 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 31.

FREDNITE. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding. Cowel; Cunningham, Law Dict,

To be free from fines.
FREDUM. A fine paid for obtaining parden when the peace had been broken. Spelman, Gloss.; Blount. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge. 1 Robertson, Charles V., App. note xxiii.

FREE. Not bound to servitude. At liberty to act as one pleases. This word is put in opposition to slave. U. S. Const. art. 1,82 . Used in distinction from being bound as an apprentice.

The Declaration of Independence asserts that all men are born free; and in this sense the term is usually supposed to mean all mankind ; though this seems to be doubted in 19 How. 393.
Certain: as, free services. These were also more honorable.
Confined to the person possessing, instead of being held in common; as, free fishery.
FREE BENCH. Copyhold lands which the wife has for dower after the decease of her husband. Kitch. 102 ; Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, cap. 13, num. 2; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 150; Plowd. 411.
Dower in copyhold lands. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 129. The quantity varies in different sections of England. Coke, Litt. 110 b. Incontinency was a cause of forfeiture, except on the performance of a ridiculous ceremony. Cowel; Blount.
FREE BORD. An allowance of land outside the fence which may be claimed by the owner. An allowance, in some places, two and a half feet wide outside the boundary or enclosure. Blount; Cowel.

FREE CHAPEL. A chapel founded by the king and exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. It may be one founded or endowed by a private person under a grant from the king. Cowel; 'Termes de la Ley.
FREE COURSE. Having the wind from a favorable quarter. To prevent collision of vessels, it is the duty of the vessel having the wind free to give way to a vessel beating up to windward and tacking. 3 Hagg. Adm. 215. At sea, such vessel meeting another close-hauled must give way, if necessary to prevent the danger of collision. 3 Carr. $&$ P. 528. See 9 Carr. & P. 528; 2 W. Rob. Adm. 225 ; 2 Dods. Adm. 87.
FREE FISHERY. A franchise which gives an exclusive right of fishing in a public navigable river, without any ownership on the soil. 3 Kent, Comm. 329; 2 Shariwoed, Blackst. Comm. 39; 1 Salk. 637; Woollych, Law of Waters, 97. Free fishery is the same as common of fishery. Coke, Litt. Hlargrave's notes, 122; 2 Sharswood, Blackst, Comm. 39; 7 Pick. Mass. 79; Angell, Waterc. c. 6, ${ }^{8} 8$ 3, 4 . Seee Fishery.

FREE SERVICES. Such as it was not unbecoming the character of a soldier or freeman to perform: as, to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the Iike. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 62; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 25.
FREE SHIPS. Neutral ships. "Free ships make free goods" is a phrase often used in treaties to denote that the goods on board neutral ships shall be free from confiscation even though belonging to an enemy. Wheaton, Int. Law, 507 et seq.; 1 Kent, Comm. 126. See 3 Phillimore, Int. Law, 3 d ed. 238 et seq. for a full discussion of the subject.

FREE SOCAGE. Tenure in free socage is a tenure by certain and honorable services which yet are not military. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 52 ; Dalrymple, Feuds, c. 2,81 ; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 25. Called, also, free and common socage. See Socage.
fres warren. A franchise for the preserving and custody of beasts and fowls of warren. 2 Sharswaod, Blackst. Comm. 39, 417; Coke, Litt. 233. This franchise gave the grantee sole right of killing, so far as his warren extended, on condition of excluding other persons. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 39.
freedman. In Roman Law. A person who had been released from a state of servitude. See Libertine.

FREEDOM. The condition of one to whom the law attributes the single individual right of personal liberty, limited only, in the domestic relations, by powers of control which are associated with duties of protection. See Husband and Wife; Parent and Child; Guardian and Ward; Master and Apprentice.
2. This right becomes subjeot to judicial determination when the law requires the public custody of the person as a meane of vindicating the rights of others. The security of the liberty of the individual and of the rights of others is graduated hy the intrinsic equity of the lew, in purpose and application. The mesne of protecting this liberty of the individusl without hazarding the freedom of others must be sought in the provisions of the remedial and penal law.
3. Independently of forfeiture of personal liberty ander such laws and of its limitations in the domestic relations, freedom, in this sense, is a status which is invariable under all legal systems. It is the eubject of judicial determination when a condition incompatible with the possession of pereonal liberty is alleged against ons who claims freedom as his status. A community wherein law should bs recognized, and wherein nevertheless this etatus should not be enjoyed by any privste person, is inconceivable; and, wherever ite posesssion is thus controverted, the judicisl question srises of the personal extent of the law which attributes liberty to free persans. The lsw may attribute it to every nstural person, and thereby preclude the recognition of any condition inconsistent with ite possession. This universsl extent of the law of free condition will operate in the internationsl as well as in the internal private law of the state. In most European oountries the right of one, under the law of a foreign conntry, to control the person of another who by such law had been his sleve or bondman is not recognized under that international rule for the allowance of the effect of a foreign lew which is celled comity, beosuse the law of those countries attributes perconal liberty as a right to every natural person. 1 Hurd, Law of Freedom and Bondage, $83116,308$.
4. In other countries the power of the master nnder a foreign law is reoognized in specificd cases by statuts or treaty, while an otherwie universal attribution of parsonal liberty precludes every other recognition of a oondition of bondage. On this principls, in come of the United States, an obligation to render personal service or labor, and the correeponding right of the person to whom it is due, existing under the law of other statee, are not enforeed except in cases of clsim within art. 4, see. 2, T 3 of the constitution of the United States. 18 Pick. Mess. 193; 20 N. Y. 562.
5. Legal rights ser the effecte of civil eociety. No legal oondition is the reservation of a state of nature suterior to oivil society. Freedom, as hers understood, is the effect of low, not a pre-existing natural element. It is, therefore, not necessaril attributed to all persons within any one jurisdi tion. But personal liberty, even though not attr buted univereally, may be juridically regarded : a right accordant with the nature of man in st ciety; and the effect of this doctrine will appear $i$ a legal presumption in favour of fres condition which will throw the burden of proof alweys on hit who denies it. This presumption obtaincd in tl law of Rome (XII Tab. T. vi. 5; Dig. lib. 40, tit. l. 53 ; lib. 43 , tit. 29 , в. $3,1.9$; lib. 50 , tit. 1 1l. 20, 22) sven when blavery was darived from th jus gentium, or that lew which was found to be ri ceived by the general reason of mankind. 1 Huri Law of Freedom, & 157.
6. In English law, this presumption in favor c liberty has alwaye been rccognized, not only in tl penal and remedial law, but in applying the la of condition, at a time when involuntary servituc was lawful. Fortescue, c. 42 , c. 47 ; Coke, Lit fol. 124 b; Wood, Inst. c. 1, & 5. In the slisv holding states of the Union, a presumption again: the frcedom of persone of negro descent has arise cr been declared by statute. Cooper, Justin. $48:$ 1 Dev. No. C. $336 ; 8$ Gs. 157; 5 Helst. N.J. 275 . 1 interpreting manumission clauses in wills, the ru. differs in the states according to their prevailin policy. Cobb, Law of Slav. 298.

The condition of a private person who : legally secured in the enjoyment of thos rights of action, in social relations, whic might be equally enjoyed by all private pes sons.
7. The condition of one who may exercise hient tural powers as he wills is not known in jurispri dence, except as the characteristic of those wl bold the supreme power of the state. The freedos which one may have by his individual strength $r_{1}$ sembles this power in kind, and is no part of legi freadom. The legal right of one person involvi correlative obligations on others. All persons mu be restricted by those obligatione which are esser tisl to the freedom of others, 2 Harr. Cond. $L_{1}$ 208; but these are not inconsiatent with the pa sestion of rights which may be enjoyed cqually b all. Such obligations constitute a condition ol posed to fresdom only as things which mutuall suppose and require each other. Where the la imposes obligations incompatible with the posse sion of such righte as might be equally enjoyed b all, a condition arises which is contrary to fre dom, see Bondade, and the condition of thot who hold the rights correlative to such obligation becomes superior to freedom, as above defined, is merged in the superiority of a class or csst The rights and obligations of all cannot bs alik, men must stand towards each other in unlike rel: tions, since the sctions of all cannot be the sam In the possession of relstive rights they must 1 unequal. But individuel (absolnts) rights, whic exist in relations towards the community in gen ral, and capacity for relative rights in domest relations, may be attributed to all in the same ci cumstances of natural condition. It is in the po session of these rights and this capecity that th freedom exists. As thus defined, it comprehen. freedom in the narrower sense, se the greater icludes the less; and when attributed to all wl enjoy freedom in the nerrower sanse, as at the pr sent dey in the greater part of Europe and in t non-slaveholding states of the Union, the latter not distinguished as a distinct condition. B some who enjoy personal liberty might yet be restricted in the acquisition and use of property: unproteoted in person and limited in the exerci of relative rights, that their condition would fresdom in tbe narrower aense only. During $t$ middle ages, in Europe, it was posbible to diecrin nate the existing free oonditions as thns different; and the restrictions imposed on froe colored persons in the slaveholding states of the Union create a similar distinction between their freedom and that which, in all the states, is attributed to all persons of white race.
8. Freedom, in either sense, is a condition which may exist anywhere, under the civil power; but its permanenoy will depend on the guarantces hy which it is defeuded. These are of infinite variety. In oonnection with a high degree of guarantee egainst irrespansihle sovereign power, freedom, in the larger sense above described, may be called civil freedom, from the fact that such guarantee hecomes the public law of the state. Such freedom acquires specific character from the particular law of some one country, and becomes the topic of legal science in the juridical application of the guarantees by which the several rights incident to it are maintained. This constitutes a large portion of the jurispradence of modern states, and embrages, particularly in England and America, the public or constitutional law. The bills of rights in American constitutions, with their great original, Magna. Charta, are the written evidences of the most fundamental of these guarantees. The prorisious of the oonstitution of the United States which have this oharacter operate against powers held by the national government, but not against those reserved to the states. 7 Pet. 243; Sedgwick, Const. 597: It has been judicially declared that a person " held to service or labor in one state under the laws thereof escaping into another" is not protected by any of these provisions, but may he delivered up, by national authority, to a claimant, for removal from the state in which he is found, in any method congress may dircet, and that any one claimed as such fugitive may be seized and removed from suoh state hy a private claimant, without regard either to the laws of such state or the acts of congress. 13 Pet. 597.
9. The other guarantees of freedom in either sense are considered under the titles Evinence, arrest, batl, Trial, Habeas Corpus, Homine Replegianoo.
Irresponsible superiority, whether of one or of many, is necessarily antagonistic to freedom in others. Yet freedom rests on law, and law on the supreme power of some state. The possession of this power involves a liberty of action; but its possession hy a body of persons, each one of whom must submit to the will of the majority, is not in itself a guarantee of the freedom of any one individual among them. Still, the more equally this power is distrihuted among those who are thus individually subject, the more their individual liherty of action in the exercise of this power approximates to a legal right,-though one beyond any incident to civil freedom as above defined, and its possession may be suid to constitute political freedom, so far as that may he ascribed to private persons which is more properly ascribed to communities. In proportion as this right is extended to the individual members of a community, it becomes a guarantee of civil frecdom, by making a delegation of the power of the whole body to a representative government possible and cyen necessary, which government may be limited in its action by customary or written law. Thus, the political liberties of private persons and their civil freedom become intimately connected; though political and civil freedom are not necessarily coexistent. 1 Sharsw ood, Blackst. Comm. 6, n., 127, n.
10. Political freedom is to be stadied in the public law of constitutional states, and, in England and America, particularly in those provisions in the bills of rights which affect the subject more in his relations towards the government than in his relations towards other private persuns. See L1-berty. The terms freedom and liherty are words differing in origin (German and Latin); but they are, in use, too nearly synonymous to be distinguished in legal definition. See Civil Liberty; Lieher, Civil Lih. etc. 37, ц.
FreehoLd. See Estate of FreeHOLD.

FREEHOLD IN LAW. A frechold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on. Termes de la Ley.

FREEHOLDER. The owner of a freehold estate. Such a man must have been anciently a freeman; and the gift to any man by his lord of an estate to him and his heirs made the tenant a fieeman, if he had not been so before. See 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 29,45 , et seq.

FREEMAN. One who is not a slave. One born free or made so.

In Old English Law. A freeholder, as distinguished trom a villein.

An inhabitant of a city. Stat. 1 Hen. VI. c. 11 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 196, 197 ; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FREEMAN'S ROLI. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the Municipal Corporation Act, $5 & 6$ Will. IV. c. 76. Distinguished from the Burgess Roll. 3 Stephen, Comm. 197. The term was used, in early colonial history, of some of the American colonies.

FREIGHT. In Martime Law. The sum agreed on for the hire of a ship, entirely or in part, for the carriage of goods from one port to another. 13 East, 300. All rewards or compensation paid for the use of ships. 1 Pet. Adm. 206 ; 2 Boulay-Paty, t. 8, s. 1 ; 2 Bos. & P. 321 ; 4 Dall. Penn. 459 ; 2 Johns. N. Y. 346 ; 3 id. 335 ; 3 Pardessus, n. 705.
2. The amount of freight is usually fixed by the agrecment ot the parties; and if there is no agrecment, the amount is to be ascertained by the usage of the trade and the circumstances and reason of the case. 3 Kent, Comm. 173. Pothier is of opinion that when the parties agree as to the conveyance of the goods, without fixing a price, the master is entitled to freight at the price usually paid for merchandise of a like quality at the time and place of shipment, and if the prices vary he is to pay the mean price. Charte-part, $n$. 8. But there is a case which authorizes the master to require the highest price: namely, when goods are put on board without his knowledge. Id. n. 9. When the merchant hires the whole ship for the entire voyage, he must pay the freight though he does not fully lade the ship: he is, of course, only bound to pay in proportion to the goods he puts on board, when he does not agree to provide a full cargo. If the merchant agrees to furnish a return cargo, and he furnishes none, and lets the ship return in ballast, he must make compensation to the amount of the agreed freight. Roccus, notes 72-75; 1 Pet. Adm.

207 ; 10 East, 530; 2 Vern. Ch. 210. See Dead Freiget.
3. The general rule is that the delivery of the goods at the place of destination, in fulfilment of the agreement of the charterparty or bill of lading, is required, to entitle the master or owner of the vessel to freight. 2 Johns. N. Y. 327 ; 3 id. 321 . But to this rule there are several exceptions.

When a cargo consists of live stock, and some of the animals die in the course of the voyage, without any fault or negligence of the master or crew, and there is no express agreement respecting the payment of freight, it is, in general, to be paid for all that were put on board; but when the contract is to pay for the transportation of them, then no freight is due for those which die on the voyage. Molloy, b. 2, c. 4, s. 8 ; Dig. 14. 2. 10; Abbott, Shipp. 272.
4. An interruption of the regular course of the voyage, happening without the fault of the owner, does not deprive him of his freight if the ship afterwards proceeds with the cargo to the place of destination, as in the case of capture and recapture. 3 C . Rob. Adm. 101.

When the ship is forced into a port short of her destination, and cannot finish the voyage, if the owner of the goods will not allow the master a reasonable time to repair, or to proceed in another ship, the master will be entitled to the whole freight; and if, after giving his consent, the master refuses to go on, he is not entitled to freight.
5. When the merchant accepts of the goods at an intermediate port, it is the general rule of marine lav that freight is to be paid according to the proportion of the voyage performed; and the law will imply such contract. The acceptance must be voluntary, and not one forced upon the ownor by any illegal or violent proceedings, as from it the law implies a contract that freight pro rata parte itineris shall be accepted and paid. 2 Burr. 883; 7 Term, 381 ; Abbott, Shipp. part 3, c. 7, s. 13; 3 Binn. Penn. 445; 5 id. 525 ; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 229; 1 Wash. C. C. 530 ; 2 Johns. N. Y. 323; 7 Cranch, 358; 6 Cow. N. Y. 504; Marshall, Ins. 281, 691 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 182; Comyns, Dig. Merchant (E 3), note, pl. 43, and the cases there cited.
6. When the ship has performed the whole voyage, and has brought only a part of her cargo to the place of destination, in this case there is a difference between a general ship and a ship chartered for a specific sum for the whole voyage. In the former case, the freight is to be paid for the goods which may be delivered at their place of destination; in the latter, it has been questioned whether the freight could be apportioned; and it seems that in such case a partial performance is not sufficient, and that a special payment cannot be claimed except in special cases. 1 Johns. N. Y. 24; 1 Bulstr. 167; 7 Term, 381; 2 Oampb. 466. These are some of the exceptions to the general rule, called for by principles of equity, that a partial performance is not sufficient, and that a parn tial payment or ratable freight cannot. he claimed.
7. If goods are laden on board, the shipper is not entitled to their return and to have them relanded without paying the expenses of unloading and the whole freight and surrendering the bill of lading, or indemnifying the master against any loss or damage ho may sustain by reason of the non-delivery of the bill. 6 Du. N. Y. 194; 8 N. Y. 529. In general, the master has a lien on the goods, and need not part with them until the freight is paid; and when the regulations of therevenue require them to be landed in a publio warehouse, the master may enter them in his own name and preserve the lien. His right to retain the goods may, however, be waived either by an express agreement at the time of making the original contract, or by his subsequent agreement or consent. See Lien; Marltime Lien.

If freight be paid in advance and the goods are not conveyed and delivered according to the contract, it can, in all cases, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, be recovered back by the shipper. -5 Sandf. N. Y. 578.

FREIGHTER. He to whom a ship or vessel has been hired, and who loads her under his contract. He who loads a general ship. 3 Kent, Comm. 173; 3 Pardessus, n. 704.
2. The freighter is entitled to the enjoyn ment of the vessel according to contract, and the vessel hired is the only one that he is bound to take: there can, therefore, be no substitution without his consent. When the vessel has been chartered only in wart, the freighter is only entitled to the spaae he has contracted for; and in case of his occupying more room or putting on board a greater weight, he must pay freight on the principles mentioned under the article of Freioft.
3. The freighter hiring a vessel is required to use the vessel agreeably to the provisions of the charter-party, or, in the absence of any such provisions, according to the usages of trade; he cannot load the vessel with merchandise which would render it liable to condemnation for violating the laws of a foreign state. 3 Johns. N. Y. 105. He is also required to return the vessel as soon as the time for which he chartered her has expired, and to pay the freight.
FRENDLESMAN (Sax.). An ontlaw. So called because on his outlawry he was denied all help of friends after certain days. Cowel ; Blount.

FRENDNITE. A fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend. Cowel; Cunningham. A quittance for forfang (exemption from the penalty of taking provisions before the king's purveyors had taken enough for the king's necessities). Cowel.

FREOBORGE. A free-surety or freepledge. Spelman, Gloss. See Frank-Pledge.

FRESH DISSEISIN. Such disseisin as a man may seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without the help of the king or judges. There was no limit set to the time within which this might be dons. It is set in one case at a disseisin committed within fifteen days. Bracton, lib. 4, cap. 5. In another case it was held a fresh disseisin when committed within a year. Britton, cap. 43, 44 ; Cowel.

FRESH FINE. A fine levied within a year. Stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.), cap. 45 ; Cowel.

FRESH FORCE. Force done within forty days. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 7; Old Nat. Brev. 4. The heir or reversioner in a case of disseisin by fresh force was allowed a remedy in chancery by bill before the mayor. Cowel.

FRIBUSCULUM. In Civil Law. A slight dissension between husband and wife, which produced a momentary separation, without any intention to dissolve the mar-riage,-in which it differed from a divorce. Pothier, Pand. lib. 50, s. 106; Vicat, Voc. Jur. This amounted to a separation in our law. See Separation.

fuero real. In Spanish Law. A code of laws promulgated by Aloazo el Sabio in 1255, and intended as an introduction to the larger and more comprehensive code ca!led Las Siete Partidas, published eight years afterwards. For an analysis of this code, see Schmidt, Span. Law, 67.

FUGAM FECIT (Lat. he fled). In OId English Law. A phrase in an inquisition, signifying that a person fled for treasun or felony. The effect of this is to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands until he has been pardoned or aequitted.

FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE. One who, having committed a crime, flees from the jurisdiction within which it was committed, to escape punishment.
2. As one state cannot pursue those who violate its laws into the territories of another, and as it concerns all that those guilty of the more atrocious crimes should not go unpunished, the practice prevails among the more enlightened nations of mutually surrendering such fugitives to the justice of the injured state. This practice is founded on national comity and convenience, or on express compact. The United States recognize the obligation only when it is created by express agreement. They have contracted the obligation with several foreign states by treaty, and with one another by their federal constitution and laws. See Extranifion.

OF SURRENDER UNDER TREATIES.

3. The treaties enumerate the crimes for which persons may be surrendered, and in some other particulars limit their own application. They also contain some provisions relating to the mode of procedure; but, as it was doubted whether such stipulations had the furce of law, 1 Park. Crim. N. Y. 108, congress passed the act of August 12, 1848, entitled "An act for giving effect to certain treaty stipulations between this and foreign governments for the apprehension and delivery up of certain offenders." $9 \mathrm{U} . \mathrm{S}$. Stat. at Large, 302.

This act embodies those provisions contained in the treaties relating to the procedure, and contains others designed to facilitate the execution of the duty assumed by treaty.

Before any person can be surrendered, a demand for him must be made upon the executive by the executive power of the state whose laws have been violated; and it is said to be usual to prefer this demand before instituting any judicial proceedings for the arrest of the fugitive, 8 Opin. Attys. Gen. 521; but the act of congress does not require this to be first done. Id. 240.
4. The following are the leading provisions of the law relating to the practice. 1. A complaint made under oath or affirmation charging the person to be arrested with the commission of one of the enumerated crimes. 2. A warrant for the apprehension of the person charged may be issued by any of the justices of the supreme court or judges of the several district courts of the United States, or the judges of the several state courts, or the commissioners authorized so to do by any of the courts of the Onited States. 3: The person arrested is to be brought before the officer issuing the warrant, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be considered. 4. Copies of the depositions upon which an original warrant in the country demanding the fugitive may bave been granted, certified under the hand of the person issuing such warrant, and attested upon the oath of the party producing them to be true copies of the original depositions, may be received in evidence of the criminality of the person apprehended. 5 . The degree of evidence must be such as, according to the laws of the place where the person arrested shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offence had there been committed. 6. If the evidence is deemed sufficient, the officer hearing it must certify the same, together with a copy of all the testimony taken before him, to the secretary of state, and commit the prisoner to the proper gaol until the surrender be made, which must be within two calendar months. 7. The secretary of state, on the proper demand being made by the foreign government, orders, under his hand and seal of office, in the name and by authority of the president, the person so committed to be delivered to such person as may be authorized, in the name and on behalf of such foreign government, to receive him. 8. The demand must be made by and upon those officers who represent the sovereign power of their states. 7 Opin. Attys. Gen. 6; 8 id. 521.
5. The convenient and usual method of action is for some police-officer or other special agent, after obtaining the proper papers in his own country, to repair to the foreign country, carry the case through with the aid of his minister, receive the fugitive, and conduct him back to the country having jurisdiction of the crime. 80 Oin . Attys. Gen. 521.
In all the treaties the parties stipulate upon mutual requisitions, etc. to deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with crime, "shall seek an asylum or shall be found in the territories of the other." The terms of this stipulation embrace cases of absence without flight, as well as those of actual flight. 80 pin. Attys. Gen. 306. After the arrest, and until the surrender, it is the duty of the United States to provide a suitable place of confinement and safely keep the prisoner. 8 Opin. Attys. Gen. 396. If, however, the prisoner escapes, he may be retaken in the same manner as any person accused of any crime against the laws in force in that part of the United States to which he shall so escape may be retaken, on an escape. 9 U. S. Stat. at Large, 303.
6. It is provided in all the treaties that the expense of the apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by the party making the requisition.

In the treaties with Prussia and other states of the Germanic Confederation, and with Austria and the Two Sicilies, it is provided that neither party is to surrender its own subjects or citizens to the other. In those with France, Austria, the Swiss Confederatiou, and the Two Sicilies, it is provided that the stipulation shall not extend to crimes committed anterior to the date of the treaty. In those with France, Austria, Baden, the Swiss Confederation, and the Two Sicilies, crimes of a political character are excluded; and in those with Prussia and other states of the Germanic Confederation, and with Austria, it is provided that if the person accused shall have committed a new crime in the territories of the state where he has sought an asylum or shall be found, he shall not be delivered up until he shall have been tried and shall have received the punishment due to such new crime or shall have been acquitted thereof.

OF SURRENDER UNDER THE FEDERAL CONSTITU-

 TION AND LAWS.7. In art. iv. sec. 2, of the constitution, it is provided that "A person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another state, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which ho fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime."

The act of congress of Feb. 12, 1793, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 302, prescribes the mode of procedure, and requires, on demand of the executive authority of a state and production of a copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate charging the person demanded with treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state from whence the person so charged fled, that the executive authority of the state or territory to which such person shall have fled shall cause the person charged to be arrested and secured, and notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear; but if such agent do not appear within six months, the prisoner shall be discharged. It further provides that if any perion shall by force set at liberty or rescue the fugitive from such agent while transporting the fugitive to the state or territory from which he fled, the person so offending shall, on conviction, be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not exceeding one year, and that all costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive shall be paid by the state or territory making the demand.
8. In the execution of the obligation imposed by the constitution, the following points deserve attention :-
The crime, other than treason or felony, for which a person may be surrendered. Some difference of opinion has prevailed on this subject, owing to some diversity of the criminal laws of the several states; but the better opinion appears to be that the terms of the constitution extend to all acts which by the laws of the state where committed are made criminal. 6 Penn. Law Jour. $412 ; 1$ Kent, Comm. 9th ed. 42, n.; 6 Am. Jur. 226 ; 9 Wend. N. Y. 212; 1 Am. Law Jour. n. s. 271; 13 Ga. 97 ; 3 Zabr. N. J. 311; Hurd, Hah. Corp. 597.

The accusation must be in the form of an affidavit or indictment found and duly authenticated. If by affidavit, it should be sufficiently full and explicit to justify arrest and commitment for hearing. 6 Penn. Law Jour. 412; 3 McLean, C. C. 121 ; 1 Sandf. N. Y. 701; 3 Zabr. N. J. 311; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 605.
9. The accused must have fled from the state in which the crime was committed; and of this the executive authority of the state upon which the demand is made should be reasonably satisfied. This is sometimes done by affidavit. In the absence of direct evidence on the question of flight, if it appear from the indictment or affidavit produced that the crime charged is atrocious in its nature, was recently committed, and the prosecution promptly instituted, the unexplained presence of the accused in another state immediately after the commission of the crime ought perhaps to be regarded as primâ facie evidence of flight, sufficient, at least, to warrant an order of arrest. The order of surrender is not required, by the act of congress, to he made at the same time with the order of arrest, and time, therefore, can be taken, in doubtful cases, after the accused is arrested and secured, to hear proofs to establish or rebut such primâ facie evidence. 6 Am. Jur. 226 ; 7 Bost. Law Rep. 386.
10. The surrender of the accused must be made to an agent of the executive authority of the demanding state, duly appointed to receive the fugitive.
The proceedings of the executive authorities are subject to be reviewed on habeas corpus by the judicial power, and if found void the prisoner may be discharged. 3 McLean, C. C. 121 ; 3 Zabr. N. J. 311 ; 9 Tex. 635; 4 Harr. N. J. 575 ; 2 Mo. 26 ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 615.
FUGITIVE SLAVE. One who, held in bondage, flees from his master's power.
2. Prior to the adoption of the constitution of the United States, the duty of surrendering slaves fleeing beyoud the jurisdiction of the state or colony where they were held to service was not regarded as a perfect obligation, though, on the ground of inter-state camity, they were frequently surrendered to the master. Instances of such surrender or permission to reclaim occur in the history of the colonies as early as 1685. Hurd. Hab. Corp. 592. As slavery disappeared in some states, the difficulty of recovering in them slaves fleeing from those where it remained was greatly increased, and on some occasions reclamation became quite impracticable. The subject engaged the attention of the convention of 1787 ; and, at the instance of members from slaveholding states, a provision was inserted in the constitution for the surrender of such persons escaping from the state where they owed service, into another, which provision was considered a valuable accession to the security of that species of property. 4 Elliott, Debates, 487, 492; 5 id. 176, 286.

This provision is contained in art. iv. sec. 2 of the constitution, and is as follows:-
"No person held to service or labor in one state, under the laws thereaf, escaping inta another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."
3. Congress, conceiving it to be the duty of the federal government to provide by law, with adequate sanctions, for the execution of the duty thus enjoined by the constitution, by the act of Feb. 12, 1793, and again by the amendatory and supplementary act of Sept. 18, 1850, regulated the mode of arrest, trial, and surrender of such fugitives. Same of the states have, also, at times passed acts relating to the subject; but it has been decided by the supreme court of the United States that the power of legislation in the matter was vested exclusively in congress, and that all state legislation inconsistent with the laws of congress was unconstitutional and void. 16 Pet. 608 ; 11 III. 332.

These acts of congress have been held to be constitutional and valid in all their provisians. 16 Pet. 608; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 62; 9 Johns. N. Y. 67; 12 Wend. N. Y. 311, 507 ; 2 Pick. Mass. 11; 2 Paine, C. C. 348; 7 Cush. Mass. 285; 6 McLean, C. C. 355; 16 Barb. N. Y. $268 ; 21$ How. 506.
4. Act of 1793 . By the 3 d and 4 th sections of the act of Feb. 12, 1793, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 302, it is provided that when a person held to labor in any of the United States, or in either of the territories on the northwest or south of the river Ohio, under the laws thereof, shall escape into any other of the said states or territory, the person to whom such labor or service may be due, his agent or attorney, may seize or arrest such fugitive and take him before any judge of the circuit or district courts of the United States residing or being within the state, of before any magistrate of a county, city, or town corporate wherein such seizure or arres sball be made, and on proof to the satisfac tion of such judge or magistrate, either by oral testimony or affidavit taken before anc certified by a magistrate of any such state on territory, that the person so seized or arrestec owed service or labar to the person claiming him, under the laws of the state or territory from which he fled, the judge or magistrat shall give a certificate thereof, which certifi cate shall be sufficient warrant for removing the fugitive to the state or territory from which he fled.

The knowingly and willingly obstructing or hindering the claimant, his agent or at torney, in so seizing or arresting the fugitive the rescue of the fugitive when so arrested and the harboring or concealing him afted notice that he is such a fugitive, are declared offences, and the offender is subjected to : penalty of five hundred dollars, recoverable by and for the benefit of the claimant by action of debt in any court proper to try the same. The claimant is also entitled to his right of action for any injuries sustained by such illegal acts.
5. By the act of Sept. 18, 1850, 9 U S Stat. at Large, 462, very full provision was made for the rendition of fugitive slaves The marshals of the United States were re quired to arrest such slaves; the number of officers authorized to act as magistrates was much extended; provision was made for proof taken by affidavit in the place from which the fugitive escaped; and severe penalties wert imposed upon persons harboring or conceal ing such a slave, or rescuing or attempting to rescue him when arrested.
This act, however, and the 3d and 4th see tions of the act of 1793 were repealed by the act of June 28, 1864, 13 U. S. Stat. at Large 200. For some decisions as to the questior of the interference between the acts of $179\{$ and 1850, see 5 McLean, C. C. 469; 13 How 429.
6. In the practical application of the pro visions of the acts of 1793 and 1850 for tho reclamation of fugitive slaves, it has beer held that the owner is clathed with authority in every state of the Union to seize anc recapture his slave wherever he can do i without any breach of the peace or illega violence, 16 Pet. 608 ; that he may arres him on Sunday, in the night-time, or in the house of another if no breach of the peac is committed, Baldw. C. C. 577; that if thi arrest be by agent of the owner, he must $b$ authorized by written power of attorne executed and authenticated as required b: the att, 6 McLean, C. C. 259, and if his au thority be demanded it should be shown, : McLean, C. C. 631; but he is not require to exhibit it to every one who may mingle is the crowd which obstructs him, 4 McLean C. C. 402: that, if resisted by force in makin the arrest, the owner may use sufficient forc to overcome the unlawful resistance offered without being guilty of the offence of riot, 3 Am. Law Journ. 258; 7 Penn. Law Journ. 115; Baldw. C. C. 577 ; that whilst the examination is pending before the magistrate who has jurisdiction of the case, the party is in custody of the law, and may be imprisoned for safe-keeping, 2 Paine, C. C. 348; 4 Wash. C. C. 461 ; 6 McLean, C. C. 355 ; that the act of Sept. 18, 1850, does not operate as a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, 5 Opin. Attys. Genl. 254; kut that writ cannot be used by state officers to defeat the jurisdiction acquired by the federal authorities in such cases. 7 Cush. Mass. 285; 5 McLean, C. C. 92 ; 1 Blatehf. C. C. 635 ; 8 Ohio St. 599 ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 202; 21 How. 506.
7. The provisions of the constitution and laws above cited extend only to cases where persons held to service or labor in one state or territory by the laws thereof escape into another: Hence, if the owner voluntarily takes his slave into such other state or territory, and the slave leaves him there or refuses to return, he cannot institute proceedings under those laws for his recovery. Ex parte Simmons, 4 Wash. C. C. 396. And children, born in a state where slavery prevails, of a negro woman who is a fugitive slave, are not fugitive slaves or slaves who have escaped from service in another state, within the meaning of the constitution and acts of Congress. 23 Ala. n. s. 155.

FULL AGE. The age of twenty-one, by common law, of both males and females, and of twenty-five by the civil law. Litt. 8259 ; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 463; Vicat, Voc. Jur. FUNCTION. The occupation of an office: by the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. Dig. 32.65. 1.

FUNCTIONARY. One who is in office or in some public employment.
fUNCTUS OFFICIO (Lat.). A term applied to something which once has had life and power, but which has become of no virtue whatsoever.

For example, a warrant of attorney on which a judgment has been entered is functus officio, and a second judgment cannot be entered by virtue of its authority. When arbitrators cannot agres and choose an umpire, they are said to bs funeti officio. Wattson, Arb. 94. If a bill of exchange be sent to the drawee, and he passes it to the credit of the holder, it is functus officio, and cannot be further negotiated. 5 Pick. Mass. 85.

When an agent has completed the business with which he was intrusted, his agency is functus officio. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1382.

FUNDAMENTAL. This word is applied to those laws which are the foundation of society. Those laws by which the exercise of power is restrained and regulated are fundamental. The constitution of the United States is the fundamental law of the land. See Wolffins, Inst. Nat. 8984.
FUNDATIO (Lat.). A founding.
FUNDING STSTEM. The practice of borrowing money to defray the expenses of government.
2. In the early history of the system it was nsual to set apart the revenne from some particnlar tax as a fund to the principal and interest of the loan. The earliest record of the funding system is found in the history of Venice. In the year 1171, during a war between the republic and the Byzantine cmperor Manuel Commenas, a Venctian fleet ravaged the eastera coasts, hut, being detained by negotiations at Chios, suffered screrely from the plague. The remoant of the expedition, returoing, took with it the frightiul pestilence, which ravaged Venice and produced a popular commotion in which the doge was killed. To carry on the war, the new doge, Scbsstian Giani, ordered a forced loan. Every citizen was ohliged to contribute one-hundredth of his property, and be was to be paid hy the state five per cent. interest, the revenues being mortgaged to secure the faithful performance of the contract. To manage the business, commissioners were appointed, called the Chamber of Loaes, which after the lapse of centuries grew into the Bank of Venice. Florence and the other Italian republics practised the system; and it afterwards hecame geacral io Europe. Its object is to provide large sums of money for the immediate exigencies of the state, which it would be impossible to raise by direct taxation.
3. In Eagland the funding system was inaugurated in the reign of William III. The Bank of England, like the Bank of Venice and the Bank of Saint George at Genos, grew ont of it. In order to make it easy to procurc money to carry on the war with France, the government proposed to raise a loan, for which, as usnal, eertain revennes were to be set aside, and the snbseribers were to be made a corporation, with exclusive banking privileges. The loan was rapidly subscribed for, and the Bank of England was the corporation which it brought into existence. It was formerly the practice in England to borrow money for fixed fieriods; and these loans were called terminable annuities. of late years, bowever, the practice is different,-loans being payable only at the option of the government: these are termed interminable annuities. The rate of interest on the carlicr loans was generally fixed at three and a half per cent. and sold at such a rate below par as to conform to the state of the money-market. It is estimated that two-fifthr of the cntire deht of England cousists of this oxcess over the amonnt of money actually received for it. The objeot of such a plan was to promote speculation and attract capitalists; and it is still pursued in France.
4. Afterwards, however, the government receded from this policy, and, by borrowing at high rates, were enabled, when the rate of interest declined, by offering to pay off the loan, to reduce the interest materially. The national deht of England consists of many different loans, all of which are inclnded in the term funds. Of these, the largest in amonnt and importance are the "three per oent. consolidated annnities," or consols, as they are commonly called. They originated in 1751, when an act was passed consolidating several separate three per cent. loans into one general stock, the dividends of Which are payable on the 5th of January and 5th of July at the Bank of England. The hunk, heing the fiscal agent of the government, pays the interest on most of the funds, and also keeps the trans-fer-books. When stock is sold, it is transferred on the hooks at the bank to the new purchaser, and the interest is paid to those parties in whose names the stock is registered, at the closing of the books a short time previous to the dividend-day. Stock is bought and sold at the stock exchange generally through hrokers. Timesales, when the seller is not the actual possessor of the stock, are illegal, but common. They are usually made deliverahle on certain fixed days, called accounting-days; and such transactions are called "for account," to distinguish them from the ordinary sales and purchases for cash. Stock-johhers are persons who act as middlemen hetween sellers and purchasers. They usually fix a price at which they will sell and huy, so that sellers and purchasers can always find a market for stock, or can purchase it in such quantities as they may desire, without delay or inconvenience.
5. In America the funding system bas been fully developed. The general government, as well as those of all the states, have found it necessary to anticipate their revenue. The many magnificent works of internal improvement which have added so much to the wealth of the country were mainly oonstructed with money borrowed by the states. The canals of New York, aod many railroads in the western states, owe their existence to the systom. The states generally issue boods for their deht redecmahle at the expiration of twenty years, with semi-annual coupons attached for interest, which is asually payahle in New York. Inscription stock, transferrable only on the transfer-books of the state, is, however, sometimes issued.

The funding system enables the government to raise money in exigencies, and to spread over many ycars the taxation which would press too severcly on one. It affords a ready method of investing money on good security, and it tends to identify the interest of the state and the people. But it is open to many objections, the principal of which is that it induces statesmen to countenance expensive and oftentimes questionable projects who would not dare to carry out their plans were they forced to provide the means from direct taxation. McCulloch, Dict. of Comm.; Sewell, Banking.

FUNDS. Cash on hand: as, $A B$ is in funds to pay my bill on him. Stocks: as, A B has one thousand dollars in the funds. By public funds is understood the taxes, customs, etc. appropriated by the government for the discharge of its obligations.
FUNDOS (Lat.). Land. A portion of territory belonging to a person. A farm. Lands, including houses. 4 Coke, 87 ; Coke, Litt. 5 a; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 209.
funeral expenses. Money expended in procuring the interment of a corpse.
2. The person who orders the funeral is responsible personally for the expenses, and if the estate of the deceased should be insolvent, he must lose the amount. But if there are assets sufficient to pay these expenses, the executor or administrator is bound, upon an implied assumpsit, to pay them. 1 Campb. 298; Holt, 309; Comyn, Contr. 529; 1 Hawks, No. C. 394; 13 Viner, Abr. 563.
3. Frequent questions arise as to the amount which is to be allowed to the executor or administrator for such expenses. It is exceedingly difficult to gather any certain rule from the numerous cases which have been decided upon this subject. Courts of equity have taken into consideration the circumstances of each case, and when the executors have acted with common prudencs and in obedience to the will, their expenses have been allowed, In a case where the testator directed that his remains should be buried at a church thirty miles distant from the place of his death, the sum of sisty pounds sterling was allowed. 3 Atk. Ch. 119. In another case, under peculiar circumstances, six hundred pounds were allowed. Chanc. Prec. 29. In a case in Pennsylvania, where the intestate left a considerable estate, and no children, the sum of two hundred and fifty-eight dollars and seventy-five cents was allowed, the greater part of which had been expended in erecting a tombstone over a vault in which the body was interred. 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 64.
4. It seems doubtful whether the husband can call upon the separate personal estate of his wife to pay her funeral expenses. 6 Madd. Ch. 90 . See 2 Blackstone, Comm. 508; Godolph. p. 2; 3 Atk. Ch. 249; Bacon, Abr. Executors, etc. (L 4); Viner, Ahr. Funeral Expenses.
FUNGIBLE. A term applicable to things that are consumed by the use, as wine, oil, etc., the loan of which is subject to certain rules, and governed by the contract called mutuum. See Schmidt, Civil Law of Spain & Mexico, 145 ; Story, Bailm.; 1 Buuvier, Inst. nn. 987, 1098.
FUR (Lat.). A thief. One who stole without using force, as distinguished from a robber. See Furtum.

FURCA ET FIAGELLUM (Lat. gallows and whip). The meanest of servils tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of the lord for life and limb. Cowel.

FURCA ET FOSSA (Lat. gallows and pit). A jurisdiction of punishing felons,-the men by hanging, the women hy drowning. Skene; Spelman, Gloss. ; Cowel.

FURIOSUS (Lat.). An insane man; a madman; a lunatic.
In general, such a man can make no contract, because he has no capacity or will: Furiosus nullum negotium genere potest, quia non intelligit quod agit. Inst. 3. 20. 8. Indeed, he is considered so incapable of exercising a will, that the law treats him as if he were absent: Furiosi nulla voluntas est. Furiosus absentis loco est. Dig. l. ult., 40. 124. 1. See Insane ; Non Compos Mentis.

FURLINGUS (Lat.). A furlong, or a furrow one-eighth part of a mile long. Coke, Litt. 5 b.

FURLONG. A measure of length, being forty poles, or one-sighth of a mile.

FURLOUGH. A permission given in the. army and nary to an officer or private to absent himself for a limited time.

FURNAGE (from furnus, an oven). A sum of money paid to the lord by the tenants, who were hound by their tenure to bake at the lord's oven, for the privilege of baking elsewhere. The word is also used to signify the gain or profit taken and received for baking.

FURNITURE. Personal chattels in the use of a family. By the term household furniture in a will, all personal chattels will pass which may contribute to the use or convenience of the householder or the ornament of the house: as, plate, linen, china (both useful and ornamental), and pictures. Ambl. 610; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 329, 388 ; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 189 ; 3 Russ. Ch. 301 ; 2 Williams, Exec. 752; 1 Roper, Leg. 203, 204; 3 Ves. Ch. 312, 313.

FURTHER ASSURANCE. This phrase is frequently used in covenants when a covenantor has granted an estate and it is supposed some further conveyance may be required. IIe then enters into a covenant for further assurance, that is, to make any other conveyance which may be lawfully required.

FURTHER HEARING. In Practice. Hearing at another time.
2. Prisoners are frequently committed for further hearing, either when there is not sufficient evidence for a final commitment, or because the magistrate has not time, at the moment, to hear the whole of the evidencc. The magistrate is required by law, and hy every principle of humanity, to hear the prisoner as soon as possible after a commitment for further hearing; and if be neglect to do so within a reasonable time, he becomes a trespasser. 10 Barnew. & C. 28; 5 Mann. & R. 53. Fifteen days was held an unreasonable time, unless under special circumstances. 4 Carr. & P. 134; 4 Day, Conn. 98; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 427.

In Massachusetts, magistrates may, by statute, adjourn the case for ten days. Gen. Stat. c. $170,817$. It is the practice in England to commit for three days, and then from three days to three days. 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 74

FURTUM (Lat.). Theft. The fraudulent appropriation to one's self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft, without the consent of the owner. Fleta, l. 1, c. 36; Bracton, 150; Coke, 3d Inst. 107.

The thing which has heen stolen. Bracton, 151.

FURTUM CONCEPTUM (Lat.). The theft which was disclosed where, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen is found. Detected theft is, perhaps, the nearest concise translation of the phrase, though not quite exact. Vicat, Vec. Jur.
FURTUM GRAVE (Lat.). Aggravated theft. Formerly, there were three classes of this theft : first, by landed men; second, by a. trustee or one holding property under a trust; third, theft of the majora animalia (larger animals), including children. 1 Bouvier, Civ. Law, 352, n.; Bell, Dict.

FURTUM MANIFESTUM (Lat.)

 Open theft. Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession. Bracton, 150 b.FURTUM OBLATUM (Lat.). The theft committed when stolen property is offered any one and found upon him. The crime of receiving stolen property. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.
FUTURE DEBT. In Scotch Law. A debt which is created, but which will not become due till a future day. 1 Bell, Comm. 5 th ed. 315.
FUTURE ESTATE. An estate which is to commence in possession in the future (in futuro). It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in futuro without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law, except in the case of terms for years. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 165. In New York law it has been defined "an estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time," thus exclưding reversions, which cannot be said to be created at the same time, because they are a remnant of the original estate remaining in the grantor. 11 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 3d ed. $9,810$.

FUTURI (Lat.). Those who are to be. Part of the commencement of old deeds. "Sciant prcesentes et futuri, quod ego, talis, dedi et concessi," ete. (Let all men now living and to come know that I, A B have, etc.). Bracton, 34 b.

FYNDERINGA (Sax.). An offence or trespass for which the fine or compensation was reserved to the king's pleasure. Leges Hen. I. c. 10. Its nature is not known. Spelman reads fynderinga, and interprets it treasure trove; but Cowel reads fyrderinga, and interprets it a joining of the king's fird or host, a neglect to do which was punished by a fine called firduite. See Cowel; Spelman. Gloss. DuCange agrees with Cowel.

G.

GABEL. A tax, imposition, or duty. This word is said to have the same signification that gabelle formerly had in France. Cunningham, Dict. But this seems to be an error; for gabelle signified in that country, previous to its revolution, a duty upon salt. Merlin, Rép. Lord Coke says that gabel or gavel, gablum, gabellum, gabelletum, galbelletum, and gavillettum signify a rent, duty, or service yielded or done to the king or any other lord. Coke, Litt. $142 a$.

GABLUM (spelled, also, gabulum, gabula). The gable-end of a building. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. p. 201; Cowel.

A tax. DuCange.
GAFOL (spelled, also, gabella, gavel). Rent; tax ; interest of money.

Gafol gild. Payment of such rent, etc. Gafol land was land liable to tribute or tax, Cowel ; or land rented. Saxon Dict. See Taylor, Hist. of Gavelkind, pp. 26, 27, 1021 ; Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss.

GAGE, GAGER (Law Lat. vadium). Personal property placed by a debtor in possession of his creditor as a security for the payment of his debt a pawn or pledge ( $q \cdot v$. .). Granville, lib. 10, c. 6; Britton, c. 27.

To pledge; to wage. Webster, Dict.
Gager is used both as noun and verb: e.g. gager del ley, wager of law, Jacobs; gager ley, to wage law, Britton, c. 27 ; gager deliverance, to put in sureties to deliver cattle distrained. Termes de la Ley; Kitchen, fol. 145 ; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. fol. 67, 74.

A mortgage is a dead-gage or pledge; for, whatsoever profit it yields, it redeems not itself, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the appointed time. Cowel.
gager del Ley. Wager of law.
GAIN. Profite.
GAINAGE. Wainage, or the draughtoxen, horses, wain, plough, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage. Also, the land tilled itself, or the profit arising from it. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 117.

Gainor. The sokeman that hath such land in occupation. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 12.

GALENES. In Old Scotch Law. A kind of compensation for slaughter. Bell, Dict.

GALLON. A liquid measure, containing two hundred and thirty-one cubic inches, or four quarts.

GALLOWS. An erection on which to hang criminals condemned to death.

GAME. Birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting. Bacon, Lbr. See 11 Metc. Mass. 79.

GAME LAWS. Laws regulating, the killing or taking of birds and beasts, as game.

The English game laws are founded on the of reatricting the right of taking game to ce privileged classes, generally landholders. In: the law was so modified as to enable any one $t$ tain a certificate or license to kill game, on pay] of a fee. An account of the present game lav England will be found in Appleton's New Am. vol. viii., Eng. Cyc., Arts & Sc. Div. The relating to game in the United Stites are $&$ rally, if not universally, framed with referenc protecting the animale from indiscriminate unreasonable havoc, leaving all persons fre take game, under certain restrictions as to season of the year and the means of capture. details of these regulations must be sought in statutes of the several states.
GAMING. A contract between tw more persons by which they agree to pla: certain rules at cards, dice, or other cod vance, and that one shall be the loser the other the winner.

When considered in itself, and without rega. the end proposed by the players, there is not in it contrary to natural equity, and the con will be considered as a reciprocal gift, which parties make of the thing played for, under ce: oonditions.
There are some games which depend altog. upon skill, othere which depend upon chance, others which are of a mixed nature. Billiar an example of the first; lottery, of the second; backgammon, of the last.
2. In general, at common law, all ga are lawful, unless some fraud has been $F$ tised or such games are contrary to pu policy. Each of the parties to the cont must have a right to the money or tl played for. He must have given his full free consent, and not have been entrappe fraud. There must be equality in the $p$. The play must be conducted fairly. even when all these rules have been obser the courts will not countenance gaming giving too easy a remedy for the recover money won at play. Bacon, Abr.
3. But when fraud has been practise $\bar{c}$ in all other cases, the contract is void; in some cases, when the party has been gr of cheating, by playing with false dice, ca and the like, he may be indicted at com law, and fined and imprisoned accordin the heinousness of the offence. 1 Rus Crimes, 406.
4. Statutes have been passed in perl all the states forbidding gaming for mc at certain games, and prohibiting the very of money lost at such games. See con, Abr; Dane, Abr. Index ; Pothier, T1 du Jeu; Merlin, Repertoire, mot Jeu; beyrac, Traité du Jeu, tome 1, p. 104, no 1 P. A. Browne, Penn. Rep. 171; 10 v. T 360; 3 Pick. Mass. 446; 7 Cow. N. Y. 1 Bibb, Ky. 614; 1 Mo. 635 ; 1 Bail. S 315; 6 Rand. Va. 694; 2 Blackf. Ind. 25 id. 294; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, $\% 507$.

GAming Houses. In Crim

Law. Houses kept for the purpose of permitting persons to gamble for money or other valuable thing. They are nuisances in the eye of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices. 1 Russell, Crimes, 299; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 663; 3 Den. N. Y. 101.

GANANCIAL. In Spanish Law. Property held in community.

The property of which it is formed belongs in common to the two consorts, and, on the dissolution of the marriage, is divisible between them in equal shares. It is confined to their future acquisitions durante el matrimonio, and the frutos or rents and profits of the other property. 1 Burge, Confl. of Laws, 418, 419; Aso & M. Inst. b. 1, t. 7, c. 5, & 1.

GAOL. (This word, sometimes written jail, is said to be derived from the Spanish jaula, a cage (derived from caula), in French geole, gaol. 1 Mann. & G. 222, note a.) A prison or building designated by law or used by the sheriff for the confinement or detention of those whose persons are judicially ordered to be kept in custody. See 6 Johns. N. Y. 22; 14 Viner, Abr. 9 ; Bacon, Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Comyns, Dig. 619.

GAOL-DELIVERY. In Einglish Law. To insure the trial, within a certain time, of all prisoners, a patent, in the nature of a letter, is issued from the king to certain persons, appointing them his justices and authorizing them to deliver his gaols. See General Gaol Delivery; Ofer and Terminer.

GAOL LIBERTIES, GAOL LIMITS. A space marked out by limits, which is considered as a part of the prison, and within which prisoners are allowed to go at large on giving security to retura. Owing to the rigor of the law which allowed capias, or attachment of the person, as the first process against a debtor, statutes were from time to time passed enlarging the gaol liberties, in order to mitigate the hardships of imprisonment: thus, the whole city of Boston was held the "gaol liberties" of its county gaol. And so with a large part of New York city. Act of March $13,1830,3$ N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1829 , App. 116. The prisoner, while withia the limits, is considered as within the walls of the prison. 6 Johns. N. Y. 121.

GAOLER. The keeper of a gaol or prison; one who has the legal custody of the place where prisoners are kept.

It is his duty to keep the prisoners in safe custody, and for this purpose he may use all necessary force. 1 Hale, PI. Cr. 601. But any oppression of a prisoner under a pretended necessity will be punished; for the prisoner, whether he he a debtor or a criminal, is entitled to the protection of the laws from oppression.

GARAUNTOR. A warrantor or vouchee, who is obliged by his warranty (garauntie) to warrant (garaunter) the title of the warrantee (garaunte), that is, to defend him in his seisin, and if he do not defend, and the tenant be ousted, to give him land of equal value. Britton, c. 75.

GARBALIO DECIMA (L. Lat.; from garba, a sheaf). In Scotch Law. Tithes of corn: such as wheat, barley, oats, pease, etc. Also called parsonage tithes (decimae rectorice). Erskine, Inst. b. 11, tit. 10, & 13.

GARDEN. A piece of ground appropriated to raising plants and flowers.

A garden is a parcel of a house, and passes with it. 2 Coke, 32; Plowd. 171; Coke, Litt. 5 b, $56 a, b$. But see F. Moore, 24 ; Bacon, Abr. Grants, I.

GARNISF. In English Law. Money paid by a prisoner to his fellow-prisoners on his entrance into prison.

To warn. To garnish the heir is to warn the heir. Obsolete.

GARNISHEE. In Practice. A person who has money or property in his possession belonging to a defendant, which money or property has been attached in his hands, and who has had notice of such attachment; he is so called because he has had warning or notice of the attachment.

From the time of the notice of the attachment, the garnishee is bound to keep the property in his hands, to answer the plaintiff's claim, until the attachment is dissolved or he is otherwise discharged. See Sergeant, Att. 88-110; Comyns, Dig. Attachment, E.
There are garnishees also in the action of detinue. They are persons against whom process is awarded, at the prayer of the defendant, to warn them to come in and interplead with the plaintiff. Brooke, Abr. Detinue.

GARNISHMENT. A warning to any one for his appearance, in a cause in which he is not a party, for the information of the court and explaining a cause.
For example, in the practice of Pennsylvania, when an attachment issues against a debtor, in order to secure to the plaintiff a claim due by a third person to such debtor, notice is given to such third person, which notice is a garnishment, and he is called the garnishee.

In detinue, the defendant cannot have a sci. fa. to garnish a third person unless he confess the possession of the chattel or thing demanded. Brooke, Abr. Garnishment, 1, 5. And when the garnishee comes in, he cannot vary or depart from the allegation of the defendant in his prayer of garnishment. The plaintiff does not declare de novo against the garnishee ; but the garnishee, if he appears in due time, may have oyer of the original declaration to which he pleads. See Brooke, Abr. Garnishee and Garnishment, pl. 8; ATtachment.

GARNISTURA. In Old English Law. Garniture ; whatever is necessary for the for tification of a city or camp, or for the ornament of a thing. 8 Rymer, 328; DuCange; Cowel; Blount.

GARSUMNE. In Old Engliah Law. An anerciament or fine. Cowel. See Gressume; Grossome; Gersuma.

GATE (Sax. geat), at the end of names of places, signifies way or path. Cunningham, Law Dict.

In the words beant-gate and cattle-gate, it means $a$ right of pasture : these rights are local to Suffolk and Yorkshire respectively; they are considered as corporeal hereditaments, for which ejectment will lie, 2 Strange, $10 \mathrm{~s} 4 ; 1$ Term, 137 , and are entirely distinct from right of common. The right is sometimes connected with the duty of repairing the gates of the pasture: and perhaps the name comes from this.

GAUGER. An officer appointed to examine all tuns, pipes, hogsheads, barrels, and tierces of wine, oil, and other liquids, and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure.

GAVEI. In Old English Law, Tribute; toll; custom; yearly revenue, of which there were formerly various kinds. Jacob, Law Dict.; Taylor, Hist. of Gavelkind, 26, 102. See Gabel.

GAVELGELD (Sax. gavel, rent, geld, payment). That which yields annual profit or toll. The tribute or toll itself. 3 Mon. Angl. 155; Cowel ; DuCange, Gavelgida.

GAVELHERTE. A customary service of ploughing. DuCange.

GAVEIKIND. The tenure by which almost all lands in England were held prior to the Conquesi, and which is still preserved in Kent.

All the sons of a tenant of gavelkind lands take equally, or their heirs male and female by representation. The wife of such tenant is dowable of one-half the lands. The husband of such tenant has curtesy, whether issue be born or not, but only of one-half while without issue. Such lands do not escheat, except for treason or want of heirs. The heir of such lands may sell at fifteen years old, but must himself give livery. The rule as to division among brothers in default of sons is the same as among the sons.

Lord Coke derives gavelkind from "gave all kinde;" for this custom gave to all the sons alike, 1 Coke, Litt. 140 a; Lambard, from gavel, rent, 一that is, land of the kind that pays rent or customary husbandry work, in distinction from lands held by knight service. Perambulations of Kent, 1656, p. 585. See Encyc. Brit.; Blount.

GAVELMAN. A tenant who is liable to tribute. Sumner, Gavelkind, p. 33 ; Blount. Gavelingmen were tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides customary service. Cowel.

GAVEIMED. A customary service of mowing meadow-land or cutting grass (consuetudo falcandi). Somner, Gavelkind, App.; Blount.

GAVELWERK (called also Gavelweek). A customary service, either manuopera, by the person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Phillips, Purveyance; Blount ; Somner, Gavelkind, 24 ; DuCange.

GEBOCIAN (from Sax. boc). To convey boc land,-the grantor being said to gebocian the grantee of the land. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10. But the better opinion would seem to be that boc land was not transferable except by descent. Sae DuCange, Liber.

GEID (from Sax. gildan; Law Lat. gel dum). A payment; tax, tribute. Laws of Hen. I. c. 2; Charta Edredi Regis apud Ingulfum, c. 81; Mon. Ang. t. 1, pp. 52, 211, 379; t. 2, pp. 161-163; DuCange; Blount.

The compensation for a crime.
We find geld added to the word denoting the offence, or the thing injured or destroyed, and the compound taking the meaning of compensation for that offenco or the value of that thing. Capitulare 3, anno 813, cc. 23, 25; Carl. Magn. So, wergeld, the compensation for killing a man, or his value; orfgeld, the value of cattle; angeld, the value of a single thing ; octogeld, the value cight times over, etc. DuCange, Geldum.

GEMOT (gemote, or mote; Sax., from gemettand, to meet or assemble; L. Lat. gemo tum). An assembly; a mote or moot, meeting, or public assembly.

There were various kinds: as, the witenagemot, or meeting of the wise men; the folcgemot, or general assembly of the people; the shire-gemot, or county court ; the burg-gemot, or borough court; the hundred-gemot, or hundred court; the hali-gemot, or court-baron; the halmote, a convention of citizens in their public hall; the holy-mote, or holy court; the sweingemote, or forest court; the wardmote, or ward court. Cunningham, Law Dict. And see the several titles.

GENEALOGY. The summary history or table of a house or family, showing how the persons there named are connected together.
It is founded on the idea of a lineage or family. Persons descended frum the cummon father constitute a family. Under the idea of degrecs is noted the nearness or remoteness of relationship in which one person stands with respect to another. A series of several persons, descended from a common progenitor, is called a line. Children stand to each other in the relation either of full hlood or half-blood, according as they are descended from the same parents or have only one parent in common. For illustrating descent and relationship, genealogical tables are constructed, the order of which depends on the end in riew. In tables the object of which is to show all the individuals embraced in a family, it is usual to hegin with the oldest progenitur, and to pat all the persons of the male or female sex in descending, and then in collateral, lides. Other tables exhibit the ancestors of a particular person in ascending lines both on the father's and the mother's side. In this way four, eight, sixteen, thirty-two, etc. ancestors are exhibited, doubling at every degree. Some tables are constructed in the furm of a tree, after the model of canonical law (arbor consanguinitatis), in which the progenitor is plaoed beneath, as if for the root or stem.

GENER (Lat.). A son-in-law.
GENERAL ASSEMBLY. A nams given in some of the states to the senate and house of representatives, which compose the legislative body.

GENERAI GAOL DELIVERY. In

English Law. One of the four commissions issued to judges holding the assizes, which empowers them to try and deliverance make of every prisoner who shall be in the gaol wheu the judges arrive at the circuit town, whetber an indictment has been preferred at any previous assize or not.

It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each prisoner, which were called writs de bono et malo; but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoncrs has long heen established in their stead. 4 Stephen, Comm. 333, 334; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 14, 28.

Under this authority the gaol must be cleared and delivered of all prisoners in it, whenever or before whomever indicted or for whatever crime. Such deliverance takes place when the person is either acquitted, convicted, or sentenced to punishment. Bracton, 110. See Courts of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery ; Assize.

GENERAL IMPARLANCE. In Pleading. One granted upon a prayer in which the defendant reserves to himself no exceptions.

GENERAL ISSUE. In Pleading. A plea which denies or traverses at once the whole indictment or declaration, without offering any special matter to evade it.
It is called the general issue because, by importing an abselute and general donial ot what is alleged in the indictment or declaration, it amounts at once to an issue. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 305. In the early manner of pleading, the general issue was seldom used except where the party meant wholly to deny the charges alleged against him. When he intended to excuse or palliate the charge, a special plea was used to set forth the particular facts.

But now, since special pleading is generally abolished, the same result is secured by requiring the defendant to file notice of special matters of defence which he intends to set up on trial, or obliging him to use a form of answer adapted to the plaintiff's declaration, the method varying in different systems of pleading.

In criminal cases the general issue is, not guilty. In civil cases the general issues are almost as various as the forms of action: in assumpsit, the general issue is non assumpsit; in debt, nil debet; in detinue, non detinet; in trespass, non cul. (not guilty); in replevin, non cepit, etc.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE. A bureau in the United States government which has the charge of matters relating to the public lands.

It was established by the act of April 25, 1812, 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1238. Another act was passed March 24, 1824, 3 Story, 1938, which anthorized the employment of additonal officers. And it was reorganized by an act entitled "An act to reorganize the General Land Office," approved July 4, 1836. It was originally a bureau of the treasury department, hut was transferred in 1859 to the department of the interior. See Departuent; Brightly, Dig. U.S. Laws, Lands.
$G E N E R A L$ OCCUPANT. The man who could first enter upon lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant for life, living the cestui que vie. At common law he held the lands by right for the remainder of the term ; but this is now altered by statute, in England, the term going to the executors if not devised. 29 Car. II. c. 3 ; 14 Geo. II. c. 20; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 258. This has been followed by some states, 1 Md . Code, 666, s. 220, art. 93 ; in some states the torm goes to heirs, if undevised. Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 91, 8 I.

GENERAL SHIP. One which is employed by the charterer or owner on a particular voyage, and is hired by a number of persons, unconnected with each other, to convey their respective goods to the place of destination. A ship advertised for general receipt of goods to be carried on a particular voyage. The advertisement should state the name of the ship and master, the general character of the ship, the time of sailing, and the proposed voyage. See 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, I30; Abbott, Shipp. 7th Lond. ed. 123.

The shippers in a general ship generally contract with the master; but in law the owners and the master are separately bound to the performance of the contract, it being considered as made with the owners as well as with the master. Abbott, Shipp. 7 th Lond. ed. 3 I9.

GENERAL SPECIAL IMPARL-

ANCE. In Pleading. One in which the defendant reserves to himself "all advantages and exceptions whatsoever." 2 Chitty, Plead. 408. See Imparlance.

GENERAL TRAVERSE. See Traverse.

GENERAL WARRANT. A process which nsed to issue from the state secretary's office, to take up (without naming any person in particular') the anthor, printer, and publisher of such obscene and seditious lihels as were particularly specified in it. It was declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the house of commons. Com. Jour. 22 April, 1766 ; Wharton, Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed.

A writ of assistance.
The issuing of these was one of the causes of the American republic. They were a species of general warant, being directed to "all and singular justices, sheriffs, constables, and all other officers and suhjects," empowering them to enter and search any house for uncustomed goods, and to command all to assist them. These writs were perpetual, there heing no return to them. They were not executed, owing to the eloquent argument of Otis before the supreme court of Massachusetts against their legality. See Tudor, Life of Otis, 66.

The term occurs in modern law in a different sense. See 18 Ill. 67.

GENS (Lat.). In Roman Law. A union of families, who hore the same name, who were of an ingennous birth, ingenui, none of whose ancestors had been a slave, and who had suffered no capitis diminutio.

Gentiles sunt, qui inter ae codem nomine sunt; qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt; quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit; qui capite non sunt deminuti. This definition is given by Cicero ('Topic 6), after Seævole, the pontifex. But, notwithstanding this high authority, the question as to the organization of the gens is involved in great obseurity and doubt. The definition of Festus is still more vague and änsatisfactory. He says, "Gentilis dieitur et ex éodem genére ortus, et is, qui simili nomine appellatur, ut ait Cincius: Gentilcs mihi sunt, qui meo nemine appellaniur." Gens and yenus are convertible terms; dod Cicero defines the latter word, "Genue autem est qued sui similes communiene quadam, specie autem differentes, duas aut plures complectitur partes." De Oratore, 1, 42. The genus is that which comprehends two or more particulsrs, similar to one another by having aomething in common, but differing in species. From this it may fairly be concluded that the gens or race comprises several families, always of ingenuous birth, resembling each other by their origin, geueral name,-nomen,and common sacrifices or sacred rites,-sacra gentibitia (suisimiles cemmunione quadam),-but differing from each other by a particular name,-cognomen snd agnatio (specie autem differentes). It would scem, however, from the litigation between the Cleudii and Marcellii in relation to the inheritance of the son of a freedman, reported by Cicero, that the deceased, whose succession was in controversy, belonged to the gens Claudia, for the foundation of their claim was the gentile rights,-gente; and the Marcellii (plebeians belonging to the same gens) supported their pretensions on the ground that he was the aon of their freedman. This fact has been thought by some writers to contradict that part of the definition of Scævola and Cicero where they say, quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit. And Niebuhr, in a note to his history, concludea that the definition is erronecus: he says, "The claim of the patrician Clandii is at variance with the definition in the Topics, which excludes the posterity of freedmen from the character of gentiles: probably the decision was against the Claudii, and this might be the ground on which Cicero denied the title of gentiles to the descendants of freedmen. I conceive in so doing he nust have been mistaken. We know from Cicero himself (de Leg. 11, 22) that no bodies or ashes were allowed to be placed in the common sepulchre unless they belonged to such as shared in the gens and its sacred rites; and several freedmen have been admitted into the aepulchre of the Scipios." But in another place he says, "The division into houses was so essential to the patrician order that the appropriate ancient term to designate that order was a oircumlocution,-the patrician gentes; but the instance just mentioned shows beyond the reach of a doubt that suoh a gens did not consist of patricians alone. The Claudian oontained the Marcellii, who were plebeians, equal to the Appii in the splendor of the honors they attained to, and incomparably more useful to the commen wealth; auch plebeian families must evidently have arisen from marriages of disparagement, contracted before there was any right of intermarriage between the orders. But the Claudian house had also a very large number of insignificant persons who bore its name,-snch as the M. Claudiue who dieputed the freedom of Virginia; nay, according to an opinion of earlier times, as the very case in Cicero proves, it contained the freedmen and their descendanta. Thus, smong the Gaels, the clan of the Campbells was formed by the nobles and their vassals: if we apply the Roman phrase to them, the former had the clan, the latter only belonged to it." It is obvious that, if what is ssid in the conoluding part of the pessage last quoted be oorrect, the definition of Scevols and Cicero is perfectly consistent with the theory of Niebuhr himself; for the definition, of oourse, refers to the original stock of the gens, and not to unch as might be sttached to it or atsond in a certain legal relation towarde it. In Smith's Diotionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, edited by that accomplished classical acholar, Professor Anthon, the same distinction is intimated, though not fully developed, as follows:-"But it must be ohaerved, though the desoendante of freedmen might have no claim as gentiles, the members of the gens might, s.s euch, have clsime agsinet them; snd in this sense the descendants of freedmen might be gentiles." Hugo, in his History of the Roman Law, vol. 1, p. 83 et seq., says, "Those who bore the aame name helonged all to the same gens: they were gentiles with regard to each other. Consequently, as the freedmen took the name of their former master, they adhered to hie gens, or, in other words, stood in the relation of gentiles to him and his male descendants. Livy refers in express terms to the gens of en enfranchised slave ( $\mathbf{b} .39,19$ ), 'Tecenix Hispalse.... gentis enupsio;' snd the right of inheritance of the son of \& freedman was conferred on the ground of civil relationship,gente. But there must necessarily have been a great difference between those who were born in the gens and those who had only entered it by adoption, and their descendanta; that is to eay, between those who formed the originsl stock of the gens, who were all of patricisn origin, and those who had entered the family by their own enfranchisement or that of their ancestors. The former alone were entitled to the rights of the gentiles; and perhaps the appellation itself was confined to them, while the latter were called gentilitit, to designate those against whom the gentiles had certain rights to exercise." In a lecture of Niebuhr on the Roman Gentes, vol. 1, p. 70 , he eays, "Such an association, consisting of a number of families, from which a person may withdraw, but into which he cannot be sdmitted at all, or ouly by being adopted by the whole association, is a gens. It must not be confounded with the family, the members of which are descended from a commen ancestor; for the patronymic names of the gentes are nothing but symbols, and are derived from heroes." Arnold gives the following exposition of the sub-ject:- "The people of Rome were divided inte the three tribes of the Ramnenses, Titionses, and Luceres, and each of these tribes was divided inte ten curiz: it would be more correct to say that the union of ten curiæ formed the tribe. For the state grew out of the junction of certain original elementa; and these were neither the tribes, nar even the curix, but the gentes or houses which made up the curiæ. The first element of the whole system was the gens, or house, a union of several families who were bound together by the joint performance of certain religious rites. Actually, where a system of houses has existed within historical memory, the several families who composed a house were not necessarily related to one another; they were not really cousins more or less distant, sll descended from a common ancestor. But there is no reason to doubt that in the originsl idea of a house the bond of union between its several families was truly sameness of blood; such was likely to be the earliest acknowledged tie, although sfterwards, as names are apt to outlive their meaning, an artificisl bond may have succeeded to the natural one, and a house, instead of consisting of femilies of real relstions, was made up sometimes of families of strangers, whom it was proposed to bind together by a fictitious tie, in the hope that law and cnstom and religion might together rival the force of nature." 1 Arnold, Hist. 31. The gentiles inherited from esch other in the sbsence of agnates: the rule of the Twelve Tables is, "Sci adenatos nec ezeit, gentilis familiam nancitor," which has been paria, phrased, "Si agnatus non erit, tum gentilis herco cetd."

GENTLEMAN. In English Law. A person of superior birth.

According to Sir Edward Coke, he is one who bears ooat-armor, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. The eldest son had no exclusive elaim to the degree; for, accurding to Littleton, "every son is as great a gentleman as the eldest." Coke, 2d Inst. 667. Sir Thomas Smith, quoted by Blackstons, 1 Comm. 406, saye, "As for gentlemen, they are made good cheap in this kingdom; for whosoever studies the laws of the realm, who studics in the universities, who professeth liberal sciences, and (to be short) who can live idly and without manual labor, and will bear the port, charge, and countenance of a gentleman, shall be called master, and be taken for a gentleman." In the United States, this word is unknown to the law; but in many places it is applied by courtesy to all men. Sce Pothier, Proc. Crim. sec. 1, App. 83.

GENTLEWOMAN. An addition formerly appropriate in England to the state or degree of a woman. Coke, 2d Inst. 667.
gentoo Law. See Hindu Law.
GEORGIA. The name of one of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.
2. It was called after George II., king of Great Britain, under whose reign it was colonized.

In 1752, George II. granted a charter to a company consisting of General James Oglethorpe, Lord Percival, add nineteen others, who planted a colony, in 1753, on the bank of the Savannah river, a short distance from its mouth.

The corporation thus oreated was authorized, for twenty-ode years, to orect oourts of judicature for all civil and criminal causes, and to appoint a governor, judges, and other magistrates. The territory was to be held, as of the manor of Hampton Court in Middlesex, in free and common socage, and not in cropite.

This charter was to expire by its own limitation in 1773; snd in 1771 the trustees surrendered it up to the crown, and the colony became a royal province.
3. A registration of conveyances was provided for in 1755 , and the rights of personal liberty, private property, and of publio justice were protected by ample colonial regulations. The constitution of the United States was unanimously adopted by Georgia.

The present constitution, as revised, compiled, and amended, was adopted by a convention at Louisville, May 30, 1798. Among other things, it provides that no law or ordinance shall be passed containing any matter different from what is expressed in the title thereof; that there shall be no future importation of slaves; that debtors shall not be detained in prison after delivering all their estate bona fide for the use of their creditors.

The Legislative Power.

4. This is vested in a senate and house of representatives, which are separate and distinct branches, and which together constitute the general assembly.

The senate is composed of one hundred and thirty-two members, elected one from each county. A senator must be at least twenty-five years old, must have been a citizen of the United States nine years, and an inhabitant of the state, and have actually resided one year next before his election within the county for which he is ohosen, exoept when absent on lawful business of the state or the United States.

The house of representatives is composed of one bundred and sixty-nine members, eleoted two from each of the thirty-seven larger counties, and one from each of the others. A representative must be at least twenty-one years old, have been a citizen of the United States seven years, and an inhabitant of the state three years, and have resided in tho county for which he is chosen one year immediately preeeding the election, unless absent on public bu. siness or that of the United States.
The members of hoth branches are elected biennially, on the first Monday in October. The sessions are held annually, commencing on the first Wednesday in November, and are limited to forty days, unless continued longer by a two-thirds vote in both houses. It is optional with the body whether any compensation shall be allowed after forty days, and what shall be the amount thereof.

The Executive Power.

5. The governor is elected bionnially by the qualified electors, or, in case no one has a majority, is selected by the general acsembly from the two receiving the largest number of votes. He must be thirty years old, have been a citizen of the United States twelve years, and an inhabitant of the state six ysars. He may grant reprieves for all offences against the state, except in cases of impeachment, and may grant pardons or remit any part of a sentence after conviction, except for treason and murder, in which he may respite the execution and make report thereof to the next gencral assembly, by whom a pardon may be granted. He has the revision of all bills passed by both houses, before the same can beoome laws; but two-thirds of both houses may pass a law notwithstanding his dissent. The same qualified veto applies to every "vote, resolution, or order" to which the concurreace of both houses may be neceseary, except in a question of adjournment.

The Judicial Power.

6. The supreme court for the correction of errors was organized in 1845. It consists of three judges elected by the legislature for six years. This court sits only for trial and correction of errors in law and equity in cases brought from the superior courts. It holds ten sessions during the year, at five places. The court is required at each session, in each of the five districts, finally to determine each and every case on the docket at the first term after the writ or error is brought, unless prevented by some providential cause.

The superior court consists of sixteen judges, elected for their respective circuits, one for each, by the electors of that circuit, for the term of four years. It sits twice a year. This court has excluaive jurisdiction in all criminal cases, where the crime is committed by free white persons, except over contempts of court, and minor offences which are punishable by corporation courts and other inferior judicatures, and slaves and free persons of color who have committed capital offences. They have exclusive jurisdiction, likewise, in all cases respecting titles to land. In all other civil cases, it has concurrent jurisdiction with the inferior courts. All the powers of a court of equity are vested in the superior courts, and the judges of the superior courts have power, by writs of mandamus, prohibition, seire facias, certiorari, and all other necessary writs, not only to oarry their own powers fully into effeot, but to correct the errors of all inferior judicatories.
7. Each county has an inferior court, composed of five justioes, who are eleoted every four y ears by the people. In addition to all county matters, such as the superintendence of roade, bridgee, etc., this court hss jurisdiction in all civil cases, except those involving land titles, over all cases of crimea committed by slaves and free persons of color, exoept oapital felonies, subject to the superior court. It holds semi-annual sessions.
An ordinary is elected in each county, by the poople, svery four years, in whom is vested original juriadiction over all testatea' and intestatea' estates. The ordinaries are paid by fees incidsnt to the offics. An appeal lies from this court to the superior court. It haa no jury.
Justices of the peace ars elected hy the poople, two for svery militia district in the state: they hold their office for four years. An appeal lies from the magistrates to the jury of the district, composed of fivs men. Their civil jurisdiction extends to all aums not exceeding fifty dollars.
8. An attorney-general for the middle circuit, and solicitors-general for sach of the other circuits, are electsd by the voters of thess circuits, reapectively, for the term of four years, to prosecute offences against the stats.
Pleadings in this stats ars simplified to ths last degree. All suits srs brought by petition to the court. The petition muat contain the plaintiff's charge, allegation, or demand, plainly, fully, and distinctly set forth, which must bs signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, and to which the clerk annexes a procesa, requiring the defendant to appear at the term to whioh the aame is returnable. A copy is aerved on the defendant by the sheriff. The defsndant makes his snswer in writing, in which he plainly, fully, and distinctly sets forth the cause of his defence. The case then goea to the jury, without any replication or further proceedings; and the penal code declares that every indictment or accusation of the grand jury ahall he desmed aufficisatly technical and correct which atates the offence in the terms or language of the code, or ao plainly that the nature of the offence oharged may be easily understood by the jury.

In all civil cases, either party may be examined by commission or upon the stsnd at the instance of his adversary, both at law and in equity.
An appeal lies in the superior courta from the vardict of a petit to $\mathbf{s}$ special jury, constituted of twelve men taken from the grand jury; and from the verdict of one special jury to another, in equity causes. The jurora are made judges of the law, as well as of the facts, in criminal cases. Divorces are granted upon certain legal grounds, prescribed by statutes, upon the concurrent verdicta of two special juries.

GEREFA. Reeve, which see.
GERMAN. Whole or entire, as respects genealogy or descent: thus, "brother-german" denotes one who is brother both by the father's and mother's side; "cousins-german," those in the first and nearest degrec, i.e. children of brothers or sisters. Tech. Dict.; 4 Mann. & G. 56.

GERONTOCOMI. In Civil Law. Offcers appointed to nuanage hospitals for poor old persons. Clef des Lois Rom. Administrateurs.

GERSUME (Sax.). In OId English Law. Expense; reward; compensation; wealth; especially, the consideration or fine of a contract: e.g. et pro her concessione dedit nobis proedictus Jordanus 100 sol. sterling de gersume. Old charter, cited Somner, Gavelkind, 177 ; Tabul. Reg. Ch. 377 ; 3 Mon. Ang. $920 ; 3$ id. 126. It is also used for a fine or compensation for an offence. 2 Mon. Ang. 973.

GESTATION, UTERO-GESTATION In Medical Jurisprudence. The time during which a female, who has conceived, carries the embryo or foetus in her uterus.

This directly involves the duration of pregnancy, qusstiona concsrning which most frequently arise in osses of contested legitimscy. The descent of property and peerage may be made entirely dependent upon the settlement of thia question.
2. That which is termed the usual period of pregnancy is ten lunar months, forty weeks, two hundred and eighty days, equal to about nine calendar months and one week. One question that has here been much discussed is whether the period of gestation has a fixed limit, or is capable of being contracted or protracted beyond the usual term. Many have claimed that the laws of nature on this subject are immutable, and that the footus, at a fixed period, has received all the nourishment of which it is susceptible from the mother, and becomes as it were a foreign body. Its expulsion is, therefore, a physical necessity. Others claim, and with stronger reasons, that as all the functions of the human body that have been carefully observed are variable, and sometimes within wide limits, and as many observations and experiments in reference to the cow and horse have established the fact that in the period of utero-gestation there is more variation with them than in the human species, there should remain no doubt that this period in the latter is always liable to variation.
3. There are some women to whom it is peculiar always to have the normal time of delivery anticipated by two or three weeks, so that they never go beyond the end of the thirtyseventh or thirty-eighth week, for several pregnancies in succession. Montgomery, Preg. 264. So, also, there are many cases establishing the fact that the usual period is sometimes exceeded by one, two, or more weeks, the limits of which it is difficult or impossible to determine. Lord Coke seems inclined to adopt a percmptory rule that forty weeks is the longest time allowed by law for gestation. Coke, Litt. $123 b$.

But although the law of some countries prescribes the time from conception within which the child must be born to be legitinate, that of England and America fixes no precise limit, but admits the possibility of the birth's occurring previous or subsequent to the usual time. The following are cases in which this question will be found discussed. 3 Brown, Ch. 349 ; Gardner Peerage case, Le Marchant Report.; Croke Jac. 686; 7 Hazard, Register of Pennsylvania, 363. See Pregnancy.

GESTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The doing or management of a thing. Negotiorum gestio, the doing voluntarily without authority business of another. L. 20, C. de neg. gest. Gestor negotiorum, one who so interferes with business of another withont authority. Gestio pro hoerede, behavior as heir; such conduct on the part of the heir as indicates acceptance of the inheritance and makes him liable for ancestor's debts universally: e.g. an entry upon, or assigning, or letting any of the heritable property, releasing any of the debtors of the estate, or meddling with the title-deeds or heirship movables, etc. Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 82 et seg.; Stair, Inst. 3. 6. 1.

GEWRITE. In Saxon Law. Deeds or charters; writings. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10.

GIFT. A voluntary conveyance; that is, a conveyance not founded on the consideration of money or blood.

The word denotes rather the motive of the conveyance: so that a feoffment or grant may be called a gift when gratuitous. A gift is of the same nature as a settlement: neither denotes a form of ussurance, but the nature of the transaction. Watkins, Conv. Preston ed. 199. The operative words of this conveyance are do, or dedi-I give, or I hove given. The maker of this instrument is called the donor, and he to whom it is made, the donee. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 316; Littleton, 59 ; Sheppard, Touchst. c. 11.

Gifts inter vivos are gifts made from one or more persons, without any prospect of immediate death, to one or more others. Gifts caus $\hat{a}$ mortis are gifts made in prospect of death. See Donatio Causa Mortis.
2. Gifts inter vivos have no reference to the future, and go into immediate and absolute effect. Delivery is essential. Without actual possession, the title does not pass. A mere intention or naked promise to give, without some act to pass the property, is not a gift. There exists repentance (the locus poenitentice) so long as the gift is complete and left imperfect in the mode of making it. 7 Johns. N. Y. 26.

The subject of the gift must be certain; and there must be the mutual consent and concurrent will of both parties. Delivery must be according to the nature of the thing. It will have to be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is eapable of delivery. If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be executed. 1 Swanst. Ch. $436 ; 1$ Dev. No. C. 309.
3. When the gift is perfect, by delivery and acceptance, it is then irrevocable, unless it is prejudicial to creditors or the donor was under a legal incapacity or was circumvented by fraud.

If a man, intending to give a jewel to another, say to him, Here I give you my. ring with the ruby in it, etc., and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift notwithstanding the ring bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself to the person to whom given. Bacon, Max. 87.

Where a father bought a ticketin a lottery, which he declared he gave to his infant daughter $E$, and wrote her name upon it, and after the ticket had drawn a prize he declared that he had given the ticket to his child $E$, and that the prize money was hers, this was held sufficient for a jury to infer all the formality requisite to a valid gift, and that the title in the money was complete and vested in E. See 10 Johns. N. Y. 293.

GIFTOMAN. In Swedish Law. He who has a right to dispose of a woman in marriage.
This right is vested in the father, if living; if dead, in the mother. They may nominate a person in their place; but for want of such nomination the brothers-german, and for want of them the consanguine brothers, and in default of the latter the uterine brothers, have the right; but they are bound to consult the paternal or maternal grandfather. Swed. Code, Marriage, c. 1.

GILDA MERCATORIA (L. Lat.). A mercantile meeting.

If the king once grants to a set of men to have gildam mercatoriam, a mercantile meeting or assembly, this is alone sufficient to incorporate and establish them forever. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 473, 474. A company of merchants incorporated. Stat. Will. Reg. Scot. c. 35 ; Leg. Burgorum Scot. c. 99 ; DuCange; Spelman, Gloss. ; 8 Coke, 125 $a ; 2$ Ld. Raym. 1134.

GILDO. In Saxon Law. Member of a gild or decennary. Oftener spelled corrgildo. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss. Geldum.

GILL. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint. See Measure.

GIRANTEM. In Common Law. An Italian word which signifies the drawer. It is derived from girare, to draw, in the same manner as the English verb to murder is transformed into murdrare in our old indietments. Hall, Mar. Loans, 183, n.

GIRTH. A girth, or yard, is a measure of length. The word is of Saxon origin, taken from the circumference of the human body. Girth is contracted from girdeth, and signifies as much as girdle. See Eld.

GIRTH AND SANCTUARY. In Scotch Law. A refuge or place of safety given to those who had slain a man in heat of passion (chaude melle) and unpremeditatedly. Abolished at the Reformation. 1 Hume. 235; 1 Ross, Lect. 331.

GIST (sometimes, also, spelled git).
In Pleading. The essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. Gould, Plead. c. 4, $\% 12 ; 19$ Vt. 102 . In stating the substance or gist of the action, every thing must be averred which is necessary to be proved at the trial. The moving cause of the plaintiff's bringing the action, and the matter for which he recovers the principal satisfaction, is frequently entirely collateral to the gist of the action. Thus, where a father sues the defendant for a trespass for the seduction of his daughter, the gist of the action is the trespass and the loss of his daughter's services; but the collateral cause is the injury done to his feelings, for which the principal damages are given. See 1 Viner, Abr. 598; 2 Phillipps, Ev. 1, n.; Bacon, Abr. Pleas, B; Doctrina Plac. 85 ; Damages.

GIVE. A term used in deeds of conveyance. At common law, it implied a covenant. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 366. So in Keniucky. 1 Pirtle, Dig. 211. In Maryland and Alabama it is doubtful. 7 Gill & J. Mid. 311; 2 Ala. n. s. 555 . ln Ohio, in conveyance of freehold, it implies warranty for the grantor's life. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 366. In Maine it implies a covenant. 5 Me. 227; 23 id. 219. In New York it does not, by statute. See 14 Wend. 38. It does not imply covenant in North Carolina, 1 Murph. No. C. 343; nor in England, by statute $8 & 9$ Vict. c. $106,84$.

GIVER. He who makes a gift. By his gift, the giver always impliedly agrees with the donee that he will not revoke the gift.
giving in payment. In Loulsiana. A term which signifies that a debtor, instead of paying a debt he owres in money, satisfies his creditor by giving in payment a movable or immovable. See Dation en Paiement.

GIVING TIME. An agreement by which a creditor gives his debtor a delay or time in paying his debt beyond that contained in the original agreement. When other persons are responsible to him, either as dra wer, indorser, or surety, if such time be given without the consent of the latter, it discharges them from responsibility to him. See Surety; Guaranty.

GLADIUS (Lat.). In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction: jus gladii.
GLEANING. The act of gathering such grain in a field where it grew, as may have been left by the reapers after the sheaves were gathered.
There is a custom in England, it is said, by whieh the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's land after harvest, without being guilty of a trespass. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 212. But it has been decided that the eommunity are not entitled to claim this privilege as a right. 1 H . Blackst. 51. In the United States, it is believed, no such ri, ht exists. It seems to have existed in some parts of France. Merlin, Rép. Glanage. As to whether gleaning would or would not amount to lareeny, see Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 242; 2 Russell, Cr. 99. The Jewish law may be found in the 19th ehapter of Leviticus, verses 9 and 10. See Ruth ii. 2, 3; Isaiah xvii. 6 .

GLebe. In Ecclesiastical Law. The land which belongs to a chureh. It is the dowry of the church. Gleba est terra qua consistit dos ecclesice. 9 Cranch, 329.

In Civil Law. The soil of an inheritance. There were serfs of the glebe, called glebes addicti. Code 11.47.7, 21; Nov. 54, c. 1.

GLOSS (Lat. glassa). Interpretation; comment; explanation; remark intended to illustrate a subject,-especially the text of an author. See Webster, Dict.
In Civil Law. Glosse, or glossemata, were words which needed explanation. Calvinus, Lex. The explanations of such words. Calvinus, Lex. Especially used of the short comments or explanations of the text of the Roman Law, made during the twelfth century by the teachers at the schools of Bologna, etc., who were hence called glossators, of which glosses Accursius made a compila tion which possesses great authority, calle glossa ordinaria. These glesses were at firs written between the lines of the text (gloss, interlineares), afterwards, on the margir close by and partly under the text (glosst marginales). Cushing, Introd. to Rom. Law $130-132$.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY. Whe a prisoner is arraigned, he is asked, Ho will you be tried? be answers, By God an my country. This practice arose when th prisoner had the right to choose the mode o trial, namely, by ordeal or by jury, and the le elected by God or by his country, that i by jury. It is probable that originally it ws By God or my country; for the questio asked supposes an option in the prisoner, an the answer is meant to assert his innocenc by declining neither sort of trial. 1 Chitt: Crim. GOOD AND VALID. Legally firm: $e$. a good title. Adequate; responsible: e.g. his security is good for the amount of the debt. Webst. A note satisfies a warranty of it as a " good" note if the makers are able to pay it, and liable to do so on proper legal diligence being used against them. 26 Vt .406.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Conduct authorized by law. Surety of good behavior may be demanded from any person who is justly suspected, upon sufficient grounds, of intending to commit a crime or misdemeanor. Surety for good behavior is somewhat similar to surety of the peace, but the recognizance is more easily forfeited, and it ought to be demanded with greater caution. 1 Binn. Penn. 98, n.; 2 Yeates, Penn. 437; 14 Viner, Abr. 21 ; Dane, Abr. Index. As to what is a breach of good behavior, see 2 Mart. La. n. s. 683 ; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b.1, c. 61, s. 6; 1 Chitty, Pract. 676. See Surety of the Peace.

GOOD CONSIDERATION. See Consideration.

GOOD AND IAAWFUL MEN. Those qualified to serve on juries; that is, those of full age, citizens, not infamous or non compos mentis; and they must be resident in the county where the venue is laid. Bacoo, Abr. Juries (A) ; Croke Eliz. 654; Coke, 3d Inst. 30 ; 2 Rolle, 82 ; Cam. & N. No. C. 38.

GOOD WILL. The benefit which arises from the establishment of particular trades or occupations. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities, or prejudices. Story, Partn. & 99. See 17 Ves. Ch. 336; 1 Hoffm. N. Y. 68; 16 Am. Jur. 87.

As between partners, it has been held that the good will of a partnership trade survives, 5 Ves. Ch. 539 ; but this appears to be doubtful, 15 Ves. Ch. 227; and a distinction in this respect has been suggested between commercial and professional partnerships, the advantages of established connections in the latter being held to survive, unless the benefit is excluded by positive stipulations. 3 Madd. Ch. 79. As to the sale of the good will of a trade or business, see 3 Mer . Ch. 452; 1 Jac. & W. Ch. 589 ; 2 Swanst. Ch. 332; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. 505 ; 17 Ves. Ch. 346 ; 2 Madd. GOODS. In Contracts. The term goods is not so wide as chattels, for it applies to inanimate objects, and does not include animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which chattels does include. Coke, Litt. 118; 1 Russ. Ch. 376.

Goods will not include fixtures. 2 Mass. 495 ; 4 J. B. Moore, 73 . In a more limited sense, goods is used for articles of merchandise. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 389. It has been held in Massachusctts that promissory notes were within the term goods in the Statute of Frauds, 3 Metc. Mass. 365 ; but see 24 N. H. 484 ; 4 Dudl. So. C. 28 ; so stock or shares of an incorporated company, 20 Pick. Mass. 9 ; 3 Harr. & J. Md. 38; 1's Conn. 400; so, in some cases, bank notes and coin. 2 Stor. C. C. 52; 5 Mas. C. C. 537.

In Wills. In wills goods is nomen generalissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc. 1 Atk. Ch. 180-182; 2 id. 62; 1 P. Will. Ch. 267; 1 Brown, Ch. 128; 4 Russ. Ch. 370; Williams, Exec. 1014; 1 Roper, Legacies, 250. But in general it will be limited by the context of the will. ## GOODS AND CHATTELS. In Contracts. A term which includes not only personal property in possession, but choses in action and chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, or emblements. 12 Coke, 1; 1 Atk. Ch. 182; Coke, Litt. 118; 1 Russ. Ch. 376.In Criminal Law. Choses in action, as bank notes, mortgage deeds, and money, do not fall within the technical definition of "goods and chattels." And if described in an indictment as goods and chattels, these words may be rejected as surplussge. 4 Gray, Mass. $416 ; 3$ Cox, Cr. Cas. $460 ; 1$ Den. Cr. Cas. 450; 1 Dearsl. & B. Cr. Cas. 426; 2 Zabr. N. J. 207; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 241, 4th ed. 468. See 5 Mas. C. C. 537.

In Wills. If unrestrained, these words will pass all personal property. Williams, Exec. 1014 et seq. Am. notes. See Addison, Contr. 31, 201, $912,914$.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED. A phrase used to designate the action of assumpsit brought when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

A sale, delivery, and the value of the goods must be proved. See Assumpsit.

GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE. A phrase used in the Statute of Frauds. Fixtures do not come within it. 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 275; 3 Tyrwh. 959; 1 Tyrwh. & G. 4. Growing crops of potatoes, corn, turnips, and other annual crops, are within it. 8 Dowl. & R. 314; 10 Barnew. & C. $446 ; 4$ Mees. & W. Exch. 347 : per contra, 2 Taunt. 38. See Addison, Contr. 31, 32; 2 Dan. Ky. 206; 2 Rawle, Penn. 161; 5 Barnew.
& C. $829 ; 10$ Ad. & E.753. As to when growing crops are part of the realty and when personal property, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 3. Promissory notes and shares in an incurporated company, and, in some cases, money and bank-notes, have been held within it. See 2 Parsons, Contr. 330-332; Goods and Chattels.

GOUT. In Medical Jurisprudence. An inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints.

In cases of insurance on lives, when there is warranty of health, it seems that a man subject to the goutis capable of being insured, if he has no sickness at the time to make it an unequal contract. 2 Park, Ins. 583.
GOVERNMENT (Lat. gubernaculum, a rudder. The Romans compared the state to a vessel, and applied the term gubernator, helmsman, to the leader or actual ruler of a state. From the Latin, this word has passed into most of the modern European languages). That institution or aggregate of institutions by which a state makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming a state.
2. We understand, in modern political acience, by state, in its widest sense, an independent suciety, acknowledging no superior, and by the term government, that institution or aggregate of institutions by which that society makes and oarries out those rules of action which are ncecssary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming that society by those who possess the power or authority of prescribing them. Government is the aggregate of authorities which rulc a society. By adminiatration, again, we understand in modern times, and especially in more or less free countries, the aggregate of those persons in whose bands the reins of government are for the time-being (the chief ministers or heads of departments). But the terms state, government, and administration are not always used in their strictness. The government of a state being its most prouninent featurs, which is most readily porccived, government has frequently been used for state; and the publieists of the last century almost alwaya usel the term government, or form of government, when they discussed the different political societies or states. On the other band, government is often used, to this day, for administration, in the sense in which it has been explained. We shall give in this article a classification of all governments and political societies which have existed and exist to this day.
Governments, or the authorities of societiss, are, like societies themselves, grown institutions. See Institution.
3. They are never aetually created by agreement or coolpact. Even where portions of goverament are formed by agreement, as, for instance, when a certain family is called to rule over a country, the contracting parties must previously be conscious of having authority to do so. As society originates with the family, so does authority or government. Nowhere do men exist without authority among them, even though it were but in its mere incipiency. Men are forced into this state of things by the fundamental law that with them, and with them alone of all mammals, the period of dependence of the young upon its parents outlasts by mnny years the period of lactation : so that, during this perind of post-lactational dependence, time and opportunity are given for the development of affection and the habit of obedience on the one hand, and of affection and authority on the other, as well as of mutual dependence. The family is a society, and expands into clusters of familes, into tribes and larger societies, collecting into communities, alway carrying the habit and necessity of outhority and mutual sopport along with them. As men advance, the great and pervading law of mutual dependence ahows italf more and more clearly, and acts more and more intensely. Man is eminently a social being, not only as to an instinctive love of aggregation, not only as to material necessity and security, but also as to mental and affoctional development, and not only as to a given nomber of existing beings, or what we will call as to extent, but also as to descent of generation after generation, or, as we may call it, transmiasion. Society, and its government along with it, are continuous. Goveroment exista and continues among men, and laws have authority for generations which neither mede them nor had any direct representation in making them, because the necessily of governmeut-necessary according to the nature of social man and to his wants-is a continuous necessity. But the family is not only the institution from which once, at a distant period, society, suthority, government arose. The family increases in importance, distinctness, and intensity of action as man advances, and continues to develop authority, obedience, affection, and social adhesivences, and thus sets with reference to the state as the feeder acts with refarence to the canal : the state originates daily anew in the family.
4. Although man is an eminently social being, he is also individual, morsaliy, intellectually, and physically ; and, while his individuality will endure even beyond this life, he is necessitated, by bis physical condition, to appropriate and to produce, and thus to imprint his individuality upon the material world around, to create property. But man is not only an appropriating and producing, he is also an exchanging, being. Hs always exchanges and always intercommunicates. This constant intertwiniog of man's individualism and socializm creates mutual claims of protection, rights, the necessity of rules, of laws : in one word, as individuals and as natural members of society, men produce and require government. No society, no cluster of men, no individuals banded together even for a tcmporary purpose, can exist without some sort of goverament instantly springing up. Government is natural to man and characteristic. No animals have a government; no authority exists among them; instinet and physical submission alone exist among them. Man alone has laws which ought to be obcyed but may be disobeyed. Expansion, accumulation, development, progress, relapses, disintegration, violence, error, auperstition, the vecessity of intercommunication, wealth and poverty, peculiar disposition, temperament, configuration of the country, traditional types, pride and avarice, knowledge and ignurance, sagscity of individuals, taste, activity and sluggishnesa, nohle or crimiaal bias, position, both geographical and chronological,-sll that affects uumbers of men affects their governments, and an cndless variety of governments and political societies has been the consequeace; but, whatever form of goverament may present itself to us, the fundomental idea, bowever rudely oonceived, is always the protection of aociety and its membera, security of property and person, the odministration of justice therefor, and the united efforts of society to furnish the mesus to authority to carry out its objects,-coatribution, which, viewed as imposed hy authority, is taxation. Those bands of robbers which occasionally have risen in disintegrating societies, as in India, and who merely robbed and devaatated, avowing that they did not mean to administer justice or protect the people, form no exception, although the extent of their soldiery and the periodieity of their raids caused them to be called governments. What little of government continued to exist was still the remnant of the communal government of the oppressed hamlets; while the robbers themselves could not exist without a government among themselves.
5. Aristotle classified governments according to the seat of supreme power, and he has been generally followed down tovery recent times. Accordingly, we had Monarchy, that government in which the supreme power is vested in one man, to which was added, at a later period, the idea of hereditarincss. Aristocracy, the government in which tho supreme power is vested in the aristoi, which does not mean, in this case, the best, but the excelling ones, the prominent, i.c. by property and influence. Privilege is its eharsateristic. Its corresponding degenerate government is the Oligarchy (from oligos, little, few), that government in which supreme power is exercised by a few privileged ones, who generally have arrogated the power. Democracy, that government in which supreme power is vested in the people at large. Equality is one of its characteristics. Its degenerate correspondent is the ochlooracy (from ochlos, the rabble), for which at present the barbarous terin mobooracy is frequently used.
6. But this classification was insufficient even at the time of Aristotle, when, for instance, theocracies existed; nor is the seat of eupreme power the only characteristic, nor, in all respects, by any means the chief characteristic. A royal government, for instance, may be less absolute than a republican government. In order to group together the governmente and political eocieties which have existed and are still existing, with philosophical discrimination, we must pay attention to the chief-power-holder (whether he be one or whether there are many), to the pervading spirit of the administration or wielding of the power, to the characteristics of the society or the influencing interests of the same, to the limitation or entirety of public power, to the peculiar relations of the citizen to the state. Indeed, every principle, relation, or condition characteristically influencing or shaping society or government in particular may furnish us with a proper division. We propose, then, the following Grouping of Political Societics and Governments.
I. According to the supreme poaver-holder or the placing of supreme power, whether really or nominally 80.
The power-holder may be one, a few, many, or all; and we have, accordingly :
A. Principalities, that is, states the rulers of which are eet apart from the ruled, or inherently differ from the ruled, as in the case of the theocracy.

1. Monarchy.
a. Patriarchy.
b. Chieftain government (as our Indians).
c. Saceriotal monarchy (as the States of the Church; former sovereign bishoprics).
d. Kingdom, or Principality proper.
e. Theocracy (Jehovah was the ohicf magistrate of the Israelitic etate).
2. Dyarchy. It exists in Siam, and existed occaeionally in the Roman empire; not in Sparta, because Sparta was a republic, although her two hereditary generals were onlled kings.
B. Republie.
3. Aristoorscy.
a. Aristocrscy proper.
aa. Aristocracies which ave democraciee within the body of aristocrats (as the formor Polish government).
bb. Organic internal government (as Venice formerly).
b. Oligarchy.
c. Sacerdotal republic, or Hierarchy.
d. Plutocracy ; it', indeed, we adopt this term from antiquity for a government in which it is the principle that the possessore of great wealth constitute the body of aristocrats.
4. Democracy.
a. Demperacy proper.
b. Ochlocracy (Mob-rule), mob meaning unorganized multitude.
II. According to the unity of public power, or its division and limitation.
A. Unrestricted power, or absolutism.
5. According to the form of government.
a. Absolute monarchy, or deeppotism.
b. Absolute aristocracy (Venice) ; absolute accerdotal aristocracy, etc. etc. ete.
c. Absolute democracy (the government of the Agera, or market democracy).
6. According to the organization of the administration.
a. Centralized absolutism. Centralism, called burcaucracy when carried on by writing ; at least, bureaucracy has very rarely exieted, if ever, without centralism.
b. Provincial (sstraps, pashas, proconsuls).
B. According to division of public power.
I. Governments in which the three great functions of public power are scparate, viz., the legislative, executive, judiciary. If a distinct term contradistinguished to centralism be wanted, we might cail these co-operative governments.
7. Governments in which these brenches are not strictly separate, gs, for instance, in our government, but which are nevertheless not centralized governments; as Republican Rome, Athens, and several modern kingdoms.
C. Institutional government.
I. Institutionsl government comprehending the whole, or constitutional government.
a. Deputative government.
b. Representative government.
aa. Bicameral.
bb. Unicameral.
8. Local self-government. See V. We do not believe that any substantisl self-government can exist without an institutional character and subordinate self-governments. It can exist only under an inetitutional government (see Lieber's Civil Liberty and Self-Government, under "Institution").
D. Whether the state is the substentive or the means, or whether the prinoiple of socialism or individualism preponderates.
I. Socialiem, that state of eociety in which the socialiet principle prevails, or in which government considers itself the substantive; the ancient etates absorbing the individual or making citizenship the bighest phase of humanity; absolutism of Louis XIV. Indeed, all medern absolutiom is socialietic.
9. Individualism, tbat system in which the state remains acknowledged a means, and the individusl the substantive; where primary claims, that is, rights, sre felt to exist, for ths obtaining and protection of which the government is eatablished,--the government, or even society, which must not attempt to abeorb the individual. The individual is immortal, and will be of snother world; the state is neither.
III. According to the descent or transfer of supreme power.
A. Heraditary governments.

Monarchies.
Aristocracies.
Hierarchiss, stc.
B. Elective.

Monarchise.

Aristoeracies
Hierarchies.
C. Hereditary-elective-governments, the rulers of which are chosen from a certain family or tribe.
D. Governments in whioh the ehief magistrate or monaroh has the right to appoint the successor; as occasionally the Roman emperore, the Chinese, the Russian, in theory, Bonaparte when consul for life.
IV. Aceording to the origin of supreme power, real or theoretical.
A. According to the primordial character of power.

1. Based on jus divinum.
a. Monarchies.
b. Communism, which rests its claims on a jus divinum or extra-political elaim of society.
c. Democracies, when proclniming that the people, because the people, can do what they list, even against the law; as the Atheniane once declared it, and Napoleon III, when he desired to be elected president a second time against the constitution.
2. Based on the sovereignty of the people.
a. Establishing an institutional government, as with us.
b. Establithing absolutism (the Bonaparte вovereignty).
B. Delegated power.
3. Chartered governmente.
a. Chartered city governments.
b. Chartered companies, as the former great East India Company.
c. Proprietary governmente.
4. Vice-Royalties; as Egypt, and, formerly, Algiers.
5. Colonial government with constitution and high amount of self-government,-a government of great importance in modern history.
V. Constitutions. (To avoid too many subdivisione, this oubject has been treated here separately. See II.)
Constitutions, the fundamental laws on which governmente rest, and which determine the ralation in which the citizen stands to the government, as well as each portion of the government to the whols, and which, therefore, give feature to the political society. may be:
A. As to their origin.
6. Accumulative; as the constitutions of England or Republican Rome.
7. Enaoted conetitutions (generally, but not philosophically, oalled written constitutions).
u. Octroyed coostitutiong (as the French, by Louis XVIII.).
b. Enacted by the psople, as our constitutione. ["We the people charter governments; formerly governments ohartered the liberties of the people."]
8. Pacts between two parties, contraets, as Magna Charta, and most oharters in ths Middle Ages. The medieval rule was that as much freedom was enjoyed as it was posaible to conqner,-expugnare in the true sense.

B. As to extent or uniformity.

1. Broedcast over the land. We may call them national constitutions, popular constitutions, constitutions for the whole state.
2. Special charters. Chartered, accumulated and varying franchises, medieval charactor.
(See article Constitution in the Encyclopædia Americana.)
VI. As to the extent and oomprehension of the ohief government.
A. Military governments.
3. Commercial government ; one of the first in Asia, and that into which Asiatio society relapses, as the only remaining element, when barberous conquerors destroy all bonde which can be torn by them.
4. Tribal government.
a. Stationary.
b. Nomadic. We mention the nomadic government under the tribal government, because no other government has been nomadic, except the patriarchal government, which indeed is the incipisnoy of the tribal government.
5. City government (that is, city-states; as all fres states of antiquity, and as the Hanseatic governments in modern times).
6. Government of the Medieval Orders extending over portions of societies far apart; as the Tsmplars, Tsutonic Knights, Knights of St. John. Political societies without necessary territory, although they had alwaye landed property.
7. National atates; that is, populous political societies spreading over an extensive and cohesive territory heyond the limita of a city.
B. Confederacies.
8. As to admission of members, or extension.
a. Closed, as the Amphictyonic couneil, Germany.
b. Open, as ours.
9. As to the federal charscter, or the character of the members, as states.
a. Leagues.
aa. Tribal confederacies; frequently observed in Asia; geaerally of a loose character.
bb. City leagues; as the Hanseatic League, the Lombard League.
ec. Congress of deputies, voting by atates and according to instruction; as the Netherlands republic and our Articles of Confederation, Germanie Confederation.
dd. Present "state ayatem of Europe" (with constant congresses, if we may call this "system," s federative government in its incipisney).
b. Confederaoies proper, with national congress.
$a a$. With ecclesix or democratic congress (Achæan League).
bb. With representative national congreses, as ours.
C. Mere agglomeretions of one ruler.
10. As the early Asiatio monarchiss, or Turkey.
11. Several orowns in ons head; as Austria, Swaden, Denmark.
VII. As to the construction of society, the title of property and allegianoe.
A. As to tho olasses of society.
12. Castes, hereditarily dividing the whole population, according to occupations and privileges. India, anoient Egypt.
13. Special oastes.
a. Government with privileged classes or caste; nobility.
b. Government with degraded or oppressed caste; slavery.
c. Governments founded on equality of citizens (the uniform tendency of modern civilization).
B. As to praperty and production.
14. Communism.
15. Individualism,
C. As to allegiance.
16. Plain, direct; as in nnitary governments.
17. Varied ; as in national confederacies.
18. Graduated or enrapsulated; us in the feudal system, or as is the case with the serf.
D. Governmeats are occasionally called according to the prevailing interests or classes; as Military states; for instance, Prussia under Frederick II.
Maritime state.
Commercial.
Agricultural.
Manufucturing.
Ecclesiastical, &c.
VIII. According to simplicity or complexity, as in all other spheres, we have-
A. Simple governments (formerly called pure; as pure democracy).
B. Complex governments, formerly called mixed. All organism is complex.
GRADUS (Lat. a step). A measure of space. Vicat, Voc. Jur. A degree of relationship (distantia cognatorum). Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. ह̨ 153; Bracton, fol. 134, 374; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, $z_{8}$ I, lib. 4, c. $17, z_{8} 4$.
A step or degree generally: e.g. gradus honorum, degrees of honor. Vicat, Voc. Jur. A pulpit; a year; a generation. DuCange.

A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land. DuCange.

GRAFFER (Fr. greffer, a clerk, or prothonotary). A notary or serivener. See stat. 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1.
GRAFIO. A baron, inferior to a count. 1 Marten, Anecd. Collect. 13. A fiscal judge. An advocate. Gregor. Turon, 1. 1, de Mirac. c. 33 ; DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel. For varions derivations, see DuCange.

GRAFFIUM. A register; a leger-book or cartulary of deeds and evidences. 1 Annal. Eccles. Menevensio, apud. Angl. Sacr. 653.

GRAFT. In Equity. A term used to designate the right of a mortgagee in premises to which the mortgagor at the time of making the mortgage had an imperfect title, but who afterwards obtained a good title. In this case the new mortgage is considered a graft into the old stock, and as arising in consideration of the former title. 1 Ball \& $\mathbf{B}$. Ch. Ir. 40, 46, 57; 1 Powell, Mortg. 190. See 9 Mass. 34. The same principle has obtained by legislative enactment in Louisiana. If a person contracting an obligation towards another, says the Civil Code, art. 2371, grants a mortgage on property of which he is not then the owner, this mortgage shall be valid if the debtor should ever acquire the ownership of the property, by whatever right.

GRAIN. The twenty-fourth part of a pennyweight.

For scientific purposes the grain only is nsed, and sets of weights are constructed in decimal progression, from ten thousand grains to one-hundredth of a grain.
Wheat, rye, barley, or other corn sown in the ground. In Pennsylvania, a tenant for a certain term is entitled to the away-going crop. 2 Binn. Penn. 487; 5 id. 258, 289; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 14. See Away-Going Crop.

GRAINAGE. In English Law. The name of an ancient duty collected in London, consisting of one-twentieth part of the salt imported into that city.
GRAMME. A French weight. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimetre of distilled water at the temperature of zero. It is equal to 15.4441 grains troy, or 5.6481 drachms avoirdupois.

GRAND ASSIZE. An extraordinary trial by jury, instituted by ITenry II., by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of the barbarous custom of trial by battel. For this purpose a writ de magna assiza eliganda was directed to the sheriff to return four knights, who were to choose twelve other knights to be joined with themselves; and these sixteen formed the grand assize, or great jury, to try the right between the parties. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 351.
GRAND BILL OF SALE. In English Law. The name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. See Bill of Sale; 7 Mart. La. 318.

GRAND CAPE. In English Law. A writ judicial which lieth when a man has brought a procipe quod reddat, of a thing that toucbeth plea of lands, and the tenant makes default on the day given him in the writ original, then this writ shall go for the king, to take the land into the king's bands, and if he comes not at the day given him by the grand cape, he has lost his lands. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 161, 162; Regist. Judic. fol. 2 b; Bracton, lib. 5, tr. 3, cap. 1, nu. 4, 5, 6 . So called because its Latin form began with the word cape, "take thou," and because it had more words than the petit cape, or because petit cape summons to answer for default only. Petit cape issues after appearance to the original writ, grand cape before.

GRAND COUTUMIER. Two collections of laws bore this title. One, also called the Coutumier of France, is a collection of the customs, usages, and forms of practice which had been used from time immemorial in France; the other, called the Coutumier de Normandie (which indeed, with some alterations, made a part of the former), was composed, about the fourteenth of Henry III., A.D. 1229, and is a collection of the Norman laws, not as they stood at the conquest of England by William the Conqueror, hut some time afterwards, and contains many provisions probably berrowed from the old English or Saxin laws. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, c. 6 .

GRAND DAYS. In English Practice. Those days in the term which are solemnly kept in the inns of court and chancery, viz.: Candlemas-day in Hilary Term, Ascensionday in Easter Term, St. John the Baptist's day in Trinity Term, and All Saints' day in Michaelmas Term, which are dies non-juridici, or no days in court, and are set apart for festivity. Jacob, Law Dict.

GRAND JURY. In Practice. A body of men, consisting of not less than twelve ner more than twenty-four, respectively returned by the sheriff of every county to every session of the peace, oyer and terminer, and general gaol delivery, to whom indictments are preferred. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 302; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 310, 311.

There is reason to believe that this institution existed among the Saxons. Crahh, Eng. Law, 35. By the constitutions of Clarendon, enacted 10 Hen . II. (A.D. 1161), it is provided that "if such men were suspected whem none wished or dared to accuse, the sheriff, being thercto requircd hy the bishop, should swear twelve men of the neighberhood, or village, to declare the truth" respeoting such supposed crime, the jurors being summoned as witnesses or aoousers rather than judges. It seems to he pretty certain that this statute either established grand juries, if this institution did not oxist before, or recognized them if they already existed. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 63.
2. Of the organization of the grand jury. The law requires that twenty-four citizens shall be summoned to attend on the grand jury; but in practice not more than twenty-three are sworn, because of the inconvenience which might arise of having twelve, who are sufficient to find a true bill, opposed to other twelve who might be against it. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 161; 6 Ad. & E. 236; 2 Caines, N. Y. 98. The number of jurors is a natter of local regulation. In Massachusetts it is to be not less than thirteen nor more than twentythree, 2 Cush. Mass. 149; in Mississippi and South Carolina, not less than twelve, 15 Miss. 58; 33 id. 355 ; 11 Rich. So. C. 581; in California, not less than seventeen, 6 Cal. 214; in Texas, not less than thirteen. 6 Tex. 99 .
3. Being called into the jury-box, they are usually permitted to select a foreman, whom the court appoints; but the court may exercise the right to nominate one for them. The foreman then takes the following oath or affirmation, namsly: "You, A B, as foreman of this inquest for the body of the - , of - do swear (or affirm) that you will diligently inquire, and true presentment make, of all such articles, matters, and things as shall be given you in charge, or etherwise come to yeur knowledge, touching the present service; the commonwealth's counsel, your fellows', and your own, you shall keep secret; you shall present no one for envy, hatred, or malice; nor shall you leave any one unpresented for fear, favor, affection, hope of reward or gain, but shall present all things truly, as they come to your knowledge, according to the best of your understanding.

So help you God." It will be perceived that this oath contains the substance of the duties of the grand jury. The foreman having been swern or affirmed; the other grand jurors are sworn or affirmed according to this formula:-"You and each of yeu do swear (or affirm) that the same oath (or affirmation) which yeur foreman has taken on his part, you and every one of you shall well and truly observe on your part." Being so sworn or affirmed, and having received the charge of the court, the grand jury are organized, and may proceed to the room provided for them, to transact the business which may be laid before them. 2Burr. 1088; Bacon, Abr. Juries, A. See 12 Tex. 210. The grand jury constitute a regular body until discharged by the court, or by operation of law, as where they cannot continue, by virtue of an act of assembly, beyond a certain day. But, although they have been formally discharged by the court, if they have not separated, they may be called back and fresh bills be submitted to them. 9 Carr. & P. 43.
4. The jurisdiction of the grand jury is coestensive with that of the court for which they inquire, both as to the offences triabie there and the territory over which such court has jurisdiction.

The mode of doing business. The foreman acts as president, and the jury usually appoint one of their number to perform the duties of secretary. No records are to be kept of the acts of the grand jury, except for their own uss, because their proceedings are to be secret. Bills of indictment against offenders are then supplied by the attorneygeneral, or other officer representing government. See 11 Ind. 473; 1 Hempst. Ark. 176; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 435 . On these bills are indorsed the names of the witnesses by whose testimony they are supported. The jury are also required to make true presentment of all such matters as have otherwiss come to their knowledge. These present. ments, which are technically so called, are, in practice, usually made at the close of the session of the grand jury, and include offences of which they have personal knowledge: they should name the authors of the offences, with a view to indictment. The witnesses in support of a bill are to be examined in all cases under oath, even when members of the jury itself testify, as they may do.
5. Twelve at least must concur in order to the finding of a true bill, or the bill must be ignored. 6 Cal. 214. When a defendant is to be put upon trial, the foreman must write en the back of the indictment, "A true bill," sign his name as foreman, and date the time of finding. On the contrary, where there is not sufficient evidence to authorize the finding of the bill, the jury return that they are ignorant whether the person accused committed the offence charged in the bill, which is expressed by the foreman indorsing on the bill, "Ignoramus," " Not a true bill," or similar words, signing his name as before, and dating the indorsement.

As to the witnesses, and the power of the jury over them. The jury are to examine all the witnesses in support of the bill, or enough of them to satisfy themselves of the propriety of putting the accused on trial, but none in favor of the accused. The jury are the sole juiges of the credit and confidence to which a witness before them is entitled. It is decided that when a witness, duly summoned, appears before the grand jury, but refuses to be sworn, and behaves in a disrespectful manner towards the jury, they may lawfully require the officer in attendance upon them to take the witness before the court, in order to obtain its aid and direction in the matter. 8 Cush. Mass. 338; 14 Ala. n. s. 450. Such a refusal, it seems, is considered a contempt. 14 Ala. n. s. 450.
6. Of the secrecy to be observed. This extends to the vote given in any case, to the evidence delivered by witnesses, and to tho communications of the jurors to each other : the disclosure of these facts, unless under the sanction of law, would render the imprudent juror who should make them public liable to punishment. Giving intelligence to a defendant that a bill has been found against him, to enable him to escape, is so obviously wrong that no one can for a moment doubt its being criminal. The grand juror who should be guilty of this offence might, upon conviction, be fined and imprisoned. The duration of the secrecy depends opon the particular circumstances of each case. 20 Mo. 326. In a case, for example, where a witness swears to a fact in open court, on the trial, directly in opposition to what he swore before the grand jury, there can be no doubt that the injunction of secrecy, as far as regards this evidence, would be at an end, and the grand juror might be sworn to testify what this witness swore to in the grand jury's room, in order that the witness might be prosecuted for perjury. 2 Russell, Crimes, 616; 4 Me. 439 : but see, contra, 2 Halst. N. J. 347 ; 1 Carr. & K. 519. See Indictment; Presentment; Cearge.

GRAND LaRCENY. In Criminal Law. By the English law, simple larceny was divided into grand and petit: the former was committed by the stealing of property exceeding twelve pence in value; the latter, when the property was of the value of twelve pence or under. This distinction was not abolished till the reign of George IV. Grand larceny was a capital offence, but clergyable unless attended with certain aggravations. Petty larceny was punishable with whipping, "or some such corporal punishment less than death ;" and, being a felony, it was subject to forfeiture, whether upon conviction or flight.

GRAND SERJEANTY. In English Law. A species of tenure in capite, by certain personal and honorable services to the king, called grand in respect of the honor of so serving the king. Instances of such services are, the carrying of the king's banner, performing some service at bis coronation, etc. The honorable parts of this tenure were retained and its oppressive incidents swept away by stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24. Termes de la Ley; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Oomm. 73; 1 Stephen, Comm. 198.

Vol. I.-41

GRANDCHIIIDREN. The children of one's children. Sometimes these may claim bequests given in a will to children; though, in general, they can make no such claim. 6 Coke, 16. See Child ; Construction.

GRANDFATHER. The father of one's father or mother. The father's father is called the paternal grandfather; the mother's father is the maternal grandfather.

GRANDMOTHER. The mother of one's father or mother. The father's mother is called the paternal grandmother ; the mother's mother is the maternal grandmother.

GRANT. A generic term applicable to all transfers of real property. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 517.

A transfer by deed of that wbich cannot be passed by livery. Williams, Real Prop. 147, 149.

An act evidenced by letters patent under the great scal, granting something from the king to a subject. Cruise, Dig. tit. 33, 34.

A technical term made use of in deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 620. It is said to be construed into a general warranty. See Construction.
The term grant was anciently and in strictness of usage applied to denote the convey ance of incorporeal rights, thaugh in the largest sense the term comprehends every thing that is granted or passed from one to another, and is applied to every species of property. Grant is one of the usual words in a feotfment; and a grant differs but little from a feoffment except in the subject-matter; for the operative words used in grsents are dedi et concessi, "have given and granted."
Incorporeal rights are said to lie in grant, and not in livery; fur, existing only in idea, in contemplation of law, they cannot be transferred by livery of possession. Of course, at common law, a conveyance in writing was necessary: hence they are said to be in grant, and to pass by the delivery of the deed.
By the word grant, in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether written or parol, express, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by a patent pursuant to a law. 12 Pet. 410. See 9 Ad. & E. 532 ; 5 Mass. 472; 9 Pick. Mass. 80.

Office grant applies to conveyances made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title.

Private grant is a grant by the deed of a private person.

Public grant is the mode and act of creating a title in an individual to lands which had previously belonged to the government.

The public lands of the United States and of the various states have been to a great extent conveyed by deeds or patents issued in virtue of general laws; but many specific grants have also been made, and are the usual method of transfer during the colonial period. See 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 517536; 4 Kent, Comm. 450, 494; 8 Wheat. 543; 6 Pet. 548; 16 id. 367 ; Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws, Lands, Patent.

Among the modes of conveyance included under office grant are levies and sales to satisfy execution croditors, sales by order or decree of a court of chancery, sales by order or license of court, sales for non-payment of tazes, and the like. See Blackwell, Tlax, Title passim; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 536-549.

With regard to private grants, see Deed.
GRANT, BARGAIN, AND SELL. Words used in instruments of conveyance of real estate. See Construction; 8 Barb. N. Y. 463 ; 32 Me. 329 ; 1 T. B. Monr. Ky. 30; 1 Conn. 79; 5 Tenn. 124; 2 Binn. Penn. 95; 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 109; 1 Mo. 576; 1 Murph. No. C. 343.

GRANTEE. He to whom a grant is made.

GRANTOR. He by whom a grant is made.

GRASSHEARTH. In OId English Law. The name of an ancient customary service of tenants' doing one day's work for their landlord.

GRATIFICATION. A reward given voluntarily for some service or benefit rendered, without being requested so to do, either expressly or by implication.
GRATIS (Lat.). Without reward or consideration.

When a bailee undertakes to perform some act or work gratis, he is answerable for his gross negligence if any loss should be sustained in consequence of it; but a distinction exists between non-feasance and misfeasance, -between a total omission to do an act which one gratuitously promises to do, and a culpable negligence in the execution of it: in the latter case he is responsible, while in the former he would not, in general, be bound to perform his contract. 4 Johns. N. Y. 84; 5 Term, 143; 2 Ld. Raym. 913.
GRATIS DICTUM (Lat.). A saying not required; a statement voluntarily made without necessity.
GRATUITOUS CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One the object of which is for the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit, received or promised, as a consideration for it: as, for example, a gift. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 709, GRAVAMEN (Lat.). The grievance complained of; the substantial cause of the action. See Greenleaf, Ev. & 66.
GRAVE. A place where a dead body is interred.
The violation of the grave, by taking up the dead body, or stealing the coffin or graveclothes, is a misdemeanor at common law, 1 Russell, Crimes, 414, and has been made the subject of statutory enaotment in some of the stater. See 2 Bishop, Orim. Law, 88 1022 1024; Dearsl. & B. Cr. Cas. 160; 19 Pick. Mass. 304; 4 Blackf. Ind. 328.

A singular case, illustrative of this snhject, occurred in Louislana. A son, who inherited a large estate from his mother, buried her with all her jewels, worth two thousand dollars: he then made a sale of all he inherited from his mother for thirty thousand dollars. After this, a thief broke the grave and stole the jewels, which, after his conviction, were left with the clerk of the court, to he delivered to the owner. The son claimed them, and so did the purchaser of the inheritance: it was held that the jewels, although buried with the mother, belonged to the son, and that they passed to the purchascr by a sale of the whole inheritance. 6 Rob. La. 488. See Dead Body.
GREAT CATtLE. In English Law. All manner of beasts, except sheep and yearlings. 2 Rolle, 173.
Great Charter. See Magna Charta.

GREAT LAW. The name of an act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, passed at Chester immediately after the arrival of William Penn, December 7, 1682. Sergeait, Land Laws of Penn. 24, 230.

GREAT TITHES. In Ecclesiastical Law. The more valuable tithes: as, corn, hay, and wood. 3 Burn, Ecel. Law, 680, 681 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 127.
GREEN CLOTH. An English board or court of justice, composed of the lord steward and inferior officers, and held in the royal household: so named from the cloth upon the board at which it is held.
GREEN WAX. In English Law. Ths name of the estreats of fines, issues, and amercements in the exchequer, delivered to the sheriff under the seal of that court, which is made with green was.

GREMIO. In Spanish Law. The union of merchants, artisans, laborers, or other persons who follow the same pursuits and are governed by the same regulations. The word guild, in English, has nearly the same signification.

GREMIUM (Lat.). Bosom. Ainsworth, Dict. De gremio mittere, to send from their bosom: used of one sent by an ecclesiastical corporation or body. A latere mittere, to send from his side, or one sent by an individual: as, a legate sent by the pope. DuCange. In English law, an inheritance is said to be in gremio legis, in the bosom or under the protection of the law, when it is in abeyance. See In Nubibus.
GRESSUME (varionsly spelled Gressame, Gressum, Grossome; Scotch, grassum).
In Old English Law. A fine due from a copyholder on the death of his lord. Plowd. fol. 271, 285 ; 1 Strange, 654. Cowel derives it from gersum.
GRITHBRECH (Sax. grith, peace, and brych, breaking). Breach of the king's peace, as opposed to frithbrech, a breach of the nation's peace with other nations. Leges Hen. I. c. 36; Chart. Willielm. Conq. Eecles. S. Pauli in Hist. ejusd. fol. 90 .

GROSS ADVENTURE. In Marltime Law. A maritime or bottomry loan. It is so called because the lender exposes his money to the perils of the sea, and contributes to the gross or general average. Pothier ; Pardessus, Dr. Com.

GROSS AVERAGE. In Maritime Law. That kind of average which lalls on the ship, cargo, and freight, and is distinguished from particular average. See Average.

GROSS NEGLIGENCE. The omission of that care which even inattentive and thoughtless men never fail to take of their own property. Jones, Bailm.

Lata culpa, or, as the Roman lawyers most accurately call it, dolo proxima, is, in practice, oonsidered as equivalent to dolus, or fraud itsclf. It must not be confounded, however, with fraud; for it may exist consistently with good faith and honesty of intention, according to common-law authorities.

GROSS WEIGHT. The total weight of goods or merchandise, with the chests, bags, and the like, from which are to be deducted tare and tret.

GROSSOME. In Old Engliah Law. A fine paid for a lease. Corrupted from gersum. Plowd. fol. 270, 285; Cowel.

GROUND ANNUAL. In Scotch Law. An annual rent of two kinds: first, the feuduties payable to the lords of erection and their successors; second, the rents reserved for building-lots in a city, where sub-feus are prohibited. . This rent is in the nature of a perpetual annuity. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 11. 3. 52.

GROUND RENT. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's land. Johnson; Wcbster. A rent reserved by the owner of unimproved land upon a lease of the land to be built upon, as contradistinguished from the rent paid to the lessee by his tenant of the premises where the buildings are erected, and from the ordinary rent paid by the tenant to his landlord upon a demise of lands and tenements.

A rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee-simple, out of the land conveyed. See 9 Watts, Penn. 262; 8 Watts & S. Penn. 185; 2 Am. Law Reg. 577.
2. In Pennsylvania, it is real estate, and in case of intestacy goes to the heir. 14 Penn. St. 444. The interest of the owner of the rent is an estate altogether distinct and of a very different nature from that which the owner of the land has in the land itself. Each is the owner of a fee-simple estate. The one has an estate of inheritance in the rent, and the other has an estate of inheritance in the land out of which the rent issues. The one is an incorporeal inheritance in fee, and the other is a corporeal inheritance in fee. Irwin $v$. Bank of United States, 1 Barr, 349, per Kennedy, J. So, the owner of the rent is not liable for any part of the taxes assessed upon the owner of the land out of which the rent issues. 1 Whart. Penn. 72; 4 Watts, Penn. 98. Being real estate, it is bound by a judgment, and may be mortgaged like other real estate. It is a rent-service. 1 Whart. Penn. 337.
A ground-rent, heing a rent-service, is, of course, subject to all the incidents of such a rent. Thus, it is distrainable of common right, that is, by the common law. Coke, Litt. $142 \alpha$; Kenege v. Elliott, supra. So, also, it may be apportioned. Ingersoll $v$. Sergeant, supra. And this sometimes takes place by operation of law, as when the owner of the rent purchases part of the land; in which case the rent is apportioned, and extinguished pro tanto. Littleton, 222. And the reason of the extinguishment is that a rentservice is given as a return for the possession of the land. Thus, upon the enjoyment of the land depends the obligation to pay the rent; and if the owner of the rent purchases part of the land, the tenant no longer enjoying that portion is not liable to pay rent for it, and so much of the rent as issued out of that portion is, consequently, extinguished. See 2 Blackstone, Comm. 41; 1 Whart. Penn. 235, 352; 3 id. 197, 365.
3. At law, the legal ownership of these two estates-that in the rent and that in the land out of which it issues-can coexist only while they are held by different persons or in different rights; for the moment they unite in one person in the same right, the rent is merged and extinguished. 2 Binn. Penn. 142; 3 Penn. Law Jour. 232; 6 Whart. Penn. 382; 5 Watts, Penn. 457. But if the one estate or intestate be legal and the other equitable, there is no merger. 6 Whart. Penn. 283. In equity, however, this doctrine of merger is subject to very great qualification.

A merger is not favored in equity; and the doctrine there is that although in some cases, where the legal estates unite in the same person in the same right, a merger will take place against the intention of the party whose interests are united (see 3 Whart. Penn. 421, and cases there cited), yet, as a general rule, the intention, actual or presumed, of such party will govern; and where no intention is expressed, if it appears most for his advantage that a merger should not take place, such will be presumed to hare been his intention ; and that it is only in cases where it is perfectly indifferent to the party thus interested that, in equity, a merger occurs. 5 Watts, Penn. 457 ; 8 id. 146 ; 4Whart. Penn. 421; 6 id. 283; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 487.
4. A ground-rent being a freehold estate, created by deed and perpetual by the terms of its creation, no mere lapse of time without demand of payment raises, at common law, a presumption that the estate has been released. 1 Whart. Penn. 229.

But this is otherwise in Pennsylvania now, hy act of April 27, 1855, sec. 7, Pamph. Laws, 369, whereby a presumption of a release or extinguishment is created where no payment, claim, or demand is made for the rent, nor any declaration or acknowledgment of its existence made by the owner of the premises subject to the rent, for the period of twentyune years. This applies to the estate in tho rent, and comprehends the future payments. But, independently of this act of assembly, arrearages of rent which had fallen due twenty years before commencement of suit might be presumed to have been paid. 1 Whart. Penn. 229. These arrearages are a lien upon the land out of which the rent issues; but, as a general rule, the lien is discharged by a judicial sale of the land, and attaches to tha fund raised by the sale. See 2 Binn. Penn. 146; 3 Watts & S. Penn. 9; 8 id. 381; 9 id. 189; 4 Whart. Penn. 516; 2 Watts, Penn. 378; 3 id. 288; 1 Penn. St. 349; 2 id. 96.
5. As ground-rent deeds are usually drawn, the owner of the rent has three remedies for the recovery of the arrearages, viz.: by action, distress, and (for want of sufficient distress) the right to re-enter and hold the land as of the grantor's former estate. See 2 Am . Law Reg. 577; 3 id. 65.

GROUNDAGE. In Martime Law. The consideration paid for standing a ship in a port. Jacob, Law Dict.

GROWING CROPS. Growing crops ' of grain, potatoes, turnips, and all annual crops raised by the coltivation of man, are in certain cases personal chattels, and in others, part of the realty. If planted by the owner of the land, they are a part of the realty, but may by sale hecome personal chattels, if they are fit for harvest, and the sale contemplates their being cut and carried off, and not a right in the vendee to enter and cultivate. So even with trees. 4 Metc. Mass. 580; 9 Barnew. & C. 561 ; Hob. 173; 1 Atk. Cb. 175; 7 N. H. 522; 11 Coke, 50 . So, if a tenant who holds fur a certain time plant annual crops, or even trees in a narsery for purposes of transplantation and sale, they are personal chattels when fit for harvest. 1 Metc. Mass. 27, 313; 2 East, 68; 4 Taunt. 316, per Heath, J. If planted by a tenant for uncertain period, they are regarded, whether mature or not, in many respects as personal property, but liable to become part of the realty if the tenant voluntarily abandons or forfeits posssssion of the premises. 5 Coke, 116 a; 5 ILalst. N. J. 128; Coke, Litt. 55; 2 Tohns. N. Y. 418, 421, n. See 2 Dan. Ky. 206; 2 Rawle, Penn. 161; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 3. guarantere. He to whom a guarantse is nuade.
The guarantes is entitled to receive payment, in the first place, from the debtor, and, secondly, from the guarantor. He must be careful not to give time, beyond that stipulated in the original agreement, to the debtor, without the consent of the guarantor. The guarantee should, at the instance of the guarantor, bring an action against the principal for the recovery of the debt. 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 554; 17 Johns. N. Y. $384 ; 8$ Serg. 1 R. Penn. 116; 10 id. 33; 2 Brown, Ch. 579, 582; 2 Ves. Ch. 542. But the mere omissiuk of the guarantee to sue the principal debtor will not, in general, discharge the guarantor. 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 112; 3 Yeates, Penn. 157; 6 Binn. Penn. 292, 300.

GUARANTOR. He who makes a guar ranty.
A guarantor may be discharged by neglect to notify him of non-payment by the principal; but the same strictness is not required to charge him as is required to charge an indorser.
GUARANTY. An undertaking toanswer for another's liahility, and collateral thereto. A collateral undertaking to pay the debt of another in case he does not pay it Shaw, C. J., 24 Pick. Mass. 252.
It is distinguished from suretyship in being a secondary, while that is a primary, obligation; or, as sometimes defined, guaranty is an undertaking that the debtor shall pay; suretyship, that the debt shall be paid.
The undertaking is essentially in the alternative. A guarantor cannot be sued as a promisor, as the surety may: his contract must be specially set forth. A guarantor warrants the solvency of the promisor, which an indorser does not. 8 Pick. Mass. 423.
Guaranty is limited to mercantile undertakings, or to instruments not under seal; suretyship applies generally.
2. At common law, a guaranty could be made by parol; but by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, re-enacted almost in terms in the several states, it is provided that "No action shall be brought whereby to chargo the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriags of another person, . . . . unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized."

The following classes of promises havs been held not within the statute, and valid though made by parol.

First, where there is a liability pre-existent to the new promise.

1. Where the principal debtor is discharged by the new promise being made, 3 Bingh. n. c. 889 ; 5 Chandl. Wise. 61 ; 28 Vt. 135 ; 29 id. 169; 5 Cush. Mass. 488; 8 Gray, Mass. $233 ; 1$ Q. B. $933 ; 8$ Johns. N. Y. $376 ; 13$ Md. 141; 4 Bos. & P. 124; Browne, Stat. Fr. ${ }^{2} 8$ 166, 193; and an entry of such discharge in the creditor's books is sufficient proof. 3 Hill, So. C. 41. This may be done by agreement to that effect, 1 All. Mass. 405 , hy novation, by substitution, or by discharge under final process, 1 Barnew. & Ald. 297; but mere forbearance, or an agreement to forlear pressing the claim, is not enough. 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 5th Am. ed. 387; 6 Vt. 666 .
2. Where the principal obligation is void or not enforceable when the new promise is made, and this is contemplated by the parties. But if not so contemplated, then the new pro mise is void, Burge, Surety. $10 ; 2 \mathrm{Ld}$. Raym. 1085; 1 Burr. 373. But see, on this point, 17 Md. 283; 13 Johns. N. Y. 175; 6 Ga. 14.
3. So where the promise does not refer to the particular debt, or where this is unascertained. 1 Wils. 305.

In these three classes the principal obligation ceases to exist after the new promise is mads.
4. Where the promisor undertakes for his own debt. But the mere fact that he is indebted will not suffice, unless his promiss refars to that debt; nor is it sufficient if be subsequently becomes indebted on his own account, if not indehted when be promises, or if it is then contingent. 4 Hill, N. Y. 211. And if his own liahility is diseharged or non-existent, the promise is within the statute. 14 Penn. 473.
5. Where the new promise is in consideration of property placed by the debtor in the promisor's hands. 1 Gray, Mass. 391 ; 41 Me . 559.
6. Where the promise does not relate to the promisor's property, but to that of the debtor in the hands of the promisor.
7. Where the promise is made to the debtor, not the creditor; because this is not the debt of "another" than the promisee. 1 Gray, Mass. 76; 11 Ad. & E. 438.
8. Where the creditor surrenders a lien on the debtor or his property, which the promisor acquires or is benefited by, Fell, Guar. c. 2; Addison, Cont. 38 ; 7 Johns. N. Y. 463; 3 Burr. 1886; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 613 ; 21 N. Y. 412; but not 80 where the surrender of the lien does not benefit the promisor. 3 Metc. Mass. 396 ; 21 N. Y. 412.
In the five last classes, the principal deht may still subsist concurrently with the new promise, and the creditor will have a double remedy; but the fulfilment of the new promise will discharge the principal debt, because he can have but one satisfaction. The repeated dicta, that if the principal deht subsists, the promise is collateral and within the statute, are not sustainable. 30 Vt .641 . But the general doctrine now is that the transaction must amount to a purchase, the engagement for the debt being the consideration therefor, in whole or in part. 1 Gray, Mass. 391; 5 Cush. Mass. 488.
3. Second, if the new promise is for a liability then first incurred, it is original, if exclusive credit is given to the promisor. 5 All. Mass. 370; 13 Gray, Mass. 613 ; 28 Conn. 544; Browne, Stat. Fr. $\frac{8}{2} 195$. Whether exclusive credit is so given, is a question of fact for the jury. 7 Gill, Md.7. Merely charging the debtor un a book-account is not conclusive.
Whether promises merely to indemnify come within the statute, is nut wholly settled. Browne, Stat. Fr. 8 158. In many cases they are held to be original promises, and not within the statute. 15 Johns. N. Y. 425; 4 Wend. N.Y.657. But few of the cases, however, have been decided solely on this ground, most of them falling within the classes of original promises before specified. On principle, such contracts seem within the statute if there is a liability on the part of any third person ta the promisee. If not, these promises would be original under class seven, above. Where the indemnity is against the promisor's own default, he is already liable without his promise to indemnify; and to make the promise collateral would make the statute a covert friud. 10 Ad. & E. 453; 1 Gray, Mass. 391; 10 Johns. N. Y. 242; 1 Ga. 294; 5 B. Monr. Ky. 382; 20 Vt. 205; 10 N. H. 175; 1 Conn. 519; 5 Me. 504.
4. Third, guaranties may be given for liabilities thereafter to bo incurred, and will attach when the liability actually accrues. In this class the promise will he original, and not within the statute, if credit is given to the promisor exclusively. 2 Term, 80 ; 1 Cowp. 227. But where the future obligation is contingent merely, the new promise is held not within the statute, on the ground that there is no principal liability when the collateral one is incurred. Browne, Stat. Fr. \% 196. But this doctrine is questionable if the agreement distinctly contemplates the contingency. 1 Cranch, C. C. 77; 5 Hill, N. Y. 483. An offer to guarantee must be accepted within a reasonable time; but no notice of acceptance is required if property has been delivered under the guaranty. 8 Gray, Mass. 211; 2 Mich. 511.
'Guaranty may be made for the tort as woll as the contract of another, and then comes under the term miscarriage in the statute. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 613; 2 Day, Conn. 457; 1 Wils. 305 ; 9 Cow. N. Y. 154; 14 Pick. Mass. 174. All guaranties need a consideration to support them, none being presumed as in case of promissory notes; and the consideration must be ex pressed in a written guaranty. 3 Johns. N. Y. 310 ; 7 Wend. N. Y. 246 ; 24 id. N. Y. 35 ; 21 N. Y. 316; 5 East, 10 . Forbearance to sue is good consideration. 1 Kebl . 114; Croke Jac. 683; 3 Bulstr. 206; Burge, Surety. 12; Browne, Stat. Fr. & 190 ; 1 Cow. N. Y. $99 ; 4$ Johns. N. Y. $257 ; 6$ Conn. 81. Where the guaranty is contemporaneous with the principal obligation, it shares the consideration of the latter. 8 Johns. N. Y. 29; 1 Paine, C. C. $580 ; 14$ Wend. N. Y. 246; 2 Pet. 170; 3 Mich. 396; 36 N. H. 73.

A guaranty may bs for a single act, or may be continuous.
5. The authorities ars not agreed as to the negotiability of a guaranty. It is held that a guaranty which is a separate and distinct instrument is not negotiable separately. 8 Watts, Penn. $361 ; 3$ Watte & S. Penn. 272; 4 Ohandl. Wisc. 151 ; 14 Vt .233 . But if a guaranty is on a negotiable note, it is negotiable with the note; and if the note is to bearer, the guaranty bas been held to be negotiable in itself. 24 Wend. N. Y. 456; 6 Humphr. Tenn. 261. But an equitable interest passes by transfer, and the assignes may sue in the name of the assignor. 12 Serg. $&$ R. Penn. 100; 20 Vt. 506.

It is held that a guaranty is not enforceable by others than those to whom it is divected, 3 McLean, C. C. 279; 1 Gray, Mass. 317; 13 id. 69; 6 Watts, Penn. 182; 10 Ala. N.s. 793, although they advanoe goods thercon. 4 Cranch, 224.
In one case it was held that the guarantor was not bound where the guaranty was addressed to two and acted on by one of them only. 3 Tex. 199. It was held, also, that the guaranty was not enforceable by the survivor of two to whom it was addressed, for canses oreurring since the deceaee of the other. 7 Term, 254.

In the case of promissory notes, a distincsion has sometimes been made between a guaranty of payment and a guaranty of collectability; the latter requiring that the bolder shall diligently prosecute the principal debtor without avail. 4 Wisc. 190; 25 Conn. 576; 2 Hill, N. Y. 139; 6 Barb. N. Y. 547; 26 Me . 358; 4 Conn. 527.

It has in some cases been held that an inciorsement in blank on a promissory note by a stranger to the note was primấ facie a guaranty.
6. A guarantor is discharged hy a material glteration in the contract without his consent.

The guarantor may also be discharged by the neglect of the creditor in pursuing the principal debtor. The same strictness as to demand and notice is not necessary to charge a guarantor as is required to charge an indorser; but in the case of a guarantied note the demand on the maker must be made in a reasonable time, and if he is solvent at the time of the maturity of the note, and remains so for such reasonable time afterwards, the guarantor does not become liable for his subsequent insolvency. 8 East, 242; 2 H. Blackst. 612; 18 Pick. Mass. 534 . Notice of non-payment must also be given to the guarantor, 2 Ohio, 430; but where the name of the guarantor of a promissory note does not appear on the note, such notice is not necessary unless damage is sustained thereby, and in such case the guarantor is discharged only to the extent of such damage. 12 Pet. 497. It is not necessary that an action should he brought against the principal debtor. 7 Pet. 113. See, also, 2 Watts, Penn. 128; 11 Wend. N. Y. 629. From the close connection of guaranty with auretyship, it is convenient to consider many of the principles common to both under the head of suretyship, which article see.

Consult Fell on Guaranty; Burge, Theobald, on Suretyship; Browne on Statute of Frauds; Addison, Chitty, Parsons, Story, on Contracts.
GUARDIAN. One who legally has the eare and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during ite minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.
A person having the oontrol of the property of a minor without that of his person is known in the oivil law, as well as in aome of the atstes of the United States, hy the name of ourstor. 1 Leq. el. du Droit Civ. Rom. 241; Mo. Rev. Stat. 1855, 823 .
2. Guardian by chancery. This guardianship, although unknown at the common law, is well established in practice now. It grew up in the time of William III., and had its foundation in the royal prerogative of the king as parens patrice. 2 Fonblanque, Eq. 5th ed. 246.

This power the sovereigw is preanmed to have delegated to the chancellor. 10 Ves. Ch. 63; 2 P. Will. Ch. 118; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 317. By virtue of it, the chancellor sppointa a guardian where there is none, and exercises a a aperiatending control over all guardiana, however appointed, removing them for misconduct and appointing others in their atead. Coke, Litt. 89; 2 Bulatr. 679; 1 P. Will. 703; 8 Mod. 214; 1 Ves. Ch. 160; 2 Kent, Comm. 227.
This power, in the United States, resides in courts of equity, 1 Johna. Ch. N. Y. $99 ; 2$ id.439, and in prohate or surrogate courts. 2 Kent, Comm. 226; 30 Mias. 458 ; 3 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 133.

Guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother. 2 Kent, Comm. 220 ; 2 Root, Conn. 320; 7 Cow. N. Y. 36; 2 Wend. N. Y. 158; 4 Mass. 675.
Thia guardianship, by the common law, extends only to the perion, snd the subject of it ia the heir appsrent, and not the other children, - not even the daughter when there sre no aona; for they are not heirs spparent, but presumptive heirs only, eince their heirship may he defeated by the birth of e aon after their father'g decease. But as all the children male and femsle equslly inherit with ua, this gusrdianship extenda to all the children, ss an inherent right in their psrenta during their minority. 2 Kent, Comm. 220.
3. The mother of a hastard child is its natnral guardian. 6 Blackf. Ind. 357 ; 2 Masa. 109; 12 id. 383; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 314, note. The power of ${ }^{3}$ natarsl gusrdian over the person of his ward is perhspa better explained hy reference to the relation of parent and child. See Domicil. It is wall gettled that the court of chsnoery may, for just csues, interpose and oontrol the authority snd discretion of the parent in the eduostion and care of his ohild. 5 East, 221; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 47; 10 Ves. Cb. 52.
A guardisn by nsture is not entitled to the oontrol of his ward's peraonal property, 34 Ale. N. s. 15, 565; 1 P. Will. 285; 7 Cow. N. Y. 36 ; 6 Conn. 474; 7 Wend. N. Y. 354; 3 Pick. Mass. 213, noleas by etstute. See 19 Mo. 345. The father must support hia ward. 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 341. But Where hia means are limited, the oourt will grant an allowsace out of his child's estate. Id.; 1 Brown, Ch. 387. But the mother, if guardiad, is not obliged to support her child if it has sufficient estate of its own; nor is ahe entitled, like the father, when gusrdisn, to ita services, unlese she is compelled to ra aintain it.
A father as gusrdisn by nature has do right to the real or personal estate of his child : that right, whenever he has it, mnst be aa a guardian in soc. age, or by some atatutory provision. 15 Wend . N. Y. 631.
4. Guardian by nurture. This gaardianshin bolonged to the father, then to the mother.
The aubjeot of it extended to the younger ohildren, not the heirs apperent. In this country it does not exiet, or, rather, it is merged in the higher and more durable guardianship by nature, beoause all the ohildren are heirs, and, therefore, the enhjeot of that guardisnship. 2 Kent, Comm. 221, Reeve, Dom. Rel. 315; 6 Gs . 401. It extended to the person only, 6 Conn. 494; 40 Eng. L. $&$ Eq. 109, and terminated at the age of foorteen. 1 Blackatone, Comm. 461.

Guardian in socage. This guardianship arose when socage lands descended to on infant under fourteen years of age; at which period it ceased if another guardian was appointed, otherwise it continued. Andr. 313; 5 Juhns. N. Y. 66.
The person entitled to it by common law was the next of kin, who oould not by any possibility inherit the estate, 1 Blackstode, Comin. 461. Although formerly recognized in New York, it was never common in the United States, 5 Johns. N. Y. $66 ; 7 \mathrm{id}$. 157 ; beoause, hy the statute of descents gensrally in foroe in this conntry, those who are next of kin may eventually inherit. Wherever it has been recogoized, it has been in a form differing matorially from its oharaeter at common law. 15 Wead. N. Y. 631. Such guardian was also guardian of the person of his ward as well as his estate. Coks, Litt. 87, 89. Although it did not arise unless the infant was seised of lands hald in socage, yet when it did arise it axtended to hereditaments which do not lie in tenure and to the ward's personal estate. See Hargrave's note 67 to Coke, Litt. This guardian could lease his ward's estate and maintain ejectment against a disssisor in his own name. 2 Bacon, Abr. 683.

There was anciently a guardianship by chivalry at the common law, where lands came to an infant by desceat which were holden by knight-service. Coke, Litt. 88, 11, note. That tenure being abolishcd by statute Car. II., the guardianship has cassed to exist in England, and has never had any existence in the United States.
5. Guardians by statute are of two kinds: first, those appointed by deed or will ; second, those appointed by court in pursuance of some statute.

Testamentary guardians are appointed by the deed or last will of the father; and they supersede the claims of all other guardians, and have control of the person and the real and personal estate of the child till he arrives at full age.

This power of appointment was given to the father by the stat. 12 Car. II., which has been pretty extensively adopted in this country. Under it, the father might thus dispose of his children, born and unbora, 7 Ves. Ch. 315, but not of his graadehildren. 5 Johns. N. Y. 278 . Nor does it matter whether the father is a minor or not. 2 Kcnt , Comm. 225 . It continues during the minority of a male ward, both as to his estate and person, notwithstanding his marriage. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 328 ; 2 Kcnt , Comm. 224; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 350. There seems to be some doubt as to whether marriage would determine it over a female ward. 2 Kent , Comm. 224. It is more rcasonable that it should, inasmuch as the husband acquires in law a right to the control of his wife's person. But it would seem that a person marrying a testamentary guardian is not entitled to the money of the ward. 12 IIl. 431.

Guardians appointed by court. The greater number of guardians among us, by far, are those appointed by court, in conformity with statutes which regulate their powers and duties. In the absence of special provisions, their rights and duties are governed by the general law on the subject of guardian and ward.
6. Appointment of guardians. Where there is a mother, it is not the duty of the court to appoint; but where both parents are dead, it then becomes necessary.

After the age of fourteen, the ward is entitled to choose a guardian, at common law, and generally by statute. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 320 ; 15 Ala. n. s. 687 ; 30 Miss. 458. His choice is subject, however, to the rejection of the court for good reason, when he is entitled to choose again. 14 Ga. 594. If the court appoint one before the age of choice, the infant may appear and choose one at that age, without any notice to the guardian appointed. 30 Miss. 458 ; 15 Ala. n. s. 687. But if none be chosen, then the old one acts. It seems that in Indiana the old one can be removed only for cause shown; in which case, of course, he is entitled to notice. 8 Ind. 307. A probate, surrogate, or county court has no power to appoint, unless the minor resides in the same county. 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 214 ; 7 Ga. 362 ; 9 Tex. 109 ; 16 Ala. N.s. $759 ; 27$ Mo.280. But it seems that it may appoint any one guardian who resides within the state. 11 Ired. No. C. 36 ; 3 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 133.
7. Coverture is no incapacity for the office of guardian. 29 Miss. 195. Otherwise, by statute, in some states. Mo. Rev. Stat. 1855, 824. But it is necessary that the wife should obtain the consent of her husband; as till this is obtained the guardianship is voidable. 2 Dougl. 433. A single woman by her marriage loses her guardianship, it would seem; but she may be reappointed. 2 Kent, Comm. $225, \mathrm{n} . b ; 2$ Dougl. 433. Where there is a valid guardianship unrevoked, the appoint, ment of another is void. 23 Miss. 550.

A guardian to a lunatic could not be appointed till after a writ de lunatico inquirendo. 21 Ala. n. s. 504. An order removing a guardian is equivalent to an order to pay over the money in his hands to his successor. 9 Mo . 225,227 . In some states the court is authorized to revoke for non-residence of the guardian. 9 Mo. 227.
8. Powers and liabilities of guardians. The relation of a guardian to his ward is that of a trustee in equity, and bailiff at law. 2 Md . 111. It is a trust which he cannot assign. 1 Parsons, Contr. 116. He will not be allowed to reap any benefit from his ward's estate, 2 Comyns, 230 , but must account for all profits, which the ward may elect to take or charge interest on the capital used by him. 17 Ala. n.s. 306. He can invest the money of his ward in real estate only by order of court. 3 Ind. 320; 6 id. 628; 3 Yerg. Tenn. 336 ; 21 Miss. 9 ; 38 Me .47 . Nor can he convert real estate into personalty without a similar order. 25 Mo. 548; 2 Jones, Eq. No. C. 411; 3 Jones, No. C. 42; 4 id. 15; 16 B. Monr. Ky. 289; 18 id. 387 ; 1 Rawle, Penn. 293; 1 Ohio, 232; 1 Dutch. N. J. 121; 2 Kent, Comm. 230.
9. He may lease the land of his ward, 1 Parsons, Contr. 114 ; 2 Mass. 56 ; but if the lease extends beyond the minority of the ward the latter may avoid it on coming of age. 1 Johns. Ch. $561 ; 10$ Yerg. 160; 2 Wils. $129 ; 7$ Johns. N. Y. $154 ; 5$ Halst. N. J. 133. The same principle is applied to the hiring of a ward's slave. 13 Ired. No. C. 475. He may sell his ward's personalty without order of court, 27 Ala. n. s. 198; 19 Mo. 345, and dispose of and manage it as he pleases. 2 Pick. Mass. 243. He is required to put the money out at interest, or show that he was unable to do this. 21 Miss. $9 ; 2$ Wend. N. Y. 424; 1 Pick. Mass. 527 ; 18id. 1; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 620; 5 id. 497 ; 7 Watts & S. Penn. 48; 13 Eng. L. & Eq. 140. If he spends more than the interest and profits of the estate in the maintenance and education of the ward without permission of the court, he may be held liable for the principal thus constimed. 1 Smedes & M. Ch. Miss. 545 ; 26 Miss. 393; 6 B. Monr. Ky. 1292; 2 Strobh. Eq. So. C. 40 ; 2 Sneed, Tenn. 520.
10. If he erects buildings on his ward's estate out of his own money, without order of court, he will not be allowed any compensation. 11 Barb. N. Y. 22; 8 id. 48 ; 11 Penn. St. 326; 23 Miss. 189; 24 id. 204 . Ife is not chargeable with the services of his wards if for their own benefit he requires them to work for him. 12 Gratt. Va.608. A married woman guardian can convey the real estate of her ward without her husband joining. 2 Dougl. 433. On marriage of a female minor in Mississippi, her husband, although a minor, is entitled to receive her estate from her gnardian. 3 Miss. 893.
11. Contracts between guardian and ward immediately after the latter has attained his majority are unfavorably regarded by the courts, and will be set aside where they redound to the profit of the guardian. 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 114; 5 Binn. Penn. 8 ; 8 Md. 230; 28 Miss. 737 ; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 638 ; 12 Barb. N. Y. 84; 10 Ala. n. s. 400. Neither is he allowed to purchase at the sale of his ward's property. 2 Jones Eq. No. C. 285; 22 Barb. N. Y. 167. But the better opinion is that such sale is not void, but voidable only. 2 Gray, Mass. 141; 10 Humphr. Tenn. 275. He is not allowed, without permission of court under some statute authority, to remove his ward's property out of the state. 24 Ala. N. s. 486. He cannot release a debt due his ward, 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 441 ; 11 Mo. 649, although he may submit a claim to arbitration. 22 Miss. 118 ; 11 Me. 326 ; 6 Pick. Mass. 269 ; Dy. 216; 1 Ld. Raym. 246. He cannot by his uwn contract bind the person or estate of his ward, 6 Mass. 58 ; 1 Pick. Mass. 314, nor avoid a beneficial contract made by his ward. 13 Mass. 237 ; Coke, Litt. 17 b, 89 a.
12. IIe is entitled to the care and custody of the person of his ward. 7 Humphr. T'enn. 111; 4 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 2\%1. If a female ward marry, the guardianship terminates both as to her person and property. It has been thought to continue over her property if she marries a minor. If a male ward marries, the guardianship continues as to his estate, though it has been held otherwise as to his person. If he marries a female minor, his guardian will also be entitled to her property. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 328; 2 Kent, Cumm. 226.
13. A guardian may change the residence of his ward from one county to another in the same state. But it seems that the new county may appoint another guardian. 4 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 221. Whether he has the right to remove his ward into a foreign jurisdiction has been a disputed question. By the common law, his authority both over the person and property of his ward was strictly local. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 156 ; 1 N. H. 193 ; 12 Wheat. 169 ; 10 Miss. 532. And this is the view maintained in most of the states. See Story, Confl. Laws, $& 540$. But see, on this question, 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. $596 ; 8$ Ala. N. s. $789 ; 11$ id. $461 ; 18$ id. $34 ; 11$ Ired. No. C. 36 ; 9 Md. 227 ; 3 Mer. Ch. 67 ; 5 Pick. Mass. 20; 2 Watts & S. Penn. 548.
14. Nor can a guardian in one state maintain an action in another for any claim in which his ward is interested. 11 Ala. N. s. 343 ; 18 Miss. 529 ; Story, Confl. Laws, 8499. See Lex Rei Site. He cannot waive the rights of his ward, mot even by neglect or omission. 2 Vern. Ch. 368 ; 14 Ill. 417. No guardian, except a father, is bound to maintain his ward at his own expense. It is discretionary with a court whether to allow a father any thing out of his child's estate for his education and maintenance. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 324; 6 Ind. 66.
15. Rights and liabilities of wards. A ward owes obedience to his guardian, which a court will aid him in enforcing. 1 Strange, 167; 3 Atk. Ch. 721. The general rule is that the ward's contracts are voidable, 13 Mass. 237; 14 id. 457: yet there are some contracts so clearly prejudicial that they have been held absolutely void : such as contracts of surety. 4 Conn. 376.
16. A ward cannot marry without the consent of his or her guardian. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 327. And any one marrying or aiding in the marriage of a ward without such consent is guilty of contempt of court. 2P. Will. 562; 3 id. 116. Infants are liable for their tortsin the same manner as persons of full age. 5 Hill, N. Y. 391 ; 3 Wend. N. Y. 391 ; 9 N. H. 441. A ward is entitled to his own earnings. 1 Bouvier, Inst. 349. Me attains his majority the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday. 3 Harringt. 557 ; 4 Dana, 597; 1 Salk. 44. He can sue in court only by his guardian or prochein ami. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 464. He could not bring an action at law against his guardian, but might file a bill in equity calling him to account. 2 Vern. Ch. 342; 3 P. Will. Ch. 119; 3 Atk. Ch. 25 ; 1 Ves. Ch. 91. By the practice in chancery, he was allowed one year to examine the accounts of his guardian after coming of age. 7 Paige, 46. The statute of limitations will not run against him during the guardianship. 34 Ala. n. s. 15. But see Limitations.
17. Sale of infants' lands. It is probabls that the English court of chancery did not have the inherent original power to order the sale of minors' lands. 2 Ves. Ch. 23 ; 1 Moll. 525. But, with the acquiescence of parliament, it claims and exercises that right for the purpose of maintaining and educating the ward. This power is not conceded as belonging to our courts of chancery in this country by virtue of their equity jurisdiction, nor to our probate courts as custodians of minors. 6 Hill, N. Y. 415; 2 Kent, Comm. 229 , n. a. It must be derived from some statute authority. 27 Ala. n. s. 198; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 154; 2 Pick. Mass. 243; Ambl. 419.
18. It has been a much-disputed question whether an infant's lands can be sold by special act of the legislature. On the ground that the state is the supreme guardian of infants, this power of the legislature has been sustained where the object was the education and support of the infant. 29 Miss. 146; 30 id. 246 ; 5 Ill. 127; 20 Wend. N. Y. $365 ; 8$ Blackf. Ind. 10; 16 Mass. 326. So it has been sustained where the sale was merely advantageous to his interest. 11 Gill. \& J. Md. 87; 14 Serg. \& R. Penn. 435. There has been some opposition on the ground that it is au encroachment on the judiciary. $4 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H}$. 565, 575; 10 Yerg. Tenn. 59. Such sales have been sustained where the object was to liquidate the ancestor's debts. 4 'T. B. Monr. Ky .95 . This has been considered questionable in the extreme. 10 Am. Jur. 297; 10 Yerg. Tenn. 59: contra, 16 III. 548. It has also been exercised in the case of idiots and lunatics, and sustained on the same reasons as in the case of infants. 7 Metc. Mass. 388.

By statute, we have also guardians for the insane and for spendthrifts. 2 Barb. N. Y. 153; 8 Ala. n. s. 796; 18 Me. 384; 8 N. H. 569 ; 19 Pick. Mass. 506.
gUARDIAN AD Litem. Aguardian appointed for the purposes of a suit.
2. The appointment of such is incident to the puwer of every court to try a case, 2 Cow. N. Y. 430 ; and the power is then confined to the particular case at bar. Coke, Litt. 89, ь. 16. Ifis duty is to manage the interest of the infant when sued. In criminal cases no guardian is appointed: the court acts as guardian. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 318. A guardian ad litem cannot be appointed till the infant has been brought before the court in some of the modes prescribed by law. 16 Ala. n. s. 509; 1 Swan, Tenn. 75; 2B. Monr. $\mathrm{Ky}$. 453. Such guardian cannot waive service of process. 2 Ind. 74. The court will not appoint upon the nomination of the complainant. 2 Paige, 304.
3. The omission to appoint a guardian ad litem does not render the judgment void, but only voidable. 8 Metc. Mass. 196. It will be presumed, where the chancellor received the answer of a person as guardian ad litem, that he was regularly appointed, although it does not appear of record. 19 Miss. 418. See 2 Swan, Tenn. 197. It is error to decree the sale of a decedent's property on the petition of the representatives, without the previous appointment of a guardian ad litem for the infant heirs. 16 Ala. n. s. 41 . Where the general guardian petitions for a sale of his ward's lands, the court must appoint a guardian ad litem. 18 B. Monr. Ky. 779; 21 Ala. n. s. 363; 30 Miss. 258; 1 Ohio St. 544.

It seems that a guardian ad litem can elect whether to come into hotch-pot. 15 Alia. 85. An appearance of the minor in court is not necessary for the appointment of a guardian to manage his intercst in the suit. 11 Eng. L. & Eq. 156 ; 15 id. 317.

GUARDIANSHIP. The power or protective authority given by law, and imposed on an individual who is free and in the enjoyment of his rights, over one whose weakncss on account of his age renders him unable to protect himself.
GUARENTIGIO. In Spanish Law. A term applicable to the contract or writing by which courts of justice are empowered to execute and carry into effect a contract in the same manner as if it were decreed by the court after the usual legal formalities. This clause, though formerly inserted in contracts of sale, etc., stipulating the payment of a sum of money, is at present usually omitted, as courts of justice ordinarily compel the parties to execute all contracts made by authentic acts, that is, acts passed before a notary, in the presence of two witnesses.
GUBERNATOR (Lat.). A pilot of a ship.
GUERRILLA PARTY (Span. guerra, war; guerrilla, a little war).
In Military Law. Self-constituted sets of armed men, in times of war, who form no integrant part of the organized army, do not stand on the regular pay-roll of the army, or are not paid at all, take up arms and lay them down at intervals, and carry on petty war, chiefly by raids, extortion, destruction, and massacre. Lieber, Guerr. Part. 18. See Halleck, Int. Law, 386; Woolsey, Int. Law, 299.
Partisan, free-corps, and gucrrilla are terms resembling ench other considerably in signification; and, indeed, partisan and guerrilla are frequently used in the same sense. See Halleek, Int. Law, 386.
Partisan corps and free-corps both denote hodies detached from the main army; but the former term refers to the action of the troop, the latter to the composition. The partisan leader commands a corps whose object is to injure the enemy by action separate from that of his own main army; the partisan acts chiefly upon the enemy's lines of connection and communication, and outside of or beyond the lines of operation of his own army, in the rear and on the flanks of the enemy. But he is part and pareel of the army, and, as such, considered entitled to the privileges of the law of war so long as he does not transgress it. Free-corps, on the other hand, are troops not helonging to the regular army, consisting nf volunteers generally raised by individuals authorized to do so by the government, nsed for petty war, and not incorporated with the ordre de batrille. The men composing these corps are entitled to the benefit of the laws of war, under the same limitations as the partisun corps.

Guerrilla-men, when captured in fair fight and open warfare, should be treated as the regular partisan is, until special crimes; such as murder, or the killing of prisoners, or the sacking of places, are proved upon them.
The law of war, however, would not extend a similar favor to small bodies of armed countrypeople near the lines, whose very smallness shows that they must resort to occasional fighting and the occasional assuming of peaceful habits and brigandage. Lieber, Guerr. Part. 20.

GUEST. A traveller who stays at an inn or tavern with the consent of the keeper. Bacon, Abr. Inns, C $5 ; 8$ Cuke, 32.
2. And if, after taking lodgings at an inn, he leaves his horse there and goes elsewhere to lodge, he is still to be considered a guest, 26 Vt. 316; but not if he merely leaves goods for keeping which the landlord receives no compensation. 1 Salk. 388 ; 2 Ld. Raym. 866; Croke Jac. 188. The length of time a man is at an inn makes no difference, whether he stays a day, a week, or a month, or longer, or only for temporary refreshment, so always that, though not strictly transiens, he retains his character as a traveller. 5 Term, 273; 5 Barb. N. Y. 560. But if a person comes upon a special contract to board at an inn, he is not, in the sense of the law, a guest, but a boarder. Bacon, Abr. Inns, C 5; Story, Bailm. 8477 ; 26 Ala. n. s. 377 ; 26 Vt. 332, 343. See 7 Cush. 417.
3. Innkeepers are generally liable for all goods belonging to the guest brought within the inn. It is not necessary that the goods should have been in the special keeping of the inn-keeper to make him liable. This rule is fonnded on principles of public utility, to which all private considerations ought to yield. 2 Kent, Comm. 459 ; 1 Hayw. No. C. 40 ; 14 Johns. N. Y. 175 ; Dig. 4. 9. 1. GUIDON DE LA MER. The name of a treatise on maritime law, written in Rouenthen Normandy-in 1671, as is supposed. It was received on the continent of Enrope almost as equal in authority to one of the ancient codes of maritime law. The author of this work is unknown. This tract or treatise is contained in the "Collection de Lois maritimes," by J. M. Pardessus, vol. 2, p. 371 et seq.

GUILD, GILD. A brotherhood or company governed by certain rules and orders made among themselves by king's license; a corporation, especially for purposes of commerce; so called because on entering the guild the members pay an assessment or tax (gild) towards defraying its charges. Termes de la Ley ; DuCange. A guild held generally more or less property in common,-often a hall, called a guild-hall, for the purposes of the association. The name of guild was not, however, confined to mercantile companies, but was applied also to religious, municipal, and other corporations. A friborg (q.v.), that is, among the Saxons, ten families' mutual pledges for each other to the king. Spelman.

GUILD FAALL (Law Lat. gildhalla, variously spelled ghildhalla, guihalla, guihaula; from Sax. gild, payment, company, and halla, hall). A place in which are exposed goods for sale. Charter of Count of Flanders; Hist. Guinensi, 202, 203 ; DuCange. The ball of a guild or corporation. DuCange; Spelman: e.g. Gildhalla Teutonicorum. The hall of the merchants of the Hanseatic League in London, otherwise called the "Stilyard." Id.

GUILT. In Criminal Law. That which renders criminal and liable to punishment.

That disposition to violate the law, which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence. Sec Rutherford, Inst. b. 1, c. 18, s. 10.

In general, every one is presumed innocent until gnilt has been proved; bnt in some cases the presumption of guilt overthrows that of innocence; as, for example, where a party destroys evidence to which the opposite party is entitled. The spoliation of papers material to show the neutral character of a vessel furnishes strong presnmption against the neutrality of the ship. 2 Wheat. 227.

GUILTY. The state or condition of a person who has committed a crime, misdemeanor, or offence.

This word implies a malicious intent, and must be applied to something universally allowed to be a crime. Cowp. 275.

In Pleading. A plea by which a defendant who is charged with a crime, misdemeanor, or tort admits or confesses it. In criminal proceedings, when the accused is arraigned, the clerk asks him, "How say yon, A B, are you guilty or not guilty?" His answer, which is given ore tenus, is called his plea; and when be admits the charge, in the indictment, he answers or pleads guilty.

GWABR MERCEED. Maid's fee. A British word signifying a customary fine payable to lords of some manors on marriage of tenant's danghter, or otherwise on her incontinence. Cowel, Marchet.

GYI.TWITE (Sax.), Compensation for frand or trespass. Grant of King Edgar, anno 964 ; Cowel.

HABEAS CORPORA (Lat. that you have the bodies). In English Practice. A writ issued out of the common pleas, commanding the sheriff to compel the appearance of a jury in a cause between the parties. It answered the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the king's bench. It is abolished by the Common-Law Procedure Act.
HABEAS CORPOS (Lat. that you have the body). A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner at a certain time and place, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the court or judge awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf.
2. This is the most famous writ in the law; and, having for maxy centuriss been employed to remove illegal restraint upon persooal liberty, no matter by what power imposed, it is often called the great writ of liberty. It tskes its name from the characteriatic words it contained when the process and records of the Engliah courts were written in Latin:
Precipimus tibi quod corpus A B in eustodia vestra detentum, ut dieitur, una cum causa captionis et detentionis sux, quocinque nomine idem $A$ $B$ censeatur in eadem Habeas coram nobis upud Westm. &c. ad subjiciendum et recipiendum exx, quæ curia nostra de eo ad tunc et ibidem ordinari contigerit in hac parte, ete.
3, There were several other writs which contained the words habeas corpus; but they were distinguished from this and from one another by the apecific terms declaring the object of the writ, which terms are atill ratained in the nomenclature of writs: as, habeas curpus ad respondendun, ad testificandum, ad satigfaciendum, ad prosequendum, and ad faciendum et recipiendum, ad deliteraudum et recipiendunn.
This writ was in like manner designated as habeas corpus ad subjiciendun et recipiendum; but, having acquired in public esteem a marked importance by reason of the nobler uses to which it has been devoted, it has so far appropriated the generis term to itself that it is now, by way of eminence, commonly called The Writ of Habeas Corpus.
4. The date of its origin cannot now be aseertrined. Traces of its exiatence sre found in the Year Book 48 Ed. III. 22; and it appeara to have been familiar to, and well understood by, the judges in the reign of Henry VI. In its early bistory it appears to bave been naed aa a means of reliaf from private restraint. The earlicst precedents where it was uscd againet the crown ars in the reign of Henry VII. Afterwards the use of it became more frequent, and in the time of Charles I. it was held an admitted conatitutional remedy. Hurd, Hab. Corp. 145.
In procesa of time, abuses erapt into the praotice, which in some measure impaired the usefulness of the writ. The party impriaoning was st liberty to delay his obedience to the first writ, sod might wait till a second and third were iesued before be produeed the party ; and many other vexatious ebifts were practied to detain state prisonera in cuatody. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 135.
5. Greater promptitude in its oxecution was required to render the writ efficacious. The subject was aecordingly brought forward io parlianent in 1668, and renewed from time to time until 1679, when the celebrated Habeas Corpus Act of 31 Cor. II. was passed. The pazaage of this act baa been made the theme of the highest praise and congratulation hy Britiob authors, and is aveo suid to have " $6 x$ tingui. hed all the reauurees of oppreasion." Hurd, Hab. Corp. 93 .
This aet being limited to cases of cemmitments for "eriminal or supposed criminal matters," every other epecies of restraint of peraunal liberty wis left to the ordinary remedy at common law; but, doubta being entertained as to the extent of the jurisdietion of the judge to inquire into the truth of the return to the writ in such cases, an attempt was made, in 1757, in the houae of lords, to render the jurisdietion more remedial. It was oppoard by Lord Mansfield as unnecessary, and failed, for the time, of success. It was subsequently rezewed, however; and the act of 56 Goo. III. c. 100 supplies, in England, sll the needed legislation in cases not embraced by the act of 31 Car. II. Hurd, Hab. Corp.
6. The English colonista in America regarded the privilege of the writ as one of the "dearest birthrights of Britons;" and sufficient indications exiat that it was frequently reaorted to. The denial of it in Massachusetta by Judge Dudley in 1689 to Rev. John Wise, impriauned for resisting the collection of sn oppressive and illegal tax, was made the subject of a civil action against the judge, and was, moreover, denouvced, as one of the griey. ances of the people, in a panphlet published in 1689 on the authority of "the gentlemen, merchants, and inhahitanta of Boston and the country adjacent." In New Yorik in 1707 it served to effect the releass of the Presbyterian winistera Makemie and Hampton from an illegal warrant of arrest issued by the guveraur, Cornbury, for preaching the gospel without license. In New Jersey in 1710 the assembly denounced one of the judges for refusing the writ to Thomas Gordon, which, they said, was the "undoubted right and great privilege of the subject." In South Carolina in 1692 the assembly adopted the act of 31 Car. II. This act was extended to Virginis by Queen Anve early in her reign, while in the assembly of Maryland in 1725 the benefit of its provisions was elained, independent of royal favor, as the "birtbright of the inhabitants." The refusal of parliament in 1734 to extend the law of habeas corpus to Canada was denounced by the continental congress in September of that year as oppressive, and was sabsequently recouated in the Deelaration of Independence as one of the manifestations on the part of the British goverament of tyranny over the coloaies. Hurd, Hab. Corp. 109-120.
7. It is provided in art. i. sec. 9 , $\frac{8}{2}$ of the constitution of the United States that "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus ahall not be suspended, unless when, in casea of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may requirs it."
Similar provieions are found in the constitutions of most of the atates. In Virginia and Vermont, bowever, it is forbidden to suspend the privilegg of the writ in any ease; but in the conatitutions of Maryland, North Carolina, and South Carelina the writ is not mentioned.
Congresa, by act of Marcb 3, 1863, authorized the president to suspend the privilege of the writ throughout the whole or any part of the United Statea, whenever in bis judgment the public safety might require it, during the rebellion. A partial suspensioa took plsoe.
Nor haa the power ever been exerciaed by the legislature of any of the states, exeept that of Massachusetts, which, on the occasion of "Shays's Rebellion," suspended the privilege of the writ from November, 1786, to July, 1787.
8. Congress has prescribed the jurisdiction of the federal courts under the writ; hut, never having particularly prescribed the mode of procedure for them, they have substantially followed in that respect the rules of the common law.
In most of the states statutes have been passed, not only providing what courts or officers may issue the writ, but, to a considerable extent, regulating the practice under it; yet in all of them the proceeding retains its old distinctive feature and merit,--that of a summary appeal for immediate deliverance from illegal imprisonment.
9. Jurisdiction of state courts. The states, being in all respects, except as to the powers delegated in the federal constitution, sovereign political communities, are unlimitcd as to their judicial power, except by that instrument; and they, accordingly, at will create, apportion, and limit the jurisdiction of their respective courts over the writ of habeas corpus, as well as other legal process, sulject only to such constitutional restriction.

The restrictions in the federal constitution on this subject are necessarily implied from the express grants of judicial power therein to the federal courts in certain cases specified in art. iii. sec. 2, and in which the decision of the supreme court of the United States is paramount over that of all other courts and conclusive upon the parties.
10. Jurisdiction of the federal courts. This is prescribed by several acts of congress. By the 14th sec. of the Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 81 , it is provided that the supreme, circuit, and district courts may issue writs of scire facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs not spccially provided for by statute which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the principles and usages of law ; and that either of the justices of the supreme court, as well as judges of the district courts, may grant writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment; "provided, that writs of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to prisoners in gaol, unless they are in custody under or by color of the authority of the TVaited States, or are committed for trial befure some court of the same, or are necessary to be brought into court to testify."
By the seventh section of the "Act further to provide for the collection of duties or imposts," passed March 2, 1833, 4 U. S. Stat. at Large, 634, the jurisdiction of the justices of the supreme court and judges of the district courts is extended to "all cases of a prisoner or prisoners in jail or confinement, where he or they shall be committed or confined on or by any authority or law for any act done or omitted to be done, in pursuance of a law of the United States, or any order, process, or decree of any judge or court thereof."

This act has been held to extend to the case of a United States marshal arrested by state authorities for alleged criminal violence in the capture of a fugitive slave under the provisions of the act of congress of September 18, 1850. 2 Wall. 521 ; 2 Am. Law Reg. 348; 6 McLean, C.C. 355. But the supreme court of Pemnsylvania bave questioned the soundness of this construction of the act of March 2,1833. 3 Am. Law Reg. 207.
11. By the "Act to provide further remedial justice in the courts of the United States," passed Aug. 29, 1842, 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 539, the jurisdiction of the justices and judges aforesaid is further extended "to all cases of any prisoner or prisoners in jail or confinement, when be, she, or they, being subjects or citizens of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, shall be committed or confined or in custody under or by any authority or law, or process fonnded thereon, of the United States, or of any of them, for or on account of any act donc or omitted under any alleged right, title, or authority, privilege, protection, or exemption set up or claimed under the commission or order or sanction of any foreign state or sovereignty, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations, or under color thereot."
By the third section of the "Act for the government and regulation of seamen in the merchant service," passed July 20, 1790, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 131, it is provided that refractory seamen in certain cases shall not be discharged on habeas corpus or otherwise.
12. The supreme court issues the writ by virtue of its appellate jurisdiction, 4 Cranch, 75 ; and it will not grant it at the instance of the subject of a foreign government to obtain the custody of a minor child detained by a citizen of one of the states; for that would be the exercise of original jurisdiction. 2 How. 65.
It will grant it on the application of one committed for trial in the circuit court on a criminal charge, 4 Cranch, 75 ; 3 Dall. 17 ; and where the petitioner is committed on an insufficient warrant, 3 Cranch, 448; and where he is detained by the marshal on a capias ad satisfaciendum after the returnday of the writ. 7 Pet. 568.
13. None of the courts of the United States have authority to grant the writ for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment, where the prisoner is imprisoned under process issued from the state courts. It was refused by the supreme court where the party for whose benefit the application was made had been convicted in a state court of levying war against the state. 3 How. 103.

It was refused by the circuit court where the petitioner, a secretary attached to the Spanish legation, was confined under criminal process issued under the authority of the state of Pennsylvania, 1 Wash. C. C. 232; also where the petitioner, a British seaman, was arrested under the authority of an act of the legislature of the state of South Carorolina, which was held to conflict with the constitution of the United States. 2 Wheel. Cr. Cas. N. Y. 56.

It will be granted, however, where the imprisonment, although by a state officer, is under or by color of the authority of the United States, as where the prisoner was arrested under a governor's warrant as a fugitive from justice of another state, requisition having been regularly made. 3 McLean, C. C. 121.
14. Proper use of the writ. The true use of the writ is to cause a legal inquiry nto the cause of imprisonment, and to procure the release of the prisoner where that is found to be illegal.

If the imprisonment be claimed by virtue of legal process, the validity and present force of such process are the only subjects of investigation. 5 Hill, N.Y. 164; 4 Barb. N.Y. 31; 4 Harr. Del. 575 ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 332.
But such process cannot, in this proceeding, be invalidated by errors which only render it irregular. The defects, to entitle the prisoner to be discharged, must he such as to render the process void; for the writ of habeas corpus is not, and cannot perform the office of, a writ of error. $3 \mathrm{Vt}$.114 ; 6 id .509 ; 4 Day, Conn. 436 ; 3 Hawks. No. C. 25 ; 2 La. 422, 587: 8 ıd. 185; 2 Park. Crim. N. Y. 650; 1 Hill, N. Y. $154 ; 1$ Abb. Pract. Cas. N. Y. 210; 11 How. Pract. N. Y. 418; 4 Carr. \& P. 415; 7 Ohio St. 81; Hurd. Hab. Corp. 334.

It cannot be used to oust another competent and acting jurisdiction, or to divert or defeat the course of justice therein. 5 Ark. 424; 1 Ill. 198; 16 Ohio, 405 ; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 351 ; 2 id. $42 ; 19$ Ala. n. s. $438 ; 6$ Ala. $9 ; 2$ Wheat. 532; 3 Yerg. Tenn. 167; 1 Edw. Ch. N.Y. 551 ; 1 Harr. Del. 392; 2 Aik. Vt. 381; 6 Miss. 80 ; 1 Curt. C. C. 178; 2 Green, N. J. 312; 4 M Cord, So. C. 233 ; 1 Watts, Penn. 66 ; 6 McLean, C. C. 355 ; 10 Pick. Mass. 434 ; 7 Cush. Mass. 285 ; 8 Ohio St. 599 ; 21 How. 506 ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 335.
15. The writ is also employed to recover the custody of a person where the applicant has a legal right thereto: as, the husband for his wife, the parent for his child, the guardian for his ward, and the master for his apprentice. But in such cases, as the just object of the proceeding is rather to remove illegal restraint than to enforce specifically the claims of private custody, the alleged prisoner, if an adult of sound mind, is generally permitted to go at large; if an infant of sufficient age and discretion, it is usually permitted to elect in whose custody it will remain, provided that it does not elect on injurious or improper custody: and if of tender years, without such discretion, the court determines its custody according to what the true interests and welfare of the child may at the time require. Hurd, Hab. Corp. $450-$ 551.
16. Application for the writ. This may be made by the prisoner, or by any one on his behalf, where for any reason he is unable to make it.

It is usually made by petition in writing, verified by affidavit, stating that the petitioner is unlawfully detained, etc., and, where the imprisonment is under legal process, a copy thereof, if attainable, should be presented with the petition; for where the prisoner is under sentence on conviction for crime, or in execution on civil process, or committed for treason or felony plainly expressed in the warrant, he is not, in most of the states, entitled to the writ. Hurd, Hab. Corp. 209-228.
17. The return. The person to whom the writ is directed is required to produce the body of the prisoner forthwith before the court or officer therein named, and to show the cause of the caption and detention. 5 Term, 89; 2 South. N.J. 545; IIurd, Hab. Corp. 239-242.

If the writ be returned without the body, the return must show that the prisoner is not in the possession, custody, or power of the party making the return, or that the prisoner cannot, without serious danger to his life, be produced; and any evasion on this point will be dealt with summarily by attachment. 5 Term, 89; 10 Johns. N. Y. 328 ; 1 Dudl. Ga. 46; 5 Cranch, C.C. 622 ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 244.

Where the detention is claimed under legal process, a copy of it is attached to the return. Where the detention is under a claim of private custody, all the facts relied on to justify the restraint are set forth in the return.
18. The hearing. The questions arising upon the return or otherwise in the proceeding, whether of fact or of law, are determined by the court or judge, and not by a jury. Hurd, Hab. Corp. 299.
The evidence on the hearing is such as is allowed in other summary proceedings in which the strictness exacted on the trial in civil actions or criminal prosecutions is somewhat relaxed, the practice sometimes permitting affidavits to be read where there has been no opportunity for cross-examination; but the introduction of such evidence rests in the sound discretion of the court. Coxe, N. J. 403; Sandf. N.Y. 701; 20 How. State Tr. 1376; 1 Burr's Trial, 97 ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 303-324.
Pending the hearing the court may commit the prisoner for safe keeping from day to day, until the decision of the case. 14 How. 134; Bacon, Abr. Habeas Corpus (B 13); 5 Mod. 22; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 324.

If the imprisonment be illegal, it is the duty of the court to discharge the prisoner from that imprisonment; but if the court or officer hearing the habeas corpus be invested with the powers of an examining and committing magistrate in the particular case, and the evidence taken before the court, or regularly certified to it in the habeas corpus proceeding, so far implicate the prisoner in the conmission of crime as to justify his being held for trial, it is usual for the court, in default of bail, to commit him as upon an original examination. 3 East, 157; 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 317; 3 Penn. Law Jour. 459; 16 Penn. St. 575 ; 2 Cranch, C. C. 612 ; 5 Cow. N. Y. 12; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 416-427.
If the prisoner is not discharged or committed de novo, he must be remanded, or, in a proper case, let to bail; and all offences prior to the conviction of the offender are bailable, except "capital offences when the proof is evident or presumption great." Hurd, Hab. Corp. 430-449.
19. Recommitment after discharge. The act of 31 Car. II. prohibited, under the penalty of five hundred pounds, the reimprisoning for the same offence of any person set at large on habeas corpus, except by the legal order and process of such court wherein such prisoner was bound hy recognizance to appear, or other court having jurisdiction of the cause. Somewhat similar provisions are found in the statutes of many of the states. But these provisions are not held to prevent the subsequent arrest of the prisoner on other and more perfect process, although relating to the same criminal act. 9 Pet. $704 ; 2$ Miss. 163.

HABEAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA. See Habeas Corpus ad Faciendum et Recipiendum.
habeas corpus ad delibeRANDUM ET RECIPIENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offence of which he is accused was committed. Bacon, Abr. Habeas Corpus, A; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 132; Grady & S. Crown Pract. 201. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county. 1 Tyrwh. 185.

HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET RECIPIENDUM (Lat.). A writ usually issued in civil cases to remove an action from an inferior court, where the defendant is sued and imprisoned, to some superior court which has jurisdiction over the matter, in order that the cause may be determined there. This writ is commonly called habeus corpus cum caus $\hat{a}$, because it commands the judges of the inferior court to return the day and cause of the caption and detainer of the prisoner. Bacon, Abr. Habeas Corpus, A; Bagley, Chamber Pract. 297; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 130; Tidd, Pract. 296.

This writ may also be issued at the instance of the bail of the defendant, to bring him up to be surrendered in their discharge, whether he is in custody in a civil suit or on a criminal accusation. Tidd, Pract. 298; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 132.

HABEAS CORPUS AD PROSEQUENDUM (Lat.), A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 130.
HABEAS CORPUS AD RESPONDENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter. 2 Sellon, Pract. 259; 2 Mod. 198; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 129; Tidd, Pract. 300.
This writ lies also to bring up a person in confinement to answer a criminal charge: thus, the court issued it to the warden of the fleet, to take the body of the prisoner confined there before a magistrate, to be examined respecting a charge of felony or misdemeanor. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 730.

But it was refused to bring up the body of a prisoner under sentence for a felony, for the purpose of having him tried for a previous felony.
HABEAS CORPUS AD SATISFACIENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is issued to bring a prisoner from the prison of one court into that of another, in order to charge him in execution upon a judgment of the last court. 2 Sellon, Pract. 261; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 130; Tidd, Pract. 301.
HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIendum. See Habeas Corpus.
HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM (Lat.). A writ which lies to bring up a prisoner detained in any jail or prison, to give evidence before any court of competent jurisdiction. Tidd, Pract. 739; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 130; 2 Sellon, Pract. 261.
The allowance of this writ resting in the discretion of the court, it will be refused if the application appear to be in bad faith or a mere contrivance. 3 Burr. 1440.
It was refused to bring up a prisoner of war, 2 Dougl. 419, or a prisoner in custody for high treason. Peake, Add. Cas. 21.
It would of course be refused where it appeared from the application that the prisoner was under sentence for crime which rendered him incompetent as a witness.
The application for the writ is made upon affidavit, stating the nature of the suit and the materiality of the testimony, together with the general circumstances of restraint which render the writ necessary. Cowp. 672; Foster, Crim. Law, 396 ; 2 Cow. & Hill, Notes to Phillipps, Ev. 658.
HABENDUM (Lat. for having).
In Conveyancing. The clause usually following the granting part of the premises of a deed, which defines the extent of the ownership in the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by the grantee. 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 642.
It commences with the words "to have and to hold." It is not an essential part of a deed, but serves to qualify, define, or control it, Coke, Litt. 6 a, 299; I Wood, Conv. 224; 4 Kent, Comm. 468; 8 Mass. 162, I74, and may he rejected if clearly repugaant to the rest of the deed. 1 Wood, Conv. 199; Sheppard, Touchst. 102; Skinn. 543. ## HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIO-

 NEM (Lat.). In Practice. A writ of execution in the action of ejectment.The sheriff is commanded by this writ that, without delay, he oause the plaintiff to have possession of the land in dispute which is therein deseribed: 凤 f. fa. or ca. sa. for costs may be included in the writ. The duty of the sheriff in the execurion and return of that part of the writ is the same as on a common fi. fa. or ca. sa. The sheriff is to executs this writ by delivering a full and actual possession of the premises to the plaintiff. For this purpose, be may break an outer or inner door of the house; and, should he be violently opposed, he may raise the posse comitatus. Watson, Sher. 60, 215; 5 Coke, 91 b; 1 Leon. 145; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3375.

Ths nams of this writ is abbreviated hab. fa. posg. See 10 Viner, Abr. 14; Tidd, Pract. 8th Eng. cd. 1081; 2 Archbold, Pract. 58; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 412; Bingham, Exac. 115, 252 ; Bacon, Abr.

HABEREFACIAS SEISINAM (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a writ of execution, used in most real actions, by which the sheriff is directed that he canse the demandant to have seisin of the lands which he has recovered. 3 Bouvier, lnst. n. 3374 .

This writ may be taken out at any time within a year and a day after judgment. It is to be executed nearly in the same manner as the writ of habere facias possessionem, and for this purpose the officer may break open the onter door of a house to deliver seisin to the demandant. 5 Coke, 91 b ; Comyns, Dig. Execution, E; Watson, Sher. 238. The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fac. seis. See Bingham, Exec. 115, 252; Bacon, Abr.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a writ which lies when a view is to be taken of lands and tenements. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. Index, View.

HABIIIS (Lat.). Fit; suitable. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 436. Active; useful (of a servant). DuCange. Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints). DuCange. Fixed; stable (of authority of the king). DuCange.

EIABIT. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a frequent repetition of the same act. See 2 Mart. La. n. s. 622; 18 Penn. St. 172; 5 Gray, Mass. 851.

The habit of dealing has always an important bearing upon the construction of commercial contracts. A ratification will he inferred from the mere habit of dealing between the partios: as, if a broker has been accustomed to settle losses on policies in a particular manner, without any objection hsing made, or with the silent approbation of his principal, and he should afterwards settle other policies in the same manner, to which no objection should bs made within a reasonable tims, a just presumption would arise of an implied ratification : for, if the principal did not agree to such settlement, he should hars declared his dissent. 2 Bouvier, Inst. 1313, 1314.

HABIT AND REPUTE. Applied in Scotch law to a general understanding and belief of something's having happened: e. g. marriage may be constituted by habit and repute. Bell, Dict.

HABITATION. In Civil Law. The right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property.

It differsed from a usufruct in this, that the nsufruetuary might apply the house to any purpose, -as of a stors or manufactory; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 184 ; Domat, 1. 1, t. 11, s. 2, n. 7.

In Estates. A dwelling-house; a home stall. 2 Blackstone, Comm. $4 ; 4$ id. 220.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. A person given to ebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. 18 Penn. St. 172; 5 Gray, Mass. 85.

By the laws of some states, such persons are classed with idiots, lunatics, etc., in regard to the care of property; and in some, they are liable to punishment. See 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 312; 8 N. HACIENDA. In Spanish Law. A generic term, applicable to the mass of the property belonging to a state, and the administration of the same.

As a science, it is defined by Dr. Jnse Canga Argiiells, in his " Diccionario de Hacienda," to be that part of civil economy which teaches how to aggrandize a nation by the useful employment of its wealth.

A royal estate. Newman & B. Dict.
FIADBOTE. In English Law. A recompense or amends made for violence offered to a person in holy orders.

EHEEDES EXTRANEI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Extraneous or foreign heirs: that is, those who were not children or slaves of the testator. Those only could he extraneous heirs who had a capacity of accepting the inheritance hoth at the time of making the will and at the death of the testator. Hallifax, Anal. b. 11, c. 6,838 et seq.

FTREDES NECESSARTI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Necessary heirs. If slaves were made heirs, they had no choice, but on the death of the testator were necessarily free and his heirs. Calvinus, Lex.; Hallifax, Anal. b. 11, c. 6,838 et seq.; Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. 8587.

HAREDES PROXIMI (Lat.). The children or descendants of the deceased. Dalrymple, Feud. 110.

HAREDES REMOMIORES (Lat.). The kinsmen other than children or descendants. Dalrymple, Feud. 110.

HFREDES SUI ET NECESSARII

 (Lat.). In Civil Law. Proper and necessary heirs; heirs by relationship and necessity. The descendants of an ancestor in direct line were so called, sui denoting the relationship, and necessarii the necessity of law which made them heirs without their election, and whether the ancestor died testate or intestate. Hallifax, Anal. b. 11, c. 6, $\% 38$ et seq. $;$ Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 88 681, 682; Heineccius, Elenı. Jur. Civ. 8588.HTREDIPETA (Law Lat.). In OId English Law. Next heir. Laws of Hen. I.;

DuCange. One who seeks to be made heir (qui cupit hareditatem). Concil. Compostel. anno 1114, can. 18, inter Hispan. t. 3, p. 324; DuCange.
Herfeditas (Lat. from hares). In C1vil Law. "Nihil aliud est hareditus, quam successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuit." Inheritance is nothing else than succession to every right which the deceased possessed. Dig. 50.17; 50.16; 5.2; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 8605 ; Bracton, 62 b.

In Old English Law. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. Marten, Anecd. Collect. t. 3, p. 269; Cuke, Litt. 9; Glanville, lih. 7, c. 1.

HAREDITAS JACENS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A prostrate inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called as long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance, which, by a fiction of law, was said to sustain the person (sustinere personam) of the deceased, and not of the heir. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 8685 a. An estate with no heir or legatee to take. Code, 10. 10. 1; Bell, Dict.

In Engliah Law. An estate in abeyance: that is, after the ancestor's death and before assumption of heir. Coke, Litt. 3+2 b. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 259.

H feres. In Roman law. One who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person, being appointed by the will of the decedent. It is to be observed that the Roman hares had not the slightest resemblance to the English hcir. He corresponded in character and duties almost exactly with the executor under the English law. The institution of the heres was the essential characteristic of a testament: if this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. Mackeldey, 8 8 632,650 .
2. Who might not be instituted. Certain persons were not permitted to be instituted in this capacity: such as, persons not Roman citizens, slaves of such persons, persons not in being at the death of the testator, and corporations, unless especially privileged. Also, the emperor could not be made hares with the condition that he should prosecute a suit of the testator against a subject. Nor cuuld a second husband or wife be instituted hares to a greater portion of the estate than was left to that child of the first marriage which received least by the will. So, a widow who married before the expiration of her year of mourning could not institute her second husband as hares to more than a third of her estate. And a man who had legitimate children could not institute as haredes a concubine and her children to more than a twelfth of his estate, nor the mother alone to more than one-twenty-fourth. Mackeldey, of 651.
3. The institution of the heres might be absolute or conditional. But the condition, to be valid, must be suspensive (condition precedent, see Condition), possible, and lawful. If, however, this rule was infringed, certain conditions, as the resolutive (condition subsequent, see Condition), the impossible, and the inmoral or indecent, were held nugatory, while others invalidated the appointment of the harres,-as the preposterous and captatory, i.e. the appointment of a heres on condition that the appointee should, in turn, institute the testator or some other person haceres in his testament. In regard to limitations of time, they must, to be valid, commence ex die incerto. A condition that A should become haves after a certain day, or that he should be hares up to a day whether certain or uncertain, was nugatory. The testator might assign his reasons for the institution of a particular hereres, but a mistake in the facts upon which those reasons were based did not, in general, affect the validity of the appointment. The institution might be accompanied with a direction that the hares slould apply the inheritance either wholly or in part to a specified purpose, which he was bound to comply with in case he accepted the inheritance, unless it was physically impossible to do so, or unless the heres himself was the only person affected by such directions. The hares might be instituted either simply, without any interest in the estate, or with a fixed share therein, or with regard to sume particular thing. Mackeldey, 8 653. It was customary, in order to provide against a failure to accept on the part of the direct hares, to substitute one or more haredes to him. This substitution might be made in various forms; but the result was the same in all,that if the first of the direct haredes failed to accept the inheritance, whether from indisposition, permanent incapacity, or from dying before the testator, the substitute stood in his stead. There might be several degrees of substitutes, each ready to act in case of the failure of all the preceding; and the rule was, substitutus substituto est substitutus instituto: which meant that on a failure of all the intermediate substitutes, the lowest in rank succeeded to the position of the instituted hores. This was called substitutio rulgaris. There was another, the substitutio pupillaris, which was nothing more than the appointment, by the testator, of a hacres to a minor child under his authority,-which appointment was good in case the child died after the testator, and still a minor. It was, in fact, making a testament for such minor,-an act which he could not perform for himself. Mackeldey, ${ }^{8} 8$ 668, 669.
4. Persons entitledto the inheritance. Though, generally speaking, the testator might institute as hares any person whatever not within the exceptions above mentioned, yet his relatives, within certain limits, were considered as peculiarly entitled to the office, and if he instituted any one else they could not be entirely exeluded, but were admitted to a share of the inheritance, which share, called portio legitima, or pars legitima, was fixed by law.

The rules in regard to the persons entitled to this share of the estate, and its amount, are very intricate, and too voluminons to be introduced here. They may be fonnd in Mackeldey, 88 654-657. Among those entitled to the pars legitima, the immediate ascendants and descendants of the testator were peculiarly distinguished in this, that they must be mentioned in the testament, either by being formally instituted as herededes, or ly being formally excluded, while the other relatives so entitled might receive their share as a legacy, or in any other way, without being formally instituted. From this necessity of mentioning this class of relatives, they were called successores necessarii.
5. Acquisition of the inheritance. Except in the case of a slave of the testator (hoeres necessarius), or a person under his authority (potestas) at his death (heres suus et necessarius), the institution of a person as haceres did not oblige him to accept the office. A formal acceptance was requisite in the case of all other persons than the two classes just mentioned, whence such persons were called haeredes voluntarii, and, in opposition to the sui hoeredes, extranei hceredcs. This acceptance might be express (aditio hareditatis), or tacit, i.e. by performing some act in relation to the inheritance which admitted of no other construction than that the person named as heres intended to accept the office. The refusal of the office, if express, was called repudiatio; if tacit, through the neglect of the hares to make nse of his rights within a suitable period, it was called omissio hcereditatis. The acceptance could not be coupled with a condition; and a refusal was final and irrevocable. Mackeldey, 88 681~683.
6. Rights and liabilities of the hares. The fundamental idea of the office is that as regards the estate the hores and the testator form but a single person. Hence it follows that the private estate of the hacres and the estate of the testator are united (confusio bonorum defuncti et hacredis); the hores acquires all rights of property, and becomes liable to all demands, except those purely personal, to which the testator was entitled and subject, and is, consequently, responsible for all the debts of the deceased, even if the estate left by the latter is not sufficient to pay them. He must, moreover, recognize as binding upon him all acts of the testator relating to the estate. He is bound to obey the directions of the will, especially to perform the trusts and pay the legacies imposed upon him, yet this only so far as the residue of the estate, after liquidating the debts, enables him to do so.

These were the strict rules of the law; but two modes, the spatium deliberandi and the beneficium inventarii, were in course of time contrived for relieving the haeres from the risk of loss by an acceptance of the office.

The spatium deliberandi was a period of delay granted to the hores, upon application to the magistrate, in order that he might investigate the condition of the estate before deciding whether to accept or reject the office. If the heres was pressed by the other harredes, or by the creditors of the estate, to decide whether to accept or reject the office, he must either decide immediately, or apply for the spatium deliberandi, which when allowed by the emperor continued for a year, and when by a judge for nine months, from the day of its allowance. If the hoeres had not decided at the expiration of this period, he was held to have accepted. If he was not pressed to a decision by the other haredes or by the creditors, he was allowed a year from the day be was notified of the inheritance having been conferred upon him, to deliberate whether to accept or not. If, after deliberating for the allotted period, he should accept the inheritance, he became responsible for the debts of the testator, without regard to whether the estate was sufficient or not to pay them.
The beneficium inventarii was an extension to all hacredes of the privilege belonging to soldiers not to be responsible for the debts beyond the assets. This privilege to the heres was conditional upon his conmencing an inventory within thirty days and completing it within sixty from the time be became notified of his appointment. The inventory must be prepared in the presence of a notary, and must be signed by the hares, with a declaration that it included the whole estate, etc., to which fact he might be obliged to make oath. He then became liable only to the extent of the assets. He was allowed, before paying the debts, to deduct the expenses of the funeral, of establishing the testament, and of making the inventory. He could not be forced to pay debts or legacies during the preparation of the inventory, and afterwards he paid the claimants in full in the order in which they presented themselves, and when the assets were exhausted could not be required to pay any more. His own claims against the estate might be paid first, and his debts to the estate were part of the assets. If he neglected to prepare the inventory within the legal period, he forfeited the privileges of it; which also was the case if he applied for the spatium deliberandi: so that he must choose between the two.
7. The creditors and legatees of the testator were allowed the beneficium separationis, by which, when the hares was deeply in debt, and, by reason of the confusio bonorum defuncti et h.eredis, they were in danger of losing their claims, they were permitted to have a separation of the assets from the private estate of the haceres. Application for this privilege must have been made within five years from the acceptance of the inheritance; but it would not be granted if the creditors of the testator had in any way recognized the hoeres as their debtor. If it was granted, they were in general restricted to the assets for payment of their claims, and the private estate of the horess was discharged. If the assets were not exhausted in satisfying the creditors and legatees of the testator, the creditors of the hares might come in upon the balance; but these latter were not entitled to the beneficium scparationis.

The haerea might transmit the inheritance by will; but, in general, he could not do so till after acceptance. To this, however, there were numerous exceptions.
8. The remedies of the heres are too intimately connected with the general system of Roman jurisprudence to be capable of a brief explanation. See Mackeldey, 88 692, 693 ; Dig. 5. 3; Cod. 3. 31; Gaius iv. ${ }^{2}$ 144, etc.
9. Cohcoredes. When several haredes have accepted a joint inheritance, each, ipso jure, becomes entitled to a proportional share in the assets, and liable to a proportional share of the debts, though the testator may, if he choose, direct otherwise, and they may also agree otherwise among themselves; but in both these cases the creditors are not affected, and may pursue each hacres to the extent of his legal share of liability, and no further.

One of the cohceredes has a right to compel a partition of the assets and liabilities, subject, however, to an agreement among themselves, or a direction by the testator, that the inheritance shall remain undivided for a time. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 88 694, 695.
hafne courts (hafne, Dan. a haven, or port). Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England. Spelman, Gloss.

HALF-BLOOD. A term denoting the degree of relationship which exists between those who have one parent only in common.

By the English common law, one related to an intestate of the half-blood only could never inherit, upon the presumption that he is not of the blood of the original purchaser; but this rule has been greatly modified by the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106.

In this country, the common-law principle on this subject may be considered as not in force, though in many states some distinction is still preserved between the whole and the half-hlood. 4 Kent, Comm. 403, n.; 2 Yerg. Tenn. 115; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 456 ; 31 Penn. St. 289; Dane, Abr. Index; Reeves, Descents, passim; 2 Wasbburn, Real Prop. 411. See Descent.

HALF-BROTHER, HALF-SISTER. Persuns who have the same father, but different mothers ; or the same mother, but different fathers.

HALF-CENT. A copper coin of the United States, of the value of one two-hundredth part of a dollar, or five mills.
This coin was anthorized by resolution of congress, passed July 6, 1785 , as follows:"Resolved, That the smallest coin be of copper, of which two hundred shall pass for one dollar." It was first issued under the act of the 2 d of April, 1792, by which act the weight of the coin was fixed at one hundred and four grains. In 1796, it was reduced, by the proclamation of President Washington, under a law of that year, to ninety-four grains; at which rate it was continued to be coined until the passage of the act of Feb. 21, 1857, ivy which it was directed that the coinage of the half-cent shall cease. The first half-cents were issued in 1793, the last in 1857.
half-defence. See Defencr.
HALF-DIME. A silver coin of the United States, of the value of five cents, or the one-twentieth part of a dollar.

It weighs nineteen grains and twe-teaths of a grsin,-equal to four-hundredths of an onnce Troy,and is of the fineness of aine hondred thousandths; nine bundred parts heing pure silver, and one hundred parts cepper. The finencss of the coin is prescribed by the 8 th sectice of the general mint law, passed Jan, 18, 1837. 5 Stat. st Large, 137. The weight of the coin is fixed hy the lst section of the act of Feh. 21, 1853. 10 Stat. at Large, 160. The secend section of this last-cited act directs that silver coins issued in conformity to that act shall bo a legal tender in paymeot of debts for all sums not exceeding five dollars. This provision applies to the half-dollar and all silver coins helow that denemination. The first coingge of half-dimes was in 1793. A few half "dismes," with a likeness of Mrs. Washingten, the wife of the president, upon the obverse of the coin, werg issued in 1792; but they were not of the regular coinage.

HALF-DOLLAR. A silver coin of the United States, of half the value of the dollar or unit, and to contain one hundred and eighty-five grains and ten sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or two hundred and eight grains of standard, silver. 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 348. Under this law, the fincness of the silver coins of the United States was 892.4 thousandths of pure silver.
2. Ths weight and fineness of the silver coins were somswhat changed hy the act of Jan. 18, 1837, 5 Stat. at Large, 137; the weight of the half-dellar being by this act fixed at two hundred and six and one-quarter grains, and the fineness at nins hundred thousandths; conforming, in respect to fineness, with the coinage of France and mest ether nations.
3. The weight of the half-dellsr was reduced by the act of Fehruary 21, 1853, 10 Stat. at Large, 160 , to one huadred and ninety-twe grains, at which rats it continues to be issued,-the standard of fineness remaining the same.
4. The half-dellars coined under the scts of 1792 and 1837 ( 1 and 2, as abeve) are & legal tender at their nominal value in payment of dehts to say amount. These ceined since the passsge of the aet of February 21, 1853, sre a legal tender in payment of debts for all sums not exceeding five dol lars. Sec. 2. The silver coins struck in the year 1853, under this last-cited act, may be distinguished from the ethers of that year by the arrow-hesds on the right and left of the date of the piece. In 1854, and subsequcat years, the arrow-heads sre omitted.

HALF-EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of five dollars.

The weight of the piece is one hundred and twenty-nine grains of standard fineness, namely, oins hundred thousondths of pure gold, and one hundred of alloy of silver and oopper : "provided that the silver do not excesd one-half of the whele slloy." Act of Jan. 18, 1837, 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 136. As the propertion of silver and oupper is not fixed by law further then to presoribe that the silver thersin shall not excesd fifty in every thousand parts, the proportion was made the subject of a special instructioc by Mr. Snowden, the late directer of the mint, as follows:-
"As it is highly important to secure uniformity in our gold coinage, all deposits of nativo gold, or gold not previously refined, should be assayed for silver, without exception, and refined to from nine hundred and ninety to nine hundred and minetythree, say averaging nine hundred and ninety-one as near as may be. When any of the deposits prove to be nine hundred and ninety, or finer, they should be reserved to be mixed with the refined gold. The gold coin of the mint and its branches will then be nearly thus: gold, nine bundred; silver, eight; copper, ninety-two; and thus a greater uniformity of color will be attained than was heretofore accomplished."

The instructions on this point were prescribed by the director in September, 1853. Mint Pamphlet, "Instructions relative to the Business of the Mint," 14.

For all sums whatever the half-eagle is a legal tender of payment of five dollars. Act of Congress ahove cited, sec. 10, p. 138. The first issues of this eoin at the mint of the United States were in 1795.

HALF-PROOF. In Civil Law. That which is insufficient as the foundation of a sentence or decree, although in itself entitled to some credit. Vicat, Probatio.

HALF-SEAL. A seal used in the English chancery for the sealing of commissions to delegates appointed upon any appeal, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes.

HALF-TONGUE. A jury half of one tongue or nationality and half of another. Vide De medietate linguæe, Jacob, Law Dict.

HALF-YEAR. In the computation of time, a half-year consists of one hundred and eighty-two days. Coke, Litt. 135 b ; N. Y. Rev. Stat. part 1, c. 19, t. 1, & 3.

HALI-GEMOTE. Halle-gemote.
HALL. A public huilding used either for the meetings of corporations, courts, or employed to some public uses: as, the city hall, the town hall. Formerly this word denoted the chief mansion or habitation.

HALLAZCO. In Spanish Law. The finding and taking possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant. Las Partidas, 3. 5. 28, 5. 48. 49, 5. 20. 50.
haLLE-GEMOTE. Hall-assemhly. A species of court baron.

HALLUCINATION. In Medical Jurisprudence. A species of mania by which an idea reproduced by the memory is associated and embodied by the imagination. This state of mind is sometimes called delusion, or waking dreams.
An attempt has been made to distinguish hallucinations from illusions: the former are said to be dependent on the state of the intellectual organs, and the latter on that of those of sense. Ray, Med. Jur. & 99 ; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 538, note. An instance is given of a temporary hallucination in the celebrated Ben Jonson, the poet. He told a friend of his that he had spent many a night in looking at his great toe, about which he had seen Turks and Tartars, Romans and Carthaginians, fight, in his imagination. 1 Collyer, Lun. 34. If, instead of heing temporary, this affection of his mind had been permanent, he would doubtless have been considered insane. See, on the subject of spectral illusions, Hibbert, Alderson, and Farrar's Essays; Scott on Demonology, etc.; 3 Bostock, Physiology. 91, 161; 1 Esquirol, Maladies Mentales, 159.

halmote. See Halle-Gemote.

HALYMOTE (Holimot, Halegemot; from Saxon halg, holy, and gemot or mot, a meeting). A holy or ecclesiastical court.

A court held in London before the lord mayor and sheriffs, for regulating the bakers.

It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas's day, and therefore called the holymote, or holy court. Cowel, edit. 1727 ; Cunningham, Law Dict. Holymote See Spelman, Gloss. ; Coke, 4th Inst. 321.

HALYWERCFOLK. Those who held by the service of guarding and repairing os church or sepulchre, and were excused from feudal services. Hist. Dunelm. apud Whartoni Ang. Sax. pt. 1, p. 749. Especially in the county of Durham, those who beld by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert. Jacoh, Law Dict.

HAMESUCKEN. In Scotch Law. The crime of hamesucken consists in "the felonious seeking and invasion of a person in his dwelling-house." 1 Hume, 312; Burnett, 86; Alison, Crim. Law of Scotl. 199.
2. The mere breaking into a house, without personal violence, does not constitute the offence, nor does the violence without an entry with intent to commit an assault. It is the combination of both which completes the crime. 1. It is necessary that the invasion of the house should have proceeded from forethought malice; hut it is sufficient if, from any illegal motive, the violence has heen meditated, although it may not have proceeded from the desire of wreaking personal revenge, properly so called. 2. The place where the assault was committed must have been the proper dwelling-house of the party injured, and not a place of business, visit, or occasional residence. 3. The offence may be committed equally in the day as in the night, and not only by effraction of the building by actual force, but by an entry obtained by fraud, with the intention of inflicting personal violence, followed by its perpetration. 4. But, unless the injury to the person he of a grievous and material character, it is not hamesucken, though the other requisites to the crime have occurred. When this is the case, it is immaterial whether the violence he done lucri caus $\hat{\imath}$ or from personal spite. 5. The punishment of hamesucken in aggravated cases of injury is death; in cases of inferior atrocity, an arbitráry punishment. Alison, Srim. Law of Scotl. ch. 6; Erskine, Inst. 4. 9. 23.
3. This term was formerly used in England instead of the now modern term burglary. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 223.

But in Hale's Pleas of the Crown it is said, "The common genus of offences that comes under the name of hamsecken is that which is usually called house-breaking; which sometimes comes under the common appellation of burglary, whether committed in the day or night to the intent to commit felony: so that house-breaking of this kind is of two natures." 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 547; 22 Pick. Mass. 4.
HAMLET. A small village; a part or member of a vill.

HAMSOCUE (from Saxon ham, house, sockue, liberty, immunity. The word is variously spelled hamsoca, hamsocua, hamsoken, haimsuken, hamesaken). The right of security and privacy in a man's house. DuCange. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace. Anc. Laws \& Inst. of Eng. Gloss.; DuCange; Bracton, lib. 3, tr. $2, \mathrm{c} .2$, , 33 . HAND. A measure of length, four inches long: used in ascertaining the height of horses.

HANDBILIL. A written or printed notice displayed to inform those concerned of something to be done.
HAND BOROW (from hand, and Saxon borow, a pledge). Nine of a decennary or friborg (q.v.) were so called, being inferior to the tenth or head borow,--a decenna or friborga being ten freemen or frankplcdges, who were mutually sureties for each other to the king for any damage. DuCange, Friborg, Head-borov.

HANDHABEND. In Sazon Law. One having a thing in his haod; that is, a thief fonnd having the stolen goods in his possession,--latro manifestus of the civil law. See Laws of Heu. I. c. 59; Laws of Athelstane, 86 ; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, 81 ; Britton, p. 72; DuCange, Handhabenda.

Jurisdiction to try such thief. ld.
HANDSALE. Anciently, among all the northern nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,-a custom still retained in verbal contracts: a sale thus made was called handsale, venditio per mutuam manum complexionem. In process of time the same word was used to signify the price or earnest which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. In some parts of the country it is usual to speak of hand-monsy, as the part of the consideration paid or to be paid at the execution of a contract of sale. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 448; Heineccius, de Antiquo Jure Germanico, lib. 2, ${ }^{\text {z } 335 ; ~ T o u l l i e r, ~ l i v . ~ 3, ~ t . ~ 3, ~ c . ~ 2, ~}$ n. 33.

HANDWRITING. Any thing written by a person. The manner in which a person writes, including the formation of the characters, the separation of the words, and other features distinguishing the written matter, as a mechanical result, from the writing of other persons.

It is sometimes necessary to prove that a certain instrument or name is in the handwriting of a particular person; that is dons either by the testimony of a witness who saw the paper or signature actually written, or by one who has by sufficient means acquired such a knowledge of the general character of the handwriting of the party as will enable him to swear to his belief that the handwriting of the person is the handwriting in question. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 422; Starkie, Ev. ; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 211; 5 Johns. N. Y. 144; 19 id. 134; 1 Dall. Penn. 14; 2 Me. 33; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 568; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 554; 2 id. 400; Anthon, Nisi P. 77; 4 Gray, Mass. 167; 5 Cush. HANGING. Death by the halter, or the suspending of a criminal, condemned to suffer death, by the neck, until life is extinct. A mode of capital punishment.

HANGMAN. An executioner. Ths name usually given to a man employed by the sheriff to put a man to death, according to law, in pursuance of a judgment of a competent court and lawful warrant.
HANGWITE (from Saxon hangian, to hang, and wite, fine). Fine, in Saxon law, for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine. DuCange.

HANSE. A commercial confederacy for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members. An imposition upon merchandise. DuCange, Hansa.
HANSE TOWNS. A number of towns in Europe which joined in a league for mutual protection of commerce as early as the twelfth century.
Amsterdam and Bremen were the first two that formed it, and they were joined by othere in Germany, Holland, England, France, Italy, and Spain, till in 1200 they numbered seventy-two. They made war and peace to protect their commerce, and held countries in sovereignty, as a united commonwealth. They had a common treasury at Lubeck, and power to call an assembly as often as they ohose. For purposes of jurisdiction, they were divided into four colleges or provinces. Great privileges were granted them hy Lovie VI. of France and sucoeeding monarchs. One of their prinoipal magazines was at London. Their power became so great as to excite the jealousy of surrounding nations, who foroed the towns within their juriediction whioh belonged to the league to renounce it. Their number and power hecame thus gradually reduced, heginning from the middle of the fifteenth century; and at the present day only Bremen, Hamburg, Lubeck, and Frankfort-on-the-Main re-main,-these being reengnized by the act establishing the German Confederacy, in 1815, as free Hanseatic cities. Encyc. Brit.

HANSE TOWNS, LAWS OF THE. The maritime ordinances of the Hanseatic towns, first published in German at Lubeck in 1597, and in May, 1614, revised and enlarged. The text of this digest, and a Latin translation, are published with a commentary by Kuricke; and a French translation has been given by Cleirac. See Cone.

HAP. To catch. Thus, "hap the rent," "hap the deed-poll," were formerly used. Tech. Dict.

HARBOR (Sax. here-berga, station for an army). A place where ships may ride with safety; any navigable water protected by the surrounding country; a haven. It is public prope"ty. 1 Bouvier, Inst. u. 435.

Harbor is to be distinguisbed from "port," which has a refereoce to the delivery of cargo. See 7 Mann. & G. 870; 9 Metc. Mass. 371-377; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 460. Thus, we have the "said harbor basin and docks of the port of Hull." 2 Barnew. & Ald. 60. But they are generally used as synonymous. Webster, Dict.

In Torts. To receive clandestinely or without lawful anthority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another baving a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same; for example, the harboring of a wife or an apprentice in order to deprive the husband or the master of them ; or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. 10 N . H. 247 ; 5 Ill. 498.

The harboring of such persons will subject the harborer to an action for the injury; but, in order to put him completely in the wrong, a demand should be made for their restoration, for in cases where the harborer has not committed any other wrong than merely receiving the plaintiff's wife, child, or apprentice, he may be nnder no obligation to return them without a demand. 1 Chitty, Pract. 564 ; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 No. C. Law Rep. 249 ; 5 IIow. 2l5, 227.

HARD LABOR. In those states where the penitentiary system has been adopted, convicts who are to be imprisoned, as part of their punishment, are sentenced to perform hard labor. This labor is not greater than many freemen perform voluntarily, and the quantity reqnired to be performed is not at all nnreasonable. In the penitentiaries of Pennsylvania it consists in being employed in weaving, shoemaking, and such like employments.

HART. A stag or male deer of the forest five years old complete.

HAT MONEY. In Maritime Law. Primase: a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

HAWKER. An itinerant or travelling trader, who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to prohasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business. Superadded to this, though perhaps not essential, is generally understood one who not only carries goods for sale, but seeks for purchasers, either by outery, which some lexicographers conceive as intimated by the derivation of the word, or by attracting notice and attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn for the sale of fish. 12 Cush. Mass. 495. To prevent impositions, hawkers are generally required to take out licenses, under regulations established by the local laws of the states.

HAYBOTE (from haye, hedge, and bote, compensation). Hedgebote: one of the esto vers allowed tenant for life or for years; namely, material to repair hedges or fences. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 35; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 99.

HAYWARD (from haye, hedge, and ward, keeping). In Old English Law. An officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town: so called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against pound-breaches. Kitch. 46; Cowel.

HAZARDOUS CONTRACT. A contract in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. La. Civ. Code, art. 1769. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 707; 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 596; 3 id. 84; Maritime Loan.

HEAD. The principal source of a stream. Webster, Dict. The head of a creek will be taken to mean the head of its longest branch, unless there be forcible evidence of common reputation to the contrary. 1 Bibb, Ky. 75; 2 id. 112.

HEDGE-BOTE. Wood used for repairing hedges or fences. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 35; 16 Johns. N.Y. 15.

HEIFER. A young cow which has not had a calf. A beast of this kind two years and a half old was held to be improperly described in the indictment as a cow. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 616; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 105.

HEIR. At Common Law. IIe who is born or begotten in lawful wedlock, and upon whom the law casts the estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments mmediately upon the death of his ancestor.
The term beir has a very different signification at comuon law from what it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term applies to sll persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the testsmentary heir; and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestaoy, called the heir at law, or heir by intestacy. The executor of the common law is in many respects not unlike the testamentsry heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors -unless expressly anthorized by the will-snd administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whoreas the heir by tho covil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. I Brown, Civ. Law, 344; Story, Confl. Laws, $\neq$ z 508.
No person is heir of a living person. A person occupying a relation which may be that of heirship is, however, called heir apparent or heir presumptive. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 208. A monster cannot be heir. Coke, Litt. 7 b. A bastard cannot be heir. 2 Kent, Comm. 208. See Bastard; Descent.
In the word heirs is comprebended heirs of heirs in infinitum. Coke, Litt. 7b, $9 a$; Wood, Inst. 69.

According to many authorities, heir may be nomen collectivum, as well in a deed as in a will, and operate in both in the same manner as the word heirs. 1 Rolle, Abr. 253; Ambl. 453; Godb. 155; T. Jones, 111; Croke Eliz. 313; 1 Burr. 38; 10 Viner, Abr. 233. But see 2 Prestun, Est. 9, 10. In wills, in order to effeetuate the intention of the testator, the word heirs is sometimes construed to mean the next of kin, 1 Jac. & W. Ch. 388, and children. Ambl. 273. See, further, as to the force and import of this word, 2 Ventr. 311; 1 P. Will. 229; 2 id. 1, 369; 3 Brown, Parl. Cas. 60, 454; 2 W. Blackst. 1010; 4 Ves. Ch. 26, 766, 794; 2 Atk. Ch. 89, 580; 5 East, 533 ; 5 Burr. 2615; 11 Mod. 189.
In Civil Law. He who succeeds to the rights and oceupies the plaee of a deceased person. See the following titles, and Heres.
HEIR APPARENT. One who has an indefeasible riglt to the inheritance, provided be outlive the aneestor. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 208.
heirs, beneficiary. In Civil Law. Those who have accepted the suc. eession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. La. Civ. Code, art. 879. It the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, ho accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession.
HEIR, COLLATERAL. One who is not of the direct line of the deceased, but comes from a collateral line: as, a brother, sister, an uncle and aunt, a nephew, niece, or cousin, of the deceased.

HEIR, CONVENTIONAL. In Civil Law. One who takes a succession by virtue of a contract-for example, a marriage con-tract-which entitles the heir to the succession.

HEIRS, FORCED. Those who cannot be disimherited. See Forced Heirs.
HEIR, GENERAL. Heir at common law.

HEIRS, IRREGULAR. In Loulsiana. Those who are neither testamentary nor legal, and who have been established by law to take the succession. See La. Civ. Code, art. 874. When the deceased has left neither lawful descendants nor ascendants, nor collateral relations, the law calls to his inheritance either the surviving husband or wife, or his or her natural children, or the state. Id. art. 911. 'This is called an irregular succession.
heir at Law. He who, after his ancestor's death intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as heir general.

HELR, LEGAL. In Civil Law. A legal heir is one who is of the same blood as the deceased, and who takes the succession by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See La. Civ. Code, art. 873, 875; Dict. de Jurisp. Héritier légitime. There are three classes of legal heirs, to wit: the children and other lawful descendants, the fathers and mothers and other lawful ascendants, and the collateral kindred. La. Civ. Code, art. 883.

HEIR-LOOM. Chattels which, contrary to the nature of chattels, descend to the heir along with the inheritance, and do not pass to the executor of the last proprietor.
This word seems to be compounded of heir and loom, that is, a frame, viz. to weave in. Some derive the word loom from the Saxon loma, or geloma, which sighifies utensils or vessels generally. However this may he, the word loom, by time, is drawn to a more general signification than it at the first did hear, comprehending all implements of household, as tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscots, and whioh, by the custom of some countries, having helonged to a house, are never inventoriod after the decease of the owner as chattels, but accrue to the heir with the honse itself. Minshew. The term heir-looms is applied to those chattels whioh are considered as annexed and necessary to the enjoyment of an inheritance.
Charters, deeds, and other evidences of the title of the land, together with the box or chest in which they are contained, the keys of a house, and fish in a fish-pond, are heirlooms Coke. Litt. $3 a, 185 b ; 7$ Coke, $17 b$;

Croke Eliz. 372; Brooke, Abr. Charters, pl: 13; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 28; 14 Viner, Abr. 291.

HEIR, PRESUMPTIVE. One who. in the present circumstances, would be entitled to the inheritance, but whose rights may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 208. In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it. La. Civ. Code, art. 876 gEIR, TESTAMENTARY. In CIVI Law. Oue who is constituted heir by testament executed in the form prescribed ly law. He is so called to distinguish him from the legal heirs, who are called to the succession by the law; and from conventional heirs, who are so constituted by a contract inter vivos. See Heres Factus; Devisee.
HEIRS, UNCONDITIONAL. In Louisiana. Those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. La. Civ. Code, art. 878.
heiress. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called coheiresses, or co-heirs.

HEIRSHIP MOVABLES. In Scotch Law. The movables which go to the heir, and not to the executor, that the land may not go to the heir completely dismantled, such as the best of furniture, horses, cows, etc., but not fungibles. Hope, Minor Pract. p. 538; Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 13-17 et seq.; Beli, Dict.
HENGHEN (ergastulum). In Saxon Law. A prison, or house of correction. Anc. Laws & lnst. of Engl. Gloss.
HEPTARCHY. The name of the kingdom or government established by the Saxons on their establishment in Britain: so called because it was composed of seven kingdoms, namely, Kent, Essex, Sussex, Wessex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumberland.
HERALD (from French, herault). An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals and coronations, and, anciently, to carry messages between princes and proclaim war and peace.
In England, there are three chief heralds, called kings-at-arms, of whom Garter is the principal, instituted by king Henry V., whose office is to attend the knights of the Garter at their solemnitics, and to marshal the funerals of the nobility. The next is Clarencienx, instituted by Edward IV. after be became duke of Clarence, and whose proper office is to arrange the funerals of all the lesser nobility, knights, and squires on the south side of Trent. The third is Norroy (north roy), who has the like office on the north side of Trent. There are, also, six inferior heralds, who were created to attend dukes or great lords in their military expeditions. The office, however, has grown much into disuse,- so much falsity and confusion having crept into their records that they are ne longer reeeived in evidenco in any eourt of justice. This diffieulty was attempted to be remedied by a standing order of the house of lords, whieh requires Garter to deliver to that house an exact pedigree of each peer and his family on the day of his first admission. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 105; Eneye. Brit.

HERAIDS' COL工FGE. In 1450, the heralds in England were collected into a college by Richard II. The earl marshal of England was chief of the college, and under him were three kings-at-arms (styled Garter, Clarencieux, Norroy), six heralds-at-arms (styled of York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, and Somerset), and four pur-suivants-at-arms (styled Blue mantle, Rouge croix, Rouge dragon, and Portcullis). This organization still continues. Encyc. Brit.

HERBAGE. In English Law. An easement which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground.

HERD-WERCK. Customary uncertain services as herdsmen, shepherds, etc. Anno 1166, Regist. Ecclesiæ Christi Cant. MS. ; Cowel.

HEREBANINUM. Calling out the army by proclamation. A fine paid by freemen for not attending the army. A tax for the support of the army. DuCange.

HEREDAD. In Spanish Iaw. A portion of land that is cultivated. Formerly it meant a farm, hacienda de campo, real estate.

HEREDERO. In Spanish Law. Heir ; be who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. "Hares censeatur cum defuncto una eademque persona." Las Partidas, 7.9.13.

HEREDITAMENTS. Things capable of being inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, and including not only lands and every thing thereon, but also heir-looms, and certain furniture which, by custom, may descend to the heir together with the land. Coke, Litt. 5 b; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 17. By this term such things are denoted as may be the subject-matter of inheritance, but not the inheritance itself : it cannot, therefore, by its own intrinsic force enlarge an estate prima facie a life estate into a fee. 2 Bos. & P. 251 ; 8 Term, 503. See 4 Washburn, Real Prop. Index.

HEREDITARY. That which is the subject of inheritance.

HERES. See Heres.
EERIOT. In English Law. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land.

Heriot service is such as is due upon a special reservation in the grant or lease of lands, and therefore amounts to little more than a mere rent. Heriot custom arises upon no special reservation whatsoever, but depends merely upon immemorial usage and custom. See 2 Blackstone, Comm. 97, 422; Comyns, Dig. Copyhold (K18); Bacon, Abr.; 2 Saund.; 1 Vern. Ch. 441.

HERISCHILD. A species of English military service.

HERISCHUIDA. A fine for disobedience to proclamation of warfare. Skene.

HERITABLE BOND. In Scotch Law.

A bond for a sum of money to which is added, for further security of the creditor, a conveyance of land or heritage to be held by the creditor as pledge. 1 Ross, Lect. 76; 2 id. 324.

HERITABLE JURISDICTION. In

Scotch Law. Grants of criminal jurisdiction made to great families for the better execution of justice. Abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 43. Bell, Dict.

HERITABLE RIGHTS. In Scotch Law. Righis which go to the heir; generally, all rights in or connected with lands. Bell, Dict. Heritable.

HERITAGE. In Civil Lavz. Every species of immovable which can be the sulbject of property: such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase. 3 Toullier, 472. See Coke, Litt. s. 731.

HERMANDAD (called, also, Santa Hermandad). In Spanish Law. A fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power.
To earry into effect the objeet of this association, each village and town elected two alcaldes,-one by the nobility and the other by the eommunity at large. These bid under their order inferior offieers, formed into companies. called cuad cilleros. Their duty was to arrest delinquents and bring them before the alcaldes, when they were tried substantially in the ordinary form. This tribunal, established during the anarehy prevailing in feudal times, eontinued to maintain its organization in Spain for centuries; and various laws determining its jurisdietion and mode of proceeding were enacted by Ferdinand and Isabella and subsequent monarehe. Nov. Recop. tit. 35, b. 12. $\% 7$. The abuses introduced in the exercise of the functions of these trihunals caused their aholition, and the santas hermandades of Ciudad Rodrigo, Talavera, and Toledo, the last remnents of these anomalous jurisdictions, were abolished by the law of the 7th May, 1835.

HERMAPERODITES. Persons who have in the sexual organs the appearance of both sexes. They are adjudged to belong to that sex which prevails in them. Coke, Litt. 2, 7 ; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, t. 2, s. 1, n. 9.

The sexual characteristics in the human species are widely separated, and the two sexes are never, perhaps, united in the same individual. 2 Dunglison, Hum. Physiol. 304 ; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 94-110. Cases of malformation, however, sometimes are found, in which it is very difficult to decide to which sex the person belongs. See 2 Med. Exam. 314; I Briand, Med. Leg. c. 2, art. 2, 82, n. 2; Guy, Med. Jur. 42, 47; 1 Beek, Med. Jur. 11 th ed. 164 ét seq.; Wharton & S. Med. Jur. $2 d$ ed. 8 408 et seg.

HERMENEUTICS (Greek, غं $\rho \mu \eta \nu \varepsilon ́ v \omega$, to interpret). L'he art and science, or body of rules, of truthful interpretation. It has been used chiefly by theologians; but Zachariæ, in "An Essay on General Legal Hermeneutics" (Versuch einer allg. Hermenelitik des Rechts), and Dr. Lieber, in his work on Legal and Political Interpretation and Construction, also make use of it. See linterpretation; Construction.
HIDAGE. In Old English Law. A tax levied, in emergencies, un every hide of land ; the exemption from such tax. Bract. lib. 2, c. 56. It was payable sometimes in money, sometines in ships or military equipments: e.g. in the year 994, when the Danes landed in England, every three hundred hides furnished a ship to king Ethelred, and every eight hides one pack and one saddle. Jacob, Law Dict.
HIDALGO (spelled, also, Hijodalgo). In Spanish Law. He who, by blood and lineage, belongs to a distinguished family, or is noble by descent. Las Partidas, 2. 12. 3. The origin of this word has given rise to much controversy: for which see Escriche.

HIDE (from Sax. hyden, to cover; so, Lat. tectum, from tegere). In Old English Law. A building with a roof; a house.

As much land as might be ploughed with one plough. The amount was probably determined by usage of the locality: some make it sixty, others eighty, others ninety-six, others one hundred or one hundred and twenty, acres. Coke, Litt. 5; I Plowd. 167 ; Sheppard, Touchst. 93 ; DuCange.
As much land as was necessary to support a hide, or mansion-house. Coke, Litt. 69 a; Spelman, Gloss.; DuCange, Hida; I Introd. to Domesday, 145. At present the quantity is one hundred acres. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Engl. Gloss.

HIDE LANDS. In Old English Law. Lands appertaining to a hide, or mansion. See Hide.
HIGH COMMISSION COURT. In English Law. An ecclesiastical court of very extensive jurisdiction, for the vindication of the peace and dignity of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities.
It was erected by stat. 1 Eliz. c. l, and abolished by 16 Car. II. c. 11.
HIGH CONSTABLE. An officer appointed in some cities with powers generally limited to matters of police, and not more extensive, in these respects, than those of constables. See Constable.
HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See Admirality.
HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES. In English Law. A tribunal which formerly exercised appellate jurisdiction over cases brought from the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts.
It was a court of great dignity, erected by the statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19. It was abodished, and its jurisdiction transferred to the judicial committee of the privy council. Set $2 & 3$ Will. IV. c. $92 ; 3 & 4$ Will. IV. c. 41 ; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 38; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Cumm. 66.

HIGH COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS. In American Law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the state of Mississippi. See Mississippi.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY. See Court of Justiciary.

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT. In English Law. The English parliament, as composed of the house of peers and house of commons.

The house of lords sitting in its judicial capacity.
This term is applied to parliament by most of the law writers. Thus, parliament is said hy Blackstone to be the supreme court of the kingdom, not only for the making hut also for the execution of the laws. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 259. Lord Coke and Lord Hale also apply the term "court" to the whole parliament ; and see Finch, Law, 233; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2. But, from the fact that in judicial proceedings generally the housc of commons takes no part, but only in the trial of impeachments, and then only as prosceutor, and from the fact that the house of commons disclaimed possession of judicial powers at the deposition of Richard II., and the twelve judges made a similar decision in 1 Hen. VII., the propricty of thisuse of the term bas hetn questioned. Blackstone, Comm., Warren, Ahr. 215. The propriety of its application would seem to be derived from the claim of parliament to be considered as the suceessor of the aula regis, which was a judicial as well as a legislative body, and, if the succession is established, would he applicable although the judieial power may have heen granted to the various courts. See Courts.
The house of lords only acts in a judicial capacity in civil cases and in most crimiual cases. See House of Lords; Impeachment.
HIGH SEAS. The uninclosed waters of the ocean, and also those waters on the seacoast which are without the boundaries of low-water mark. , 1 Gall. C. C. 624; 5 Mass. C. C. 290; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 110; 2 Hagg. Adm. 398; Dunlop, Adm. Pract. 32, 33.
The act of congress of April 30, 1790, s. 8, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 84, enacts that if any person shall commit upon the high seas, or in any river, haven, basin, or hay, out of the juriadiction of any particular state, murder, etc., which if committed within the body of a county would, by the laws of the United States, be punishable with death, every such offender, being thereof convicted, shall suffer death; and the trial of crimes committed on the high seas, or in any place out of the jurisdiotion of any particular state, shall be in the district where the offender is apprehended, or into which he may first be hrought. See 4 Dall. Penn. 426; 3 Wheat. Penn. 336; 5 id. 184, 412; 3 Wash. C. C. 515; Sergeant, Const. Law, 334; 13 Am. Jur. 279 ; 1 Mas. C. C. 147,152 ; 1 Gall. C. C. 624 . See Fauces Terne.

HIGH TREASON. In English Law. Treason against the king, in contradistinction from petit treason, which is the treason of a servant towards his master, a wife towards her husband, a secular or religious man towards his prelate. See Petit Treason: Treason.

HIGH-WATER MARK. That part ; ${ }^{\prime}$ the shore of the sea to which the waves ordinarily reach when the tide is at its highest. 6 Miss. 435 ; 1 Pick. Mass. 180; 1 Halst, N. J. 1; 1 Russell, Crimes, 107; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 803. See Sea-Shore; Tide.

HIGHWAY. A passage, road, or street which every citizen has a right to use. 1 Bouvier, lnst. n. 442; 3 Kent, Comm. 432; 3 Yeates, Penn. 421.

The term highway is the generic namo for all kinds of publio ways, whether they be carriagewaye, bridle-ways, foot-ways, bridges, turnpike roads, railroads, canals, ferries, or navigable rivers. 6 Mod. 255; Angell, Highw. c. 1; 3 Kent, Comm. 432.
2. Highways are created either by legislative authority, by dedication, or by necessity. First, by legislative authority. In England, the laying out of highways is regulated by act of parliament; in this country, by general statutes; differing in different states. In England, the uniform practice is to provide a compensation to the owner of the land taken for highways. In the act authorizing the taking, in the United States, such a provision must be made, or the act will be void under the clause in the several state constitutions that "private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation." The amount of such compensation may be determined either by a jury or by commissioners, as shall be preseribed by law. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 139; Angell, Highw. c. 2; 8 Price, Exch. 535; 12 Mass. 466; 18 Pick. Mass. 501; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 162; 12 Barb. N. Y. 227 ; 25 Wend. N. Y. 462; 21 N. H. 358; 1 Baldw. C. C. 222; 3 Watts, Penn: 292. In case the statute makes no provision for indemnity for land to be taken, an injunction may be obtained to prevent the taking, $3^{\prime}$ Paige, Ch. N. Y. 45; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 162'; or an action at law may be maintained after the damage has been committed. 5 Cow. N. Y. 165; 16 Conn. 98 ; and cases cited above.
3. Second, by dedication. This consists of two things: first, on the part of the owner of the fee, an appropriation of land to be used by the public, generally, as a common way; second, on the part of the public, an acceptance of the land, so appropriated, for such use. Against the owner, dedication may be proved by his express declaration, whether by deed or by parol, or by any act unequivocally evincing his intention to dedicate, as by his opening a way for the public over his land, or it may be implied from his acquiescence in the use of his land for a public way. Where acquiescence is the only evidence of dedication, it must ordinarily have continued for twenty years; though any shorter period will suffice, if such acquiescence cannot reasomably be accounted for except upon the supposition of an intent to dedicate. In all cases, the intent to dedicate -the animus dedicandi-is the indispensable ingredient of the proof against the owner of the fee. Angell, Highw. c. 3; 3 Kent, Comm. 451; 5 Taunt. 125; 30 Eng. L. & Eq. 207; 11 East, 375; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 827; 6

Pet. 431; 19 Pick. Mass. 405; 5 Watts \& S. Penn. 141. There may be a dedication to the public for a limited purpose, as for a footway, horse-way, or drift-way, but not to a limited part of the public; and such partial dedication will be merely void. 11 Mees. \& W. Exch. 827; 8 Cush. Mass. 195. The proper proof of an acceptance is the use of the way by the public generally, 5 Barnew. \& Ad. 469; 1 R. I. 93 ; but it has been held, in some states, that an acceptance to be effectual must be made by the body chargeakle with the duty of repairing. $13 \mathrm{Yt} .424 ; 6 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{Y}$. 257; 16 Barb. N. Y. 251 ; 8 Gratt. La. 632 ; 2 Ind. 147.

Third, by necesstty. If a highway be impassable, from being out of repair or otherwise, the public have a right to pass in an other line, and, for this purpose, to go on the adjoining ground; and it makes no difference whether it be sown with grain or not. 1 Ld. Raym. 725; Croke, Car. 366; 1 Rolle, Abr. 390 a; 7 Cush. Mass. 408; Yelv. 142, n. 1.
4. A highway is simply an easement or servitude, carrying with it, as its incidents, the right to use the soil for the purposes of repair and improvement; and, in cities, for the more general purposes of sewerage, the distribution of light and water, and the furtherance of public morality, health, trade, and convenience. The owner of the land over which it passes retains the foe and all rights of property not incompatible with the public enjoyment, such as the right to the herbage, the trees and fruit growing thereon, or minerals below, and may work a mine, sink a drain or cellar, or carry water in pipes beneath it. 4 Viner, Abr. 502; Comyns, Dig. Chemin (A 2); Angell, Highw. c. 7; 1 Burr. 133; 1 N. H. 16 ; 1 Sumn. C. C. 21 ; 3 Rawle, Penu. 495 ; 10 Pet. 25 ; 6 Mass. 454 ; 15 Johns. N. Y. 447. He may maintain ejectment for encroachments thereon, or an assize if disseised of it, 3 Kent, Comm. 432; Adams, Eject. 19; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 26; 1 Conn. 135; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 141, or trespass against one who builds on it, 2 Johns, N. Y. 357 ; or who digs up and removes the soil, 12 Wend. N. Y. 98, or cuts down trees growing thereon, 1 N. 1l. 16; or who stops upon it for the purpose of using abusive or insulting language, 11 Barb. N. Y. 390. If a railroad be laid upon a highway, even though land by legislative authority, the owner of the fee is entitled to compensation for the additional servitude. 2 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 97; 3 Hill, N. Y. 567; 4 Zabr. N. J. 592; 16 Miss. 649. The owners on the opposite sides primâ facie own respectively to the centre of the highway, Angell, Highw. 8313 ; and a grant of land bounded "by," or " on," or "alung" a highway carries, by presumption, the fee to the centre, if the grantor own so far; though this presumption may be rebutted by words showing an intention to exclude the highway, such as, "by the side of," "by the margin of," or "by the line of" the highway, or other equivalent expression. 3 Kent, Comm. 433; Angell, Highw. 8315 ; 11 Me .

463; 4 Day, Conn. 228 ; 13 N. H. 381 ; 8 Metc. Mass. 266; 2 R. I. 508 ; 2 Sandf. N. Y. $234 ; 2$ Whart. Penn. 18. Whenever the highway is abandoned or lost, the owner of the soil recovers his original unincumbered dominion. Angell, Highw.; 4 Mass. 429; 6 Pet. 498, 513 ; 8 Watts. Penn. 172; 15 Johns. N. Y. 447.
5. In England, the inhabitants of the several parishes are primâ facie bound to repair all highways lying within them, unless by prescription or otherwise they can throw the burden upon particular persons. Shelford. Highw. 44; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 76; 5 Burr. 1700; 12 Mod. 409. In this country, the English parochial system being unknown, this feature of the common law does not prevail. The liability to repair is here determined by statute, and, in most of the states, devolves upon the towns. 8 Barb. N. Y. 645 ; 13 Pick. Mass. 343 ; 1 Humphr. Tenn. 217. The liability being thus created, its measure is likewise to be ascertained by statute, the criterion being, generally, safety and convenience for travel, having reference to the natural characteristics of the road and the public needs. Angell, Highw. & 259; 2 Woodb. & M. C. C. 337 ; 19 Vt. $470 ; 4$ Cush. Mass. 307, 365 ; 14 Me 198. For neglect to repair, the parish in England, and in this country the town or body chargeable, is indictable as for a nuisance, 2 Wms. Saund. 158, n. 4; 3 Term, 265 ; 28 N. II. 195 ; Angell, Highw. & 275, and, in many states, is made liable, by statute, to an action on the case for damages in favor of any person who may have suffered special injury by reason of such neglect. 17 How. 161; 3 Cush. Mass. 174; 22 Penn. St. 384; 31 Me. 299 ; Angell, Highw. & 286. The duty of repair may, in this country, rest on an individual to the exclusion of the town, 23 Wend. N. Y. 446, or on a corporation who, in pursuance of their charter, build a road, and levy tolls for the expense of maintaining it. 7 Conn. 86. The taking of toll is primâa facie evidence of the duty. 1 Hawks, No. C. 451.
6. Any act or obstruction which unnecessarily incommodes or impedes the lawful use of a highway by the public, is a common-law nuisance, 4 Stephen, Comm. 294; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 76 ; Angell, Highw. 8345 , and may be abated by any one whose passage is thereby obstructed, Angell, Highw. 8274 ; 3 Stephen, Comm. 5; 5 Coke, 101 ; or the person causing or maintaining the same may be indicted, 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 76; 2 Saund. 158, 159 , note ; 7 Hill, N. Y. 575 ; 13 Metc. Mass. 115 ; or may be sued for damages in an action on the case hy any one specially injured thereby. Coke, Litt. $56 a$ : 2 Bingh. 263 ; 1 Binn. Penn. 463; 7 Cow. N. Y. 609 ; 19 Pick. Mass. 147 ; Angell, IIighw. &̊ 285 ́ et seq.

It is the duty of travellers upon highways, for the purpose of avoiding collision and accident, to observe due care in accommodating themselves to each other. To subserve this purpose, it is the rule in England that, in meeting, each party shall bear or keep to the left; and in this country the reverse,-that is, to the right. 2 Stephen, Nisi P. 984 ; Story, Bailm. & 599 ; 2 Dowl. & R. 255. This rule, however, may and ought to be varied, where its observance would defeat its purpose. 8 Carr. & P. 103; 12 Metc. Mass. 415 ; 23 Penn. St. 196. The rule does not apply to equestrians and foot-passengers. 24 Wend. N. Y. 465 ; 2 D. Chipm. Vt. 128; 8 Carr. & P. 373, 691. It is another rule that travellers shall drive only at a moderate rate of speed, furious driving on a thronged thoroughfare being an indictable offence at common law. 1 Pet. 590 ; 13 id. 181; 8 Carr. & P. 694. In case of injury ly reason of the nonobservance of these rules or of other negligence, as by the use of unsuitable carriages or harness, or horses imperfectly trained, the injured party is entitled to recover his damages in an action on the case against the culpahle party, unless the injury be in part attributable to his own neglect. Angell, Highw. & 345 et seq; 2 Taunt. 314; 1 Pick. Mass. 345; 11 East, 60; 15 Conn. 359 ; 5 Watts & S. Penn. 544; 5 Carr. & P. 379; 6 Cow. N.Y. 191; 19 Wend. N.Y. 399. HINDU LAW. The system of native law prevailing among the Gentoos, and administered by the government of British India.

In all the arrangementa for the administration of justice in India, made by the British government and the East India Company, the principle of raserving to the native inhabitanta the continuance of their own laws and usagea within certain limits has been uniformly recognized. The laws of the Hindus and Mohammedana have thus been brought into notice in England, and are occasionally referred to by writers on English and American law. The uative works upon theas subjects are very nameroua. The chief English republications of the Hindu law are, Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, London, 1801 ; Sir Wm. Jonea' Institutes of Hindu Law, London, 1797. For a fuller account of the Hindu Law, and of the original Digeata and Commentaries, see Morley'a Law of India, London, 1858, and Macnaghten's Principlea of Hindu and Mohammedan Law, London, 1860. The prineipal English republications of the Mohammedan Law are Hamilton's Hedaya, London, 1791; Baillie'a Digest, Calcutta, 1805; Précis de Jurisprudence maaulmane selon le Rite malikite, Paria, 1848 ; and the treatises on Succession and Inheritance translated by Sir William Janea. HIRE. A bailment in which compensation is to be given for the use of a thing, or for labor and services about it. 2 Kent, Comm. 456 ; Story, Bailm. & 359. The divisions of this species of contract are denoted by Latin names.

Locatio operis faciendi is the hire of labor and work to be done or care and attention to be bestowed on the goods let by the hirer, for a compensation.

Locatio operis mercium vehendarum is the hire of the carriage of goods from one place to another, for a compensation. Jones, Bailm. 85, 86, 90, 103, 118 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 456; La. Civ. Code, art. 1709-1711.

Locatio rei or locatio conductio rei is the bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation to be paid by him.

This contract arises from the principles of natural law: it is voluntary, and founded in consent; it involves mutual and reciprocal obligations; and it is for mutual benefit. In some respects it bears a strong resemblanee to the contract of sale; the principal difference hetween them being that in cases of sale the owner parts with the whole proprictary interest in the thing, and in cases of hire the owner parts with it only for a temporary use and purpose. In a sale, the thing itself is the object of the contract; in hiring, the use of the thing is its object. Vinnius, lib. 3, tit. 25, in pr.; Pothier, Louage, nn. 2-4; Jones, Bailm. 8G; Story, Bailm. & 371. See Bailment; Edwards, Jones, Story, Bailments; Parsons, Story, Contracts; 2 Kent, Comm. 456.

HIRER. He who hires. See Bailment.

HODGE-PODGE ACT. A name given to a legislative act which embraces many subjects. Suel aets, besides being evident proofs of the ignorance of the makers of them, or of their want of good faith, are ealculated to create a confusion which is highly prejudicial to the interests of justice. Instances of this wretched legislation are everywhere to be found. See Barrington, Stat. 449.

HOGHENHYNE (from Sax. hogh, house, and hine, servant). A domestic servant. Among the Saxons, a stranger guest was, the first night of his stay, called uncuth, or unknown; the second, gust, guest; the third, hoghenhyne; and the entertainer was responsible for his acts as for those of his own servant. Bracton, $124 b$; DuCange, Agenhine; Spolman. Gloss. Homehine.

HOGSHEAD. A liquid measure, containing half a pipe; the fourth part of a tun, or sixty-three gallons.
HOLD. A technical word in a deed introducing with "to have" the clause which expresses the tenure by which the grantee is to have the land. The clause which commences with these words is called the tenendum. See Tenendum; Habendum.

To decide, to adjudge, to decree: as, the court in that case held that the husband was not liable for the contract of the wife, made without his express or implied authority.

To bind under a contract: as, the obligor is held and firmly bound.

In the constitution of the United States it is provided that no person held to service or labor in one state under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on the claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due. See Fucitive Siave.

HOLD PLEAS. To hear or try causes. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 35, 298.

HOLDER. The holder of a bill of ex. change is the person who is legally in the possession of it, either by indorsement or delivery, or both, and entitled to receive payment either from the drawee or acceptor, and is considered as an assignee. 4 Dall. Penn. 53. And one who indorses a promissory note for collection, as an agent, will be considered the holder for the purpose of transmitting notices. 20 Johns. N. Y. 372; 2 Hall, N. Y. 112; 6 IIow. 248. See Bill of Exchange.

HOLDING OVER. The act of keeping possession by the tenant, without the consent of the landlord, of premises which the latter, or those under whom he claims, had leased to the former, after the term has expired.

When a proper notice has been given, this injury is remedied by ejectment, or, underlocal regulations, by summary proceedings. See 2 Yeates, Penn. 523; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 50, 486; 5 id. 174; 8 id. 459; 1 Binn. Pean. 334, n.; 5 id. 228; 4 Rawle, Penn. 123; Forcible Entry and Detainer.

HOLOGRAFO. In Spanish Law. Olographi. A term applicable to the paper, document, disposition, and more particularly to the last will of a person, which in order to HOLOGRAPE. What is written with one's own hand. See Olograpi.

HOLYDAY. A religious festival; a day set apart for commemorating some important event in history; a day of exemption from labor. Webster, Dict. (Webster applies holyday especially to a religious, holiday to a secular, festival.) For the English holydays see 22 Vict. c. 2 ; R. H. 6 Will.IV.; 5th, 6th, and 7th Orders, 8th May, 1845. They are either by act of legislation or by ancient usage; the principal now are Sundays, the day of the nativity of our Lord and the threc succeeding days, Monday and Tuesday in Easter week, Easter eve, and Good Friday, and such of the four following days as may not fall within the term, viz.: birthday and accession of sovereign, Whit Monday and Whit Tuesday. These by statute are to be allowed in commonlaw offices. Fasts and thanksgiving days are also occasionally appointed by the crown. See Wharton, Dict. 2 L Lond. ed.; 2 Burn, Ecel. Law, 308 et seq. In the United States the matter of holydays is generally regulated by statute. Sundays and the 4th of July, the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, are observed throughout the United States. A thanksgiving day and a fast day arc appointed each year by the governors of most of the states.

HOLY ORDERS. In Ecclesiastical Law. The arders or dignities of the church. Taose within holy orders are archbishops, bishops, priests, and deacons. The form of ordination must be according to the form in the book of Common Prayer. Besides these orders, the church of Rome had five others, viz: subdeacons, acolyths, exorcists, readers, and ostiaries. 2 Burn, Eecl. Law, 39, 40.

HOMAGE (anciently hominium, from homo). A mere acknowledgment of tenure made by a tenant by knight-service upon investiture, in the following form:
The tenant in fee or fee-taile that holds by homage shall kneel upon both his knees, nogirded, and the lord shall sit and hold both the hands of his tenant between his hands, and the tenant shall say, "I become your man (homo) from this day forward of life and member, of earthly honor, and to you shall be faitbful and true, and shall bear to you faith for the lanus that I claim to bold of you, saving that faith that I owo to our lord the king;" and then the lord so sitting shall kiss him. The kiss is indispensable (except sometimes in the case of a woman. DuCange). After this the oath of fealty is taken; but this may be taken by the steward, hounge only by the lord. Termes de la Ley. This specics of homage was called homagium planum or simplex, 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 367, to distinguish it from homngium ligium, or liege homage, which included fealty and the services incident. DuCange; Spelman, Gloss.

Liege homage was that homage in which allegiance was sworn without any reservation, and was, therefore, due only to the sovereign; and, as it came in time to be exacted without any actual holding from him, it sunk into th oath of allegiance. Termes de la Ley.

The obligation of homage is mutual, bin ing the lord to protection of the vassal, : well as the vassal to fidelity. Fleta, lib. c. 16.
homage ancestral. Homag was so called where time out of mind a ma and his ancestors had held by homage; and $i$ this case the lord who had received the $h$ mage was bound to acquit the tenant of a services to superior lords, and, if vouched, warrant his title. HOMICIDE (Lat. homo, a man, cede: to kill). The killing any human creatu 4 Blackstone, Comm. 177.
The killing of a man by a man. 1 Hawki Pl. Cr. c. 8, 8 2; 5 Cush. Mass. 303.

Excusable homicide is that which tal place under such circumstances of accident necessity that the party cannot strictly be si to have committed the act wilfully and int tionally, and whereby he is relieved from $t$ penalty annexed to the commission of a fe nious homicide.

Felonious homicide is that committed fully under such circumstances as to renc it punishable.

Justifiable homicide is that committed w full intent, but under such circumstances duty as to render the act one proper to be performed.

According to Blackstone, 4 Comm. 177, homicide is the killing of any human creature. This is the most extensive sense of this word, in which the intention is not considered. But in a more limited sepse, it is always understood that the killing is by human agency; and Hawkins defines it to be the killing of a man by a man. 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 8, s. 2. See Dalloz, Dict.; 5 Cush. Mass. 303. Homicide may perhaps be described to be the destruction of the life of one human being, either by himself or by the act, procurement, or culpable omission of anathor. When tho death has been intentionally caused by the deceased himself, the offender is called felo de se; when it is caused by another, it is justifiablo, exeusable, or felonious.

The distinction betwecn justifiable and excusable bomicide is that in the former the killing takes place vithout any manner of fault on the part of the slayer; in the latter there is some slight fault, or at any rate the absence of any duty rendering the act a proper one to be perfurmed, although the blume is so slight as not to render the party punishable. The distinction is very frequently disregarded, and would seem to he of little practical utility. See 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, $8 \% 538$ et scqBut between justifiable or excusable and felonious homicide the distinction, it will be evident, is of great importance. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 260, gives the following example: "If a person driving a carriage happen to kill another, if he saw or had timely notice of the mischicf likely to ensue, and yot wilfully drove on, it will be murder; if he might have seen the danger, but did not look before him, it will be manalaughter; but if the aceident happened in such a manner that no want of due care could Le imputed to the driver, it will be accidental death and excusahle homicide." Sce 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 176-204; Roseoe, Crim. Ev. 580.

There must be a person in actoal existence, 6 Carr.&P. 349 ; 7 id. 814,850 ; 9 id. 25 ; but the destruction of human life at any period after birth is homicide, however near it may be to extinction from any other cause. 2 Carr. & K. 784; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8582 . The person killed, to constitute the homicide felonions, must have been entitled to his existence. Thus, a soldier of the enemy in time of war has no right to his life, but may be killed. A criminal sentenced to be hung has no right to his life; but no person can take it but the authorized officer, in the prescribed manner. SeeMurder; Manslauginter; Self-Defence.

HOUSE OF LORDS. One of the constituent houses of the English parliament.

It is at present (1864) composed of thirty lords spiritual (bishops and archbishops) and four ${ }^{*}$ hundred and twenty-six lords temporal; but the number is liable to increase by fresh creation by the crown.

This body is the supreme court of judicature in the kingdom. It has no original jurisdiction, but is the court of appeal in the last resort, with a few exceptions and under some limitations as to the right, from the inferior courts upon appeal or writ of error for mistake of law. Appeals lie to this tribunal from Scotch and Irish courts, in some cases. See stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 85, as to Scotch, and stat. $39 & 40$ Geo. III. c. 67, art. 8, as to Irish, appeals.

This hody, when sitting as a court of law, is presided over by the lord chancellor, whose attendance alone is in any respect compulsory, and is composed of as many of its members who bave filled judicial ststions as choose to attend. Three laymen also attend in rotation, hat do not vote npon judicial matters. 11 Clark & F. Hou. L. 421. In the ahsence of the chancellor, deputy speakers, who were members of the profession hut not of the house, have been appointed. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 56.

It sits also to try impeachments. See Impeachment; High Codrt of Parliament; Parliament.

HOUSE OF REFUGE. A prison for juvenile delinquents.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
The name given to the more numerous branch of the federal congress, and of the legislatures of several of the states of the United States.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 2, \% 1, provides that the "house of representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states; and the electors of each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature," See the articles upon the various states. The constitution of the United States, however, requires no evidence of property in the representative, nor any declarations as to his religious belief. He must be free from undue bias or dependence, by not holding any office under the United States. Art. 1, s. 6, 2 2. The number is not to exceed one for every thirty thousand of the population; and a reapportionment among the states is made every tenth year.

HOUSE-BOTE. An allowance of necessary timber out of the landlord's woods for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. This belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life. House-bote is said to be of two kinds, estoveriam cedificandi et ardendi. Coke, Litt. 41.

HOUSEBREAKING. In Criminal Law. The breaking and entering the dwell-ing-house of another by night or by day, with intent to commit some felony within the same, whether such felonious intent is executed or not. Housebreaking by night is burglary.

This crime is of a local character, and the evidence respecting the place must correspond with the allegation in the indictment.

HOUSEHOLD. Those who dwell under the same roof, and constitute a family. Webst. But it is not necessary that they should be under a roof, or that the father of the family be with it, if the mother and children keep together so as to constitute a family. 18 Johns. N. Y. 402.

Belonging to the house and family; domestic. Webster, Dict.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. By this expression, in wills, all personal chattels will pass that may contribute to the use or convenience of the household or the ornament of the house: as, plate, linen, china, both usefuI and ornamental, and pictures. But goods or plate in the hands of testator in the way of his trade will not pass, nor books, nor wines. 1 Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 591, 596, notes; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 97 ; 2 Williams, Exec. Am. ed. 1017; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 329.

HOUS円HOLD GOODS. In wills. This expression will pass every thing of a permanent nature (that is, articles of household which are not consumed in their enjoyment) that were used or purchased, or otherwise acquired by the testator, for his house, but not goods in the way of his trade. Plate will pass by this term, but not articles of consumption found in the house, as malt, hops, or victuals, nor guns and pistols, if used in hunting or sport, and not for defence of house. A clock in the house, if not fixed to it, will pass. 1' Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 589; 1 Roper, Leg. 253.

HOUSEHOLD STUFF. Words sometimes used in a will. Plate will pass under the term, 2 Freem. Ch. 64, but not apparel, books, cattle, victuals, and choses in action, which do not fall within the natural meaning of the word, unless there be an intention manifest that they should pass. 15 Ves. Ch. 319. Goods, as seven hundred beds in possession of testator for purposes of trade, do not pass under utensils of "household stuff." 2 P. Will. Ch. 302. In general, "household stuff" will pass all articles which may be used for the convenience of the house. Swinburne, Wills, pt. 7, 8 10, p. 484.

HOUSEHOLDER. Master or chief of a family ; one who keeps house with his family. Webst. But a man who has absconded from the state, and left his wife and childron remaining together as a family, was for their benefit held to be a housebolder. 18 Johns. N. Y. 402.

A keeper of a tavern or boarding-house, or a master or mistress of a dwelling-house. 1 Supplem. to Rev. Stat. Mass. 1836-1853, Index, p. 170. A person having and providing for a household. The character is not lost by a temporary cessation from housekeeping. 14 Barb. N. Y. 456 ; 19 Wend. N. Y. 475.

HOUSEKEEPER. One who occupies a house.

A person who occupies every room in the house, under a lease, except one, which is reserved for his landlord, who pays all the taxes, is not a housekeeper. 1 Chitty, Bail. 502. Nor is a person a housekeeper who takes a house which he afterwards underlets to another, whom the landlord refuses to accept as his tenant: in this case the undertenant paid the taxes, and let to the tenant the first floor of the house, and the rent was paid for the whole house to the tenant, who paid it to the landlord. Id. note.

In order to make the party a housekeeper, he must be in actual possession of the house, 1 Chitty, Bail. 288, and must occupy a whole house. See 1 Barnew. & C. 178; 2 Term, 406 ; 3 Petersdorff, Abr. 103, note; 2 Mart. La. 313.

HOVEL. A place used by husbandmen to set their ploughs, carts, and other farmingutensils, out of the rain and sun. Law Lat. Dict. A shed; a cottage; a mean house.

HOYMAN. The master or captain of a hoy.

Hoymen are liable as common carriers. Story, Bailm. 8496.

HUDE-GELD. In Old English Law. A compensation for an assault (transgressio illata) upon a trespassing servant (servus). Supposed to be a mistake or misprint in Fleta for hinegeld. Fleta, lib. 1, e. 47, z 20 . Also, the price of one's skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping. DuCange.

HUE AND CRY. In Old English Law. A pursuit of one who had committed felony, by the highway.

The meaning of hue is said to be ehout, from the Saxon huer; but this word also means to foot, and it may be reasonably questioned whether the term may not be up foot ond cry, in other words, run and cry after the felon? We have a mention of hus and ory as early as Edward I.; and by the Statute of Winchester, 13 Edw. I., "immediately upon robberies and felonies committed, fresh suit shall be made from town to town, and county to county, by horsemen and footmen, to the seasids. The constable (the person being described, etc.) is to call upon the parishioners to assist him in the pursuit in his precinct; and to give notice to the next constable, who is to do the same as the first, etc. If the county will not answer the hodies of the offenders, the whole hundred shall be answerable for the robberies thore committed, etc." A person engaged in the hue and cry apprehending a felon was, on the felon's oonviction, entitled to forty pounds, on a certificate of the judge or justice before whom there was oonviction, as well as to the felon's horse, furniture, arms, money, and other goods taken with him, subject to the rights of other persons thersin. Wood, Inst. $370-373$. Sec 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 100.

HUEBRA. In Spanish Law. An acre of land, or as much as can be ploughed in a day by two oxen. 2 White, New Coll. 49.

HUISSIER. An usher of the court. An officer who serves process.

In France, an officer of this name performs many of the duties of an English sheriff or constable. In Canada, thers may be many huissiers in each county, whose sets are independent of each other, while there can be hut one sheriff, wh is presumed cognizant of the acts of bis subordinates. The French huissier certifise his process; the Canadian merely serves what is put into his bands.

HUNDRED. In English Law. A division of a county, which some make to have originally consisted of one hundred hides of land others of ten tithings, or one hundred free families.

It differed in size in different parts of England. 1 Stephen, Comm. 122. In many cases, when an offence is committed within a hundred, the inhabitants are liable to make good the damage if they do not produce the offender. See 12 East, 244.

This system was probably introduced by Alfred (though mentioned in the Ponitentir of Egbert, where it seems to be the addition of a later age), being borrowed from the continent, where it was known to the Franks, under the name centena, in the sixth century. See Charlemagne Capit. 1. 3, c. 10.

It had a court attached to it, called the hundred court, or hundred lagh, like a court baron, except in its larger territorial jurisdiction. It was governed by the hundredary (hundredarius). 9 Coke, 25. The jurisdiction of this court has devolved upon the county courts. Jacob, Law Dict.; DuCange. IIun-dred-penny was a tax collected from the hundred by its lord or by the sheriff. Ifundredsetena signified the dwellers in the hundred. Charta Edg. Reg. Mon. Angl. to. 1, p. 16.

HUNDRED COURT. An inferior court, whose jurisdiction extended to the whole territory embraced in a hundred. They were courts not of record; the freeholders were the judges; they were held before the steward of the manor as register; and they resembled courts baron in all respects except in their territorial jurisdiction. 3 Blackstone, Comm. $34,35$.

HUNDRED GEMOTE. An assembly among the Saxons of the freeholders of a hundred.

It met twelve times in the year, originally; though subsequently its meetings became less frequent.

It had an extensive jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, and was the predecessor of the county court and sheriff's tourn, and possessed very similar powers. Spelman, Gloss. Hundredum; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 7.

HUNDRED LAGH (Sax.). Liability to attend the hundred court. Spelman, Gloss. See Cowel ; Blount.

HUNDREDARY (hundredarius). The chief magistrate of a hundred. DuCange.

HONDREDORS. The inhabitants of a hundred, who, by several statutes, are held to be liable, in the cases therein specified, to make good the loss sustained by persons within the hundred by robbery or other violence, therein also specified. The principal of these statutes are 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 1, s. 4; 28 Edw. III. c. 11; 27 Eliz. c. 13 ; 29 Car. II. c. 7 ; 8 Geo. II. c. $16 ; 22$ Geo. II. c. 24.

Persons serving on juries, or fit to be empanelled thereon, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. 35 Hen . VIII. c. 6. And some such were necessarily on every panel till the $4 & 5$ Anne, c. 16. 4 Stephen, Comm. 370. Him that had the jurisdiction of the hundred. The bailiff of the hundred. Horne, Mirr. of Just. lib. 1 ; Jacob, Law Dict.

HUNGER. The desire to eat. Honger is no excuse for larceny. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 54 ; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 3I.

When a person has died, and it is suspected he has been atarved to death, an examination of his body ought to be made, to aseertain whether or not he died of hunger. The signs which usually attend death from hunger are the following. The body is much emaciated, and a fetid, acrid odor exhales from it, although death may have been very recent. The eyes are red and open,-whioh is not usual in cases of death from other causes. The tongue and throat are dry, even to aridity, and the stomach and inteatines are contracted and empty. The gall-bladder is pressed with bile, and this fluid is found scattered over the stomach and intestines, so as to tinge them very extensively. The lungs are withered; hut all the other organs are generally. in a licalthy state. The blood-vessels are usually empty. 2 Fodere, 276; 3 id. 231; 2 Beok, Med. Jur. 52. See Eunom. Dial. 2, $\frac{z}{8} 47$, pp. 142, 384, note.
HUNTING. The act of pursuing and taking widd animals; the chase.
2. The chase gives a kind of title by occupancy, by which the hunter acquires a right or property in the game which he captures. In the United States the right of hunting is universal, and limited only so far as to exclude hunters from committing injuries to private property or to the public: as, by shooting on public roads. See Fere Nature; Occupancy.

HURDLE. In English Law. A species of sledge, used to draw traitors to execution.

HUSBAND. A man who has a wife.
2. As to his obligations. He is bound to receive his wife at his home, and should furnish her with all the necessaries and conveniences which his fortune enables him to do, and which her situation requires; but this does not include such luxuries as, according to her fancy, she deems necessaries. See Cruelty. He is bound to love his wife, and to bear with her fanlts, and, if possible, by nild means to correct them; and he is required to fulfil towards her his marital promise of fidelity, and can, therefore, have no carnal connection with any other woman, without a violation of his obligations. As he is bound to govern his house properly, he is liable for its misgovernment, and he may be punished for keeping a disorderly house even where his wife had the principal agency, and he is liable for her torts, as for her slander or trespass. He is also liable for the wife's debts incurred before coverture, provided they are recovered from him during their joint lives, and, generally, for such as are contracted by her, after coverture, for necessaries, or by his authority, express or implied.

See Reeve, Dom. Rel.; Parsons, Story, Contr.; Hilliard, Torts.
3. Of his rights. Being the head of the family, the husband has a right to establish himself wherever he may please, and in this be cannot be controlled by bis wife; he may manage his affairs in his own way, buy and sell ali kinds of personal property, without her control, and he may buy any real estate he may deem proper, but, as the wife acquires a right in the latter, he cannot sell it, discharged of ber dower, except by ber consent, expressed in the manner prescribed by the laws of the state where such lands lie. At common law, all her personal property in possession is vested in him, and he may dispose of it as if he had acquired it by his own contract: this arises from the principle that they are considered one person in law, 2 Blackstone, Comm. 433; and he is entitled to all her property in action, provided he reduces it to possession during her life. Id. 434. He is also entitled to her chattels real, but these vest in him not absolutely, but sub modo: as, in the case of a lease for years, the husband is entitled to receive the rents and profits of it, and may, if he pleases, sell, surrender, or dispose of it during the coverture, and it is liable to be taken in execution for his debts; and, if he survives her, it is to all intents and purposes his own. In case his wife survives him, it is considered as if it bad never been transferred from her, and it belongs to her alone. In his wife's freehold estate he has a life estate during the joint lives of himself and wife ; and at common law, when he has a child by her who conld inherit, he has an estate by the curtesy. But the rights of a: husband over the wife's property are very much abridged in some of the United States, by statutes. See Married Woman.
4. One of the most striking differences between the law of Louisiana and of the other states of the Union, where the common law prevails, is with regard to the relation between husband and wife. By the common law, husband and wife are conaidered as one person, in the language of Blackstone: "The very being or legal existence of the woman is suspended during marriage, or, at least, is incorporated or consolidated into that of the hushand." By the law of Louisiana, no such consequences flow from marriage; the parties continue to be two distinct persons, whose rights of property are not necessarily affected by the relation in which they stand to each other. When the marriage is not preceded by a marriage contract, all the property, whether movable or immovable, which the parties hold, continues to belong to them, as their separate estate. But, so far as future acquisitions are concerned, the law creates a community of acquets or gains between the husband and wife during marriage; and the property thus acquired is called common property.
5. Although the wife acquires an equal intercst in the aequisitions made during the marriage, yet she cen exercise no oontrol in the administration or disposition of the common property. The busband is the bead and master of the community; he administers its effects, disposes of the revenues which they produce, and may alienate them by an onerous title, with out the consent and permission of his wife La. Civ. Code, art. 2373. But "he can make no conveyance inter vivos, hy s gratuitous title, of the immovables of the community, nor of the whole or of a quota of the movaibles, unless it be for the establishment of the children of the marriage." On the dissolution of the marriage, the wife (or her heirs) may renounce the community, and therehy exonerate herself from its dehts; hut if she accepts, she is entitled to one-half of the property and hecomes liable for one-half of the dehts. The community is composed, 1 , "of all of the revenues of the separate property of the hushand; 2 , of the revenues of the separate property of the wife, when she permits her hushand to administer it; 3, of the produce of their reciprooal industry and labor ; and, 4, of all property acquired by donations made jointly to the husband and wife, or by purchase, whether made in the name of the hushand or wife." But donations made to them separately are the separate property of the donee. By the marriage contract, the community may be mudifed or entirely excluded; in the latter case the parties hold their property and its revenues as aeparate and distinct as if they were strangers; and hoth are bound to contribute to the expense of the marriage, etc. The separate property of the wife is suhdivided into dotal and extra-dotal, or paraphernal. There can be no dotal property without a marriage contract; dotal property is inalienahle, or extra commercium, during the marriage, except io a few enumerated cases. The wife may sell her paraphernal property, with the consent of her husband; and in case the husband receives the proceeds of sich sales, the wife has a tacit or legal mortgage ons all the immovable property of the husband, to senure the payment of the money which bos thus come into his hands.
6. Although the wife does not lose her distinct and separate legal existence, nor her property, hy her marriage, yet she becomes subject to the marital authority: hence in the exercise of her legal rights she requires the authorization or consent of the husband; she, therefore, cannot appear in a oourt of justice, either as plaintiff or defendant, without the authority of her hushand; nor can she make contracts unless authorized hy him; but under certain circumstances she may be authorized to sue or enter into cootracts by a competent court, in opposition to the will of the hushand.

One of the most important rules for the protection of the wife is that "she cannot, whether separated in property hy contract or by judgment, or not separated, bind herself for her husband, nor conjointly with him, for debts contracted by him before or during the marriage." The Senatus Consultum Vellicanum is the original fountain of the legislation of Louisiana on this suhject, and it applied to all contracts and engagements whatever; and her courts have always held that, no matter in winat form a transaction might he attempted to be disguised, the wife is not hound by any promise or engagement made jointly and severally with her husband, unless the creditor can show that the consideration of the contract was for her separate sdvantage, and not something whioh the husband was hound to furnish her. 9 La. 603 ; 7 Mart. La. N. s. 66.

All contracts entered into during the marriage must be considered as made hy the hushand and for his advantage, whether made in his own name or in the names of both husbend and wife. This presumption ean only be destroyed hy positive proof that the consideration of the contract inured to the soparate advantage of the wife. The acknowledgment made by the wife in the instrument itself cannot avail the creditor. 5 La. Ann. 586. But see 6 How. 228.

EUSBRECE. Housebreaking; burglary.
FIUSTINGS. In English Law. The name of a court held before the lord mayor and aldermen of London: it is the principal and supreme court of the city. See Coke, 2d Inst. 327 ; St. Armand, Hist. Essay on the Legisl. Power of England, 75.

The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

The term is used in Canadian as well as English law. The manner of conducting an election in Canada and England for a member of the legislative body is substantially as follows. Upon warrant from the proper officer, 2 writ issues from the clerk of the crown in chancery, direoted to the sheriff, registrar, or other returning officer of the eleotoral division. He thereupon iasues and posts in puhlic places a proclamation oppointing a dny, place, and hour for his holding an election, and also fixing aday when a poll will be opened, if one he demonded and granted. The first day is called nomination-day. On this day he proceeds to the hustings, which must be in the open air and accessible to all the voters, proclaims the purpose of the election, and calls upon the electors present to name the person they require to represent them. The electors then make ashow of hands, which may result in an cleotion, or a poll may be demanded by a candidate or hy any elector. On such demand, a poll is opened in each township, ward, or parish of the election district, at the places preseribed by atatute.

EYPDRMETER. An instrument for measuring the density of fluids: being immersed in fluids, as in water, brine, beer, brandy, etc., it determines the proportion of their density, or their specific gravity, and thence their quality. See Act of Congr. Jan. 12, 1825, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1976.

HYPOBOLUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of the bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, at his death above her dowry. Tech. Dict.

HYPOTEECATION. A right which a creditor has over a thing belonging to another, and which consists in a power to cause it to be sold, in order to be paid his claim out of the proceeds.

There are two species of bypothecation, one called pledge, pignus, nod the other properly denominated hypothecation. Pledge is that species of hypothecation which is contracted by the deli. very by the debtor to the creditor of the thing hypothecated. Hypothecation, properly so called, is that which is contracted without delivery of the thing hypothecated. 2 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 25.

In the common law, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law, that is, of a pledge of a chattel without possession hy the pledgee, are scarcely to be found; cases of hottomry bonds and claims for seamen's wages against ships are the nearest approach to it; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hypothecations. Story, Bailm. \% 288. It seems that chattels not in exiatence, though they cannot be pledged, can be hypotheosted, so that the lien will attach as soon as the chattel has heen produced. 14 Pick. Mass. 497.

Conventional hypothecations are those which arise by agreement of the parties. Dig. 20. 1. 5.

General hypothecations are those by which the debtor hypothecates to his creditor all his estate which he has or may have.

Legal hypothecations are those which arise without any contract therefor between the parties, express or implied.

Special hypothecations are hypothecations of a particular estate.

Tacit hypothecations are such as the law gives in certain cases, without the consent of the parties, to secure the creditor. They are a species of legal hypothecation.

Thus, the public treasury has'a lien over the property of public debtors. Code, 8. 15.1. The landlord has a lien on the goods in the house leased, for the payment of his rent. Dig. 20. 2. 2; Code, 8. 15.7. The builder has a lien, for his bill, on the house he has built. Dig. 20. 1. The pupil has a lien on the property of the guardian for the balance of his account. Dig. 46. 6. 22 ; Code, 5. 37. 20. There is hypothecation of the goods of a testator for the security of the legacy. Code, 6. 43.1 .

See, generally, Pothier, de l'Hyp.; Pothier, Mar. Contr. Cushing ed. 145, n. 26; Merlin, Répert.; 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 195; Abbott, Shipping; Parsons, Mar. Law.

HYPOTHEQUE. In French Law. Hypothecation; the right acquired by the creditor over the immovable property which has been assigned to him by his debtor as security for his debt, although he be not placed in possession of it.

I.

I. O. U. In Common Law. A memorandum of debt in use among merchants. It is not a promissory note, as it contains no direct promise to pay. See 4 Carr. & P. 324 ; 1 Mann. & G. 46; 1 C. B. 543 ; 1 Esp. 426 ; Parsons, Bills & Notes.

IBIDEM (Lat.). The same. The same book or place. The same subject. See Asbrfviations, Ib., Id.

ICTUS ORBIS (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin.

When the skin is cut, the injury is called a wound. Bracton, lib. 2, tr. 2, c. 5 and 24.

Ictue is often used by medical authors in the sense of percussus. It is applied to the pulsation of the arteries, to any external lesion of the hody produced hy violence; also, to the wound inflicted by a scorpion or renomous reptile. Orbis is used in the sense of circle, circuit, rotundity. It is applicd, also, to the eyeballs: oculi dicuntur orbes. Castelli, Lex. Med.

IDEM SONANS (Lat.). Sounding the same.

In pleadings, when a name which it is material to state is wrongly spelled, yet if it be idem sonons with that proved, it is sufficient: as, Segrave for Seagrave, 2 Strange, 889 ; Whynyard for Winyard, Russ. & R. 412; Benedetto for Beneditto, 2 Taunt. 401 ; Keen for Keene, Thach. Crim. Cas. Mass. 67 ; Deadema for Diadema, 2 Ired. No. C. 346 ; Hutson for Hudson, 7 Miss. 142; Coonrad for Conrad, 8 Miss. 291. Whether or not the names are idem sonantia is for the jury. 2 Den. Crim. Cas. 231. See 5 Ark. 72; 6 Ala. n. s. 679 . See, also, Russ. & R. Crim. Cas. 412; 2 Taunt. 401. IDENTITATE NOMINIS (Lat.). In English Law. The name of a writ which lies for a person taken upon a capias or exigent, and committed to prison, for another man of the same name: this writ directs the sheriff to inquire whether he be the person against whom the action was brought, and if not, then to discharge him. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 267. In practice, a party in this conditión would be relieved by habeas corpus.

IDENTITY. Sameness. In cases of larceny, trover, and replevin, the things in question must be identified. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 396. So, too, the identity of articles taken or injured must be proved in all indictments where taking property is the gist of the offence, and in actions of tort for damage to specific property. Many other cases occur in which identity must be proved in regard either to persons or things. The question is sometimes one of great practical difficulty, as in case of the death of strangers, reappearance after a long absence, and the like. See Ryan, Med. Jur. 301 ; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. $509 ; 1$ Hall, Am. Law Jour. 70; 6 Carr. & P. 677 ; 1 Crompt. & M. Exch. 730 ; 1 Hagg. Cons. 189 ; Shelford, Marr. & D. 226 ; Best, Pres. App. Case 4 ; Wills, Circ. Ev. 143 et seq.

IDES (Lat.). In Civil Law. A day in the month from which the computation of days was made.
The divisions of months adopted among the Romans were as follows. The calends occurred on the first day of every month, and were distinguished by adding the name of the month: as, calendis Jannariz, the first of January. The nones occurred on the fifth of each month, with the exception of March, July, Octoker, and May, in which months they occurred on the seventh. The ides occurred always on the ninth day after the nones, thus dividing the month equally. In fact, the ides would seem to have been the rrimal division, occurring in the middle of the month, nearly. Other days than the three designated were indicated by the number of days which would elapse before the next sucoeedjng point of division. Thus, the second of April is the quarto nonas Aprilis; the secend of March, the sexto nonas Martii; the eighth of March, octavius idus Martii; the eighth of April, sextus idue Aprilis; the aixteenth of Maroh, decimus septimus calendis Aprilis.

This syatem is still used in some chanoeries in Europe; and we therefore give the following Table of the Calends, Nones, and Ides.

IDIOCHIRA (from Gr. idoos, private, and $x^{z} t \rho$, hand). In Civil Law. An instrument privately executed, as distinguished from one publicly executed. Vicat, Voc. Jur.
IDIOCY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of insanity, resulting either from congenital defect, or some obstacle to the development of the faculties in infancy.
2. It always implies some defect or disease of the brain, which is generally smaller than the tandard size and irregular in ita ahape and proportiona. Occasionally the head is unnaturally large, heing distended by water. The senses are very imperfect at heat, and one or mere are often entirely wantiog. None can articulate more than n few worda; while many utter only cries or muttered sounds. Some make known their wants by signs or sounds which are intolligible to those who have charge of them. The head, the features, the exprcssion, the movementa,- all convey the idea of extreme mental deficiency. The reflective faculties are entirely wanting, wherehy they are utterly incapable of any effert of reasoning. The perceptive faculties exist in a very limited degrie, and hence they are rendered capathle of being improved nomewhat hy eduoation, and redeemed, in aome measure, from their brutish condition. They have been Ied into hahits of propriety and decency, have been taught some of the elements of learning, and have learned some of the coaraer industrial ocoupatiens. The moral sentiments, euoh as self-esteem, love of approhation, veneration, benevolence, are not unfrequently manifested; while some propen-

[^3]sities, suoh as cunning, destructiveness, sexual impulae, are particularly active.
3. In some parts of Europe a form of idiocy prevails endemically, called cretinism. It is associated with disease or defective development of other organs besides the head. Cretins are short in atature, their limbs are attenuated, the belly tumid, and the neck thick. The muscular aystem ia feeble, and their voluntary movements restrained and $\mu \mathrm{n}$ decided. The power of language is very imperfect, if not entirely wanting. In the least degraded forms of this disease, the perceptive powers may be aomewhat developed, and the individual may evince some talent at music or construction. In Switzerland they make parta of watchea. Unlike idiocy, cretinism ia not congenital, but is gradually developed in the early years of childhood. It is owing chiefly to atmospherical causes, and is transmitted from one generation to another.
4. Both idiocy and cretiniam exhibit various degrees of mental deficiecoy, hut they never approximate to any description of men suppesed to be rational, nor can auy omount of education efface the chasm which separates them from their better-endowed fellow-men. The older law-writers, whose ohservation of mental manifestations was net very profound, thought it neceasary to have some test of idiocy; and accordingly, Fitzherbert saya, if he have sufficient understanding to know and understand his letters, and to read by teaching or information, he is not an idiot. Natura Brevium, 583. Agrain, he says, a man is not an idiot if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters. The inference was, no douht, that such a man ia reaponsible for his criminal acta. At the present day, auch an idea would not be entertained for a nooment, nor are we aware of any case on record of an idiot suffering capital puniahment. Of course, they are totally incapable of any civil acts; but in this country-in some of the states, at least-they would not be deharred from exercising the right of suffrage. See Insanity.

IDIOT. A person who has been without understanding from his nativity, and whom the law, therefore, presumes never likely to attain any. Shelford, Lun. 2.
2. It is an imbecility or sterility of mind, and not a perversion of the understanding. Chitty, Med. Jur. 327, note s, 345; 1 Russell, Crimes, 6; Bacon, Abr. Idiot (A); Brooke, Abr.; Coke, Litt. 246, 247; 3 Mod. 44; 1 Vern. Ch. 16 ; 4 Coke, 126; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 302. When a man cannot count or number twenty, nor tell his father's or mother's name, nor how old he is, having been frequently told of it, it is a fair presumption that he is devoid of understanding. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. $£ 33$. See 1 Dow, Parl. Cas. N. s. 392; 3 Bligh, n. s. 1 . Persons born deaf, dumb, and blind are presumed to be idiots; for, the senses being the only inlets of knowledge, and thesc, the most important of them, being closed, all ideas and associations belonging to them are totally excluded from their minds. Coke, Litt. 42 ; Shelford, Lun. 3. But this is a mere presumption, which, like most others, may be rebutted ; and doubtless a person born deaf, dumb, and blind, who could be taught to read and write, would not be considered an idiot. A remarkable instance of such a one may be found in the person of Laura Bridgman, who has been taught how to converse, and even to write.

This young woman was, in the year 1848, at school at South Buston. See Locke, Hum. Und. b. 2, c. 11, 88 12, 13 ; Ayliffe, Pand. 234; 4 Comyns, Dig. 610 ; 8 id. 644.
3. Idiots are incapable of committing crimes, or entering into contracts. They cannot, of course, make a will ; but they may acquire property by descent.

IDIOTA INQUIRENDO, WRIT DE.
This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to inquire whether a man be au idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 232.

IDONEUS (Lat.). Sufficient; fit; adequate. IIe is said to be idoneus homo who hath these three things, honesty, knowledge, and civility ; and if an officer, etc. be not idoneus, he may be discharged. 8 Coke, 41. If a clerk presented to a living is not persona idonea, which includes ability in learning, honesty of conversation, etc., the bishop may refuse him. And to a quare impedit brought thereon, "in literaturâ minus sufficiens is a good plea, without setting forth the particular kind of learning." 5 Coke, $58 ; 6$ id. 49 b ; Coke, 2d Inst. 631; 3 Lev. 311 ; 1 Show. 88 ; Wood, Inst. 32, 33 .

So of things : idonea quantitas, Calvinus, Lex. ; idonea paries, a wall sufficient or able to bear the weight.

In Civil Law. Rich; solvent: e.g. idoneus tutor, idoneus debitor. Calvinus, Lex.

IGNIS JUDICIUM (Lat.). In Old English Law. The judicial trial by fire.

IGNOMINY. Public disgrace; infamy; reproach; dishonor. Ignominy is the opposite of esteem. Wolff, 8145.

IGNORAMUS (Lat. we are ignorant or uninformed). In Practice. The word which is written on a bill by a grand jury when they find that there is not sufficient evidence to authorize their finding it a true bill. Sometimes, instead of using this word, the grand jury indorse on the bill, Not found. 4 Blackstone, Conim. 305.

IGNORANCE. The lack of knowledge.

2. Ignorance is distinguishable from error. Ignorance is want of knowledge; error is the non-conformity or opposition of ideas to the truth. Considered as a motive of actions, ignorance differs but little from error. They are generally found together, and what is said of one is said of both.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties that it induces them to act in the business. For example, if A should sell his horse to B, and at the time of the sale the horse was dead, unknown to the parties, the fact of the death would render the sale void. Pothier, Vente, nn. 3, 4; 2 Kent, Comm. 367.
3. Ignorance of fact is the want of knowledge as to the fact in question. It would be an error resulting from ignorance of fact, if a man believed a certain woman to be unmarried and free, when, in fact, she was a married woman; and were he to marry her under that belief, he would not be criminally responsible. 6 All. Mass. 591. Ignorance of the laws of a foreign government, or of another state, is ignorance of fact. 9 Pick. Mass. 112. See, for the difference between ignorance of law and ignorance of fact, 9 Pick. Mass. 112; Clef des Lois Rom. Fait; Dig. 22. 6. 7; Maxims, Ignorantia facti.

Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be overcome by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power: as, the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated.
4. Ignorance of law consists in the want of knowledge of those laws which it is our duty to understand, and which every man is presumed to know. The law forbids any one to marry a woman whose husband is living. If any man, then, imagined he could marry such a woman, he would be ignorant of the law; and if he married her he would commit an error as to a matter of law. How far a party is bound to fulfil a promise to pay, upon a supposed liability, and in ignorance of the law, see 12 East, 38 ; 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 263 ; 5 Taunt. 143; 3 Barnew. & C. 280; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 512, $516 ; 6$ id. $166 ; 9$ Cow. N. Y. 674; 4 Mass. 342; 7 id. 452, 488 ; 9 Pick. Mass. 112; 1 Binn. Penn. 27. And whether he can be relieved from a contract entered into in ignorance or mistake of the law, 1 Atk. Ch. 591; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 23, 30; 1 Chanc. Cas. 84; 2 Vern. Ch. 243; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 512 ; 2 id. 51 ; 6 id. 169 ; 1 Pet. 1; 8 Wheat. 174; 2 Mas. C. C. 244, 342 ; Mistake.
5. Non-essential or accidental ignorance is that which bas not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract: as, if a man should marry a woman whom he believed to be rich, and she proved to be poor, this fact would not be essential, and the marriage would therefore be good.

Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated: a neglect to become acquainted with them is, therefore, voluntary ignorance. Doctor & Stud. 1, 46 ; Plowd. 343.

IGNORE. To be ignorant of. Webster, Dict. To pass over as if not in existence. A grand jury are said to ignore a bill when they do not find the evidence such as to induce them to make a presentment. Brande.

ILL FAME. A technical expression, which not only means bad character as generally understood, but applies to every person, whatever may be his conduct and character in life, who visits bawdy-houses, gaminghouses, and other places which are of ill fame. 1 Rog. N. Y. 67; 2 Hill, N. Y. 558; 17 Pick. Mass. 80; Ayliffe, Par. 276; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 720, 767 ; 1 Hagg. Cons. 302; 2 id. 24; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 844.

ILLEGAL. Contrary to law; unlawful.
illegitimate. That which is contrary to law : it is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock.
illeviable. A debt or duty that cannot or ought not to be levied. Nihil set upon a debt is a mark for illeviable.

ILLICIT. What is unlawful; what is forbidden by the law.
This word is frequently used in policies of insurance, where the assured warrants against illicit trade. By illicit trade is understood that "which is made unlawful by the laws of the country to which the object is bound." The assured, having entered into this warranty, is required to do no act which will expose the vessel to be legally condemned. 2 La. 337, 338. See Insurance; Warbanty.

ILLICITE. Unlawfully.

This word has a technical meaning, and is requisite in an indictment where the act charged is unlawful: as, in the case of a riot. 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 25, 896.
ILLINOIS. One of the new states of the United States.
2. Civil government wss organized under the jurisdiction of the United States, by the ordiannce of the Continental congress, in 1787, being part of the Northwestern territory. In 1800 that territory was divided, end a territorial government wes created in the Indiana territory, including this country. In 1809 the territory of Illinois was created, and continued under the same ordipance and the laws of the Indiana territory. For a fuller statement of the territorial history, see OHIO.
In 1818 Illinois formed a constitution, and was admitted into the Uaion on an equal footing with the original states, with the following boundaries, viz.: By the Ohio and Wabash rivers, from the mouth of the former to a point on the northwest bank of the latter where a line due north of Vincennes would strike said bank; thence north to the northwest corner of the state of Indisan; thence east with the line of said etate to the middle of lake Michigan ; thence north to latitude $42^{\circ} 30^{\prime}$; thence west to the middle of the Mississippi river; thence down the middle of the stream to the mouth of the Ohio, with jurisdiction on the Ohio, Wabash, and Mississippi rivers with ceterminous statee. The state was admitted into the Union in 1818. In 1847 a convention met and formed a new constitution, which went into operation April 1, 1848.
Every white male citizen twenty-one yeare of age, resident one year next before any eleotion, and every white male inhahitant of the same age, resident in the state March 6, 1848, has a right to vote in the distriot in which he lives. Soldiers, seamen, and marines atationed in the atate are not included in the above enumeration of citizens; and the general assembly may by law exclude persons convicted of infamous crimes. No person is eligible to any office, civil or military, who is not a citizen of the United States, and who has not been one year a resident of the atate. All votes must be hy ballot. 3 Ill. 414.

The Legislative Power.

3. This is exercised by a senste and house of representatives, which together constitute the general aseembly.
The Senate is composed of twenty-five members, elected by the people of the districts for the term of four yeare. A eenator must be thirty yeara of age or more, a citizen of the United Statee, have been five yeare an inhabitant of the state, and one year of the county or district in which he is chosen, immediately preceding his election, if such county or district has been so long erected; hut if not, then within the limite of the county or counties, district or districts, out of which the same was taken, unless he has been absent on the public business of the United States, or of this state, and must have paid a state or county tax.
The senstore, st the firet session, were divided into two clansee, so that one-half are elected every two уeare.
The House of Representatives originally consisted of seventy-five members, with the provieion that whon the population of the state amounted to ane million, five members should be added to the hcuse, and five additional members for every five hundred thousand inhabitants thereafter, until the whole number of representatives should amount to one hundred; after which the number should neither be increased nor diminished ; to be apportioned among the several counties according to the number of white inhabitants. The members are elected biennially, by the people, for the term of two years. Where several counties are thrown into ode repregentative district, all the representatives for the district are to be elected on one ticket. A ropresentative must have attained the age of twenty-five years; be a eitizen of the United States, and have beca three years an inhabitant of the stste; have resided within the limits of the county or district in which he ehall be chosen twelve monthe next preceding his election, if such county or district hes been so long erected; but if not, theo within the limits of the oounty or counties, district or districts, out of which the same has been taken, unless ahsent on public business of the United States or of this state; and must, moreover, have paid a state or county tax.
4. The general sssembly holde biennial eessione, commencing on the first Monday in January.
The general assembly caunot grant divorces, authorize lotteries, revive any old bank-charter, pass a private or special law for the asle of land helonging to individuals, nor contract a debt exceeding fifty thousadd dollars to meet casual deficite or failures in revenue; the moneys so horrowed shall be applied to the purpuses for which they were obtained, or for repelling invasion, suppressing insurrection, or defending the state in war, for which the faith of the state shall be pledged. Lawe for contraoting any other debt must oontain a provision to levy a tax, unless provided for by some other law, for the payment of the annusl interest on such losn, and both laws shall be submitted to e vote of the people, and passed at the poils by a majority of those voting, after publishing the same three monthe, and shall be irrepealable.

The Executive Power:

5. The Governor is elected by the people on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, every fourth year, from 1848, tor the term of four years from the guccceding first of January. He must be a oitizen uf the United States, have attained the age of thirty-five years, and have been ten years a resident of the state and fourtcen years a citizen of the United States. He may give information and recommend measures to the legislature, grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, except in cases of trcason acd impeaehment,--but in there cares he may suapend exeoution of the sentence until the meeting of the legislature,-require infermation from the officers of the executive department, and take care that the laws be fuithfully executed, on extraordiaary ocoasions, convene the general assembly by proclamation, be commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the state, except when they shall be ealled into the service of the United States, nominate and, by and with the consent and advice of the senate, appoint all officers whose offiees are established by the constitution, or which may be created by law, and whose appointments are not otherwise provided for, and, in case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, adjourn the general assembly to such time as he thinks proper, provided it be not to a period beyond the constitutional meeting of the same. He has also the veto power.

A Lieutenant-Governor is chosen at the same time and for the same term as the governor. He is speakor of the senate by virtue of his office, may debate and vote in committee of the whole, give a casting vote at all times, and if the office of governor becomes vacant he becomes governor. He also cxercises the duties of this office in case of temporary vacancy. The senate have power to elect a speaker pro tempore, who in like manner fille the office of speaker of the senate and lieutenant-governor, or of governor, in cases of vacancies by both the others.

The Judiciary Power.

6. The supreme court consists of three judges, eleeted by the people for a term of nine years, one in each of the three districts into which the state is divided for the purposes of this court. One term of the court is held annually in each division. The judges must be citizens of the United States, have resided in the state five years previous to their respective elections, and two years next preceding their election in the division, oircuit, or county in which they are respectively elected, and not he less than thirty-five years of age at the time of their election. A judge is elected every third year in some one of the districts. Two judges constitute a quorum, and the oldest judge in commission is ohief justice. The jurisdiction is appellate, except in case of writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, cases relating to the revenue, and a few others where original jurisdiction is given.

Circuit Courts.-At present (1864) the state is divided into twenty-eight circuits, for each of which a judge is elected by the qualified voters of the circuit to hold office for six years. Each judge holds two terms or more of court, in the district for whioh he is elected, each year. They must have the same qualifications as the jndges of the supreme court, except that they are eligible at thirty years of age. These courts have original jurisdiction in all cases in law or in equity, and appellate juriadiction from all inferior courts.

A county court is held in each connty, consisting of one judge, elected by the people for the term of four years. Its jurisdiction extends to all probate and such other juriadiction as the general assembly may confer in civil cases, and in such criminal eases as may be preserihed by law, where the punishment is by fine only, not exceeding one hnodred dollars. The county judge, with such justices of the peace in each ceunty as may be designated by law for the traneaction of county businees, to perform such other duty as the general assembly presoribes.

The general assembly may require that two justices, to be chusen by the qualified electors of each county, shall ait with the county judge in all cases. A clerk of the cuunty court is elected quadrennially in each county, whe is ex-opficio recorder. The general assembly may, by law, make the clerk of the circuit court ex-officio recorder in lieu of the county clerk.

Justices of the peace are to be elected in sufficient number in such districts as the gencral assembly may direct, by the qualified electors thereof, for the terrn of four years, and until their successors shall have been clected and qualified.

Jurisprudence.

7. In 1807 the Indiana territory passed an act adopting the common law of England, all statutes or acts of the British parliament made in aid of the common law prior to the fuorth ycar of the reign of King James the First, excepting stat. 43 Eliz. c. 6, sec. 2, 13 Eliz. c. 8, and 37 Hen. VIII. c. 9, and which are of a general nature and not local to that kingdom. This statute was adupted hy the Illioois territory, and remains in full force in tho state, and the oommon law and general statutes of England as adopted are still in force, except so far as modified or repealed since; and all the judicial decisions in the state are to be understood as made under this system of jurisprudeace. 13 Ill. 609.

A homeetead is exempted from forced sale to the amount of one thousand dellara in value. See 21 III. 40, 178.
illiterate. Unacquainted with letters.
2. When an ignorant man, unable to read, signs a deed or agreement, or makes his mark instead of a signature, and he alleges, and can prove, that it was falsely read to him, he is not bound by it, in consequence of the fraud. And the same effect would result if the deed or agreement were falsely read to a blind man who could have read before he lost his sight, or to a foreigner who did not understand the language. For a plea of "laymen and unlettered," see 4 Rawle, Penn. 85, 94, 95.
3. To induce an illiterate man, by false representations and false reading, to sign a note for a greater amount than that agreed on, is indictable as a cheat. 1 Yerg. Tenn. 76. See, geverally, 2 Nelson, Abr. 946 ; 2 Coke, 3 ; ll id. 28; F. Moure, 148.

ILLUSION. A species of mania, in which the sensibility of the nervons system is altered, excited, weakened, or perverted.

The patient is deceived by the false apparance of things, and his reason is not aufficiently active and powerful to correct the errer ; and this last particular is what distiaguishes the sane frem the insane. Illusions are. net unfrequeat in a state of health, but reasen corrects the errers and diesipates them. A square tower seen from a distance may appear round, but on approaching it the error ia cerrected. A distant mountaia may be taken for a eloud, but as we appreach we discover the truth. Te a persoe in the cabin of a vessel under sail, the obere appears to meve; but reflection and a closer examination sooo destrey this illusion. An insane individual is mistakea oa the qualities, connections, and causes of the impressioss he actually receives, and he forms wrong judgments as te his internal and external sensations; aod his ressen does not oorrect the error. 1 Beok, Med. Jur. 538 ; Esquirol, Maladies Mentales, prém. partie, iii., teme 1, p. 202; Dict. des Sciences Médicales, Hallucination, teme 20, p. 64. See Hallucination.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT. Such an appointment or disposition of property under a power as is merely nominal and not substantial.
2. Illusory appointments are void in equity, Sugden, Pow. 489 ; 1 Vern. Ch. 67; 1 Term, 438, note ; 4 Ves. Ch. 785; 16 id. 26 ; 1 Taunt, 289, but not at law. And see, also, 4 Kent, Comm. 342; 5 Fla. 52; 2 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 164.

IMAGINE. In English Law. In cases of treason the law makes it a crime to imagine the death of the king. In order to complete the offence there must, however, be an overt act,-the terms compassing and imagining being synonymous. It has been justly remarked that the words to compass and imar gine are too vague for a statute whose penalty affects the life of a subject. Barrington, Stat. 243. See Fiction.

IMBECILITY: In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of insanity consisting in mental deficiency, either congenital or resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.
2. Generally, it is manifested beth in the intellectual and moral facultive; bat occasionally it is limited to the latter, the former being but little, if at all, below the erdinary atandard. Hence it is dietinguiahed into intellectual and meral. In the fermer there are seldem any of the repulaive features of idiocy, the head, face, limbs, movemeats, being scarcely distinguishable, at first sight, from those of the race at large. The senses are not maoifestly deficient, nor the pewer of articulation; theugh the use of language may be very limited. The percep. tive faculties exhibit some activity; and thus the mere ohvious qualities of things are observed and remembered. Simple industrial operations are well performed, and, generally, whatever requires but little intelligence is readily accomplished. Ocoasieoally a solitary faculty is prominently, even wenderfully, developed,-the person excelling, for instance, in muaic, in arithmetical calculations, or mechanical skill, far beyond the ordinary measure. For any process of reasonicg, or any general obsexvation or abstract ideas, imbeciles are tetally incompeteat. Of law, justice, morality, property, they have but a very imperfect netion. Some of the affective faculties are usually active, particularly these which lead to evil habits, thieviog, iaceadia. rism, drunkeaness, hemicide, assaults on womea.
The kind of mental defect here mentioned is universal in imbecility, but it exists in different degrees in different individuals, some being hardly distinguishable, at first sight, from ordinary mes of feeble eadewments, while ethers encreach upen the line which separates them frem idiecy.
3. The various grades of imbecility, however interesting in a philosophical point of view, are not very closely considered by courts. They are governed in criminal cases solely by their tests of responsibility, and in civil cases by the amount of capacity, in connection with the act in question, or the abstract question of soundness or unsoundness.
4. Touching the question of responsibility, the law makes no distinction between imbe cility and insanity. See 1 Carr. & K. 129.

In civil cases, the effect of imbecility is differently estimated. In cases involving the validity of the contracts of imbecile persons, courts have declined to gauge the measure of their intellects, the only question with them being one of soundness or unsoundness, and " no distinction being made between important and common affairs, large or small property." 4 Dane, Abr. 561. See 4 Cow. N Y. 207. Courts of equity, also. have declined to invalidate the contracts of imbeciles, except on the ground of fraud. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. $\delta^{2} 238$. Of late years, however, courts have been governed by other considerations. If the contract were for necessaries, or showed no mark of fraud or unfair advantage, or if the other party, acting in good faith and ignorant of the other's mental infirmity, cannot be putinto statu quo, the contract has been held to be valid. Chitty, Contr. 112; Story, Contr. 827 ; 4 Exch. 17.
5. The same principles have governed the courts in cases involving the validity of the marriage contract. If suitable to the condition and circumstances of the party, and manifestly tending to his benefit, it has been confirmed, notwithstanding a considerable degree of incompetency. If, on the other hand, it has been procured by improper iufluences, manifestly for the advantage of the other party, it has been invalidated. 1 Hagg. 355 ; Ray, Med. Jur. 100. The law has always showed more favor to the wills of imbeciles than to their contracts. "If a man be of a mean understanding, neither of the wise sort nor of the foolish, but indifferent, as it were, betwixt a wise man and a fool,-yea, though he rather incline to the foolish sort, so that for his dull capacity he might worthily be called grossum caput, a dull pate, or a dunce,-such a one is not prohibited to make a testament." Swinburne, Wills, part 2, s. 4. Whether the testament be established or not, depends upon the circumstances of the case; and the English ecclesiastical courts have always assumed a great deal of liberty in their construction of these circumstances. The general principle is that if the will exhibits a wise and prudent disposition of property, and is unquestionably the will of the testator, and not another's, it should be established, in the face of no inconsiderable deficiency. 1 Hagg. 384. Very different views prevailed in a celebrated case in New York. 26 Wend. N. Y. 256. The mental capacity must be equal to the act; and if that fact be established, and no unfair advantage have been taken of the mental deficiency, the will, the marriage. the contract, or whatever it may be, is held to be palid.
6. The term moral imbecility is applied to a class of persons who, withoutany considerable, or even appreciable, deficiency of intellect, seem to have never been endowed with the higher moral sentiments. They are unable to appreciate fully the distinctions of right and wrong, and, according to their several opportunities and tastes, they indulge in mischief as if by an instinct of their nature. To vice and crime they have an irresistible proclivity, though able to discourse on the beauties of virtue and the claims of moral obligation. While young, many of them manifest a cruel and quarrelsome disposition, which leads them to torture brutes and bully their companions. They set all law and admonition at defiance, and become a pest and a terror to the neighborhood. It is worthy of notice, because the fact throws much light on the nature of this condition, that a very large proportion of this class of persons labor under some organic defect. They are scrofulous, rickety, or epileptic, or, if not obviously suffering from these diseases themselves, they are born of parents who did. Their progenitore may have been insane, or eccentric, or highly nervous, and this morbid peculiarity has become, unquestionably, by hereditary transmission, the efficient cause of the moral defect under consideration. Thus lamentably constituted, wanting in one of the essential elements of moral responsibility, they are certainly not fit objects of punish ment; for though they may recognize the distinctions of right and wrong in the abstract, yet they have been denied by nature those faculties which prompt men more happily endowed to pursue the one and avoid the other. In practice, however, they have been regarded with no favor by the courts. Ray, Med. Jur.112-130. See INsanity.
IMMATERIAL AVERMENT. In Pleading. A statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with, and as deseriptive of, what is material. Gould, Plead. c. 3, z 186. Such averments must, however, be proved as laid, it is said, Dougl. 665; though not if they may be struck out withoutstriking out at the same time the cause of action, and when there is no variance. Gould, Pl. c. 3, , 8 188. See 1 Chitty, Plead. 282.

IMMATERIAL ISSUE. In Pleading. An issue taken upon some collateral matter, the decision of which will not settle the question in dispute between the parties in action. For example, if in an action of debt on bond, conditioned for the payment of ten dollars and fifty cents at a certain day, the defendant pleads the payment of ten dollars according to the form of the condition, and the plaintiff. instead of demurring, tenders issue upon the payment, it is manifest that, whether this issue be found for the plaintiff or the defendant, it will remain equally uncertain whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his action, or not; for in an action for the penalty of a bond, conditioned to pay a certain sum, the only material question is whether the exact sum were paid or not, and the question of payment of a part is a question quite beside the legal merits. Hob. 113 ; 5 Tlaunt. 386 ; Croke Jac. 585; 2 Wms. Saund. 319 b. A repleader will be ordered when an immaterial issue is reached, either before or after verdict. 2 Wms . Saund. 319 b, note; 1 Rolle, Abr. 86 ; Croke Jac. 585. See Repleaner.
IMMEMORIAL POSSESSION. In Louisiana. Possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. La. Civ. Code, art. 762; 2 Mart. La. 214; 7 La. 46; 3 Toullier, p. 410; Poth. Contr. de Société, n. 244 ; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3069, note.
IMMIGRATION. The removing into one place from another. It differs from emigration, which is the moving from one place into another.

IMMORAL CONSIDERATION. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts for an immoral consideration are generally void. An agreement in consideration of future illicit cohabitation between the parties, 3 Burr. 1568; 1 Esp. 13 ; 1 Bos. & P. 340, 341, an agreement for the value of libellous and immoral pictures, 4 Esp. 97, or for printing a libel, 2 Stark. 107, or for an immoral wager, Chitty, Contr. 156, cannot, therefore, be enforced. For whatever arises from an immoral or illegal consideration is void: quid turpi ex causâ promissum est non valet. Inst. 3. 20. 24.
It is a general rule that whenever an agreement appears to be illegal, immoral, or against public policy, a court of justice leaves the parties where it finds them; when the agreement has been executed, the court will not rescind it; when executory, the court will not help the execution. 4 Ohio, $419 ; 4$ Johns. N. Y. 419 ; 11 id. 388 ; 12 id. 306 ; 19 id. 341 ; 3 Cow. N. Y. 213; 2 Wils. 341 .
IMMORALITY. That which is contra bonos mores.

In England, it is not punishable, in some cases, at tbe common law, on account of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions: e.g. adultery. But except in cases belonging to the ecolesiastical courts the court of $\mathrm{king}^{\prime s}$ bench is the custos morum, and may punish delicto contra bonos morcs. 3 Burr. 1438; 1 W. Blackst. 94; 2 Strange, 788.

IMMOVABLES. In Civil Lawr. Property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself orberemoved. Pothier, desChoses, \% 1; Clef des Lois Rom. Immeubles.

IMMUNITY. An exemption from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform. See Dig. lib. 50. t. 6 ; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 821 ; 4 Harr. & M'H. Md. 341.

IMPAIRING THEOBLIGATION OF

 CONTRACTS. The constitution of the United States, art. 1, \& 10, cl. 1, contains this provision, among others: "Nc state shall pass . . . . any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts."2. This article of the constitution only forbids the states to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts; but there is nothing in that instrument which prohibits congress from passing such a law: on the contrary, it would seem to have been impliedly reserved to congress; for in the prohibitions of general application as well to the United States as to the states, art. $1, \frac{\%}{8} 9$, cl. 3 , it is declared that "no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." 1 Pet. 322. The omission of the prohibition in the one case, and the expression of it in the other, would imply that such power remained in congress; though the exercise of it is said to be contrary to the first principles of the social compact, and to every principle of sound legislation. Federalist, no. 44. This provision is not applicable to laws enacted by the states before the first Wednesday of March, A.n. 1787. 5 Wheat. 420.
3. All contracts, whether executed or executory, express or implied, are within the provisions of this clause. 6 Cranch, $135 ; 7$ id. 164. A state law annulling private conveyances is within the prohibition, as are laws repealing grants and corporate franchises. 3 Hill, N. Y. 531 ; 1 Pick. Mass. 224 ; 2 Yerg. Tenn. 534; 13 Miss. 112 ; 9 Cranch, 43, 292; 2 Pet. 657 ; 4 Wheat. 656 ; 6 How. 301.

With regard to grants, it is also necessarily the case that this clause of the constitution was not intended to control the exercise of the ordinary functions of government. It was not intended to apply to public property, to the discharge of public duties, to the exercise or possession of public rights, nor to any changes or qualifications in these which the legislature of a state may at any time deem expedient. 1 Ohio St. 603, 609, 657 ; 4 Obio, 427 ; 5 Me. 339 ; 5 Ill. 486 ; 13 id. 27 ; 11 Ired. No. C. 558; 13 id. 175 ; 1 Green, N. J. 553 ; 1 Dougl. Mich. 225; 17 Conn. 79; 13 Wend. N. Y. 325 ; 10 Barb. N. Y. 223 ; 2 Den. N. Y. 272; 2 Sandf. N.Y. 355 ; 6 N. Y. 285; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 322; 5 Watts & S. Penn. 416; 4 Penn. St. 51 ; 13 id. 133 ; 1 Harr. & J. Md. 236; 6 How. 548 ; 10 id. 402 ; 1 Sumn. C. C. 277. See 4 Wheat. 427 ; 19 Penn. St. 258 ; 4 N. Y. 419 ; 3 How. 133.

In general, only contracts are embraced in this provision which respect property, or some object of value, and confer rights which can be asserted in a court of justice.
4. The grant of exclusive privileges by the state governments are all sulject to the exercise of the right of eminent domain by the state.

The legislature bas full authority to exercise an unlimited power as to the management, employment, and use of the eminent domain of the state, and to make all the provisions necessary to the exercise of this right or power, but no authority whatever to give this away, or take it out of the people, directly or indirectly. 6 How. 532; 13 id. $71 ; 20$ Johns. N. Y. 75 ; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 72, 73 ; 17 Conn. 61 ; 23 Pick. Mass. 360 ; 15 Vt. 745 ; 16 id. 446 ; 21 id. 591 ; 8 N. H. 398 ; 10 id. 369 ; 11 id. 19 ; 8 Dan. Ky. 289 ; 9 Ga. 517. See Eminent Domain; Franchise.

The power of one legislature to exempt altogether from taxation certain lands or property, and in this way to bind subsequent legislatures and take from the people one of their sovereign rights, is not jet definitively settled; though the supreme court of the United States is disposed now to hold that particular property may be exempted, where. a consideration has been given; but the abandonment of this taxing power is not to be presumed where the deliberate purpose of the state does not appear. 4 Pet. 514; 3 How. 133 ; 10 id. 376; 4 Mass. 305; 12 id. 252; 25 Wend. N. Y. 486 ; 1 Hill, N. Y. 616 ; 2 id. 353 ; 10 N. H. 138 ; 11 id. 24 ; 5 Gill, Md. 231 ; 13 Vt. 525 ; 15 id. 751 : 10 Penn. St. 442; 1 Ohio St. $563,591,603$; 7 Cranch, 164; 6 Conn. 223 ; 7 id. 335 ; 10 id. 495 ; 11 id. 251.

5. In relation to marriage and divorce, upon which it is now settled that this clause may act. A legislature, it would seem, may pass a law for divorces, limiting its effect to marriages which shall take place after the law is enacted, or limiting its effect as to existing marriages to transactions which occur subsequent to its passage. $10 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H}$. 380; 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 73. But any law creating new grounds or new facilities for the divorce of parties married before the law was passed, would impair the obligation of the marriage contract, and therefore be void.

It is said, however, that divorce may be granted for what is absolutely a breach of the marriage contract; for when the contract is broken no obligation remains to be impaired. 4 Wheat. 518 . See 7 Dan. Ky. 184, where it is held that marriage is so much more than a mere contract as not to be within the scope of this clause of the constitution. 5 Barb. N. Y. 474; 2 N. H. 268.
6. In relation to bankruptey and insolvency. The constitution, art. $1, & 8$, cl. 4 , gives to congress the power of making a bankrupt law. But it seems to be settled that this power is not exclusive; because the several states may also make distinct bankrupt laws, -though they have generally been called insolvency laws,-which will only be superseded when congress chooses to exercise its power by passing a bankruptoy law. 4 Wheat. 122; 12 id. 213 ; 13 Mass. 1. See 3 Wash. C. C. 313 .

Exemption from arrest affects only remedy; an exemption from attachment of the property, or a subjection of it to a stay law or appraisement law, impairs the obligation of the contract. Such a statute can only be enforced as to contracts made subsequently to the law. 1 How. 311; 2 id. 608; 8 Wheat. 1, 75 .

It is admitted that a state may make partial exemptions of property, as of furniture, food, apparel, or even a homestead. 1 Den. N. Y. 128; 3 id. $594 ; 1$ N. Y. 129; 6 Barb. N. Y. 327 ; 2 Dougl. Mich. 38; 4 Watts & S. Penn. 218; 4 Miss. 50; 17 Miss. 310.

Nothing in the constitution prevents a state from passing a valid law to divest rights which have been vested by law in an individual, because this was not a contract, 3 Dall. 386 ; 2 Pet. 412; 8 id. 89 ; 5 Barb. N. Y. 48 ; 9 Gill, Md. 299; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 66, unless such law operates as a direct grant.
7. Insolvent laws are valid which are in the nature of a cessio bonorum, leaving the debt still existing, or which provide for the discharge of the debt, but refer only to subsequent contracts, or which merely modify or affect the remedy, as by exempting the person from arrest, but still leave means of enforcing. But a law exempting the person from arrest and the goods from attachment on mesne process or execution would be void, as against the constitution of the United States. 6 Pet. 348 ; 6 How. 328 ; 16 Johns. N. Y. 233 ;

7 Juhns. Ch. N. Y. 297; 6 Pick. Mass. 440 ; 9 Conn. 314; 1 Ohio, 236; 9 Barb. N. Y. 382 ; 4 Gilm. Va. 221 ; 13 B. Monr. Ky. 285. The state insolvent laws in practice operate in favor of the citizens of the particular state only, as to other citizens of the same state, and not against citizens of other states, unless they have assented to the relief or discharge of the debtor expressly, or by some equivalent act, as by becoming a party to the process against him under the law, taking a dividend, and the like. 1 Gall. C. C. $371 ; 3$ Mas. C. C. 88 ; 5 Mass. 509 ; 10 id. 337 ; 13 id. 18, 19; 2 Blackf. Ind. 3G6; 7 Cush. Mass. 15 ; 3 Pet. 41.

Some states refuse to aid a citizen of another state in enforcing a debt against a citizen of their own state, when the debt was discharged by their insolvent law. 1n such cases the creditor must resort to the court of the United States within the state. 1 Gall. C. C. 168 ; 8 Pick. Mass. 194; 2 Blackf. Ind. 394; 1 Baldw. C. C. 296 ; 9 N. H. 478. See Insolvent Laws.
8. The law of place acts upon a contract, and governs its construction, validity, and obligation, but constitutes no part of it. The law explains the stipulations of parties, but never supersedes or varies them.
This is very different from supposing that every law applicable to the subject-matter, as statutes of limitation and insolvency, enters into and becomes a part of the contract. This can neither be drawn from the terms of the contract, nor presumed to be contemplated by the parties ex contractu.

There is a broad distinction taken as to the obligation of a contract and the remedy upon it. The abolition of all remedies by a law operating in prosenti is, of course, an impairing of the obligation of the contract. But it is admitted that the legislature may vary the nature and extent of remedies, as well as the times and modes in which these remedies may be pursued, and bar suits not brought within such times as may be prescribed. A reasonable time within which rights are to be enforced must be given by laws which bar certain suits. 3 Pet. 290; 1 How. 311; 2 id. 608; 2 Gall. C. C. $141 ; 8$ Mass. $430 ; 1$ Blackf. Ind. $36 ; 2$ Me. 293 ; 14 id. $344 ; 7$ Ga. 163; 21 Miss. 395 ; 1 Hill, So. C. 328; 7 B. Monr. Ky. 162 ; 9 Barb. N. Y. 489.
9. The meaning of obligation is important with regard to the distinction taken between the laws existing at the time the contract is entered into and those which are enacted afterwards. The former are said to have been in contemplation of the parties, and so far entered into their contract. The latter are said to impair, provided they affect the contract at all. See cases supra.

The weight of authority is that this clause of the constitution, like that which relates to the regulation of commerce by the congress of the United States, does not limit the power of a state to enact general police regulations for the preservation of public health and morals. 8 How. 163 ; 1 Ohio St. 15 ; 12 Pick.

IMPANEL. In Practice. To write the names of jurors on a panel (q. v.), which is a schedule or list, in England of parchment: this is done by the sheriff, or other officer lawfully authorized.

In American practice, the word is used of a jury drawn for trial of a particular cause by the clerk, as well as of the general list of jurors returned by the sheriff. Graham, Pract. 275. See 1 Ârchbold, Pract. 365 ; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 354.

IMPARLANCE (from Fr. parler, to speak).

In Pleading and Practice. Time giren by the court to either party to answer the pleading of his opponent: as, either to plead, reply, rejoin, etc.

It is said to be nothing else but the continuance of the cause till a further day. Bacon, Abr. Pleas (C). In this sense imparlances are no longer allowed in English practice. 3 Chitty, Gen. Pract. 700.

Time to plead. This is the common signification of the word. 2 Wms . Saund. $1, \mathrm{n}$. 2; 2 Show. 310 ; Barnes, 346 ; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 93. In this sense imparlances are not recognized in American law, the common practice being for the defendant to enter an appearance, when the cause stands continued, until a fixed time has elapsed within which he may file his plea. See Continuance.

A general imparlance is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the uext term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception: so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea. Tidd, Pract. 418, 419.

A special imparlance reserves to the defendant all exception to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

See Comyns, Dig. Abatement (I) 19, 20, 21), Pleader (D) ; 1 Chitty, Plead. 420 ; 1 Sellon, Pract. 265 ; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (C).

IMPEACHMENT. A written accusation by the house of representatives of the United States to the senate of the United States against an officer.
2. The constitution declares that the house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment, art. 1, s. 2, cl. 5, and that the senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. Art. 1, s. 3, cl. 6.
3. The persons liable to impeachment are the president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States. Art. 2, s. 4. A question arose upon an impeachment before the senate, in 1799, whether a senator was a civil officer of the United States within the purview of this section of the constitution; and it was decided by the senate, by a vote of fourteen against eleven, that he was not. Senate Jour. Jan. 10, 1799 ; Story, Const. 791; Rawle, Const. 213, 214 ; Sergeant, Const. Law, 376.
4. The offences for which a guilty officer may be impeached are treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors. Art. 2, s. 4. The constitution defines the crime of treason. Art. 3, o. 3. Recourse must be had to the common law for a definition of bribery. Not having particularly mentioned what is to be understood by "other high crimes and misdemeanors," resort, it is presumed, must be had to parliamentary practice and the common law in order to ascertain what they are. Story, Const. $& 795$.
5. The mode of proceeding in the institution and trial of impeachments is as follows. When a person who may be legally impeached has been guilty, or is supposed to have been guilty, of some malversation in office, a resolution is generally brought forward by a member of the house of representatives, either to accuse the party, or for a committee of inquiry. If the committee report adversely to the party accused, they give a statement of the charges and recommend that he be impeached. Wben the resolution is adopted by the bouse, a committee is appointed to impeach the party at the bar of the senate, and to state that the articles of impeachment against him will be exhibited in due time and made good before the senate, and to demand that the senate take order for the appearance of the party to answer to the impeachment. The house then agree upon the articles of impeachment, and they are presented to the senate by a committee appointed by the house to prosecute the impeachment. The senate then issues process, summoning the party to appear at a given day before them, to answer to the articles. The process is served by the sergeant-at-armsof the senate, and a return is made of it to the senate under oath. On the return-day of the process, the senate resolves itself into a court of impeachment, and the senators are sworn to do justice according to the constitution and laws. The person impeached is called to answer, a d d either appears or does not appear. If $1 \sim$ does not appear, his default is recorded, aud the senate may proceed ex parte. If he does appear, either by himself or attorney, the parties are required to form an issue, and a time is then assigned for the trial. The final decision is given by yeas and nays; but no person can be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present. Const. art. 1, s. 2, cl. 6. See "Chase's Trial" and "Trial of Judge Peck;" and also proceedings against Judge Humphreys, June 26, 1862, Congress. Globe, pt. 4, 2d sess., 32d Congress, pp. 2942-2953.
6. When the president is tried, the chief justice shall proside. The judgment, in cases of impeachment, shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States. Proceedings on impeachments under the state constitutions are somewhat similar. See Courts of the United States.

In Evidence. An allegation, supported by proof, that a witness who has been examined is unworthy of credit.

Every witness is liable to be impeached as to his character for truth; and, if his general character is good, he is presumed at all times to be ready to support it. 3 Bouvier, Inst. u. 3224 et seq.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTI. A restraint from committing waste upon lands or tenements; or, a demand of compensation for waste done by a tenant who has but a particular estate in the land granted, and, therefore, no right to commit waste.

All tenants for life or any less estate are liable to be impeached for waste, unless they hold without impeachment of waste: in the latter case they may commit waste without being questioned, or any demand for compensation for the waste done. 11 Coke, 82.

IMPEDIMENTO. In Spanish Law. A prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.
2. The disabilitiea arising from this cause are twofold, viz: :-
Impedimento Dirimente.-Such diaabilities as render the marriage null, although contracted with the uaual legal aolemnities. The disahilities arising from this source are enumerated in the following Latin verses:-
"Error, conditio, votum, cognatio, crimen,
Cultus disparitas, vis, ordo, ligamen, honestas,
Sil sis affinis, si forte coire nequibis,
Si parochi et duplicis desit presentia testis,
Raptave sit mulisr, nec parti reddita tute,
Hæc facienda vetant connulia, facta retractant."
Among theae impediments, some are absolute, others relative. The formor cannot be cured, and render the marriage radically null; others may he removed by previous dispensation.
3. In Spain, marriage is regarded in the twofold aspect of a oivil and a religious contract. Hence the disahilities are of two kinda, viz. : those oreated by the local law and those imposed by the church.
In the earlier agea of the church, the emperora prohihited certain marriages: thua, Theodosius the Great forhade marriagea hetween consina-german; Justinian, between apiritual relationa; Valentinian, Valens, Theodosiua; and Arcadius, between persons of different religions.

The Catholic church adupted and extended the diabbilitiea thua created, and hy the third canon at the twenty-fourth session of the Council of Trent, the church reaerved to itself the power of diapensation. As the Council of Trent did not determine, being divided, who had the power of granting dispensation, it ia accorded in Italy to the pope, and in Erance and Spain, with few excep,tiona, to the bishops. The dispositiona of the Council of Trent being in force in Spain (aec Schmidt, Civ. Law of Spain, p. 6, note $a$ ), the ecclesiatical authority is alone inveated with this power in Spain.

For the casca in which it may be granted, see Schmidt, Civ. Law, c. 2, s. 14.
4. Impedimento, Impediente, or Prohibitiva.Such diaahilities as impede the contracting of a marriage, but do not annul it when contracted.
Anciently, the impediments expressed in the following Latin verses were of this nature:-
" Incestus, raptus, sponsalia, mors muliebris, Susceptus propriee sobolis, mors presbyterialis, Vel si pøeniteat solemniter, aut monialem Accipiat quisquam, votum simplex, catechismus, Ecclesia vetitum, iec non tempus feriarum, Impediunt fieri, permittunt facta temeri."
For the effects of these impediments, see Escriche, Dict. Raz. Impedimente Prohibitivo.

IMPEDIMENTS. Legal hindrances to making contracts. Some of these impediments are minority, want of reason, coverture, and the like. See Contract; Incapacity.
In Civil Law. Bars to marriage.
Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable.
Dirimant impediments are those which render a marriage void: as, where one of the contracting parties is already married to another person.
Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment.
Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with regard to each other: as, the marriage of a brother to a sister.
IMPENSA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Expense; outlay. Divided into necessario, for necessity, utiles, for use, and voluptuaria, for lusury. Dig. 79. 6. I4; Voc. Jur.

IMPERFECT OBLIGATIONS. Those which are not, in view of the law, of binding force.
IMPERIUM. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws: this is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive. 1 Toullier, n. 58.

IMPERTINENT (Lat. in, not, pertinens, pertaining or relating to).

In Pleading. In Equirt: A term applied to matters introduced into a bill, answer, or other proceeding in a suit which are not properly before the court for decision at that particular stage of the suit. 1 Sumn. C. C. 506: 3 Stor. C. C. 13 ; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 555 ; 5 Blackf. Ind. 439. Impertinent matter is not necessarily scandalous; but all seandalous matter is impertinent.
2. The rule against admitting impertinent matter is designed to prevent oppression, not to become oppressive. 1 Turn. & R. 489; 6 Beav. Rolls, 444; 27 N. H. 38. No matter is to be deemed impertinent which is material in establishing the rights of the parties or ascertaining the relief to be granted. 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 606; 5 id. 523 ; 12 Beav. Rolls, 44 ; 10 Sim . Ch. 345 ; 13 id. 583.

A pleading nay be referred to a master to have impertinent matter expunged at the cost of the offending party, Story, Eq. Pload. z 266; 19 Me. 214; 4 Hen. & M. Va. 414; 2 IIayw. No. C. 407; but a bill may not be after the defendant has answered. Cooper, Eq. Plead. 19. See, generally, Gresley, EqEv.; Story, Eq. Plead.; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 103; 11 Price, Exch. $111 ; 1$ Russ. & M. 28.
At Law. A term applied to matters not necessary to constitute the cause of action or ground of defence. Cowp. 683; 5 East, 275 ; 2 Mass. 283. It constitutes surplusage, which see.
In Practioe. A term applied to evidence of facts which do not belong to the matter in question. That which is immaterial is, in general, impertinent, and that which is material is not, in general, impertinent. 1 $M^{\prime}$ Clell. \& Y. Ch. 337. Impertinent matter in the interrogatories to witnesses or their answers, in equity, will be expunged after reference to a master at the cost of the offending party. 2 Younge \& C. Ch. 445.

IMPETRATION. The obtaining any thing by prayer or petition. In the ansient English statutes it signifies a pre-obtaining of church benefices in England from the church of Rome which belonged to the gift of the king or other lay patrons.

IMPLEAD. In Practice. To sue or prosecute by due course of law. 9 Watts, Penn. 47.
IMPLEMENTS (Lat. impleo, to fill). Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. 11 Metc. Mass. 82.

Whatever may supply wants: particularly applied to tools, utensils, vessels, instruments of labor: as, the implements of trade or of husbandry. Webster, Dict. Things of necessary use in any trade or mystery, without which the work cannot be performed; also, the furniture of a house, as all household goods and implements, such as tables, presses, cupboards, etc. Termes de la Ley; Jacobs; Tomlin; Williams. This definition is quoted and approved by Wilde, J., in 11 Metc. Mass. 79, where he holds implement and apparatus to be synonymous, and not applicable to living things.
IMPIICATA (Lat.). Small adventures for which the freight contracted for is to be received although the cargo may be lost. Targa, e. 34; Emerigon, Mar. Loans, $\% 5$.
IMPLICATION. An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed. See Contract; Deed; Easement; Way; Will.

IMPORTATION. In Common Law. The act of bringing goods and merchandise into the United States from a foreign cuuntry. 5 Cranch, 368; 9 id. 104, 120; 2 Mann. & G. 155, note $a$.
To prevent the mischievous interference of the several states with the national commerce, the constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 10, provides as follows: "No state shall, without the consent of the congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws ; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any state on imports or exports shall be for the use of the treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the congress." Story, Const. 8z 1616-1625. Under thie section it has been held that a state law imposing a license tax on importers of foreign liguors was unconstitutional. 12 Wheat. 419. See 5 How. 504-633; 7 id. 283; 12 id. 299 ; 11 Pet. 102.
IMPORTS. Goods or other property imported or brought into the country from for eign territory. Story, Const. 8949 . See U. S. Const. art. 1, & 10; 7 Ilow. 477.

IMPORTUNITY. Urgent solicitation, with troublesome frequency and pertinacity.
Wills and devises are sometimes set aside in consequence of the importunity of those who have procured them. Whenever the importunity is such as to deprive the devisor of the freedom of his will, the devise becomes fraudulent and void. Dane, Abr. c. 127, a. 14, s. 5, 6, 7; 2 Phill. Ecel. 551, 552.
IMPOSITIONS. Imposts, taxes, or contributions.
IMPOSTS. Taxes, duties, or impositions. A duty on imported goods or merchandise. Federalist, no. 30; Elliott, Deb. 289; Story, Const. 8949.
The constitution of the United States gives congress power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, excises, and imposts," and prohibits the states from laying "any imposts or duties on exports or imports" without the consent of congress. U. S. Const. art. 1, & 8, n. 1; art. 1, z 10, n. 2. See Bacon, Abr. Smuggling; Davis, Imp.; Coke, 2d Inst. 62; Dig. 165, n.
IMPOTENCE. In Medical Jurisprudence. The incapacity for copulation or propagating the species. It has also been used synonymously with sterility.
2. Impotence may be considered as incurable, curable, accidental, or temporary. Absolute or incurable impotence is that for which there is no known relief, principally originating in some malformation or defect of the genital organs. Where this defect existed at the time of the marriage, and was incurable, by the ecclesiastical law and the law of several of the American states the marriage may be declared void abinitio. Comyns, Dig. Baron and Feme (C 3); Bacon, Abr. Marriage, etc. (E 3); 1 Blackstone, Comm. 440; 1 Beek, Med.Jur. 67 ; Code, 5. 17. 10; Poynter, Marr.
& Div. c. 8; 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 554; Merlin, Rep. Impuissance. But it seems the party naturally impotent cannot allege that fact for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. 3 Phill. Eccl. 147 ; 1 Eng. Eccl. 384. See 2 Phill. Eccl. 10; 3 id. 325 ; 1 Eng. Eccl. 408; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 377 ; Ryan, Med. Jur. 95111; Bishop, Marr. & Div.; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 440; 1 Hagg. 725. Impuissance; and, generally, Trebuchet, Jur. de la Méd. 100-102; 1 State Tr. 315 ; 8 id. App. no. 1, p. 23; 3 Phill. 147; 1 Hagg. Ecel. 523; Foderé, Méd. Lég. & 237.

IMPRESCRIPTIBILITY. The state of being incapable of prescription.

A property which is held in trust is imprescriptible: that is, the trustee cannot acquire a title to it by prescription; nor can the borrower of a thing get a right to it by any lapse of time, unless he claims an adverse right to it during the time required by law.

IMPRIMATUR (Lat.). A license or allowance to one to print.

At one time, before a book could be printed in England, it was requisite that a permission should be obtained: that permission was called an imprimatur. In some countries where the press is liable to censure, an imprimatur is required.
IMPRIMERY. In some of the ancient English statutes this word is used to signify a printing-office, the art of printing, a print or impression.

IMPRIMIS (Lat.). In the first place. It is commonly used to denote the first clause in an instrument, especially in wills, item being used to denote the subsequent clauses. This is also its classical and literal meaning. Ainsworth, Dict. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54. Imprimitus and imprimum also occur. DuCange, Prec. Ch. 430; Cases temp. Talb. 110; 6 Madd. Ch. 31 ; Magna Cart. 9 Hen. III.; 2 Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. 506.

IMPRISONMENT. The restraint of a man's liberty. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8669.

The restraint of a person contrary to his will. Coke, 2d Inst. 589; 1 Baldw. C. C. 239, 600.

It may be in a place made use of for purposes of imprisonment generally, or in one used only on the particular occasion, or by words and an array of force, without bolts or bars, in any locality whatever. $9 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H} .491$; 7 Humphr. Tenn. 43 ; 13 Ark. 43 ; 1 W. Blackst. 19; 7 Q. B. 742 ; 1 Russell, Crimes, Greaves ed. 753 . A forcible detention in the street, or the touching of a person by a peaceofficer by way of arrest, are also imprisonments. Bacon, Abr. Trespass (D 3); 1 Esp. 431, 526. See 7 Humphr. Tenn. 43. It has been decided that lifting up a person in bis chair and carrying him out of the room in which he was sitting with others, and excluding him from the room, was not an imprisonment, 1 Chitty, Pract. 48; and the merely giving charge of a person to a peace-officer; not followed by any actual apprehension of the person, does not amount to an imprisonment, though the party, to avoid it, next day attend at a police, 1 Esp. 431; 3 Bos. \& P. 211; 1 Carr. \& P. 153 ; and if, in consequence of a message from a sherif's officer holding a writ, the defendant execute and send him a bail bond, such submission to the process will not constitute an arrest. 6 Barnew. \& C. 528; Dowl. \& R. 233.

See, generally, Comyns, Dig. Imprisonment; 1 Chitty, Pract. 47; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 127; 2 Bisbop, Crim. Law, 8669 et seq .; 1 Russcll, Crimes, Greaves ed. 753 et seq.
IMPROBATION. In Scotch Law. An act by which falsehood and forgery are proved. Erskine, Inst 4 119; Stair, Inst. 4.20; Bell, Dict.

IMPROPRIATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The act of employing the revenues of a church living to one's own use: it is also a parsonage or ecelesiastical living in the hands of a layman, or which descends by inheritance. Techn. Dict.
IMPROVE. To impeach as false or forged. To cultivate. 4 Cow. N. Y. 190.
In Scotch Law. To improve a lease means to grant a lease of unusual duration to encourage a tenant, when the soil is exhausted, etc. Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. p. 676, z 23.
IMPROVEMENT. An amelioration in the condition of real or personal property effected by the expenditure of labor or money for the purpose of rendering it useful for other purposes than those for which it was originally used, or more useful for the same purposes.
As between the rightful owner of lands and an occupant who in good faith has put on improvements, the land with its improvements belongs to the rightful owner of the land, without compensation for the increased value at common law, 8 Wheat. $1 ; 1$ Dan. Ky. 481 ; 3 Ohio St. 463; 4 McLean, C. C. 489; 5 Johns. N. Y. 272 ; 2 Paine, C. C. 74 ; though the rule is otherwise in equity, 3 Atk. Ch. 134; 3 Sneed, Tenn. 228; 1 Yerg. Tenn. 360 ; 24 Vt. 560 ; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 441 , and by statute in some of the states, 12 Mass. 314; 10 Cush. Mass. 451; 2 N. J. 248; and their value may be offset to an action for mesne profits at common law. 2 Wash. C. C. 165 ; 4 Cow. N. Y. 168; 4 Dev. No. C. 95 ; 6 Humphr. Tenn. 324; 1 Story, C. C. 478; 2 Greene, Iowa, 151; 3 Iowa, 63.
In Patent Law. An addition of some useful thing to a machine, manufacture, or composition of matter.
The patent law of July 4, 1836, authorizes the granting of a pateni for any new and useful improvement on any art, machine, manufacture, or oomposition of matter. Sec. 6. It is often very difficult to say what is a new and useful improvement, the cases often approaching very near to each other. In the present improved state of machinery it is almost impracticable not to employ the same elements of motion, and, in some particulars, the same manner of operation, to produce any new effect. 1 Gall. C. C. 478 ; 2 id. 51. See 4 Barnew. & Ald. $540 ; 2$ Kent, Comm. 370.

IMPUBER (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who is more than seven years old, or out of infancy, and who has not attained the age of puberty; that is, if a boy, till he has attained his full age of fourteen years, and if ${ }^{\text {a }}$ girl, her full age of twelve years. Domat, Liv. Prél. t. 2, s. 2, n. 8.

IMPUTATION OF PATMENT. In Civil Law. The application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.
The debtor may apply his payment as he pleases, with the exception that in case of a debt carrying interest it must be first applied to discharging the interest.

The creditor may apply the funds by informing the debtor at the time of payment.

The law imputes in the neglect of the parties to do so, and in favor of the debtor. It directs that imputation which would have been best for the debtor at the time of payment. Hence it applies the funds to obligations most burdensome to the debtor: e.g. to a mortgage rather than to a book-account, and to a debt which would render the debtor insolvent if unpaid, rather than to any less important one. If nothing else appears to control it, the rule of priority prevails.

In Louisiana the preceding civil law rules are in force. The statutory enactment, Civ. Code, art. 2159 et seq ., is a translation of the Code Napoléon, art. 1253-1256, 'slightly altered. See Pothier on Obligations, n. 528, trans. by Evans, and the notes. Payment is imputed first to the discharge of interest. 1 Mart. La. n. s. $571 ; 10$ Rob. La. 51 ; 5 La. Ann. 738. But if the interest was not binding, being usurions, the payment must go to the principal. 2 La. Ann. 363; 5 id. 616 . The law applies a payment to the most burdensome debt. 6 Mart. La. N.s. 28; 10 La. 357; 10 id. 1 ; 2 La. Ann. 405, 520 . A creditor's receipt is an irrevocable imputation, except in cases of surprise or fraud. 2 La . Ann. 24 ; 3 id. 351, 810. See, also, late cases of imputation in 6 La . Ann. 774; 9 id. 455; 12 id . 20. The cases arise under the Civil Code, art. 2159-2162. See Appropriation of Páyments.

IN ACTION. A thing is said to be in action when it is not in possession, and for its recovery, the possessor unwilling, an action is necessary. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 396. See Chose in Action.

IN FQUALII JURE (Lat.). In equal right. See Maxims.
in alio loco. See Cepit in Alio Loco.

IN AUTRE DROIT (L. Fr.). In another's right. As representing another. An executor, administrator, or trustee sues in autre droit.
IN BLANK. Without restriction. Applied to indorsements on promissory notes where no indorsee is named.
IN CAPITA (Lat.). To or by the heads or polls. Thus, where persons succeed to estates in capita, they take each an equal share; so, where a challenge to a jury is in capita, it is to the polls, or to the jurors individually, as opposed to a challenge to ths array. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 361. Per capita is also used.
IN CAPITE (Lat.). In chief. A tenant in capite was one who held directly of the crown, 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 60, whether by knight's service or socage. But tenure in capite was of two kinds, general and special; the first from the king (caput regni), the second from a lord (caput feudi). A holding of an honor in king's lands, but not immediately of him, was yet a holding in capite. Kitchen, 127; Dy. 44; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 5. Abolished by 12 Car. 1I. c. 24.

IN CHIEF. Principal; primary; directly obtained. A term applied to the evidence obtained from a witness upon his examination in court by the party producing him, in relation to the matter in issue at the trial. Ths examination so conducted for this purpose.
Evidence or examination in chief is to be distinguished from evidence given on crossexamination and from evidence given upon the voir dire.
Evidence in chief should be confined to such matters as the pleadings and the opening warrant; and a departure from this rule will be sometimes highly inconvenient, if not fatal. Suppose, for example, that two assaults have heen committed, one in January and the other in February, and the plaintiff prove his cause of action to have been the assault in January; he cannot abandon that, and afterwards prove another committed in Fehruary, unless the pleadings and openings extend to both. 1 Campb. 473 . See, also, 6 Carr. & P. 73 ; 1 Mood. & R. 282.

This matter, however, is one of practice; and a great variety of rules exist in the different states of the United States, the leading object, however, being in all cases the same, -to prevent the plaintiff from introducing in evidence a different case from the one which he had prepared the defendant to expect from the pleadings.

IN COMMENDAM (Lat.). The state or condition of a church living which is void or vacant, and which is commended to the care of some one. In Lonisiana there is a species of partnership called partnership in commendam. See Commendam.
IN CUSTODIA LEGIS (Lat.). In the custody of the law. In general, when things are in custodia legis, they cannot be distrained, nor otherwise interfered with by a private person, or by another officer acting under authority of a different court or jurisdiction. 10 Pet. 400; 20 How. 583, and cases cited.

IN ESSE (Lat.). In being. In existence. An event which may happen is in posse; when it has happened, it is in esse. The term is often used of liens or estates. A child in its mother's womb is, for some purposes, regarded as in esse.
in extrinmis (Lat.). At the very end. In the last muments.

IN FACIE ECCLESIAI (Lat.). In the face or presence of the church. A marriage is said to be made in facie ecclesice when made in a consecrated church or chapel, or by a clerk in orders elsewhere; and one of these two things is necessary to a marriage in England in order to the wife's having dower, unless there be a dispensation or license. Bright, Husb. & Wife, pp. 370, 371, 391. But see $6 & 7$ Will. IV. c. 85 ; 1 Vict. c. $22 ; 3 & 4$ Vict. c. 72 . It was anciently the practice to marry at the church-door, and there make a verbal assignment of dower. These verbal assignments, to prevent fraud, were necessarily held valid only when made in facie et ad ostium ecclesice. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 103; Taylor, Gloss.
in Faciendo (Lat.). In doing. Story, Eq. Jur. 81308.
in Favorem Libertatis (Lat.). In favor of liberty.

IN FAVOREM VITA (Lat.). In favor of life.
IN FIERI (Lat.). In being done; in process of completion. A thing is said to rest in fieri when it is not yet complete: e.g. the records of a court were anciently held to be in fieri, or incomplete, till they were recorded on parchment, but now till the giving of judgment, after which they can be amended only during the same term. 2 Barnew. & Ad. 791; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 407. It is also used of contracts.

IN FORMA PAUPERIS (Lat.). In the character or form of a poor man.

When a person is so poor that he cannot bear the charges of suing at law or in equity, upon making oath that he is not worth five pounds, and bringing a certificate from a counsellor at law that he believes him to have a just cause, he is permitted to sue in forma pauperis, in the manner of a pauper; that is, he is allowed to have original writs and subpoenas gratis, and counsel assigned him without fee. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 400 . See 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 65; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 588 ; 3 ıd. 273; 5 id. 58 ; 2 Moll. 475.

IN FORO CONSCIENTIAE (Lat.).

 Before the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously. The term is applied to moral obligations as distinct from the obligations which the law enforces. In the sale of property, for example, the concealment of facts by the vendee which may enhance the price is wrong in fore conscientic, but there is no legal obligatior on the part of the vendee to disclose them, and the contract will be good if notvitiated by fraud. Pothier, Vent. part. 2, c. 2, n. 233; 2 Wheat. 185, note c.

IN FRAUDEM LeGIS (Lat.). In fraud of the law ; contrary to law. Taylor, Gloss. Using process of law for a fraudulent purpose; and if a person gets an affidavit of service of declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment and turns the tenant out, when he has no manner of title in a house, he is liable as a felon, for he used the process of law in fraudem legis. 1 Ld . Raym. 276 ; Sid. 254.
An act done in fraudem legis cannot give right of action in the courts of the country whose laws are evaded. 1 Johns. N. Y. 433.
IN FULL LIFIE. Neither physically nor civilly dead. The term life alone has also been taken in the same sense, as including natural and civil life: e.g. a lease made to a person during life is determined by a civil death, but if during natural life it would be otherwise. 2 Coke, 48. It is a translation of the French phrase en plein vie. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.
IN GENERALI Passagio (L. Lat.). In the general passage; passagium being a journey, or, more properly, a voyage, and especially when used alone or with the adjectives magnum, generale, etc.,-the journey to Jernsalem of a crusader, especially of a king. 36 Hen. III.; 3 Prynne, Collect. 767 ; DuCange.
In generali passagio was an excuse for nonappearance in a suit, which put off the hearing sine die ; but in simplici peregrinatione or passagio-i.e. being absent on a private pilgrimage to the Holy Land—put off the hearing for a shorter time. Bracton, 338.
IN GENERE (Lat.). In kind; of the same kind. Thinge which when bailed may be restored in genere, as distinguished from those which must be returned in specie, or specifically, are called fungibles. Kaufman, Mackeldey, Civ. Law, $& 148$, note.
Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. z 619, defines genus as what the philosophers call species, viz. : a kind. See Dig. 12.1. 2. 1.
in Gremio legis (Lat.). In the bosom of the law. This is a figurative expression, by which is meant that the subject is under the protection of the law: as, where land is in abeyance.
IN GROSS. At large; not appurtenant or appendant, butannexed to a man's person: e.g. common granted to a man and his heirs by deed is common in gross; or common in gross may be claimed by preseriptive right. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 34.
IN INITIALIBUS (Lat.). In Scotch Law. In the preliminaries. Before a witness is examined as to the cause in which he is to testify, he must deny bearing malice or ill will, being instructed what to say, or having been bribed, and these matters are called initialia testimoniz, and the examination on them is said to be in initialibus: ©t is similar to our voir dire. Bell, Dict. Initialia Testimonii; Erskine, Inst. p. 451; Halkerston. Tech. Terms.

IN INTEGRUM (Lat.). The original condition. See Restitutio in Integrum. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Integer.

IN INVITUM (Lat.). Unwillingly. Taylor, Gloss. Against an unwilling party (or one who has not given his consent), by operation of law. Wharton, Dict, 2 d Lond. ed.

IN ITINERE (Lat.). On a journey; on the way. Justices in itinere were justices in eyre, who went on circuit through the kingdom for the purpose of hearing causes. 3 Sharswond, Blackst. Comm. 351; Spelman, Gloss. In itinere is used in the law of lien, and is there equivalent to in transitu; that is, not yet delivered to vendee.

İN JUDICIO (Lat.). In or by a judicial proceeding ; in court. In judicio non creditur nisz juratis, in judicial proceedings no one is believed unless on oath. Croke Car. 64. See Bracton, fol. 98 b, 106, 287 b, et passim.

In Civil Law. The proceedings before a prætor, from the bringing the action till issue joined, were said to be in jure; but after issue joined, when the cause came before the judex, the proceedings were said to be in judicio. See Judex.
IN JURE (Lat. in law). In Civil Law. A phrase which denotes the proceedings in a cause before the pretor, up to the time when it is laid before a judex; that is, till issue joined (litis contestatio) ; also, the proceedings in causes tried throughout by the prator (cognitiones extraordinarice). Vicat, Voc. Jur. Jus.

In English Law. In law; rightfully; in right. In jure, non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur. Broom, Max. 104. Incorporeal heredtaments, as right of jurisdiction, are and only in jure, in right, or contemplefanallew, and to admit of only a symbo-Hiciddelitery:- See Halkerston, Tech. Terms.

IN LIMINE (Lat.). In or at the beginning. This phrase is frequently used: as, the courts are anxions to check crimes in limine.

IN LITEM (Lat. ad litem). For a suit; to the suit. Greenleaf, Ev. ${ }^{8} 348$.
in LoCo Parentis (Lat.). In the place of a parent: as, the master stands towards his apprentice in loco parentis.
IN MERCY. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in punishing any offence not directly censured by the law. Thus, to be in the grievous mercy of the king is to be in hazard of a great penalty. 11 Hen. VI.c. 6 . So, where the plaintiff failed in his suit, he and his pledges were in the mercy of the lord, pro falso clamore suo. This is retained nominally on the record. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 376. So the defendant is in mercy if he fail in his defence. Id. 398.

IN MISERICORDIA (Lat. in mercy). The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, Ideo in misericordia, etc. The phrase was used because the punishment in such cases ought to be moderate. See Magna Cart. c. 14; Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 5, c. 6. Somo times misericordia means the being quit of all amercements.

IN MITIORI SENSU (Lat. in a wilder acceptation).

A phrase denoting a rule of construction formerly adopted in slander suits, the object of which was to construe phrases, if possible, so that they would not support an action. Ingenuity was continually exercised to devise or discover a meaning which by soms remote possibility the speaker might havs intended; and some ludicrous examples of this ingenuity may be found. To say of a man who was making his livelihood by buying and selling merchandise, "IIe is a base, broken rascal; he has broken twice, and I'll make him break a third time," was gravely asserted not to be actionable,-"."ne poet dar porter action, car poet estre intend de burstness de belly." Latch, 114 . And to call a man a thief was declared to be no slander, for this reason: "perhaps the speaker might mean he had stolen a lady's heart."
2. The rule now is to construe words agreeably to the meaning usually attached to them. It was long, however, before this rule, rational as it is, and supported by every legal analogy, prevailed in actions for words, and before the favorite doctrine of construing words in their mildest sense, in direct opposition to the finding of the jury, was finally abandoned by the courts. "For some inscrutable reason," said Gibson, J., in a very recent case, "the earlier English judges discouraged the action of slander by all sorts of evasions, such as the doctrine of mitiori sensu, and by requiring the slanderous charge to have been attered with the technical precision of an indictment. But, as this discouragement of the remedy by process of law was found inversely to encourage the remedy by battery, it has been gradually falling into disrepute, inasmuch that the precedents in Croke's Reports are beginning to be considered apocryphal." 20 Penn. St. 162; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 451; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 217 ; 2 id. $511 ; 8$ Mass. 248; 1 Wash. Va. 152; 1 Kirb. Conn. 12; Heard, Lib. & Sland. & 162.

IN MORA (Lat.). In delay.
IN MORTUA MANU (Lat. in a dead hand). Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm.479: Taylor, Gloss.

IN NOBIBUS (Lat.). In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terrâ vel in custodiâ legis: in the air, earth, or sea, or in the custody of ths law. Taylor, Gloss. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis: e.g. in case of a grant of life estate to A, and afterwards to heirs of Richard, Richard in this case, being alive, has no heirs until his death, and, consequently, the inheritance is considered as resting in nubibus, or in the clouds, till the death of $A$, when the contingent remainder either vests or is lost, and the inheritance goes over. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst: Comm. 107, n. ; l Coke, 137.

IN NULLO EST ERRATUM (Lat.). In Pleading. A plea to errors assigned on proceedings in error, by which the defendant in error affirms there is no crror in the record. As to the effect of such plea, see 1 Ventr. 252; 1 Strange, 684; 9 Mass. 532; 1 Burr. 410; T. Raym. 231. It is a general rule that the plea in nullo est erratum confesses the fact assigned for error, Yelv. 57 ; Dane, Aljr. Index, but not a matter assigned contrary to the record. 7 Wend. N. Y. 55 ; Bacon, Abr. Error (G).

IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS (Lat.). In hatred of a despoiler. All things are presumed against a despoiler or wrong-doer: in odium spoliatoris omnia prasumuntur.

IN PAPER. In English Practice. A term used of a record until its final enrolment on the parchment record. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 406 ; 10 Mod. 88 ; 2 Lilly, Abr. 322; 4 Geo. II.

IN PARI CAUSA (Lat.). In an equal cause. It is a rule that when two persons have equal rights in relation to a particular thing, the party in possession is considered as having the better right: in pari causa possessor potior est. Dig. 50.17.128; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 952 . See Maxims.

IN PARI DELICTO (Lat.). In equal fault; equal in guilt. Neither courts of law nor of equity will interpose to grant relief to the parties, when an illegal agreement has been made and both parties stand in pari delicto. The law leaves them where it finds them, according to the maxim, in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis et possidendis. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 769 . See Maxims.

IN PARI MATERIA (Lat.). Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together.

IN PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM (Lat.). For the perpetual memory or remembrance of a thing. Gilbert, For. Rom. 118.

IN PERSONAM (Lat.). A remedy where the proceedings are against the person, in contradistinction to those which are against specific things, or in rem. 1 Bouvier, Inst. . . 2646.

IN POSSE (Lat.). In possibility; not in actual existence: used in contradistinction to in esse.

IN PRASENTI (Lat.). At the present time: used in opposition to in futuro. A marriage contracted in words de prosenti is good: as, I take Paul to be my husband, is a good marriage; but words de futuro would not be sufficient, unless the ceremony was followed by consummation. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 258. See Debitum in Presenti.

IN PRINCIPIO (Lat.). At the beginning. This is frequently used in citations: as, Bacon, Abr. Legacies, in pr.

IN PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat.). In his own person; himself: as, the defendant appeared in propriâ personâ; the plaintiff argued the cause in propriâ personâ.

IN RE (Lat.). In the matter: as, in re $A B$, in the matter of $A B$.

IN REBUS (Lat.). In things, cases, or matters.

IN REM (Lat.). A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

Proceedings in rem include not only those instituted to obtain decrees or judgments against property as forfeited in the admiralty or the English exchequer, or as prize, but also suits against property to enforce a lien or privilege in the admiralty courts, and suits to obtain the sentence, judgment, or decree of other courts upon the personal status or relations of the party, such as marriage, divorce, bastardy, settlement, or the like. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. $8 \not{ }_{8}$ 525, 541.

Courts of admiralty enforce the performance of a contract, when its performance is secured by a maritime lien or privilege, by seizing into their custody the very subject of hypothecation. In these suits, generally, the parties are not personally bound, and the proceedings are confined to the thing in specie. Brown, Clv. & Adm. Law, 98 . And see 2 Gall. C. C. $200 ; 3$ Term, $269,270$.

There are cases, however, where the remedy is either in personam or in rem. Seamen, for example, may proceed against the ship or freight for their wages, and this is the most expeditious mode; or they may proceed against the master or owners. 4 Burr. 1944 ; 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 396. See, generally, 1 Phillipps, Ev. 254; 1 Starkie, Ev. 228; Dane, Abr.; Sergeant, Const. Law, 202, 203, 212 ; Parsons, Marit. Law.

IN RENDEFR. A thing in a manor is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant, e.g. rent; to lie in prender, when it may be taken by the lord or his officer when it chance. West, Symbol. pt. 2, Fines, 8126.

IN RERUM NATURA (Lat.). In the nature (or order) of things; in existence. Not in rerum naturâ is a dilatory plea, im. porting that the plaintiff is a fictitious person.

In Clvil Law. A broader term than in rebus humanis: e.g. before quickening, an infant is in rerum naturâ, but not in relus humanis; after quickening, he is in rebus humanis as well as in rerum naturâ. Calvinus, Lex.
IN SOLIDUM, IN SOLIDO (Lat.). In Clvil Law. For the whole; as a whole. An obligation or contract is said to be in solido or in solidum when each is liable for the whole, but so that a payment by one is payment for all: i.e. it is a joint and several conract.

Possession is said to be in solidum when it is exclusive. "Duo in solidum precario habere non magis possunt, quam duo in solidum vi possidere aut clam; nam neque justoe neque injustce possessiones duce concurrere possunt." Savigny, lib. 3, & 11.

IN SPECIE (Lat.). In the same form : e.g. a ship is said to no longer exist in specie when she no longer exists as a ship, but as a mere congeries of planks. 8 Barnew. & C. 561 ; Arnould, Ins. 1012. To decree a thing in specie is to decree the performance of that thing specifically.
IN STATU QUO (Lat.). In the same situation as; in the same condition as.

IN TERROREM (Lat.). By way of threat, terror, or warning. For example, when a legacy is given to a person upon condition not to dispute the validity or the dispositions in wills and testaments, the conditions are not, in general, obligatory, but only in terrorem: if, therefore, there exist probabilis causa litigandi, the non-observance of the conditions will not be a forfeiture. 2 Vern. Ch. 90 ; 1 Hill, Abr. 253; 3 P. Will. Ch. 344 ; 1 Atk. Ch. 404. But when the acquiescence of the legatee appears to be a material ingredient in the gift, the bequest is only quousque the legatee shall refrain from disturbing the will. 2 P. Will. Ch. 52; 2 Ventr. Ch. 352. For cases of legacies given to a wife while she shall continue unmarried, see 1 Madd. Ch. 590 ; 1 Roper, Leg. 558.

IN TERROREM POPULI (Lat. to the terror of the people).

A technical phrase necessary in indictments for riots. 4 Carr. & P. 373.

Lord Holt has given a distinction between those indictments in which the words in terrorem populi are essential, and those wherein they may be omitted. He says that, in indictments for that species of riots which consist in going about armed, etc. without committing any act, the words are necessary, because the offence consists in terrifying the public; but in those riots in which an unlawful act is committed, the words are useless. 11 Mod. 116; 10 Mass. 518.

IN TOTIDEM VERBIS (Lat.). In just so many words: as, the legislature has declared this to be a crime in totidem verbis.

IN TOTO (Lat.). In the whols; wholly; completely: as, the award is void in toto. In the whols the part is contained: in toto et pars continetur. Dig. 50. 17. 123.

IN TRANSITU (Lat.). During the transit, or removal from one place to anather. See Stoppage in Transito.

IN VADIO (Lat.). In pledge; in gage.
IN VENTRE SA MERE (L. F.). In his mother's womb.
2. In law a child is, for all beneficial purposes, considered as born while in ventre sa mere. 5 Term, 49; Coke, Litt. 36 ; 1 P. Will. Ch. 329 ; La. Civ. Code, art. 948. But a stranger can acquire no title by descent through a child in ventre sa mere who is not subsequently born alive. Such a child is enabled to have an estate limited to his use, 1 Blackstone, Comm. 130; may have a distributive share of intestate property, 1 Ves. Ch. 81 ; is capable of taking a devise of lands, 2 Atk. Ch. 117 ; 1 Freem. Ch. 224, 293 ; takes under a marriage settlement a provision made for children living at the death of the father, 1 Ves. Ch. 85; is capable of taking a legacy, and is entitled to a share in a fund bequeathed to children under a general description of "children," or of "children living at the testator's death," 2 H. Blackst. $399 ; 2$ Brown, Ch. 320; 2 Ves. Ch. 673 ; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 181 ; 1 Bos. & P. 243; 5 Term, 49 ; see, also, 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 85, 111 ; 1 P. Will. 244, 341 ; 2 id. 446 ; 2 Bro. C. C. 63 ; Ambl. 708 , 711 ; 1 Salk. 229 ; 2 Atk. Ch. 114 ; Prec. Ch. 50; 2 Vern. Ch. 710 ; 7 Term, 100; Bacon, Abr. Legacies, etc. (A); 3 Ves. Ch. 486; 4 id. 322; 1 Roper, Leg. 52, 53; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 40 ; may be appointed executor. Bacon, Abr. Infancy (B).
3. A bill may be brought in its behalf, and the court will grant an injunction to stay waste. 2 Vern. Ch. 710 ; Prec. Ch. 50.

The mother of a child in ventre sa mere may detain writings on its behalf. 2 Vern. Ch. 710.

The destruction of such a child is a high misdemeanor. 1 Blackstone, Comn. 129, 130. See 2 Carr. & K. 784; 7 Carr. & P. 850.

See Posthumous Child; Curtest; Dower.
IN WITNESS WHEREOF. Thess words, which, when conveyancing was in the Latin language, were in cujus rei testimonium, are the initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands," etc.

INADEQUATE PRICE. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as, under ordinary circumstances, would be considered insufficient.
2. Inadequacy of price is frequently connected with fraud, gross misrepresentations, or an intentional concealment of defects in the thing sold. In these cases it is clear that the vendor cannot compel the buyer to fulfil the contract. 1 Lev. 111; 1 Brown, Parl. Cas. 187; 6 Johns. N. Y. 110 ; 3 Cranch, 270; 4 Dall. Penn. 250; 6 Yerg. Tenn. 508; 11 Vt. 315 ; 1 Mete. Mass. 93 ; 20 Me. 462 ; 3 Atk. Ch. 283 ; 1 Brown, Ch. 440.
3. In general, however, inadequacy of price is not sufficient ground to avoid an executed contract, particularly when the property has been sold by auction. 7 Ves. Ch. 30, 35, n.; 3 Brown, Ch. 228. But if an uncertain considsration, as a life annuity, be given for an estate, and the contract be executory, equity, it seems, will enter into the adequacy of the consideration. 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 184; 1 Brown, Ch. 156. See 1 Yeates, Penn. 312; Sugden, Vend. 189-199; 1 Ball \& B. 165 ; 1 M $^{\prime}$ Cord, Ch. So. C. $383,389,390 ; 4$ Des. Ch. So. C. 651. And if the price be so grosely inadequate and given under such circumstances as to afford a necessary presumption of fraud or imposition, a court of equity will grant relief. 6 Ga. 515 ; 19 Miss. 21; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 11; 2 Harr. \& G. Md. 114 ; 11 N.H. 9 ; 1 Metc. Mass. 93 ; 3 McLean, C. C. 332; Story, Eq. Jur. $3 \ell 244,245$.

INADMISSIBLE. What cannot be received. Parol evidence, for example, is inadmissible to contradict a written agreement.

IN $\nrightarrow D I F I C A T I O$ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Building on another's land with own materials, or on own land with another's materials. L. 7, $8 \% 10 \& 12$, D. de Acquis. Rer. Domin.; Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. $z 363$. The word is especially used of a private person's building so as to encroach upon the public land. Calvinus, Lex. The right of possession of the materials yields to the right to what is on the soil. Id.

INALIENABLE. A word denoting the condition of those things the property in which cannot be lawfully transferred from one person to another. Public highways and rivers are inalienable. There are also many rights which are inalienable, as the rights of liberty or of speech.

INAUGURATION. A word applied by the Romans to the ceremony of dedicating a temple, or raising a man to the priesthood, after the augurs had been consulted.

It was afterwards applied to the installation of emperors, kings, and prelates, in imitation of the ceremonies of the Romans when they entered the temple of the augurs. It is applied in the United States to the installation of the chief magistrate of the republic, and of the governors of the several states.

INCAPACITY. The want of a quality legally to do, give, transmit, or receive something.

In general, the incapacity ceases with the cause which produces it. If the idiot should obtain his senses, or the married woman's husband die, their incapacity would be at an end. See Limitations, Statute of.

INCENDIARY (Lat. incendium, a kindling). One who maliciously and wilfully sets another person's building on fire; one guilty of the crime of arson. See Arson; Burning.

INCEPTION. The commencement; the beginning. In making a will, for example, the writing is its inception. 3 Coke, 31 b; Plowd. 343.

INCEST. The carnal copulation of a man and a woman related to each other in any of the degrees within which marriage is prohibited by law. Bishop, Marr. & D. $214-$ 221. It is punished by fine and imprisonment, under the laws of the respective states. See Dane, Abr. Index; 6 Conn. 446 ; 11 Ga. 53 ; 1 Park. Crim. N. Y. 344; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 815.

INCE (Lat. uncia). A measure of length, containing one-twelfth part of a foot.

INCEOATE. That which is not yet completed or finished. Contracts are considered inchoate until they are executed by all the parties who ought to have executed them. For example, a covenant which purports to be tripartite, and is executed by only two of the parties, is incomplete, and no one is bound by it. 2 Halst. N. J. 142. See Locus Penitentie.
INCIDENT. This term is used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. For example, rent is usually incident to a reversion, 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 243; while the right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee-simple at common law, and cannot he separated by a grant. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 54. So a court baron is inseparably incident to a manor, in England. Kitch. 36 ; Coke, Litt. 151. All nominate contracts and all estates known to common law have certain incidents which they draw with them and which it is not necessary to reserve in words. See Jacob, Law Dict.

INCIPITUR (Lat.). In Practice. This word, which means "it is begun," signifies the commencement of the entry on the roll on signing judgment, etc.

INCLUSIVE. Comprehended in computation. In computing time, as ten days from a particular time, one day is generally to be included and one excluded. See Exclusive.

INCOME. The gain which proceeds from property, labor, or business : it is applied particularly to individuals; the income of the government is usually called revenue.

It has been holden that a devise of the in, conse of land is in effect the same as a devise of the land itself. 9 Mass. 372; 1 Ashm. Penn. 136.

INCOMMUNICACION. In Spanish Law. The condition of a prisoner who is not permitted to see or to speak with any person visiting him during his confinement. A person accused cannot be subjected to this treatment unless it be expressly ordered by the judge, for some grave offence, and it cannot he continued for a longer period than is absolutely necessary. Art. 7, Reglamento de 26 Setiembre, 1835. This precaution is resorted to for the purpose of preventing the accused from knowing beforehand the testimony of the witnesses, or from attempting to corrupt them and concert such measures as will efface the traces of his guilt. As soon, therefore, as the danger of his doing so has ceased, the interdiction ceases likewise. Escriche.

INCOMPATIBILITY. Incapability of existing or being exercised together.

Thus, the relations of landlord and of tenant cannot exist in one man at the same time in reference to the same land. Two offices may be incompatihle either from their nature or by statutory provisions. See U. S. Const. art. 6,8 3, n. 5, art. 1, \% 6, n. 2 ; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 277; 17 id. 219; Office.

INCOMPETENCY. Lack of ability or fitness to discharge the required duty.

At Common Law. Judges and jurors are said to be incompetent from having an interest in the subject-matter. A judge is also incompetent to give judgment in a matter not within his jurisdiction. See Jurisdiction. With regard to the incompetency of a judge from interest, it is a maxim in the common law that no one should be a judge in his own cause (aliquis non debet esse judex in propriâ causâ). Coke, Litt. 141 a. See 14 Viner, Abr. 573; 4 Comyns, Dig. 6. The greatest delicacy is constantly observed on the part of judges, so that they never act when there is the possibility of doubt whether they can be free from bias; and even a distant degree of relationship has induced a judge to decline interfering. 1 Knapp, 376. The slightest degree of pecuniary interest is considered an insuperable objection. But at common law, interest forms the only ground for challenging a judge. It is not a ground of challenge that he has given his opinion before. 2 Binn. Penn. 454; 4 id. 349. See 4 Mod. 226; Comb. 218; Hard. 44; Hob. 87 ; 13 Mass. 340 ; 5 id. 92 ; 6 Pick. Mass. 109 ; 1 Peck, Tenn. 374; Coxe, N.J. 190; 3 Ohio, 289; 3 Cow. N. Y. 725; 17 Johns. N. Y. 133; 12 Conn. 88; 1 Penn. N.J. 185; 4 Yeates, Penn. 466 ; Salk. 396 ; Bacon, Abr. Courts (B) ; Jury; Competency; Interest.

In Evidence. A witness may be at common law incompetent on account of a want of understanding, a defect of religious principles, a conviction of certain crimes, infamy of character, or interest. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 15. The latter source of incompetency is removed to a considerable degree in some states; and the second is greatly limited in modern practice.

In French Law. Inability or insufficiency of a judge to try a cause brought before him, proceeding from lack of jurisdiction.

INCONCLUSIVE. Not finally decisive. Inconclusive presumptions are capable of being orercome by opposing proof. 3 Bouvier, Inst. 3063.

INCONTINENCE. Impudicity; indulgence in unlawful carnal connection.

INCORPORATION. The act of creating a corporation.

In Civil Law. The union of one domain to another.

INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. Any thing, the subject of property, which is inheritable and not tangible or visible. 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 4. A right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 20; 1 Washbura, Real Prop. 10.
2. Their existence is merely in idea and abstract contemplation, though their effects and profits may be frequently the objects of the bodily senses. Coke, Litt. $9 a$; Pothier, Traité des Choses, 82 According to Sir William Blackstone, there are ten kinds of incorporeal hereditaments: viz., advowsons; tithes; commons; ways; offices; dignities; franchises; corodies; annuities; rents. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 20.

But in the United States there are no advowsons, tithes, dignities, nor corodies, commons are rare, offices rare or unknowi, and annuities have no necessary connection with land. 3 Kent, Comm. 402-404, 454. And there are other incorporeal hereditaments not included in this list, as remainders and re versions dependent on a particular estate of freehold, easements of light, air, etc., and equities of redemption. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 11; 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 443.
3. Incorporeal hereditaments wrere said to be in grant ; corporeal, in livery: since a simple deed or grant would pass the former, of which livery was impossible, while livery was necessary to a transfer of the latter. But this distinction is now done away with, even in England. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, & 2; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 10; 13 Mass. 483.

INCORPOREAL PROPERTY. In Civil Law. That which consists in legal right merely. The same as choses in action at common law.

INCUMBENT. In Ecclesiastical Law. A clerk resident on his benefice with cure: he is so called because be does, or ought to, bend the whole of his studies to his duties. In common parlance, it signifies one who is in possession of an office: as, the present incumbent.

INCUMBRANCE. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistently with the passing of the fee. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 8242.
2. A public highway, 2 Mass. $97 ; 3$ N. H. 335 ; 10 Conn. 431 ; 12 La. Ann. $541 ; 57$ Vt. 739 ; a private right of way, 15 Pick. Mass. 68; 7 Gray, Mass. 83 ; 5 Conn. 497 ; a claim of dower, 4 Mass. 630 ; 23 Ala. n. s. 616, though inchoate only, 2 Me . 22 ; 22 Pick. Mass. 447; 3 N. J. 260 ; an outstanding mortgage, 5 Me. 94 ; 30 id. 392, other than one which the covenantee is bound to pay, 2 N. H. 458; 12 Mass. 304 ; 8 Pick. Mass. 547 ; 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 109; 4 Halst. N. J. 139 ; a liability under the tax laws, 30 Vt .655 ; 5 Ohio St. 271; 5 Wisc. 407, have been held incumbrances within the meaning of the covenant against incumbrances, contained in conveyances. The term does not include a condition on which an estate is held. 3 Gray, Mass. 515; 6 id. 572.

The vendor of real estate is bound to disclose incumbrances, and to deliver to the purchaser the instruments by which they were created or ou which the defects arise; and the neglect of this is to be considered fraud. Sugden, Vend. $6 ; 1$ Ves. Sen. Ch. 96. See 6 Ves. 193; 10 id. 470 ; 1 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 227 ; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 73.
3. The interest on incumbrances is to be kept down by the tenant for life, 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 95-97, 257,573; 3 Edw. Ch. N.Y'

312; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 482; 5 Ohio, 28, to the extent of rents acoruing, 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 345 ; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 60 ; and for any sum paid beyond that he becomes a creditor of the estate. 2 Atk. Ch. 463 ; 1 Bail. Eq. So. C. 397.

When the whole incumbrance is removed by a single payment, the share of the tenant for life is the present worth of an annuity for the life of the tenant equal to the annual amount of the interest which he would be obliged to pay. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 96, 573. The rule applies to estates held in dower, 10 Mass. 315, n.; 5 Pick. Mass. 146 ; 10 Paige, Ch. N. Y.'71, 158 ; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 324; 7 Harr. & J. Md. 367 ; in curtesy, 1 Washburn, Real. Prop. 142; in tail only in special cases. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 80 ; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 613; 2 Law Mag. 265, 270 ; 3 P. Will. 229.

INDEBITATUS ASSUMPSIT (Lat.). In Pleading. That species of action of assumpsit in which the plaintiff alleges, in his declaration, first a debt, and then a promise in consideration of the debt to pay the amount to the plaintiff.

It is so called from the words in which the promise is laid in the Latin form, translated in the modern form, being indebted he promised. The promise so laid is generally an implied one only. See 1 Chitty, Plead. 334; Stephen, Plead. 318; 4 Robinson, Pract. 490 et seq.; Yelv. 21; 4 Coke, 92 b. This form of action is brought to recover in damages the amount of the debt or demand: upon the trial the jury will, according to evidence, give verdict for whole or part of that sum. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 155; Selwyn, Nisi P. 68, 69, et seq.

Indebitatus assumpsit is in this distinguished from debt and covenant, which proceed directly for the debt, damages being given only for the detention of the deht. Deht lies on contracts by specialty as well as by parol, while indebitatus assumpsit lies only on parol contracts, whether express or implied. Browne, Actions at Law, 317.

For the history of this form of action, see 3 Recre, Hist. Com. Law ; 2 Comyns, Contr. 549-556; 1 H. Blackst. 550, 551 ; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 154; Yelv. 70. See Assumpsit.

INDEBITI SOLUTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The payment to one of what is not due to him. If the payment was made by mistake, the civilians recovered it back by an action called condictio indebiti; with us, such money may be recovered by an action of assumpsit.

INDEBTEDNESS. The state of being in debt, without regard to the ability or inability of the party to pay the same. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 343 ; 2 Hill, Abr. 421.

But in order to create an indebtedness there must be an actual liability at the time, either to pay then or at a future time. If, for example, a person were to enter and become surety for another, who enters into a rule of reference, he does not thereby become a debtor to the opposite party until the rendition of the judgment on the award. I Mass. 134.

INDECENCY. An act against good behavior and a just delicacy. 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 9I.

The law, in general, will repress indecency as being contrary to good morals; but, when the public good requires it, the mere indecency of disclosures does not suffice to exclude them from being given in evidence. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3216 .

The following are examples of indecency: the exposure by a man of his naked person on a balcony, to public view, or bathing in public, 2 Campb. 89 ; 3 Day, Conn. 103; 1 Dev. & B. No. C. 208 ; 18 Vt. 574 ; 5 Barb. N. Y. 203 ; or the exhihition of bawdy pictures. 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 42; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 91. This indecency is punishable by indictment. See 1 Sid. 168; 1 Kebl. 620; 2 Yerg. Tenn. 482, 589 ; 1 Mass. 8; 2 Chanc. Cas. 110; 1 Russell, Crimes, 302 ; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. u. 5, s. 4; 4 Blackstone, Comnı. 65, n.; 1 East, Pl. Cr. c. 1, s. 1 ; Burn, Just. Lewdness.

INDECIMABLE. Not tithable.
INDEFEASIBLE. That which cannot be defeated or undone. This epithet is usually applied to an estate or right which cannot be defeated.
INDEFENSUS (Lat.). One sued or impleaded who refuses or has nothing to answer.

INDEFINITE FAILURE OF ISSUE.

See Fallure of Issue.

INDEFINITE NUMBER. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

When a corporation is composed of an indefinite number of persons, any number of them consisting of a majority of those present may do any act, unless it be otherwise regulated by the charter or by-laws.

INDEFINITEPAYMENT. That which a debtor who owes several delts to a creditor makes without making an appropriation: in that case the creditor has a right to make such appropriation.

INDEMNITY. That which is given to a person to prevent his suffering damage. 2 M'Cord, So. C. 279.

It is a rule established in all just governments that when private property is required for public use, indemnity shall be given by the public to the owner. This is the case in the United States. See La. Civ. Code, art. 545 ; Eminent Domain.

Contracts made for the purpose of indemnifying a person for doing an act for which he could be indicted, or an agreement to compensate a public officer for doing an act which is forbidden by law, or for omitting to do one which the law commands, are absolutely void. But when the agreement with an officer was not to induce him to neglect his duty, but to test a legal right, as to indemnify him for not executing an execution, it was held to be good. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 780.

INDENT (Lat. in, and dens, tooth). To cut in the shape of teeth.

Deeds of indenture were anciently written on the same parchment or paper as many times as there were parties to the instrument, the word chirographum being written hetween, and then the several copies cut apart in a zigzag or notched line (whence the name), part of the word chirographum being on either side of it; and each party kept a oopy. The practice now is to cut the top or side of the deed in a waving or notohed line. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 295.
To bind by indentures; to apprentice: as, to indent a young man to a shoemaker. Webster, Dict.
In American Law. An indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the revolution, for the principal or interest of the public debt. Ramsay, Hamilton, Webster; Eliot, Funding System, 35; 5 McLean, C. C. 178; Acts of April 30, 1790, s9ss. 2, c. 9,814 , and of March 3,1825 , sess. 2 , c. 65,817 . The word is no longer in use in this sense.

INDENTURE. A formal written instrument made between two or more persons in different interests, as opposed to a deed poll, which is one made by a single person, or by several having similar interests.
Its name comes from a practioe of indenting or scolloping such an instrument on the top or side in a waving linc. This is not necessary in England at the present day, hy stat. $8 & 9$ Vict. c. 106, 85 , but was in Lurd Cole's time, when no words of indenture would supply its place. 5 Coke, 20 . In this country it is a mere formal act, nut necessary to the deed's being an indenture. See Bacon, Abr. Lenses, etc. (E 2); Comyns, Dig. Fait (C, and note d) ; Littleton, & 370; Coke, Litt. 143 b, 229 a; Cruise, Dig. t. 32, c. 1, s. 24; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Cumm. 291; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 587 et seq.; 1 Slephen, Comm. 447. The ancient practice was to deliver as many copies of an instrument as there were parties to it. And as early as king John it became customary to write the copies on the same parchment, with the word chirographum, or some other word, written between them, and then to cut them apart through such word, leaving part of each letter on either side the line, which was at first straight, afterwards indented or notched. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 89 ; DuCange; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 587 et aeq. See Indent.

INDEPENDENCE. A state of perfect irresponsibility to any superior. The United States are free and independent of all earthly power.

Independence may be divided into political and natural independence. By the former is to be understood that we have contracted no ties except those which flow from the three great natural rights of safety, liberty, and property. The latter consists in the power of being able to enjoy a permanent well-being, whatever may be the disposition of those from whom we call ourselves independent. In that sense a nation may be independent with regard to most people, but not independent of the whole world. See Declaration of Independence.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACT. One in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or considerations. La. Civ. Code, art. 1762 ; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 699.

INDETERMINATE. That which is uncertain, or not particularly designated : as, if I sell you one hundred bushels of wheat, without stating what wheat. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 950. See Contract.

INDIAN. One of the aboriginal inhabitants of America.

In gensral, Indians have no political rights in the United States; they cannot vote at the general elections for officers, nor hold office. In New York they are considered as citizens and not as aliens, owing allegiance to the government and entitled to its protection. 20 Johns. N. Y. 188, 633. But it was ruled that the Cherokee nation in Georgia was a distinct community. 6 Pet. 515. See 8 Cowr. N. Y. 189; 9 Wheat. 673 ; 14 Johns. N. Y. 181, 332; 18 id .506 . The title of the Indians to land was that of occupation merely, but could bo divested only by purchase or conquest. 2 Humphr. Tenn. 19; 1 Dougl. Mich. 546; 2 McLean, C. C. 412; 8 Wheat. 571 ; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 521.

INDIAN TRIBE. A separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States.
Such a tribe, situated within the boundaries of a state, and exercising the powers of government and sovereignty, under the national government,is deemed politically a state,--that is, a distinct political society, capable of selfgovernment; but it is not deemed a foreign state in the sense of the constitution. It is rather a domestic dependent nation. Such a tribe may properly be deemed in a state of pupilage ; and its relation to the United States resembles that of a ward to a guardian. 5 Pet. 1, 16, 17 ; 20 Johns. N. Y. 193 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 308-318; Story, Const. 8 1096; 4 How. 567 ; 1 McLean, C. C. 254 ; 6 Hill, So. C. 546 ; 8 Ala. N. s. 48 . Several Indian tribes within the limits of the United States have an organized government. See Choctaf Nation; Cheroree Nation.

INDICIA (Lat.). Signs; marks. Conjectures which result from circumstances not absolutely certain and necessary, but merely probable, and which may turn out not to be true, though they have the appearance of truth.
The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely aynonymous with circumstantial evidence. It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves. However numerous indicia may be, they only show that a thing may be, not that it has been. An indicium can have effect only when a connection is essentinlly nevessary with the principal. Effects are known by their causea, but only when the effecta can arise only from the causes to which they are attributed. Wben several causes may have prodnced one and the same effect, it is, therefore, unreasonsble to attribute it to any particular one of such ceuses.
The term is much used in common law of signs or marks of identity: for example, in replevin it is said that property must have indicia, or ear-marka, by which to distinguish it from other property of the seme kind. So it is much used in the phrase "indicia of crime," in a sense aimilar to that of the civil law.

INDICTED. Having had an indictment found against him.

INDICTION. The space of fifteen years.
It was used in dating at Rome and in Englend. It began at the dismission of the Nicene council, A.n. 312. The first yesr was reckoned the first of the first indiction, and ou on till fifteen years afterwards. The sixteenth year was the first year of the second indiction: the thirty-first year was the first year of the third indiction, etc.

INDICTMENT. In Criminal Practice. A written accusation against one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, presented to, and preferred upon oath or affirmation by, a grand jury legally convoked. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 299; Coke, Litt. 126; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 152; Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 168.

An accusation at the suit of the crown, found to be true by the oaths of a grand jury.
A written accusation of a crime presented upon oath by a grand jury.
The word is aaid to be derived from the old French word inditer, which signifies to indicate, to show, or point out. Its object is to indicate the offence charged against the accnsed. Rey, des Inst. l'Angl. tome 2, p. 347.
2. The essential requisites of a valid indictment are, -first, that the indictment be presented to some court having jurisdiction of the offence stated therein; second, that it appear to have been found by the grand jury of the proper county or district; third, that the indictment be found a true bill, and signed by the foreman of the grand jury; fourth, that it be framed with sufficient certainty; for this purpose the charge must contain a certain description of the crime or misdemeanor of which the defendant is accused, and a statement of the facts by which it is constituted, so as to identify the accusation, Cowp. 682; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 167 ; 1 Binn. Penn. 201; 3 id. 533; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 194; 6 id. 398; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 301; 4 Cranch, 167; fifth, the indictment must be in the English language. But if any document in a foreign language, as a libel, be necessarily introduced, it should be set out in the original tongue, and then translated, showing its application. 6 Term, 162.
3. The formal requisites are,-first, that the venue, which at common law should always be laid in the county where the offence has been committed, although the charge be inits nature transitory, as a battery. Hawkins, Pl.Cr. b.2, c. $25, \mathrm{~s} .35$. The venue is stated in the margin thus: "City and county of-, to wit." Second, the presentment, which must be in the present tense, and is usually expressed by the following formula: "the grand inquest of the commonwealth of ——inquiring for the city and county aforesaid, upon their oaths and affirmations present." See, as to the venue, 1 Ark. 171; 9 Yerg. Tenn. 357 ; 6 Metc. Mass. 225. Third, the name and addition of the defendant; but in case an errer has been made in this respect, it is cured by the plea of the defendant. Bacon, Abr. Misnomer (B), Indictment (G 2); 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 175; 1 Chitty, Pract. 202; Russ. \& R. 489. Fourth, the names of third persons, when they must be necessarily mentioned in the indictment, should be stated with certainty to a common intent, so as sufficiently to inform the defendant who are his accusers. When, however, the names of third persons cannot be ascertained, it is sufficient, in some cases, to state "a certain person or persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown." Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 25, s. 71; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 651, 781; 2 IFale, Pl. Cr. 181; Plowd. 85; Dy. 97, 286; 8 Carr. \& P.773. Fifth, the timewhen the offence was committed should, in general, be stated to be on a specific year and day. In some offences, as in perjury, the day must be precisely stated, 2 Wash. C. C. 328; but although it is necessary that a day certain should be laid in the indictment, yet, in general, the prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any other day previous to the finding of the indictment. 5 Serg. \& R. Penn. 316. See 11 Serg. \& R. Penn. 177; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 217, 224; 1 Chitty, Plead. lndex, Time; 17 Wend.N.Y.475; 2 Dev. No. C. 567 ; 6 Miss. 14; 4 Dan. Ky. 496 ; 1 Cam. \& N' No. C. 369; 1 Hawks, No. C. 460. Sixth, the offence should be property described. This is done by stating the substantial circumstances necessary to show the nature of the crime, and, next, the formal allegations and terms of art required by law.
4. As to the substantial circumstances. The whole of the facts of the case necessary to make it appear judicially to the court that the indictors have gone upon sufficient premises, should be set forth; but there sliould be no unnecessary matter, nor any thing which on its face makes the indictment repugnant, inconsistent, or absurd. And if there is no necessary ambiguity, the court is not bound, it has been observed, to create one by reading the indictment in the only way which will make it unintelligible. It is a clear principle that the language of an indictment must be construed by the rules of pleading, and not by the common interpretation of ordinary language; for nothing indeed differs more widely in construction than the same matter when viewed by the rules of pleading and when construed by the language of ordinary life. Per Erle, J., 16 Q. B. 846 ; 1 Ad. & E. 448 : 2IIale, Pl.Cr. 183 ; Hawkins, Pl.Cr. b. 2, c. 25, a. 57; Bacon, Abr. Indictment (G 1); Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G3); 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 660; 2 Strange, 1226. All indictments ought to charge a man with a particular offence, and not with being an offender in general: to this rule there are some exceptions, as indictments against a common barrator, a common scold, and the kecper of a common bawdy-house: such persons may be indicted by these general words. 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 230, and the authorities there cited. The offence must not be stated in the disjunctive, so as to leave it uncertain on what it is intended to rely as an accusation: as, that the defendant erected or caused to be erected a nuisance. 2 Gray, Mass. 501; 6 Dowl. & R. 143; 2 Strange, 900; 2 Rolle, Abr. 31.
5. There are certain terms of art used, so appropriated by the law to express the precise idea which it entertains of the offence, that no other terms, however synonymous they may seem, are capable of filling the same office: such, for example, as traitorously ( $q . v$. ), in treason; feloniously ( $q . v$. ), in felony; burglariously ( $q . v$. ), in burglary; maim ( $q \cdot v$. ), in mayhem, etc.

Serenth, the conclusion of the indictment should conform to the provision of the constitution of the state on the subject, where there is such provision; as in Pennsylvania, Const. art. 5, s. 11, which provides that "all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and conclude against the peace and dignity of the same." As to the necessity and propriety of having several counts in an indictment, see 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 248; Count; as to joinder of several offences in the same indictment, see 1 Chitly, Crim. Law, 253; Archbold, Crim. Plcad. 60. Several defendants may, in some cases, be joined in the same indictment. Archbold, Crim. Plead. 59. When an indictment may be amended, sce 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 297 : Starkie, Crim. Plead. 286; or quashed, 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 298; Starkie, Crim. Plead. 331; Archbold, Crim. Plead. 66.

After verdict in a criminal case, it will be presumed that those facts without proof of which the verdict could not have been found were proved, though they are not distinctly alleged in the indictment; provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend them in reasonable intendment. 1 Den Cr. Cas. 356; 2 Carr. & K. 868; 1 Taylor, Ev. 873. After verdict, defective averments in the second count of an indictment may be cured by reference to sufficient averments in the first count. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 340.

See, generally, Train & H. Prec. of Jud.; Archbold, Starkie, Crim. Plead.; Chitty, Russell, Crim. Law.

INDICTOR. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the indictee.

INDIFFERENT. To have no bias or partiality. 7 Conn. 229. A juror, an arbitrator, and a witness ought to be indifferent; and when they are not so they may be challenged. See 9 Conn. 42.

INDIGEN A (Lat. from inde, in, and geno, gigno, to beget). A native; born or bred in the same country or town. Ainsw. A subject born, or naturalized by act of parliament. Opposed to alienigena. Rymer, to. 15, p. 37; Coke, Litt. 8 a.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE. Evidence which does not prove the fact in question, but one from which it may be presumed.

Inferential evidence as to the truth of a disputed fact, not by testimony of any witness to the fact, but by collateral circumstances ascertained by competent means. 1 Starkie, Ev. 15; Wills, Circumst. Ev. 24 ; Best, Ev. 21, 22, 827 , note; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. & 13.

INDIVISIBLE. Which cannot be separated.

It is often important to ascertain when a consideration or a contract is or is not indivisible. When a consideration is entire and indivisible, and it is against law, the contract is void in toto. 11 Vt. 592; 2 Watts & S. Penn. 235. When the consideration is divisible, and part of it is illegal, the contract is void only pro tanto.

To ascertain whether a contract is divisible or indivisible is to ascertain whether it may or may not be enforced in part, or paid in part, without the consent of the other party. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. o. 694 ; Entiaety.
INDIVISUM (Lat.). That which two or more persons hold in common without partition ; undivided.

INDORSE. To write on the back. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are indorsed by a party's writing his name on the back. Writs in Massachusetts are indorsed in some cases by a person's writing his name on the back, in which case he becomes liable to pay the costs of the suit.

INDORSEMENT. In Commercial Law. That which is written on the back of an instrument in writing and which has relation to it.

Writing one's oame on the back of a pronissory note or other negotiable instrument. 20 Vt. 499.
2. An indorsement is generally made primarily for the purpose of transferring the rights of the holder of the instrument to some other person. It has, however. various results, such as rendering the indorser liahle in ecrtain events; and hence an indorsement is sometimes made merely for the purpose of additional security. This is oallod an accommodation indorsement when done without consideration other than an exchange of indorsements.

A blank indorsement is one in which the name of the indorser only is written upon the instrument. It is commonly made by writing the name of the indorser on the back, 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 315; but a writing across the face may answer the same purpose. 18 Pick. Mass. 63; 16 East, 12.

A conditional indorsement is one made suhject to some condition without the performance of which the instrument will not be or remain valid. 4 Tannt. 30.

An indorsement in full is one in which mention is made of the name of the indorsee. Chitty, Bills, 170.

A qualified indorsement is one which restrains, or limits, or qualifies, or enlarges the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deducible from the nature of the instrument. Chitty, Bills, 8th ed. 261; 7 Taunt. 160. The words commonly used are sans recours, without recourse. 3 Mass. 225 ; 12 id .14.

A restrictive indorsement is one which restrains the negotiability of the instrument to a particular person or for a particular purpose. 1 Rob. La. 222.
3. The effect of the indorsement of a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange is to transfer the property in the note to the person mentioned in the indorsement when it is made in full, or to any person to whose possession it may lawfully come thereafter even by mere delivery, when it is made in blank, so that the possessor may sue upon it in his own name at law, as well as if he bad been named as the payee. 11 Pet. 80; 2 Hill, N. Y. 80.

And any person who has possession of the instrument is presumed to be the legal bona fide owner for value, until the contrary is shown.

When the indorsement is made before the note becomes due, the indorsee and all subsequent holders are entitled to recover the face of the note against the maker, without any right on his part to offset claims which he may have against the payee; or, as it is frequently stated, the indorsee takes it free of all equities between the antecedent parties of which he had no notice. 3 Term, 80, 83; 7 id. 423 ; 8 Mees. & W. Exch. 504; 8 Conn. $505 ; 13$ Mart. La. 150; 16 Pet. 1.
4. Indorsers also, unless the indorsement be qualified, become liable to pay the amount demanded by the instrument upon the failure of the principal, the maker of a note, the acceptor of a bill, upon due notification of such failure, to any subsequent indorsee who can legally claim to hold through the particular indorsee. Story, Bills, $\} 224$; Parsons, Bills.

The effect of acceptance upon a bill is to remove the acceptor to the head of the list as as principal, while the drawer takes his place first indorser.

See Guaranty; Bills of Exchange; Paomissory Notes. Consult Chitty, Story, on Bills of Exchange ; Story on Promissory Notes; Byles, Parsons, on Bills and Notes.

In Criminal Law. An entry made upon the back of a writ or warrant.

When a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with a crime has been issued by a justice of the peace of one oounty, which is to be executed in another county, it is necessary, in some states, that it should be indorsed by a justice of the county where it is to be executed: this indorsement is called backing.

INDORSER. The person who makes an indorsement.
2. The indorser of a bill of exchange, or other negotiable paper, by his indorsement undertakes to be responsible to the holder for the amount of the bill or note, if the latter shall make a legal demand from the payer, and, in default of payment, give proper notice thereof to the indorser. But the indorser may make his indorsement conditional, which will operate as a transfer of the bill if the condition be performed; or he may make it qualified, so that he shall not be responsible on non-payment by the payer. Chitty, Bills, 179, 180.
3. To make an indorser liable on his indorsement to parties subsequent to his own indorsee, the instrument must be commercial paper; for the indorsement of a bond or single bill will not, per se, create a responsibility. 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 311. See Story, Bills, 202 ; 11 Pet. 80.

When there are several indorsers, the first in point of time is generally, but not always, first responsible: there may be circumstances which will cast the responsibility, in the first place, as between them, on a subsequent indorsee. 5 Munf. Va. 252.

INDUCEMENT. In Contracts. The benefit which the obligor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it.

In Criminal Law. The motive. Confessions are sometimes made by criminals under the influence of promises or threats. When these promises or threats are made by persons in authority, the confessions cannot be received in evidence. See Conrassion.

In Pleading. The statement of matter which is introductory to the principal subject of the declaration or plea, and which is necessary to explain or elucidate it. Such matter as is not introductory to, or necessary to elucidate the substance or gist of, the declaration, plea, etc., nor collaterally applicable to it, is surplusage.
2. An inducement is, in general, more a matter of convenience than of necessity, since the same matter may be stated in the body of the declaration; but by its use confession of statement is avoided. 1 Chitty, Plead. 259.

But in many cases it is necessary to lay a foundation for the action by a statement, by way of inducement, of the extraneous or collateral circumstances which give rise to the plaintiff's claim. For instance, in an action for a nuisance to property in the possession of the plaintiff, the circumstance of his being possessed of the property should be stated as inducement, or by way of introduction to the mention of the nuisance. Lawes, Plead. 66, 67; 1 Chitty, Plead. 292; Stephen, Plead. 257 ; 14 Viner, Abr. 405; 20 id. 345 ; Bacon, Abr. Pleas, ete. (I 2).

When a formal traverse is adopted, it should be introduced with an inducement, to show that the matter contained in the traverse is material. 1 Chitty, Plead. 38. See Traverse; Innuendo; Colloquium.
3. In an indictment there is a distinction between the allegation of facts constituting the offence, and those which must be averred by way of inducement. In the former case, the circumstances must be set out with particularity ; in the latter, a more general allegation is allowed. An "inducement to an offence does not require so much certainty." Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G5). In an indictment for an escape, "debito modo commissus" is enough, without showing, by what authority; and even "commissus" is sufficient. 1 Ventr. 170. So, in an indictment for disobedience to an order of justices for payment of a church-rate, an averment, by way of inducement, that a rate was duly made as by law required, and afterwards duly allowed, and that the defendant was by it duly rated, was held sufficient, without setting out the facts which constituted the alleged due rating, etc., although in the statement of the offence itself it would not have been sufficient. 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 222.

INDUCI压 (Lat.). In Civil Law. A truce; cessation from hostilities for a time agreed upon. Also, such agreement itself. Calvinus, Lex. So in international law. Grotius, de Jure Bell. lib. 3, c. 2, 811 ; $\mathrm{Hu}-$ ber, Jur. Civit. p. 743, 822.

In Old Practice. A delay or indulgence allowed by law. Calvinus, Lex.; DuCange; Bract. fol. 352 b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5,88 . See Bell, Dict.; Burton, Law of Scotl: 561. So used in old maritime law : e.g. an inducice of twenty days after safe arrival of vessel was allowed in case of a bottomry bond, to raise principal and interest. Locceivus, de Jure Marit. lib. 2, c. 6, $\% 11$.
INDUCI正 IEGAIES (Lat.). In Scotch Law. The days between the citation of the defendant and the day of appearance; the days between the teste day and day of return of the writ.

INDUCTION. In Ecclesiastical Law.

 The giving a clerk, instituted to a benefice, the actual possession of its temporalties, in the nature of livery of seisin. Ayliffe, Parerg. 299.INDULGENCE. A favor granted.
It is a general rule that where a creditor gives indulgence, by entering into a binding contract with a principal debtor, by which the surety is or may be damnified, such surety is discharged, because the creditor has put it out of his power to enforce immediate payment, when the surety would have a right to require him to do so. 6 Dow, Parl. Cas. 238 ; 3 Mer. Ch. 272 ; Bacon, Abr. Oblig. (D).

But mere inaction by the creditor, if he do not deprive himself of the right to sue the principal, does not, in general, discharge the surety. See Forbearance.

INDULTO. In Spanish Law. The condonation or remission of the punishment imposed on a criminal for his offence. L. 1, t. 32, pt.7. This power is exclusively vested in the king.

The right of exercising this power has been often contested, chiefly as impolitic, for the reason set forth in the following Latin verses:-

> " Plus sæpe nocet patientia regis

Quam rigor: ille nocet paucis; brec incitat omnes, Dum se ferre suos sperant impune reatus."
INELIGIBILITY. The incapacity to be lawfully elected.

This incapacity arises from various causes; and a person may be incapable of being clected to one office who may be elected to another: the incapacity may also be perpetual or temporary.

Among perpetual inabilities may be reckoned, the inability of women to be elected to a public office; and of a citizen born in a foreign country to be elected president of the United States.

Among the temporary inabilities may be mentioned, the holding of an office declared by law to be incompatible with the one sought; the non-payment of the taxes required by law; the want of certain property qualifications required by the constitution; the want of age, or being too old.

INEVITABLE ACCIDENT. A term used in the civil law, nearly synonymous with fortuitous event. 10 Miss. 572.

Any accident which cannot be foreseen and prevented. Though used as synonymous with act of God, it would seem to have a wider meaning, the act of God being. any cause which operates without aid or interference from man. 4 Dougl. 287, 290, per Lord Mansfield; 21 Wend. N. Y. 198, per Cowen, J.; 3 Blackf. Ind. 222 ; 2 Ga. 349; 10 Miss. 572; 1 Parsons, Contr. 635.

INFAMIS (Lat.). In Roman Law. One who, in consequence of the application of a general rule, and not by virtue of an arbitrary decision of the censors, lost his political rights but preserved his civil rights. Savigny, Droit Rom. 879.

INFAMOUS CRIME. A crime which works infamy in one who has committed it.

INFAMY. That state which is produced by the conviction of crime and the loss of honor, which renders the infamous person incompetent as a witness.
2. When a man is convicted of an offence which is inconsistent with the common principles of honesty and humanity, the law considers bis oath to be of no weight, and excludes his testimony as of too doubtful and suspicious a nature to be admitted in a court of justice to deprive another of life, liberty, or property. Gilbert, Ev. 256; 2 Bulstr. 154; ] Phillipps, Ev. 23; Buller, Nisi P. 291. The crimes which render a person incompetent are treason, 5 Mod. 16, 74; felony, 2 Bulstr. 154; Coke, Litt. 6; 1 T. Raym. 369 ; receiving stolen goods, 7 Metc. Mass. 500; 5 Cush. Mass. 287 ; all offences founded in fraud, and which come within the general notion of the crimen falsi of the Roman law, Leach, 496; as perjury and forgery, Coke, Litt. 6; Fost. 209; piracy, 2 Rolle, Abr. 886; swindling, cheating, Fost. 209; harratry, 2 Salk. 690; conspiracy, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 442 ; and the bribing a witness to absent himself from a trial, in order to get rid of his evidence. Fost. 208. From the decisions Professor Greenleaf deduces the rule "that the crimen falsi of the common law not only involves the charge of falsehood, but also is one which may injuriously affect the administration of justice, by the introduction of falsehood and fraud." 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8 373. A conviction of the offence of obtaining goods by false pretences does not render the party an incompetent witness. 11 Metc. Mass. 302.
3. It is the crime, and not the punishment, which renders the offender unworthy of be. lief. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 25 . In order to incapacitate the party, the judgment must be proved as pronounced by a court possessing competent jurisdiction. 1 Sid. 51 ; 2 Stark. 183; Starkie, Ev. pt. 2, p. 144, note 1, pt. 4, p. 716. But it has been held that a conviction of an infamous crime in another country, or another of the United States, does not render the witness incompetent on the ground of infamy. 17 Mass. 515; 11 Metc. Mass. 304. See 2 Harr. & M'H. Md. 380; 3 Hawks, No. C. 393 ; 10 N. H. 22. Though this doctrine appears to be at variance with the opinions entertained by foreign jurists, who maintain that the state or condition of a person in the place of his domicil accompanies him everywhere. Story, Confl. Laws, & 620, and the authorities there cited; Folix, Traité de Droit Intern. Privé, z 31; Merlin, Répert. Loi, & 6, n. 6.

The ohjection to competency may be answered by proof of pardon (see Pardon), and by proof of a reversal by writ of error, which must be proved by the production of the record. As to the effect of serving out the term of punishment, see stat. $6 & 7$ Vict. c. 85, 81 ; 3 Ind. 16; 4 id. 128; 14 Mo. 348; 31 N. IH. 314; 24 Conn. 363; 2 Paine, C. C. 168; 2 Gray, Mass. 562; 13 Tex. 168; 23 Ala. n. s. 44. See 2 Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 394.
4. The judgment for an infamous crime, even for perjury, does not preclude the party from making an affidavit with a view to his own defence. 2 Salk. 461; 2 Strange, 1148. He may, for instance, make an affidavit in relation to the irregularity of a judgment in a cause in which he is a party; for otherwise he wonld be without a remedy. But the rule is confined to defence; and he cannot be heard upon oath as complainant. 2 Salk. 461; 2 Strange, 1148. When the witness becomes incompetent from infamy of character, the effect is the same as if he were dead; and if he has attested any instrument as a witness, previous to his conviction, evidence may be given of his handwriting. 2 Strange, 833 ; Starkie, Ev. pt. 2, 8 193, pt. 4, p. 723.

INFANT. One under the age of twentyone years. Coke, Litt. 171.
2. But he is reputed to be twenty -one yeara old, or of full age, the first instant of the late day of the twenty-first year next hefore the annivereary of his birth; because, accordicg to the civil computation of time, which differs from the natural cemputation, the last day having commenced, it is censidered as ended. Savigny, Dr. Rom. 8182 ; 6 Ind. 447. If, for example, a person were horn at any hour of the first day of January, 1810 (even a few minutes before twelve o'clock of the night of that day), he would be ef full rge at the first instant of the thirty-first of December, 1830, although nearly forty-eight hours before he had actually attained the full age of twenty-one years according to years, days, hours, and minutes, becauso there is in this case no fraction of a day. 1 Sid. 162; 1 Kebl. 589 ; 1 Salk. 44; Raym. 84; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 463, 464; 1 Lilly, Reg. 57 ; Comyne, Dig. Enfant (A); Savigay, Dr. Rom. $82383,384$.
3. A curious case occurred in England, of a yeung.lady who was born after the house-clock had struck, while the parish clock was atriking, and before St. Paul's had begun to strike, twelve, on the night of the fourth and fifth ef January, 1805; the question was whether she was bern on the fourth or fifth of Januery. Mr. Coventry gives it as his opinion that she wae horn on the fourth, because the house-clock does not regulate any thing but domestic affairs, that the parochial eloek is much hetter evidence, and that a metropelitan clock ought to be received with "implicit aequicseence." Coventry, Er. 182. It is conceived that this can only be prina facie; because, if the fact were otherwise, and the parochial aod metropolitan clocks should both have been wroog, they would uadoubtedly have had no effect in ascertaining the age of the child.
4. The sex makes no difference at common law: a woman is, therefore, an infent until she has attained the age of twenty-one years. Coke, Litt. 171. It is otherwise, however, in some of the United States. 18 Ill. 209; 4 Ind. 464. Before arriving at full age, an infant may do many acts. A male at fourteen is of discretion, snd may consent to marry; and at that age he may disagree to and annul a marriage he may before that time have contracted; he may then choose a guardian, and, if his discretion be proved, may, at common law, make a will of his personal estate; he may act as executor at the age of seventeen years. A female at seven may be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine she is entitled to dower; at twelve slue may consent or disagree to marriage; and, at common law, at seventeen she may act as executrix. Considerable changes of the common law have taken place in many of the states. In Pennsylvania, to act as an executor the party must be of full age.
5. In general, en infent is not bound by his contracts, unless to supply him necesseries, Selwyn, Nisi P. 137; Chitty, Contr. 31; Bacon, Abr. Infancy, etc. (I 3) ; 9 Viner, Abr. 391; 1 Comyns, Contr. 150, 151; 3 Rawle, Penn. 351 ; 8 Term, 335 ; 1 Kebí. 905, 913 ; 1 Sid. 129, 258; 1 Lev. 168; 1 South. N.J. 87; but see 6 Crench, 226; 3 Pick. Mass. 492 ;

1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 197 ; or unless, by some legislative provision, he is empowered to enter into a contract; as, with the consent of his parent or guardian to put himself apprentice, or enlist in the service of the United States. 4 Binn. 487 ; 5 id. 423 ; 30 Vt. 357.
6. Contracts made with him may be enforced or avoided by him on his coming of age, 20 Ark. 600; 12 Ind. 76; 4 Sneed, Tenn. 118; 13 La. Ann. 407; 32 N. H. 345; 24 Mo. 541; but must be avoided within a reasonable time. 15 Gratt. Va. 329 ; 29 Vt. 465; 25 Barb. N. Y. 399. But to this general rule there may be an exception in case of contracts for necessaries; because these are for his benefit. See Necessaries. 2 Head, Tenn. 33; 18 Ill. 63 ; 13 Md. 140 ; 32 N. H. 345 ; 11 Cush. Mass. 40 ; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 232. The privilege of avoiding a contract on account of infancy is strictly personal to the infant, and no one can take advantage of it but himself. 3 Green, N. J. 343; 2 Brev. No. C. 438; 6 Jones, No. C. 494; 23 Tex. 252 ; 30 Barb. N. Y. 641 ; 31 Miss. 32. When the contract has been performed, and it is such as he would be compellable by law to perform, it will be good and bind him. Coke, Litt. 172 a. And all the acts of an infant which do not touch bis interest, but tske effect from an authority which be has been trusted to execute, are binding. 3 Burr. 1794; Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, c. 2, $8_{8} 5$, note c.

The contract cannot be avoided by an adult with whom the infant deals. 29 Barb. N. Y. 160; 12 lnd. 76; 32 id. 537 ; 5 Sneed, Tenn. 659.
7. The protection which the law gives an infant is to operate as a shield to him, to protect him from improvident contracts, but not as a sword to do injury to others. An infant is, therefore, responsible for his torts, as for slander, trespass, and the like, 29 Barb. N. Y. 218; 29 Vt. 465 ; but he cannot be made responsible in an action ex delicto, where the cause arose on a contract. 3 Rawle, Penn. 351; 6 Watts, Penn. 9; 15 Wend. N. Y. $233 ; 25$ id. 399 ; 9 N. H. 441 ; 32 id. 101 ; 10 Vt .71 ; 5 Hill, So. C. 391 . But see 6 Cranch, 226 ; 15 Mass. 359; $4 M^{\prime}$ Cord, So. C. 387.
s. With regard to the responsibility of infants for crimes, the rule is that no infant within the age of seven years can be guilty of felony or be punished for any capital offence; for within that age an infant is, by presumption of law, doli incapax, and cannot be endowed with any discretion; and against this presumption no averment shall be received. This legal incapacity, however, ceases when the infent attains the age of fourteen years, after which period his act becomes subject to the same rule of construction as that of any other person. Between the ages of seven and fourtcen years an infant is deemed primâ facie to be doli incapax ; but in this case the maxim applies, malitia supplet cetatem: malice supplies the want of mature years. 1 Russell, Crimes, 2 , 3; 31 Ala. N. s. 323.

INFANTICIDE. In Medical Jurispruaence. The murder of a new-born intant. It is thus distinguishable from abortion and fceticide, which are limited to the destruction of the life of the foctus in utero.
2. The crime of infanticide can be committed only after the child is wholly born. 5 Carr. & P. 329; 6 id. 349. This question involves an inquiry, first, into the signs of maturity, the data for which are-the length and weight of the foetus, the relative position of the centre of its body, the proportional development of its several parts as compared with each other, especially of the head as compared with the rest of the body, the degree of growth of the hair and nails, the condition of the skin, the presence or absence of the membraia pupillaris, and, in the male, the descent or non-descent of the testicles. Dean, Med. Jur. 140.
3. Second, was it born alive? The second point presents an inquiry of great interest both to the legal and medical professions and to the commonity at large. In the absence of all direct proof, what organic facts proclaim the existence of life subsequent to birth? These facts are derived principally from the circulatory and respiratory systems. From the former the proofs are gathered-from the character of the blood, that which is purely fotal being wholly dark, like venous blood, destitute of fibrons matter, and forming coagula much less firm and solid than that which has been subjected to the process of respiration; so, also, the coloring-matter is darker, and containg no phosphoric acid, and its proportion of serum and red globules is comparatively small. From the condition of the heart and bloodvessels. The circulation anterior and subsequent to birth most necessarily be entirely different. That anterior, by means of the foetal openings,-the foramen ovale, the ductus arteriosus, and the ductus venosus,-is enabled to perform its circuit without sending the entire mass of the blood to the lungs for the purpose of oxygenation. When the extra-uterine life commences, and the double circulation is established, these openings gradually close: so that their closure is congidered clear evidence of life subsequent to birth. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 478 et seq.; Dean, Med. Jur. 142 et seq. From the difference in the distribution of the blood in the different organe of the body. The two organs in which this difference is most perceptible are the liver and the lungs,-especially the latter. The circulation of the whole mass of the blood through the lungs distends and fills them with blood, so that their relative weight will be nearly doubled, and any incision into them will be followed by a fres effusion.
4. From the respiratory system proofs of life subsequent to birth are derivod. From the thorax: its size, capacity, and arch are increased by respiration. From the lungs: they are increased in size and volume, are projected forward, become rounded and obtuse, of a pinkish-red hue, and their density is inversely as their volume. Dean, Med. Jur. 149 et seq. The fact of the specific gravity of the lungs being diminished in proportion to their diminution in density gires rise to a celebrated test,- the hydrostatic, the relative weight of the lungs with water. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 459 et seq. The rule is, that lungs which have not respired are specifically heavier than water, and if placed within it will sink to the bottom of the vessel. If they have respired, their increase in volume and decrease in density render them specifically lighter than water, and when placed within it they will float. There are several objections to the sufficiency of this test; but it is fairly entitled to its due weight in the settlement of this question. Dean, Med.Jur. 154 et seq. From the state of the diaphragm. Prior to respiration it is found high up in the thorax. The act of expanding the lungs enlarges and arches the thorax, and, by necessary consequence, the diaphragm descends.
5. The fact of life at birth being established, the next inquiry is, how long did the child survive? The proofs here are derived from three sources. The fotal openings, their partial or complete closure. The more perfect the closure, the longer the timo. The series of changes in the umbilical cord. These are-1, the withering of the cord; 2, its desiccation or drying, and, 3, its separan tion or dropping off,-occurring usually four or five days after birth; 4, cicatrization of the umbilicus,-occurring usually from ten to twelve days after birth. The changes in the skin, consisting in the process of exfoliation of the epidermis, which commences on the abdomen, and extends theuce successively to the chest, groin, axillæ, interscapular space, limbs, and, finally, to the hands and feet.
6. As to the modes by which the life of the child may have been destroyed. Ths criminal modee most commonly resorted to are-1, suffocation; 2, drowning; 3, cold and exposure; 4, starvation; 5, wounds, fractnres, and injuries of various kinds; a mode not unfrequently resorted to is the introduction of sharp-pointed instruments in different parts of the body; also, luxation and fracture of the neck, accomplished by forcibly twisting the head of the child, or pulling it backwards; 6 , strangulation; 7 , poisoning ; 8 , intentional neglect to tie the umbilical cord; and, 9 , causing the child to inhale air deprived of its oxygen, or gases positively deleterious. All these modes of destroying life, together with the natural or accidental ones, will be found fully discoursed by the writers on medical jurisprudence. I Beck, Med. Jur. 509 et seq. ; Dean, Med. Jur. 179 et seq.; Ryan, Med. Jur. 137 ; Dr. Cummins, Proof of Infanticide Considered.

INFANZON. In Spanish Law. A person of noble birth, who exercises within his domains and inheritance no other rights and privileges than those conceded to nim.
INFPOFFMENT. The act or instrument of feoffment. In Scotland it is syno nymous with saisine, meaning the instrument of possession: formerly it was synonymous with investiture. Bell, Dict.

INFERENCE. A conclusion drawn by reason from premises established by proof.

It is the province of the judge who is to decide upon the facts to draw the inference. When the facts are submitted to the court, the judges draw the inference; when they are to be ascertained by a jury, it is their duty to do so. The witness is not permitted, as a general rule, to draw an inference and testify that to the court or jury. It is his duty to state the facts simply as they occurred. Inferences differ from presumptions.

INFERIOR. One who in relation to another has less power and is below him; one who is bound to obey another. He who makes the law is the superior; he who is bound to obey it, the inferior. I Bouvier, Inst. n. 8.

INFERIOR COURTS. By this term are understood all courts except the supreme courts. An inferior court is a court of limited jurisdiction, and it must appear on the face of its proceedings that it has jurisdiction, or its proceedings will be void. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2529.
inficiatio (Lat.). In Civil Law. Denial. Denial of fact alleged by plaintiff,especially, a denial of debt or deposit. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Calvinus, Lex.

INFIDEL. One who does not believe in the existence of a God who will reward or punish in this world or that which is to conie. Willes, 550. One who professes no religion that can bind his conscience to speak the truth. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8368.

This term has been very indefinitely applied. Under the name of infidel Lord Coke comprises Jews and heathens, Coke, 2d Inst. 506; Coke, 3d Inst. 165; and Hawkins includes among infidels such as do not believe either in the Old or New Testament. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 46, s. 148.

The objection to the competency of witnesses who have no religious belief is removed in Maine, Stat. 1847, c. 64; Massachusetts, Gen. Stat. c. 131, 8 12; Michigan, Rev. Stat. 1846, c. 142, z 96 ; Missouri, Rev. Stat. 1845, c. $186, \frac{8}{2} 21$. In other states a witness must believe in the existence of a Supreme Being, as in Connecticut, Rev. Stat. 1849, tit. 1, ${ }^{8}$ 140; New Hampshire, Rev. Stat. 1842, c. 188, 89 , who will punish false swearing. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 3d ed. 505.

It has been held that at common law it is only requisite that the witness should believe in the existence of a God who, will punish and reward according to desert. 1 Atk. Cb . 21; 2 Cow. N. Y. 431, 433, n.; 5 Mas. C. C. 18; $13 \mathrm{Vt}$.362 ; 26 Penn. St. 274 ; that it is sufficient if the punishment is to be in this world. 14 Mass. 184; 4 Jones, No. C. 25 : contra, 7 Conn. 66. And see 17 Wend. N. Y. 460; 2 Watts \& S. Penn. 262; 10 Ohio, 121 . A witness's belief is to be presumed till the contrary appear, 2 Dutch. N. J. 463, 601 ; and his disbelief must be shown by declarations made previously, and cannot be inquired into by examination of the witness himself. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. $\& 370$, n. ; 17 Me . 157 ; 14 Vt. 535 . See 17 I11. 541 .
INFIHT (Sax.). An assault upon an inhabitant of same dwelling. Gloss. Anc. Inst & Laws of Eng.
INFIRM. Weak, feeble.
When a witness is infirm to an extent likely to destroy his life, or to prevent his attendance at the trial, his testimony de bene esse may be taken at any age. 1 P. Will. Ch. 117. See Aged Witness; Going Witness.

INFIRMATIVE. Weakening. Webster, Dict. Tending to weaken or render infirm; disprobabilizing. 3 Bentham, Jud. Ev. 13, 14. Exculpatory is used ly some authors as synonymous. See Wills, Circ. Ev. 120 et seq.; Best, Pres. 8217 et seq.

INFORMATION. In French Law.

The act or instrument which contains the depositions of witnesses against the accused. Pothier, Proc. Civ. sect. 2, art. 5.
In Practice. A complaint or accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offence. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 308.
It differs in no respeot from an indictment in its form and substance, except that it is filed at the mere discretion of the proper law officer of the government, ex officio, with out the intervcntion of a grand jury. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 308. The process has not been formally put in motion hy congress for misdemeanors, but is common in civil proseeutions for penalties and forfeitures. 3 Story; Const. 659. The information is usually made upon knowledge given by some other person than the officer, ealled the relator.
2. Under United States laws, informations are resorted to for illegal exportation of goods, 1 Gall. C. C. 3; in cases of smuggling, 1 Mass. c. c. 482 ; and a libel for seizure is in the nature of an information. 3 Wash. C. C. 464 ; 1 Wheat. 9 ; 9 id. 381. The provisions of the U . S. constitution hare been held to apply only to the proceedings in the federal courts.
In Connccticut, informations may be made by the attorneys of the state in their respective counties for all crimes not punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Rev. Stat. 1854, c. 12, ${ }_{8} 155$.
In Louisiana, at the option of the state. 14 La Ann. 364.
In Massachusetts, all misdemeanors less than felonies may be prosecuted by information. 5 Mass, 257 ; 81 Gray, Mass. 329.
In Missouri, for misdemeanors. 29 Mo .330.
In New Hampshire, an information lies in all cases not punishable by death or confincment at hard labor. Rev. Stat. 457.

In New York, it lies for all crimes not infamous or punishable capitally. N. Y. Const. art. 1, ${ }_{8} 6$.
In Pennsylvania and South Carolina, an information cannot be brought where any indictment lies. Penn. Const. art. $9, \ell 10$; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 35.
In Vermont, the state's attorney may prosecute by information all crimes not capital and for which the punishment does not exceed seven years in the state prison. Vt. Rev. Stat. c. $3, \frac{z}{} 1$.
In Virginia, au information cannot be used for felonies or in any case except by leave of the court and where the accused fails to show cause to the contrary. Va. Code, c. 207, $\delta 2$.
3. An information is sufficiently formal if it follows the words of the statute, 9 Wheat. 381; 14 Conn. 487 ; but enough must appear to show whether it is found under the statute or at common law. 3 Day, Conn. 103. It must, however, allege the offence with sufficient fulness and accuracy, 10 Ind. 404, and must show all the facts demanding a forfeiture, as in a penal action, when it is to recover a penalty. 4 Mass. 462; 10 Conn. 461. Where it is for a first offence, the fact need not be stated, 9 Conn. 560; otherwise, where it is for a second or subsequent offence for which an additional penalty is provided. 2 Metc. Mass. 408. It cannot be amended by adding charges. 1 Dan. Ky. 466.

A part of the defendants may be acquitted and a part convicted, 1 Root, Conn. 226; and a conviction may be of the whole or a part of the offence charged. 4 Mass. 137. In some states it is a proceeding by the state officer, filed at his nwn discretion, 9 N. H. 468; 6 Ind. 281; 4 Wisc. 567; in others, leave of court may be granted to use the state officer's name to any relator, upon cause shown. 7 Halst. N.J. 84; 2 Dall. Penn. 112; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 35, 52.
INFORMATION OF INTRUSION. A proceeding instituted by the state prosecnting officer against intruders upon the public domain. See Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 141; 3 Pick. Mass. 224; 6 Leigh, Va. 588.
INFORMATION IN THE NATURE OF A QUO WARRANTO. A proceeding against the usurper of a franchise or office. See quo Warranto.
INFORMATUS NON SUM (Lat.). n Practice. I am not informed: a formal answer made in court or put upon record by an attorney when he has nothing to say in defence of his client. Styles, Reg. 372.
INFORMER. A person who informs or prefers an accusation against another, whom he suspects of the violation of some penal statute.
2. Whan the informer is entitled to the penalty or part of the penalty, upon the conviction of an offender, he is or is not a competent witness, according as the statute creating the penalty has or has not made him so. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 97 ; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 107; 5 Mass. 57 ; 1 Dall. Penn. 68; 1 Saund. 262, c.
infortiatum (Lat.). In Civil Law. The secund part of the Digest or Pandects of Justinian. See Drgess.

This part, which commences with the third title of the twenty-fourth hook and ends with the thirtyeighth hook, was thus called beeause it was the middle part, which, it was said, was supported and fortified by the two others. Some have supposed that this name was given to it becsuse it treats of successions, substitutions, and other important matters, and, being more used than the others, produced greater fees to the lawyers.
INFRA (Lat.). Below, under, beneath, underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, primo gradu est-supra, pater, mater, infra, flius, filia: in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and danghter. Inst. 3.6.1.
In another sense, this word signifies within: as, infra corpus civitatis, within the body of the county; infra prasidia, within the guards. So of time, during: infra furorem, during the madness. This use is not classical. The sole instance of the word in this sense in the Code, infra anni spatium, Code, b. 5 , tit. $9, z 2$, is corrected to intra anni spatium, in the edition of the Corpus Jur. Civ. of 1833 at Leipsic. The nse of infra for intra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire. In Italian, the preposition fra, which is a corruption of infra, is used in the sense of intra. Bonetti, Ital. Dict.
INFRA ATATEM (Lat.). Within or under age.

INFRA ANNUM LUCTUS (Lat.). Within the year of grief or mourning. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 457; Cod. 5. 9. 2. But intra anni spatium is the phrase used in the passage in the Code referred to. See Corp. Jur. Civ. 1843, Leipsic. Intra tempus luctus occurs in Novella 22, c. 40. This year was at first ten months, afterwards twelve. I Beck, Med. Jur. 612.
INFRA BRACHIA (Lat.). Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure as well as de facto. Coke, 2d Inst. 317. Also, inter brachia. Bracton, fol. 148 b. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia sua. Woman's Lawyer, pp. 332, 335.
INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS (Lat.). Within the body of the county.
The common-law courts have jurisdiction infra corpus comitatus: the admiralty, on the contrary, has no such jurisdiction, unless, indeed, the tide-water may extend within such county. 5 How. 441, 451. See Admirality; fauces Terre.

INFRA DIGNITATEM CURIA (Lat.). Below the dignity of the court. Example: in equity a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. See 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 183; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 364; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4237.

INFRA HOSPITIUM (Lat.). Within the inn. When once a traveller's baggage comes infra hospitium, that is, in the care and under the charge of the innkeeper, it is at his risk. See I Coke, 32; 14 Johns. N. Y. 175; 21 Wend. N. Y. 282; 25 id. 642 ; 8 N. H. 408; I Smith, Lead. Cas. 47; 9 Pick. Mass. 280; 7 Cush. Mass. 417; 1 Ad. & E. 522 ; 3

Nev. & M. 576; 2 Kent, Comm. 593, 9th ed.; Story, Bailm. \% 478; 1 Parsons, Contr. 631, notes. See Guest; Innkeeper.

INFRA PR円SIDIA (Lat. within the walls). A term used in relation to prizes, to signify that they have been brought completely in the power of the captors; that is, within the towns, camps, ports, or fleet of the captors. Formerly the rule was, and perhaps still in some countries is, that the act of bringing a prize infra prosidia changed the property; but the rule now establighed is that there must he a sentence of condemnation to effect this purpose. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 134; 1 Kent, Comm. 104; Chitty, Law of Nat. 98; Abbott, Shipp. 14; Hugo, Droit Romain, 890 .

INFRACTION (Lat. infrango, to break in upon). The breach of a law or agreement; the violation of a compact. In the French law this is the generic expression to designate all actions which are punishable by the Code of France.

INFRINGEMENT. In Patent Law. A word used to denote the act of trespassing upon the incorporealright secured by a patent. Any person who, without legal permission, shall make, use, or sell to another to be used, the thing which is the subject-matter of any existing patent, is guilty of an infringement, for which damages may be recorered at law by an action on the case, or which may he remedied by a bill in equity for an injunction and an account. The subject is discussed in the article Patents.

INFUSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring a hot or cold fluid upon a suhstance whose medical properties it is desired to extract. The product of this operation.

Although infusion differs from decoction, they are said to be ejusdem generis; and in the case of an indictment which charged the prisoner with giving a decoction, and the evidence was that he had given an infusion, the difference was held to be immaterial. 3 Camph. 74.

INGENIUM (Lat. of middle ages). A net or hook, DuCange; hence, probably, the meaning given by Spelman of artifice, fraud (ingin). A machine, Spelman, Gloss., especially for warlike purposes; also, for navigation of a ship. DuCange.
ingenul (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those freemen who were born free. Vicat, Vocab.
They were a elass of freemen, distinguished from those who, born slaves, had afterwards legally obtained their freedom: the latter were called, at various periods, sometimes liberti, sometimes libertini. An unjust or illegal servitude did not prevent a man from being ingenu*s.
INGRESS, EGRESS, ANDREGRESS. These words are frequently used in leases to express the right of the lessee to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

INGRESSU (Lat.). An ancient writ of entry, hy which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Tech. Dict.

INGROSSING. In Practice. The act of copying from a rough draft a writing in order that it may be executed: as, ingrossing a deed.
INHABITANT (Lat. in, in, habeo, to dwell). One who has his domicil in a place; one who has an actual fixed residence in a place.
2. A mere intention to remove to a place will not make a man an inhahitant of such place, although, as a sign of such intention, he may have sent his wife and children to reside there. 1 Ashm. Penn. 126. Nor will his intention to quit his residence, unless consummated, deprive him of his right as an inhabitant. 1 Dall. Penn. 480. See 10 Ves. 339; 14 Viner, Abr. 420 ; 1 Phillipps, Ev.; Masş. Gen. Stat. 51; Kyd, Corp. 321 ; Anal. des Pand. de Pothier, Habitans; Pothier, Pand. l. 50, t. 1, s. 2; 6 Ad. & E. 153.
3. The inhabitants of the United States are native or foreign born. The natives consist, first, of white persons, and these are all citizens of the United States, unless they have lost that right ; second, of the aborigines, and these are not, in general, citizens of the United States, nor do they possess any political power; third, of negroes, or descendantsof the African race; fourth, of the children of foreign ambassadors, who are citizens or subjects as their fathers are or were at the time of their birth.
4. Inhabitants born out of the jurisdiction of the United States are, first, children of citizens of the United States, or of persons who have been such; they are citizens of the United States, provided the father of such children shall have resided within the same, Act of Congress of April 14, 1802, 8 4; second, persons who were in the country at the time of the adoption of the constitution; these have all the rights of citizens; third, persons who have become naturalized under the laws of any state before the passage of any law on the subject of naturalization by congress, or who have become naturalized under the acts of congress, are citizens of the United States, and entitled to vote for all officers who are elected by citizens, and to hold any office except those of president and vice-president of the United States; fourth, children of naturalized citizens, who were under the age of twenty-one years at the time of their parent's being so naturalized, or admitted to the rights of citizenship, are, if then dwelling in the United States, considered as citizens of the United States, and entitled to the same rights as their respective fathers; fifth, persons who resided in a territory which was annexed to the United States by treaty, and the territory became a state; as, for example, a person who, born in France, moved to Louisiana in 1806, and settled there, and remained in the territory until it was admitted as a state, it was held that, although not naturalized under the acts of congress, he was a citizen of the United States, Desbois' case, 2 Mart. La. 185; sixth, aliens or foreigners, who have never been naturalized, and these are not citizens of the United States, nor entitled to any political rights whatever. See Alien; Citizen; Domicli; Naturalization.
INHERENT POWER. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without reeeiving that right, ability, or faculty from another.

INHERITABLE BLOOD. Blood of an ancestor which, while it makes the person in whose veins it flows a relative, will also give him the legal rights of inhcritance incident to that relationship. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comin. 254, 255. Descendants can derive no title through a person whose blood is not inheritable. Such, in England, are persons attainted and aliens. But attainder is not known in this country. 1 . . Sce 4 Kent, Comm. 413, 424; 1 IIiliaiard, Real Prop. 148; 2 id. 190.
INHERITANCE. A perpetuity in lands to a man and his heirs; the right to succeed to the estate of a person who dies intestate. Dig. 50.16. 24. The term is applied to lands.
The property which is inherited is called an inheritance.
The term inheritance includes not only lands and tenements which have been acquired by descent, but every fee-simple or fee-tail which a person has acquired by purchase may be said to be an inheritance, because the purclaser's heirs may inherit it. Littleton, $\%$. Sec Estatrs.
In Civil Law. The succession to all the rights of the deceased. It is of two kinds: that which arises by testament, when the testator gives his suceession to a particular person ; and that which arises by operation of law, which is called succession ab intestat. Heineccius, Leç. El. $8 & 484,485$.
inheritance act. The English statute of $3 & 4$ Will. IV. c. 106 , regulating the law of inheritance. 2 Chitty, Stat. 575 ; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 37; 1 Stephen, Comm. 500 .

InHibition. In Civil Law. A prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. Halifax, Anal. p. 126.

In English Law. The name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him: it is in the nature of a prohibition. Termes de la Ley; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 39.
In Scotch Law. A personal prohibition which passes by letters under the signet, prohibiting the party inhibited to contract any debt or do any act by whicb any part of the heritable property may be aliened or carried off, in prejudice of the creditor inhibiting. Erskine, Pract. b. 2, tit. ii. s. 2. See Dilicences.

INHIBITION AGAINST A WIFE.

In Scotch Law. A writ in the sovereign's name, passing the signet, which prohibits all and sundry from having transactions with a wife or giving her credit. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 1.6. 26 .
INITIAL (from Lat. initium, beginning). Beginning; placed at the beginning. Webster. Thus, the initials of a man's name are the first letters of his name: as, G. W. for George Washington. A middle name or initial is not recognized by law. 2 Cow. N. Y. 463; 1 Hill, N.Y. 102; 14 Barb. N.Y. 261 ; 4 Watts, Penn. 329; 26 Vt. 599; 28 N. H. 561; 8 Tex. 376; 14 id. 402; Wharton, Am. Crim. Law, 68. But see 1 Pick. Mass. 388. In an indictment for forgery, an instrument signed "T. Tupper" was averred to have been made with intent to defraud Tristam Tupper. Held good. 1 McMull. So. C. 236. Signing of initials is good signing within the Statute of Frauds. 12 J. B. Moore, 219; 1 Campb. 513; 2 Bingh. n. s. 780; 2 Mood. & R. 221 ; Addison, Contr. Am. ed. 46, $n$; 1 Den. N. Y. 471. But see Erskine, Inst. 3. 2.8. When in a will the legatee is described by the initials of his name only, parol evidence may be given to prove his identity. 3 Ves. Ch. 148.
INItIALIA TEStIMONII (Lat.). In Scotch Law. A preliminary examination of a witness to ascertain what disposition he bears towards the parties,-whether he has been prompted what to say, whether he has received a bribe, and the like. It resembles in some respects an examination on voir dire in English practice.

INITIATE. Commenced.

A husband was, in fendal law, said to be tenant by the curtesy initiate whon a ohild whe might inherit was born to his wife, because he then first had an inchoate right as tenant by the curtesy, and did homage to the lord as one of the pares curtia (peers of the court); whence curtesy. This right became consummated on the death of the wife hefore the husband. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 127; 1 Stephen, Comm. 247.
initiative. In French Law. The name given to the important prerogative conferred by the charte constitutionnelle, art. 16, on the late king to propose through his ministers projects of laws. 1 Toullier, n. 39. See Vero.

INJUNCTION. A prohibitory writ, issued by the authority of, and generally under the seal of, a court of equity, to rostrain one or more of the defendants or parties, or quasi parties, to a suit or proceeding in equity, from doing, or from permitting his servants orothers who are under his control to do, an act which is deemed to be unjust or inequitable so far as regards the rights of some other party or parties to such suit or proceedings in equity. Eden, Inj. c. 1; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. b. 3, c. 2, & 1; Story, Eq. Jur. & 861; Willard, Eq. Jur. 341 ; 4 Bouvier, Inst. 120; 2 Green, Ch. N. J. 136; 1 Madd. Ch. 126.

The interdict of the Roman law resembles, in many respects, our injunetion. It was used in thrce distinct but cognate senses. 1. It was applicd te signify the edicts made by the pretor, deolaratory of his intention to give a remedy in certain cases, chiefly to preserve or to resture possession; this interdict was culled edietal: edietale, quad pretorizs edietis proponitur, ut sciant onnes e $\hat{a}$ form $\hat{a}$ posse implorari. 2. It was used to signify his order or decree, applying the remedy in the given case before him, and was then called decretal: decretale, quod pretor re nata implorantibus decrevit. It is this which bears s strong resemblance to the injunction of a ceurt of equity. 3. It was used, in the last place, to signify the very remedy sought in the suit oommenced under the prætor's edict; and thus it became the denomination of the action itself. Livingston on the Batture case, 5 Am. Law Jeur. 271; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. \& 865.
2. Preliminary injunctions are used to restrain the party enjoined from doing or continuing to do the wrong complained of, either temporarily or during the continuance of the suit or proceeding in equity in which such injunction is granted, and before the rights of the parties have been definitively settled by the decision and decree of the court in such suit or proceeding.

Final or perpetual injunctions are awarded, or directed to be issued, or the preliminary injunction already issued is made final or perpetual, by the final decree of the court, or when the rights of the parties so far as relates to the subject of the injunction are finally adjudicated and disposed of by the decision and the order or decree of the court. 2 Freem. Ch. $106 ; 4$ Johns. Ch. N. Y. $69 ; 3$ Yerg. T'enn. 366; 1 Bibb, Ky. 184; 4 Bouvier, Inst. 123.
3. In England, injunctions were divided into commen injunctions and special injunctíens. Eden, Inj. 3d Am. ed. 178, n.; Willard, Eq. Jur. 342; Saxt. Ch. N. J. 504. The common injunction was obtained of course when tho defendant in the suit in equity was in default fur not entering his appearance, or for not putting in his answer to the complainant's bill within the times prescribed by the practice of the court. Eden, Inj. 3d Am. ed. 5961, 68-72, 93, n.; Story, Eq. Jur. ${ }_{2} 892$; 18 Ves. Ch. 523 ; Jcremy, Eq. Jur. b. 3, ch. 2, 2 1, p. 339 ; Gilbert, For. Romsn. 194; Newby, Chanc. Pr. c. 4, 8 7. Special injunctions were founded upon the oath of the complainant, or other evidence of the truth of the charges contained in bis bill of complaint. They were obtained upon a special appiscation te the court or to the officer of the court who was autherized to allew the issuing of such injunctien, and usually upon notice of such application given to the party whose proceedings were sought to be enjoined. Stery, Eq. Jur. 8892 ; 4 Eden, Inj. 78, 290 ; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 339, 341, 342; 3 Mer. Ch. 475 ; 18 Ves. Cb. 522, 523. In ihe United States courts and in the equity courts of mest of the states of the Union, the English practice of granting the common injunction has been discentinued or superscded, either by statute or by the rules of the courts. And the preliminary injunctions are, therefore, all speeial injunctions in the courts of this country where such English practice bas been superseded.
4. When used. St. 387 ; 32 Ala. v. s. $723 ; 37$ N. II. 254. An injunction will not be granted while the rights between the parties are undetermined, except in cases where material and irreparable ínjury will be done, 3 Bosw. N. Y. 607; 1 Beasl. N. J. 247, 542; 15 Md. 22; 13 Cal. 156, 190; 10 id. 528 ; 6 Wisc. 680 ; 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 412; 16 Tex. 410; 28 Mo. 210; but where it is irreparable and of a nature which cannot be compensated, and where there will be no adequate remedy, an injunction will be granted which may be made perpetual. 39 N. H. 182; 12 Cush. Mass. 410 ; 27 Ga. 499 ; 1 McAll. C. C. 271.

Injunctions are used by courts of equity in a great number and variety of special cases; and in England and in the United States this writ was formerly used by such courts as the means of enforcing their decisions, orders, and decrees. But subsequent statutes have in most cases given to courts of equity the power of enforcing their decrees by the ordinary process of execution against the property of the party: so that an injunction to enforce the performance of a decree is now seldom necessary.
6. Injunctions may be used by courts of equity, in the United States as well as in England, to restrain the commencement or the continuance of proceedings in foreign courts, upon the same principles upon which they are used to restrain proceedings at law in courts of the same state or country where such injunction is granted. 3 Myl & K. Ch. 104; Story, Eq. Jur. & 899 . But a state court will not grant an injunction to stay proceedings at law previously commenced in one of the United States courts. Nor will a United States court grant an injunction to stay proceedings at law previously commenced in a state court. 4 Cranch, $179 ; 7$ id. 279; Willard, Eq. Jur. 348 . And upon the ground of comity, as well as from principles of public policy, the equity courts of one state of the Union will not grant an injunction to stay proceedings previously commenced in a court of a sister state, where the courts of such sister state have the power to afford the party applying for the injunction the equitable relief to which he is entitled. 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 401 ; Willard, Eq. Jur. 348; 2 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 280; 31 Barb. N. Y. 364. In the United States, an injunction bill is generally sworn to by the complainant, or is verified by the oath of some other person who is cognizant of the facts and charges contained in such bill, so far at least as relates to the allegations in the bill upon which the claim for a preliminary injunction is founded. And an order allowing such injunction is thereupon obtained by a special application to the court, or to some officer authorized by statute, or by the rules and practice of the court, to allow the injunction, either with or without notice to the party enjoined, and with or without security to such party, as the law or the rules and practice of the court may have prescribed in particular cases of classes. Woodb. & M. C. C. 280 .

The bill must disclose a primary equity in aid of which this secondary remedy is asked. 4 Jones, Eq. No. C. 29 ; 28 Ga. 585 ; 14 La. Ann. 108; 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 412; 12 Mo. 315.
7. An injunction upon its face should contain sufficient to apprize the party enjoined what he is restrained from doing or from permitting to be done by those who are under his control, without the necessity of his resorting to the complainant's bill on file to ascertain what he is to refrain from doing or from permitting to be done. 10 Cal . 347. And where a preliminary injunction is wanted, the complainant's bill should contain a proper prayer for such process. 2 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 188; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 229, 444; 3 Sim. Ch. 273.
The remedy of the party injured by the violation of an injunction by the party enjoined is by an application to the court to punish the party enjoined for his contempt in disobeying the process of the court. See CONTEMPT.

INJURIA ABSQUE DAMNO (Lat.). Wrong without damage. Wrong done without damage or loss will not sustain an action. The following cases illustrate this principle. 6 Mod. 46, 47, 49 ; 1 Show. 64; Willes, 74, note; 1 Ld. Raym. 940, 948; 2 Bos. & P. 86 ; 5 Coke, 72 ; 9 id. 113 ; Buller, Nisi P. 120.
INJURIOUS WORDS. In Louisiana. Slander, or libellous words. La. Civ. Code, art. 3501.

INJURY (Lat. in, negative, jus, a right). A wrong or tort.

Absolute injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Private injuries are infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals.

Public injuries are breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Injuries to personal property are the unlawful taking and detention thereof from the owner; and other injuries are some damage affecting the same while in the claimant's possession or that of a third person, or injuries to his reversionary interests.

Injuries to real property are ousters, trespasses, nuisances, waste, subtraction of rent, disturbance of right of way, and the like.

Relative injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediately affected by the wrongful act done.

It is obvious that the divisions overlap each other, and that the same act may be, for example, a relative, a private, and a public injury at once. For many injuries of this character the offender may be obliged to suffer punishment for the publio wrong and to reoompense the sufferer for the partioular loss which be has sustained. The distinotion is more commonly marked by the use of the terms civil injuries to denote private injuries, and of crimes, misdemeanors, etc. to denote the publie injury done: though not always; as, for example, in ease of a public nuisance which may be also a private nuisance.
2. Injuries arise in three ways: first, by nonfeasance, or the not doing what was a legal obligation, or duty, or contract, to perform; second, misfeasance, or the performance in an improper manner of an act which it was either the party's duty or his contract to perform ; third, malfeasance, or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right or which he had contracted not to do.

The remedies are different as the injury affects private individuals or the public. When the injuries affect a private right and a private individual, although often also affecting the public, there are three descriptions of remedies: first, the preventive, such as defence, resistance, recaption, abatement of nuisance, surety of the peace, injunction, etc.; second, remedies for compensation, which may be by arbitration, suit, action, or summary procecdings before a justice of the peace; third, proceedings for punishment, as by indictment, or summary proceedings before a justice. When the injury is such as to affect the public, it becomes a crime, misdemeanor, or offence, and the party may be punished by indictment or summary conviction for the public injury, and by civil action at the suit of the party for the private wrong. But in cases of felony the remedy by action for the private injury is generally suspended until the party particularly injured has fulfilled his duty to the public by prosecuting the offender for the puhlic crime; and in cases of homicide the remedy is merged in the felony. 1 Chitty, Pract. 10; Ayliffe, Pand. 592.
3. There are many injuries for which the law affords no remedy. In general, it interferes only when there has been a visible physical injury inflicted, while it leaves almost totally unprotected the whole class of the most malignant mental injuries and sufferings, unless in a few cases where, by a fiction, it supposes some pecuniary loss, and sometimes affords compensation to wounded feelings. A parent, for example, cannot sue, in that charncter, for an injury inflicted on his child, and when his own domestic happiness has been destroyed, unless the fact will sustain the allegation that the daughter was the servant of her father, and that by reason of such seduction he lost the henefit of her services. Another instance may be mentioned. A party cannot recover damages for verbal slander in many cases: as, when the facts published are true; for the defendant would justify, and the party injured must fail. Nor will the law punish criminally the author of verbal slander imputing even the most infamous crimes, unless done with intent to extort a chattel, money, or valuable thing. The law presumes, perhaps unnaturally enough, that a man is incapable of being alarmed or affected by such injuries to his feelings. See 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 320.
4. The true and sufficient reason for these rules would seem to be the uncertain character of the injury inflicted, the impossibility of compensation, and the danger, supposing a pecuniary compensation to be attempted, that injustice would be done under the excitement of the case. The sound principle, as the experience of the law amply indicates, is to inflict a punishment for crime, but not put up for sale, by the agency of a court of justice, those wounded feelings which would constitute the ground of the action.

In Civil Law. A delict committed in contempt or outrage of any one, whereby his body, his dignity, or his reputation is malicionsly injured. Voet, Com. ad Pand. 47, t. 10, n. 1.

A real injury is inflicted by any fact by which a person's honor or dignity is affected: as, striking one with a cane, or even aiming a blow without striking; spitting in one's face; assuming a coat of arms, or any other mark of distinction, proper to another, etc. The composing and publishing defamatory libels may be reckoned of this kind. Erskine, Pract. 4. 4. 45.

A verbal injury, when directed against a private person, consists in the uttering contumelious words, which tend to injure his character by making him little or ridiculous. Where the offensive words are uttered in the heat of a dispute and spoken to the person's face, the law does not presume any malicious intention in the utterer, whose resentment generally subsides with his passion; and yet even in that case the truth of the injurious words seldom absolves entirely from punishment. Where the injurions expressions have a tendency to blacken one's moral character or fix some particular guilt upon him, and are deliberately repeated in different companies, or handed about in whispers to confidauts, the crime then becomes slander, agreeably to the distinction of the Roman law, Dig. 15, & 12, de Injur.

INNINGS. Lands gained from the sea by draining. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Law of Sewers, 31.
INNKEEPER. The keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travellers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. Bacon, Abr. Inns, etc.; Story, Bailm. & 475. But one who entertains strangers occasionally, although he may receive compensation for it, is not an innkeeper. 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 424; 7 Ga. 296; 1 Morr. Tenn. 184. See Guest; Boarder.

He is bound to take in and receive all travellers and wayfaring persons, and to entertain them, if he can accommodate them, for a reasonable compensation, 5 Term, 274; 3 Barnew. \& Ald. 285; 1 Carr. \& K. 404; 7 Carr. \& P. 213; 4 Exch. 367; and he must guard their goods with proper diligence. He is liable only for the goods which are bronght within the inn. 8 Coke, 32 ; Jones, Bailm. 91. A delivery of the goods into the personal custody of the innkeeper is not, however, necessary in order to make him responsible; for, although he may not know any thing of such goods, he is bound to pay for them if they are stolen or carried away, even by an unknown person, 8 Coke, 32 ; 1 Hayw. No. C. 41; 14 Johns. N. Y. 175 ; 23 Wend. N. Y. 642; 5 Barb. N. Y. $560 ; 7$ Cush. Mass. 114 ; see 25 Eng. L. \& Eq. 91 ; 27 Miss. 668; 1 Bell, Comm. 469; and if he receive the guest, the custody of the goods may be considered as an accessory to the principal contract, and the money paid for the apartments as extending to the care of the box and portmanteau. Jones, Bailm. 94 ; Story, Bailm. $\frac{z}{8} 470 ; 1$ Blackstone, Comm. 430 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 458-463. The liability of an innkeeper is the same in character and extent with that of a common carrier. 9 Pick. Mass. 280; 7 Cush. Mass. 417 ; 9 Humphr. Tenn. $746 ; 1$ Cal. $221 ; 8$ Barnew. \& C. $9 ; 31$ Me. 478: 8 Blackf. Ind. 535. See 5 Q. B. 164; 23 Vt. 177; 26 id. 317 ; 14 Ill. 129. He is responsible for the acts of his domestics and servants, as well as for the.acts of his other guests, if the goods are stolen or lost, 7 Cush. Mass. 417; 5 Barb. N. Y. 560; but he is not responsible for any tort or injury done by his servants or others to the person of his guest, without his own co-operation or consent. 8 Coke, 32 . The innkeeper will be exensed whenever the luss has occurred through the fault of the guest. Story, Bailm. \& 483 ; 4 Maule. \& S. 306 ; 1 Stark. 251, n.; 2 Kent, Comm. 461; 1 Yeates, Penn. 34. He must furnish reasonalle accommodations. See 8 Mees. \& W. Exch. 269.
The innkeeper is entitled to a just compensation for his care and trouble in taking care of his guest and his property; and, to enable him to obtain this, the law invests him with some peculiar privileges, giving him a lien upon the goods brought into the inn by the guest, and, it has been said, upon the person of his guest, for his compensation, 3 Barnew. & Ald. 287; 8 Mod. 172; 1 Show. 270; see 7 Carr. & P. 67; 3 Hill, N. Y. 4&5; 1 Rich. So. C. 213 ; 26 Vt. 335 ; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 248 ; Bacon, Abr. Inns, etc. (D); and this though the goods belong to a third person, if he was ignorant of the fact. 3 Stark. 172; 12 Q. B. 197; 7 Carr. & P. 208; 11 Barb. N. Y. 41. As to detaining the horse of a ginest, see 25 Wend. N. Y. 654; 9 Pick. Mass. 280. The landlord may also bring an action for the recovery of his compensation.

See, generally, 1 Viner, Abr. 224 ; 14 id. 436; Bacon, Abr.; Yelv. 67 a, $162 a$; 2 Kent, Comm. 458; Ayliffe, Pand. 266.
An innkeeper in a town through which lines of stages pass has no right to exclude the driver of one of these lines from his yard and the common public rooms where travellers are usually placed, who ccmes there at proper hours, and in a proper manner, to solicit passengers for his coach and without doing any injury to the innkeeper. $8 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H}$. 523.

INNOCENCE. The absence of guilt.
The law presumes in favor of innocence, even against another presumption of law: for example, when a wcman marries a second husband within the space of twelve months after her husband had left the couniry, the presumption of innocence preponderates over the presumption of the continuance of life. 2 Barnew. \& Ald. 386; 3 Starkie, Ev. 1249. See 2 Ad. \& E. 540 ; 1 Q. B. 449 ; 1 Hou. L. Cas. 498. An exception to this rule respecting the presumption of innocence has been made in the case of the publication of a libel, the principal being presumed to have authorized the cale, when a libel is sold by his agent in his usual place of doing business. The same rule applies to publishers of newspapers. 1 Russell, Crimes, 341 ; 10 Johns. N. Y. 443 ; Buller, Nisi P. 6; 1 Green. leaf, Ev. 8 36. See $4 \mathrm{Nev} . \& \mathrm{M} .341 ; 2$ id. 219; 2 Ad. \& E. 540; 5 Barnew. \& Ad. 86; 1 Stark. 21.
INNOCENT CONVEYANCES. In English Law. Atechnical term used to signify those conveyances made by a tenant of his leasehold which do not occasion a forfeiture: these are conveyances by lease and release, bargain and sale, and a covenant to stand seised by a tenant for life. 1 Chitty, Pract. $243,244$.

INNOMINATE CONTRACTS. In Civil Law. Contracts which have no particular names, as pernutation and transaction. Inst. 2. 10.13. There are many innominate contracts; but the Roman lawyers reduced them to four classes, namely, do ut des, do ut facias, facio ut des, and facio ut facias. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 2.

INNOTESCIMUS (Lat.). In English Law. An epithet used for letters-patent, which are always of a charter of feoffment, or some other instrument not of record, concluding with the words Innotescimus per prosentes, etc. Tech. Dict.

INNOVATION. In Scotch Law. The exchange of one obligation for another, so that the second shall come in the place of the first. Bell, Dict. The same as Novation.

INNS OF COURT. The name given to the colleges of the English professors and students of the common law.

The four principal Inns of Court are the Inner Temple and Middle Temple (formerly helonging to the Knights Templar), Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn (anciently belonging to the earls of Lincoln and Gray). The other inns are the two Sergeants' Inns. The Inns of Chancery were probably so called because they were once inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the forming of writs, which regularly belonged to the cursitors, who are officers of chancery. These are Thavie's Ion, the New Inn, Symond's Inn, Clement's Inn, Clifford's Inn, Staple's Inn, Lion's Inn, Furnival's Inn, and Barnard's Inn.

INNUENDO (Lat. innuere, to nod at, to hint at; meaning. The word was used when pleadings were in Latin, and has been translated by " meaning").

In Pleading. A clause in a declaration, indictment, or other pleading containing an averment which is explanatory of some preceding word or statement.

It derives its name from the leading word by which it was always introduced when pleadings were in Latin. It is mostly used in actions of slander, and is then said to be a subordinate averment, connecting particular parts of the publication with what has gone hefore, in order to elucidate the defendant's meaning more fully. 1 Starkie, Sland. 431.
2. Its object is to explain the defendant's meaning by reference to previous matter. See Colloquium. It may be used to point to the plaintiff as the person intended in the defendant's statement. It may show that a general imputation of crime is intended to apply to the plaintiff, Heard, Sland. & 226 ; 1 Hou. L. Cas. 637; 2 Hill, N. Y. 282; but it cannot be allowed to give a new sense to words where there is no such charge. 8 Q . B. 825 ; 7 C. B. 280.
3. It may point to the injurious and actionable meaning, where the words complained of are susceptible of two meanings, 8 Q. B. 841 ; Moore & S. 727, and generally explain the preceding matter, 1 Dowl. n. s. 602; 7 C. B. 251 ; 15 id. 360 ; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 245; 5 Bingh. 17; 10 id. 250; 12 Ad. & E. 317 ; but cannot enlarge and point the effect of language beyond its natural and common meaning in its usual acceptation, Heard, Sland. 8219 ; Metc. Yelv. 22; 2 Salk. 513; 1 Ld. Raym. 256; 2 Cowp. 688; 4 Perr. & D. 161; 6 Barnew. & C. 154; 4 Nev. & M. 841; 4 Dowl. 703; 9 Ad. & E. 282; 12 id. 719; 15 Pick. INOFEICIOSUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or of that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti. Dig. 2.5.3,13; Paulus, lỉb. 4, tit. 5, & 1 .

INOFICIOCIDAD. In Spanish Law.

Every thing done contrary to a duty or obligation assumed, as well as in opposition to the piety and affection dictated by nature: inofficiosum dicitur id omne quod contra pietatis officium factum est. The term applies especially to testaments, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.
INOPS CONSILII (Lat.). Destitute or without counsel. In the construction of wills a greater latitude is given, because the testator is supposed to have been inops consilii.

INQUEST. A body of men appointed by law to inquire into certain matters: as, the inquest examined into the facts connected with the alleged murder. The grand jury is sometimes called the grand inquest.

The judicial inquiry itself, by a jury summoned for the purpose, is called an inquest. The finding of such men, upon an investigar tion, is also called an inquest, or an inqui sition.
INQUEST OF OFFICE. An inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, either virtute officii, or by writ sent to him for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. It is done by a jury of no determinate number,-either twelve, or more, or less. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 258; Finch, Law, 323-325. An inquest of office was bound to find for the king upon the direction of the court. The reason given is that an inquest concluded no man of his right, but only gave the king an opportunity to enter, so that he could have his right tried. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 260; 4 Stephen, Comm. 61; F. Moore, 730; Vangh. 135; 3 Hen. VII. 10; 2 Hen. IV. 5; 3 Leon. 196. An inquest of office was also called, simply, " office." As to " office" in the United States, see 1 Caines, N. Y. 426 ; 7 Cranch, 603; 2 Kent, Comm. 16, 23.

INQUIRY, WRIT OF. A writ sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant has let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment has been given for damages generally, where the damages do not admit of calculation. It issues to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, and commands him to inquire, by a jury of twelve men, concerning the amount of damages. The sheriff thereupon tries the cause in his sheriff's court, and some amount mnst always be returned to the court. But the return of the inqnest merely informs the court, which may, if it choose, in all cases assess damages and thereupon give final judgment. 2 Archbold, Pract. Waterman ed. 952 ; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 398; 3 Chitty, Stat. 495, 497.
inedisition. In Practice. Anexamination of certain facts by a jury impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose. The instrument of writing on which their decision is made is also called an inquisition. The sheriff or coroner, and the jury who make the inquisition, are called the inquest.

An inquisition on an untimely death, if omitted by the coroner, may be taken by justices of gaol delivery and oyer and terminer, or of the peace; but it must be done publicly and openly: otherwise it will be quashed. Inquisitions either of the coroner or of the other jurisdictions are traversable. 1 Burr. 18, 19.
INQUISITOR. A designation of sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.
In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them. A judge.

INROLMENT, ENROLIMENT

 (Law Lat. irrotulatio). The act of putting upon a roll.Formerly, the record of a suit was kept on skins of parchment, which, best to preserve them, ware kept upon a roll or in the form of a roll; what was written upon them was ealled the inrolment. After, when such reoorde came to be kept in books, the muking up of the record retained the old name of inrolment. Thus, in equity, the inrolment of a decree is the recording of it, and will prevent the rehearing of the cause, except on sppesl to the honse of lords or by bill of review. The decree may be inrolled immediately after it has been passed and entered, ualeas a caveat has been entered. 2 Freem. 179; 4 Juhne. Cb. 199; 14 Juhns. N. Y. 501 . And before eigniog and inrulment a decree cannot be pleaded in bar of a suit, though it can be insisted on by way of answer. 3 Attk. Ch. 809; 2 Ves. Ch. 577; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 199. See Ssuoders, Orders in Chanc. Inrolment.

Transcribing upon the records of a court deeds, etc. according to the statutes on the subject. See 1 Chitty, Stat. 425, 426; 2 id. 69, 76-78; 3 id. 1497. Placing on file or record generally, as annuities, attorneys, etc.
INSANITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. The prolonged departure, without any adequate cause, from the states of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual in health.
2. Of late years this word bas been used to designate all mental impairments and deficiencies formerly embraced in the terms lunacy, idiocy, and unsoundiness of mind. Even to the middle of the last century the law recognized only two classes of persons requiring ite protcetion on the score of mental disorder, viz.: lunatien and idiots. The former were supposed to embrace all who had lost the reason which they once pussessed, and their disorder was called dementia accidentalis; the latter, those who had never possesscd any reason, and this deficiency was called dementia naturalig. Lunatics were supposed to be much influenced by the moon; and another prevalent notion respecting them was that in a very large proportion there occurrod lucid intervala, when reason shone out, for a while, from behind the cluod that obscured it, with ite natural brightness. It may be remarked, in passing, that lucid intervals are far less common than they were once supposed to be, and that the restoration is not so complete as the deseriptions of the older writers would lead us to infer. In modern practice, the term lucid interval signifies merely a remission of the disease, an abatement of the violence of the morbid action, a period of comparative ealm; and the proof of its oceurrence is generally drawn from the character of the act in question. It is hardiy neeessary to say that this is an unjustifiable use of the term, which should he confined to the genuine lucid interval that does oceasionally oceur.
It began to be found at last that a large class of persons required the protection of the law, who were aot idiots, because they had reason once, nor lunaties in the ordinary signification of the term, because they were not riolent, exhibited no very notahle derangement of reason, were independent of lunar influences, aud had no lyeid intervals. Their mental impairment consisted in a loss of intellectual power, of interest in their usu $^{\circ} 1$ parsuits, of the ability to comprehend their relations to persons and things. A new term—unsoundness of mind-was, therefore, introdnced to meet this exigency; but it has never been very clearly defined.
3. The law has never held that all lunaties snd idiots are absulved from all responsibility for their civil or criminal acta. This oonsequence was attributed oaly to the severest grades of these affectimns, -to lunaties who have no more understanding than a brute, end to idiots who cannot number twenty penoe sor tell how old they are. Theoretically the law has changed but little, ev $\sim$ n to the presentday: but praotically it exhibits considerable improvement: that is, while the general doctrine remains unchanged, it is qualifed, in one way or another, by the courts, so as to produce less practicsl injustice.
Insanity implies the presence of disease or congenital defect io the brain, and though it may be accompanied by disense in other organs, yet the cerebral affection is alwnys supposed to be primary and predominant. It is tu be borme in mind, howevcr, that bodily disoases may be accompanied, in some stage of their progress, by mental disorder which may affect the legal relations of the pationt.
4. To give a definition of insanity not congenital, or, in other words, to indicate its essential eloment, the present state of our knowledge does not permit. Most of the attempts to defioe insanity are sententions deseriptions of the disease, rather than proper definitions. For all practicul purposes, however, a definition is unnecessary, becauso tho real question at issue alwnys is, not what constitutes insanity in gencral, but wherein coasists the iasanity of this or that individual. Noitber sanity nor insanity can be regarded as an entity to be bandled and described, but rather as a condition to be cunsidered in reference to other conditions. Men vary in the character of their mental manifestations, insomuch that oondnct and conversation perfectly proper and natural in ons might in another, differeatly constituted, be Indicative of insanity. In determining, tberefore, the mental condition of a person, be must not be judged by any arbitrary standard of sanity or insanity, nor compared with other persons unquestionably sans or insine. He can properly be compared only with himself. When a person, without any adequate cause, adopts notions bo once regarded as absurd, or indulges in conduct opposed to all bis former babits and principles, or chanyes completely his ordinary temper, mannars, and dispositions, - the man of plain practical sense indulging in speculative theorics and projects, the miser becouling a spendthrift and the spendthrift a miser, the staid, quiet, unobtrusive citizen becoming noisy, restless, and boisterons, the gay and joyous becoming dull and disconslate even to the vergo of despair, the careful, cautious man of business plunging into hazardous schemes of speculation, the discreet and pious becoining shamefully reckless and profligate,-no stronger proof of insanity cun be had. And yet but one of these traits, in and by itself alone, disennnected from the nutural traits of character, could be regarded as eonelusivo proof of insanity. In accordance with this fact, the priaciple bas been laid down, with the sanction of the highest legal and medical authority, that it is the prolonged departure, without any adcquate cause, from the states of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual when in health, which is the essential feature of iosunity. Gooch, Lond. Quart. Rev. xliii. 355 ; Combe, Ment. Derang. 196 ; Meidway va. Croft, 3 Curt. Ecel. 671.
5. That insanity, in some of its forms, annuls all criminal responsibility, and, in the same or other forms, disqualifies its subject from the performance of certain civil acts, is a well-established doctrine of the common law. In the application of this principle there has prevailed, for many years, the utmost diversity of opinion. The law as expounded by Hale, Pleas of the Crown, 30, was reccived without question until the beginning of the present century. In the trial of Iladfield, Mr. Erskine contended that the true test of such insanity as annulled responsibility for crime was delusion; and accordingly the prisoner was acguitted with the approbation of the court. Subsequently, in Bellingham's case, 5 Carr. & P. 168, the court declared that the prisoner was responsible if he knew right from wrong, or knew that murder was a crime against the laws of God and nature.

Similar language was used in Reg. vs. Itigginson, 1 Carr. & K. 129 ; Reg. vs. Stokes, 3 Carr. & K. 185. This test has sometimes heen moditied so as to make the knowledge of right and wrong refer solely to the act in question. Rex vs. Offord, 5 Carr. & P. 168; 9 id. 525; Reg. vs. Vaughan, 1 Cox, Crim. Cas. 80; Reg. vs. Barton, 3 Cox, Crim. Cas. 275 ; Reg. vs. Pate, Lond. Times, July 12, 1850; State vs. Spenecr, 1 Zallr. N.J. 196; Pcople vs. Freeman, 4 Den. N.Y. 29. This was formally pronounced to be the law of the land by the English judges, in their reply to the questions propounded by the house of lords on occasion of the McNaughton trial. 10 Clark & F. IIou. L. 200. A disposition to multiply the tests, so as to recognize essential facts in the nature of insanity, has been occasionally manifested in this country. In Com. vs. Rogers, 7 Mete. Mass. 500, the jury were directed to consider, in addition to the above test, whether the prisoner, in committing the homicide, acted from an irresistible and uncontrollable impulse; and this case has been much relied on in American courts. Ray, Med. Jur. 58. Occasionally the court has thought it sufficient for the jury to consider whether the prisoner was sane or in-sane,-of sound memory and discretion, or otherwise. State vs. Wilson; State ve. Cory; State vs. Prescott; Ray, Med. Jur. 55.
6. To this remarkable diversity of views may be attributed, in some measure, no donbt, the actual diversity of results. To any one who has folluwed with some attention the course of criminal justice in trials where insanity has been pleaded in defence, it is obvious that, if some have been properly convicted, others have just as improperly been acquitted. It must be admitted, however, that the verdict in such cases is often deternined less by the instructions of the court than by tho views and feelings of the jury and the testimony of experts.

Side by side with this doctrine of the criminal law which makes the insune responsible for their criminal acts is another equally well authorized, viz.: that a kind and degree of insanity which would not excuse a person for a criminal act may render him legally incompetent to the management of himself or his affairs. Bellingham's case, Collinson, 657. This implies that the mind of an insane person acts more clearly and deliberately, and with a sounder view of its relations to others, when ahout to commit a great crime than when buying or selling a piece of property. It is scarcely necessary to add that no ground for this distinction can be found in our knowledge of mental disease. On the contrary, we know that the same person who destroys his neighbor, under the delusion that he has been disturbing his peace or defaming his character, may, at the very time, dispose of his property with as correct an estimate of its value and as clear an insight into the consequences of the act as he ever had. If a person is incompetent to mauage property, it is because he has lost some portion of his mental power ; and this fact cannot be justly ignored in deciding upon his responsibility for criminal acts. Insanity once admitted, it is within the reach of no mortal comprehension to know exactly how far it may have affected the quality of his acta. To say that, poasibly, it may have had no effect at all, is not enough: it sbould be proved by the party who afirms it.
\%. More elearly reflecting the light of science, the French penal code says there can be no crime nor offence if the accused were in a state of madness at the time of the act. Art. 6t. The same provision was introduced into Livingston's Code and into the Revised Statutes of New York, vol. 2, $\mathrm{z}_{6} 697$. The law of Arkansas provides that a lunatic or insane person without lucid intervals shall not be found guilty of any crime or misdemeanor with whieh he may be eharged. Rev. Stat. 236. In New York, however, in spite of this clear and positive provision of law, the courts have always acted upon the doetrines of the eommon law, and instructed the jury respeeting the tests of that kind of inganity which annuls eriminal responsibility. Freeman in Error vs. The People, 10 Bost. Law Rep. 12. In this ease, the court (C. J. Beardsley) deelared that the insanity mentioned in the statute means only insanity in referenee to the criminal act, and therefore its qualities must be defined.
8. The effect of the plea of insanity has aometimes been controlled by the instractions of the court in regard to the burden of proof and the requisite amount. The older doctrine was that the person is to be eonsidered sane until proved beyond a doubt to be insane. Thus, in State vs. Spencer, 1 Zabr. N.J. 196, the court (C. J. Hornblower) said, "Where it is admitted, or elearly proved, that he [the prisoner] committed the act, but it is insisted that he was insane at the time, -and the evidence leaves the question of insanity in doubt,--there the jury ought to find against him." Of late years, and especially in this country, a very different doetrine has prevailed to some extent. Thus, on an appeal for a new trial in People vs. MeCann, 16 N. Y. 58 , it was held, all the judges coneurring, "that it was an error in the judge to charge the jury that, aanity being the normal state, there is no presumption of insanity ; that the burden of proving it is upon the prisoner, that a failure to prove it, like a failure to prove any other fact, is the misfortane of the party attempting the proof, and thus they must be satisfied of his insanity beyond a reasonable doubt, or otherwise must eonviet." S 0 , too, in Com. vs. Rogera, 7 Metc. Mass. 500, the court (C. J. Shaw) told the jury "that if the preponderance of the evidenee were in favor of his insanity,-if its bearing and leaning, as a whole, inclined that way,一they would be authorized to find him insane." INSOLVENCY (Lat.in, privative, solvo, to free, to pay). Tho state of a person who is insolvent or unable from any cause to pay his debts, 2 Blackstone, Comm. 285, 47I, or who is unable to pay his debts as they fall due in the usual course of trade or business. .2 Kent, Comm. 389; La. Civ. Code, art. '1980; 3 Dowl. & R. 218; 1 Maule & S. 338 ; 1 Campb. 492, n. ; Sugden, Vend. 487 ; 3 Gray, Mass. 600.
2. The distinction hetween bankruptey and insolvency which is taken by jurists and necurate law writers aeems to be little regarded in eommon use, or even by the oourta, in many of the American states. In its primary sense, insolvency has a much more extensive aignification than bankruptcy. The latter, which is one species or phase of the former, denotes the condition of a trader or merchant who is unable to pay his debts in the eourse of business, 2 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 162; 1 Maule \& S. 338; 5 Dowl. \& R. 218; 4 Hill, N. Y. 850; 4 Cush. Mass. 134. (Hence its derivation from bancus ruptus, signifying the broken bench or counter, per Story, J., 3 Stor. C. C. 453 ; art. Banker, Eneye. Brit. (1860), or from banqueroute, a word of disputed etymology.) The bankrupt, says Blackstone, "is a trader who secretes himself, or does certain other acte tending to defraud his creditors." (Fraud is also implied in France by the use of banqueroutier as distinguished from the simple failli.) And the preamble to the statute 34 $\& 35 \mathrm{Hen}$ VIII. cap. 6 (A. d. 1542), is as follows: "Whercas divers and sundry persona, craftily obtaining into their own hands great substance of other men's goods, do suddenly flee to parts unknown, or keep their bouses, not minding to pay or restere to any of their creditors thcir debta and duties, but, at their own wills and pleasures, eonaume the substance obtained by credit of other men for their own pleasure and delicate living, egainst all reason, equity, and gond ennscience." From these passages it appeare that originally the word bankrupt could only be applied to a dishoneat merehant or trader. The meaning, however, is now so far changed that no dishonesty is implied from the status of bankruptcy; but the word is still properly applied only to traders or merchants. Therefore the parliamentary commissioners of 1840 report, "The immediate objeet of the bankrupt law is the equal distribution of the debtor's property among hia creditors, and the diseharge of the hon est trader. The object of the law for the relief of insolvent debtors is the personal discharge of honest debtors, prolonged imprisonment fur the dishonest and fraudulent, and a fair distribution of their present and future acquired property among their creditors." Insolvency, then, as distinguished from strict bankruptey, is the condition or siatus of one who is unable to pay his debts ; and insolvent laws are distinguished from atrict bankrnptey laws by the following charaeteristics.
3. Bankruptey laws apply only to traders or merchants; insolvent laws, to these who are not traders or merchants. Bankrupt laws discharge absolutely the debt of the honest debtor, 12 Wheat. $230 ; 4$ id. 122, 209; 2 Mas. C. C. 161; 2 Blackf. Ind. $394 ; 3$ Caines, N. Y. 154; 26 Wend. N. Y. 43; 1 East, 6, 11; 5 id. 124; 4 Barnew. \& Ald. 654; 1 Baldw. C. C. 296. Insolvent laws discharge the person of the debtor from arrest and imprisonment, but leave the future acquisitions of the debtor still liable to the creditor. 4 Wheat. 122 ; 3 Harr. \& J. Md. 61. Both laws contemplate an equal, fair, and honeat division of the debtor's present effects among his creditors pro rata. A bankrupt law may contain those regulations which are generally found in insolvent laws, and an insolvent law may contain those which are common to a bankrupt law. Per Marghrll, C. J., 4 Wheat. 195; 1 Woodb. \& M. C. C. 115. And insolvent laws quite eoextensive with the English bankrupt syatem have not been unfrequent in our colenial and state legislation, and no distinction was ever attempted to be made in the same between bankruptcies and insolvencies. Story, Comm. on Const. U. S. vel. 3, p. 11. By art. 1, 3 , , of the constitution of the United Statea, "congress shall have power to establish an uniform rule on the subject of . . . bankruptcies throughout the United States." From a desire of avoiding what might acem to be an infringement upon an exclusive right of congress, the laws passed by the various states-with the exception of Texas-upon the subject, whether properly insolvent or bankrupt laws, have been termed insolvent laws. In Texas there is a "bankrupt law." And when congress exarcised its constitutional right to pass a bankruptcy law, by the act "to establiah a uniform syatam of bankruptey throughoat the United States," 19 Angust, 1841, all persons were included within its operation, and were allowed, upon petition, to be discharged from their debts. The law of congress randered inoperative the state insolvent laws; and, under certsin circumatances, traders oould be proceeded against apon petition of thair creditors. Ths proviaion in the bankrupt act rendering it properly an insolvent act, boing excluaively in operation, gavs riae to serioua doubts whe- ther the act was within the purview of the conatitution ( 5 Hill, N. Y. 317, 327, Bronson, J., diaaenting; 1 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 404 ; 12 Metc. Mass. 428; 6 Ark. 35 ; $25 \mathrm{Ms.232}$; 3 Gilm. Va. 225, hold the act constitutional ; contra, 2 N. Y. Lag. Oba. 184), and finally led to its repeal, Mareh 3,1843. Encyc. Brit. Banleruptey; 2 Kent, Comm. 391, n. a. Thersfore, in the United States, both the legislation of congress and of the separate atatea has tended to obliterate the true distinction between bankruptey and insolveney. The first bankrupt law, passed by congress in 1800, limited to five years, and expiring with its limitation, was modelled upon the English bankruptoy acts then in oparation, and, like them, was only applicable to merchants. Ses Act March 3, 1791, 1 Story, Lawa U. S. 465; Act Mareh 2, 1799, 1 Story, Laws U. S. 630 ; Act March 3, 1841, 4 Sharswood, Cont. Sto. L. U. S. 2236 ; Act Jan. 7, 1834, 4 Sharswood, Cont. Stc. $L$. U. S. 2258; Act March 2, 1837, 4 Sharswood, Cont. Sto. L. U. S. 2536.

4. Besides the power vasted in congress of making uniform lawa for the regulation of bankraptcies, Const. of U. S. art. $1, & 8$, it is provided, art. $1, z 10$, Const. of U. S., that "no state shall pass any, - . law impairing the obligation of contracts" (q.v.). By these clauses it was generally understood that congress posaessed the exclusive regulation of both bankraptcy and inaolvency. But the queation how far the states may legislate upon these aubjecta came to he fally discuased in the celabrated case Ogden ve. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 218. The decision of that ease recognized much larger powers in the states than had previously been aupposed to exist. It was held that the power of making a bankrupt law whieh ahall he applioable and binding apon all ereditors and all deseriptiona of debta resides in congress; when congreas exercises its power, it is excluaive, and by its exerciss the state insolvent laws (so called) are rendered inoparative, 9 Metc. Mass. 16; contra, 2 Ired. No. C. 463 ; but that a state insolvent law, whereby it is provided that a dsbtor on giviog up his property to hia creditors ia absolutely discharged from further liability, will, as long as there is no act of congress on hankruptcy, be valid in respect to craditors reaiding in auch state, and to contracts made in the state subsequently to the passage of auch insolvent law. 5 How. 295; 1 Cash. 430-434, n.; 14 N.H. 38 ; 10 Metc. Mass. 594; 12 id. 470 ; 26 Ms. 110; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 115; 5 Gill, Md. 437. Therefore such on inaolvent law cannot be made to apply to contracts made within the state between a citizen of ths atate and one who is a citizen of anothsr state, 12 Wheat. 213, nor to contracts not mads within the stato. 1 M'All. C. C. 226, 523. Consequantly, an insolvent law of a state, however general ita provisions, can have only a partial and limited affect aa a bankrupt law. In oases where the state has complate jurisdiction, such a law may have all the essential opsration of a bankrupt law, not being limited to a mere diacharge of the person of the debtor on surrendering hia effects. If a creditor out of a state voluntarily makes himaslf a party to proceedings nnder the insolvent laws of the state, and sceapts a dividend, hs ia bound by his own act, and is deemed to have waived hia ex-territorial immunity and right. 4 Wheat. 122; 12 id. 213; 8 Pick. Simple insolvency is attended by no badge of notoriety. Notorious or legal insolvency, with which the law has to do, is designated by some public act or legal proceeding. Thia is the aituation of a peraon who has done some notorious act to divast himself of all his proparty: aa, making an assignmeat, applying for relief, or having been proceeded against in invitum under bankrupt or insolvent laws. 1 Pat. 195; 2 Wheat. 396; 7 Toullier, n. 45; Domat, liv. 4, tit. 5, na. 1, 2; 2 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 165.
5. It is with regard to the latter that the insolvency laws (so called) are operative. They are generally atatutory provisions by which the property of the debtor is surrendered for his debta; and upon this condition, and the assent of a certain proportion of hia creditors, he is diacharged from all further liabilities. 9 Mass. 431 ; 16 id. 53 ; 2 Kant, Comm. 321 ; Ingraham, Insolv. 9. This legal insolvency may exiat without actnsl inability to pay one'a dabta when the debtor'a eatate is finally aettled and wound up. (Sae definition, 2d branch, beginning of this article.) 3 Gray, Mass. 600 . Insolvenay, accarding to soms of the state statutea, may be of two kinda, voluntary and involuntary. The latter is called the proceeding agsinst the creditor in invitum. Voluntary insolvency, which is the more common, is the case in which the debtor institutes the procedings, and is desirous of availing himself of the insolvent lawa, aud petitions for that purpose.
6. Involuntary insolvency is where the procesdinga are instituted by the creditors in inrinum, and so the dabtor forced into iosolvency. The circumstances entitling eithar debtor or creditors to invoks the aid of the insolvent law ars in a messure peculiar to each atate. But their general characteristics are as followa. In cases of voluntary inaolvency, the debtor must owe a certain amount,-which anount, with his inability to pay the same, mast be ast forth in his petition. The creditora are usually entitled to proceed in invitum to petition to have the debtor declared insolvent and his effecta taken possession of and distribated, upon the following grounda: that the creditor has fraudalently concealed his property, or has eunveyed it away, or has allowed it to be attached and to remain so for a certaia langth of time without dissolving the attaohment. The officers before whom insolvency prooeedings may ba had are, in the different states, judgea (who are frequently judgea of probate also), commiagioners in insolvency, masters in chancery, etc. They are appointed for the purpose, and proceedings are commenced by petition, which set forth the facts upon which the claim for relief is founded. Upon a patition of a debtor the facts are commonly taken to be true as set forth in the petition. A messenger or offiesr of the court is immediately sent to taka possession of the property of the dehtor, and a oall is issued to the various oreditors to attend a meeting. In a proceeding in invitum by the craditors, the facts alleged must be proved before the warrant can be issued.

And the debtor is usually entitled to notice of the proccedings instituted against him, and may appear and show eause, if any he hus, why a eommission should not issue against him. The first step taken by the magistrate in a case properly before him is to take possession, by means of his officer, of the debtor's effects, which in some cuses the messenger may be directed to sell for the benefit of all concerned (as in the case of perishable articlos, etc.). Theo, a meoting of creditors being ealled, an assignec is chosen in a way provided by statute. In his choice the creditors are considered both with regard to their numbers and anounts due them. To the assignce all the property is transferred, or ordered to be transferred, by the magistrate, by virtue of the powers by law vested in hin. This assignee becomes to all intents and purposes the owner of the property of the debtor, and, as ageat for his creditors, bas power to sell, dispose of, collect, and reduce to money all the property of the debtor. He calls meetings of the creditors, when directed so to do by the magistrate, and transacts all the other busiaess and performs all the duties by law imposed upon him. The right of a debtor to a discharge is very different in the various states of America. In some the honest debtor may obtain a discharge, however small a percentage of his debts he may pay. In others be is entitled to a discharge upon the paymeut of a certain percentage, or upon obtaioing the asseot of a majority of the creditors. It is also provided by the statutes of some of the states that the sccond or third discbarge shall not be obtaincd at all, or as easily as in the first instance of insolvency.

The refusing to discharge a debtor upon the ground that he has been guilty of fraudulent conduct is also subject to state legislation. Certain acts are made presumptive evidence of fraud: as, the securiog of debts within a certain time before the application for the discharge. Such times arc regulated by the statutcs, and, commoaly, the times limited are six months or one fear. In some states, if a pre-existing debt has been paid or aecured within a year prior to being declared insolvent, the debtor having reasonable cause at the time to suppose himself insolvent, his discharge will not be granted.
7. In Eagland, besides the Bankrupt Act, 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. cap. 6, A.D. 1542 , which has beell mentioned, there have been many acts of parliament amending and revising previous legislation upo the subject. Among the most important of these are the act of 1570 ; the act of 1825 (6 Geo. IV. cap. 16), called the Samuel Romilly's Act, act of 1831 ( $1 & 2$ Will. IV. cap. 56), callerl Lord Brougham's Act; the act of 1849 ( 12 & 13 Vict. cap. 106, \% 178). Although this system has becn the growth of more than three centuries, and has been matured by the talents and experience of the wisest and most distinguished men in chancery, Lord Eldon, as late as 1801, upon succeeding to the great seal, cxpressed his indignation against the frauds committed under cover of the system. He said that its aluse was a disgrace to the country, and that it would be better at once to repeal all the statutes than to suffer them to be applied to sach parposes. There was no mercy to the estate. Nothing was less thought of than the ohject of the commission. As they were frequently conducted in the country, they were little more then stock in trade for the commissioners, the assignees, and the solicitor. 6 Ves. Ch. 1. The act 34 Geo. III. ch. 69, was called an insolvent debtors' act; but the first act of insolveney properly so called was passed in 1826. Aod the act of $7 & 8$ Vict. cap. 70, called " an act for facilitating arrangements between debtor nad creditor," is properly an insolvency law. This provides for the discharge of non-trading debtor if he has a certain concur rence from his creditors. This is one-third, both in value and number, to the initiatory steps. To the discharge, a proportional consent at an initiatory meeting, and, finally, the cunsent of threeeighths in buth number and value, or nive-tentha in value of creditors to the sum of twenty pounds and upwards. In England there are now two lords justices of insolvency and bankruptcy, five London commissioners, and district cummissioners. Treland follows the Eoglish system, as does Scotland in most respects, with a change in nomenclature. But for the latter greater excellence is claimed. I Bell. Comm. 17.
8. The French bankruptey code, says M. Dupin, is equally complained of by debtors and creditors. A bill is now before parliameat in Eagland (introduced by Sir Richard Bethel, late attorneygeneral, now Lord Chancellor Westbury) for a general bankrupt act applicable to non-tradere as wall as to traders. The bill has already (July, 1861) passed the house of comoions; but much discussion has arisen in the house of lords with regard to the manner in which the assignee of the debtor's estate shall be chosen or elected. It bas been the practice in England to have the assignee elected by the creditors; and it was so provided by Sir Richard Bethel's bill. It was proposed in the house of lords to have the assignee appuinted by the magistrate. That the magistrate should control the election of the assignee we consider a wise provision in an insolvent or bankrupt law. But the creditors are better satisfied to elect him among themselves; and this is the feeling among the commercial commuaity in Great Britain. In Massachusetts, the election of the assignee by the croditora is subject to the approval of the judge. Below we give a synopsis of the insolvent laws of the varicus states of the United States which have legislated upon the subject.
9. Many of the states have laws for the distribution of insolvent estates, and also laws for the relief of poor debtors. These are neither properly called iasulvent laws in the sense in which we have used the words,-though the latter relieve the debtor's body from restraint upon a surreoder of his goods and estate, and leave his future acquisitions still liable. See articles Insolvent Estates, Executors and Amministrators, and Poon Debton. When there are found statute provisions upon either of these subjects, they will be mentioned.
10. Who may petitwn. In California, Maryland, Minnesota, New York, and Wisconsin, every insolvent debtor may be discharged upon petition and upon making an assignment of all his property (except certain articles necessary for the support of the debtor or his family) for the benefit of his creditors equally. In Alabama, a person imprisoned on a judgment or for failing to pay a fine. In Arkansas and Illinois, one imprisoned or liable to be arrested. In Connecticut, one owing one hundred dollars. In Delaware, a resident of the state for one year who is in prison, unless committed by chancery court. In Georyia, one who has not within a year lost money by gambling. In Massachusetts, an inhabitant who owes more than two hundred dollars. In Missouri, one imprisoned for fine, or costs, or breach of the peace. In North Carolina, one imprisoned twenty days. In Ohio, a resident of the state for two years, or of the county for six months, or in custody after sixty days. In Pennsylvania, a resident of the state six months, or who has been in jail three months, detained on civil process, held on bail prise, or not arrested. In Rhode Island, an inhabitant for three years (which the court may dispense with) owing more than one hundred dollars. In South Carolina, one sued, or within one month after being in custody. In Texas, a citizen, male twenty-one years of age, female eighteen years of age, may be benkrupt.
11. The petition may be addressed to whom. In Alabsma and Missouri, the petition is addressed to the county court. In Arkansas, to the judge of the county court or circuit court. In California, Iowa, and Minnesota, to the district court. In Connecticut, Illinois, and Massschusette, to the court of probete. In Delaware and New Jersey, to the supreme court of the county where the debtor is imprisoned. In Georgia, to a justice of the inferior, or a judge of the superior. In Maryland, to the circuit court of the county, or the court of common pleas in Baltimore. In Michigan, to a judge of the supreme court, county judge, circuit court, or a commissioner. In Mississippi, to a judge of the high court of errors and appeals, of the circuit court, or the probate court, or the president of the board of county police. In New York, to the supreme judicial court, county judge, recorder or mayor of the city of New York. In North Carolina, to a judge of the superior or inferior court. In Ohio, to a commissioner of insolvency appointed by the court of common pleas of each county, who gives bonds and may be removed. In Pennsylvania and South Carolina, to the court of common pleas. In Rhode Island, to the superior court of the county. In Texas, to the chief justice of the county. In Wisconsin, to a judge of the supreme judicial court, or circuit court.
The petition must, by statute, contain, in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, and Wisconsin, a schedule under oath of the debtor's property, of the sums due, a list of creditors, and the causes of insolvency, an affidavit of honesty and inability to pay debts, and an offer to deliver up his property for the benefit of his creditors. In Michigan and New York, two-thirds in value of the creditors residing in the United States, or their representatives, must join in the petition and make oath that they are honest and no rewsrd has been taken. In Missouri, the debtor makes an affidavit of assets and honesty.
12. Notice. In Alabama, the plaintiff in the suit has one day's notice; and in Arkansas, notice is ordered and the petitioner set free on giving bonds. I English, 219. In Cslifornia and Connecticut, thirty days' notice is required. In Delaware, Michigan, and Minnesota, the creditors are summoned to show cause why a discharge should not be granted. In Minnesota, notice is given in the papers. In Maryland, there is a notice and examination. In New York and North Carolins, there is a notice and summons, in New York, a notice also in the papers. In Massachusetts, the messenger gives notice. In Rhode Island, there is a special order of notice, which is given by the clerk of the court. In Texas, the notice is published three weeks. In Wisconsin, if one-fourth of the creditors are foreign, a notice is ordered where they are; if they are domestic, six weeks' notice is given; if some kut less them one-fourth are foreign, ten weeks notice is given by puhlication in the papers.

Proceedings upon petition. In Alabama, if the plaintiff swears the schedule of the insolvent is false, a jury is summoned. In Arkansas, if the court is satisfied of the debtor's honesty, on transfer to the sheriff till a trustee is appointed, the debtor is discharged from arrest. In California a receiver, in Massachusetts a messenger, takes possession till debts are proved on cath. In Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, and Wisconsin, if the officer is satisfied of the honesty of the debtor (in the two former a jury may be had by any creditor), then an assignment is made. In New York and South Carolina, an order is passed for an sssignment. In the former state there are certain exceptions.
13. The assignment. The assignment in Arkansas, California, and Massachusetts stops liens, attachment, and processes. In Arkansas, it frees from arrest, and the debtor may be discharged if arrested upon a writ of habeas corpus. In Connecticut, attachments are dissolved and the creditor may be enjoined from attaching. In Minnesota, the moneys are paid to the clerk of the court, or the court appoints an assignee. In Texas, a deed is ordered to trustees.
The assignee or trustee. He in general gives bonds, has the same power as an owner in disposing of the estate, may be discharged by the court, has great discretionary power with regard to the settlement of claims, and returns account into court, calls meetings of creditors, and makes distribution of noney among them. In Alsbams and Missouri, the sheriff of the county sells the property. In Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas, the assignees are appointed by the court. In California and Rhode Island, a majority in value of the creditors elect not more than three assignees, whose bonds, in California, are determined by the creditors and the court; and frand in the choice of an assignee may be tried by a jury. In Georgia, the sheriff of the county is the assignee, except of the choses in action, of which the nominee of the majority of creditors takes possession.

In Massachusetts, Michigan, and New York, a majority in value of the creditors elect the sssignees. In Massachusetts, if there are less than five creditors there are not more than two assignees, if there are ten creditors three assignees may be elected, and all clections are subject to the approval of the judge who himself conveys to the assignee. In Massachusetts and Michigan, if there is no election by the majority of the creditors, the court appoints the assignee. In Ohio, the commissioners take the property and have the osual powers. In Pennsylrania, two-thirds in number and value of the creditors elect the trustees, as they are called. In general, the assignees, or trustees, may examine the insolvent under oath, and may bring actions in their own names for the insolvent property. In South Carolina, the assignees must pay dividends every six months. In Texas, they distribute all moneys in land within one year, excepting five per oent. thercof, and make a full settlement within two years, and only make a partial sale if the assets exceed the debts. In Wisconsin, all contingent interests vesting within three years in the insolvent are taken by the assignees.
14. Fraud or fraudulent preferences of creditors before assignment. These, in general, prevent the insolvent from procuring a disoharge. So in Arkansas frauds prevent the insolvent from holding office; so a discharge is refused if there has been a preference within three months; so if the debtor has no property, or less than one-third the amount of debts, or has been insolvent within one year, unless two disinterested persons swear that his misfortunes have bappened as alleged. In Delaware, Maryland, Michigan, and New York, a jury may be called upon the question of fraud. In Michigan, if the jury disagree the court decides. In Georgia, and in most of the states, fraudulent preferences are void as to the assignces, and dishonesty may be punished. In Georgia and Pennsylvania, the debtor's having lost money by gambling prevents his discharge; in Maryland, having been an applicant for the benefit of the insolvent laws within two years previous (in South Carolina, within three), making a preference within one year of the time of insolvency, or (as also in New York) in contemplation of insolvency. In Arkansas, the discharge may be rendered void, and the insolvent forever deprived of the benefits of the act, by a jury finding fraud within two years after the discharge was granted. In Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, New York, Rhode Island, South Curolina, and Wisconsin, frauds render the discharge void; and fraud includes concealments, perjuries, and deceits of all kinds. In Missouri, frand excludes the prisoner forever from the benefits of the act. In North Carolina the question may be tried by jury. In New York, a preference within two years before insolvency or contemplation thereof. In South Carolina, the fraud must he tried within four years after the discharge. In Rhode Island, the validity of a discharge may be disputed on notice, and the dishonesty must be proved. In Arkansas, a creditor assisting a fraudulent debtor loses his debt and becomes equally liable with the debtor. In Maryland, a dishonest creditor forfeits his debt; in Rhode Island, double the amount of his debt. In Massachusetts, a fraudulent grantee will take no title as against the assignees. In Ohio, all transfers of property by the debtor after arrest are void. In South Carolina, mortgagees are deemed fraudulent unless they account. In most of the states, the assignees of the inselvent may recover from the fraudulent creditor of the insolvent for the benefit of the rest of the creditors.
15. A discharge. This in Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Rhode Island, Texas, and Wisconsin, exonerates the debtor from arrest and from debts due at the time of the insolvent's discharge or petition. In Arkansas, the debtor who has hecome entitled to the benefit of the act may be freed from arrest upon a writ of habeas corpus. In California, Connecticut, and Massachusetts, fiduciary debts are not discharged. In Maryland, a judgment for seduction or defamation of an unmarried female is not affected by a discharge. In Michigan, debts accruing previous to A. D. 1838, unless the creditors choose to come in, are not discharged. In Rhode Island, all contracts are discharged, except the contract of marriage. In Alahama, Delaware, Georgia ( 16 Ga. 137), Illinnis, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, and Peunsylvania, a discharge protects the person of the debtor from arrest, but subsequently acquired property is still liable for the debt, unless paid. In Rhode Island, the goods of the debtor are exempt from attachment. In South Carelina, a discharge exonerates the debtor, except in an action of tort, or against a creditor who did not receive a dividend. Such a creditor is allowed to perpetuate his debt, against which the debtor is not allowed to plead the statute of limitations as a bar. Nor is the debtor allowed to serve as a juror for one year after his discharge. In Maryland, the discbarge of the insolvent as surety does not discharge other sureties. In Massachusetts, there is no discharge unless fifty per cent. of the delt is paid, unless a majority of the creditors loth in number and value assent thereto. A second discharge of an insolvent must be assented to by three-quarters of the creditors in numher and value. There can be no third discharge unless the previous debts are paid. The debtor receives an allowance of five per cent. of the estate above fifty per cent. of the debts. In Connecticut, the debtor receives twenty-five per cent. of the estate above fifty per cent., not exceeding one thousand dollars. In Michigan, a discharge may be plead upon general issue and notice of such pleading. In general, it is the rule that the debtor may he examined on oath by the creditors or assignees, and may be compelled to answer such questions as are put to him with regard to his property, conveyances etc. In New York, the wife of the deltor may be summoned in if she can be found. In California, a creditor can only object to a dividend within fifteen*days after it is declared. Even the bomestead is surrendered, and the judge makes an allowance for support. All the debtor's suits are transferred to the county in which he petitions. In Delaware, a discharge has no effect upon mortgage or judgment liens. In Texas, the debtor may plead discharge granted in another state, and will be discharged on producing the certificate. In Iowa, no general assignment in contemplating insolvency shall be good unless for the benefit of all creditors. But if so, the creditors' assent is prosumed. 1 Iowa, 460, 582 ; 6 id. 61 ; 8 id. 96 ; $4 \mathrm{G} .287,443$. All property passes to the assignee, who gives private notice to the creditors, and six weeks' notice in the papers. The creditors file their claims in three nonths. The property is divided within one year by the assignee, who is subject to the court and renders account. In Delaware, a negro who is unable to pay his debts may be made by decree of the court to serve not more than seven years. In Illinois, an insolvent judge goes before the county commissioner for the benefit of the act.

17. Proceedings in invitum as regulated in some states. In Connecticut, a creditor may petition the court of probate where he has taken out a writ for a debt of one hundred dollars, sworn to be due or to become due, when an officer cannot find sufficient property to attach. The court appoints trustees, and the subsequent proceedings are regulated as stated above, where the debtor petitions.

In Massachusetts, when a debtor has not given bail for one hundred dollars or upwards, has been in jail thirty days, has not dissolved attachment for seven days after the return day, been guilty of fraud, or removed from the state, a creditor to the amount of one hundred dollars may petition under oatb, when proper notice must be given to the debtor; and the other proceedings are the same as when the insolvent petitions.

In New York, when a debtor has been actually imprisoned more than sixty days, a creditor to the amount of twenty-five dollars may petition, with affidavit of these facts, and that he fears the estate will be embezzled. Other creditors are notified, to see if they will join. The debtor has notice, and the magistrate hears the parties. If the creditors unite, the debtor is examined, and on refusal imprisoned, and the magistrate proceeds to other proof. If two-thirds of the creditors in the United States join, the debtor is ordered to make a conveyance. If the debtor refuses, officers make it, and then the debtor cannot be discharged except upon a petition de novo with his creditors.

In Illinois, a debtor is arrested upon refusal to surrender his goods. If arrested upon an affidavit of fraud, the probate court is to summon a jury of seven members; if fuund guilty, the debtor is imprisoned till he makes a schedule. The assignee advertises the goods and settles within eighteen months.

Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, New Hampshire, Oregon, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, Kansas, the territories of Arizona, Nebraska, New Mexico, Utah, and Washington, and the Cboetaws and Chickasaws, have no insolvent laws.

19. In Upper Canada (Consolidated Statutes, chap. 18, p. 117), any person in debt or imprisoned may apply to the judges of the county court for relief. The petition contains a proposal to pay the debts in whole or in part, a sworn schedule, etc., and a petition for protection. Notice is published in the Canada Gazette and the county paper, and given to one-fourth in value and number of the creditors personally. An official assignee is appointed by the judge, in whom the estate and the usual powers vest. Notice is then given; the majority in number and value of the creditors choose an assignee subject to the judge's approval, who has a right to six days to accept. The discharge protects both person and property; though the latter may be made liable on petition of the assignees. The judge has great discretionary power, and may commit witnesses for refusing to answer. All acts of the official assignee are made legal though the petition be not finally granted. The assignees may sue in their own or their petitioners' name.

In Nova Scotia (Revised Statutes 1851), any person imprisoned on mesne process, execution, or attachment for costs may petition judge of superior court, or two commissioners who are appointed by the governor in council. A schedule of property is filed, the creditors summoned, who may have the debtor put on oath. This may be waived on crown debts, and the attorney-general may discharge crown debts. A creditur may make an affidavit of cause, and the prisoner may be remanded, and detained for a year, if fraud appear. If a process be issued by a justice of the peace, two justices of the peace may relieve the prisoner. The supreme court, or the judges thereof, constitute a court of appeals. The prisoner is discharged from arrest, but his subsequent property is liable. The provinces of Lower Canada and New Brunswick have no insolvent court or poor debtor laws.
INSOLVENT ESTATES OF PERSONS DECEASED. In some states, the distribution of the estates of deceased insolvent debtors is specially provided for by statute. In others, these estates are left to the general regulations existing in most states with regard to administration.
In some states, special regulations have been made. These regulations frequently provide that certain claims shall be privileged, and insure the fair division of the remainder of the assets of the deceased among all his creditors pro rata. The following states have statatory provisions, and the statute is cited after each state. Alabama, Code 1852, 82741 , p. 498; Connecticut, Comp. Stat. 1854; 1llinois, Stat. 1858, 1209-1213 Kentucky, Rev. Stat. 52, 713.
In Maine and Massachusette, a petition is addressed to the judge of probate, who appoints two commissioners to decide upon the claims. Rev. Stat. of Me. ch. 66, p. 324, Feb. 21, 1860; Gen. Laws of Mass. ch. 99, p. 496 ; Minnesota, ch. 57,254 New Hampshire, Comp. Stat. ch. 171, p. 411. In Vermont, the distribution of insolvent estates is provided for. Stat. of Vt. ch 42, p. 355.
INSPECTION (Lat. inspicere, to look into). The examination of certain articles made by law subject to such examination, so that they may be declared fit for commerce. The decision of the inspectors is not final: the object of the law is to protect the commonity from fraud, and to preserve the character of the merchandise abroad. 8 Cow. N. Y. 45. See 1 Johns. N. Y. 205; 13 id. 331; 2 Caines, 312; 3 id. 207.
In Practice. Examination.
The inspection of all public records is free to all persons who have an interest in them, upon payment of the usual fees. 7 Mod. 129; 1 Strange, 304; 2 id. 260, 954, 1005. But it seems a mere stranger, who has no such interest, bas no right at common law. 8 Term, 390 .
INSPECTOR. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction: as, inspector of bark, one who is by law authorized to examine bark for exportation, and to approve or disapprove of its quality. Inspectors of customs are officers appointed by the general government: as to their duties, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 590 , $605,609,610,612,619,621,623,650 ; 2$ id. 1490, 1516; 3 id. 1650,1790 .
INSPEXIMUS (Lat.). We have seen. A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim: it then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient. 5 Coke, 54.

INSTALLATION, INSTALMENT. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The president of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the requisition of the constitution and laws.
INSTALMENT. A part of a debt due by contract, and agreed to be paid at a time different from that fixed for the payment of the other part. For example, if I engage to pay you one thousand dollars, in two payments, one on the first day of January and the other on the first day of July, each of these payments or obligations to pay will be an instalment.

In such case, each instalment is a separate debt so far that it may be tendered at any time, or the first may be sued for although the other shall not be due. 3 Dane, Abr.

433, 494; 1 Esp. 129,226; 2 id. 235; 3 Salk. 6, 18; 1 Maule & S. 706.

A debtor who by failing to pay three instalments of rent due on a lease would forfeit his estate, may, in order to save it, tender one instalment to prevent the forfeiture, although there may be two due at the time; and he is not bound to tender both. 6 Toullier, n. 688.

INSTANCE (literally, standing on: hence, urging, solicitation. Webster, Dict.).

In Civil and French Law. In general, all sorts of actions and judicial demands. Dig. 44. 7. 58.
In Ecclesiastical Law. Causes of instance are those proceeded in at solicitation of some party, as opposed to causes of office, which run in the name of the judge. Halif. Anal. p. 122.

In Scotch Law. That which may be insisted on at one diet or course of probation. Whart.
INSTANCE COURT. In English Law. That branch of the admiralty court which has the jurisdiction of all matters exeept those relating to prizes.
The term is sometimes used in American law for parposes of explanation, hat has no proper applieation to admiralty courts in the United States, where the powers of both instance and prize courts are conferred without any distinction. 3 Dall. 6 ; 1 Gall. C. C. 563; 3 Kent, Comm. 355, 378.

See Admirilty.

INSTANCIA. In Spanish Law. The institution and prosecution of a suit from its inception until definitive judgment. The first instance, "primera instancia," is the prosecution of the suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, "secunda instancia," is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance,"tercera instancia," is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal, that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisciction of the same.

All civil suits must be tried and decided, in the first instance, within three years; and all criminal, within two years.
As a general rule, three instances are admitted in all civil and criminal cases. Art. 285, Const. 1812.
INSTANTER (Lat.). Immediately; presently. This term, it is said, means that the act to which it applies shall be done within twenty-fuur hours; but a doubt has been suggested by whom is the account of the hours to be kept, and whether the term instanter as applied to the subject-matter may not be more properly taken to mean "before the rising of the court," when the act is to be done in court, or "before the shutting of the office the same night," when the act is to be done there. 1 Taunt. 343; 6 East, 587, n. e; Tidd, Pract. 3d ed. 508, n.; 3 Chitty, Pract. 112. See 3 Burr. 1809; Coke, Litt. 157; Styles, Reg. 452.

INSTAR (Lat.). Like; resembling; equivalent: as, instar dentium, like teeth; instar omnium, equivalent to all.

INSTIGATION. The act by which one incites another to do something, as, to injure a third person, or to commit some crime or misdemeanor, to commence a suit, or to prosecute a criminal. See Accomplice.

INSTITOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. A clerk in a store; an agent.

IIe was so called because he watched over the business with which he was charged; and it is immaterial whether he was employed in making a sale in a store, or whether charged with any other business. Institor appellatus est ex eo, quod negotio gerendo instet; nec multum facit tabernce sit prcepositus, an cuilibet alii negotiationi. Dig. lib. 14, tit. 3, 1. 3. Mr. Bell says that the charge given to a clerk to manage a store or shop is called institorial power. 1 Bell, Comm. 479, 5th ed.; Erskine, Inst. 3. 3. 46; I Stair, Inst. by Brodie, b. 1, tit. 11, 3812 , 18, 19; Story, Ag. 88.
INSTITUTE. In Scotch Law. The person first called in the tailzie; the rest, or the heirs of tailzie, are called substitutes. Erskine, Pract. 3. 8. 8. See Tallize, IIeir of; Substitutes.
In Civil Law. One who is appointed heir by testament, and is required to give the estate devised to another person, who is called the substitute.
To name or to make an beir by testament. Dig. 28.5.65. To make an accusation; to commence an action.
institutes. Elements of juxisprudence; text-books containing the principles of law made the foundation of legal studies.
The word was first used by the civilians to designate those books prepared for the student and supposed to embrace the fundamental legal priociples arranged in an orderly manner. Two books of Institutes were known to the civil lawyers of antiquity,-Geiius and Justinian.
I. Core's Institutes. Four volumes of commentarics upon various parts of the English law.
2. Sir Ed. Coke hath written foor volumes of Institutes, as be is pleased to call them, though they have little of the institutional method to warrant sueh a title. The first volume is a very extensive commentery upon a little excellent treatise of tenures, conpiled by Judge Littleton in the reign of Edw. IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable oommon-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and year-books, but greatly defective in method. The second volume is a comment on many old ects of parliament, withont any systematical order; the third, a more methodical treatise on the plens of the orown; and the fourth, an account of the several species of oourts. These Institutes are usually cited thas: the first volume as Co. Litt., or 1 Ivst.; the second, third, and fourth as, 2,3, or 4 Inst., without asy author's name. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 72.
II. Gaius' Institutes. A tractate upon the Roman law, ascribed to Caius or Gaius.
3. Of the personal history of this jarist nothing is known. Even the spelling of his name is matter of controveray, and be is known by no other title than Gaiua, or Caius. Ha is believad to have lived in the reign of Mareue Aureliua. The his. tory of Gaius's Institutes ia remarkahle. In 1816, Ni jhuhr was asnt to Rome by the king of Prussia. On hia way thither, ho apant two daya in the cathadral library of Varona, and at this tima disoovared thesa Institutes, which had bean lost to tha jurists of tha middle ages. In 1817, the Royal Academy of Barlin chargad Goeschan, Bekker, and Hollweg with the duty of transeribing tha discevered manuseript. In 1819, Goeschan gara the firat completed adition, aa far as the manuscript could be deciphared, to his fellow-jurists. It craated an unuaual senaation, and becams a fruitful sourcs of oommant. It formed a new ors in the study of Roman law. It gave the modern juriat the aigual advantage of studying the aoures of the Institutes of Juatinian. It is believed by the beat modern aoholars that Gaius was tha firge original tractata of the kind, not being compiled from former publioations. The languaga of Gaius ia olear, torsa, and tachnical, -avidently written by a $10 a \mathrm{atar}$ of law and a mastar of the Latin tongue. The Institutos were unquestionably practical. Thers is no attempt at eriticiam or philosophical diacussion: the discipla of Sahinus is contant to teach law as ha finds it. Its arrangement is solid and logieal, and Justinian followa it with an almost servila imitation.
4. The best editiona of Gaius are Goeachen's $2 d$ ed., Berlin, 1824 , in which tha tast was again eollated by Bluhme, and tha 3 d ed. of Goeschen, Barlin, 1842, editad by Lacbman from a critical ravision by Goeschen which had been interrupted by his doath. In Franca, Gaius attractad equal attontion, and wa have three editions and translations: Boulat, Paris, 1824; Domenget, 1843 ; and Pellat, 1844. We are also promised a commentary toy the last vary diatinguiahed civilian, which will give us a complete critical taxt and alaborata notes, -a thing much to bs desired.

In 1859 , Francesco Lisi, a learned Italian scholar, publishad, at Bologna, a new edition of the firat book of Gaius, with an Italian tranalation en régard. The adition ia accompanied and enriched by many valuable notos, printed in beth Latin and Italian. Perhaps this must be considered, so far at printed, the most complete edition of the old civilian that modern acholars have yet produced.

Ths reader who may wiah to pursue his Gaiian studies should consult the list of aome thirty-odd tratiass and commentariea mentionad in Mackeldey's Lehrhueh dea Röm. Rachts, p. 47, note (b), 13th ad., Wian, 1851 ; Huschka, Easay Zur Kritik und Interp. von Gaius Inst., Brealau, 1830; Haubold's Inat. Juris Rom. Prav. Line., pp. 151, 152, 505, 506, Lipsiæ, 1826 ; Boecking's Gaiaa, Preface, pp. 11-18, Lapa., 1845 ; Lisi's Gaiua, Prefaee, pp. x. xi., Bologna, 1859.
III. Justinian's Institutes are an abridgment of the Code and Digest, composed by order of that emperor and under his guidance, with an intention to give a summary knowledge of the law to those persons not versed in it, and particularly to students. Inst. Proem. 83.
5. Tho lawyera amployed to compile it were Tribonian, Theophilua, and Dorotheus. The work was first published on the 21st of Novembar in the yaar 533, and received tha aanetion of atatute law by ordar of tho emperor. They ara divided into four books: aach book is dividad into titlas, and each titla into asparata paragrapha or aections, praceded by an introductery part. The first part is callad principium, because it ia the commencement of the title; thoss which follow are aumberad, and called paragraphs. The work treats of the rights of paraona, of things, and of actions. The first book treata of persons; the second, third, and the first fiva titles of the fourth book, of thinga; and the remainder of tha fourth book, of actiona. The method of citing tha Institutas should ba undaratood, and is ncw commonly by giving the number of the book, titla, and section, thua: Inat. I. 2. 5.-therehy indieating book I. title 2, section 5 . Where it is intandad to indicate the first paragraph, or principium, thus: Inat. B. I. 2. pr. Frequently the citation ia aimply I. or J. I. 2.5. A eecond mode of citation ia thus: 8 5, Inst. or I. I. 2.-meaning book I, titla 2 , paragraph 5 . A third method of eitation, and one in universal use with the oldar jurists, was by giving the name of tha title and the firat words of the paragraph referred to, thus: & senatusconsultum eat I de jura nat. gen. et eivil.which means, as before, Inst. B. I. tit. 2, $\% 5$. Sea 1 Colquhoun, 8. 61.
6. Tha first printed edition of the Institutes is that of Sehoyffer, fol., 1468. The last eritical German adition ia that of Schrader, 4to, Berlin, 1832. Thia work of Schrader ia the most learned and meat elaborate commentary on the text of Justinian in any language, and was intended to form a part of tha Berlin Cerpus Juris; but nothing furtber has hean yet published. It is impossible in this briaf artiola to nams all the commentaries on these Institutea, which in all agea have commanded tho atudy and admiration of jurists. More than one hundred and fifty yeara ago ons Homberg printed a tract De Multitudine nimia Commentatorum in Institutionea Juris. But wa must rafer the reader to tha best recent French and English editions. Ortolan's Institutea de l'Emperaur Justinica avec la taxte, la traduction an regard, et las explications soua ebaqua paragraphe, Paria, 1857, is vola. 8vo, sixth edition. This is, hy common consent of scholars, regarded as tho best historical edition of the Ioatitutes ever publisbed. Du Caurroy'a Institutes de Justinien traduites et expliquéas par A. M. Du Caurroy, Paris, 1851,8 th ed. 2 vols. 8vo. The Institutes of Justinian: with English Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by Themas Collet Sandars, M.A., London, 1853 , 8 vo ; 2d ed., 1860 . This werk hes been prepared expressly for beginners, and is founded mainly upon Ortolan, with a liberal use of LaGranga, Du Caurroy, Warnkoenig, and Puchta, as well as Harris and Coopsr. A careful study of this edition will result in tho student's abandoning its pages and betaking himaelf to Sehrader and Ortelan. The English adition of Harris, and 1 ha American ona of Cooper, have ceasad to attract attention.
IV. Theofhilus' Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A.D. 533 .
7. It is generally supposed that in A.D. 534,535 , and 536 , Theophilus read hia cummentary in Greek to bis pupils in the law school of Conatantinuple. Ha is conjectured to have died nome time in A.D. 536. Thia paraphraae maintained itaelf aa a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harmenipulus, the last of the Greak jurista. It is also conjecturad that Theophilus was not the editer of his own paraphrage, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after bis explanationa and lectures, inasmuch as it eontaina certain barbarous phrasas, and tha texts of tha mamuacripta vary graatly from each other.

It has, howaver, alwaya baen somewhat in use, and juriats conaider that its atudy aids the text of tha Institutas; and Cujaa and Hugo have both praiaad it. Tha first edition was that of Zuichem, fol., Baale, 1531 ; tha best adition is that of Reitz, 2 vols. 4to, 1751, Haag. Thers is a Garman translation by Wusterman, 1823, 2 rols. 8 vo; and a Freaeh cranslation by Mons. Ilregier, Paris, 1847, 8vo, whose edition is prefaced by a learned and valuable introduotion and dissertation. Consult Mortreuil, Hist. du Droit Byzan., Paris, 1843 ; Smith. INSTITUTION (Lat. instituere, to form, to establish).

In Civil Law. The appointment of an heir ; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights, active and passive. Halifax, Anal. 39 ; Pothier, Tr. des Donations testamentaires, c. 2, s. 1, & 1; La. Civ. Code, 1598 ; Dig. 28.5.1; 1. 28.6.1, 2. 34.

In Ecclesiastical Law. To become a parson or vicar, four things are necessary, viz.: holy orders, presentation, institution, induction. Institution is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk,-previous to which the oath against simony and of allegiance and supremacy are to be taken. By institution the benefice is full: so that there can be no fresh presentation (except the patron be the king), and the clerk may enter on parsonage-house and glebe and take the tithes; but he cannot grant or let them, or bring an action for them, till induction. See 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 389-391; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 169-172.

In Political Law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government: as, the Institutions of Lycurgus. Webster, Dict. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social. Webster, Dict.

In Practice. The commencement of an action: as, AB has instituted a suit against C D to 'recover damages for trespass.
instructions. In Common Law. Orders given ly a principal to his agent in relation to the business of his agency.

The agent is bound to obey the instructions he has received; and when he neglects so to do he is responsible for the consequences, unless he is justified by matter of necessity. 4 Binn. Penn. 361; 1 Livermore, Ag. 368. See Agent.

In Practice. The statements of a cause of action given by a client to his attorney, and which, where such is the practice, are sent to his pleader to put into legal form of a declaration. Warren, Law Stud. 284.

Instructions to counsel are their indemnity for any aspersions they may make on the opposite party; but attorneys who have a just regard to their own reputation will be cautious, even under instructions, not to wake any unnecessary attack upon a party or witness. For such unjustifiable conduct the counsel will be held responsible. Eunom. Dial. 2, & 43, p. 132. For a form of instructions, see 3 Chitty, Pract. 117, 120, n.

In French Law. The means used and formality empluyed to prepare a case for trial. It is generally applied to criminal cases, and is then called criminal instruction; it is then defined the acts and procecdings which tend to prove positively a crime or delict, in order to inflict on the guilty person the punishment which he deserves.
INSTRUMENT. The writing which contains some agreement, and is so called because it has been prepared as a memorial of what has taken place or been agreed upon. The agreement and the instrument in which it is contained are very different things,--the latter being only evidence of the existence of the former. The instrument or form of the contract may be valid, but a cortract itself may be void on account of fraud. See Ayliff, Parerg. 305 ; Dunlop, Adm. Pract. 220.
instrumenta (Lat.). That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal : as, court-rolls, accounts, and the like. 3 Coke, Litt. Thomas ed. 487.
INSUFFICIENCY. In Chancery Practice. After filing of defendant's answer, the plaintiff las six weeks in which to file exceptions to it for insufficiency,-which is the fault of not replying specifically to specific charges in the bill. Smith, Chanc. Pract. 344; Mitford, Eq. Plead. 376, note ; Sanders, Ord. in Chanc. Index.
INSULA (Lat. island). A house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground. Calvinus, Lex.

INSURABLE INTEREST. Such an interest in a subject of insurance as will entitle the person possessing it to obtain insurance.
2. It is essential to the contract of insurance, as distinguished from a wager, that the assured should bave a legally recognizable interest in the insured subject, the pecuniary value of which may be appreciated and computed or valued. It is not requisite that the insured party should have an absolute property in the insured subject, or that the subject or interest should be ono that can be exclusively possessed or be transferable by tradition or assignment. The subject or interest must, however, be such that it may be destroyed, lost, damaged, diminished, or intercepted by the risks insured against. The interests usually insured are those of the owner in any species of property, of mortgagor, mortgagee, holder of bottomry or respondentia bond, of an agent, consignee, lessee, factor, carrier, bailee, or party having a lien or entitled to a rent or income, or being liable to a loss depending upon certain conditions or contingencies, or having the certainty or probability of a profit or pecuniary benefit depending on the insured subject. 1 Phillips, lns. c. $3 ; 11$ Eng. L. \& Eq. 2; 28 id. 312 ; 34 id. 116 ; 48 id. 292 ; $5 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{Y} .15 \mathrm{~L}$; 19 id. 184; 11 Penn. St. 429 ; 10 Cush. Mass. 37 ; 6 Gray;'Mass. 192; 2 Md. 111 ; 13 B.

Monr. Ky. 3ll; 16 id. 242; 5 Sneed, Tenn. 139.
3. The certainty or probability, direct or incidental, of pecuniary benefit by the living, or pecuniary loss or damage to any one by the decease, of another, gives an insurable interest in his life. 1 Phillips, Ins. c. 3 , sec. xiv.; 10 Cush. Mass. 244; 22 Peun. 65 ; 27 id. 268 ; 23 Conn. 244; 22 Barb. N. Y. 9 ; 28 Mo. 383 ; 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 312.
The amount of insurable interest is the value of the insured subject as agreed by the policy, or its market value, or the pecuniary loss to which the assured is liable by the risks insured against, though the insured subject-for example, life or health-has not a market value. 2 Phillips, Ins. c. 14; 13 Barb. N. Y. 206; 7 N. Y. 530; 13 id. 31; 24 N. H. 234; 2 Parsons, Marit. Law, c. 2, sec. 2.
INSURANCE (also called Assurance). A contract whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to indemnify the other against loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the indemnity is usually called the insurer or underuriter; the other, the insurcd or assured; the agreed consideration, the premium; the written contract, a policy; the events insured against, risks or perils; and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the insurable interest. 1 Phillips, Ins. ${ }_{8} 8$ 1-5.
Insurance on risks in navigation is on vessels and other navigable craft, freight, cargo, and liens on either by bottomry, res undentia, mortgage for commissions or otherwise, and on profits.
Insurance against fire on land is upon buildings, and all species of property, real and personal, that is subject to destruction or direct damage by fire. Insurance on lives is applicable mostly to human life, but is also made on donestic animals, or such as are in possession. See Adandonment; Adjustment; Average; Deviation; Insurable Interest; Memoranduy; Valuation; Policy; Warranty.
INSURANCE AGENT. An agent for effecting insurance may be such by appointment or the recognition of his acts done as such. 2 Phillips, Ins. $\ell$ 1848; 4 Cow. N. Y. 645 . He may be agent for either of the parties to the policy, or for distinct purposes for both. 16 T. B. Monr. Ky. 252; 20 Barb. N.Y. 68.

An insurance agency may be more or less extensive according to the express or implied stipulations and understanding between him and his principals. It may be for filling up and issuing policies signed in blank by his principals, for transmitting applications to his principals filled up by himself, as their agent or that of the applicant, for receiving and transmitting premiums, for adjusting and settling losses, or granting liberties and making new stipulations, or for any one or more of these purposes. 2 Phillips, Ins. ch. xxiii. sects. I, 2, 3 ; 2 Dutch. N.J.268; 6 Gray, Mass. 497; 7id.261; 25 Barb. N. Y.497; 18 N. Y. 376; 19 id. 305; 25 Conn. 53, 465, 542; 26 id. 42 ; 12 La. 122; 37 N. II. 35 ; 12 Md. 348; I Grant, Cas. Penn. 472; 23 Penn. St. 50. 72; 26 id. 50.

Notice to an agent of matters within his commission is such to the company. 16 Barb. N. Y. I59; 1 Eng. L. & Eq. 140; 6 Gray, Mass. 14.

INSURANCE COMPANY. A comv pany which issues policies of insurance,-an incorporated company, and either a stock company, a mutual one, or a mixture of the two. In a stock company, the members or stockholders pay in a certain capital which is liable for the contracts of the company. In a mutual company, the members are themselves the parties insured; in other words, all the members contribute premiums to the fund, which is liable for indemnity to each member for loss, according to the terms of the contract; and much the greater number of American companies for all descriptions of insurance are of this class. In the mixed class, certain members, who may or may not he insured, contribute a certain amount of the capital, for which they hold certificates of shares, and are entitled to interest on the same at a stipulated rate, or to an agreed share of the surplus receipts, after the payment of losses and expenses, to be estimated at certain periods.

INSURED. The person who procures an insurance on his property.

It is the duty of the insured to pay the premium, and to represent fully and fairly all the circumstances relating to the subjectmatter of the insurance, which may infuence the determination of the underwriters in undertaking the risk or estimating the premium. A concealment of such facts amounts to a fraud, which avoids the contract. I Marshall, Ins. 464; Park, Ins. See Concealment; Misrepresentation; Warranty.
INSURER. The underwriter in a policy of insurance; the party agreeing to make indemnity to the other. Sumetimes applied improperly to denote the party insured.

INSURGENT. One who is concerned in an insurrection. IIe differs from a rebel in this, that rebel is always understood in a bad sense, or one who nujastly opposes the constituted authorities; insurgent may be one who justly opposes the tyranny of constituted authorities. The colonists who opposed the tyranny of the English government were insurgents, not rebels.

INSURRECTION. A rebellion of citizens or subjects of a conntry against its government.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 8, gives power to congress "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union,, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions."

By the act of congress of the 28th of February, 1795, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 389, it is provided:-

8 1. That whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion, from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the president of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the state, or states, most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action, as be may judge necessary to repel such invasion, and to issue his orders, for that purpose, to such officer or officers of the militia as he shall think proper. And in case of an insurrection in any state against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the president of the United States, on application of the legislature of such state, or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened), to call forth such number of the militia of any other state or states, as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection.

8 2. That, whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act, it shall be lawful for the president of the United States to call forth the militia of such state, or of any other state or states, as may be necessary to suppress such combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed; and the use of militia so to be called forth may be continued, if necessary, until the expiration of thirty days after the commencement of the next session of congress.
8. 3. That whenever it may be necessary, in the judgment of the president, to use the military force bereby directed to be called forth, the president shall forthwith, by proclamation, command such insurgents to disperse, and retire peaceably to their respective abodes, within a limited time.

Further important provisions relative to insurrection are contained in the acts of Congress of July 13, 1861, 12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 257; Jan. 31, 1862, 12 id. 334; May $20,1802,12$ id. 404 ; July 17, 1862, 12 id. 590 ; July 14, 1862, 12 id. 625; March 3, 1863, 12 id. 755; March 3, 1863, 12 id. 762 ; March 3, 1863, 12 id. 820.

INTAKERS. In English Law. The name given to receivers of goods stolen in Scotland, who take them to England. 9 Hen. Y. c. 27.

INTEGER (Lat.). Whole; untouched. Res integra means a question which is new and undecided. 2 Kent, Comm. 177.

INTENDANT. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

INTENDED TO BE RECORDED.

This phrase is frequently used in conveyancing, in deeds which recite other deeds which have not been recorded. In Pennsylvania, it has been construed to be a covenant, on the part of the grantor, to procure the deed to be recorded in a reasonable time. 2 Rawle, Penn. 14.

INTENDENTE. In spanish Itaw. The immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the different branches of the revenue, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces of the Spanish monarchy. See Escriche, Intendente.

INTENDMENT OF LAW. The true meaning, the correct understanding, or intention, of the law; a presumption or inference made by the courts. Coke, Litt. 78.

It is an intendment of law that every man is innocent until proved guilty, see InnoCENCE; that every one will act for his own adventage; that every officer acts in his office with fidelity; that the children of a married woman, born during the coverture, are the children of the husband. See Bastardy. Many things are intended after verdict, in order to support a judgment; but intendment cannot supply the want of certainty in a charge in an indictment for a crime. 5 Coke, 121. See Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 25), (S 31); Dane, Abr. Index; 14 Viner, Abr. 449 ; 1 Halst. Ch. N. J. 132.

INTENT. Intention, which see.
INTENTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the prætor. "Reus exceptionem velut intentionem implet:" id est, reus in exceptione actor est. The defendant makes up his plea as if it were a declaration; i.e. the defendant is plaintiff in the plea.
In Old English Law. A count or declaration in a real action (narratio). Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 2, c. 2; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7; DuCange.

INTENTION. A design, resolve, or determination of the mind.

When ly the common law, or by the provision of a statute, a particular intention is essential to an offence, or a criminal act is attempted but not accomplished, and the evil intent only can be punished, it is necessary to allege the intent with distinctness and precision, and to support the allegations with proof. On the other hand, if the offence does not rest mercly in tendency or in an attempt to do a cortain act with a wieked purpose, but consists in doing an unlawful or criminal act, the evil intention will be presumed, and need not be alleged, or, if alleged, it is a mere formal averment, which need not be proved. Bigelow, C. J., 2 All. Mass. 180. See 1 Starkie, Crim. Plead. 165 ; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 233 ; 6 East, 474 ; 5 Cush. Mass. 306.
4. This proof may be of external and visible acts and oonduct from which the jury may infer the fact, 8 Coke, 146 ; or it may be by proof of an act committed: as, in case of burglary with intent to steal, proof of burglary and stealing is conclusive. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 䃞250, 251; 5 Carr. & P. 510 ; 7 id. 518; 9 id. 729; ; Mood. & R. Cr. Cas. 40. In Contracts. An intention to enter into the contract is necessary: hence the person must have sufficient mind to enable him to intend.
In Wills and Testaments. The intention of the testator governs unless the thing to be done be opposed to some unbending rule of law. 6 Cruise, Dig. 295; Jarman, Wills, Index; 6 Pet. 68. This intention is to be gathered from the instrument, and from every part of it. 3 Ves. Ch. 1.05 ; 4 id. 610. See Wills; Construction.

INTER ALIA (Lat.): Among other things: as, "the said premises, which, inter alia, 'Titius granted to Caius."
INTER ALIOS (Lat.). Between other parties, who are strangers to the proceeding in question.
inter apices juris. See Apex Juris.

INTER CANEM ET LUPUM (Lat. between the dog and the wolf). The twilight; because then the dog seeks his rest, and the wolf his prey. Coke, 3 d Inst. 63.

INTER Partes (Lat. between the parties). A phrase signifying an agreement professing in the outset, and before any stipulations are introduced, to be made between such and such persons: as, for example, "This indenture, made the - day of 1848, between A B of the one part, and CD of the other." It is true that every contract is in one sense inter partes, because to be valid there must be two parties at least; but the technical sense of this expression is as above mentioned. 'Addison, Contr. 9.
2. This being a solemn declaration, the effect of such introduction is to make all the covenants comprised in a deed to be covenants between the parties and none others: so that should a stipulation be found in the body of a deed by which " the said A B covenants with E F to pay him one hundred dollars," the words "with E F" are inoperative, unless they have been used to denote for whose benefit the stipulation may have been made, being in direct contradiction with what was previously declared, and CD alone can sue for the non-payment; it being a maxim that where two opposite intentivens are exprossed in a oontract, the first in order shall prevail. 8 Mod. 116; 1 Show. 58; 3 Lev. 138; Carth. 76; Rolle, 196; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 63. But this rule does not apply to simple contracts थnter partes. 2 Dowl. & R. 277; 3 id. 273; Addison, Contr. 244, 256.
3. When there are more than two sides to a contract inter partes, for example, a deed, as, when it is made between A B of the first part, C D of the second, and E F of the third, there is no objection to one covenanting with another in exclusion of the third. See 5 Coke, 182; 8 Taunt. 245; 4 Q. B. 207; Addison, Contr. 267.
INTER SE, INTER SESE (Lat.). Amung thenselves. Story, Partn. $\frac{z}{8} 405$.
INTER VIVOS (Lat.). Between living persons: as, a gift inter vivos, which is a gift made by one living person to another. See Gifts Inter Vivos. It is a rule that a fee cannot pass by grant or transfer inter vicos, without appropriate words of inheritance. i Preston, Est. 64. See Donatio Causa Mor tis.
INTERCOMMON. To enjoy a right of common mutually with the inhabitants of a contiguous town, vill, or manor. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm.'33; Termes de la Ley.

INTERDICT. In Civil Law. The formula according to which the prætor ordered or forbade any thing to be done in a cause concerning true or quasi possession until it should be decided definitely who had a right to it. But in modern civil law it is an extraordinary action, by which a summary decision is had in questions of possession or quasi possession. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. & 1287. Interdicts are either prohibitory, resturative, or exhibitory: the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc. Id. 1290. Interdiets were decided by the prætor without the intervention of a judex, differing in this from actions (actiones).

The etymology of the word, according to Justinian, is quod inter duos dicitur; according to Isidorus, quod interim dicitur. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Sand. Just. 589; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, $z_{z}$ 195, 230, 235. Like an injunction, the interdict was merely personal in its effects; and it had also another similarity to it, by loing temporary or perpetual. Dig. 43.1. 1, 3,4. See Story, Eq. Jur. &8 865 ; Malifax, Anal. ch. 6. See Injunction.

In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecelesiasticnl censure, by which divine services are prohibited either to particular persons or particular places. These tyrannical edicts, issued by ecclesiastical powers, have been abolished in England since the reformation, and were never known in the United States. See 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 340, 341. Baptism was allowed during an interdict; but the holy eucharist was denied, except in the article of denth, and burial in consecrated ground was denied, unless without divine offices.
INTERDICTION In Civil Law. A judicial decree, by which a persun is deprived of the cxercise of his civil rights.
The condition of the party who lalors under this incapacity.
2. There can be no voluntary interdiction, as has been erroncously stated by some writers: the status of every person is regulated by the law, and can in no case be affected by contract.
It is to be observed that interdiction is one of those beneficent measures devised by the law for the special protection of the rights and persons of those who are unable to administer them themselves, and that although the person interdicted is not permitted to exercise his legal rights, he is by no nueans deprived of their eujoyment. These rights are exercised for his benefit by a curator, who is held to a strict accountability, and the fidelity of whose administration is secured, in most cases, by a bond of security, and always by a tacit mortgage on all bis property.
3. By the law of the twelve tables, prodigals alooe could be interdicted. Curators were appointed to those afflicted with mental aberration, idiocy, or incurable diseases, $q u i$ perpetuo morbo laborant; but no decree of interdiction was pronounced against them. By the modern civil liw, prodigality and profligacy are not sufficient reasons for interdiction ; but whenever a person is prostrated, either by mental or physical diseases, to such a degree as to be permanently disabled from administering his estate, he may be interdicted.
No decree of interdiction can be pronounced against a person except by a court whose jurisdiction extends over his domicil.
All the relations of the party are bound to apply for his interdiction when the exigency arises. The same duty is imposed on husband and wife with regard to each other; and their failure to discharge it exposes them to all the damages which may result from such neglect. In the absence of relatives or spouse, or if they refuse to act, the law authorizes even a stranger to make the application.
4. The mode of proceeding is by a petition addressed to the court, in which the reasons which render the interdiction necessary are specifically and explicitly set forth. It is not sufficient to allege in vague and general terms that the party is rendered incapable of administering his estate by mental or physical maladies; but their nature, character, and symptoms must be stated with such legal accuracy as to give the party or his representative notice of the real state of facts on which the application is based. A copy of this petition is communicated to the person sought to be interdicted; and if he fails to employ counsel the court appoints one to assist in the defence of the action. After the contestatio litis has been formed by the answer of the defendant and his counsel, a careful investigation of the condition of the party is entered upon.

No decree of interdiction can be rendered unless it be conclusively proved that the party is subject to an habitual state of idiocy, madness, insanity, or bodily infirmities to such a degree as to disable him from administering his estate; but the mere fact that the person laboring under mental alerration has lucid intervals is no objection to the interdiction.
5. With regard to the nature of the evidence, it consists chiefly in the report, under oath, of physicians who are appointed to examine into the condition of the party, his answers to such interrogatories as the judge propounds to him, and of his recent acts and conduct. Courts act with great caution and circumspection in applications for interdiction, and will never render the decree unless it clearly appears to be absolutely necessary that it should be done for the protection of the interest of the party to be interdicted.
During the pendency of the proceedinge, the court will appoint a provisional administrator if, in its discretion, such an appointment is deemed necessary.
Immediately after the interdiction has been decreed, the courtproceeds to appoint a curator or permanent administrator to take care of the person and to administer the estate of the interdicted party. In the appointment of the curator, the nearest male relation is entitled to the preference, and is compelled to accept the trust, unless he offers a legal excuse. When the wife is interdicted, the husband is entitled to the curatorship; but a curator ad litem is appointed to act for her in suits where her interest comes in conflict with that of the husband. The wife has also the right of claiming the curatorship of her husband who has been interdicted. Neither the husband nor the wife is required to give security ; but a tacit mortgage exists on their property to secure the faithful execution of the trust. A judicial inventory is taken of all the property belonging to the interdicted person, which must be bomologated and approved by the court, and forms a part of the record of the proceedings.
6. The powers vested in the curator are administrative only: he has no power of alienation whatever. Whenever there is a necessity for the sale of any part of the property, an application must be made to the court, and if the reasons alloged are considored sufficient the sale is ordered to be made at public auction, and a return thereof made to the court. Nor is the curator permitted to mix the funds belonging to the interdicted person with his own, but he is compelled to keep them separate and distinct, under severe penalties.

The decree of interdiction has a retroactive operation, or relation back to the date of the application. From that period the party ceases to be sui juris, and becomes alieni juris: consequently, all legal transactions he may enter into are null and void, and no evidence is admissible to show that the acts were done during a lucid interval. The incapacity thus created can only be removed by a formal judgment, rendered by the same court, revoking the interdiction. In order to obtain this revocation, it must bc alleged and proved that the cause for the interdiction has ceased.
7. It is made the duty of the curator to publish the decree of intcrdiction in the newspapers; and if he should neglect to do so he is liable in damages to those who may contract with the interdicted person in ignorance of his incapacity.

During the continuance of the interdiction the law expresses the most tender solicitude for the care and protection of the interdicted person, and directs every possible step to be taken for the alleviation of his sufferings and the cure of his disease. Lis revenues are all to be applied for the attainment of these ends. A superintendent is appointed, whose duty it is to visit the sufferer from time to time and make a report of his condition to the court. Besides, the judge of the court is bound to visit him. Nor can he be taken out of the state, except on the recommendation of a fanily meeting, based on the certificate of at least two physicians, that they consider his removal necessary for the restoration of his health.
The foregoing rules on the subject of interdiction, found in the Law of Louisiana, are substantially the same in all the modern codes having the civil law for their basis.

INTERESSE TERMINI (Lat.). An interest in the term. 'lhe demise of a term in land does not vest any estate in the lessee, but gives him a mere right of entry on the land, which right is called his interest in the term, or interesse termini. 6. On legacies. On specific legacies interest is to be calculated from the date of the death of testator. 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 563; 6 Ves. Ch. 345; 5 Binn. Penn. 475; 5 Watts & S. Penn. 30; 3 Munf. Va. 10.
A general legacy, when the time of payment is not named by the testator, is not payable till the end of one year after testator's death, at which time the interest commences to run. 1 Ves. Ch. 308, 366 ; 13 id. 333; 1 Schoales $\&^{\prime}$ L. Ir. Ch. 10; 5 Binn. Penn. 475 ; 3 Ves. \& B. Ch. 183. But where only the interest is given, no payment will be due till the end of the second year, when the interest will begin to run. 7 Ves. Ch. 89.
Where a general legacy is given, and the time of payment is named by the testator, interest is not allowed before the arrival of the appointed period of payment, and that notwithstanding the legacies are vested. Prec. in Chane. 337. But when that period arrives the legatee will be entitled although the legacy be charged upon a dry reversion. 2 Atk. Ch. 108. See, also, 3 Atk. Ch. 101; 3 Ves. Ch. 10; 4 id. 1; 4 Brown, Ch. 149, n.; 1 Cox, Ch. 133. Where a legacy is given payable at a future day with interest, and the legatee dies before it becomes payable, the arrears of the interest up to the time of his death must be paid to his personal representatives. McClel. Exch. 141. And a bequest of $a$ sum to be paid annually for life bears interest from the death of testator. 5 Binn. Penn. 475.
7. Where the legatee is a child of the testator, or one towards whom he has placed himself in loco parentis, the legacy bears interest from the testator's death, whether it be particular or residuary, vested but payable at a future time, or contingent if the child have no maintenance. In that case the court will do what in common presumption the father would have done,--provide necessaries for the child. 2 P. Will. Ch. 31; 3 Ves. Ch. 13, 287; Bacon, Abr. Leyacies (K 3) ; Foublanque, Eq. 431, n. j; 1 Eq. Cas.

In case of a child in ventre sa mere at the tinue of the father's decease, interest is allowed only from its birth. 2 Cox, Ch. 425. Where maintenance or interest is given by the will, and the rate specified, the legatee will not, in general, be entitled to claim more than the maintenance or rate speeified. 3 Atk. Cb. 697, 716; 3 Ves. Ch. 286, n. And see, further, as to interest in cases of legacies to children, 15 Ves. Ch. 363 ; 1 Brown, Ch. 267 ; 4 Madd. Ch. 275; 1 Swanst. Ch. 553; 1 P. Will. 8. Interest is not allowed by way of maintenance to any other person than the legitimate children of the testator, 3 Ves. Ch. 10 ; 4 id . 1, unless the testator has put himself in loco parentis. 1 Schoales \& L. Ir. Ch. 5, 6. A wife, 15 Ves. Ch. 301, a niece, 3 Ves. Ch. 10, a grandchild, 6 Ves. Ch. 546; 12 id. 3 ; 15 id. 301; $1 \mathrm{Cox}, \mathrm{Cb} .133$, are, therefore, not entitled to interest by way of maintenance. Nor is a legitimate child entitled to such interest if he have a maintenance, although it may be less than the amount of the interest of the legacy. 1 Schoales \& L. Ir. Ch. 5; 3 Ves. Ch. 17. But see 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 103; 2 Roper, Leg. 202.

Where an intention, though not expressed, is fairly inferable from the will, intercst will be allowed. 1 Swanst. Ch. 561, n.

Interest is not allowed for maintenance, although given by immediate bequest for maintenance, if the parent of the legatee, who is under moral obligation to provide fur him, be of sufficient ability: so that the interest will accumulate for the child's benefit until the principal becomes payable. 3 Atk . Ch. 309 ; 1 Brown, Ch. 386; 3 id. 60, 416. But to this rule there are some exceptions. 3 Ves. Ch. 730; 4 Brown, Ch. 223 ; 4 Madd. Ch. 275,$289 ; 4$ Ves. Ch. 498.
9. Where a fund, particular or residuary, is given upon a contingency, the intermediate interest undisposed of-that is to say, the intermediate interest between the testator's death, if there be no previous legatee for life, or, if there be, between the death of the previons taker and the happening of the contingency-will sink into the residue for the benefit of the next of kin, or executor of the testator, if not bequeathed by him; but if not disposed of, for the benefit of bis residuary legatee. 1 Brown, Ch. 57 ; 4 id. 114; Mer. Ch. 384; 2 Atk. Ch. 329 ; Forr. Exch. 145; 2 Ruper, Leg. 224.

Where a legacy is given by immediate bequest, whether such legacy be particular or residuary, and there is a condition to divest it upon the death of the legatee under twentyone, or upon the happening of some other event, with a limitation over, and the legatee dies before twenty-one, or before such other event happens, which nevertheless does take place, yet, as the legacy was payable at the end of a year after the testator's death, the legatee's representatives, and not the legatee over, will be entitled to the interest which accrued during the legatee's life, until the happening of the event which was to divest the legacy. 1 P. Will. Ch. 500; 2 id. 504 ; AmbI. 448 ; 5 Ves. Ch. $335,522$.
10. Where a residue is given, so as to be vested but not payable at the end of the year from the testatur's death, but upon the legatee's attaining twenty-one, or upon any other contingency, and with a bequest over divesting the legacy, upon the legatee's dying under age, or upon the happening of the contingency, then the legatee's representatives in the former case, and the legatee himself in the latter, shall be entitled to the interest that became due during the legatee's life or until the happening of the contingency. 2 P. Will. Ch. 419 ; 1 Brown, Ch. 81, 335 ; 3 Mer. Ch. 335.

Where a residue of personal estate is given, generally, to one for life with remainder over, and no mention is made by the testator respecting the interest, nor any intenticn to the contrary to be collected from the will, the rule appears to be now settled that the person taking for life is entitled to interest from the death of the testator, on such part of the residue bearing interest as is not necessary for the payment of debts. And it is immaterial whether the residue is only given generally, or directed to be laid out, with all ennvenient speed, in funds or securities, or to be laid nut in lands. See 6 Ver. Ch. $520 ; 9 \mathrm{id} .89,549$, 553; 2 Roper, Leg. 234.
11. But where a residue is directed to be laid out in land, to be settled on one for life, with the remainder orer, and the testator directs the interest to accumulate in the mean time until the money is laid out in land, or otherwise invested on security, the accumulation shall cease at the end of one year from the testator's death, and from that period the tenant for life shall lee entitled to the interest. 6 Ves. Ch. $520,5: 8,5 \Sigma 9 ; 7$ id. $95 ; 2$ Sim. \& S. Ch. 396.

Where no time of payment is mentioned by the testator, annuities are considered as cummencing from the death of the testator; and, consequently, the first payment will be due at the end of the year from that event: if, therefore, it be not made then, interest, in those cases wherein it is allowed at all, must be computed from that period. 2 Roper, Leg. 249; 5 Binn. Penn. 475. See 6 Mass. 37; 1 Hare & W. Sel. Dec. 356.
12. How much interest is to be allowed. As to time. In actions for money had and received, interest is allowed from the date of service of the writ. 1 Mass. $426 ; 15$ Pick. Mass. 500 ; 12 N. H. 474. The words "with interest fir the same" carry interest from date. Add. Penn. 323, 324; 1 Stark. 452, 507.

The mere circumstance of war existing between two nations is not a sufficient reason for abating interest on debts due by the subjects of one belligerent to another. 1 Pet. C. C. 524; 4 Harr. & McH. Md. 161. But a prohibition of all intercourse with an enemy during war furnishes a sound reason for the abatement of interest until the return of peace. See, on this subject, 2 Dall. Penn. 102, 132; 4 id. 286; 1 Wash. Va. 172 ; 1 Call, Va. 194 ; 3 Wash. C. C. 396; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 103; & 18, beyond.

A debt barred by the statute of limitations and revived by an acknowledgment bears interest for the whole time. 16 Vt .297.
13. As to the allowance of simple and compound interest. Interest upon interest is not alliwed, except in special cases, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 287 ; Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, c. 2, 8 4, note a; 31 Vt. 679; 34 Penn. St. 210 ; and the uniform current of decisions is against it, as being a hard, oppressive exaction, and tending to usury. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 14; Cam. & N. No. C. 361 ; 13 Vt. 430 . By the civil law, interest could not be demanded beyond the principal sum, and payments exceeding that amount were applied to the extinguishment of the principal. Ridley's View of the Civil, etc. Law, 84; Authentics, 9th Coll.

Where a partner has overdrawn the partnership funds, and refuses, when called upon to account, to disclose the profits, recourse would be had to compound interest as a substitute for the profits he might reasonably be supposed to have made. 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 213.
14. When executors, administrators, or trustees convert the trust-money to their own use, or employ it in business or trade, or fail to invest, they are chargeable with compound interest. 1 Pick. Mass. 528; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 620 .

In an action to recover the annual interest due on a promissory note, interest will be allowed on each year's interest until paid. 2 Mass. 568 ; 8 id. 445 ; 1 N. H. 179; 16 Vt. 45. See, as to charging compound interest, the following cases: 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 550; Cam. & N. No. C. 361 ; 1 Binn. Penn. 165 ; 4 Yeates, Penn. 220; 1 Hen. & M. 15. As limited by the penalty of a bond. It is a general rule that the penalty of a bond limits the amount of the recovery. 2 Term, 388. But in some cases the interest. is recoverable beyond the amount of the penalty. 4 Cranch, 333 ; 15 Wend. N. Y. 76 ; 10 Conn. 95 ; Paine, С. С. 661 ; 6 Me. 14 ; 8 N. H. 491. The recovery depends on principles of law, and not on the arbitrary discretion of a jury. 3 Caines, N. Y. 49.
The exceptions are-where the bond is to account for moneys to be received, 2 Term, 388 ; where the plaintiff is kept out of his money by writs of error, 2 Burr. 1094, or delayed by injunction, 1 Vern. Ch. 349; 16

Viner, Abr. 303; if the recovery of the debt be delayed by the obligor, 6 Ves. Ch. 92; 1 Vern. Ch. 349; Show. Parl. Cas. 15; if extraordinary emoluments are derived from holding the money, 2 Brown, Parl. Cas. 251, or the bond is taken only as a collateral security, 2 Brown, Parl. Cas. 333, or the action be on a judgment recovered on a bond. 1 East, 436. See, also, 4 Day, Conn. 30; 3 Caines, N. Y. 49; 1 Taunt. 218; 1 Mass. 308; Comyns, Dig. Chancery (3 S 2); Viner, Abr. But these exceptions do not obtain in the administration of the debtor's assets where his other creditors might be injured by allowing the bond to be rated beyond the ponalty. 5 Ves. Ch. 329. See Viner, Abr. Interest (C 5).
16. As to the allowance of foreign interest. The rate of interest of the place of performance is to be allowed, where such place is specified, 10 Wheat. $367 ; 4$ Pet. 111; 20 Johns. N. Y. 102; 8 Pick. Mass. 194; 6 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 627; 3 N. Y. 266; 12 La. Ann. 815; 1 B. Monr. Ky. 29; 2 Watts & S . Penn. 327; 23 Vt. 286 ; 21 Ga. 135; 22 'lex. 108; 7 Ired. No. C. 424; 5 Clark & F. 17. How computed. In casting interest on notes, bonds, etc. upon which partial payments have been made, every payment is to be first applied to keep down the interest; but the interest is never allowed to form a part of the principal so as to carry interest. 2 Wash. C. C. 167 ; 1 Halst. N. J. 408; 2 Hayw. No. C. 17; 17 Mass. 417; 1 Dall. Penn. 378. See 14 Conn. 445.
When a partial paymentexceeds the amount of interest due when it is made, it is correct to compute the interest to the time of the first payment, add it to the principal, subtract the payment, cast interest on the remainder to the time of the second payment, add it to the remainder, and subtract the second payment, and in like manner from one payment to another, until the time of judgment. 1 Pick. Mass. 194; 4 Hen. & M. Va. 431; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. $458 ; 2$ Wash. C. C. 167. See 3 Wash. C. C. 350, 396; 3 Cow. N. Y. 86.
The same rule applies to judgments. 2 N . H. 109 ; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 452.

Where a partial payment is made before the debt is due, it cannot be apportioned part to the debt and part to the interest. As, if there be a bond for one hundred dollars, payable in one year, and at the expiration of six months fifty dollars be paid in, this payment shall not be apportioned part to the principal and part to the interest, but at the end of the year interest shall be charged on the whole sum, and the obligor shall receive credit for the interest of fifty dollars for six months. 1 Dall. Penn. 124.
18. When interest will be barred. When the money due is tendered to the person entitled to it, and he refuses to receive it, the interest ceases. 3 Campb. 296. See 8 East, 168; 3 Binn. Penn. 295.

Where the plaintiff was absent in foreign parts beyond seas, cvidence of that fact may Le given in evidence to the jury on the plea of payment, in order to extinguish the interest during such absence. 1 Call, Va. 133; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 340; 1 Roet, Conn. 178. But see 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 263.

Whenever the law prohibits the payment of the principal, interest during the prohibition is not demandable. 2 Dall. Penn. 102; 1 Pet. C. C. 524. See, also, 2 Dall. Penn. 132; 4 id. 286.
lf the plaintiff has accepted the principal, he cannot recover the interest in a separate action. 1 Esp. 110; 3 Jehns. N. Y. 229. See 14 Wend. N. Y. 116.
19. The rate of intereat allowable bas been fixed in the various states of the United States, by statutory eacetmsnts, as follows:
Alabama. Eight per centum per annum is allowed. Netes not excecding one dollar bear intsrest at the rate of ons hundred per centum per annum. Soms of the bank charters prohibit certuin banks from charging more than six per cent. upon bills of exchange, and notes negotiable at the bank, not having more than six months to run ; and over six and under nine, not more than seven per cent.; and over nine months, to charge not more than eight per cent. Aiken, Dig. 236. Contracts for mure than the logal rate ars void only as to the interest; and the taking of nsury doss not affect ths principal sum.
Arkaneas. Six per centum per annum is the legal rate of interest; but the parties may agree in writing for the payment of interest not exceeding ten per centum per annum on money due and to become due on any contract, whether under seal or not. Rev. Stat. c. 80, ss. 1, 2. Contracts where a greater amonnt is reserved are declarcd to be void, except bills of exchange and negotiable notes in the hands of a bonä fide bolder. Rev. Stat. c. 80, $\frac{8}{} 7$.
20. Califorria. Ten per cont. per annum is the logal rate; but parties may agree for any rats. Comp. Laws, c. 13; 11 Cal 14.

Connecticut. Six per centum per annum is ths amount allowed by law. The party stipulating for more cannot recover any intercst, but he may recover the principal. Comp. Stat. 1854, tit. 56.

Delaware. The legal rate is six per centum per annum. The person takiag mere than the legal rate shall forfeit a sum equal to the moncy lent, one-half to any person suing for the same, and one-half to the atate. Rsv. Code, c. 63, 28 1-3.
Florida. Eight per cent. is allowed: if a higher rate is reserved, interest is forfited. Thompson, Dig. 1847, 234.
21. Gcorgia. Eight per cent. is the legal rats; and where more is reserved the principal sum is alone recoverable. Prince, Dig. Ga. Laws, 294.
Illinois. Legal interest is six par cent. Parties may contract for conventional intorest not exceeding ten per cent. Usurious contracts are void for all interest, but the principal sum may be recovered. See 20 IIl. 137.
Indiana. Six per centum per annum is the rato fixed by law, except in Union county. On tho following fuads loaned out by the stats, namely, sinking, surplus, revenue, saline, and collage funds, seven per cent.; on the common school fund, eight per cent. Aet of January 31, 1842. Contracts for more than the legal rate are void as to the interest only. Rev. Stat. 1852, c. 57.
22. Jova. Six per centum per annum is the legal rate; but parties may contract for any rats not exceeding ton per cent. The person taking usury forfeits ten per ocut. on the sum loaned, to the school fund, but he may recover bis principal sum without interest. Rev. Code, 1860, 88 1787-1793.

Kansas. Ten per cent. is the legal rate; but twenty may be stipulated for. Banks are not to reccive more than six per cent. or the amount fixed by charter. Paymente of more than twenty per cent. are to be held payments toward the principal. Comp. Law, 1862, c. 116.

Kentuchy. Six per ceot. por annum is the legal rate. Contracts for more are void as to the excess above this rats only. The principal and legal intercst may be recovered. Rer. Stat. 1860, Stanton ed. c. 53 .
23. Louisiana. Legal interest is fixed at the following rates, to wit : at five per cent. on all sums which are the object of a judicial demand,-whence this is called judicial interest,-and sums discounted by banks, at the rate established by their charters. The amount of conventional interest canoot exceed ten per cent. The same must be fixed in writing; and the testimonial proof of it is not admitted. Usurers furfeit all interest ; and if usurious interest has bsen paid, it may be recovered back if sued for within a year. Civ. Cods, 1930-1939, 2895.
Maine. Six per contum par annum is ths legal interest; and any contract for more is voidable as to the cxeess, except in case of letting cattle, and other usages of a like nature in practice among farmers, or maritime contracts among merchants, as buttomry, insnrance, or course of exchange, as has been heretofore practised. Me. Rev. Stat. 1857, c. 45. The innocent indorse of negotiablo paper may recover thereon though usurious in ite inception.
Maryland. Six per contum per annum is the amount limited by law, in all cases. Usurious contracts are void; and persons stipulating for mors than lawful interest forfeit treble the amount lent, one half to the state and the other to the prosecutor. Md. Rev. Code, 1860, art. 95 .
24. Afagsachuretto. Six per cent. per annum is the lawful rate for all sums, for whatever time lent. Usury subjects the lender to a forfeiturs of threo times the interest and costs, but does not avoid tho contract, 12 Cush. Mass. 156; 6Metc. Mass. 296; 7 id. 14; 11 id. 526; 7 Pick. Mass. 40; and whero usurious interest has been paid threefold, the unlawful interest may be recovered by action within two years. Gen. Stat. c. 53, 383-5; 3 Gray, Mass. 225; 4 id. 593; 7 Metc. Mass. 525.

Michigan. Seven per eent.is the legal rate of interest ; 'hut on stipulation in writing, interest is allowed to any amount not exceeding ten per cent. on loans of money, but only on such loans. Rev. Stat. 160, 161. The bona fide holder of negotiable paper may recover although usurious in its inception. The security by which usurious interest is reserved is not void, but may be mads the foundation of an action for the principal and legal interest.
25. Minnesota. The legal rate is ssven per cent.; but partics may agree for any rate. Comp. Stat. 1858, с. 30.
Jtisaissippi. The legal interest is aix per cent.;
but on all bonds, notes, or contracts in writing signed by the debtor for the bona fide loan of money, expressing therein the rate of interest fairly agrced on between the parties for the use of money so loaned, eight per cent. interest is allowed. Rsv. Code, 1857, c. 50 ; 35 Miss. 540 . Usury does not ayoid the contract: the lender can reeover his principal and lawful interest.

Missouri. When no contract is made as to interest, six per cent. per annum is allowed. But the parties may agree to pay any higher rate, not exceeding ten per cent. Rev. Code, 333.
26. New Hampshire. No persoc shall take iaterest for the loan of money, wares, or merchandise, or any other personal estate whatsoever, above the value of six pounds, for the use or forbearance of one hundred pounds, for a year, and after that rate for a greater or lesser sum or for a longer or shorter time. Provided that nothing in this act shall extend to the letting of cattle, or other usages of a like nature in practice among farmers, or to maritime contracts among merchants, as bottomry, insurance, or course of exchange, as hath been heretofore used. Act of February 12, 1791, s. 2. The person who takes a higher rate forfeits three times the amount taken. Comp. Stat. 1853, c. 203.
New Jersey. The legal rate is six per cent. par annum; and a usurious contract is void. In Hudson and Essex countics, and in the cities of Rahway, Paterson, Hoboken, and Jersey City, seven per cent. may be taken, provided one of the parties reside within those places or out of the state. 2\%. Neto York. Seven per cent. is the rate fixed by statute for intercst in all cases except bottomry and respondentia honds, and contraets, and loans by some moneyed corporations for a short period, for which latter class the rate is restricted to six per cent. Contracts wherein more is reserved are void, and the lender is guilty of a misdsmeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment. 3 N. Y. Rsv. Stat. 5th ed. 72.
North Carolina. Six per cent. per annum is the interest allowed by law. The banks are allowed to take the interest off at the time of making a discount. Usurious contracts are void. Persons taking more than logal interest forfeit double the money lent, one-half to the state and one-hall to the prosecutor. No. C. Rev. Code, 1854, e. 114.
28. Ohio. The legal rate is six per cent.; but any parties except banks may contract for ten per cent. Usurious contracts are void as to the excess of interest only. 7 Ohio, 80. Banks are obliged to pay twelve per cent. interest during a suspension of specie payment. Swan, Stat. 1860, c. 60.

Oregon. Legal interest is ten per cent. per annum; but parties may agree for any rate, and for compound interest.
Pennsylvania. Interest is allowed at the rate of six per cent. per annum for the loan or use of monsy or other commodities. Act of March 2, 1723. And lawful intcrest is allowed on judgments. Act of $1700 ; 1$ Smith, Penn. Laws, 12. Sse 6 Watts, Penn. 53; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 47 ; 13 .id. 221; 4 Whart. Penn. 221; 6 Binn. Pend. 435; 1 Dall. Peno. 378, 407; 2 id. 92; 2 Pet. 538, 8 Wheat. 355. Any person taking more than legal interest forfeits the amount lent, one half to the goverament and the other to the prosecutor; but the contract is valid.
29. Rhode Island. Six per cent. is tho lawful rate on all loans of money. The principal and lawful interest may be recovered on usurious contracts. K. I, Rev. Stat. 1857, e. 121.
South Carolina. . Seven per cent. par annum is the legal rate of interest. The taking of usury does not avoid the contraot, but all interest is forfeited and the principal only reooverable.

Tennessee. The interest allowg by law is six per cent. per annum. When more is charged, it is not recoverable; but the principal and legal interest may be recovered. Tenn. Code, 1848, zze 19431954.

Texas. The legal rate is eight per cent.; bnt parties may agree for any rate not excceding twelve. Usurious contracts are void only to the extent of all interest. Hartley, Dig. Tex. Laws, art. 1606-1611; 20 Tex. 465.
30. Vermont. Six per cent. per annum is the legal interest.. If more be charged and paid, it may be recovered back in an action of assumpsit. But these provisions do not extend "to the letting of cattle, and other usages of a like nature among farmers, or maritime contracts, bottomry, or course of exchange, as has been custumary." Vt. Comp. Stat. 1850, c. 76.

Virginia. Interest is allowed at the rate of six per cent. per annum. Usurious contracts are void. Pcrsons taking usury forfeit double the money or property lent, and the borrower may file a bill in equity and compel the lender to disclose the terms of the loan, and if usurious the lender recovers his principal without interest. Va. Rev. Code, c. 141.
${ }^{1}$ Visconsin. Seven per cent. per annum is the legal rate; but parties may contract in writing for any rate not exceeding ten per cent.; usurious contracts are void. Wisc. Rev. Stat. 1858, c. 61.
31. In Practice. Concern; advantage; benefit.

Such a relation to the matter in issue as creates a liability to pecuniary gain or loss from the event of the suit. 11 Metc. Mass. 395, 396.

A person may be disqualified to act as a judge, juror, or witness in a cause by reason of an interest in the sulject-matter in dispute.

As to the disqualifying interest of judges, see JUDGE; as to the disqualifying interest of jurors, see Juror.

An interest disqualifying a witness must be legal, as contradistinguished from mere prejudice or bias arising from relationship, friendship, or any of the numerous motives by which a witness may be supposed to be influenced, Leach, Cr. Cas. 154; 2 How. St. Tr. 334, 891; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 46, s. 25 ; must be present, 1 Hoffman, N.Y. 21; 14 La. Ann. 417; must be certain, vested, and not uncertain and contingent, Dougl. 134; 2 P. Will. 287 ; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 132; 4 Binn. Penn. 83; 2 Yeates, Penn. 200; 5 Johns. N.Y. 256; 7 Mass. 25; 25 Ga. 337; 2 Metc. Ky. 608; 2 Iowa, 580 ; 35 Penn. St. 351 ; must be an interest in the ecent of the canse, or the verdict must be lawful evidence for or against him in aoother suit, or the record must be an instrument of evidence for or against him. 22 Tex. 295; 3 John. Cas. 83; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 36. But an interest in the question does not disqualify the witness. 1 Caines, N. Y. 171; 4 Johns. N. Y. $302 ; 5$ id. $255 ; 1$ Serg. & R. Penn. 32, 36 ; 6 Binn. Penn. 266 ; 1 Hen. & M. Va. 165, 168.
32. The magnitude of the interest is altogether immaterial: a liability for costs is sufficient. 5 Term, 174; 2 Vern. Ch. 317; 2 Me. 194; 11 Johns. N. Y. 57.

Interest will not disqualify a person as a witness if he has an equal interest on both sides. 7 Term, 480, 481, n.; 1 Bibb, Ky.

298; 2 Mass. 108; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 119; 6 Penu. St. 322.

The objection to incompetency on the ground of interest may be removed by an extinguishment of that interest by means of, a release, executed either by the witness, when he would receive an advantage by his testimony, or by those who have a claim upon h m, when his testimony would be evidence of his liability. The objection may also be removed by payment. Starkie, Ev. pt. 4, p. 757. Under the statutes of some of the states, it is no longer a cause of objection to the competency of witnesses that they have an interest in the subject-matter in issue. See, generally, Greenleaf, Starkie, Phillipps, Evidence.
interest, maritime. See Marltime Interest.
INTEREST OR NO INTEREST. A provision in a policy of insurance, which imports that the policy is to be good though the insured have no insurable interest in the sub-ject-matter. This constitutes a wager policy, which is bad in England, by statute 19 Geo. II. c. 37 , and, generally, from the policy of the law. 2 Parsons, Mar. Law, 89, note.
INTERFERENCE. The state of things which exists when a person applies for a patent which if granted would cover any of the patentable ground occupied by any existing patent, or by any patent for which an application is then pending. An investigation is ordered by the commissioner of patents, for the purpose of determining which of the parties was the first to make the invention, or that portion of it from which the interference results. When the controversy is between two applications, a patent will be finally granted to him who is shown to be the first inventor, and will be deaied to the other applicant so far as the point thus controverted is concerned. But if the interference is between an application on the one hand and an actual patent on the other, as there is no power in the patent office to cancel the existing patent, all that can be done is to grant or withhold from the applicant the patent he asks. If the patent is granted to him, there will be two patents for the same thing. The two parties will stand upon a footing of equality, and must settle their rights by a resort to the courts, in the manner provided by the act of congress. In interference cases, each party is allowed to take the testimony of witnesses in accordance with rules established by the patent office. See Act of July 4, 1836, $888,16$.
INTERIM (Lat.). In the mean time; meanwhile. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. 2 Bell, Comm. 355.
INTERIINEATION. Writing between two lines.
Interlineations are made either before or after the esecution of an instrument. Those after the execution of he noted mereviouslv to its execution; those made after are made either by the party in whose favor they are, or by strangers.

When made by the party himself, whether the interlineation be material or immaterial, they render the deed void, 1 Gall. C. C. 71, unless made with the consent of the opposite: party. See 11 Coke, 27 a; 9 Mass. 307; 15 Johns. N. Y. 293; 1 Dall. Penn. 57; 1 Halst. N. J. 215. But see 1 Pet. C. C. 364; 5 Harr. & J. Md. 41; 2 La. 290; 4 Bingh. 123; Fitzg. 207, 223; 2 Penn. St. 191.

When the interlineation is made by a stranger, if it be immaterial it will not vitiate the instrument, but if it be material. it will, in general, avoid it. See Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 26, s. 8; Comyns, Dig. Fait (F 1). See Alteration; Erasure.

INTERLOCUTORY. Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action whicb decides some point or matter, which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue: as, interlocutory judgments, or decrees, or orders. See Decree; Judoment.INTERLOPERS. Persons who interrupt the trade of a company of merchants, by pursuing the same business with them in the same place, without lawful authority.

INTERNATIONAI LAWW. The system of rules which Christian states acknowledge to be obligatory upon them in their relations to each other and to each other's subjects. It is the jus inter gentes, as distinguished from the jus gentium.
2. The scientific basis of these rules is to be found in natural law, or the doctrine of rights and of the state; for nations, like smaller communities and individuals, have rights and correlative obligations, moral claims and duties. Hence it might seem as if the science consisted simply of deductions from certain fundamental propositions of natural right; but this is far from being the case, for national intercourse is the most voluntary possible, and takes a shape widely different from a system of natural justice. It would be true to say that this science, like every department of moral science, can require nothing unjust; but, on the other hand, the actual law of nations contains many provisions which imply a waiver of just rights; and, in fact, a great part of the modern inprovements in this code are due to the spirit of humanity controlling the spirit of justice, and leading the circle of Christian nations freely to abandon the position of rigorous right for the sake of mutual consenience or good will.
3. So much for the general foundation of international law. The particular sources are the jural and the moral. The jural elements are, first, the rights of states as such, deducible from the nature of the state and from its office of a protector to those who live under its law ; second, those rights which the state shares with individuals, and in part with artifinial narsone ne the richta of nme perty, eontract, and roputation ; and, third, the rights which arise when it is wrenged, as those of self-protection and redress. To these have been joined by some the rights of punishment and of conquest,-the latter, at least, witheut good reason; for there is and can be no naked right of eonquest, irrespective of redress and self-protection. The moral elements are the duties of humanity, comity, and intereourse.
4. Various divisions of international law have been proposed, but none are of any great importance. One has been into natural and voluntary law, in which latter conwentional or treaty law and customary are embraced. Another, somewhat similar, separates international rules into those which are deducible frem general natural jus, those which are derived from the idea of estate, and those which grow out of simple compact. Whatever division be made, it is to be observed that nations are voluntary, first, in deeiding the question what intereourse they will hold with eaeh other; second, that they are voluntary in defining their rights and obligations, moral claims and duties, although these have an objective existence beyond the control of the will of nations; and, third, that when international law has arisen by the free assent of those who enter into certain arrangements, obedienee to its provisions is as truly in aeeordance with natural lawwhich requires the observance of contractsas if natural law had been intuitively diseerned or revealed from heaven and no consent had been necessary at the outset.
5. The aids in ascertaining what international law is or hàs been, are derived from the sea-eodes of medieval Europe, espeeially the Consolato del Mare; from treaties, especially those in whieh a large part of Europe has had a share, like the Treaties of Westphalia; from jodicial deeisions, state papers on controverted points, and the treatises of text-writers. Among the latter, Grotius led the way in the seventeenth eentury, while Puffendorf, fifty years afterwards, from his having confounded the law of nature with that of nations, has sunk into deserved oblivion. In the next eentury, Cornelius van Bynkershoek, although the author of no continuous work embracing the whole of our scienee, ranks among its ablest expounders, through his treatises entitled, De Dominio Maris, De Foro Legatorum, and Qucestiones Juris Publici. In the middle of the eighteenth century, Vattel, a disciple of the Welfian philosophy, published a elear but somewhat superficial treatise, which has had more than its due share of popularity down to the present day. Of the very numerous modern works we can only name that of Kluber, in French and German (1819 and since), that of De Martens, which came to a fifth edition in 1855 , and those of Wheaton (1855, 6th ed.) and of Heffter (1855, 3d ed.), whieh two last are the leading authorities,- the former for the English-speaking lands, the latter for the Germans. The literature of the science must be drawn from Von Ompteda and his continuator, Von Kamptz, or from the more reeent work of Von Mohl (Erlangen, 1855-58), in whieh, also, an exposition of the history is ineluded. The excellent works of Ward (Inquiry into the Foundation and History of the Law of Nations, ete.) and of Wheaton (History of the Law of Nations from the Earliest Times to the Treaty of Washington in 1842) are of the highest use to all who would study the science, as it ought to be studied, as the offshoot and index of a progressive Christian civilization.
6. Among the provisions of international law, we naturally start from those which grow out of the essence of the individual state. The rights of the state, as such, may be comprised under the term sovereignty, or be divided into sovereignty, independenee, and equality; by whieh latter term is intended equality of rights. Sovereignty and independence are two sides of the same property, and equality of rights neeessarily belongs to sovereign states, whatever be their size or constitution; for no reason can be assigned why all states, as they have the same powers and destination in the system of things, should not have identically the same rights. States are thus, as far as other states are coneerned, masters over themselves and over their subjects, free to make such changes in their laws and constitutions as they may choose, and yet ineapable by any ehange, whether it be union, or separation, or whatever else, of escaping existing obligations. With regard to every state, international law only asks whether it be such in reality, whether it aetually is invested with the properties of a state. With forms of government international law has nothing to do. All forms of government, under which a state can discharge its obligations and duties to others, are, so far as this eode is concerned, equally legitimate.
7. Thus, the rule of non-intervention in the affairs of other states is a well-settled principle of international law. In the European system, however, there is an acknowledged exeeption to this rule, and also a claim on the part of eertain states to a still wider departure from the rule of non-intervention, whieh other states have not as yet admitted.

It is conceded that any political action of any state or states whieh seriously threatens the existenee or safety of others, any disturbance of the balance of power, may be resisted and put down. This must be regarded as an applieation of the primary prineiple of selfpreservation to the affairs of nations.

But when certain states elaim a right to interfere in the internal affairs of others in order to suppress constitutional movements and the action of a people without its own sphere, this is as yet an unauthorized greund of interference. The plea here is, on the part of those states which have asserted such a right, espeeially of Austria, Prussia, Russia, and at times of Franee, that internal revolutions are the result of wide-spread conspiracies, and if suceessful anywhere are fatal to the peace and prosperity of all absolute or non-constitutional governinents. The right, if admitted, would destroy by an international law all power of the people in any state over their government, and would place the smaller states under the tutelage of two or three of the larger. England has always protested against this enlargement of the right of interferenee, and France has established more than one revolutionary government in spite of it.
8. In the notion of sovereignty is involved paramount exclusive jurisdietion within a certain territory. As to the definition of territory, international law is tolerahly elear. Beside the land and water included within the line of boundary separating one state from another, it regards as territory the coast-water to the distanee of a marine league, and the portions of sea within lines drawn between headlands not very remote, or, in other words, those parts of the sea which are elosely connected with a particular country when it needs to defend itself against attack and its laws are exposed to violation. The high sea, on the other hand, is free, and so is every avenue from one part of the sea to another, which is necessary for the intereourse of the world. It has been held that rivers are exelusively under the jurisdiction of countries through which they flow, so that the dwellers on their upper waters have no absolute right of passage to and from the sea; hut praetically, at present, all the rivers whieh divide or run through different states are free for all those who live upon them, if not for all mankind. It has been elaimed that ships are territory ; but it is safer to say that they are under the jurisdiction of their own state until they come within that of another state. By comity, public vessels are exempt from foreign jurisdiction, whether in foreign ports or elsewhere.
9. The relations of a state to aliens, especially within its borders, come next under review. LIere it cannot be affirmed that a state is obligated, in strict right, to admit foreigners into or to allow them transit across its territory, or even to hold intercourse with them. All this may be its duty and perhaps, when its territory affords the only convenient pathway to the rest of the world or its commodities are necessary to others of mankind, transit and intercourse may be enforced. But, aside from these extreme cases, intercourse is only a duty, and not definable with preeision, as is shown by the endless varieties of commercial treaties. It can only he said that the practice of Christian states is growing more and more liberal, both as regards admitting foreigners into their territories and to the enjoyment of those rights of person and property which the natives possess, and as regards domieiliating them, or even incorporating them, afterwards, if they desire it, into the body politic. See Alien.

The multiplied and very close relations whieh have arisen between nations in ma dern times, through domiciled or temporary residents, have given rise to the question, What law, in particular cases involving personal status, property, eontracts, family rights, and suecession, shall control the decisions of the eourts? Shall it be always the lex loci, or sometimes some other? The answers to these questions are given in private international law, or the confict of law, as it is sometimes called,-a very interesting hranch of law, as showing how the Christian nations are coming from age to age nearer to one another in their views of the private relations of men. See Conflict of Laws.
10. Intereourse needs its agents, both those whose offiee it is to attend to the relations of states and the rights of their countrymen in general, and those who look after the commercial interests of individuals. The former share with public vessels, and with sovereigns travelling abroad, certain exemptions from the law of the land to which they are sent. Their persons are ordinarily inviolate; they are not subject to foreign eivil or criminal jurisdiction; they are generally exempt from imposts; they have liberty of worship, and a certain power over their trains, who likewise share their exemptions. Only within five centuries have ambassadors resided permanently abroad,-a change which has had an important effeet on the relations of states. Consuls have almost none of the privileges of ambassadors, except in countries beyond the pale of Christianity.

Nations, like individuals, have the right of contracts, and their treaties are subjeet to the same rules of interpretation and of morality which govern in munieipal law. An interesting description of treaties are those of guaranty, by which sometimes a right of intervention in the affairs of other states is secured beforehand.
But treaties may be broken, and all other rights invaded; and there is no court of appeal where wrongs done hy states can be tried. The rights of self-defence and of redress now arise, and are of such importance that but for redress by foree or war, and to prevent war, international law would be a very brief seience. The laws and usages of modern warfare show a great adrance of the nations in humanity since the middle ages. The following are among the leading principles and usages:-

That declarations of war, as formerly practised, are unnecessary; the change in this respect being due chiefly to the intimate knowledge which nations now have, through resident ambassadors and in other ways, of eaeh other's movements and dispositions.
That at the opening of war the subjects of one hostile state within the territory of another are protected in their persons and property, and this notwithstanding it is conceded that by striet right such property is liable to confiscation.
That war is waged between states, and by the active war agents of the parties, but that non-combatants arè tō be uninjured in per"son and property by an invading army. Con*tributions or requisitions, however, are still -collected from a conquered or occupied terri'tory, and property is taken for the uses of armies at a compensation.
7. That combatants, when surrendering themselves in battle, are spared, and are to be treated with humanity during their captivity, until exchanged or ransomed.
& That even public property, when not of a military character, is exempt from the ordiinary operations of war, unless necessity requires the opposite course.
That in the storming of inhabited towns great license has hitherto been given to the :besieging party; and this is onc of the blots of modern as well as of ancient warfare. But bumane commanders avoid the bombardment of fortified towns as far as possible; while mere fortresses may be assailed in any manner.
The laws of sea-warfare have not as yet come up to the level of those of land-warfare. Especially is capture allowed on the sea in cases where it would not occur on the land. Yet there are indications of a change in this respect: privateering has been abandoned by many states, and there is a growing demand that all capture upon the sea, even from enemies, except for violations of the rules of contraband, blockade, and search, shall cease. -See Capture.
11. When captures are made on the sea, the title, by modern law, does not fully vest in the captor at the moment, but needs to pass under the revision of a competent court. The captured vessel may be ransomed on the sea, unless municipal law forbids, and the ransom is of the nature of a safe-conduct. If a vessel is recaptured, or rescued from other perils, a compensation is due to the rescuer, which is oalled salvage; which see.
In modern international law, questions of neutrality play a great part. A neutral is one, strictly, who affords assistance to neither party; for assistance afforded to both alike, in almost every case, would benefit one party and be of little use to the other. The neutral territory; on land and sea, must be untouched by the war; and for all violations of this rule the neutral can take or demand satisfaction.

The principal liabilities of neutral trade are the following:-

- In regard to the nationality of goods and vessels, the rule, on the whole, bas been that enemy's goods were exposed to capture on any vessel, and neutral's saf. on any, and 4hat the neutral vessel was not guilty for baving enemy's goods on board. Owing to the declaration of the Peace of Paris in 1856, the humane rule that free ships make free goods will no doubt become uaiversal.
- Certain articles of especial use in war are salled contraband, and are liable to capture. But the list has been stratched by belligerents, especially by England, so as to include naval stores and provisions; and then, to cure the hardship of the rule, another-the rule of pre-emption-has becn introduced. The true doctrine with regard to contraband seems to be that nothing can be so called unless nations have agreed so to consider it; or, in other words, that articles cannot hecome occasionally contraband owing to the convenience of a belligerent. See Contraband.

An attempt of a neutral ship to enter a blockaded place is a gross violation of neutrality; and, as in cases of contraband trade the goods, so here the guilty vessel is confiscated. But blockade must exist in fact, and not alone upon paper, must be made known to neutrals, and, if discontinued, must he resumed with a new notification. See Blockave.
To carry out the rights of war, the right of search is indispensable; and such search ought to be submitted to without resistance. Search is exclusively a war right, excepting that vessels in peace can be arrested near the coast on suspicion of violating revenue laws, and anywhere on suspicion of piracy. The slavetrade not being piracy by the law of nations, vessels of other nations cannot be searched on suspicion of being engaged in this traffic. And here comes in the question which has agitated the two leading commercial st.tes of Christendom:-How shall it be known that a vessel is of a nationality which renders search unlawful? The English claim, and justly, that they have a right to ascertain this simple fact by detention and examina tion; the United States contend that if in so doing mistakes are committed, compensation is duc, and to this England has agreed.

INTERNUNCIO. A minister of a second order, charged with the affairs of the court of Rome, where that court has no nuncio under that title.

INTERPELATION. In Civil Law. The act by which, in consequence of an agreement, the party bound declares that he will not be bound beyond a certain time. Wolff, Inst. Nat. $\frac{8}{8} 752$.

In the case of a lease from year to year, or to continue as long as both parties please, a notice given by one of them to the other of a determination to put an end to the contract would bear the name of interpelation.
INTERPLEADER. In Practice. A proceeding in the action of detinue, by which the defendant states the fact that the thing sued for is in his hands, and that it is claimed by a third person, and that whether such person or the plaintiff is entitled to it is unknown to the dofendant, and thereupon the defendant prays that a process of garnishment may be issued to compel such third person so claiming to become defendant in his stead. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 23; Mitford, Eq. Pl. Jeremy ed. 141; Story, Eq. Jur. $88800,801,802$. Interpleader is aillowed to avoid inconvenience; for two parties claiming adversely to each other cannot be entitled to the same ihing, Brooke, Abr.

Interpleader, 4; hence the rule which requires the defendant to allege that different parties demand the same thing.
If two persons sue the same person in detinue for the thing, and both actions are depending in the same court at the same time, the defendant may plead that fact, produce the thing (e.g. a deed or charter) in court, and aver his readiness to deliver it to either as the court shall adjudge, and thereupon pray that they may interplead. In such a case it has been settled that the plaintiff whose writ bears the earliest teste has cthe right to begin the interpleading, and the other will be compelled to answer. Brooke, Abr. Interpleader, 2.

For the law in regard to interpleader in equity, see Bill of Interpleader.

INTERPRETATION. The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas. Lieber, Leg. and Pol. Hermeneutics.

The "true meaning" of any signs is that meaning which those who used them were desirons of expressing. A porson adopting or sanctioning them "nses" them as well as their immediate author. Both parties to an agreement equally make use of the signs declaratory of that agreement, though one only is the originator, and the other may be entirely passive. The most common signs used to convey ideas are words. When there is a contradiction in signs intended to agree, resort must be -had to construction,-that is, the drawing of conclnsions from the given signs, respecting ideas which they do not express. Construction is usuaily confounded with interpretation. A distinction between the two, first made in the Leg. and Pol. Hermeneutics, has been adopted by Greenleaf and other American and European jurists. Hermeneutics inoludes both.

Close interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called literal, but the term is inadmissible. Lieber, Herm. 66.

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensiva, called, also, liberal interpretation) adopts a more comprebensive signification of the word.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excedens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one: it is, therefore, not genuine interpretation.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones. Ernesti, Institutio Interpretis.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text ${ }^{\text {a }}$ subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio vafer), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.
2. The civilians divide interpretation into:-

Authentic (interpretatio authentiea), which proeceds from the author himself.

Usual (interpretatio usualis), when the interpreta. tion is on the ground of usage.
Doctrinal (interpretatio doctrinalis), when made agreeably to rules of science. Doctrinal interpretation is suhdivided into extensive, restrictive, and declaratory: extensive, whenever the reason of a proposition bas a broader sense than its terms, and it is consequently applied to a case which had not been explained: restrictive, when the expressions have a greater latitude than the reasons; and declaratory, when the reasons and terms agree, but it is necessary to settle the meaning of some term or terms to make the sense complete.
3. The following are the elementary principles and rules of interpretation and construction, which are here given together on account of their intimate connection and the difficulty of separating them.
There can be no sound interpretation without good faith and common sense. The object of all interpretation and construction is to ascertain the intention of the authors, even so far as to control the literal signification of the words; for verba ita sunt intelligenda ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Words are, therefore, to be taken as those who used them intended, which must be presumed to be in their popular and ordinary signification, unless there is some good reason for supposing otherwise, as where technical terms are used: quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas ibi nulla expositio contra verbia fienda est. When words have two senses, of which one only is agreeable to the law, that one must prevail, Cowp. 714; when they are inconsistent with the evident intention, they will be rejected, 2 Atk. Ch. 32; when words are inadvertently omitted, and the meaning is obvious, they will be supplied by inference from the context. Impossible things cannot be required. The subjectmatter and nature of the context, or its ohjects, causes, effects, consequences, or precedents, or the situation of the parties, must often be consulted in order to arrive at their intention, as when words have, when literally construed, either no meaning at all or a very absurd one. The whole of an instrument must be viewed together, and not each part taken separately; and effect must be given to every part, if possible. Assistance must be sought from the more near before proceeding to the remote. When one part is totally repugnant to the rest, it will be stricken out; but if it is only explanatory it will operate as a limitation. Reference to the lex loci or the usage of a particular place or trade is frequently necessary in order to explain the meaning. 4 East, 135 ; 2 Bos. & P. 164; 3 Starkie, Ev. 1036; 6 Term, 320; 16 Serg. & R. Penn. 126.
4. Words spoken cannot vary the terms of a'written agreement; they may overthrow it. Words spoken at the time of the making of a written agreement are merged in the writing. 5 Coke, 26; 2 Barnew. & C. 634; 4 Taunt. 779. But there are exceptions to this rule, as in a case of fraud. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 464; 10 id. 292. Where there is a latent ambiguity which arises only in the application and does not appear upon the face of the instrument, it may be supplied by other proof; ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur. 1 Dall. Penn. 426; 4 id. 340; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 609. The rule that an agreement is to be construed most strongly against the party benefited can only de applied in doubtful cases. The morc the text partakes of a solemn compact, the stricter should be its construction. Penal statutes must be strictly interpreted; remedial ones liberally, 1 Blackstone, Comm. 88 ; 6 Watts & S. Penn. 276; 3 Taunt. 377; and generally, in regard to statutes, the constrction given them in the country where they were enacted will be adopted elsewhere. The general expressions used in a contract are controlled by the special provisions therein. In agreements relating to real property, the lex rei sitce prevails, in personal contracts the lex loci contractus, except when they are to be performed in another country, and then the law of the latter place governs. 2 Mass. 88; 1 Pet. 317; Story, Contl. of Laws, 8242 ; 4 Cow. N. Y. 410 , note; 2 Kent, Comm. 39, 457, notes; 3 Conn. 253, 472; 4 id. 517 ; 1 Wash. C. C. 253. See 12 Mass. 4. When there are two repugnant clauses in a deed, which cannot stand together, the first prevails. With a will the reverse is the case. In all instruments the written part controls the printed.
5. In addition to the above rules, there are many presumptions of law relating to agreements, such as, that the parties to a simple contract intend to bind their personal representatives; that where several parties contract without words of severalty, they are presumed to bind themselves jointly; that every grant carries with it whatever is necessary to its enjoyment; when no time is mentioned, a reasonable time is meant; and other presumptions arising out of the nature of the case. It is the duty of the court to interpret all written instruments, see 3 Binn. Ponn. 337; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 279; 7 id. 372; 15 id. 100; 10 Mass. 384; 3 Cranch, 180; 3 Rand. 586; written evidence, 2 Watte, Penv. 347 ; and foreign laws. 1 Penn. 388. INTERPREtER. One employed to make a translation.
An interpreter should be sworn before he translates the testimony of a witness. 4 Mass. 81; 5 id. 219; 2 Caines, N. Y. 155.
A person employed between an attorney and client to act as interpreter is considered merely as the organ between them, and is not bound to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications. 1 Pet. C. C. 356; 4 Munf. Va. 273; 3 Wend. N. Y. 337.

INTERREGNOM (Lat.). The period, in case of an established government, which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another, is called interregnum. The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.
INTERROGATOIRE. In French Law. An act, or instrument, which contains the interrogatories made by the judge to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused. Pothier, Proc. Crim. s. 4 art. 2, \% 1.
INTERROGATORIES. Material and pertinent questions, in writing, to necessary points, not confessed, exhibited for the examination of witnesses or persons who are to give testimony in the cause.
They are either original and direct on the part of him who produces the witnesses, or cross and counter, on behalf of the adverse party, to examine witnesses produced on the other side. Either party, plaintiff or defendant, may exhibit original or cross interrogatories.
The form which interrogatories assume is as various as the minds of the persons who propound them. They should be as distinct as possible, and capable of a definite answer; and they should leave no loop-holes for evasion to an unwilling witness. Care must be observed to put no leading questions in original interrogatories, for these always lead to inconvenience; and for scandal or impertinence interrogatories will, under certain circumstances, be suppressed. See Wills, Int. passim; Gresley, Eq. Ev. pt. 1, c. 3, s. 1; Viner, Ábr.; Hind, Chanc. Pract. 317 ; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4419 et seq.; Daniell, Chanc. Pract.
INTERRUPTION. The effect of some act or circumstance which stops the course of a prescription or act of limitations. 3 Bligh, n. s. 44 ; 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 497.

Civil interruption is that which takes place by some judicial act.

Natural interruption is an interruption in fact. 4 Mas. C.C. 404; 2 Younge & J. Exch. 285. See Easements; Limitations; Presoription.
In Scotch Law. The true proprietor's claiming his right during the course of prescription. Bell, Dict.
INTERVENTION (Lat. intervenio, to come between or among). In Civil Law. The act by which a third party becomes a party in a suit pending between other persons.
The intervention is made either to be joined to the plaintiff, and to claim the same thing he does, or some other thing connected with it; or to join the defendant, and with him to oppose the claim of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. Pothier, Proc. Civ. lere part. ch. 2, s. 6, 83.

In English Ecclesiastical Law. The proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-matter in dispute, in order the better to protect such interest, interposes his claim. 2 Chitty, Pract. 492; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 633; 2 Hagg. Cons. 137; 3 Phill. Eucl. 586; 1 Add. Eccl. $5 ; 4$ Hagg. Ecel. 67 ; Dunlop, Adm. Pract. 74. The intervener may come in at any stage of the cause, and even after judgment, if an appeal can be allowed on such judgment. 2 Hagg. Cons. 137; 1 Eng. Eccl. 480; 2 id. 13.

INTESTABLE. One who cannot lawfully make a testament.

An infant, an insane person, or one civilly dead, cannot make a will, for want of capacity or understanding; a married woman cannot make such a will without some special authority, because she is under the power of her hushand. They are all intestable.

INTESTACY. The state or condition of dyiug without a will.

INTESTATE. One who, having lawful power to make a will, has made none, or one which is defective in form. In that case, he is said to die intestate, and his estate descends to his heir at law.

This term comes from the Latin intestatus. Formerly, it was used in France indiscriminately with de-confess; that is, without confession. It was regarded as a crime, on account of the omission of the decease $d$ person to give something to the chureb, and was punished by privation of burial in consecrated ground. This omission, according to Fournel, Hist. des Avocats, vol. 1, p. 116, could be repaired by making an ampliative testament in the name of the deceased. See Vely, tom. 6, pagc 145; Henrion de Pansey, Authorité judiciaire, 129, and note; Descent; Distribution; Will.

INTIMATION. In Civil Law. The name of any judicial act by which a notice of a legal proceeding is given to some one; but it is more usually understood to mean the notice or summons which an appellant causes to be given to the opposite party, that the sentence will be reviewed by the superior judge.

In Scotch Lawr. An instrument of writing, made under the hand of a notary, and notified to a party, to inform him of a right which a third person had acquired: for example, when a creditor assigns a claim against his debtor, the assignee or cedent must give an intimation of this to the debtor, who, till then, is justified in making payment to the original creditor. Kames, Eq. b. 1, p. 1, s. 1.

INTRODUCTION. That part of a writing in which are detailed those facts which elucidate the subject.

INTROMISSION. In Scotch Law. TLe assuming possession of property belonging to another, either on legal grounds, or without any anthority: in the latter case it is called vicious intrumission. Boll, Dict.

INTRONISATION. In French Ecclesiastical Law. The installation of a bishop in his episcopal see. Clef des Lois Rum.; André.

INTRUDER. One who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter.

INTRUSION. The entry of a stranger after the determination of a particular estate of freehold, before the entry of him in reversion or remainder.

This entry and interposition of the stranger differs from an abatement in this, that an abatement is always to the prejudice of an heir or immediate devisee; an intrusion is always to the prejudice of him in remainder or reversion. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 169; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 203; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 12; Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Stephen, Comm. 443.

The name of a writ brought by the owner of a fee-simple, etc. against an intruder. New Nat. Brev. 453. Abolished by $3 & 4$ Will. 1V. c. 57 .

INUNDATION. The overflow of waters by coming out of their bed.

Inundations may arise from three causes: from public necessity, as in defence of a place it may be necessary to dam the current of a stream, which will cause an inundation to the upper lands; they may he occasioned by an invincible force, as by the accidental fall of a rock in the stream, or by a natural flood or freshet; or they may result from the erections of works on the stream. In the first case, the injury caused by the inundation is to be compensated as other injuries done in war; in the second, as there was no fault of any one, the loss is to be borne by the unfortunate owner of the estate; in the last, when the riparian proprietor is injured by such works as alter the level of the water where it enters or where it leaves the property on which they are erected, the person injured may recover damages for the injury thus caused to his property by the inundation. 9 Coke, 59 ; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 258; 1 Sim. & S. C. 8 388; 5 Ohio, 322,421 ; Dam; Backwater.

INURE. To take effect; to result.
INVADIATIO (L. Lat.). A pledge or mortgage.

INVALID. Not valid. Of no binding force.

INVASION. The entry of a country by a public enemy, making war.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 8, gives power to congress "to provide for calling the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions." See Insurrection.

INVECTA ET ILLATA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things carried and brought in. Thiogs brenght inte a building hired (cedes), or inte a hired estate in the city (prcedium urbanum), which are held by a tacit mortgage for the rent. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Domat, Civ. Law.

INVENTION. In Patent Law. The act or operation of finding out something new; the contrivance of that which did not before exist. The word is also used to denote the thing itsclf which has been so contrived and which is the subject-matter of a patent.

An invention differs from a disoovery, inasmuch as this latter term is used to signify the finding out of something which existed before. Thus, we speak of the discovery of the properties of steam, or of electricity; but the first contrivance of any machinery by which those discoveries were applied to practical use was an invention: the former always existed, though not before known ; the latter did nut previously exist.
2. Patents are sometimes granted for simple discoveries, or, rather, for the sole use of the thing which has been discovered. The discoverer of some substance which can be usefully employed in the arts, as in making a dye, or a paint, or a cement, may obtain a patent therefor. But in almost all cases the subject-matter of a patent is an invention. The discovery of any truth in science cannot, as a general rule, be patented; but he who reduces those truths to a practically useful shape can obtain a patent for the contrivances by which he produces the results: they are inventions, and it matters not for this purpose whether these inventions were the result of an accident or a blunder, or whether they were wrought out by scientific research and the highest exbibition of inductive reasoning.
3. Whenever a change in a pre-existing machine or process, and its consequences, taken together and viewed as a sum, are considerable, there must be a sufficiency of invention to support a patent: thus, when the change, however minute, leads to results of great practical utility, this condition is Satisfied; but if the consequence be inconsiderable, the change also being inconsiderable, and such as would most readily suggest itsolf to any one, the condition is not fulfilled, and the invention is not sufficient to suppert a patent. The change and its consequences must, therefore, be considered in connection. Webster, Pat. 24, 29.

By the laws of the United States, a patent can only be allowed to the original and first inventor himself, or to his assignee or executor, and not to one who imports an invention from abroad; although it is otherwise in England. See Patents.
4. Abandonment of invention. The right to a patent may be lost by an abandonment of the invention.

The earlier patent laws of the United States did not permit the granting of a patent in any case where the invention had been in public use or on sale, with the consent and allowance of the inventer, prior to his making an application for such patent. (See especially the act of 1836, & 6.) The use in public by way of trial or experiment was not held to be a "public nse". Within the meaning of the law; but a single sale of one of the machines invented, with a design or expectation that it would ge inte common use, was sufficient to prevent the granting of a patent on any application subsequently made.

But the seventh section of the act of 1839 declared that "no patent shall be held to be invalid by reasen of.such purchase, sale, or use prior to the application for the patent, as aforesaid, except on proof of abandonment of such invention to the public, or that such purchase, sale, or prior use has been for more than two years prior to. such application for a patent."
5. As the law now stands, therefore, the public use of an invention for more than two years prior to the date of an application for a patent amounts to an inflexible bar to the granting of such patent, and is in substance an abandonment of the invention to the public by operation of law.

But there are many other ways in which an invention may be abandoned even within the two years. This may be done directly and at once, or it may be inferred from circumstances. But, in whatever way it is nade, if once completed it can never be recalled, and will entirely prevent the granting of a valid patent for that invention forever afterwards.
6. Abandonment is a question of intention: it is never to be presumed, but must always be proved before it can be regarded as established. But, under certain circumstances, a public use for a much less period than two years will amount to sufficient proof of that fact. If a person treats his invention as theugh it belonged to the public, or if he stands silently by while it is so treated by others, by reason whereof the actions of third persons have been influenced in relation to it, he will be estopped from afterwards setting up any exclusive privilege in that invention. Wherever the conduct of an inventor has been such that it would be a breach of good faith with the public for him to enforce his exclusive privilege, such conduct will generally amount to an abandonment.

The following are the principal authorities on the subject: 1 Gall. C. C. 476; 1 Stor. C. C. 278; 3 Sumn. C. C. 514; 1 Pet. C. C. 394; 4 Mas. C. C. 108; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 250; 2 id. 229, 240, 279; 2 Pet. 1; 7 id. 202; 1 How. 202; 6 N. H. 477.

INVENTIONES. A word used in some ancient English charters to signify treasuretrove.
INVENTOR. One who finds out something new, or who contrives or produces a thing which did not before exist. One who makes an invention. The word is generally used to denote the author of such contrivances as are by law patentable, See Intention.

INVENTORY. A list, schedule, or enumeration in writing, containing, article by article, the goods and chattels, rights and credits, and, in some cases, the lands and tenements, of a person or persons. A conservatory act, which is made to ascertain the situation of an intestate's estate, the estate of an insolvent, and the like, for the purpose of securing it to those entitled to it.
2. When the inventory is made of goods and estates assigned or conveyed in trust, it must include all the property conveyed.

In case of intestate estates, it is required to contain only the personal property, or that to which the administrator is entitled. The claims due to the estate ought to be separated; those which are desperate or bad ought to be so returned. The articles ought to be set down separately, as already mentioned, and separately valued.
3. The inventory is to be made in the presence of at least two of the creditors of the deceased, or legatees, ornext of kin, and, in their default and absence, of two honest persons. The appraisers must sign it, and make oath or affirmation that the appraisement is just to the best of their knowledge. See, generally, 14 Viner, Abr. 465 ; Bacon, Abr. Executors, etc. (E 11); Aylife, Pand.414; Ayliffe, Parerg. 305; Comyns, Dig. Administration (B 7); 3 Burr. 1922; 2 Add. INVEST (Lat. investire, to clothe). To put in possession of a fief upon taking the oath of fealty or fidelity to the prince or superior lord.

INVESTITURE. The act of giving possession of lands by actual seisin.
When livery of seisin was made to a person by the common law, he was invested with the whole fee: this the foreign feudists, and sometimes our own law writers, call investiture; but, generally speaking, it is termed by the common-law writers the seisin of the fee. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 209, 313 ; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 223, n. (z).
By' the cadon law, investiture was madc per baculum et annulum, by the ring and crosier, which were regarded as symbols of the episcopal jurisdiction. Eeclesiastical and secular fiefs were governed by the same rule in this respect,-that previously to investiture neither a bish $\rho$ p, abbot, or lay lord could take possession of a fief conferred upon them by the prince.
Pope Gregory VI. first disputed the right of sovereigns to give investiture of ecclesiastical fiefs, A.j. 1045 ; but Pope Gregory VII. carried on the dispute with muoh more vigor, A.D. 1073. He excommunicated the emperor Henry IV. The popes Victor III., Urban II., and Paul II. cootinued the contest. This dispute, it is said, cost Christendom sixty-three battles, and the lives of many millions of men. De Pradt.

INVIOLABILITY. That which is not to be violated. The persons of ambassadors are inviolable. See Ambassador.

INVITO DOMINO (Lat.). In Criminal Law. Without the consent of the owner. In order to constitute larceny, the property stolen must be taken invito domino; this is the very cssence of the crime. Cases of considerable difficulty arise when the owner has, for the purpose of detecting thieves, by himself or his agents, delivered the property taken, as to whether they are larcenies or not: the distinction seems to be this, that when the owner procures the property to be taken, it is not larceny; and when he merely leaves it in the power of the defendant to execute his original purpose of taking it, in the latter case it will be considered as taken invito domino. 2 Bail. INVOICE. In Commercial Law. An account of goods or merchandise sent by merchants to their correspondents at home or abroad, in which the marks of each package, with other particulars, are set forth, Marshall, Ins. 408 ; Dane, Abr. Index. An invoice ought to contain a detailed statement, which should indicate the nature, quantity, quality, and price of the things sold, deposited, etc. 1 Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 248. See Bill of Lading; 2 Wash. C. C. 113, 155.

INVOICE BOOK. A book in which invoices are copied.

INVOLUNTARY. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q.v.), or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress. Wolffius, Inst. 85.
IOWA (an Indian word, denoting "the place, or final resting-place"). The name of one of the new western states of the United States.
2. This state was admitted into the Union by an act of congress approved December $28,1846$.
The right of suffrage is extended only to white male citizens of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, having a residence of six months in the state next preceding the election, and of sixty days in the county where they claim to vote. Art. 2, sec. 1 .
No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States is to be considered a resident of the state by being stationed in any garrison, barrack, military or naval place or station within the state. And no idiot or insane person, or person convieted of any infamous crime, is entitled to the privilege of an elector. Const. art. 3.

The Legislative Pover.

3. This is vested in a Senate and House of Representatives, together constituting the General Assembly.
The Senate is composed of not less than onethird nor more than one-half as many members as the House, elected quadrennially, for the term of four years, on the first Mnnday io Angust. Senators must be at least twenty-fve years of age, must have reaided in the atate one year next preceding their election, and possess the qualifications of electors. They are so classified that one -half the senate is elected every two years. Const. art. 4, вес. 3-6.

The House of Representatives is composed of members elected for two years, who must be at least twenty-one yeare of age, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as senstors. The number is not limited by the constitution. Each house of the general assembly has power to choose its own officers and judge of the qualification of ite members, sit upon its adjournmente, keep a journal of ite proceedings and publish the same, punish memhers for disorderly behavior, and, with the consent of two-thirds, expel a member, but not a second time for the same offence, and has all other powers necessary for a branch of the general assembly of a free and independent state.
4. The general assembly is possessed of the powers usually incident to such hodies. Amongst other provisione are the fellowing: that no act ehall embrace more than one subject, and matters germane thereto, which shall be expressed in the title; that no bill shall he passed unless by the assent of a majority of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the question of the final passage thereof to be taken by yeas and nays, which are to be entered upon the journal; that no divorees or lotteries shall be granted or authorized by the general assembly; lucal and epecial laws cannot be paesed for laying out, opening, and working roads and highways, for the assessment and collection of taxes for state, county, or road purposes, for changing the namee of persons, fur the incorporation of cities and towns, for vacating roade, town plats, streets, alleys, or public squares, for locating county seats. Upon these subjects all laws are to be general and of uniform operation throughout the etate. Conet. art. 3, sec. 17, 27, 28, 29, 30.

The Executive Power.

5. The Governor is elected for the term of four years from his installation, and till a successor is duly qualified. He must be a citizen of the United States, thirty years old at least, and a resident of the state for two years next preceding his election. The governor is commander-in-chief of the militia, army, and navy of the state; transacts executive business with the officere of the government; is to see that the laws are faithfully executed; may fill vacancies by granting temporary commissione; on extraordinary occasione, convenes the general assembly by proclamation ; communicates with the general assembly at every session; adjourns the two honses when they cannot agree upon the time of an adjournment; grants reprieves and pardons, and commutes punishment after conviction, except in cases of impeachment; ehall be keeper of the great seal, and sign all commisaions; and is invested with the veto power.

A Lieutentant-Governor is also chosen, whose qualifications, time of election, and term of service are the samy as the governor's. He is ex officio president of the senate; and the duties of the gevernor devolve upon him in the usual contingencies.

A Secretary of Stote, a Trensurer, an Auditor, an Attorney-General, and a Register of the Land Office, are also chosen by the elcotore, at the same time, for the term of two yeare.

The Judicial Power.

6. The Supreme Court consiste of three judges, who are elected by the people for the term of six years, and were so claesified that one judge goes out of office every two years, and the one holding the shortest term of office under euch classification is chief justice of the court during hie term; and oo on, in rotation. This court has appellate jurisdiction in cases in chancery, and is conatituted a court for the correction of errors at law, exercising a supervisory control over all the inferior judicial tribunale throughout the atate, bat under euch reatrictions an the legielature may by law prescribe. The sessions are held at such times and places as the law may prescribe.

The District Court is composed of a single judge, who is elccted by the people of his district for the term of four years, poeseasing original juriediction in civil and criminal mattere ariaing in his particular district; and is a court both of law and equity, which are scparate and distinct jurisdictions. Const. art. 5, sec. 5, 6. The code of procedure in this state hat recently (March, 1860) heen revised and modified.

IPSE (Lat.). I (before verbs of first person) ; thou (before verbs of second person); he himself, she herself, he alone, etc.; the very one: e.g. ipsum corpus, the very thing itself. Halkerst. Tech. Terms. Ipsa [etenim] leges cupiunt ut jure regantur, for the very laws themselves wish that they should be ruled by right,-a line, quoted from Cato, which occurs in the decision of Ch. J. Wray and the whole court in The Case of Bankrupts, 2 Coke, 25 b.

IPSISSIMIS VERBIS (Lat.). In the identical words: opposed to substantively. 7 How. 719 ; 5 Ohio St. 346.

IPSO FACTO (Lat.). By the fact itself. By the mere fact.

IPSO JURE (Lat.). By the operation of law. By mere law.

IRE AD LARGUM (Lat.). To go at large.IRREGULAR DEPOSIT. That kind of deposit where the thing deposited need not be returned: as, where a man deposits, in the usual way, money in bank for safe-keeping; for in this case the title to the identical money becomes vested in the bank, and he receives in its place other money.

IRREGULARITY. In Practice. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done.
2. A party entitled to complain of irregularity should except to it previously to taking any step by him in the cause, Lofft, 323,333 ; because the taking of any such step is a waiver of any irregularity. 1 Bos. & P. 342; 5 id. 509; 1 Taunt. 58; 2 id. 243; 3 East, 547; 2 Wils. 380. See Abatement.
3. The court will, on motion, set aside proceedings for irregularity. On setting aside a judgment and execution for irregularity, they have power to impose terms on the defendant, and will restrain him from bringing an action of trespass, unless a strong case of damage appears. 1 Chitty, Bail, 133, n. And see Baldw. C. C. 246 ; 3 Chitty, Pract. 509.

In Canon Law. Any impediment which prevents a man from taking holy orders.

IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE. That which does not support the issue, and which, of course, must be excluded. See Evidence.

IRREPIEVIABLE. That cannot bo replevied or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, irreplevisable. Coke, Litt. 145; 13 Edw. I. c. 2.

IRRESISTIBLE FORCE. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable: as, the inroads of a hostile army. Story, Bailm. $& 25$; Lois des Bâtim. pt. 2, c. 2, z 1. It differs from inevitable accident, which title see.

IRREVOCABLE. Which cannot be revoked or recalled. A power of attorney in which the attorney has an interest granted for consideration is irrevocable. See Will.

IRRIGATION. The act of wetting or moistening the ground by artificial means.
The owner of land over which there is a current stream is, as such, the proprietor of the current. 4 Mas. C. C. 400 . It seems the riparian proprietor may avail himself of the river for irrigation, provided the river be not thereby materially lessened and the water absorbed be imperceptible or trifling. Angell, Wat. C. 34 . And see Washburn, Easements, Index; 1 Root, Conn. 535; 2 Conn. 584; 7 Mass. 136; 13 id. 420; 5 Pick. Mass. 175; 9 id. 59 ; 8 Me. 266 ; 6 Bingh. 379 ; 5 Esp. 56. The French law coincides with our own. 1 Lois des Bâtimens, sec. 1, art. 3, page 21.

IRRITANCY. In Scotch Law. The happening of a condition or event by which a charter, contract, or other deed, to which a clause irritant is annexed, becomes void. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, t. 5, n. 25. Irritancy is a kind of forfeiture. It is legal or conventional. Burton, Real Prop. 298.

IRROTULATIO (Law Lat.). An inrolling; a record. 2 Rymer, Foed. 673 ; DuCange; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. ; Bracton, fol. 293 ; Fleta, lib. 2, e. 65, & 11.

ISLAND. A piece of land surrounded by water.

When new islands arise in the open sea, they belong to the first occupant; but when they are newly formed so near the shore as to be within the boundary of some state, they belong to that state.

Islands which arise in rivers when in the middle of the stream belong in equal parts to the riparian proprietors. When they arise mostly on one side, they will belong to the riparian owners up to the middle of the stream. See Accession; Accretion; Boundary; 2 Washburn, Real Prop.; Kent, Comm.

ISSINT (Norm. Fr. thns, so). In Pleading. A term formerly used to introduce a statement that special matter already pleaded amounts to a denial.

In actions founded on deeds, the defendant may, instead of pleading non est factum in the common form, allege any special matter which admits the execution of the writing in question, but which, nevertheless, shows that it is not in law his deed, and may conclude with, "and so it is not his deed;" as, that the writizg was delivered to A B as an escrow, to be delivered over on certain conditions, which have not been complied with, "and so it is not his act;" or that at the time of making the writing the defendant was a feme covert, "and so it is not her act." Bacon, Abr. Pleas (H 3), (I 2); Gould, Plead. c. 6, pt. 1, & 64.

An example of this form of plea, which is sometimes called the special general issue, occurs in 4 Rawle, Penn. 83, 84.

ISSUABLE. In Practice. Leading or tending to an issue. An issuable plea is one upon which the plaintiff can take issue and proceed to trial.

ISSUABLE TERMS. Hilary and Trinity 'Terms are so called from the making up of the issues, during those terms, for the assizes, that they may be tried by the judgen, who generally go on circuit to try such issues after these two terms. But for town canses all four terms are issuable. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 350; 1 Tidd, Pract. 121.

ISSUE. In Real Law. Descendants All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. 3 Ves. Ch. 257; 17 id. 481 ; 19id. 547 ; 1 Roper, Leg. 90.

In a will it may be held to have a more restricted meaning, to carry out the testator's intention. 7 Ves. Ch. 522; 19 id. 73; 1 Roper, Leg. 90. See Bacon, Abr. Curtesy (D), Legatee.

In Pleading. A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other.

The entry of the pleadings. 1 Chitty, Plead. 630.

Several connected matters of fact may go to make up the point in issue.

An actual issue is one formed in an action brought in the regular manner, for the purpose of trying a question of right between the parties.

A collateral issue is one framed upon some matter not directly in the line of the plead, ings: as, for example, upon the identity of one who pleads diversity in bar of execution. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 396.

A common issue is that which is formed upon the plea of non est factum to an action of covenant broken.

This is so oalled because it denies the deed only; and not the breach, and does not put the whole declaration in issue, and because there is no gencral issue to this form of action. 1 Chitty, Plead. 482; Lawes, Plead. 113; Gould, Plead. c. 6, pt. I,㣍 7-10.

An issue in fact is one in which the truth of some fact is affirmed and denied.

In general, it consists of a direct affirmative allegation on one side and a direct negative on the other. Coke, Litt. 126 a; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (G1); 2 W. Blackst. 1312; 8 Term, 278; 5 Pet. 149. But an affirmative allegation which completely excludes the truth of the preceding may he sufficient. I Wils. 6 ; 2 Strange, 1177. Thus, the general issue in a writ of right (called the mise) is formed hy two affirmatives, the demandant claiming a greater right than the tenant, and the tenant a greater than the demandant. 3 Blackstone, Cumm. 195, 305. And in an action of dower the count merely demands the third part of [ ] acres of land, etc., as the dower of the demandant of the en dowment of $A B$, heretofore the hushand, etc., and the general issue is that A B was not seised of such estate, etc., and that he could not endow the demandant thereof, etc.; which mode of denial, being argumentative, would not, in general, be allowed. 2 Saund. 329.

A feigned issue is one formed in a fictitious action, under direction of the court, for the purpose of trying before a jury some question of fact.

Such issues are generally ordered hy a court of equity, for which no jury is summoned, to ascertain the truth of sume disputed fact. They are also frequently used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 452. Suppose, for example, it is desirshle to settle a question of the validity of a will in a court of equity. For this purpose an action is brought, in which the plaintiff by a fiction declares that he laid a wager for a sum of money with the defendant, for example, that a certain paper is the last will and testament of A, then avers it is his will, and therefore demands the moncy; the defendant sdinits the wager, but svers that it is not the will of A ; and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of chancery to be tricd; and thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity.

The name is $s$ misnomer, inasmach as the iesue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious. It is a contempt of the court in which the sction is brought to bring such an action, except under the direction of some court. 4 Term, 402.

A formal issue is one which is framed according to the rules required by law, in an artificial and proper manner.

A general issue is one which denies in direct terms the whole declaration: as, for example, where the defendant pleads nol debet (that he owes the plaintiff nothing), or nul dissei$\sin$ (no disseisin committed). 3 Greenleaf, Ev. 89; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 305. See General Issue.

An immaterial issue is one formed or some immaterial matter, which, though found by the verdict, will not determine the merits of the cause, and will leave the court at a loss how to give judgment. 2 Wms . Saund. 319 , n. 6. See lmmaterial Issue.

An informal issue iș one which arises when a material allegation is traversed in an improper or inartificial manner. Bacon, Abr. Pleas (G 2), (N 5) ; 2 Wms . Saund. 319 a, n. 6. The defect is cured by verdict, by the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 30.

A material issue is one properly formed on some material point which will, when decided, decide the question between the parties.

A special issue is one formed by the defendant's selecting any one sulstantial point and resting the weight of his cause upon that. It is contrasted with the general issue. Comyns, Dig. Pleader (R 1, 2).

ISSUE ROLL. In English Law. The name of a record which contains an entry of the term of which the demurrer book, issue, or paper book is entitled, and the warrants of attorney supposed to have been given by the parties at the commencement of the cause, and then proceeds with the transcript of the declaration and subsequent pleadings, continuances, and award of the mode of the decision as contained in the demurrer, issue, or paper book. Stephen, Plead. 98, 99. After final judgment the issue roll is no longer called by that name, but assumes that of judgment roll. 2 Archbold, Pract. 206.

ISSUES. In English Law. The goods and profits of the lands of a defendant against whom a writ of distringas or distress infinite has been issued, taken by virtue of such writ, are called issues. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 280; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 351.

ITA EST (Lat.). So it is.
Among the civilians, when a notary dies, leaving his register, an officer who is authorized to make official copies of his notarial acts writes, instead of the deceased notary's name, which is required when he is living, ita est.

ITA QUOD (Lat.). 'The name or condition in a submission, which is usually introduced by these words, "so as the award be made of and upon the premises," which, from the first words, is called the ita quod.

When the submission is with an ita quod, the arbitrator nust make an award of all matters submitted to him of which he had notice, or the award will be entirely void. 7 East, 81 ; Croke Jac. 200; 2 Vern. Ch. 109; Rolle, Abr. Arbitrament (L 9).

ITEM (Lat.). Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. These are the various meanings of this Latin adverb.

It is used to introduce a new paragraph, or chapter, or division; also, to denote a particular in an account. It is used when any article or clause is added to a former, as if there were here a new beginning. DuCange. Hence the rule that a clause in a will introduced by item shall not influence or be influenced by wbat precedes or follows, if it be sensible taken independently, 1 Salk. 239, or there is no plain intent that it should be taken in connection, in which cases it may be construed conjunctively, in the sense of and, or also, in such a manner as to connect sentences. If, therefore, a testator bequeath a legacy to Peter, payable out of a particular fund or charged upon a particular estate, item a legacy to James, James's legacy as well as Peter's will be a charge upon the same property. 1 Atk. Ch. 436; 3 id. 256; 1 Brown, Ch. 482; 1 Rolle, Abr. 844; 1 Mod. 100; Croke Car. 368; Vaugh. 262; 2 Roper, Leg. 349; l Salk. 234.

ITER (Lat.). In Civil Law. A way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (prodium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: 1, iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback or in a litter; 2, actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; 3 , via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. 8 408. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects 'which could be rightfully carried over the way: e.g. via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc. Mackeldy, Civ. Law, 8290 ; Bracton; 232; 4 Bell, Hon. L. 390.

In Old English Law. A journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission. DuCange; Bracton, lib. 3, c. $11,12,13$; Britton, c. 2; Cowel; Justices in Eyre.

ITINERANT. Wandering; travelling; who makes circuits. See Justices in Eyae.

JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE. In English Eccleslastical Law. The boasting by an individual that he or she has married another, from which it may happen that they will acquire the reputation of being married to each other.

The ecclesiastical courts may in such cases entertain a libel by the party injured, and, on proof of the facts, enjoin the wrong-doer to perpetual silence, and, as a punishment, make him pay the costs. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 93; 2 Hagg. Cons. 423, 285; 2 Chitty, Pract. 459.

JACTURA (Lat. jaceo, to throw). A jettison.

JACTUS (Lat.). A throwing goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so'sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. Dig. 14. 2, de lege Rhodia de jactu; 1 Pardessus, Collec. des Lois marit. 104 et seq.; Kuricke, Inst. Marit. Hanseat. tit. 8; 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 288, note.

JAIL, GAOI (fr. Lat. caveola, a cage for birds). A place for the confinement of persons arrested for debt or for crime and held in the custody of the sheriff. Webster, Dict. It may be used also for the confinement of witnesses; and, in general, now there is no distinction between a jail and a prison, except that the latter belongs to a greater extent of country: thus, we say a state's prison and a county jail. Originally, a jail seems to have been a place where persons were confined to await further proceeding,-e.g. debtors till they paid their debts, witnesses and accused persons till a certain trial came on, etc.,-as opposed to prison, which was for confinement, as punishment.

A jail is an inhabited dwelling-house, and a house within the statutes against arson. 2 W . Blackst. 682; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 69; 2 East, PI. Cr. 1020 ; 2 Cox, Cr. Cas. 65; 18 Johns. N. Y. 115; 4 Call, Va. 109; 4 Leigh, Va. 683. See Gaol; Prison.

JAMUNLINGI, JAMUNDILINGI. Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Spelman, Gloss. Also, a species of serfs among, the Germans. DuCange. The same as commendati.

JEOFAILE (L. Fr.). I have failed; I am in error.

Certain statutes are called statutes of amendments and jeofailes, because, where a pleader perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error (jeofaile), he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend it. The amendment, however, is seldom made; but the benefit is attained by the court's overlooking the exception. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 407; 1 Saund. 228, n. 1 ; Doctrina Plac. 297; Dane, Abr. These statutes do not apply to indictments.

JEOPARDY. Peril; danger.
The term is used in this sense in the act estahlishiug and regulating the post office department. The words of the act are, "or if. in effecting such robbery of the mail the first time, the offender shall wound the person having the custody thereof, or put his life in jeopardy hy the use of dangerous weapons, such offender shall suffer death." 3 Story, Laws U. S. 1992. See Baldw. C. C. 93-95.

The situation of a prisoner when a trial jury is sworn and impanelled to try his case upon a valid indictment, and such jury has been charged with his deliverance. 1 Bail. So. C. 655; 7 Blackf. Ind. 191; 1 Gray, Mass. $490 ; 38 \mathrm{Me} 574 ; 8$ Serg. \& R. Penn. 586; 23 Penn. St. 12; 12 Vt. 93 ; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, $\% 660$. See 18 Johns. N. Y. 206; 2 Sumn. C. C. 60 ; 4 Wash. C. C. 402.
This is the sense in which the term is used in the United States constitntion: "no person ... shall be subject for the same offence to he twice put in jeopardy of life or limb," U. S. Const. art. v. Amend., and in the statutes or constitutions of most if not all of the states. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, z 650 .
2. As to the effect of conviction or acquittal of a crime in a foreign state, or in a state or federal court, as preventing further punishment by another jurisdiction, see 14 Ala. n. s. $486 ; 11$ Wend. N. Y. 129; 7 N. Y. 295; 5 Wheat. 184; 5 Hоw. 410 ; 14 id. 13 ; 8 Metc. Mass. 313; 1 Dougl. Mich. 207; 1 Park. Cr. Cas. N. Y. 659; 5 Leigh, Va. 707; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 655 b.

It is a privilege which may be waived. 6 Cush. Mass. 560 ; 37 Me. 156; 2 Hawks. Tenn. 443; 2 Barb. N. Y. 427; 4 Dev. No.
C. 305 ; 16 Miss. 587; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, & 672 et seq. See Discharge of a Jury.

JERGUER. In English Law. An officer of the custum-house, who oversees the waiters. Techn. Dict.

JETTISON, JETSAM. The casting out of a vessel, from necessity, a part of the lading. The thing so cast out.
It differs from flotsam in this, that in the latter the goods float, while in the former they sink, and remain under water. It differs also from ligan.

The jettison must be made for sufficient cause, and not from groundless timidity. It must be made in a case of extremity, when the ship is in danger of perishing by the fury of a storm, or is laboring upon rocks or shallows, or is closely pursued by pirates or enemies.

If the residue of the cargo be saved by such sacrifice, the property saved is bound to pay a proportion of the loss. In ascertaining such average loss, the goods lost and saved are both to be valued at the price they would have brought at the place of delivery on the ship's arrival there, freight, duties, and other charges being deducted. Marshall, Ins. 246; 3 Kent, Comm. 185-187; Park. Ins. 123; Pothier, Chartepartie, n. 108 et suiv. ; Boulay-Paty, Dr. Com. tit. 13; Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 734; 1 Ware, Dist. Ct. 9. The owner of a cargo jettisoned has a maritime lien on the vessel for the contributory share from the vessel on an adjustment of the average, which may be enforced by a proceeding in venue in the admiralty. 19 How. 162; 2 Parsons, Marit. Law, 373. See Average; Adjustment.

JEUX DE BOURSE. In French Law. A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things. 1 Pardessus, Droit Com. n. 162.

JOB. The whole of a thing which is to be done. In this sense it is employed in the Civil Code of Lovisiana, art. 2727: "To build by plot, or to work by the job," says that article, "is to undertake a building for a certain stipulated price." See Duranton, du Contr. de Louage, liv. 3, t. 8, nn. 248, 263; Pothier, Contr. de Louage, nn. 392, 394; Deviation.

JOBBER. In Commercial Law. One who buys and sells articles for others. Stockjobbers are those who buy and sell stocks for others. This term is also applied to those who speculate in stocks on their own account.

JOCALIA (Lat.). Jewels. This term was formerly more properly applied to those ornaments which women, although married, call their own. When these jocalia are not suitable to her degree, they are assets for the zayment of debts. 1 Rolle, Abr. 911.

JOINDER. In Pleading. Union; concurrence.

Of Actions. In Civil Casses. The union of two or more causes of action in the same declaration.

At common law, to allow a joinder, the form of actions must be such that the same plea may be pleaded and the same judgment given on all the counts of the declaration, or, the counts being of the same nature, that the same judgment may be given on all. 2 Saund. 177 c .; 1 Term, 276; Comyns, Dig. Actions (G); 16 N. Y. 548; 6 Du. N. Y. 43; 4 Cal. 27; 12 La. Ann. 873 ; 33 N. H. 495. And all the causes of action must have accrued to the plaintiff or against the defendant, 12 La. Ann. 44, in the same right, though it may have been by different titles. Thus, a plaintiff cannot join a demand in his own right to one as representative of another person, or against the defendant himself to one against him in a representative capacity. 2 Viner, Abr. 62; Bacon, Abr. Action in General (C); 21 Barb. N. Y. 245. See 25 Mo 357.

In real actions there can be but one count.
In mixed actions joinder occurs, though Jut infrequently. 8 Coke, 876; Poph. 24; Croke Eliz. 290.
In personal actions joinder is frequent. By statutes, in many of the states, joinder of actions is allowed and required to a greater extent than at common law.
2. In Criminal Cases. Different offences of the same general nature may be joined in the same indictment, 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 253, 255 ; 29 Ala. N. s. 62; 10 Cush. Mass. 530; 28 Miss. 267; 4 Ohio St. $440 ; 6 \mathrm{Mc}$. Lean, C. C. 596; 4 Den. N. Y. 133; 18 Me. 103; 1 Cheves, So. C. 103; 4 Ark. 56; see 14 Gratt. Va. 687; and it is no cause of arrest of judgment that they have been so joined, 29 Eng. L. \& Eq. 536; 29 N. H. 184; 11 Ga . 225 ; 3 Woodb. \& M. C. C. 164; see 1 Strobh. So. C. 455; but not in the same count, 5 R. I. 385 ; 24 Mo. 353; I Rich. So. C. 260; 4 Humphr. Tenn. 25 ; and an indictment may be quashed, in the discretion of the court, where the counts are joined in such manner as will confound the evidence. 17 Mo. 544; 19 Ark. 563, 577; 20 Miss. 468.
No count, it is said, will, however, permit a prisoner to be tried upon one indictment for two distinct and separate crimes. $29 \mathrm{~N} . \mathrm{H}$. 184. See 5 Serg. \& R. Penn. 59; 12 id. 69 ; 10 Cush. Mass. 530.
In Demurrer. The answer made to a demurrer. Coke, Litt. 71 b . The act of making such answer is merely a matter of form, but must be made within a rcasonable time. 10 Rich. So. C. 49.
Of Issue The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it. For example, when one party denies the fact pleaded by his antagonist, who has tendered the issue thus, "And this he prays may be inquired of by the country," or, "and of this he puts himself upon the country," the party denying the fact may immediately subjoin, "And the said A B does the like;" when the issue is said to be joined.

Of Parties. In Civil Cases.

In Equity.

3. All parties materially interested in the subject of a suit in equity should be made parties, however numerous. Mitford, Eq. Plead. 144; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 179; 3 Swanst. Ch. 139; 1 Pet. 299; 2 id. 482 ; 13 id. 359 ; 7 Cranch, 72; 2 Mas. C. C. 181; 5 McLean, C. C. $444 ; 2$ Paine, C. C. 536; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 349; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 278; 3 id. 466; 11 id. 321 ; 4 Cow. N. Y. 682; 2 Bibb, Ky. 184; 4 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 447; 24 Me. 20; 36 id. 50 ; 3 Vt. 160; 11 id. 290; 7 Conn. 342; $112 d .112$; 11 Giill & J. Md. 426; 4 Rand. Va. 451 ; 1 Bail. Ch. So. C. 384; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. No. C. 31; 7 Ired. Eq. No. C. 261 ; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 301 ; 2 Stew. Ala. 280; 6 Blackf. Ind. 223; 15 III. 257; 11 Ga .645 . But, where the parties are very numerous, a portion may appear for all in the same situation. 16 Ves. 321 ; 16 How. 288; 11 Conn. 112; 3 Paige, Ch. 222; 19 Barb. 517.

Mere possible or contingent interest does not render its possessor a necessary party. 6 Wheat. 550 ; 3 Conn. 354; 5 Cow. N. Y. 719. And see 3 Bibb, Ky. 86; 6 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 425.

There need be no connection but community of interests. 2 Ala. N. s. 209.

Plaintiffs.

4. All persons having a unity of interest in the subject-matter, 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 397; 2 Ala. n. s. 209, and in the object to be attained, 2 Iowa, 55 ; 3 id. 443 , who are entitled to relief, 14 Ala. n. s. $135 ; 17$ id. 631, may join as plaintiffs. The claims must not arise under different contracts, 8 Pet. 123; 5 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 154; 6 id. 33 ; or to the same person in different capacities. 1 Busb. Eq. No. C. 196. And see 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 637; 4 id. 23 ; 5 Metc. Mass. 118; 1 Monr. Ky. 206.

Assignor and assignee. The assignor of a contract for the sale of lands should be joined in a suit hy the assignee for specific performance, 3 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 614; and the assignor of part of his interest in a patent in a suit by assignee for violation. 3 McLean, c. C. 350 .

But he should not be joined where he has parted with all his legal and beneficial interest. $32 \mathrm{Me} .203,343$; 13 B. Monr. Ky. 210. The assignee of a mere chose in action may sue in his own name, in equity. 17 How . 43; 5 Wisc. 270; 6 B. Monr. Ky. 540; 7 id. 273.

Corporations. Two or more may join of their interest is joint. 8 Ves. Ch. 706. A corporation may join with its individual members to establish an exemption on their behalf. 3 Anstr. 738.

JoL. I. --48

Husband and wife must join where the husband asserts an interest in behalf of his wife, 6 B. Monr. Ky. 514; 3 Hayw. No. C. 252; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 196; 9 Ala. 133; 4 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 49: as, for a legacy, 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 196, or for property devised or descended to her during coverture, 5 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 179, 600; or where he applies for an injunction to restrain a suit at law against both, affecting her interest. 1 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 313.
5. Idiots and lunatics may be joined or not in bills by their committees, at the election of the committee to set aside acts done by them whilst under imbecility. 1 Chanc. Cas. 112; 1 Jac. 377; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 139; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 24. They must ho joined in suits brought for the partition of real estate. 3 Barb. Ch. 24. In Eugland it seems to be the custom to join. 2 Vern. Ch. 678. See Story, Eq. Plead. 8 64, and note; Story, Eq. Jur. $\%$ 1336, and note; Edwards, Partn. 294-316.
Infants. Several may join in the same bill for an account of the rents and profits of their estate. 2 Bland, Ch. Md. 68.

The trustees under a settlement of real estate, against whom a trust or power given to them to sell the estate is to be enforced, are necessary parties to a suit for that purpose. 39 Eng. L. \& Eq. 76. See, also, 39 Eng. L. \& Eq. 225; 24 Miss. 597; 19 How. 376; $5 \mathrm{Du} . \mathrm{N} . \mathrm{Y} .168$; 8 Md .34.

At Law.

In actions ex contractu.

11. All who have a joint legal interest or are jointly entitled must join in an action on a contract, even though it be in terms several, or be entered into by one in behalf of all, Brown, Partn. 18; 1 Saund. 153; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 58; Metc. Yelv. 177, n. 1 ; 10 East, 418; 8 Term, 140; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 308; 10 id. 257; 15 Me. 295; 23 id. 111; 3 Brev. No. C. 249; 3 Ark. 565; 16 Barb. N. Y. 325; 6 Du. N.Y. 182; 3 Bosw. N. Y. 5l6: as, where the consideration moves from several jointly. 2 Wms. Saund. $116 a ; 4$ Mees. & W. Exch. 295; 5 id. 698, or was taken from a joint fund. 19 Johns. N. Y. 218; 1 Meigs, Tenn. 394.
One of several joint obligees, payees, or assignees may sue in the name of all. 10 Yerg. Tenn. 235 . See 4 Saund. 657.

Some contracts may be considered as either joint or several, and in such case all may join, or each may sue separately; but part cannot join leaving the others to sue separately.

In an action for a breach of a joint contract made by several, all the contracting parties should be made defendants, 1 Saund. 158 n ., even though one or more be bankrupt or insolvent, 2. Maule & S. 33; but see 1 Wils. 89; or an infant; but not if the contract be utterly void as to him. 3 Taunt. 307; 5 Johns. N. Y. 160, 280; 11 id. 101; 5 Mass. 270; 1 Pick. Mass. 500.

On a joint and several contract, each may be sued separately, or all together. 1 Pet. 73; 1 Wend. N. Y. 524.
12. Executors and administrators must bring their actions in the joint names of all, 3 Bouvier, Inst. 146; Hammond, Partn. 272; Broom, Part. 103; 5 Scott, 'N. r. 728; 1 Saund. $291 \mathrm{~g} ; 2$ id. 213; 2 Nott \& M'C. So. C. 70; 2 Penn.St. 721 ; 1 Dutch. N.J. 374; even though some are infants. Broom, Part. 104.

All the executors who have proved the will are to be joined as defendants in an action on the testator's contract. Broom, Part. 196; 1 Lev. 161; 3 Term, 560; 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 74; 2 Crompt. & J. Exch. 548; 4 Bingh. 704. But an executor de son tort is not to be joined with the rightful executor. And the executors are not to be joined with other persons who were joint contractors with the deceased. P. A. Browne, Penn. 31; 2 Wheat. 344; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 272; 5 Cal. 173.

Administrators are to be joined, like executors. Comyns, Dig. Administrators (B 12). Foreign executors and administrators are not recognized as such, in general. 2 Jones, Eq. No. C. 276; 10 Rich. So. C. 393; 7 Ind. 211.
13. Husband and wife must join to recover rent due the wife before coverture on her lease while sole, Coke, Litt. 55 b; Croke Eliz. 700 ; on the lease by both of lands in which she has a life estate, where the covenant runs to both, 20 Barb. N. Y. 269; but on a covenant generally to both, the husband may sue alone, 2 Mod. 217; 1 Barnew. & C. 443; 1 Bulstr. 331 ; in all actions in implied promises to the wife acting in autre droit, C 0 myns, Dig. Baron & F. (V); 9 Mees. & W. Exch. 694; 4 Tex. 283; as to suit on a bond to both, see 2 Penn. St. 827; on a contract running with land of which they are joint assignees, Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 190: Croke Car. 503; in general, to recover any of the wife's choses in action where the cause of action would survive to her. Comyns, Dig. Baron & F. (V); 1 Chitty, Plead. 17; Broom, Part. 82; 1 Manle & S. 180; 1 Yeates, Penn. 551 ; 1 P. A. Browne, Penn. 263 ; 13 Wend. N. Y. 271 ; 10 Pick. Mass. $470 ; 9$ Ired. No. C. 163; 21 Conn. 557 ; 5 Miss. 204 ; 24 Miss. 245 ; 2 Wisc. 22.
14. They may join at the husband's election in suit on a covenant to repair, when they become joint grantees of a reversion, Croke

Jac. 399; Broom, Part. 78; to recover the value of the wife's choses in action, 5 Harr. Del. 57; 24 Conn. 45 ; 2 Wisc. 22; 2 Mod. 217; 2 Ad. & E. 30; 2 Maule & S. 396, n.; in case of joinder the action survives to her, 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 426; 10 Barnew. & C. 558; in case of an express promise to the wife, or to both where she is the meritorious cause of action. Croke Jac. 77, 205; Broom, Part. 80; 1 Chitty, Plead. 18; 5 Harr. Del. 57; 32 Ala. n.s. 30 .
They must, in general, be joined in actions on contracts entered into by the wife dum sola, 1 Kehl. 281; 2 Term, 480; 7 id. 348; 1 Taunt. 217; 7 id. $432 ; 8$ Johns. N. Y. 149; 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 21; 5 Harr. Del. 357; 25 Vt. 207; see 1 Chitty, Plead. 45 ; 15 Johns. N. Y. 403; 17 id. 167; 7 Mass. 291, where the canse of action accrues against the wife in autre droit. Croke Car. 518. They may be joined when the husband promises anew to pay the debt of the wife contracted dum sola, 7 Term, 349; for rent or breaches of covenant on a joint lease to both for the wife's benefit. Broom, Part. 178, 179.
15. Joint tenants must join in debt or an avowry for rent, Broom, Part. 24; but one of several may make a separate demise, thus severing the tenancy, Bacon, Abr. Joint Ien. (H 2); 12 East, 39, 57, 61; 3 Campb. 190; and one may maintain ejectment against his co-tenants. Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 789.

Partners must all join in suing strangers on partnership transactions, Broom, Part. 61 ; 1 Esp. 183; 2 Campb. 302; 18 Barb. N. Y. 534; 4 Du. N. Y. 416; 7 Rich. So. C. 118; including only those who were such at the time the cause of action accrued, Broom, Part. 65; although one or more may have become insolvent, 2 Crompt. & M. Exch. 318; but not joining the personal representative of a deceased partner, 2 Salk. $444 ; 2$ Maule & $S$. 225; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 374; 9 Barnew. & C. 538; with a limitation to the actual parties to the instrument in case of specialties, 6 Maule & S. 75; and including dormant partners or not, at the election of the ostensible partners. 2 Esp. 468; 2 Taunt. 324; 10 Barnew.&C.671; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 437.' See 4 Wend. N. Y. 628 . Where one partner contracts in his name for the firm, he may sue alone, or all may join, 4 Barnew. & Ad. 815 ; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 437; but alone if he was evidently dealt with as the sole party in interest. 1 Maule & S. 249.
16. The surviving partners, 3 Ball & $B$. Ch. Ir. 30; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 29, 522; 18 Barb. N. Y. 592, must all be joined as defendants in suits on partnership contracts. Broom, Part. 163; 1 East, 30. And third parties are not bound to know the arrangements of partners amongst themselves. 9 East, $52_{i}^{i} ; 4$ Maule & S. 482; 8 Mees. & W. Exch. 703, 710.

A partner need not be joined if he was not known as such at the time of making the contract and there was no indication of his being a partner. 1 Bosw. N. Y. 28; 19 Ark. 70 . And see Partnership.

Tenants in common should join in an action on any joint contract. Comyns, Dig. Abatement (E10).
Trustees must all join in bringing an action. 1 Wend. N. Y. 470.

In actions ex delicto.

17. Joint owners must, in general, join in an action for a tortious injury to their property, 1 Salk. 31 ; 1 Saund. 291 g; 6 Term, 766; 7 id. 297; 11 N. H. 141; in trover, for its conversion, 5 East, 407; in replevin, to get possession, 6 Pick. Mass. 571; 8 Mo. 522; 15 Me .245 ; or in detinue, for its detention, or for injury to land. 3 Bingh. 455; 29 Barb. N. Y. 9.
So may several owners who sustain a joint damage. 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 223.
For injury to the person, plaintiffs cannot, in general, join. 2 Wms. Saund. 117 a.; Croke Car. 512; Croke Eliz. 472.
Partners may join for slanders, 3 Bingh. 452; 10 id. 270; 1 Carr. & K. 568 ; 8 Carr. & P. 708; for false representations, 17 Mass. 182, injuring the partnership.

In cases where several can join in the commission of a tort, they may be joined in an action as defendants, 3 East, 62 ; 5 Term, 651; 7 id. 259; 6 Taunt. 29; 14 Johns. N. Y. 462; 19 id .381 : as, in trover, 1 Maule \& $\mathbf{S}$. 588; in trespass, 2 Wms . Saund. $117 a$; for libel, Broom, Part. 249,-not for slander, Croke Jac. 647; in trespass. 1 Carr. \& M. 96.
15. Husband and wife must join in action for direct damages resulting from personal injury to the wife, 3 Blackstone, Comm. 140; 4 Iowa, 420; in detinue, for the property which was the wife's before marriage, 2 Tayl. No. C. 266 ; see 30 Ala. N. s. 582; for injury to the wife's property before marriage, 2 Jones, No. C. 59; where the right of action accrues to the wife in autre droit, Comyns, Dig. Baron \& F. (V); 11 Mod. 177; 2 Bos. \& P. 407; and, generally, in all cases where the cause of action by law survives to the wife. 4 Barnew. \& Ald. 523; 10 Pick. Mass. $470 ; 35 \mathrm{Me} .89$.
They may join for slander of the wife, if the words spoken are actionable per se, for the direct injury, 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 5; 22 Barb. N. Y. 396; 2 Du. N. Y. 633; 2 Hill, N.Y. 309; 2 T. B. Monr. Ky. 56; 25 Mo. 580; 4 Iowa, 420; 11 Cush. Mass. 10; and in ejectment for lands of the wife. Broom, Part. 235; 1 Bulstr. 21.
19. They must be joined as defendants for torts committed by the wife before marriage, 2 Roper, Husb. & Wife, 127; Coke, Litt. 351 b ; 5 Binn. Penn. 43, or during coverture, Broom, Part. 299; 19 Barb. N. Y. $321 ; 2$ E. D. Smith, N. Y. 90 ; or for libel or slander uttered by her, 5 Carr. & P. 484; and in action for waste by the wife, before marriage, as administratrix. 2 Williams, Exec. 1441.

They may be joined in trespass for their joint act. 2 Strange, 1094 ; 4 Bingh. n. c. 96 ; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 687; 6 Gratt. Va. 213.

Joint tenants and parceners, during the continuance of the joint estate, must join in all actions ex delicto relative thereto, as in trespass to their land, and in trover or replevin for their goods. Broom, Part. 215; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 182, 188; Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (K) ; 2 Salk. 205; 2 Lev. 113; 29 Barb. N. Y. 29. Joint tenants may join in an action for slander of the title to their estate. Broom, Part. 211; 3 Bingh. 455. They should be sued jointly, in trespass, trover, or case, for any thing respecting the land held in common. Broom, Part. 251, 255; 5 Term, 651; Comyns, Dig. Abatcment (F 6); 1 Wms. Saund. 291 e. Joint tenants should join in an avowry or cognizance for rent, 3 Salk. 207; $1 \mathrm{id}$. . 390; or for taking cattle damage feasant, Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (K); or one joint tenant should avow in his own right, and as bailiff to the other. \& Salk. 207. But a tenant in common cannot avow the taking of the cattle of a stranger upon the land damage feasant, without making himself bailiff or servant to his co-tenant. 2 H. Blackst. 388, 389; Bacon, Abr. Replevin (K).
20. Master and servant, where co-trespassers, should be joined though they be not equally culpable. 2 Lev. 172; 1 Bingh. 418; 5 Barnew. & C. 559. Partners may join for a joint injury in relation to the joint property. 2 Bouvier, Inst. 110; 3 Carr. & P. 196. They may be joined as defendants where property is taken by one of the firm for its benefit, 1 Carr. & M. 93 ; and where the firm makes fraudnlent representations as to the credit of a third person, whereby the firm gets benefit. 17 Mass. 182.

Tenants in common must join for a trespass upon the lands held in common, Littleton, & 315 ; 15 Johns. N. Y. 497; 1 Wend. N. Y. 380; 8 Cow. N. Y. 304; 28 Me. 136; or for taking away their common property, Croke Eliz. 143; or for detaining it, 1 Hill, N. Y. 234; or for a nuisance to their estate. 14 Johns. N. Y. 246.
In Criminal Cases. Two or more persons who have committed a crime may be jointly indicted therefor, $7 \mathrm{Gratt} . \mathrm{Va} .619 ; 6 \mathrm{McLean}$, C. C. 596; 10 Ired. No. C. 153; 8 Blackf. Ind. 205, only where the offence is such that it may be committed by two jointly. 3 Sneed, Tenn. 107.
They may have a separate trial, however, in the discretion of the court, 15 Ill. $536 ; 1$ Park. Crim. N. Y. $424 ; 7$ Gratt. Va. 619; 10 Cush. Mass. 530; 5 Strobh. So. C. 85 ; 9 Ala. N. s. 137; and in some states as a matter of right. 1 Park. Crim. N. Y. 371.
JOINT ACTION. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See 1 Parsons, Contr.; Actions; Joinder, 81.

JOINT BOND. The bond of two or more obligors, the action to enforce which must be joint against them all.

JOINT AND SEVERAL BOND. A bond of two or more obligors, who bind themselves jointly and severally to the obligees, who can sue all the obligors jointly, or any one of them separately, for the whole amount, but cannot bring a joint action against part,that is, treat it as joint as to some and several as to others. Upon the payment of the whole by one of such obligors, a right to contribution arises in his favor against the other obligors.

JOINT CONTRACT. One in which the contractors are jointly bound to perform the promise or obligation therein contained, or entitled to receive the benefit of such promise or obligation.
2. It is a general rule that a joint contract survives, whatever may be the beneficial interests of the parties under it. When a partner, cóvenantor, or other person entitled, having a joint interest in a contract not running with the land, dies, the right to sue survives in the other partner, etc. 1 Dall. Penn. 65, 248; Addison, Contr. 285. And when the obligation or promise is to perform something jointly by the obligors or promissors, and ono dies, the action must be brought against the survivor. Hammond, Partn. 156; Barbour, Partn.
3. When all the parties interested in a joint contract die, the action must be brought by the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligee against the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligor. Addison, Contr. 285. Sce Contracts; Parties to Actions; Co-Onligor.
JOINT EXECUTORS. Those who are joined in the execution of a will.
2. Joint executors are considered in law as but one person representing the testator; and, therefore, the acts of any one of them, which relate either to the delivery, gift, sale, payment, possession, or release of the testator's goods, are deemed, as regards the persons with whom they contract, the acts of all. Bacon, Alr.; 11 Viner, Abr. 358 ; Comyns, Dig. Administration (B 12); 1 Dane, Abr. 583; 2 Litt. Ky. 315; God. 314 ; Dy. 23, in marg.; 16 Serg. & R. Penn. 337. But an executor cannot, without the knowledge of his co-executor, confess a judgment for a claim part of which was barred by the act of limitations, so as to bind the estate of the testator. 6 Penn. St. 267.
3. As a general rule, it may be laid down that each executor is liable for his own wrong or devastavit only, and not for that of his colleague. He may be rendered liable, however, for the misplaced confidence which he may have reposed in his co-executor: as, if he signs a receipt for money, in conjunction with another esecutor, and he receives no part of the money, but agrees that the other executor shall retain it, and apply it to his own use, this is his own misapplication, for which he is responsible. 1 P. Will. Ch. 241, n. 1; 1 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 341; 2id. 231; 7 East, 256; 11 Johns. N. Y. 16; 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 71; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y.' 283 . And see 2 Brown, Ch. 116; 3 id. 112; 2 Penn. 421; Fonblanque, Eq. b. 2, c. 7, s. 5, n. k.

Upon the death of one of several joint executors, the right of administering the estate of the testator devolves upon the survivor. 3 Atk. Ch. 509; Comyns, Dig. Administration (B 12); Hammond, Partn. 148.
JOINT INDICTMENT. One indictment brought against two or more offenders, charging the detendants jointly. It may be where there is a joint criminal act, without any regard to any particular personal default or defect of either of the defendants: thus, there may be a joint indictment against the joint keepers of a gaming-house. 1 V entr. Ch. 302; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 240.

JOINT STOCK BANKs. In English
Law. A species of quasi corporations, or companies regulated by deeds of settlement.
In some respects they stand in the same situation as other unineorporated bodies; but they differ from the latter in this, that they are invested by certain statutes with powers and privilegos usually incident to corporations. These enactments provide for the continuance of the partnership notwithstanding a change of partners. The death, bankruptcy, or the sale by a partner of his share, does not affect the identity of the partnership: it continues the same body, under the same name, by virtue of the aet of parliament, notwithstanding these ebanges. 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, s. 9.
JOINT STOCK COMPANY. A quasi partnership, invested by statutes, in England and many of the states, with some of the privileges of a corporation. There is in such a company no dilectus personarum, that is, no choice about admitting partners: the shares into which the capital is divided are transferable at the pleasure of the person holding them, and the assignee becomes a partner by virtue of the transfer, and the rights and duties of the partners or members are determined by articles of association, or, in England, by a deed of settlement. A partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares so as to be transferable without the express consent of all the co-partners. 1 Parsons, Contr. 121. The $7 & 8$ Vict. includes within the term joint stock company all life, fire, and marine insurance companies, and every partnership consisting of more than twenty-five members. In this country, where there are no statutes providing for joint stock companies, they are rather to be regarded as parmerships. 1 Parsons, Contr. 121 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 262. See Wordsworth, Pub. Comp.
JOINT TENANTS. Two or more persons to whom are granted lands or tenements to hold in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 179 . The estate which they thus hold is called an estate in joint tenancy. See Estate in Joint Tenancy; Jus Accrescendi; Survivor.
Joint trustees. Two or more persons who are intrusted with property for the henefit of one or more others.
Unlike joint executors, joint trustees cannot act separately, but must join both in conveyances and receipts; for one cannot sell without the others, or receive more of the consideration-money or be more a trustee than his partner. The trust having been given to the whole, it requires their joint act to do any thing under it. They are not responsible for money received by their cotrustees, if the receipt be given for the mere purposes of form. But if receipts be given under circumstances purporting that the money, though not received by both, was under the control of both, such a receipt shall charge, and the consent that the other shall misapply the money, particularly where he has it in his power to secure it, renders him responsible. 11 Serg. \& R. Penn. 71. See 1 Schoales \& L. Ch. Ir. 341 ; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 283; Fonblanque, Eq. b. 2, c. 7, s. 5 ; Bac. Abr. Uses and Trusts, $\mathbf{K}$; 2 Brown, Ch. 116; 3 id. 112.

JOINTRESS, JOINTURESS. A wo-

 man who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survive hịm. Coke, Litt. 46.JOINTURE. A joint estate limited to both husband and wife. A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements, to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least.
Jointures are regulated by the statute of 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, commonly called the statute of uses.
To make a good jointure, the following circumstances must concur, namely. It must take effect, in possession or profit, immediately from the death of the husband. It must be for the wife's life, or for some greater estate. It must be limited to the wife herself, and not to any other person in trust for her. It must be made in satisfaction for the wife's whole dower, and not of part of it only. The estate limited to the wife must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of her whole dower. It must be made before marriage. A jointure attended with all these circumstances is binding on the widow, and is a complete bar to the claim of dower; or, rather, it prevents its ever arising. But there are other modes of limiting an estate to a wife, which, Lord Coke says, are good jointures within the statute, provided the wife accepts of them after the death of the husband. She may, however, reject them, and claim her dower. Cruise, Dig. tit. 7; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 137; Perkins. In its more enlarged sense, a jointure signifies a joint estate limited to both husband and wife. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 137. See 14 Viner, Abr. 540; Bacon, Abr.; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1761 et seq.; Washhurn, Real Prop.

JOUR. A French word, signifying day. It is used in our old law-books: as, tout jours, forever. It is also frequently employed in the oomposition of words: as, journal, a daybook; journeyman, a man who works by the day; journeys account.

JOURNAL. In Maritime Law. The book kept on board of a ship or other vessel, which contains an account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. Another name for log-book. Chitty, Law of Nat. 199.
In Commercial Law. A book used among merchants, in which the contents of the wastebook are separated every month, and entered on the debtor and creditor side, for more convenient posting in the ledger.
In Legislation. An account of the proceedings of a legislative body.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, directs that "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may, in their judgment, require secrecy." See 2 Story, Const. 301 .
The constitutions of the several states contain similar provisions.
The journal of either honse is evidence of the action of that house upon all matters before it. 7 Cow. N. Y. 613; Cowp. 17.
JOURNEYS ACCOUNT. In English Practice. A new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court: hence the name of journeys account, that is, journeys accomptes or counted. This writ was quasi a continuance of the first writ, and so related back to it as to oust the defendant or tenant of his voucher, plea of non-tenure, joint tenancy fully administered, or any other plea arising upon matter happening after date of the first writ. Coke, litt. fol. 9 b.
2. This mode of proceeding has fallem into disuse, the practice now being to permit that writ to be quashed, and to sue out another. Sce Termes de la Ley; Bacon, Abr. Abatement (Q) ; 14 Viner, Abr. 558; 4 Comyn, Dig. 714; 7 Mann. & G. 762; 8 Cranch, $8 t$.
JUBILACION. In Spanish Law. The right of a public nficer to retire from office, retaining his title and his salary, either in whole or in part, after he has attained the age of fifty years and been in public service at least twenty years, whenever his intirmities prevent him from dischargıng the duties of his office.

JUDAISMUS (Lat.). The religion and rites of the Jews. DuCange. A quarter set apart for residence of Jews. DuCange. A usurious rate of interest. 1 Mon. Angl. 839 ; 2 id. 10, 665. Sex marcus sterlingorum ad acquietandáam terram prodictum de Judaismo, inquo fuit impignorata. DuCange. An income anciently accruing to the king from the Jews. Blount.

JUDEX (Lat.). In Roman Law. One who, either in his own right or by appointment of the magistrate for the special case, judged causes.
Thus, the pretor was iermerly called judex. But, generally, pratoxs and magistrates who judge of their own right are distinguished from judices, who are private persons, appointed by the pretor, or application of the plaintiff, to try the cause, as soon as issue is joined, and furnished by him with instruotions as to the legal principles involved. They were variously ealled judices delegati, or pedanei, or speciales. They resemble in many respects jurors: thus, both are privato persons, brought in at a eertain stage of the proceedings, viz., issus joined, to try the cause, under instructions from the judge as to the law of the case. But civilians are not clsar whether the judices had to decide the fret alone, or the law and fact. The judex ressmbles in many respeots the arbitrator, or arbiter, the chief differences being, $f$ irst, that the latter is appointed in cases of trust and confidence, the former in cases where the relations of the parties are governed by strict law (in puctionibus strictis); second, the latter has the whole control of case, and decides according to equity and good conscience, ths former by strict formulæ; third, that the latter may be a magistrate, the former must be a private person ; fourth, that the award of the arbiter derives its foree from the agreement of submission, while the decree of the judex has its sanction in the comman.l of the protor to try the cause. Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 210, note; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, Kaufmann cd. $&$ 193, note.

There was generally one judex, sometimes three,-in which case the decision of two, in the absence of the third, had no effect. Calvinus, Lex. Down to the time of handing over the cause to the judex, that is, till issue joined, the proceedings were before the prætor, and were said to be in juxe; after that, before the judex, and were said to be in judicio. In all this we see the germ of the An-glo-Saxon system of judicature. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 67.

In Civil Law. A judge who conducts the trial from beginning to end; magistratus. The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. 81327.

In Old English Law. A juror. Spelman, Gloss. A judge, in modern sense, espe-cially-as opposed to justiciarius, i.e. a com-mon-law judge-to denote an ccelesiastical judge. Bracton, fol. 401, 402.

JUDEX ORDINARIUS (Lat.). In Clvil Law. A judge who had jurisdiction by his own right, not by another's appointment. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Blackstone says that judices ordinarii decided only questions of fact, while questions of law were referred to the centumviri; but this would seem to be rather the definition of $j u d i$ ces selecti; and not all questions of law were referred to the centumviri, but particular actions: e.g. querela inofficiosi testamenti. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 315 ; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr. Centumviri.

JUDGE. A public officer lawfully appointed to decide litigated questions according to law.

An officer so named in his commission, and who presides in some court.
In its most extensive sense the term includes all officers appointed to decide litigatsd questions while acting in that capacity, ineluding justices of the penee, and even jurors, it is said, who nre judges of the facts. 4 Dall. Penn. 229; 3 Ycates, Penn. 300. In ordinary legal nse, however, the term is limited to the sense of the second of the definitions here given, 15 Ill. 388, unless it may be that the ease of a justice or commissioner acting judicially is to be considered an extension of this meaning. See 3 Cush. Mass. 584.
2. Judges are appointed or elected in a variety of ways in the United States. For the federal courts they are appointed by the president, by and with the consent of the senate; in some of the states they are appointed by the governor, the governor and senate, or by the legislature. See 11 Ind. 357; 29 Penn. St. 129; 2 Greene, Iowa, 458; 6 Ired. No. C. 5 . The judges of the federal courts and of the courts of some of the states hold their offices during good behavior, see 3 Cush. Mass. 584; of others, as in New York, during good behavior, or until they shall attain a certain age; and of others, for a limited term of years. See 30 Miss. 206.

Impartiality is the first duty of a judge: if he has any (the slightest) interest in the cause, he is disqualified from sitting as judge; aliquis non debet esse judex in propriâ causâ, 8 Coke, 118; 6 Pick. Mass. 109; 21 id. 101; 5 Mass. 92 ; 13 id. 340 ; 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 157; 4 Ohio St. 675; 17 Ga. 253 ; 17 Barb. N. Y. 414; 22 N. H. $473 ; 19$ Conn. 585 ; see 32 Miss. 148 ; 16 Ark. 196 ; 27 Ala. n. s. 423 ; 22 Conn. 178 ; 5 N. Y. 389 ; 1 Spence, N. J. 457 ; and when he is aware of such interest, he ought himself to refuse to sit on the case. It seems it is discretionary with him whether he will sit in a cause in which he has been of counsel. 2 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 517 ; Coxe, N.J. 164. See 2 Binn. Penn. $454 ; 5$ Ind. 230. But the delicacy which characterizes the judges in this country, generally, forbids their sitting in such a cause. Judges consider it their duty, also, to declare and expound the law, not to make it. 10 Ga .190.
3. While acting within the bounds of his jurisdiction, the judge is not responsible for any error of judgment or mistake he may commit as judge, Coke, Litt. 294 ; 2 Dall. Penn. 160; 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 168; 1 Day, Conn. 315 ; 1 Root, Conn. 211 ; 5 Johns. N. Y. 282 ; 9 id. $395 ; 11$ id. $150 ; 3$ A. K. Marsh. Ky. 76; 1 South. N.J. 74 ; 1 N. H. 374 ; hut when he acts corruptly he may be impeached. 5 Johns. N. Y. 282; 8 Cow. N. Y. 178; 4 Dall. Penn. 225.

A judge is not competent as a witness in a cause trying before him, for this among other reasons, that he can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding on the admissibility of his own testimony, or of weighing it against that of another. 2 Mart. La. n.s.312; 2 Cal. 358. See Comyn, Dig. Courts (B4), (C 2), (E 1), (P16), Justices (I1, 2, 3); Bacon, Abr. Courts (B); 1 Kent, Comm. 291; Story, Const.; Charge.

JUDGE ADVOCATE. An officer of a court-martial who is to discharge scme duties at the trial of offenders. His duties are to prosecute in the name of the United States; but he shall so far consider himself as counsel for the prisoner, after the prisoner shall have made his plea, as to object to leading questions to any of the witnesses, or any question to the prisoncr the answer to which might tend to criminate himself. He is, further, to swear the members of the court before they proceed upon any trial. Rules and Articles of War, art. 69; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1001 ; IIolt, Dig. passim.

JUDGE'S CERTIFICATE. In English

Practice. The written statement of the judge who tried the cause that one of the parties is entitled to costs in the action. It is very important in some cases that these certificates should be obtained at the trial. See Tidd, Pract. 879;3 Chitty, Pract. 458, 486; 3 Campb. 316 ; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 796. A statement of the opinion of the court, signed by the judges, upon a question of law submitted to them by the chancellor for their decision. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 453; Case Stated.

JUDGE'S NOTES. Short statements, noted by a judge on the trial of a cause, of what transpires in the course of such trial.
They usually contain a statement of the testimony of witnesses, of documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.
In general, judge's notes are not evidence of what transpired at a former trial, nor can they be read to prove what a deceased witness swore to on such former trial; for they are no part of the record, and he is not officially bound to make them. But in chancery, when a new trial is ordered of an issue sent out of chancery to a court of law, and it is suggested that some of the witnesses in the former trial are of an advanced age, an order may be made that, in the event of death or inability to attend, their testimony may be read from the judge's notes. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. & 166.
JUDGMENT. In Practice. The conclusion of law upon facts found, or admitted by the parties, or upon their defanlt in the course of the suit. Tidd, Pract. 930.

The decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury.

Judgment of cassetur breve or billa (that the writ or bill be quashed) is a judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ or action. Stephen, Plead. 130, 131.

Judgment by confession is a judgment entered for the plaintiff in case the defendant, instead of entering a plea, confesses the action, or at any time before trial confesses the action and withdraws his plea and other allegations.

Contradictory judgmentis a judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard either in support of their claims or in their defence. 11 La. 366. It is used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

Judgment by default is a judgment rendered in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant.

Judgment in error is a judgment rendered by a court of error on a record sent up from an inferior court.
Final judgment is one which puts an end to a suit.
Interlocutory judgment is one given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 396.
Judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam is a judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Judgment by nil dicit is one rendered against a defendant for want of a plea.
Judgment of nolle prosequi is a judgment entered against the plaintiff where after appearance and before judgment he says " he will not further prosecute his suit." Stephen, Plead. 130.
Judgment of non-obstante veredicto is a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff with. out regard to the verdict obtained by the defendant.
Judgment of non pros. (non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neglect to take any of those steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time.
Judgment by non sum informatus is one which is rendered when, instead of entering a plea, the defendant's attorney says he is not informed of any answer to be given to the action. Stephen, Plead. 130.
Judgment of non suit, a judgment rendered against the plaintiff when he, on trial by jury, on being called or demanded, at the instance of the defendant, to be present while the jury give their verdict, fails to make an appearance.
Judgment pro retorno habendo is a judgment that the party have a return of the goods.
Judgment quod computet is a judgment in an action of account-render that the defendant do account.
Judgment quod partitio fiat is the interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition that partition be made.

Judgment quod partes replacitant is a judgment for repleader. See Repleader.
Judgment quod recuperet is a judgment in favor of the plaintiff (that he do recover) rendered when he has prevailed upon an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory plea. Stephen, Plead. 126.
Judgment of respondeat ouster is a judgment given against the defendant after he has failed to establish a dilatory plea upon which an issue in law has been raised.
Judgment of retraxit is one given against the plaintiff where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff enters upon the record that he "withdraws his suit."
2. Judgments upon facts found are the following. Judgment of nul tiel record occurs when some pleading denies the existence of a record, and issue is joined thereon; the record being produced is compared by the court with the statement in the pleading which alleges it; and if they correspond, the party asserting its existence obtains judgment; if they de not cerrespond, the other party ootaind judgment of iul tiel record. Judgment upon verdict is the most usual of the judgments upen facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdiet. Judgment non-obstante veredicto is a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff notwithatanding the verdiot for the defendant: this judgment is given upon motion (whieh can only be made hy the plaintiff) when, upon an examiaation of the whelo proceedings, it appears to the court that the defendant has admitted himself to be in the wrong, and that the issue, though decided in his favor by the jury, is on a point which does not at all better his ease. Smith, Actions, 161. This is called a judgment upon oonfession, because it oceurs after a pleading by defendant in oonfession and avoidance and issue joined thereon, and verdict found for defendant, aad then it appears that the pleading was bad in law and might have been demurred to on that ground. The plea heing substantially bad in law, of eourse the verdict whieh merely shows it to be true in point of fact cannot avail to entitle the defendant to judgment; while, on the other hand, the plea being in cenfession and avoidance involves aconfession of the plaintiff's declaration, and shows that he was entitled to maintain his aetion. Sometimes it may be expedient for the plaintiff to move for judgment non-obatante veredicto even though the verdict be in his favor; for, in a case like that described above, if be takes judgment as upon the verdiet it seems that sueh judgment would be erroneous, and that the only safe course is to take it as upon confession. 1 Wils. 63; Croke Eliz. 778; 2 Rolle, Abr. 99; 1 Bingh. N. c. 767. See, also, Croke Eliz. 214; 6 Mod. 10: Str. 394; 1 Ld. Raym. 641; 8 Taunt. 413; Rastell, Ent. 622; 1 Wend. N. Y. 307 ; 2 id. $624 ; 4$ id. 468 ; 5 id. 513 ; 6 Cow. N. Y. 225. A judgment of repleader is given when issue is joined on an immaterial peint, or one on which the court cannot give a judgment which will determine the right. On the award of a repleader, the parties must recommence their pleadings at the point where the immaterial issue originated. See Repleader. This judgment is interlocutory, quod partes replacitent. See Baeon, Ahr. Pleas, 4 (M); 3 Hayw. No. C. 159.
3. Judgments upon faets admitted hy the parties are as follows. Judgment upon a demurrer against the party demurring concludes him, because hy demurring a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary, and relies on their insuffieiency in law. It sometimes happens that though the adverse parties are agreed is to the facts, and only differ as to the law arising out of them, still these faets do not so clearly appear on the pleadings as to enable them to obtain the opinion of the court by way of demurrer; for on demurrer the court can look at nothing whatever except the pleadings. In such circumstances the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. e. $42, \% 25$, which has heen imitated in most of the states, allows them after issue joined, and on obtaining the consent of a single judge, to state the facts in a special case for the opinion of the court, and agree that a judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff or defendant by coufession or nolle prosequi imanediately after the deeision of the case; and judgment is entered accordingly. Sometimes at the trial the parties find that they agree on the facts, and the only question is one of law. In such oase a verdiet pro forma is taken, which is a species of admission by the parties, and is general, where the jury find for the plaintiff generally hut subject to the opinion of the eourt on a special case, or special, where they state the facts as they find them, concluding that the opinion of the eourt shall decide in whose favor the verdict shall he, and that they assess the damages accordingly. The judgments in these cases aro called, respectively, judgment on a case stated, judgment on a general verdict sub. ject to a epecial case, and judgment on a special verdiet.
4. Besides these, a judgment may he based npon the admissions or confessions of one only of the parties. Such judgments when for defendant upon the admissions of the plaintiff are: Judgment of nolle prosequi, where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff says he "will not further prosecute his suit." Judgment of retraxit is one where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff enters upon the record that he "withdraws his suit," whereupon judgment is rendered against him. The differenee between these is that a retraxit is a har to any future action for the same cause; while a nolle prosequi is not, unless made after judgment. Bowden vs. Home, 7 Biogh. 716 ; 1 Wms. Saund. 207, n. A plaintiff sometimes, when he finds he has miseonceived his action, obtains leave from the court to discontinue, on which there is a judgment against him and he has to pay costs; but he may commence a new aetion for the same cause. A stet processus is entered where it is agreed by leave of the court that all further proceedings shall be stayed: though in form a judgment for the defendant, it is generally, like discontinuance, in point of fact for the beneft of the plaintiff, and entered on his application, as, for instance, when the defendent has become insolvent, it does not carry costs. Smith, Actions, 162, 163.
5. Judgments for the plaintiff upon faets admitted by the defendant are judgmeat by cognovit actionem, cognovit or confession, where, instead of entering a plea, the defendant chooses to acknowledge the rightfulness of the plaintiff's aetioo; or by confession relicta verificatione, where, after pleading and before trial, he both eonfesses the plaintiff's cause of action to be just and true and withdraws, or abandons, his plea or other allegations. Upon this, judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial.

Analogous to this is the judgment confessed hy warrant of attorney: this is an authority given hy the delator to an attorney named by the ereditor, empowering him to confess judgment either by cognocit actionem, nil dicit, or non sum informatus. This differs from a cognovit in tlat an action must be commenced hefore a cognovit can be given, 3 Dowl. 278, per Parke, B., but not hefore the exeeution of a warrant of attorney. Judgments by nil dicit and non sum infornatus, though they are in fact founded upon a tacit acknowledgment on the part of the defendant that he has no defence to the plaintiff's action, yet as they are commonly reckoned among the judgments hy defaults, they will be explained under that head.
6. A judgment is rendered on the default of a party, on two grounds: it is considered that the failure of the party to proceed is an-sdmiesion that he, if plaintiff, has no just cause of action, or, if defendant, has no gaod defence; and it is intended as a penalty for his neglect; for which reason, when such judgment is set aside or opened at the instance of the defaulting party, the court generally require him to pay costs. Judgment by default is against the defendant when he has failed to appear after being served with the writ; to plead, after being ruled so to do, or, in Pennsylrania and some other states, to file an affidavit of defence within the prescribed time, or, generally, to take any step in the cause incumbent on him. Judgment lyy non sum intormatus is a specics of judgment hy deffult, where, instead of entering a plea, the defendant's attorney says he is "not informed" of any answer to be given to the action. Judgment by nil dieit is rendered against the defendant where, after being ruled to plead, he neglects to do so withia the time speeified.
7. Judgment of uon pros. (from non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neglect to take any of these steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time. Judgment of non suit (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas) is where the plaintiff, after giving in his evidence, finds that it will not sustain his esse, and therefore voluntarily makes default by absenting himself when he is called on to hear the verdict. The ecourt gives judgment against him for this default; but the proceeding is really for his henefit, because sfter a non-suit he can institute another action for the same causs, which is not the cass-except in ejectment, in some atstes-after a verdiet and judginent against him. It follows that at common law the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited against his will; for a party cannot be compelled to make defsult. But in Pennsylvania, by statate, the plaintiff msy bs nonsuited eompulsorily. This may bs dons in two casss: 1, under the act of 11 th Mareh, 1836, when the defendant has offered no evitlence, and the plsintif's evidence is not sufficient in law to maintsin his action; 2, under the act of 14th April, 1846, confined to Philadelphis, when the cause is reaehed and the plaintiff or his counsel does not appear, or, if he appears, does not proceed to trial, and does not assign and prove a sufficient legal cause for continuazce.
The formality of calling the plaintiff when he is to suffer s nonsuit is obsolete in most of the states.
In England, when the plaintifi negleets to carry down the record to the assizes for trisl, the defendsut is empowered, by stat. Geo. II. c. 17, to move for judgment as in case of nonsuit, which the ceurt may sither grant, or may, upon just and reasonable terms, allow the plaintiff further time to try tho issue.
8. Interlocutory judgments ars such as are given in the middle of a cause upon sumo ples, proceeding, or default which is only intermediats, and does not finally dstermine or complete the suit. 3 Blackstons, Comm. 396. Such is a judgment for the plaintiff upon a plea in abatement, which merely decides that the causs must procsed and the dofendant put in a better ples. But, in the ordinsry sense, interlocutory judgments ars those incomplete judgments wherehy the right of the plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damsges sustained by him is not ascertained. This can only be the case where the plaintiff recovers; for judgment for the defendant is always complete as well as final. The interlocutory judgments of mostecommon oceurrence are where a demurrer has been determined for the plaintiff, or the defendent has made default, or has by cognovit actionem acknowledged the plaintiff's demand to be just. After interlocutory judgment in such ease, the plaintiff must ordinarily take out a writ of inquiry, which is sddressod to the shsriff, commanding him to summon a jury and assess the dsmages, and upon the return of the writ of inquiry final judgment may bs entered for the amount ascertained by the jury. It is not always necessary to have a writ of inquiry upon ioterlocutory judgment; for it is said that "this is a mers inquest of offics to inform the conscience of the court, who, if they pleass, may themselves assess the dsmages," 3 Wils. 62, per Wilmot, C.J.; and accordingly, if the damages are matter of mers computation, as, for instance, intarest upon a bill of exchange or promissory noto, it is usual fer the oourt to refer it to the msster or prothonotary, to aseertain what is due for prineipal, interest, and costs, whose report supersedes the necessity of a writ of inquiry. 4 Term, 275 ; 1 H . Blackst. 541 ; 4 Price, 134. But in actions where a sposifie thing is sucd for, as in actions of dobt for a sum certain, the judgment upon demurrer, default, or confession is not interlocutory, but is absolutely complete and final in the first instance.
9. Final judyments are such ss at once put an end to the action by determining the right and fixing the amount in dispute. Such are a judgment for defendant at any stage of the suit, a judgment for plaintiff' sfter verdict, a judgment for a specifio amount confessed upon warrant of attorney, snd a jndgment signed upon the return of a writ of inquiry, or upon the assessment of damages by the master or prothonotary. Judgment for plaintiff is final also in an sction brought for a specific sum, as dsht for a sum certsin, although entered npon demurrer or default, because here, the amount being ascertained st the outset, the only question at issue is that respecting the right, and when that is determined nothing remsins to be donc.

When an issue in fact, or an issue in lato arising on a peremptory plea, is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is "that the plaintiff do recaver, etc.," which is callod a judgment quod recuperet. Stephen, Plead. 126; Comyn, Dig. Abatement (I 14, 1 15); 2 Arehbold, Praet. 3. When tho issue in law arises on a dilatory plea and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant "do answer ever," called a judgment of respondeat ouster. In an action of account, judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendsnt "do acceunt," quod computet. Of thess, the lsst two, quod computet and quod reapondeat ouster, are interlocutory only; the first, quod recuperet, is either final or interlocutory sccording as the quantum of damages is or is net ascertained at the rendition of the judgment.
Judgment in error is either in affirmance of the former judgment; in recall of it for error in fact; in reversal of it for error in law; that the plaintiff be barred of his writ of error, whers a plea of releass of errors or of the statuts of limitstions is found for the defendant; or that there be a venire facias de novo, which is sn award of a new trisl. Smith, Actions, 196. A venire facias de novo will always be awarded when the plaintiff's declaration contains a good causs of action, and judgment in his favor is reversed by the court of error. 24 Penn. St. 470. In general, howerer, when juágment ie reversed, the court of error not merely overturns the decision of the court bslow, bnt will give such a judgment as the court below ought to have given. Smith, Actions, 196.
10. Requisites of. To be valid, a judicial judgment must he given by a competent judge or court, at a time and place appointed hy law, and in the-form it requires. A judgment would he null if the judge had not jurisdiction of the matter, or, having such jurisdiction, he exercised it when there was no court held, or out of his district, or if he rendered a judgment before the cause was prepared for a hearing.

The judgment must confine itself to the quastion raised before the court, and cannot extend beyond it. For example, where the plaintiff sued for an injury committed on his lands by animals owned and kept carelessly hy defendant, the judgment may be for damages, but it cannot command the defendant for the future to keep his cattle out of the plaintiff's land. That would be to usurp the power of the legislature. A judgment declares the rights which helong to the citizen, the law alone rules future actions. The law commands all men, it is the same for all, because it is general ; judgments are particular decisions, which apply only to particular persons, and bind no others; they vary like the cirenmstances on which they are founded.
11. Effect of. Final judgments are com.
monly said to conclude the parties; and this is true in general, but does not apply to judgments for defendant on non suit, as in case of non suit by nolle prosequi, and the like, which are final judgments in one sense, because they put an end to all proceedings in the suit, but which nevertheless do not debar the plaintiff from instituting another suit for the same cause. With this qualification, the rule as to the effect of a judgment is as follows. The judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the pointis, as a plea, a bar, or, as evidence, conclusive botween the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court. The judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction directly upon the point is in like manner conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose. But neither the judginent of a concurrent nor exclusive jurisdiction is evidonce of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment. Duchess of Kingston's case, 20 Howell, St. Tr. 538; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 424; and see the authorities in this place. See, also, 2 Gall. C. C. 229; 4 Watts, Penn. 183. The rule above given relates to the effect of a judgmentupon proceedings in another court ; if the court is the same, of course the rule holds a fortiori. Moreover, all persons who are represented by the parties and claim under them or in privity with them are equally concluded by the proceeedings. All privies whatever in estate, in blood, or in law are, therefore, estopped from litigating that which is conclusive upon him with whom they are in privity. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. ${ }_{3}^{2} 523,536$.

A further rule as to the conclusiveness of judgments is sometimes stated thus: "a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be impeached or set aside in any collateral proceeding except on the ground of fraud." See, generally, 1 Greenleaf, Ev. pt. 3 , oh. 5 , and the authorities there cited.

This does not prevent a judgment from being attached directly by writ of error or other proceeding in the nature of an appeal; and its validity may be impeached in other direct proceedings, as by motion to open or set it aside, and in contests between creditors in regard to the validity of their respective judgments: in this latter class of cases the court will sometimes award a feigned issue to try questions of fact affecting the validity of the judgment.

And matters of defence arising since the judgment may be taken advantage of by a writ of audita querela, or, which is more usual, the court may afford summary relief on motion.
12. As to Form. The form of the judgment varies according to the nature of the action and the circumstances, such as default, verdict, etc., under which it is obtained. Anciently great particularity was required in the entries made upon the judgment roll ; but now, even in the English practice, the drawing up the judgment roll is generally neglected, except in cases where it is absolutely necessary, as where it is desirable to give the proceedings in evidence on some future occasion. Smith, Actions, 169. In this country the roll is rarely if ever drawn up, the simple entry on the trial list and docket, "judgment for plaintiff," or "judgment for defendant," being all that is generally considered necessary; and though the formal entries are in theory still required to constitute a complete record, yet if such record should subsequently be needed for any purpose, it may be made up after any length of time from the skeleton entries upon the docket and trial list. See Wilkins vs. Anderson, 1 Jones, Penn. 399. When the record is thus drawn up in full, the ancient formalities must be observed, at least in a measure.

Judgments on Verdict.

In account, judgment for the plaintiff is interlocutory in the first instance, that the defendant do account, quod compittet. 4 Wash. C. C. $84 ; 2$ Watts, Penn. 95 ; 1 Penn. 138.

In assumpsit, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover the damages assessed by the jury, and full costs of suit. 1 Chitty, Pl. 100. Judgment for the defendant is that he recover his costs. For the form, see Tidd, Pract. Forms, 165.

In case, trover, and trespass, the judgment is the same in substance, and differs but slightly in form from that in assumpsit. 1 Chitty, Plead. 100, 147.

In covenant, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover the amount of his damages as found which he has sustained by reason of the breach or breaches of the defendant's covenant, together with costs of suit. 1Chitty, Plead. 116, 117. Judgment for defendant is for costs.
13. In debt, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover his debt, and, in general, nominal damages for the detention thereof; and in cases under the 8th & 9th Will. III. c. 11, for successive breaches of a bond conditioned for the performance of covenant, it is also awarded that he have execution for such damages, and likewise full costs of suit. 1 Chitty, Pl. 108, 109. But in some penal and other actions the plaintiff does not always recover costs. Espinasse, Pen. Act. 154; Hull, Costs, 200; Buller, Nisi P. 333; 5 Johns. N. Y. 251. Judgment for defendant is generally for costs; but in certain penal actions neither party can recover costs. 5 Johns. N. Y. 251. See the form, Tidd, Pract. Forms, 176.
In detinue, judgment for the plaintiff is in the alternative that he recover the goods or the value thereof if he cannot have the goods themselves, with damages for the detention, and costs. 1 Chitty, PI, 121, 122; 1 Dall. Penn. 458. See the form, Tidd, Pract. Forms, 187.

Executor. If judgment in any of the above personal actions is against the defendant in the character of executor, it confines the liability of the defendant for the debt or damages to the amount of assets of the testator in his hands, but leaves him personally liable for costs. See the form, Tidd, Pract. Forms, 168. If the executor defendant has pleaded plene administravit, judgment against him confines his liability to such amount of the assets as shall hereafter come to his hands. See the form, Tidd, Pract. Forms, 174. A general judgment for costs against an administrator plaintiff is against the estate only.
14. In dower, judgment for demandant is interlocutory in the first instance with the award of a writ of habere facias seisinam, and inquiry of damages, on the return of which final judgment is rendered for the value of the land detained, as ascertained by the jury, from the death of the husband to the suing out of the inquisition, and costs of suit. Sce the form, 3 Chitty, Plead. 7 th ed. 583-585.
In ejectment, judgment for plaintiff is final in the first instance, that he recover the term, together with the damages assessed by the jury, and the costs of suit, with award of the writ of habere facias possessionem, directing the sheriff to put him in possession. See the form, 3 Blackstone, Cumm. App. xii.; Tidd, Pract. Forms, 188.

In partition, judgment for plaintiff is also interlocutory in the first instance; quod partitio fiat, with award of the writ de partitione facienda, on the return of which final judgment is rendered,-_" therefore it is considered that the partition aforesaid be held firm and effectual furever," quod partitio facta firma et stabilis in perpetuam teneatur. Co. Litt. 169 ; 2 Bl. Rep. 1159. See the form, 2 Sellon, Pract. 319, 2d ed. 222.
15. In replevin. If the replevin is in the detinent, i.e. where the plaintiff declares that the chattels "were detained until replevied by the sheriff," judgment for plaintiff is that he recover the damages assessed by the jury for the taking and unjust detention, or for the detention only where the taking was justifiable, and also his costs. 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 133; Hammond, Nisi P. 488. If the replevin is in the detinet, i.e. where the plaintiff declares that the chattels taken are "yet detained," the jury in giving a verdict for plaintiff find, in addition to the above, the value of the chattels each separately; for the defendant will perhaps restore some, in which case the plaintiff is to recover the value of the remainder. Hammond, Nisi P. 489 ; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 159 b; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 130.

If the replevin be abated, the judgment is that the writ or plaint abate, and that the defendant, having avowed, have a return of the chattels.

If the plaintiff is nonsuited, the judgment for defendant, at common law, is that the chattels be restored to him, and that without his first assigning the object of the taking, because by abandoning his suit the plaintiff admits that he had no right to dispossess the defendant by prosecuting the replevin. The form of this judgment is simply "to have a return," pro retorno habendo, without adding the words "to hold irreplevisable." Hammond, Nisi P. 490. For the form of judgments of non-suit under the statutes 21 Hen. VIII. c. 19, and 17 Car. II. c. 7, see Hammond, Nisi P. 490, $491 ; 2$ Chitty, Plcad. 161 ; 8 Wentworth, Pl. 116; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 132; 1 Saund. 195, n. 3; 2 id. 286, n. 5 . In these cases the defendant has the option of taking his judgment pro retorno habendo at common law. 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 132; 1 Lev. 255 ; 3 Term, 349 .

When the avowant succeeds upon the merits, the common-law judgment is that he "have return irreplevisable;" for it is apparent that he is by law entitled to keep possession of the goods. 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 145; Hammond, Nisi P. 493; 1 Chitty, Pl. 162. For the form of judgment in such case under the statutes last mentioned, see Hammond, Nisi P. 494.
16. After verdict, the general form of judgment for plaintiff in actions on contracts sounding in damages, and in actions founded on torts unaccompanied with violence, is this. "Therefore it is considered that the said A $B$ do recover against the said $C D$ his damages aforesaid, and also __ for his said costs and charges by the court, now here adjudged of increase to the said A B, with his assent; which said damages, costs, and charges in the whole amount to -_. And the said C D in mercy, etc." In debt for a sum certain, the general form is, "-_ that the said A B do recover against the said CD his said debt, and also - for his damages which he has sustained, as well on occasion of detaining the said debt as for his costs and charges by him about his suit in this behalf expended by the court now here adjudged to the said AB, and with his assent. And the said C D in mercy, etc." In actions founded on torts accompanied with violence, the form of judgment for plaintiff is, "__ that the said A B do recover against the said CD his damages aforesaid, and also -_ for his said costs and charges by the court now here adjudged of increase to the said $A B$, and with his consent; which said damages, costs, and charges in the whole amount to - And let the said C D be taken, etc."
Final judgment for the defendant is in these words: "Therefore it is considered that the said A B take nothing by his writ, but that he be in mercy, etc. (or that he and his pledges to prosecute be in mercy, etc.), and that the said C D do go thereof without day, etc. And it is further considered -." Then follows the award of costs and of execution therefor. See Tidd, Pract. Forms, 189.
This is the general form of judgment for defendant, whether it arise upon interlocutory proceedings or upon verdict, and whatever be the form of action. This is sometimes called judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam. Stephen, Pl. 128.
17. The words " and the said —in mercy, etc.," or, as expressed in Latin, quod sit in misericordia pro falso clamore suo, were formerly an operative part of the judgment, it being an invariable rule of the common law that the party who lost his cause was punished by amercement for having unjustly asserted or resisted the claim. And on this account pledges of prosecution were required of the plaintilf before the return of the original, who were real and responsible persons and liable for these amercements. Butafterwards the amercements ceased to be oxacted, -perhaps because the payment of costs took their place, -and, this portion of the judgment becoming mere matter of form, the pledges returned were the fictitious names John Doe and Richard Roc. Bacon, Abr. Fines, etc. (C 1); 1 Ld. Raym. 273, 274.

The words " and let the said ——be baken," in Latin, capiatur pro fine, which occur above in the form of judgment in actions founded on torts accompanied with violence, were operative at common law, because formerly a defendant adjudged to have committed a civil injury with actual violence was obliged to pay a fine to the king for the breach of the peace implied in the act, and was liable to be arrested and imprisoned till the fine was paid. This was abolished by stat. 5 W. & M. c. 12; but the form was still retained in entering judgment against defendant in such actions. See Gould, Plead. 8238,82 ; Bacon, Abr. Fines, etc. (C 1); 1 Ld. Raym. 273, 274; Style, 346.

These are called, respectively, judgments of misericordia and of capiatur.
18. Judyments in other cases. On a plea in abatement, eithor party may demur to the pleading of his adversary, or they may join issue. On demurrer, judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendant have another day to plead in chiof, or, as it is commonly expressed, that he answer over: quod respondeat ouster; and judgment for defendant is that the writ be quashed: quod cassetur billa or breve. But if issue be joined, judgment for plaintiff is quod recuperet, that he recover his debt or damages, and not quod respondeat; judgment for defendant is the same as in the case of demurrer, that the writ be quashed. But the plaintiff may admit the validity of the plea in abatement, and may himself pray that his bill or writ may be quashed, quod cassetur billa or breve, in order tbat he may afterwards sue or exhibit a better one. Steph. Pl. 128, 130, 131; Lawes, Civ. Pl. See the form, Tidd, Pract. Forms, 195.

Judgment on demurrer in other cases, when for the plaintiff is interlocutory in assumpsit and actions sounding in damages, and recites that the pleading to which exception was taken by defendant appears sufficient in law, and that the plaintiff ought therefore to recover; but the amount of damages being unknown, a court of inquiry is awarded to ascertain them. See the form, Tidd, Pract. Forms, 181. In debt it is final in the first instance. See the form, id. pp. 181, 182. Judgment on demurrer when for the defendant is always final in the first instance, and is for costs only. See the form, id. 195, 196.
19. Judgment by default, whether by nil dicit or non sum informatus, is in these words, in assumpsit or other actions for damages, after stating the default: "wherefore the said A B ought to recover against the said CD his damages on occasion of the premises; but because it is unknown to the court, etc. now here what damages the said A B hath sustained by means of the premises, the sheriff is commanded, otc." Then follows the award of the writ of inquiry, on the return of which final judgment is signed. See the forms, Tidd, Pract. Forms, 165-169. In debt for a sum certain, as on a bond for the payment of a sum of money, the judgment on default is final in the first instance, no writ of inquiry being necessary. See the form, id. $169,170$.
Judgment by cognovit actionem is for the amount admitted to be due, with costs, as on a verdict. See the form, id. 176.
Judgmont of non pros. or non suit is final, and is for defendant's costs only, which is also the case with judgment on a discontinuance or nolle prosequi. See id. 189-195.
20. Of Matters of Practice. Of docketing the judgment. By the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20, all final judgments are required to be regularly docketed: that is, an abstract of the judgment is to be entered in a book called the judgment-docket. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 398. And in these states the same regulation prevails. Besides this, an index is required to be kept in England of judgments confessed upon warrant of attorney, and of certain other sorts of judgments. Id. 396, Shars. ed. n. (9). In most of the states this index is required to include all judgments. The effect of docketing the judgment is to notify all interested persons, including purchasers or incumbrancers of land upon which the judgment is a lien, and subsequent judgment creditors, of the existence and amount of the judgment. In Pennsylvania, the judgment index is for this purpose conclusive evidence of the amount of a judgment in favor of a purchaser of the land bound thereby, but not against him: if the amount indexed is less than the actual amount, the purchaser is not bound to go beyond the index; but if the amount indexed is too large, he may resort to the judgment-docket to correct the mistake. 1 Penn. St. 408.

And now, in England, judgments, in order to affect purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, must be registered in the common pleas, and renewed every five years. See $2 & 3$ Vict. c. 11, s. 5.

Of the time of entering the judgment. After verdict a brief interval is allowed to elapse before signing judgment, in order to give the defeated party an opportunity to apply for a new trial, or to move in arrest of judgment, if he is so disposed. This interval, in Englund, is four days. Smith, Actions, 150 In this country it is generally short; but, being regulated either by statute or by rules of court, it of course may vary in the different states, and even in different courts of the same state.
See Arrest of Jddgment; Assumpsit; Attachment; Conflict of Laws; Covenant; Debt; Detinue; Ejectment; Foreign Judgment; Lien; Replevin; Trespass; Trover.
JUDGMENT NISI. A judgment entered on the return of the nisi prins record with the postea indorsed, which will become absolute according to the terms of the "postea" unless the court out of which the nisi prius record proceeded shall, within the first fcur days of the following term, otherwise order.
Under the compulsory arbitration law of Pennsylvania, on filing the award of the arbitrators, judgment nisi is to be entered, which judgment is to be valid as if it had been rendered on a verdict of a jury, unless an appeal is entered within the time required by law.

JUDGMENT NOTE. A promissory note given in the usual form, and containing, in addition, a power of attorney to appear and confess judgment for the sum therein named.
It usually contains a great number of stipulations as to the time of confessing the judgment, 11 Ill. 623, against appeal and other remedies for setting the judgment aside, see 9 Johns. N. Y. 80́; 20 id . 296; 2 Ccw . N. Y. 465 ; 2 Penn. St. 501 ; 15 Ill. 356 ; and other conditions.

JUDGMENT PAPER. In English Practice. An incipitur of the pleadings, written on plain paper, upon which the master will sign judgment. 1 Archbold, Pract. 229, 306, 343.
JUDGMENT RECORD. ' In English Practice. A parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. 3 Stephen, Comm. 632. See Judgment Roll. In American practice, the record is signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk, all of which is necessary to suing out execution. Graham, Pract. 341.

JUDGMENT ROLL. In English Law.

 A record made of the issue roll (which see), which, after final judgment has been given in the cause, assumes this name. Stephen, Plead. 133; 3 Chitty, Stat. 514.JUDICATURE. The state of those employed in the administration of justice ; and in this sense it is nearly synonymous with judiciary. This term is also used to signify a tribunal; and sometimes it is employed to show the extent of jurisdiction: as, the judicature is upon writs of error, etc. Comyn, Dig. Parliament (L 1). And see Comyn, Dig. Courts (A).
JUDICES PEDANEOS (Lat.). In

Roman Law. Judges chosen by the parties.
Among the Romans, the pretors and other great magistrates did not themselves decide the actions which arose hetween private individuals: these were submitted to judges chosen by the parties, and these judges were called judices pedaneos. In choosing them, the plaintiff had the right to nominate, and the defendant to accept or reject those neminated. Heineecins, Antiq. lib. 4, tit. b. n. 40 ; 7 Tonllier, n. 353.

JUDICLAL ADMISSIONS. Admissions of the party which appear of record as the admissions of the party.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL. In English Law. A tribunal, composed of members of the privy council, which exercises the entire appellate jurisdiction of the queen in council, and also advises her majesty upon any matters which she may refer to it .
Its jurisdiction extends to cases in civil, ecclesiastical, and maritime law, in equity, and to many of the colonial cases, including cases arising under the Hindoo and Mohammedan law. It consists of eminent lawyers chiefly of judicial station. When questions arise which belong to any peculiar jurisdiction, as the ecclesiastical or civil, the attendance and aid of judges in that branch are required; and in case of questions under the IIIndoo or other peculiar systems of law, assistance is, in like manner, derived from these skilled in such proceedings.
Allegations and proofs are made before this committee, which thereupon reports to the queen in council, by whom judgment is finally rendered. Blackstone, Comm. Warren Abr. 220.
JUDICIAL CONFESSIONS. In Criminal Law. Those voluntarily nade before a magistrate, or in a court, in the due course of legal proceedings. A preliminary examination, taken in writing, by a magistrate lawfully authorized, pursuant to a statute, or the plea of guilty made in open court to an indictment, are sufficient to found a conviction upon them.
JUDICIAL CONVENTIONS. Agreements entered into in consequence of an order of court: as, for example, entering into a bond on taking out a writ of sequestration. 6 Mart. La. n. s. 494.
JUDICIAL DECISIONS. The opinions or determinations of the judges in causes before them. Hale, Hist. Crim. Law, 68; Willes, 666; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 122; 1 H. Blackst. 63; 5 Maule & S. 185 . See Dictum.
JUDICIAD MORTGAGE. In Louistana. The lien resulting from judgments, whether these be rendered on contested cases, or by default, whether they be final or provisional, in faver of the person obtaining them. La. Cir. Code, art. 3289.
JUDICIAL POWER. The authority vested in the judges.

The constitution of the United States declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish." Art. 3, s. 1.

By the constitutions of the several states, the judicial power is vested in such courts as are enumerated in each respectively. See the articles on the several states. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States to forbid or prevent the legislature of a state from exercising judicial functions, 2 Pet. 413; and judicial acts have occasionally been performed by the legislatures. 2 Root, Conn. 350 ; 3 Me. 334; 4 id. 140; 3 Dall. Penn, 386; 2 Pet. 660; 16 Mass. 328; 1 Miss. 258; 1 N. H. 199; 10 Yerg. Tenn. 59; 2 N. Chipm. Vt. 77. But a state legislature cannot annul the judgments nor determine the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, 5 Cranch, 115; 2 Dall. Penn. 410; nor authoritatively declare what the law is or has been, but what it shall be. 2 Cranch, 272 ; 4 Pick. Mass. 23; 3 Mart. La. 248; 4 id. 451 ; 6 id. 668; 9 id. 325 ; 10 id. 1; 3 Mart. La. к. s. 551; 5 id. 519. judicial proceedings. Proceedings relating to, practised in, or proceeding from, a court of justice.
2. Conclusive presumptions are made in favor of judicial proceedings. Thus, it is an undoubted rule of pleading that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior court but that which is so expressly alleged. 1 Saund. 74; 10 Q. B. 411, 455-459. So, also, it is presumed, with respect to such writs as are actually issued by the superior courts at ${ }^{\prime}$ W estminster, that they are duly issued, and in a case in which the courts have jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the face of them; and all such writs will of themselves, and without any further allegation, protect all officers and others in their aid acting under them; and this, too, although they are on the face of them irregular, or even void in form. 6 Coke, $54 a$; 10 Q. B. $411,455-459$.
3. The rule is well settled by the authorities, that words spoken in the course of judicial proceedings, though they are such as impute crime to another, and therefore if spoken elsewhere would import malice and be actionable in themselves, are not actionable if they are applicable and pertinent to the subject of inquiry. And this extends not merely to regular courts of justice, but to all inquiries before magistrates, referees, municipal, military, and ecclesiastical bodies; and they are only restrained by this rule, viz.: that they shall be made in good faith to courts or tribunals having jurisdiction of the subject, and power to bear and decide the matter of complaint or accusation, and that they are not resorted to as a cloak for private malice. The question, therefore, in such cases is, not whether the words spoken are true, not whether they are actionable in themselves, but whether they were spoken in the course of judicial proceedings, and whether they were relevant and pertinent to the cause or subject of inquiry. Heard, Lib. & S. $z_{z}$ 101,
102. The rule that no action will lie for words spoken or written in the course of any judicial proceeding, has bcen acted upon from the earliest times. In 4 Coke, 14 b , it was adjudged that if one exhibits articles to justices of the peace, "in this case the parties shall not have, for any matter contained in such articles, any action upon the case, for they have pursued the ordinary course of justice in such cases; and if actions should be permitted in such cases, those who have just cause for complaint would not dare to complain, for fear of infinite vexation." And it has been very recently decided that though an affidavit made in a judicial proceeding is false, slanderous, and malicious, no action will lie against the party making it. 18 C.B. 126 ; 4 Hurlst. & N. Exch. 568.
4. The general rule is subject to this qualification: that in all cases where the object or occasion of the words or writing is redress for an alleged wrong, or a proceeding in a tribunal or befure some individual or associated body of men, such tribunal, individual, or body must be vested with authority to render judgment or make a decision in the case, or to entertain the proceedings, in order to give them the protection of privileged communications. This qualification of the rule runs through all the cases where the question is involved. Heard, Lib. & S. 8104.
JUDICIAL SALE. A sale, by authority of some competent tribunal, by an officer authorized by law for the purpose.
The officer who makes the sale conveys all the rights of the defendant, or other person against whom the process has been issued, in the property sold. Under such a sale there is no warranty, either express or implied, of the thing sold. 9 Wheat. 616. When real estate is sold by the sheriff or marshal, the sale is subject to the confirmation of the court, or it may be set aside. See 4 Wash. C. C. 45 , 322. See Tax Sale.

JUDICIAL WRITS. In English Practice. The capias and all other writs subeequent to the original writ not issuing out of chancery, but from the court to which the original was returnable.

Being. grounded on what had passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's rcturn, they are called judicial writs, in contradistiuction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called original writs. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 282.
JUDICIARY. That which is done while administering justice; the judges taken collectively: as, the liberties of the people are secured by a wise and independent judiciary. See Courts; 3 Story, Cunst. b. 3, c. 38.

JUDICIUM DEEI (Lat. the judgment or decision of God).
In Oid English Law. A term applied to trials by ordeal; for, in all trials of this sort, God was thought to interfere in favor of the innocent, and so decide the canse. These trials are now all abolished.

JUICIO DE APEO. In Spanish Law.

The decree of a competent tribunal directing the determining and marking the boundaries of lands or estates.

JUICIO DE CONCURSO DE ACREEDORES. In Spanish Law. The decree obtained by a debtor against his creditors, or by the creditors against their debtor, for the payment of the amounts due, according to the respective rank of each creditor, when the property of the debtor is insufficient to pay the whole of his liabilities.

JUNIOR. Younger. This has been held to be no part of a man's name, but an addition by use, and a convenient distinction between a father and son of the same name. 10 Paige, Ch. N. Y. $170 ; 7$ Johns. N. Y. 549; 2 Caines, N. Y. 164 ; 1 Pick. Mass. 388; 15 id. 7; 17 id. 200; 3 Metc. Mass. 330.

Any matter that distinguishes persons renders the addition of junior or senior unnecessary. 1 Mod. Ent. 35; Salk. 7. But if father and son have both the same name, the father shall be primâ facie intended, if junior be not added, or some other matter of distinction. Salk. 7 ; 6 Coke, 20 ; 11 id. 39 ; Hob. 330 . If father and son have the same name and addition, and the former sue the latter, the writ is abatable unless the son have the further addition of junior, or the younger. But if the father be the defendant and the son the plaintiff, there is no need of the further addition of senior, or the elder, to the name of the father. 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 187 ; Laws of Women, 380.

JUNIPERUS SABINA (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. 'Ihis plant is commonly called savin.

It is used for lawful purposes in medicine, but too frequently for the criminal purpose of producing abortion, generally endangering the life of the woman. It is nsually administered in powder or oil. The dose of oil for lawful purposes, for a grown person, is from two to four drops. Parr, Med. Dict. Sabina. Foderé mentions a case where a large dose of powdered savin had been administered to an ignorant girl in the seventh month of her pregnancy, which had no effect on the foetus. It was, however, near taking the life of the girl. Foderé, tome iv. p. 431 . Given in sufficiently large doses, four or six grains, in the form of powder, kills a dog in a few hours; and even its insertion into a wound has the same effect. 3 Orfila, Traité des Poisons, 42. For a form of indictment for administering savin to a woman quick with child, see 3 Chitty, Crim. Law, 798. See 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 316.

JURA FISCAIIA (Lat.). Rights of the exchequer. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 45.

JURA PERSONARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Rights which belong to men in their different characters or rclations, as father, apprentice, citizen, etc. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 122, n.

JURA IN RE (Lat.). In Clyil Law. Rights in a thing, as opposed to rights to a thing (jura ad rem). Rights in a thing which are not gone upon loss of possession, and which give a right to an action in rem against whoever has the possession. These rights are of tour kinds: dominium, hereditas, servitus, pignus. Heineccins, Elem. Jur. Civ. & 333. See Jus in Re.

JURA REGAIIA (Lat.). Royal rights. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 117, 119, 240 ; 3 id. 45 . Sce $21 & 22$ Vict. c. 45.

JURAMENTH CORPORALES (Lat.). Corpural oaths. These oaths are so called because the party making oath must touch the Bible, or other thing, by which he swears.

JURAMENTUM CALUMNIA (Lat. oath of calumny). In Civil and Canon Law. An oath required of plaintiff and defendant, whether the parties themselves insist on it or not, that they are not influenced in seeking their right by malice, but believe their cause to he just. It was also required of the attorneys and procurators of the parties. Called, also, jusjurandum or sacramentum calumnice. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.; Clerke, Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 42.

JURAMENTUM JUDICIALE (Lat.). In Civil Law. An oath which the judge, of his own accord, defers to either of the parties.

It is of two kinds: first, that which the judge defers for the decision of the cause, and which is understood by the general name juramentum judiciale, and is sometimes called suppletory oath, juramentum suppletorium; second, that which the judge defers in order to fix and determine the amount of the condemnation which he ought to pronounce, and which is called juramentum in litem. Pothier, Obl. p. 4, c. 3, s. 3, art. 3.

JURAT. In Practice. That part of an affidavit where the officer certifies that the same was "sworn" before him.
The jurat is usually in the following form, viz.: "Sworn and subecrihed before me, on the - day of -, 1842. J. P., justice of the peace."
In some cases it hae been holden that it was essential that the officer ehould eign the jurat, and that it should contain hie addition and official deecription. 3 Cainee, N. Y. 128. But see 2 Wend. N.Y. 283; 6 id. 543 ; 12 id. 223 ; 2 Cow. N. Y. 552; 2 Johns. N. Y. 479.

An officer in some English corporations, whose duties are similar to those of aldermen in others. Stat. 1 Edw. IV.; 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 30 ; 13 Edw. T. c. 26.

JURATA (Lat.). In Old English Law. A jury of twelve men sworn. Especially, a jury of the common law, as distinguished from the assiza, or jury established or re-established by stat. Hen. II.
The jurata, or common-law jury, was a jury cslled in to try the cause, upon the prayer of the partiee themselves, in cases where a jury was not given hy statute Hen. II., and es the jury was not given under the statute of Henry II., the writ of attaint provided in that statute would not be againet a jurata for false verdict. It wae common for the parties to a cause to request that the cause might be decided by the assiza, eitting as a jurata, in order to save trouble of eummoning a new jury, in which case "cadit absiza et vertitur in juratam," and the oause is said to be decided non in modum assizer, but in modum jurate. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 335, 336 ; Glanville, lih. 13, o. 20; Bracton, lib. 3, 0. 30. But this distinction has been long obsolete.

Jurate were divided into: first, jurata dilatoria, which inquires out offenoes against the law, and presents their names, together with their offences, to the judge, and whioh is of two kinds, major and minor, aocording to the extent of its jurisdiotion; second, jurata judicaria, whioh gives verdict as to the matter of fact in issue, and is of two kinds, civilis, in oivil causes, and criminalis, in oriminal causes. DuCange.

A clause in nisi prius record called the jury clause, so named from the word jurata, with which its Latin form begins. This entry, juratur ponitur in respectu, is abolished. Com. Law Proc. Act, 1852, है 104; Wharton, Law Lex. 2 d Lond. ed.; 9 Coke, 32; 59 Geo. III. c. 46 ; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 342. Such trials were usually held + in churches, in presence of bishops, priests, and secular judges, after three days' fasting, confession, communion, etc. DuCange.

A certificate placed at the bottom of an affidarit, declaring that the witness has been sworn or affirmed to the trath of the facts therein alleged. Its usual form is, "Sworn (or affirmed) before me, the --day of -18-." The jurat.

JURATORY CAOTION. A security sometimes taken in Scotch proceedings, when no better can be had, viz: an inveutory of effects given up upon oath, and assigned in security of the sums which may be found due. Bell, Dict.

JURE PROPINQUITATIS (Lat.). By right of relationship. Coke, Litt. 10 b .

JURIDICAL. Relating to administration of justice, or office of a judge. Webster, Dict.
2. Regular: done in conformity to the laws of the country and the practice which is there observed.

JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat.). Of right and by law. A presumption is said to be juriset de jure when it is conclusive, i.e. when no evidence will be admitted to rebut it, in contradistinction to a presumption, which is simply juris, i.e. rebuttable by evidence. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 8 15, note; Wills, Circ. Ev. 29 ; Bcst, Presump. 20, 817 ; Best, Ev. 43, 848.

JURIS ET SEISIN $\mathrm{A}_{\mathrm{A}}$ CONJUNCTIO
(Lat.). The union of seisin, or possession, and the right of possession, forming a completetitle. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 199, 311.

JURISCONSULTUS (Lat. skilled in the law). In Civil Law. A person who has such knowledge of the laws and customs which prevail in a state as to he able to adyise, act, and to secure a person in his dealings. Cicero.
The early jurisconsults gave their opinions gratuitonsly, and were also employed in drawing ap written documents. From Augustus to Adrian, only those allowed by the emperor could be juris-consults: before and after those emperors, any could be jurisconsults who chose. If their opinion was unanimous, it had the force of law ; if not, tha practor could follow which opinion he chosa. Vicat, Voo. Jur. Utr.

There were two sects of jurisconsults at Rome, the Proculeians and Labinians. The former wers foundad by Labeo, and were in favor of innovation; the latter by Capito, and held to the received doctrines. Cushing, Int. Rom. Law, & $_{8} 5,6$.
JURISDICTION (Lat. jus, law, dicere, to say). The authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes. Power to hear and determine a cause. 3 Ohio, 494 ; 6 Pet. 591. It includes power to enforee the execution of what is decreed. 9 Johns. N. Y. 239; 3 Metc. Mass. 460; Thach. Crim. Cas. 202.
Appellate jurisdiction is that given by appeal from the judgment of another court.
Assistant jurisdiction is that afforded by a court of chancery in aid of a court of law: as, for example, by a bill of discovery, or for the perpetuation of testimony, and the like.
Jurisdiction of the cause is the power over the subject-matter given by the laws of the sovereignty in which the tribunal exists.

Civil jurisdiction is that which exists when the subject-matter is not of a criminal nature.

Criminal jurisdiction is that which exists for the punishment of crimes.

Concurrent jurisdiction is that which is possessed over the same cause at the same time by two or more separate tribunals.
Exclusive jurisdiction is that which gives to one tribunal sole power to try the cause.

General jurisdiction is that which extends to a great variety of matters.

Limited jurisdiction (called, also, special and inferior) is that which extends only to certain specified causes.

Original jurisdiction is that bestowed upon a tribunal in the first instance.
Jurisdiction of the person is that obtained by the appearance of the defendant before the tribunal. 9 Mass. 462.
Territorial jurisdiction is the power of the tribunal considered with reference to the territory within which it is to be exercised. 9 Mass. 462.
2. Jurisdiction. is given by the law, 11 Barb. N. Y. 309; 22 id. 323; 3 Tex. 157, and cannot be conferred by consent of the parties. 5 Mich. 331; 2 Greene, Iowa, 374; 3 Iowa, 470; 23 Conn. 112; 2 Ohio St. 223; 11 Ga. 453; 23 Ala. N. s. 155 ; 34 Me . 223; 4 Cush. Mass. 27; 4 Gilm. Va. 131; 6 Ired. No. C. 139; 4 Yerg. Tenn. 579 ; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 280; 12 Miss. 549 ; see 17 Mo. 258; but a privilege defeating jurisdiction may be waived if the court has jurisdiction over the suljectmatter. 4 Ga .47 ; 11 id. 453 ; 14 id. 589 ; 6 Tex. 379; 13 Ill. 432; 1 Iowa, 94 ; 1 Barb. 3. Jurisdiction given by the law of the sovereignty of the tribunal is held sufficient everywhere, at least as to all property within the sovereignty, 2 Blatchf. C. C. 427 ; 10

Rich. Eq. So. C. 19 ; 27 Mo. 594 ; 1 R. I. 285, and as to persons of whom process is actually and personally served within the territorial limits of jurisdiction, or who appear and by their pleadings admit jurisdiction. 6 Tex. 275 ; 4 N. Y. 375 ; 8 Ga. 83. See 11 Barb. 309. But the appearance of a person on whom no personal service of process has been made, merely to object to the jurisdiction, is not such an adnission. 37 N. H. 9 ; 9 Mass. 462; Hard. Ky. 96. And see 2 Sandf. N. Y. 717. Jurisdiction must be either of the cause, which is acquired by exercising powers conferred by law over property within the territorial limits of the sovereignty, or of the person, which is acquired by actual service of process or personal appearance of the defendant. The question as to the possession of the former is to be determined according to the law of the sovereignty, Dav. Dist. Ct. 407; of the latter, as a simple question of fact. See Conflict of Laws; Foreign Judgments.
4. A court of general jurisdiction is presumed to be acting within its jurisdiction till the contrary is shown. 10 Ga .371 ; 10 Barb . N. Y. 97 ; 3 Ill. 269 ; 13 id. 432 ; 15 Vt. $46 ; 2$ Dev. No. C. $431 ; 4$ id. 305. A court of linnited jurisdiction, or a court acting under special powers, has only the jurisdiction expressly delegated, 27 Ala. n. s. 291 ; 32 id. 227 ; 26 Mo. 65 ; 1 Dougl. Mich. 384 ; 7 Hill, Su. C. 39 ; and it must appear from the record that its acts are within its jurisdiction, 5 Harr. Del. 387 ; 2 Harr. N. J. 25 ; 3 Green, N. J. 57; 1 Dutch. N. J. 554; 2 Zabr. N. J. 356, 396; 2 Ill. 554; 20 id. 286 ; 27 Mo. 101; 1 Hempst. Ark. 423; 22 Barb. N. C.C.36. See 1 Salk. 414; Bacon, Abr. Courts (C, D).

Where one of two courts of concurrent jurisdiction has taken cognizance of a cause, the other will not entertain jurisdiction of the same cause. 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 212; 8 Ohio St. 599 ; 16 Ohio, 373 ; 27 Vt. 518; 28id. 470 ; 25 Barb. N. Y. 513 ; 8 Md. 254; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 42; 4 Tex. 242; 19 Ala. n. s. 438 ; 1 Fla. 198; 2 Murph. No. C. 195; 6 McLean, C. C. 355.
5. Any act of a tribunal beyond its jurisdiction is null and void, and of no effect whatever, 33 Me. 414; 13 Ill. 432 ; 21 Barb. N. Y. 9 ; 26 N. H. 232, whether without its territorial jurisdiction, 21 How . 506 ; 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 218; 15 Ga. 457, or beyond its powers. 22 Barb. N. Y. 271 ; 13 Ill. 432; 1 Strobh. So.C. 1 ; 1 Dougl. Mich. 390 ; 5 T.B. Monr. Ky. 261 ; 16 Vt .246 . Want of jurisdiction may be taken advantage of by plea in abatement, 18 Ill. 292; 3 Johns. N. Y. 105 ; 20 How. 541; see 6 Fla. 724, and must be taken advantage of before making any plea to the merits, if at all, when it arises from formal defects in the process, or when the want is of jurisdiction over the person. 7 Cal. 584; 19 Ark. 241 ; 27 id. 340; 28 Mo. 319 ; 22 Barb. N. Y. 323;

6 Cush. Mass. 560 ; 13 Ga .318 ; 20 How. 541. See 2 R. I. 450 ; 30 Ala. N. s. 62 . But where the cause of action is not within the jurisdiction granted by law to the tribunal, it will dismiss the suit at any time when the fact is brought to its notice. 22 Barb. N. Y. 271 ; 23 Conn. 172; 2 Ohio St. 26 ; 5 T. B. Monr. Ky. 261 ; 13 Vt. 175; 4 Ill. 133.

Courts of dernier resort are conclusive judges of their own jurisdiction. 1 Park. Crim. N. Y. 360; 1 Bail. So. C. 294.

JURISDICTION CLAUSE. In Equity Practice. That part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity and tend to the injury of the plaintiff, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the jurisdiction clause. Mitford, Eq. Plead. Jeremy ed. 43.

This clause is unnecessary; for if the court appear from the bill to have jurisdiction, the bill will be sustained without this clause; and if the court have not jurisdiction, the bill will be dismissed though the clause may be inserted. Story, Eq. Plead. & 34.

JURISPRUDENCE. The science of the law. The practical science of giving a wise intorpretation to the laws and making a just application of them to all cases as they arise.

By science, in the first definition, is understood that connection of truths which is founded on principles either evident in themselves or capable of demonstration,-a collection of truths of the same kind, arranged in methodical order. In the latter sense, it is the babit of judging the same questions in the same manner, and by this course of judgments forming precedents. 1 Aylife, Pand. 3; Toullier, Droit. Civ. Fr. tit. prél. s. 1, n. 1, 12, 99; Merlin, Répert.; 19 Am. Jur. 3.

JURIST. One versed in the science of the law. One skilled in the civil law. One skilled in the law of nations.

JURO. In Spanish Law. A certain pension granted by the king on the public revenues, and more especially on the saltworks, by favor, either in consideration of meritorious services or in return for money loaned the government or obtained by it through forced loans. It is a portion of the yearly revenue of the state, assigned as a rightful indemnity, either in perpetuity or as an annuity.

JUROR (Lat. juro, to swear). A man who is sworn or affirmed to serve on a jury.

JURY (Lat. jurata, sworn). In Practice. A body of men who are sworn to declare the facts of a case as they are delivered from the evidence placed before them.

The origin of this venerable institution of the common law is lost in the obscurity of the middle ages. Antiquarians trace it back to an early period of English history; but, if known to the Saxons, it must have existed in a very crude form, and may have been derived to them from the mode of administering justice by the peers of litigant psrties, under the feudal institutions of France, Germany, and the other northern nations of Europe. The ancient ordeals of red-hot iron and boiling water, praotised by the Anglo-Saxons to test the innocence of a party accused of crime, gradually gave way to the wager of battle, in the days of the Normans; while this latter mode of trial disappeared in civil cases in the thirteenth century, when Henry II. introduced into the assizes a trial by jury. It is referred to in Magna Charta as an institution existing in England at that time; and its subsequent history is well known. See Grand Assize; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 349 ; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 23, 84 ; Glanville, c. 9 ; Bracton, 155.

Trial by jury is guaranteed by the constitution of the United States in all criminal cases except upon impeachments, and in all suits at common law where the subject-matter of the controversy exceeds twenty dollars in value. The right to such a trial is also asserted in many of onr state constitutions.

A common jury is one drawn in the usual and regular manner.

A grand jury is a body organized for certain preliminary purposes.

A jury de medietate linguce is one composed half of aliens and half of denizens.

Such juries might formerly be claimed, both in oivil and criminal cases, where the party claiming the privilege was an alien born, by virtue of 28 Edw. III. c. 13. And see 8 Hen. VI. c. 29; 3 Geo. III. c. 25 , by which latter statute the right is thought to be tsken away in civil cases. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. $360 ; 4$ id. 352. A provision of a similar nature, providing for a jury onehalf of the nationality of the party claiming the privilcge where he is a forcigner, exists in some of the states of the United States.

A petit jury is a jury who try the question in issue and pass inally upon the truth of the facts in dispute. The term jury is ordinarily applied to this body distinctively.

A special jury is one selected by the assistance of the parties.

This is granted in some cases upon motion and cause shown, under various locsl provisions. See 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 406. The method at common law was for the officer to return the names of forty-eight priucipal freeholders to the prothonotary or proper officer. The attorneys of the respective parties, being present, strike off each twelve names, and from the remaining twenty-four the jury is selected. A similar course is pursued in those states where such juries are allowed. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 357.

A struck jury is a special jury. See 4 Zabr. N. J. 843.
2. The number of jurors must be twelve; and it is held that the term jury in a constitution imports, ex vi terminn, twelve men. 6 Metc. Mass. 231 ; 4 Ohio St. 177 ; 2 Wisc. 22 ; 3 id. 219 ; 12 N. Y. 190 ; 13 id. 427.

Qualifications of jurors. Jurors must possess the qualifications which may be prescribed by statute, must be free from any bias caused by relationship to the parties or interest in the matter in dispute, and in criminal cases must not have formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. See Chalr Lenge.

The selection of jurors is to be made impartially; and elahorate provisions are made to secure this impartiality. In general, a sufficient number are selected, from among the qualified citizens of the county or district, by the sheriff, or similar executive officer of the court, and, in case of his disqualification, by the coroner, or, in some cases, by still other designated persons. See Elisus. From among these the requisite number is selected at the time of trial, to whom objection may be made by the parties. See Challenge.
3. The province of the jury is to determine the truth of the facts in dispute in civil cases, and the guilt or innocence of the person accused in criminal cases. See Charge. If they go beyond their province, their verdict may be set aside. 4 Maule & S. 192; 3 Barnew. & C. 357 ; 2 Price, Exch. 282; 4 Bingh. 195; 2 Cow. N. Y. 479 ; 10 Mass. 39.

Duties and privileges of. Qualified persons may be compelled to serve as jurors under penalties prescribed by law. They are exempt from arrest in certain cases. See Privilege. They are liable to punishment for misconduct in some cases.

Consult Edwards, Forsyth, Ingersoll, on Juries; 1 Kent, Comm. 10th ed. 623, 640.

JURY BOX. A place set apart for the jury to sit in during the trial of a cause.

JURY LIST. A paper containing the names of jurors impanelled to try a cause, or it contains the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

JURYMAN. A juror; one who is impanelled on a jury. Webster, Dict.

JURY PROCESS. In Practice. The writs for summoning a jury, viz.: in England, venire juratores facias, and distringas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum. These writs are now abolished, and jurors are summoned by precept. 1 Chitty, Archb. Prac. by Prent. 344; Com. Law Proc. Act, 1852, $8 \%$ 104, 105 ; 3 Chitty, Stat. 519.

JURY WOMEN. A jury of women is given in two cases: viz.. on writ de ventre inspiciendo, in which case the jury is made up of men and women, but the search is made hy the latter, 1 Mad. Ch. 11; 2 P. Will. 591 ; and where pregnancy is pleaded by condemned criminal in delay of execution, in which case a jury of twelve discreet women is formed, and on their returning a verdict of "enseinte" the execution is delayed till birth, and sometimes the punishment commuted to perpetual exile. But if the criminal be priviment enseinte, and not quick, there is no respite. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 412. As to time of quickening, see 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 229.

JUS (Lat.). Law; right; equity. Story, Eq. Jur. ${ }_{2} 1$.

JUS ABUTENDI (Lat.). The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to abuse property, or having full dominion over property. 3 Toullier, n. 86.
JUS ACCRESCENDI (Lat.). Theright of survivorship.

At common law, when one of several joint tenants died, the entire tenancy or estate went to the survipors, and so on to the last survivor, who took an estate of inheritance. This right, except in estates held in trust, has been abolished hy statute in Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Mississippi, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia, Griffin, Reg.; 1 Hill, Abr. 439, 440; in Connecticut, 1 Root, Conn. 48; I'Swift, Dig. 102. In Louisiana, this right was never recognized. See 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 192; 2 Caines, Cas. N. Y. 326; 3 Vt. 543 ; 6 T. B. Monr. Ky. 15; Estate in Common; Estate in Jont Tenancy.

JUS AQU EDDCTUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another, either from its source or from any other place.

Its privilege may be limited as to the time when it may be exercised. If the source fails, the servitude ceases, but revives when the water returns. If the water rises in, or naturally flows through, the land, its proprietor cannot by any grant divert it so as to prevent it flowing to the land below. 2 Rolle, Abr. 140, 1. 25 ; Lois des Bât. part 1, c. 3, s. 1, art. 1. But if it had been brought into his land by artificial means, it seems it would be strictly his property, and that it would be in his power to grant it. Dig. 8.3.1. 10; 3 Burge, Confl. of Laws, 417. See River; Water-Course; Washburn, Easements.

JUS CIVILE (Lat.). In Roman Law. The private law, in contradistinction to the public law, or jus gentium. 1 Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 1 , $\frac{8}{4} 1$.

JUS CIVITATIS (Lat.). In Roman Law. The collection of laws which are to be observed among all the members of a nation. It is opposed to jus gentium, which is the law which regulates the affairs of nations among themselves. 2 Lepage, El. du Dr. c. 5 , page 1.

JUS CLOACZE (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which requires the party who is subject to it to permit his neighbor to conduct the waters which fall on his grounds over those of the servient estate.

JUS DARE (Lat.). To give or to make the law. Jus dare belongs to the legislature; jus dicere, to the judge.

JUS DELIBERANDI (Lat.). The right of deliberating given to the heir, in those countries where the heir may have beneft of inventory, ( $q . v$. ), in which to consider whether he will accept or renounce the succession.

In Louisiana, he is allowed ten days before he is required to make his election. La. Civ. Code, art. 1028.

JUS DICERE (Lat.). To declare the law. It is the province of the court $j$ us dicere (to declare what the law is).

JUS DISPONENDI (Lat.). The right to dispuse of a thing.

JUS DUPLICATUM (Lat. double right). When a man has the possession as well as the property of any thing, he is said to have a double right, jus duplicatum. Bracton, 1. 4, tr. 4, c. 4; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 199.

JUS FECIALE (Lat.). In Roman

Law. That species of international law which had its fuundation in the religious belief of different nations: such as the international law which now exists among the Christian people of Europe. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 2, 811 .

JUS FIDUCIARUM (Lat.) In Civil Law. A right to something held in trust: for this there was a remedy in conscience. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 328.

JUS GENTIUM (Lat.). The law of nations. Although the Romans used these words in the sense we attach to law of nations, yet among them the sense was much more extended. Falck, Encyc. Jur. 102, n. 42.

Modern writers have made a distinction between the laws of nations which have for their object the conflict between the laws of different nations, which is called jus gentium privatum, or private international law, and those laws of nations which regulate those matters which nations, as such, have with each other, which is denominated jus gentium publicum, or public international law. Folix, Droit Intern. Privé, n. 14. See International Law.

JUS GL_ADII (Lat. theright of the sword). Supreme jurisdiction. The right to absolve from or condemn a man to death.

JUS HABENDI (Lat.). The right to have a thing.

JUS INCOGNITUM (Lat.). An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws, which, as Bacon truly observes, are unjust; for the law to be just must give warning before it strikes. Bacon, Aph. 8, s. 1 ; Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, 33. But until it has become obsolete no custom can prevail against it. See Obsolete.
JUS LEGITIMOM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A legal right which might have been enforced by due course of law. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 328.

JUS MARITI (Lat.). In Scotch Law. The right of the husband to administer, during the marriage, his wife's goods and the rents of her heritage.
In the common law, by jus mariti is understood the rights of the busband, as jus mariti cannot attach upon a bequest to the wife, although given during coverture, until the executor has assented to the legacy. 1 Bail. Eq. So. C. 214.

JUS MERUM (Lat.). A simple or bare right; a right to property in land, without possession or the right of possession.

JUS PATRONATUS (Lat.). In Eccleaiastioal Law. A commission from the bishop, directed usually to his ohancellor and others of competent learning, who are required to summon a jury, composed of six clergymen and six laymen, to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 246.

JUS PERSONARUM (Lat.). The right of persons. See Jura Personarum.
JUS PRECARIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 328.

JUS POSTLIMINII (Lat.). The right to claim property after recapture. See Postliminy; Marshall, Ins. 573; 1 Kent, Comm. 108; Dane, Abr. Index.

JUS PROJICIENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude by which the owner of a building has a right of projecting a part of his building towards the adjoining house, without resting on the latter. It is extended merely over the ground. Dig. 50 . 16. 242; 8. 2. 25 ; 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PROTEGENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude: it is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house. Dig. 50. 16.242.1; 8. 2. 25; 8.5.8.5.
JUS QUæSITUM (Lat.). A right to ask or recover: for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quasitum in the obligee. 1 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 323.
JUS IN RE (Lat.). A right which belongs to a person, immediately and absolutely, in a thing, and which is the same against the whole world,-idem erga omnes.
JUSRELICTE (Lat.). In Scotch Law. The right of a wife, after her husband's death, to a third of movables if there be children, and to one-half if there be none.
JUS AD REM (Lat.). A right which belongs to a person only mediately and relatively, and has for its foundation an obligation incurred by a particular person.

The jus in re, by the effect of ite very dature, is independent and absolute, and is exercised per se ipsum, by applying it to its objeot; but the jus ad rem ia the fuculty of demanding and obtaining the performance of some obligation by which another is bound to me ad aliquid clandum, vel faciendum, vel prastandum. Thua, if I have the ownership of a horse, the usufruct of a flock of eheep, the right of habitation of a house, a right of way over your land, etc., my right in the horse, in the flock of sheep, in the house, or the land, belongs to me directly, and without any intermediary; it belongs to me absolutely, and independently of any particular relation with another person; $I$ am in direct and immediate relation with the thing itself which forms the object of my right, with out reference to any other relation. This constitutes a jus in re. If, on the other hand, the horse is lent to me hy you, or if I have a claim against you for a thousand dollars, my right to the horse or to the sum of money exiets only relatively, and can only be exerciaed through you; my relation to the object of the right is mediate, and is the result of the immediate relation of debtor and creditor existing between you and me. This is a jus ad rem. Every jus in re, or real right, may be vindicated hy the actio in rem against him who is in poesession of the thing, or against any one who conteste the right. It has heen eaid that the words jus in re of the civil law convey the same idea as thing in posesssion at common law. This is an error, ariaing from a confueion of ideas as to the distinctive characters of the two classes of righte. Nearly all the common-law writers aeem to take it for granted that by the jus in re is understood the title or property in a thing in the posseesion of the owner; and that by the jua ad rem is meant the title or property in a thing not in the possersion of the owner.

But it is obvious that possegsion is not one of the elements constituting the jus in re: although possession is generally, but not always, one of the incidents of this right, yet the loss of possession does not exercise the alightest iofluence on the character of the right itself, unless it should continue for a sufficient length of time to destroy the right altogether by presoription. In many inatances the jus in re is not accompanied by posseasion at all: the usuary is not entitled to the possession of the thing subject to his use; still, he has a jus in re. So with regard to the right of way, etc. See Dominium.
A mortgage is coosidered by most writers as a jus in re; hut it is clear that it is a jus ad rem: it is granted for the sole purpose of aeouring the payment of a debt or the fulfillment of some other peraonal obligation. In other worda, it is an accessory to a principal obligation and corresponding right: it can have no separate and independent existence. The immovable on which I have a mortgage is not the object of the right, as in the case of the horse of which I am the owner, or the house of which I have the right of habitation, etc. : the true object of my right is the sum of money due to me, the payment of which I may enforce by obtainiug a decree for the ale of the property mortgaged. 2 Marcadé, 350 et seq.
JUS RERUM (Lat.). The right of things. Its principal object is to ascertain how far a person can have a permanent dominion over things, and how that dominion is acquired. See Blackstone, Comm.
JUS STRICTUM (Lat.). A Latin phrase, which significs law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

JUS UTENDI (Lat.). The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi. 3 Toullier, n. 86.

JUSTICE. The constant and perpetual disposition to render every man his due. Justinian, Inst. b. 1, tit. 1; Coke, 2d Inst. 56. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toullier, Droit Civ. Fr. tit. prél. n. 5.

Commutative justice is that virtue whose ohject it is to render to every one what belongs to him, as nearly as may be, or that which governs contracts. To render commutative justice, the judge must make an equality between the parties, that no one may be a gainer by another's loss.

Distributive justice is that virtue whose object it is to distribute rewards and punishments to each one according to his merits, observing a just proportion by comparing one person or fact with another, so that neither equal persons have unequal things nor unequal persons things equal. Tr. of Eq. 3; and Toullier's learned note, Droit Civ. Fr. tit. prél. n. 7, note.
In the moat extensive sense of the word, it differs little from virtue; for it includes within itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is, that that which considered positively and in itself is called virtue, when conaidered relatively and with respect to others has the name of justice. But justice, heing in iteelf a part of virtue, is confined to things simply good or evil, and consista in a man's taking such a proportion of them as he ought.
Toullier expoaes the want of utility and exart. nese in this division of distributive and commutative justice, adopted in the compendium or abridg-ments of the ancient doctors, and prefers the division of iuternal and external justice,-the first being a conformity of our will, and the latter a conformity of our actions, to the law, their union making perfect justics. Exterior justice is the object of jurisprudence; interior justics is the objeot of morality. Droit Civ. Fr. tit. prel, n. 6 et 7.

According to the Frederician Code, part 1, book 1, tit. 2, s. 27, justios oonsists simply in letting every one enjoy the rights which he has acquired in virtue of ths laws. And, as this definition includes all the other rulss of right, there is properly hot one single general rule of right, namely: Give every one his own.

In Norman French. Amenable to justice. Kellam, Dict.
In Feudal Law. Feudal jurisdiction, divided into high (alta justitia), and low, (simplex, inferior justitia), the former being a jurisdiction over matters of life and limb, the latter over smaller canses. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 26 ; DuCange. Sometimes high, low, and middle justice or jurisdiction were distinguished.

Ân assessment, DuCange; also, a judicial fine. DuCange.

At Common Law. A title given in England and America to judges of common-law courts, being a trauslation of justitia, which was anciently applied to common-law judges, while judex was applied to ecclesiastical judges and others; e.g. judex fiscalis. Leges IIen. I. $z_{2}$ 24, 63 ; Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Index; Cuke, Litt. 71 b .

The judges of king's bench and common pleas, and the judges of almost all the supreme courts in the United States, are properly styled "justices."

The term justice is also applied to the lowest judicial officers: e.g. a trial justice; a justice of the peace.

JUSTICE AYRES. In Scotch Law. The circuits through the kingdom made for the distribution of justice. Erskine, Inst. 1. 3. 25.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. A public officer invested with judicial powers for the parpose of preventing breaches of the peace and bringing to punishment those who have violated the law.
2. These officers, under the constitution of the United States and some of the states, are appointed by the excoutive; in others, they are elected by the people and commissioned by the cxecutive. In some states they hold their office during good behavior ; in others, for a limited period.
3. At common law, justices of the peace have a donble power in relation to the arrest of wrong-docrs: when a felony or breach of the peace has been committed in their presence, they may personally arrest the offender, or command others to do so, and, in order to prevent the riotous consequencos of a tumnltuous assembly, they may command others to arrest affrayers when the affray has been committed in their presence. If a magistrate be not present when a crime is committed, befcre he can take a step to arrest the offender an oath or affirmation must be made, by some person cognizant of the fact, that the offence has been committed, and that the person charged is the offender or there is probable cause to believe that he has committed the offence.
4. The constitution of the United States directs that "no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation." Amendm. IV. After his arrest, the person charged is brought before the justice of the peace, and after hearing he is discharged, held to bail to answer to the complaint, or, for want of bail, committed to prison.
5. In some, perhaps all, the United States, justices of the peace have jurisdiction in civil cases given to them by local regulations. In Ponnsylvania, their jurisdiction in cases of contracts, express or implied, extends to one hundred dollars.

JUSTICES COURTS. In American Law. Inferior tribunals, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal. There are courts so called in the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and probably other states.

JUSTICES IN EYRE. Certain judges established, if not first appointed, A.D. 1176, 22 Hen. II.

England was divided into certain circuits, and three justices in eyre-or justices itinerant, as they were sometimes ealled-were appointed to each district, and mado the circuit of the kingdom once in seven years, for the purpose of trying causes. They wero afterwards directed, by Magna Charta, e. 12, to bo sent into every county once a year. The itinerant justices were sometimes mere justices of assize or dower, or of general gaol delivery, and the like. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 58; Crabb, Eng. Law. 103-104.

JUSTICES OF THE PAVILION ( $j u s-$ ticiarii pavilionis). Certain judges of a pyepouder court, of a most transcendent jurisdiction, authorized by the bishop of Winchester, at a fair held at St. Giles Hills near that city, by virtue of letters-patent granted by Edw. IV. Prynne's Aninady. on Coke's 4th Inst. fol. 191 .

JUSTICES OF TRAIL BASTION. A sort of justice in eyre, with large and summary powers, appointed by Edw. I. during his absence in war. Old. Nat. Brev. fol. 52; 12 Coke, 25. For derivation, see Cowel.

JUSTICIAR, JUSTICIER. In Old Engilsh Law. A judge or justice. Baker, fol. 118; Cron. Angl. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the aula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty.

The chief justiciar (capitalis justicuarius totius Anglice) was a special magistrate, who presided over the whole aula regis, who was the principal ministsr of state, the second man in the kingdom, and by virtue of his office guardian of the roalm in the king's absence. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Cumm. 37 ; Spelman, Gloss. 331, 332, 330; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 6. The last who bore this title was Philip Basset, in the time of Hen. III.

JUSTICIARII ITINERANTES (Lat.). In English Law. Justices who formerly went from county to county to administer justice. They were usually called justices in eyre, to distinguish them from justices residing at Westminster, who were called justicii residentes. Coko, Litt. 293.
JUSTICIARII RESIDENTES (Lat.). In English Law. Justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster: they were so called to distinguish them from justices in eyre. Coke, Litt. 293.

JUsticiary. Another name for a judge. In Latin, he was called justiciarius, and in French, justicier. Not used. Bacon, Abr. Courts (A).
JUSticies (from verb justiciare, 2d pers. pres. subj. do you justice).
In English Law. A special writ, in the nature of a commission, empowering a sheriff to hold plea in his county court of a causc which he could not take jurisdiction of without this writ: e.g. trespass $v i$ et armis for any sum, and all personal actions above forty shillings. 1 Burn, Just. 449. So called from the Latin word justicies, used in the writ, which runs, "procipimus tibi quod justicies A B," etc.; we command you to do A B right, etc. Bracton, lib. 4, tr.6, c. 13 ; Kitch. 74; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 117; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 3, 6 .
justiflable homicide. That Which is committed with the intention to kill, or to do a grievous bodily injury, under circumstances which the law holds sufficient to exculpate the person who commits it. A judge who, in pursuance of bis duty, pronounces sentence of death, is not guilty of homicide; for it is evident that, as the law prescribes the punishment of death for certain offences, it must protect those who are intrusted with its execution. A judge, therefore, who pronounces sentence of death, in a legal manner, on a legal indictment, legally brought before him, for a capital offence committed within lis jurisdiction, after a lawful trial and conviction of the defendant, is guilty of no offence. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 496-502.

Magistrates, or other officers intrusted with the preservation of the public peace, are justified in committing homicide, or giving orders which lead to it, if the excesses of a riotous assembly cannot be otherwise repressed. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 178, 179.

An officer intrusted with a legal warrant, criminal or civil, and lawfully commanded by a competent tribunal to execute it, will be justified in committing homicide, if in the course of advancing to discharge his duty he be brought into such perils that without doing so he cannot either save his life or discharge the duty which be is commanded by the warrant to perform. And when the warrant commands him to put a criminal to death, he is justified in obeying it.
A soldier on duty is justified in committing homicide, in obedience to the command of his officer, unless the command was something plainly unlawful.
A private individual will, in many cases, be justified in committing homicide while acting in self-defence. See Defence.
See, generally, ArRest ; Homicide; 4Blackstone, Comm. 178 et seq.; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 496 et seq.; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 219; 1 Russell, Crimes, 538; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 38538 et seq.; 2 Wash. C. C. 515 ; 4 Mass. 391; 1 Hawks. No. C. 210; 1 Coxe, N.J. 424; 5 Yerg. Tenn. 459; 9 Carr. & P. 22.
JUSTIFICATION. In Pleading. The allegation of matter of fact by the defendant, establishing his legal right to do the act complained of by the plaintiff.
Justification admits the doing of the act charged as a wrong, but alleges a right to do it on the pari of the defendant, thus denying thst it is a wrong Excuse merely shows reasons why the defendant should not make good the injury which the plaintiff has suffered from some wrong done. Set Avowny.
2. Trespasses. A warrant, regular on its face, and issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, is a complote justification to the officer to whom it is directed for obeying its command, whether it be really valid or not But where the warrant is absolutely void, or apparently irregular in an important respect or where the act done is one which is beyonc the power conferred by the warrant, it is nc justification. See Arrest; Trespass. So, too many acts, and even homicide committed in self-defence, or defence of wife, children, o: servants, are justifiable, see Self-Defence or in preserving the public peace, see Arrest Trespass; or under a license, express or im plied, 3 Caines, N. Y. 261; 2 Bail. So. C. 4 3 McLean, C. C. 571 ; see 13 Me . 115 ; in cluding entry on land to demand a delt, $t_{1}$ remove chattels, 2 Watts \& S. Penn. 225 12 Vt. 273; see 2 Humphr. Tenn. 425; to asl lodgings at an inn, the entry in such case being peaceful; to exercise an incorporea right, 21 Pick. Mass. 272; or for public ser vice in case of exigency, as pulling dowl houses to stop a fire, Year B. 13 Hen. VIII 16 b ; destroying the suburbs of a city in tim of war, Year B. 8 Edw. 1V. $35 b$; entry 01 land to make fortifications; or in preservatio of the owner's rights of property, 14 Conn 255; 4 Dev. \& B. No. C. 110; 7 Dan. Ky. 220 Wright, Ohio, 333 ; $25 \mathrm{Me} .453 ; 6$ Penn. St 318; 12 Metc. Mass. 53 , are justifiable.
3. Libel and slander may be justified in civil action, in some cases, by proving th truth of the matter alleged, and generally b : showing that the defendant had a right upo the particular occasion either to write an publish the writing or to utter the words as, when slanderous words are found in a re port of a committee of congress, or in a: indictment, or words of a slanderous natur are uttered in the course of debate in the legislature by a member, or at the bar by counsel when properly instructed by his client on the subject. Comyns, Dig. Pleader ( 2 L 3-2 L 7). See Debate; Slander.
Matter in justification must be specially pleaded, and cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. See License. A plea of justification to an action for slander, oral or written, should state the charge with the same degree of certainty and precision as are required in an indictment. The object of the plea is to give the plaintiff, who is in truth an accused person, the means of knowing what are the matters alleged against him. It must be direct and explicit. It must in every respect correspond with, and be as extensive as the charge in, the declaration.
4. The justification, however, will be complete if it covers the essence of the libel. But it must extend to every part which could by itself form a substantive ground of action. Where the slander consists in an imputation of crime, the plea of justification must contain the same degree of precision as is requisite in an indictment for the crime, and must be supported by the same proof that is required on the trial of such an indictment. It is a perfectly well-established rule that where the charge is general in its nature, yet the plea of justification must state specific instances of the misconduct imputed to the plaintiff. And, even for the purpose of avoiding prolixity, a plea of justification cannot make a general charge of criminality or misconduct, but must set out the specific facts in which the imputed offence consists, and with such certainty as to afford the plaintiff an opportunity of joining issue precisely upon their existence. Heard, Libel & Slander, 88 240-244. See Slander.

When established by evidence, it furnishes a complete bar to the action.
In Practice. The proceeding by which bail establish their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.
5. It must take place before an authorized magistrate, 5 Binn. Penn. 461 ; 6 Johns. N. Y. $124 ; 13 \mathrm{id} .422$; and notice must, in general, be given by the party proposing the bail, to the opposite party, of the names of the bail and the intention to justify. 3 Harringt. N. J. 503. See 3 Halst. 369.

It is a common provision that bail must justify in double the amount of the recognizance if exceptions are taken, 2 Hill, N. Y. 379 ; otberwise, a justification in the amount of the recognizance is, in general, sufficient.

It must be made within a specified time, or the persons named cease to be bail. 1 Cow. N. Y. 54 ; 2 id. 514 . See 1 Baldw. C. C. 148.

JUSTIFICATORS. A kind of compurgators, or those who, by oath, justified the innocence or oaths of others, as in the case of wagers of law.

JUSTIFYING BAIL. In Practice. The production of bail in court, who there justify themselves against the exception of the plaintiff. See Bail.

JUZGADO. In Spanish Law. The collective number of judges that concur in a decree, and more particularly the tribunal having a single judge.

K.

KAIN. In Scotch Law. A payment of fowls, etc. reserved in a lease. It is derived from canum, a word used in ancient grants to signify fowls or animals deliverable by the vassal to his superior as part of the reddendum. Erskine, lnst. 11. 10. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 236, 405.

KEELAGE. The right of demanding money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbor. The money so paid is also called keelage.

KEELS. This word is applied, in England, to vessels employed in the carriage of coals. Jacob, Law Dict.

KEEPER OF THE FOREST (called, also, the chief warden of the forest). An officer who had the principal government over all officers within the forest, and warned them to appear at the court of justice-seat on a summons from the lord chief-justice in eyre. Manwood, For. Law, part 1, p. 156 ; Jacob, Law Dict.

KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL (lord keeper of the great seal). A judicial officer who is by virtue of his office a lord, and a member of the privy council. Through his hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the crown, to be sealed with the great seal, which is under his keeping. The office was consolidated with that of lord chancellor by 5 Eliz. c. 18 ; and the lord chancellor is appointed by delivery of the great seal, and taking oath. Coke, 4th Inst. 87; I IIale, Pl.Cr. 171, 174; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 47.

KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL.

 The officer through whose hands go all charters, pardons, etc. signed by the king before going to the great seal, and some which do not go there at all. He is of the privy council virtute officii. He was first called clerk of the privy seal, then guardian, then lord privy seal, which is his present designation. 12 Rio. II. c. 12; Rot. Parl. 11 Hen.IV.; Stat. 34 Hen. VIII. c. $4 ; 4$ Inst. 55 ; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 347.

KENNING TOA TERCE. In Scotch

Law. The ascertainment by a sheriff of the just proportion of the husband's lands which belongs to the widow in virtue of her terce or third. An assignment of dower by sheriff. Erskine, Inst. 11. 9. 50; Bell, Dict.

KENTUCKY. (An Indian word signifying "the dark and bloody ground.") The name of one of the new states of the United States of America.
2. The territory of which this state is oomposed was formerly a part of the territory of Virginia. See Virginia. This latter state, by an act of the legislature passed December 18, 1789, "conseated that the district of Kentucky, within the juriadiction of the said commonwealth, and according to ita actual boundaries at the time of passing the act aforesaid, should be formed into a new state." Thia atate was admitted into the Uaion under an act of congress passed the 4th of Fehruary, 1791, the cnacting clause of which is as follows: " $B c$ it enacted, that Congresa doth consent that the aaid diatrict of Kentucky, within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth of Virgiuia, and according to its actual boundaries on the 18th day of December, 1789 , shall, upon the 1st day of June, 1792, be formed ints a new state, separate from and independent of the aaid commonwealth of Virginia. Upon the aforesaid 1st of June, 1792, the said new atate, by name and style of the State of Kentucky, shall be received and admitted into the Union a a new and entire member of the United States." See 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 189. This atate claims that the Ohic river to low-water-mark from the mouth of the Big Sandy river, the northerly boundary of the state, to the Mississippi, is part of her domain, by virtue of the construction given by the supreme court of the Uaited States to the Virgiaia acts of cession of 1781 and 1783. See 5 Wheat. 374.
3. There have been three constitutions adopted by the atate : the first at Danville, on the 19th of April, 1792; the aecond at Fraakfort, on the 17th of Auguet, 1799 ; and the third at Frankfort, on the 11th of June, 1850. Under the latter conatitution all civil officers except the secretary of atate are slected by the people. Duelling is prohibited; and any one who, directly or indirgetly, givea, accepta, or knowingly carries a challenge to any person or persons to fight in single combat with a citizen of the state, either in or out of the state, is deprived of the right to hold any office of honor or profit in the state, but may be pardoned by the governor after five ycars, and loses, in addition, the right of auffrage for aeven years. Coast. 1851, aec. 20.
A voter must be a fres white male citizen of the Uaited States, twenty-one yeare of age, and must have resided in the state two yeare, or in the county, towa, or city in which he propease to vote, one year, next preceding the election, aad in the precinct in which he proposes to vote aixty daye at least next before the election. The counties are divided inte preciacts; and no one can vote but in the precinct where he reaides. Under this oonstitution, in all elections by the people, and also by the senate and house of representatives, jointly or aeparately, the vote shall be pereonally and publicly given viva voce; but dumb persons can vote by ballot.

The Legislative Power.
4. This ia exercised by a general aseembly, oomposed of a senate and bouse of repreaentatives.
The Senate is composed of thirty-eight members, elected quadrennially by the people of each senatorial district for a term of four years. A senator

He is commander-io-chief of the army and navy of the state, except when called into the service of the United States, when he ie to command only npon recommendation of the general assembly. He nominatea, and, with the consent of the senate, appoints, all officera except those whose appointment is otherwise provided for. He ie invested with the pardoning power, except in certain cazes, as impeachment and treason.

A Lieutenant-Governor ia chosen at every election of gavernor, in the aame manner and to continne in office for the same times as the governor. He is ex officio speaker of the senata, and acta aa governor when the latter is impeached or removed from office, is dead, or refuaes to qualify, resigns, or is absent from the atate.

The Judicial Power.

6. The Court of Appeals is composed of four judges, elected, one in each of the districta into which the state is divided for the purpose, by the people, for the term of eight years, and subject to removal by addresa of two-thirde of each houas of the general assembly to the governor, atating the cause or causes for which auch removal is required. Special jndges may be appoiated by the goveraer when a majarity cannot sit in any caae. Thia court has jurisdiction by appeal or writ of error in matter of law from the final order, judgment, or decree of inferior court, exoept in case of an office, franchisc, or freehold, or diverce refused, where the matter in dispute doea not exceed one hundred dollars, certain cases of criminal juriadiction, and oases of amall amount, where an appeal is to be taken to the diatrict and county courts. See Pract. Code of 1854.
7. The Circuit Court is composed, under the constitution, of twelve judges, elected by the people, for the term of six years, in each of the twelve judicial districts into which the state ia divided. Each district is composed of aeveral counties, and a court is held twice a year in each county. It is provided that a new diatrict may be erected every four years,-not, however, to exceed in all sixteen,-until the population exceeds one million five hundred thouaand. In case of the absence of the jndge, the attorneys present may elect a apecial judge to hold the court. This is the court of general original jurisdiction in all matters of law and equity, except where excluaive juriadiction has been granted by law te aeme other court. The qualificationa for a judge, both of this court and the court of appeala, are that a man ahould be thirty years of age at least, and have been a practising lawyer for eight years, or have served for eight years as judge in some oourt of record.
8. A County Court also exiata in each county, composed of a president judge, and, when aitting for fiscal purpeses only, a majority of the justicea in commission for the county. The president judge muat be at least twenty-one years old, and have been for ene year a resident of the state. This court has conourrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in law and in equity where the matter in diapute does not exceed one handred dollars, but not of cases involving the title to land. It has the general control of the fiscal matters of the county, including the support of the poor.

Two justices of the peace and one constable are elected for four years by the people in each of the justice districts into which the counties are by law divided. Sheriffs, coroners, and jailers are elected by the voters of the county for four years. Sheriffis are ineligible for $t$ wo successive terms.

Under the code of practice adopted March 22, 1851, the forms of actions at common law and of suits in chancery were abandoned, and a petition and answer substituted therefor.

KEY. An instrument made for shutting and opening a lock.
2. The keys of a house are considered as real estate, and descend to the heir with the inheritance. 11 Coke, 50 b; 30 Eng. L. & Eq. 598. See 5 Blackf. Ind. 417; 5 Taunt. 518.
3. When the keys of a warehouse are delivered to a purchaser of goods locked upthere, with a view of effecting a delivery of such goods, the delivery is complete. The doctrine of the civil law is the same. Dig. 41.1.9.6; 18. 1. 74.
4. Keys are implements of housebreaking within statute $14 & 15$ Vict. c. $19, ~ & 1$; for, though commonly used for lawful purposes, they are capable of being employed for purposes of househreaking; and it is a question for the jury whether the person found in possession of them by night had them without lawful excuse, with the intention of using them as implements of housebreaking. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 472 ; 3 Carr. & K. 250.

KEYAGE. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a key or wharf.

KIDNAPPING. The forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country and sending them into another. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 219.
It has been held, however, that the carrying away is not essential. 8 N. H. 550. The crime includes a false imprisonment. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8671 . See Abduction; 1 Russell, Crimes, Greaves ed. 716; 2 Harr. Del. $538 ; 3$ Tex. 282 ; 12 Mete. Mass. $56 ; 2$ Park. Crim. N. Y. 590 ; Comb. 10.
KILDERKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to eighteen gallons.
KINDRED. Relations by blood.
Nature has divided the kindred of every one into three principal classes. 1. His children, and their descendants. 2. His futher, mother, and other ascendants. 3. His collateral relations; which include, in the first place, his brothers and sisters, and their descendants; and, secondly, his uncles, cousins, and other relations of cither sex, who have not descended from a brother or sister of the decoased. All kindred, then, are descendants, asecndants, or collaterals. A husband or wife of the deceased, therefore, is not his or her kindred. 14 Ves. Ch. 372. See Wood. Inst. 50; Ayliffe, Parerg. 325; Dane, Abr.; Toullier, Ex. 382, 383; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 516, n.; Pothier, Des Successions, c. 1, art. 3.

King's BENCE. See Court of Kinn's

 Bench.KING'S COUNSEL. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king's counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the crown without special leave, which is, however, always granted, at a cost of about nine pounds. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 27, note.

KING'S EVIDENCE. An accomplice in a felony, who, on an implied promise of pardon if he fully and fairly discloses the truth, is admitted as evidence for crown against his accomplices. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 31. A jury may, if they please, convict on the unsupported testimony of an accomplice. 4 Stephen, Comm. 398. On giving a full and fair confession of truth, the accomplice has an equitable title to a recommendation to mercy. He cannot be admitted to testify as king's evidence after judgment against him. 2 Russell, Crimes, 956-958.

KING'S SILVER. A fine or payment due to the king for leave to agree in order to levying a fine (finalis concordia). 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 350; Dy. 320, pl. 19; 1 Leon. 249, 250 ; 2 id. $56,179,233,234 ; 5$ Coke, 39.

KINGDOM. A country where an officer called a king exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. Wolff. Inst. Nat. 8994 . In some kingdoms the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a queen.

KINSBOTE (from kin, and bote, a composition). In Saxon Law. A composition for killing a kinsman. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Index, Bote.

KINTIIDGE. A term used by merchants and seafaring men to signify a ship's ballast. Merc. Dict.

KIRBY'S QUEST. An ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the English exchequer: so called from being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to Edward I.

KISSING THE BOOK. A ceremony used in taking the corporal oath, the object being, as the canonists say, to denote the assent of the witness to the oath in the form it is imposed. The witness kisses either the whole Bible, or some portion of it; or a cross, in some countries. Sec the ceremony explained in Oughton's Ordo, tit. lxxx. ; Consitt. on Courts, part 3, sect. 1, & 3; Junkin, Oath, 173, 180; 2 Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 234.

KNAVE. A false, dishonest, or deceitful person. This signification of the word has arisen by a long perversion of its original meaning, which was merely servant or attendant.
2. To call a man a knave has been held to be actionable. 1 Rolle, Abr. 52 ; 1 Freem. Ch. 277 ; 5 Pick. Mass. 244.

KNIGHT, In English Law. The next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the garter, instituted by Edward III. in 1344 ; next follows, a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV., and revived by George I.; and they were so called from $a$ custom of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that king Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 403. These are sometimes called knights of the chamber, being such as are made in time of peace, and so called because knighted in the king's chamber, and not in the field. Coke, 2 d Inst. 666 . Knights were called equites, hecause they always served on horseback; ourati, from the gilt spurs they wore; and milites, because they formed the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures.

KNIGHT'S FEE was anciently so much of an inheritance in land as was sufficient to maintain a kmight ; and every man possessed of such an estate was obliged to be knighted, and attend the king in his wars, or pay a pecuniary sum in lieu thereof, called escuage. In the time of Henry II. the estate was estimated at twenty pounds a year; but Lord Coke in his time states it to be an estate of six hundred and eighty acres. Coke, Litt. $69 a$.

KNIGHT'S SERVICE. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand; and for every knight's fee a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time, before war was reduced to a science, a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days; and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniary commutations, or aids; until at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolished at the restoration, by the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 410; 2 id. 62.

KNIGHTS HOSPITALLERS. An order of knights that had their name from a hospital erected at Jerusalem for the use of pilgrims coming to the Holy Land, and dedicated to St. John Baptist. They were afterwards called Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and their first business was to provide for and protect such pilgrims as came to that hospital. Afterwards, being driven out of the Holy Land, they settled at Rhodes, and then at Malta, and were then called Knights of Malta. Many of them came to England in the year 1100, where, in process of time, they became of so much wealth and dignity that their superior was the first lay baron and had a seat among the lords in parliament.

KNIGHTS TEMPLARS. An order of knights so called from having their first residence in some apartments adjoining the temple at Jerusalem; and their employment was to guard the roads for the security of pilgrims in the Holy Land. They came into England in the reign of Stephen, where they increased so much in wealth and power that they were considered dangerous to the state, and the order was suppressed in 1312.

KNOWINGIY. In Pleading. The word "knowingly," or "well knowing," will supply the place of a positive averment, in an indictment or declaration, that the defendant knew the facts subsequently stated; if notice or knowledge be unnecessarily stated, the allegation may be rejected as surplusage. See Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G 6); 2 Cush. Mass. 577; 2 Strange, 904; 2 East, 452 ; 1 Chitty, Plead. 367.

KNOWLEDGE. Information as to a fact.

Many acts are perfectly innocent when the party performing them is not aware of certain circumstances attending them: for example, a man may pass a counterfeit note, and be guiltless, if he did not know it was so; he may receive stolen goods, if he were not aware of the fact that they were stolen. In these and the like cases it is the guilty knowledge which makes the crime.

Such guilty knowledge is made by the statute a constituent part of the offence; and therefore it must be averred and proved as such. But it is in general true, and may be considered as a rule almost necessary to the restraint and punishment of crimes, that when a man does that which by the common law or by statute is unlawful, and in pursuing his criminal purpose does that which constitutes another and different offence, he shall be held responsible for all the legal consequences of such criminal act. When a man, without justifiable cause, intends to wound or maim another, and in doing it kills him, it is murder, though he had no intention to take life. It is true that in the commission of all crimes a guilty purpose, a criminal will and motive, are implied. But, in general, such bad motive or criminal will and purpose, that disposition of mind and heart which is designated by the generic and significant term "malice," is implied from the criminal act itself. But if a man does an act, which would be otherwise criminal, through mistake or accident, or by force or the compulsion of others, in which his own will and mind do not instigate him to the act or concur in it, it is matter of defence, to be averred and preved on his part, if it does not arise out of the circumstances of the case adduced on the part of the prosecution. Per Shaw, C. J., in 2 Metc. Mass. 192. Thus, if is not necessary, in an indictment against an unmarried man for adultery with a married woman, to aver that he knew, at the time when the offence was committed, that she was a married woman; nor is it necessary to prove such knowledge at the trial. 2 Metc. Mass. 190. See, as to the proof of guilty knowledge, 1 Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 185-191.
